Agenda item 1 is to take oral evidence on the financial memorandum to the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill. The committee has agreed to adopt level 3 scrutiny on the financial memorandum. That means that, as well as seeking written evidence, we will take oral evidence from affected organisations and from the Scottish Government bill team. The written evidence that has been received is included in members’ papers as paper FI/S3/09/9/3.

Members will also recall that we wrote to the Cabinet Secretary for Justice to ask how he will ensure that certain licensing provisions, which were originally intended to be included in subordinate legislation, are subjected to appropriate scrutiny. Paper FI/S3/09/9/4 is a letter from him that outlines how he proposes to proceed with those provisions in a separate bill.

I welcome the first of our three witness panels. John Gilruth is the lead officer on criminal justice and substance misuse services at Perth and Kinross Council, Jim Hunter is the chief officer of the north Strathclyde community justice authority, and June Murray is head of legal services at North Lanarkshire Council. Do the witnesses wish to make a short opening statement?

John Gilruth (Perth and Kinross Council): I thank the committee for the opportunity to submit evidence on this important bill, which we believe will reshape the nature of criminal justice social work in Scotland. I express my support and my council’s support for the key intention of developing a standard community payback order with variable component parts to reflect both the desire for public restitution and the complex nature of offenders’ needs. I further support the desire to reduce the number of offenders in prison, particularly of those who are imprisoned for periods that are so short as to prohibit the undertaking of realistic rehabilitative work.

However, I urge caution on the part of the Government in requiring local authorities, in effect, to double the average number of community service hours worked per offender per week and to take on responsibility for supervising the potentially significant number of persons who are currently sentenced to periods of imprisonment.

In particular, I ask the committee to bear in mind the complex needs of those in the churn of short-term adult imprisonment, many of whom have substance abuse, mental health and chronic relationship difficulties. Many recidivate and do not normally comply with orders. Most have complex needs that require well-constructed care and supervision arrangements.

Over the past four years, Government funding for local authority core criminal justice functions—probation, community service, social inquiry reports and throughcare—has not kept pace with inflation. Those form the basis of our activity. The funding formula that informs the grant to local authorities does not necessarily take into account the greater cost of supervising court orders across dispersed rural populations. The funding formula that is employed at the level of criminal justice partnerships—now known as community justice authorities—is sometimes based on activity levels that are four, five or six years out of date and do not reflect current or immediately projected activity levels.

I ask the committee also to remember that the additional staff who will be needed to oversee the new community payback orders will need to be managed, accommodated and supported administratively. Additionally, in rural areas, they will need to travel substantial distances to supervise offenders. Funding needs to reflect the true local costs of delivering services and the complex needs of those whom Government wishes to prevent from being sentenced to periods of imprisonment.
The Convener: Do our other witnesses want to make a short opening statement?

Jim Hunter (North Strathclyde Community Justice Authority): I have no statement to make. We made a written submission on which I am happy to take questions.

June Murray (North Lanarkshire Council): I do not have a long statement to make. I am head of legal services for North Lanarkshire Council and I appeared before the committee in my capacity as clerk to the licensing board. I welcome the opportunity to be here. North Lanarkshire Council will limit its evidence to the licensing provisions of the bill, from which section 129 is, of course, being removed.

The Convener: Thank you for your presence. We look forward to hearing your responses.

If you had been allowed more time to consider the financial implications of the bill, would you have recommended changes to the estimated costs? If so, what would be the extent of those changes?

Jim Hunter: We had three weeks in which to consider the financial assumptions. That did not give us a great deal of time in which to consult our board members or local authority partners.

We have a couple of concerns about the financial memorandum, the first of which is its assumption that existing core funding for probation, social inquiry reports, community service orders and supervised attendance orders is adequate. In our view, that is not the case. Community justice authorities distribute grant to local authorities in two ways: core and non-core grant funding. Each year, we are permitted to seek approval from the Government to vire money from non-core to core funding. This year, six of our eight local authorities either have asked for approval to vire money or are in the process of doing so. North Strathclyde community justice authority is seeking approval to vire about 7 per cent of non-core funding to core funding. That is evidence that existing core funding is not sufficient for purpose. We are concerned that, if we have a large increase in the number of community payback orders, we may have to vire further moneys from non-core to core funding.

The Convener: How much is the shortfall that you are concerned about? What would be the consequences if the shortfall materialised?

Jim Hunter: In 2006-07, about 18,000 prison sentences were imposed in Scottish courts. About 14,000 of them were for six months. About half were repeat sentences. That means that at least half were repeat sentences. That means that 7,000 or more additional reports could be requested if the scenario that I relayed came into effect.

John Gilruth: The convener asked whether we can quantify the current situation. I can say with some accuracy that our local budget is between £70,000 and £100,000 short. We have an integrated service in which criminal justice services are delivered alongside substance misuse and youth justice services. Between us, we can achieve synergies. However, the criminal justice budget just to deliver existing services has a shortfall. That is the platform from which we seek to build.

The Convener: You mention a shortfall, but are the costings in the financial memorandum accurate?

John Gilruth: My sense is that the costings are not inaccurate, on the basis of the additional demand that might be expected. I am not sure whether they take into account the additional infrastructure costs that are involved in accommodation, management, clerical support and transport, but the costs for the additional staff who will be required are probably fairly accurate.

Jim Hunter: I agree with Mr Gilruth. The costs that are outlined in the memorandum look fair.

Jackie Baillie (Dumbarton) (Lab): I will press you on that, particularly in relation to scale. It is evident that the policy intention is that anybody who would have served a sentence of less than six months will have a community payback order. The prison population figures that I have found for 2006-07 suggest that 14,686 people are serving the sentence. Given the presumption against short sentences, we are a bit concerned that sheriffs might ask for social inquiry reports in most cases. They might do that to have the full information about the community options that are available in order to make up their minds that none of those options is suitable, which would mean moving on to a short-term prison sentence. If that were to happen, many additional social inquiry reports that have not been costed in the financial memorandum might be required. Much better men than me have tried to guess what sheriffs’ reaction to legislation is likely to be and I could be completely wrong, but what I described is a realistic prospect.

The Convener: Do other witnesses want to make a short opening statement? sentences of less than six months. Would dealing with such numbers not require a quadrupling of what you provide for people who have community service orders, for example?

John Gilruth: I can respond only by talking about the local situation, where we have checked the position. Usually, the Scottish Prison Service provides figures in the form of a snapshot, but we asked our colleagues to look into the situation further. As we have a prison on our doorstep, that was not quite as difficult as it might have been. We came up with the figure of 170 people receiving sentences of up to six months. That is slightly less than the number of people whom I have on probation and slightly more than the number whom I have on community service. That would be a significant addition, but we take it into account that we have a building and managers in place. However, additional management and accommodation costs would be incurred. On that basis, we believed that the core figure was not unrealistic for staff but that the support systems had not been fully budgeted for.

Jackie Baillie: But a local figure of 170 would be more than the envisaged take-up of between 0 and 20 per cent. Would that be a fair comment?

John Gilruth: That would be a fair comment.

Jackie Baillie: So the overall scale is in question.

John Gilruth: If the figure is purely for the first stage, it is likely to be adequate. However, the next question would concern the pace at which one might wish to develop things.

Jackie Baillie: The population is about 14,000—or, in your local case, 170. Are those people more likely to be subject to a community service order than, for example, a supervised attendance order? Obviously, one is more expensive than the other.

John Gilruth: I am sorry, can I just check what you mean? Are you asking about the situation at present or after the bill comes into force?

Jackie Baillie: After. I have made the simplistic assumption that, if a person merits a custodial sentence, it is more likely that any measure as part of a community payback order will be more robust than a simple supervised attendance order.

John Gilruth: That is our sense as well. We suspect that many people will be working in the community, and that many will be under community supervision requirements. However, we also have the sense that the total number asked to do unpaid work may rise. That seems to be an increasingly popular means of payback.

Jackie Baillie: That is interesting.

Mr Hunter mentioned the level of reoffending. How many people currently breach their community service orders, their probation orders, or their supervised attendance orders? From your experience, do you expect the number of such breaches to rise under the new proposals, because of the additional freedom that people are being given? What will the additional cost be?

Jim Hunter: It is difficult to say whether the number will rise. At the moment, the breach rate for probation orders and community service orders—the two main orders—probably ranges between 20 and 30 per cent. The breach rate is a bit higher for supervised attendance orders.

People who are subject to the new community payback order with a condition of unpaid work will be required to start on the same day and to move very quickly into their unpaid work, and they will be required to complete the work in a much reduced time. That may have the effect of reducing the breach rate, because we will be striking while the iron is hot—taking someone from the court and getting them started on their placement straight away. It has always been my experience that the longer the period between the sentence being passed and the people starting their unpaid work, the more chance there is that the people will breach their order. People can view it as a sign of softness if things are allowed to drag on. That effect may work in the order’s favour and reduce the breach rate. I think that that is a reasonable assumption, although it will be interesting to see whether it is correct.

Kenneth Gibson: Mr Gilruth has touched on some issues that I wanted to ask about. Perth and Kinross Council’s submission is interesting. I note your concern that, of the £10 million that will be allocated nationally, Perth and Kinross will get about £190,000 but the actual costs will be between £250,000 and £280,000. You have already said that your budget is short by about £70,000. What budget does your department have at the moment?

John Gilruth: The budget for community-based social work is around £1.3 million.

Kenneth Gibson: So the additional cost may be 10 per cent.

Situations can vary depending on the individual case and the rurality implications, but roughly how much does a report cost? I know that, in a way, I am asking, “How long is a piece of string?”

John Gilruth: No, you are not, but I would need to switch on my phone to give you the precise answer. I checked the figures a little while ago and stored the answers in my phone memory. However, if memory serves, the cost per social inquiry report is about £300 in a given year. The allocated sum is something like that. The figure for supervising a probation order is about £1,350, and more than £2,000 is allowed for a community service order. However, the biggest costs are incurred around probation and, I suggest, people who are on licence afterwards; £1,350 comes nowhere near the cost of supervising a sex offender or other high-risk offender who is subject to a probation order for three years.

Kenneth Gibson: I understand that. Rurality is also an issue. How concerned are you about rural local authorities—or mixed rural-urban local authorities such as Perth and Kinross Council—getting a fair share of the allocated resources?

John Gilruth: It is a continuing bleat from rural local authorities. However, Perth and Kinross Council covers 2,000 square miles and half our population resides outwith a radius of 5 miles from Perth or Kinross. We cannot write large tracts off as sheep, as we used to do 25 years ago, and think that we will get only a small number of people on community service, because people sometimes deliberately migrate to rural communities seeking anonymity. Throughout Perth and Kinross and other rural local authority areas, there are numbers of people who require to be supervised at high level, and the unit costs in such areas are considerably higher.

Kenneth Gibson: You pointed out that the training requirements will have to be enhanced considerably. Regardless of the costs and assuming that the financial resources could be found, would you have the staff available and how long would it take to ensure that they were properly and effectively trained to deliver an effective service in your local authority?

John Gilruth: In the current environment, I am reasonably confident that we could get the people in place. Most of them would already have the training that we are talking about because they would be social workers or would have a background as social care officers or in working with offenders and supervising in a prison context. If they were going to work in community service, I guess that we could have a staff group in place within six months.

Kenneth Gibson: Would there be a need to enhance secure accommodation in your local authority?

John Gilruth: No.

Kenneth Gibson: Mr Hunter, do you have any comments to add on that?

Jim Hunter: None just now, thank you.

Kenneth Gibson: I will ask June Murray some questions on licensing. Orkney Islands Council’s submission states that the costs that relate to the bill’s licensing aspects “cannot be met without further funding being made available” to local authorities. However, East Ayrshire Council contradicts that and says that section 129, which will be removed, is “the only provision likely to have a financial impact” on the authority. Does North Lanarkshire Council agree with East Ayrshire Council that there is unlikely to be much requirement for additional funding, or with Orkney Islands Council that additional resources may still have to be found?

June Murray: North Lanarkshire Council’s greatest concern was the prospect of increased costs arising from section 129. Obviously, that might be subject to discussion elsewhere.

We are probably somewhere in the middle. We might not be quite as concerned as Orkney Islands Council, but we have concerns about section 124, which contains proposals for informing individual taxi operators of the setting of taxi fares. That is a new arrangement. The cost has been quoted as £1.08 per letter, but that estimate is limited to the postage cost. In fact, the originating of letters and the administration of dispatching letters must also be taken into account. It depends on whether one considers the administration cost to be marginal or significant.

Kenneth Gibson: What is North Lanarkshire Council’s view of that?

June Murray: Our view is that, because it is a new arrangement, which will involve additional work and, therefore, an additional staffing resource, there will be a cost.

Kenneth Gibson: Are we talking about hundreds of pounds or thousands of pounds? North Lanarkshire Council is one of Scotland’s largest authorities—it has a population of a third of a million or so—and its view of that might indicate the costs for other local authorities.

June Murray: We will probably require an additional clerical officer to handle the additional administration. That will require around £15,000 per annum.

Kenneth Gibson: If we extrapolate from that figure, we might be talking about expenditure throughout Scotland of £200,000 to £250,000 for all the licensing aspects of the bill. That is a ballpark figure, but is it a fair assumption?

14:30

June Murray: I think that it is a fair assessment. Perhaps we should try to mitigate the cost by dealing with the matter through the trade consultation process; there could be intimidation to the trade rather than to individual operators.
Kenneth Gibson: Do Mr Hunter or Mr Gilruth want to comment on licensing or costings?

Jim Hunter: No.

John Gilruth: No.

David Whitton (Strathkelvin and Bearsden) (Lab): Mr Gilruth, you talked about the possible increased cost of supervising the new community payback orders. In your submission you said:

"In order to oversee the additional offenders on Community Payback Orders, I would anticipate that between 2 and 3 Community Service Supervisors, 1.5 Community Service Officers and between 1 and 1.5 Social Workers will be required."

I understand that there is a national shortage of social workers and social care staff, so where will you get those people from?

John Gilruth: To date, we have succeeded in recruiting the staff that we require.

David Whitton: Are people in place in all the posts that you mentioned in your submission?

John Gilruth: I have not had difficulty in recruiting for vacancies that we experienced during the past year.

David Whitton: You represent just one local authority; every authority will have to recruit staff to implement the new legislation. Are there enough staff around?

John Gilruth: I suspect that it will be possible to find social care officers, who are usually employed to oversee fairly large numbers of people, and community service officers and supervisors. If there is a shortfall I suspect that it will relate to social workers.

The Convener: Can you quantify that?

John Gilruth: I cannot, because that has not been our experience locally.

The Convener: If the other panellists have no further comments on that, we will move on.

Jeremy Purvis (Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale) (LD): I want to ask more about the community service officers, whom I have spoken over the years have been keen to get their hands on the disposal, which they regard as valuable for them. The 20 per cent figure might therefore represent an underestimation of how JPs will use the order. However, the new order will be used only as an alternative to custody, and district or JP courts do not sentence many people to custody. The danger would arise if the net were to widen and JPs used the order in cases in which in the past they would not have sentenced the person to custody. We need to keep an eye on that. A 20 per cent increase in the sheriff courts' workload is probably a reasonable starting point. As I say, it is a bit of a leap in the dark and it is difficult to come up with a figure, but 20 per cent would not be an unreasonable figure for the sheriff courts.

Jeremy Purvis: We are looking at the recurring costs. The Government has said what the initial costs will be and has set out the recurring costs based on assumptions of an increase in workload of either 10 per cent or 20 per cent. The cost estimates indicate how much the CJAs will be provided in resource if only two thirds of the intentions of the bill are implemented.

John Gilruth: In my written submission, I talk not only about the introduction of community payback orders but about the attempt to prevent people from going to prison. In some respects, I am more concerned about the figure of 14,000 prisoners that was cited earlier and the local figure of 176 prisoners. Although the situation can be addressed incrementally, there are a lot of people in that group, many of whom have complex needs. Some of them have been on probation or have been given community service a number of times before, and sentencers are saying that there is no point in using those sentences again. However, some of those people might be considered for the new community payback orders. To help those people, there will not be a standard approach; there will be a very structured approach right down to the level of the working day. As I said before I came in here, that is not dissimilar to the approach that we take at present with some high-risk offenders, and that is expensive.
Jeremy Purvis: We are also looking at the requirements that are to be attached to the community payback orders. The Government cites the example of the single community order in England, which has a menu of requirements attached to it that could well be added to the community payback order. However, the Government proposes no increase in the resource that is currently provided to ensure that those requirements are met. That does not match with what you have said about the resource that local authorities expect to receive to enable the new system to work.

John Gilruth: We are talking about a challenging new group of people with highly complex needs, and I suspect that it will test the system all round.

Jeremy Purvis: I hate to say it, but that is a politician’s answer. It is a very good one. I think that we would all be very proud of that kind of answer.

John Gilruth: The national standards that apply to probation will simply not be adequate for some of those people. We cannot simply have somebody reporting in once a week or have somebody visiting them at their house once a week. The approach that will need to be taken is the approach that we currently take with some high-risk offenders. In effect, we have to enable them to put a structure round their day. We have something called accommodation support that is much more than that—it is life support. Those people need to be supported in attending appointments and we ensure that the appointments are followed up in order that they keep their employability. We need to bring in drug and alcohol services, not simply make contact with those services a condition of probation, and ensure that the people turn up. We need to construct probation as a supportive exercise—as opposed to simply a sentence—for people with multiple needs, and there will be complex multiple inputs.

Jeremy Purvis: The Government believes that there need be no change to the average number of conditions that are currently attached to a probation order, which is estimated to be 1.2 conditions per probation order. I do not want to put words into your mouth, but is it your view that that number will have to be increased if the orders are to be fully effective in meeting the bill’s intentions?

John Gilruth: Yes. For some of the people, it will need to be increased.

Jim Hunter: The bill introduces a quite complex set of inter-effects. Justices of the peace will get orders that they have never had before; a supervision requirement will have to be attached to orders for 16 and 17-year-olds in addition to any other requirements; and there will be a presumption against short-term sentences. What the Government has done in the memorandum is probably the best that it could do. It has made some reasonable assumptions. However, if the bill is passed, it will be necessary to monitor closely the first year or 18 months of implementation, because I am not sure that anyone really understands yet how some of the measures will affect others. At this stage, it is difficult to predict that.

The Convener: We are hearing the voice of experience.

Linda Fabiani (Central Scotland) (SNP): Mr Hunter, I have a small question for you. You said that justices of the peace do not often deal with custodial sentencing but they might use the orders to displace non-custodial sentencing, which could increase costs. You mentioned the need for monitoring. Is the use of non-custodial sentencing already monitored through the justice system? How will we know whether that is happening? How can we prevent orders from being used inappropriately, which would obviously have a bearing on cost?

Jim Hunter: District courts publish annual statistical information, just as other courts do, so the Government knows how many prison sentences, fines and probation orders district courts impose year on year. At the moment, the number of probation orders that they impose is small—well over 90 per cent of district court sentences involve fines. In the first year or two after the bill is passed, it will become apparent whether there has been displacement from prison sentences or fines to the new community order. Orders will cost the Government much more than fines, so there will be concern if they displace fines. We will look for orders to displace prison sentences, as they are cheaper than such sentences.

David Whitton: You will have seen the written evidence that East Ayrshire Council has submitted on the financial implications of the provisions relating to remand and committal of children and young people. The council says that those provisions will place an additional burden on local authorities, through increased demand for alternative remand accommodation. Would you like to comment on that issue? I ask the question because the number of places and, consequently, the number of staff in the secure unit in my constituency are being halved. That prompts the question of where people will go if they are referred to secure accommodation.

John Gilruth: I am currently employed in criminal justice services, so I will pass on the question. Provision of secure accommodation is an issue for all local authorities and is a major problem for the larger conurbations. We make minimal use of secure accommodation. The alternative is to provide young people with a complex, structured whole day. That is demanding, but it can be done in most cases. I will not comment beyond that.

Jim Hunter: We did not cover the provisions to which you refer in our written evidence. We have not considered the issue.

David Whitton: Am I right in saying that there are not many secure units? I cannot remember the exact number—there are either six or eight. If it is thought necessary that a young offender should go to a secure unit, but they cannot do so, surely the burden of finding another way of supervising them will fall on you.

John Gilruth: Yes.

Jeremy Purvis: Linda Fabiani asked about the use of orders by JP courts. Am I right in thinking that a high proportion of short-term prison sentences continue to be imposed for fine default and that community payback orders—along with unpaid work and other requirements—will become mandatory in that area? A direct read-across is easier to get by looking at the estimates of how many orders are going to be provided in certain areas. The order will not really be a choice of disposal under the bill.

Jim Hunter: I think that you are right. District courts have been able to impose supervised attendance orders on fine defaulters for a number of years. The new community payback order will be available to the courts for that purpose. You are right that there is a straight read-across.

Jeremy Purvis: You do not think that that changes sufficiently the assumption of a 10 per cent or 20 per cent increase in workload.

John Gilruth: It would depend on the individual area and the individual court. After supervised attendance orders were introduced, certain local authorities, such as Angus Council and Perth and Kinross Council, had a massive take-up, which was not linked entirely to population or the number of known offenders in the area; it was just that some courts chose to use the orders. That has changed significantly over the past two to three years. As Jim Hunter said, the risk might be that the community payback order, which is a new sentence, appears to offer something new, proves very popular in some areas and will be much more expensive to deliver.

The Convener: I want to close this evidence session. Mr Gilruth gave us figures from memory.
If he wishes to correct them, he should write to us, which would be appreciated. Do the witnesses wish to make any final remarks?

John Gilruth: I just want to thank you for the opportunity to give evidence.

The Convener: I thank you all for being here and sharing your expertise.

I will suspend the meeting for a few moments to allow our next panel to take their seats.

14:46

Meeting suspended.

14:48

On resuming—

The Convener: I welcome our second panel of witnesses: Chris MacIntosh is from the policy division of the Crown Office and Procurator Fiscal Service; Alastair Merrill is director of corporate services at the Scottish Prison Service; Tom Nelson is director of forensic services at the Scottish Police Services Authority; and Alastair
Sim is director of policy and strategy at the Scottish Court Service. I believe that none of the witnesses wishes to make an opening statement.

Jeremy Purvis: I will start with a general question, which is addressed to everyone on the panel. I think that you all indicated in written evidence that you were broadly content with the assumptions about costs that were made in the financial memorandum. I ask each of you to highlight the provisions in the bill that you expect to have the most significant impact on your organisation and to say whether you will have sufficient flexibility in your on-going budgets and structures to address that.

Chris MacIntosh (Crown Office and Procurator Fiscal Service): It appears that the cost of the provisions on disclosure will be the major cost for the Crown Office and Procurator Fiscal Service. We have experience in disclosure because disclosure obligations have been with us for a number of years, and they will now be codified. We based our cost estimates on that experience and we feel that that empirical evidence makes them the best available estimates.

Alastair Merrill (Scottish Prison Service): As Mike Ewart said in his letter to the committee of 10
April, the bill’s provisions will have no significant financial impact one way or another on the Scottish Prison Service. The financial memorandum contains a number of illustrative costings that are based on applying the full economic cost of a prisoner place to the Government’s assumptions about prisoner numbers, which we believe are a fair reflection of the costs.
Tom Nelson (Scottish Police Services Authority): The bill’s provisions on disclosure will affect the Scottish Police Services Authority’s forensic services. We provided indicative costs for that in the paper that we submitted to the committee.

Alastair Sim (Scottish Court Service): There are two big issues for us. First, the move towards the increased use of community sentences and a reduction in short prison sentences will bring costs for administration and judicial salaries. Provision will need to be made for an expanded range of review hearings when people are sentenced to community payback orders. Secondly, where sheriffs still choose to give someone a sentence of six months or less, they will have to spend time in court explaining the reasons for that. That will have a marginal cost, because it will increase the amount of time taken by the court to get through its business, which will have a marginal impact on our need to pay for additional part-time sheriff resource. Such costs are reflected fairly in a range of assumptions in the financial memorandum.

The financial memorandum also reflects the fact that there will be costs for the Scottish Court Service from the new disclosure regime. In particular, there will be costs in ensuring that we build an information technology system to support that regime. Again, those costs are reflected fairly in the financial memorandum. We said in our letter to the committee that, to the extent that the bill imposes new costs on the SCS, we would expect funding to follow.

The Convener: Whenever I hear about an IT system being built, I hear alarm bells. Are you sure that that can be done at a reasonable cost?

Alastair Sim: It is the sort of thing that we do a lot. As soon as new provisions are introduced into law, we work either to adjust our existing criminal cases computer system or to build add-ons. When we looked at the bill, we thought that we were talking about a non-trivial investment of probably £50,000 to £100,000 in bolt-ons to our existing IT system. It is non-trivial, but not shuddering.

The Convener: So existing technology would cover it—nothing experimental is involved.

Alastair Sim: That is right—it will not be fancy and high-falutin’.

The Convener: That is reassuring.

Jeremy Purvis: My colleagues will ask about the issues that the panel has highlighted, but I have a second general question on the areas in which the financial memorandum estimates that there will be savings. What are your views on that? The Government has indicated, for example, that there will be savings to the SPS in relation to the early removal from the United Kingdom of short-term prisoners and savings to the SCS in relation to jury service and bail review appeals. Given that there will no doubt be cuts in your respective budgets, are you content that the savings that are estimated in the financial memorandum have been properly assessed?

Alastair Merrill: As you are aware, the Scottish Prison Service already operates significantly above the design capacity for which we are funded, so, at the margins, regardless of whether additional or fewer prisoners enter the system, there will be no impact in terms of increasing costs or releasing savings. Although we accept that the calculations to which you refer are illustrative of the savings that could be achieved, hard cash savings will not materialise until such time as the prison population has gone down to design capacity level or below.

The Convener: How do you manage to operate above the design capacity?

Alastair Merrill: We have been squeezing in additional prisoners for a number of years. The design capacity of our prisons will rise to just under 7,600 places by the end of the current financial year. That is the level for which we are funded. As of today, the prison population is a little over 8,100.

The Convener: Do you wish to follow up on that, Jeremy?

Jeremy Purvis: No. Other colleagues will follow up on that specific point. However, I would like to find out whether the Scottish Court Service agrees with the proposed savings.

Alastair Sim: What the financial memorandum says about savings is entirely fair, but I draw your attention to paragraph 895, which deals with the savings on jurors’ expenses. The clear implication is that if savings are made on jurors’ expenses, they will be recycled and used to improve the system for the reimbursement of jurors, which has been the subject of complaint and controversy for some time. As that is a matter of policy for the Scottish Government, the next panel might want to comment on it. The financial memorandum is saying that the relevant proposal will not produce savings for the Scottish Court Service. Any savings will be recycled to enable the jury system to work better.

The Convener: Were you involved in making those savings estimates?

Alastair Sim: Yes.

The Convener: We move on to Derek Brownlee. Oh, sorry—Linda Fabiani has a point to make.

Linda Fabiani: I would like to follow up on Jeremy Purvis’s questions to Mr Merrill. I understand that the bill will not have an impact in the short term—I can see that—and that, as far as the prison infrastructure and everything else are concerned, the basics remain, because you have been operating over capacity, but surely there must be savings to be made in the medium and certainly the longer term as the bill’s effects kick in.

For example, given that you are working over capacity at the moment, there must be staffing costs associated with overtime and general costs to do with the basics of ensuring that prisoners are properly and ethically looked after. I find it extremely difficult to accept that the bill will result only in negligible savings. How have those figures been arrived at? I will be open: we are talking about a Government agency and, let us face it, Government agencies and civil service departments generally like to hang on to what they have rather than give anything back. If Mike Ewart is saying on behalf of the SPS that no savings are possible in the medium to long term, there must be a bit more work to be done.

The Convener: Who wishes to rise to that?

Alastair Merrill: There are two questions on two different issues. I was answering the specific question about the savings that the financial memorandum suggests could be made from the measures on the early removal from the UK of short-term prisoners and the remand and committal of children and young people. The savings that the financial memorandum calculates could be made as a result of those measures, which are in the range of tens of thousands of pounds, relate to proportions of prisoner places that one could assume will no longer be needed once the measures have come into place.

My point in relation to those measures is that, given that the SPS is working with a budget of something over £400 million and that the population is already about 400 over the design capacity of the cells, the savings will not actually materialise. The measures will just mean that we will be slightly less overcrowded than we currently are.

15:00

Linda Fabiani has already alluded to the second issue, which concerns the longer-term benefits of the bill. We indeed see longer-term benefits coming out of the measures, particularly the presumption against custodial sentences. Those benefits will materialise in two ways. First, there is a possibility that, if the measures contained in the bill have an impact on the average prison population such that, together with other measures in the Government’s offender management strategy, they reduce the average prison population to a point at which structural changes could be made, which would allow us to save significant amounts in relation to the prison estate or people, cash savings would materialise. We are not at that point yet, however—it is a long way off.

The second area where there would be benefits, and where those benefits would be much closer, lies in reducing the churn in the prison population—the number of people who go through reception and cycle through the system, which chokes up prison staff in moving people around rather than delivering proper sentence management. There would be benefits there, not in cash savings but in a better use of resources and a better sentence management regime. I am not sure whether that helps to answer the question.

Linda Fabiani: I am still not convinced—but thank you.

The Convener: You spoke about the prisons becoming “slightly less overcrowded” than at present. You are therefore saying that overcrowding will continue. What does “slightly less overcrowded” mean in actual figures?

Alastair Merrill: The assumption around the removal from the UK of short-term prisoners was that up to seven prisoners might be eligible for early removal. That would reduce the churn in the system by seven.

The Convener: Overcrowding means stress in any system.

Alastair Merrill: Yes. There is already significant overcrowding, and there is therefore significant stress in the prison system.

Jackie Baillie: I ask this question as a very simple person. In 2006-07, there were 14,686 people serving sentences of less than six months. That accounted for 81 per cent of all custodial sentences. What is the saving that you are predicting on your £400 million budget? What saving are you required to find? You are estimating that only seven prisoners will be removed early, out of 14,686. I am confused.

Alastair Merrill: I am sorry if I have confused you. The figure of seven was an illustration of the provisions in section 19, and it was the largest saving that was quoted in the financial memorandum with regard to the early removal from the UK of certain short-term prisoners. That was a Scottish Government assumption.

Alastair Merrill: There is already significant overcrowding, and there is therefore significant stress in the prison system.

A lot of analytical work has been done by Scottish Government colleagues regarding the effect on the Prison Service of the reduction in short-term custodial sentences. I could recite it here, but perhaps it would be better to refer to it in writing to give the committee a fuller explanation. The net effect, as I think is mentioned in the financial memorandum, is that even a 50 per cent reduction in short-term sentences would probably result, in the longer term, in some 300 prisoner places—not prisoners—no longer being required.

Jackie Baillie: Would that have an impact on staffing? Will your paper tell us that?

Alastair Merrill: We would still be operating above the design capacity, unless other factors come into play that reduce the overall population further.

Linda Fabiani: I think that I would like to have a paper on that specific point, convener. I appreciate the offer of a paper, which I think would be very useful.

The Convener: I call Derek Brownlee. Sorry—I beg your pardon—I meant David Whitton.

David Whitton: That is all right, convener.

I assume that the Scottish Prison Service will still go ahead with building Low Moss prison, which will increase capacity. I ask as I have a constituency interest, but perhaps Alastair Merrill is not the person to answer that question.

Alastair Merrill: Yes, we are still committed to building that prison, the working title of which is, I believe, still Bishopbriggs prison. However, no final decision on that has been taken.

David Whitton: That is very unfortunate. The name should be Low Moss, but I will let that go by.

I want to ask about the costs for the Scottish sentencing council that will fall on the Scottish Court Service. First, is Mr Sim quite happy with the estimate? Secondly, is he happy that the Scottish Court Service will be able to absorb those costs?

Alastair Sim: On the first question, we think that the estimate is certainly in the right ball park.

On the second question, let me make two points. First, if the provision of support for the Scottish sentencing council was imposed on the Scottish Court Service as a new duty, we could not absorb those costs. We would need to be specifically funded for those substantial extra costs. We are already achieving major efficiency savings, which we are investing in integrating the district courts into our operations. That involves major costs and major estate refurbishments. We also have a major programme to keep Parliament house up the road fit for purpose as the home of Scotland’s supreme courts. Therefore, we could not absorb those costs.

Secondly, on the policy side, the financial memorandum is quite carefully hedged in what it says about whether the duty will necessarily come to the Scottish Court Service. As members are no doubt aware, under the Judiciary and Courts (Scotland) Act 2008, the Scottish Court Service will be recreated as a new statutory body with a judicially chaired board—the Lord President will be the chair—on which there will be a judicial majority. The new body, which is likely to be in existence when the bill comes into force, will want to take a view on whether the Scottish Court Service is the right home for the Scottish sentencing council. The suggestion in the financial memorandum makes administrative sense—I can see why the Scottish Government has included that—but I think that the financial memorandum is careful not to express the issue as being an absolutely settled item of policy.

David Whitton: That kind of begs the question why the Lord President, rather than an act of Parliament, should decide where administrative support for the Scottish sentencing council should come from.

Alastair Sim: The matter can certainly be prescribed in an act of Parliament or—I do not know exactly how it will be cast—in subordinate legislation under an act of Parliament. What I am saying is that the current Scottish Court Service cannot commit the new body to taking on a function or express a view on what the new body might think about taking on that function.

James Kelly (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab): I have a couple of questions for the Scottish Court Service. On the disclosure provisions, paragraph 738 of the financial memorandum notes:

“There is no indication of the numbers of cases likely to occur at each stage of the proceedings”.

What estimates does the Scottish Court Service have on the additional court time that will be needed as a result of the additional requirements on disclosure?

Alastair Sim: I have the relevant paragraph in front of me in my notes, but I would like to pursue the point in more detail in writing. We made certain assumptions—to be honest, we do not anticipate a huge volume of cases—but the sums that we have done would be better expressed in writing than orally. I think that our calculations are reflected fairly in the financial memorandum. We do not anticipate huge volumes of business as a result of the bill, but it would be helpful if I could write to the committee on that.

The Convener: That would be acceptable.

James Kelly: Yes, it would be useful to have that in writing so that we can see what methodology was employed to ensure that the figures stack up.

My other question follows on from the convener's earlier point about IT costs, many of which will fall on the Scottish Court Service.
Will you think about rationalising the implementation of the changes by putting together a package that streamlines the number of changes that are required, rather than simply implementing a change programme for each issue?

Alastair Sim: We certainly want to introduce the changes as efficiently as we conceivably can. We have a relatively brand spanking new operating system for criminal cases and we will build changes into that. In general, the task should not be particularly difficult.

The Convener: Will you use existing staff or bring in expertise to make the changes?

Alastair Sim: For most of the changes, existing staff will be used. The disclosure stuff looks a wee bit newer and we will have to think about how we resource that.

James Kelly: Will the likes of community payback orders and serious organised crime offences be dealt with in the same operating system?

Alastair Sim: Yes. They will be new parts of the nice, modern operating system that we have.

The Convener: My next questions are for the Crown Office and Procurator Fiscal Service. The financial memorandum uses court figures from 2007-08 as the basis for the cost estimates for the provisions on disclosure. What are the relevant figures likely to be for 2008-09? What fluctuation might be expected? Are you content that staff resources are sufficient to meet any increased demands?

Chris MacIntosh: We have figures that go back a number of years for cases in the various courts. On the basis of those figures, we are confident that the figure in the memorandum—although it is an estimate—is reasonably accurate about what to expect in the following year.

The Convener: On the provisions on witness statements, the financial memorandum says that the costs of £216,000

"are the upper limit of what is anticipated as COPFS will continue to consider methods of carrying out the work that will reduce the financial burden, e.g. through making effective use of IT systems".

What work are you doing and do you plan to do to reduce the financial burden of those provisions?

Chris MacIntosh: It is too early to say. We do not know the final shape of the provisions, so we do not know what sort of animal we will be dealing with. We cannot set up an IT system until we have the final shape of the provisions, although background work is being and has been done to provide the estimated figures.

The Convener: What timetable is involved? When will you know?

Chris MacIntosh: That is difficult to say. I can write to the committee with that information.

The Convener: Thank you. I call Derek Brownlee—I believe that I missed him out earlier.

Derek Brownlee (South of Scotland) (Con): I will return briefly to prisons and cost. If I picked up correctly what Mr Merrill said, the SPS is funded for about 7,600 prisoners and is dealing with about 8,100. It is obvious that the system has a significant element of fixed costs. From an internal operating perspective, I presume that the SPS considers in its forward planning a range of assumptions about the prisoner population. What ranges of prisoner population does the SPS assume that it might have to provide for?

Alastair Merrill: If I may make a minor pedantic correction, we are funded for prisoner places rather than prisoner numbers. We use a number of cost factors. The full economic cost per prisoner place is the average cost calculated on a resource accounting basis and takes account of running costs, prisoner-specific costs, overheads, depreciation, costs of capital and so on. That is the figure that is used in the financial memorandum—it is a shade over £40,000. The actual figure for 2007-08 was £41,470.

Over and above the design capacity, the actual cost is the marginal cost element. That cost varies from establishment to establishment but, in essence, it is the cost of victualling—keeping the prisoner fed and clothed—and providing person-specific add-on services. That cost is in the range of £3,000 to £3,500 on average—the figure depends on the establishment and the circumstances of the individual.

15:15

On overall numbers, last summer, we commissioned a study on what is called an assessed operational limit, which is the level beyond which each establishment cannot operate without seriously infringing health and safety or other legal obligations. That is a dynamic assessment and it is particular to each establishment. A fairly detailed explanation of that was given to the Justice Committee last autumn. Again, I would be glad to provide information on that to the Finance Committee separately. The limit is used by each establishment for internal planning purposes to manage the overcrowding, and by the service as a whole to manage population levels throughout the establishments.

Derek Brownlee: In simplistic terms, you generate a significant saving only when you get to the stage at which you can close a prison wing or an entire establishment, and you generate significant additional cost only when you are forced into creating an entirely new wing or establishment. Are those the sort of margins that we are talking about?

Alastair Merrill: In essence, yes.

Derek Brownlee: What sort of numbers would be involved in that? Obviously, a population of 8,100 must be close to your limit.

Alastair Merrill: Assuming a design capacity by the end of this year of about 7,600, we would require a reduction of 500 in average prisoner numbers before the average population was down to the level of the design capacity. We would require a significant reduction on top of that before it would be possible to close an establishment. Closing a house block in a jail would realise some savings at the margins in staffing costs, but there would still be the wider costs of running the other house blocks in the jail.

Derek Brownlee: You are almost saying that, until an establishment opens or closes, the changes in costs are the more marginal ones that you described earlier.

Alastair Merrill: Yes.

Derek Brownlee: I seem to recall in the dim and distant past in the previous session of the Parliament evidence from the SPS about the costs of a prisoner place. If I recall correctly, there was a significant disparity between the cost of a prisoner place in SPS prisons and the cost in privately operated prisons. Is that still valid, or have those figures been superseded by events?

Alastair Merrill: We have a key performance indicator in our annual plan for the average cost per prisoner place, which covers the public and private sectors. That is the annual cost, rather than the full economic cost. I think that the figure last year was £36,500, although I would need to check that in my papers. I am not aware of a significant disparity between the sectors although, depending on accounting conventions, I am sure that one could create different figures.

Kenneth Gibson: I am sorry, but I want to return to the same issue. Jackie Baillie asked about the savings if we had a 50 per cent reduction in the figure of 14,686 prisoners who serve short-term sentences. You said that the reduction would be the equivalent of about 300 prison places. If we reduced by 50 per cent the figure that Jackie Baillie gave, we would have 7,300 such prisoners. The fall in daily prisoner numbers surely assumes a sentence of less than two weeks per prisoner, so surely the reduction in prison places would be more substantial than 300.

Alastair Merrill: As I said earlier, there are two ways of looking at it. One is reductions in the average number of prisoners, that is, the number of people who are locked up each night in our establishments, where the impact would be minimal—it would be up to 300 places if we had a 50 per cent reduction. The other way is to consider the reduction in churn, or the number of people going through reception. You are right that there would be a significant reduction but, as you say, the average time that short-term prisoners spend in prison is two or three weeks, which means that one prisoner place equates to 26 people spending two weeks in prison.

Kenneth Gibson: Indeed. We are talking about people who are in prison for a short time.

Alastair Merrill: Yes. I do not have it to hand, but it is somewhere in my pile of papers.

Jeremy Purvis: It would be helpful to have that figure, because it is critical. If the Government assumption is that there will be a 20 per cent increase in the number of community sentences, that needs to be squared with the current snapshot prison population. The relevant aspect is not necessarily how many people receive the disposal over the course of the year; it is the impact on capacity. I do not know whether you have found the paper.

Alastair Merrill: No. I am sorry, but I do not have the figure to hand. Rather than continuing to rummage through my papers for it, perhaps I could include it in the follow-up.

The Convener indicated agreement.

Jeremy Purvis: That figure is critical, so it would be helpful if you found it and gave it to the committee at the end of the meeting.

The previous panel estimated that about a third of prisoners would serve a sentence of less than six months, which is broadly equivalent to the proportion who would be on probation and the proportion who would be subject to a community service order. The previous panel expected that of those prisoners, about three quarters might receive a community payback order. That would be the impact on the current daily prison population.

Alastair Merrill: I will come back to you at the end of the meeting if I find the relevant statistic in my bunch of papers.

James Kelly: In your written submission, you refer to the financial impact on the SPS of amendments to section 18 of the Custodial Sentences and Weapons (Scotland) Act 2007. The financial memorandum states that those amendments will have no direct cost impact. Is that correct?

Alastair Merrill: The memorandum acknowledges that implementation of the bill will not be possible until the prison population has been reduced to a point at which resources are available to support it. It is also worth noting in that context that, as I understand it, the amended 2007 act will have fewer financial consequences than the unamended act.

James Kelly: Will the amended 2007 act result in any net savings or net costs for the SPS?

Alastair Merrill: That is impossible to answer at this stage. We accept that there will be additional costs, but our assumption is that the act will not be implemented until the prison population has reduced to the extent that the costs can be offset against the subsequent savings.

Linda Fabiani: We have all homed in on poor Alastair Merrill and Alastair Sim. I would like to hear a general opinion from Mr Nelson about where his organisation is coming from on these matters.

Tom Nelson: As I said at the outset, SPSA forensic services will certainly be affected by having to put in place disclosure procedures. We cannot do that work within our current budget. We will be looking for support.

The Convener: I want to bring this evidence session to a close. I offer our panellists the last word.

Chris MacIntosh: I return to a question that I could not answer, about the paragraph in the financial memorandum on what the Crown Office is doing to limit the additional costs in relation to witness statements. I am grateful to my colleague, who has more expertise in the area. The answer is that one matter that is being pursued is the centralised printing of statements, so that when somebody in the Wick office presses a button, the statements will be printed in a centralised printing unit in Glasgow and distributed from there. There will be a minimal saving.

The Convener: Thank you. I draw the session to a close. I thank the witnesses for their expertise and information, which will be of great assistance to us. We will pause while we prepare for today’s final panel.

15:27
Meeting suspended.

15:30
On resuming—
taken. Do you want to comment on the financial assumptions? No one seems to think that you have got them right.

Wilma Dickson (Scottish Government Criminal Justice Directorate): Perhaps I should respond, given that community payback orders are of considerable interest to the committee. Mr Gilruth raised two separate issues. He was correct to say that we are not adding to the assumed core costs of the orders, other than adding assumptions for the extra bits that we are adding—if you see what I mean.

I will explain that a bit more clearly. Mr Gilruth’s concern is that the base unit costs for orders are not high enough. In the bill, we have assumed the core costs rolling forward, and calculated—in the first table in my section of the financial memorandum—the extra costs that are attributable to the additional features that we are adding, such as review hearings and provision for electronic monitoring for breach. The first table—the one that finishes with the additional recurring costs of £3.4 million—tells you how much we reckon it will cost to provide the same number of orders with the additional features for which the bill provides. The base unit costs of the orders are not increased. I hope that that is helpful information.

I preface my next remarks by saying something that I think everyone has said: it is genuinely difficult to predict future sentencer behaviour, especially when sentencers retain the discretion to impose a sentence of six months or less if they feel that it is required. Mr Gilruth based his costings on the assumption that all people, or virtually all people, who currently get a sentence of six months or less will flip over and get a community payback order. In the financial memorandum, we assume increases of 10 and 20 per cent in the use community payback orders, most of which will be attributable to down-tariffling from short sentences. I am therefore not sure that we are all that far apart on the unit costs. However, we make different assumptions on the speed of change.

That is all that I want to say on that point, although I am happy to come back to the committee on it.

David Whitton: How did you come up with the figure of 10 to 20 per cent?

Wilma Dickson: Behaviours do not change overnight. We believe—and I think that folk agree—that the range that we have chosen is reasonable for the likely costings projected over the next few years, as the shift occurs. I would be the first to admit that these are illustrative assumptions based on predictions of sentencer behaviour. Most folk agree that the shift will be gradual, although there might be disagreements about the speed of change. However, I take the point that people have made about the need to monitor delivery.

Shall I carry on and pick up the points that were made on community payback orders?

The Convener: Yes, of course.

Wilma Dickson: When my mouth dries up completely, I will stop.

The assumption on social inquiry reports was also queried. I accept that we will have to monitor the issue very carefully. As Mr Gilruth said, a social inquiry report is required if you are thinking of sentencing someone who has never had a custodial sentence before or someone who is under 21, however many custodial sentences they have had before. In most of the most vulnerable cases, the current law will continue and a social inquiry report will be required. Judges have the right to require social inquiry reports in other cases, and they frequently do. I therefore agree with Mr Gilruth that we have not built in costings for additional social inquiry reports, but I also agree with him that we will need to keep that under careful review.

David Whitton: I want to go back to the figure of 10 to 20 per cent. Mr Hunter said that, of the 18,000 sentences in 2006-07, 14,000 were for less than six months.

Wilma Dickson: I have had more time to rake around in my folder than Alastair Merrill had, so would it be helpful if I went through the analytical services calculations on how we arrived at the assumptions?

David Whitton: Yes.

The Convener: Please do—as long as you guarantee not to leave us behind after the first sentence.

Wilma Dickson: I will do my best. I have written it all down, because I cannot remember anything for very long.

As Alastair Merrill said, we can calculate the impact of a reduction in short sentences in two ways. First, it can be calculated based on churn, which is the number of people who come through the admissions process, are assessed and go through the core screening but are in prison for a short time only. More than 80 per cent of admissions are for sentences of six months or less, so if we cut that percentage, we will cut the churn and free up quite a lot of prison officer time.

However, we would not free up an awful lot of space in prison. The other calculation, which I got our analytical services to make, is the impact that a 10 per cent reduction in the number of sentences of six months or less would have on the prison population. Counter-instinctively, the answer is that it would free up only about 50 places, because the average amount of time that someone on a short sentence—that is, a sentence of six months or less—spends in prison is only three weeks. Bear in mind the fact that what counts is not the length of the sentence—there is 50 per cent remission on sentences of that length—but the amount of time that the offender is in a bunk.

Quite counter-instinctively, the two ways of calculating the impact differ widely. Our statisticians estimate that an offender who is sentenced to six months or less spends about three weeks in prison, because the statistics are loaded with sentences of three months or less—they are bottom heavy—and, on average, such prisoners spend three weeks in a prison cell. Given that, you can get 16 and a bit prisoners through a prison place in a year, and although reducing the number of short sentences would save quite a lot of churn, which would free up prison officer time to be more productively used on those who need to be in prison, it would not save a huge number of prison places.

David Whitton: You estimate a reduction of 10 to 20 per cent in the number of short sentences. If 14,000 people were on sentences of less than six months and there was a reduction of 50 per cent, that would mean that 7,000 folk would be thrown on to community payback orders and the local authorities would have to deal with them. Are you confident that the funding would be in place to help local authorities to deal with them?

Wilma Dickson: That is a fair point in that, if we displaced 250 prison places, we would need 4,000 additional non-custodial disposals, which is a high displacement rate the other way. I think that that is the point that you are making. We do not assume that all those people would be displaced; we assume that only 10 or 20 per cent of people on short sentences would be displaced. That would be the major factor in the number of community payback orders. With offenders no longer being sentenced to prison, the most likely outcome—but not the only possible one—would be a community payback order. It is technically possible, although quite unlikely, that offenders would be displaced to fines. It is most likely that they would get level 2 community payback orders, as the other witnesses confirmed.

We make two assumptions: that the number of community payback orders will essentially derive from a reduction in the number of short sentences, and that our best estimate of the extent of that shift in the initial years is between 10 and 20 per cent. We have costed that.

David Whitton: Yes, but you assume—correct me if I misunderstand you—that sheriffs will be reluctant or slow to take up community payback orders and will still use their powers to sentence people because they do not like being told what to do by anybody else when it comes to sentencing. However, if it goes the other way, with sheriffs deciding that they quite like the new disposal and that it is a much better way of dealing with people, many of whom should not be in prison in the first place, to what extent will there be capacity to meet unexpected demand?

Wilma Dickson: All I can say is that our costing already shows a need for substantial additional expenditure. In the financial memorandum, we have not costed a situation that we estimate to be some way down the track, and I accept that, if there was a complete flip in the next year or two, that would lead to costs that are higher than those for which the financial memorandum allows. That is a fair comment.

15:45

David Whitton: The financial memorandum states that the administrative functions of the Scottish sentencing council will "be provided by the Scottish Court Service".

Can you explain how you arrived at the estimate of between £1 million and £1.1 million a year that appears in the financial memorandum?

George Burgess: As Mr Sim said in the previous evidence session, the figure in the financial memorandum is based on the assumption that the administrative functions of the Scottish sentencing council will be grafted on to the new, reformed Scottish Court Service—although the bill does not provide for that explicitly—so that we do not have to bear all the costs that would be incurred by setting up an entirely new body. Paragraph 664 and subsequent paragraphs of the financial memorandum describe the different types of costs. In developing those paragraphs, we looked at the operation of the Sentencing Advisory Panel and the Sentencing Guidelines Council in England and Wales. Again, looking at examples from elsewhere, we made assumptions about the way in which the Scottish sentencing council will conduct its business. The figures that we have developed cover staff costs, displacement of judicial time and other on-costs.

David Whitton: We heard from Mr Sim about a new organisation, which the Lord President will chair, that may not be happy about the Scottish Court Service undertaking the work. If the Lord President says no, what will you do?

George Burgess: If the Lord President says no, we will have to consider whether the Scottish sentencing council should be set up as an entirely separate non-departmental public body or whether its administrative functions could sensibly be grailed on to another body. As Mr Sim said, the approach that we propose seems to make eminent administrative sense. There is a great deal of logic in the Scottish Court Service, headed by the Lord President, and the Scottish sentencing council, which will also have a judicial head, being closely associated. However, if the Lord President objects, we will have to find other ways of proceeding.

The Judiciary and Courts (Scotland) Act 2008, which Mr Sim mentioned, provides ministers with the power, after consultation with the Lord President, to confer additional support functions on the Scottish Court Service, which already provides support for a variety of smaller advisory and executive bodies. There will need to be further discussions with the Lord President as the bill progresses, to establish whether he is content for the administrative functions of the Scottish sentencing council to be assigned to the Scottish Court Service. All that we have presented is based on that assumption, but we do not say that the Scottish Court Service will definitely provide the functions concerned.

The Convener: Your response has suitably stirred the committee.

Jeremy Purvis: I have two questions for Ms Dickson about community payback orders. I listened carefully to your explanation of displacement from prison places to community payback orders. The first question—which you may say is not relevant—is one that I put to Mr Merrill. What proportion of the 8,066 people who are in prison, according to the snapshot of 8 April from the Scottish Prison Service, are serving sentences of less than six months?

Wilma Dickson: About 8 or 9 per cent of the total population.

Jeremy Purvis: So of the 8,000 who are currently—

Wilma Dickson: I did not catch where the figure of 8,000 comes from.

Jeremy Purvis: It comes from the snapshot of the current prison population that the Scottish Prison Service provided to the committee. We were told that on 8 April the prison population stood at 8,066. What proportion of those prisoners are serving sentences of less than six months?

Wilma Dickson: I do not have the exact figure to hand. It is between 8 and 9 per cent, which equates to 600 or 700 people.

The Convener: Can you provide us with the exact figure?

Wilma Dickson: Yes—that is no problem. The figure is well below 10 per cent.

Jeremy Purvis: You said that the estimate of a 10 to 20 per cent change was the best judgment at this stage with regard to sentencing practice.

Wilma Dickson: And the speed of change.

Jeremy Purvis: And the speed of change. Section 17—"Presumption against short periods of imprisonment or detention"—puts a duty on those giving a short sentence to state why there is no better option for the person being sentenced.

Wilma Dickson: Yes, that is correct.

Jeremy Purvis: Presumably, one explanation for giving a short sentence could be that there are no community services of a sufficient standard with regard to the seven potential requirements in a community payback order. The bill will therefore be skewed not by sentencing practice, given the statutory presumption against short sentences, but by the budget available in any given area. The financial memorandum states clearly that there will be no budget increases for the additional requirements in the community payback order. As far as the financial memorandum is concerned, the budget is frozen—it will be increased only on the volume of orders that are made.

Wilma Dickson: And on the elements that we are adding—for example, the electronic monitoring on breach of an order and the review hearings.

Jeremy Purvis: A sheriff might want to put three requirements on a community payback order, but the financial memorandum states clearly that the Government believes that there will continue to be an average of 1.2 requirements per order. A sheriff could therefore state that he was sentencing a person to prison because the local authority had insufficient provision for the requirements on a community payback order.

Wilma Dickson: Yes, that is a possibility. I cannot say that that was at the forefront of our minds when drafting the provision in section 17, which is like the existing presumption against jailing someone under 21. Ministers have always said that they wish to leave discretion with the judiciary, and the Cabinet Secretary for Justice acknowledged that there may be circumstances in which a judge wants the option of a short prison sentence for an individual, given an accumulation of past offences and the nature of their current offence. In such a case, the judge simply has to explain what the particular circumstances are.

I take your point, Mr Purvis, but what you describe is not what primarily underlies the way in which section 17 is drafted. It essentially gives sheriffs the discretion, which the Government has always said it would leave them, to impose a short custodial sentence if they feel that that is the only sentence that sufficiently displays the court’s condemnation of the person’s course of action.
Jeremy Purvis: Yes, I understand that, and I imagine that the Justice Committee will consider the policy aspect, but I am looking at the financial aspect—whether the financial memorandum matches the policy intention and what is in the bill.

Section 17 provides:

“A court may pass a sentence of imprisonment for a term not exceeding 6 months on a person only where the court considers that no other method of dealing with the person is appropriate.”

The financial memorandum states that that will apply to between 10 and 20 per cent of individuals; it does not state that it could be applied on a scale from 0 per cent to 100 per cent for all those who could get the disposal of a payback order.

It would be fine if a short sentence was simply a further option that was open to discretion, but it is not open to discretion. There is a statutory presumption and, when a sentence of not more than six months is passed on an individual, “the court must—

(a) state its reasons … that no other method of dealing with the person is appropriate, and

(b) have those reasons entered in the record of the proceedings.”

Why does the financial memorandum not state that that could apply to 100 per cent of all those who are currently sentenced to less than six months?

Wilma Dickson: Essentially, that is the same issue as the one that Mr Whiton raised.

Let me clarify one thing. We have costed for the additional requirements that will be imposed as the number of community payback orders increases. That perhaps does not entirely pick up your point because we have not assumed that an increased number of requirements will be imposed. An assumption about the current number of requirements imposed is built into our costings for the additional number of community penalties. I think that your point is that you are not content that the costings cover the potential range of requirements that could be imposed or the extent to which the shift could happen more rapidly.

Jeremy Purvis: There is an issue about the requirements, but it is probably right for the Justice Committee to consider that in more detail. That committee will need to consider whether the bill will satisfy the policy intentions.

My main question is about what the financial memorandum says about the use of community payback orders, given the presumption against prison sentences of less than six months. If the bill is passed, there will be a statutory presumption against prison sentences of less than six months.

By law—except in the case of very short-term sentences of 15, rather than five, days, which is a separate aspect—a prison sentence of less than six months will be able to be applied only if no other method for dealing with the person is appropriate. Therefore, a fair financial memorandum should not suggest that the upper limit for the number of such orders will be one fifth of the number of people who are currently given a sentence of less than six months. The figures are certainly not clear, given the statutory presumption against using such sentences other than when no other method for dealing with the person is appropriate. My question is about the ceiling that seems to have been set.

Wilma Dickson: I take the point, but I can only reiterate that the financial memorandum gives a best-guess assumption about the speed of change in sentencer behaviour in the few years after the legislation is brought into force. Essentially, those are the years that are covered in the financial memorandum. The committee might feel that our estimate is much too low. I understand that point.

Jeremy Purvis: An element will be recurring costs, on which we are supposed to form a judgment. Given an environment in which a statutory provision requires courts to decide that a sentence of less than six months can be imposed only when no other method for dealing with the person is appropriate, community payback orders will surely be used in more than a fifth of cases. We cannot judge what the on-going recurring costs will be if the Government has arbitrarily decided that the upper limit of its estimate is that such orders will be used in only a fifth of cases.

Wilma Dickson: There is no intention to set an arbitrary limit in the financial memorandum, so I am sorry if the committee has received that impression. The intention is to provide the best possible prediction of likely change in the near future. I think that you are articulating a concern that the estimate should have been for 100 per cent.

Jeremy Purvis: I just think that the 20 per cent figure is remarkably low. I have not been able to find in the financial memorandum—forgive me if you can point this out to me—anything that suggests that that is the best estimate only for years 1 or 2. Once the statutory presumption is in place, surely the number of community payback orders will grow to more than one fifth of the number of people who currently receive a sentence of less than six months.

The Convener: An esoteric but very important point has been raised. It might be useful if the officials could think the issue through again and come back to us, as we have taken the matter as far as we can for the moment. We would all like a response on what is a very specific point, so it might be useful for the officials to consider it before replying.

16:00

Wilma Dickson: Can I clarify what the committee wants? Committee members tell me that they are not happy that we have used such a low range of assumptions in a context in which there is obviously a policy intention to achieve a major shift away from short sentences and given the drafting of section 17.

Jeremy Purvis: Yes.

The Convener: What we want is an accurate measurement whereby the financial memorandum reflects the actual costs and problems involved. Accuracy is what we are after. Would it be sensible for you to think more about that point and respond to us in writing rather than pursue it now?

Wilma Dickson: I am very happy to respond in writing, but all I can say is that these are assumptions and predictions. I can do the very best I can, and I am happy to come back. I think that the point is about what is a fair assumption in the circumstances of the bill.

Kenneth Gibson: Let us move on to licensing.

You will have heard the questions asked to June Murray and John Gilruth on the impact on the bill following the removal of sections 129 and 140 on licensing. Some local authorities, such as Orkney Islands Council, say that the cost relating to licensing aspects of the bill cannot be met without further funding. Dumfries and Galloway Council appears to support that view, although East Ayrshire Council says that, following the removal of section 129, the only provision that is likely to have a financial impact is the one on the proposed notification process. What will be the overall impact on the bill of the removal of sections 129 and 140 on licensing? What will be the impact on the bill of the remaining licensing proposals? This question may be down to George Burgess as the guy who fills in all the gaps.

George Burgess: You will see from the financial memorandum that the social responsibility levy provisions and the age 21 provisions were among those that were flagged at the beginning as—

Kenneth Gibson: Large numbers

George Burgess: Yes, having large numbers attached to them. The licensing provisions that remain in the bill are of a much smaller order in terms of finances.

I am afraid that I am not entirely clear as to the particular provisions to which Orkney Islands Council’s submission refers. I suspect that its comments may relate to section 129 and may have been submitted before the Government’s announcement about the future of that section, although they may relate to other provisions. I am not clear which provisions it thought might raise an issue.

Kenneth Gibson: Might there be some confusion about when the submission was made and to what sections it relates? As a committee, should we go back to the local authorities to clarify, given the removal of sections 129 and 140, whether they still have financial concerns and the extent of those concerns?

George Burgess: Some of the issues raised by others were about specific sections—

Kenneth Gibson: Yes, Dumfries and Galloway Council.

George Burgess: On taxi licensing, for instance. That is fine, and the point is still clear, but in relation to the Orkney Islands Council’s submission it may simply be a matter of timing and that the comment relates to a section that is now for another day. By all means, if Orkney Islands Council has concerns about sections that will remain in the bill, we will be happy to look at them.

Kenneth Gibson: Regardless of its view, what is your view on the impact on local government of the licensing provisions that remain?

George Burgess: In the financial memorandum we cost the provisions that will remain in the bill. We think that quite a few will lead to a more efficient licensing system and potential savings for the licensing boards and police in operating it.

Kenneth Gibson: Effectively you are saying that the system should be met from existing budgets.

George Burgess: The Cabinet Secretary for Justice made it clear that he expects the liquor licensing regime under the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 to be self-financing out of fees. Over the years, the current regime under the Licensing (Scotland) Act 1976 has ceased to be self-financing, so there is a significant subsidy from the council tax payer to the cost of administering it. With regard to licensing, the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 contains a statutory requirement to attempt to balance the costs and income from fees, so we expect the authorities to set their fees at a level that achieves cost recovery.

The Convener: Linda Fabiani has a quick point on the issue that Jeremy Purvis raised.

Linda Fabiani: I apologise to Wilma Dickson for returning to it; George Burgess is probably involved, too. Assumptions need to be made and it is fine to obtain clarification, but we should not assume that the figure could be 100 per cent, because a great deal hangs on the word “appropriate”, which is in the bill. It might be a good idea to get our clerks to look out what the Justice Committee said about appropriateness for sheriffs, because we all know that one of the great things about our judicial system is the discretion that is available to the judiciary.

I seek clarification on the figure of 14,600, which we are hearing a lot about.

Jackie Baillie: It is 14,686, to be precise.

Linda Fabiani: Jackie Baillie wrote that down. It is the number of people who received sentences of less than six months. Do we have an idea of how many of those sentences related to repeat offences or how many of the people who received them ended up with sentences that ran concurrently?

Is it the case that a social inquiry report is needed every time someone comes to court, even if they are a repeat offender? Excuse me if that information is in the paperwork and I have missed it. Is it the case that a social inquiry report stands for a certain length of time?

Wilma Dickson: A social inquiry report has a shelf life—I am trying desperately to remember whether it is three months or six months. There is a requirement to obtain a new social inquiry report after a short period of time and, if I write to the committee, I will confirm what that period is. I should remember off the top of my head; I know that it is three months or six months.

Your other point was about repeat offending.

Linda Fabiani: As it relates to the short sentences that are handed out.

Wilma Dickson: I do not have the figures with me, but we can confidently say that there is a very high level of repeat offending.

Annette Sharp (Scottish Government Criminal Justice Directorate): I do not have the figures to hand, but the Scottish Prison Commission considered the issue. It recommended that there would have to be exceptions to any presumption against prison because there are sex offenders, violent offenders and people who have a long list of previous convictions. We asked our analytical service colleagues to examine the potential impact of excluding those people, and they calculated that in almost 50 per cent of cases there would be a presumption against sending someone to prison. We can get those figures broken down if that is helpful.

Wilma Dickson: In other words, a substantial proportion of offenders would have a track record of one conviction or more. We can easily get you the exact figures.

The Convener: Derek Brownlee has been extremely patient.

Derek Brownlee: I have a relatively quick question on the assumptions about the sentencing council, which we touched on earlier. It strikes me that, for a body with a budget of almost £100,000 seems rather excessive in these straitened times.

George Burgess: I agree. A salary of £100,000 would be excessive, but the figure that is given in the financial memorandum is not a salary. It represents the complete cost to Government of the post, which is pitched at deputy director or division head level. I would love to receive a salary of £100,000.

Derek Brownlee: It is mentioned that the costs of the sentencing council are based on "similar organisations in terms of size", so would it be accurate to say that similar organisations with similar budgets and similar staffing complements have a chief executive post, the total cost of which is around £100,000?

George Burgess: Broadly, yes. The post in the Sentencing Guidelines Council and Sentencing Advisory Panel for England and Wales is graded at the same level. Another post that I can think of is that is graded at an equivalent level is the chief executive of the Scottish Criminal Cases Review Commission. I am sure that the committee has seen information on chief executives’ pay regimes.

Typically, such a body would have a post at the proposed level. Some bodies of such a size have chief executives or secretaries who are on a lower pay scale but, equally, other such bodies have chief executives who are on a higher rate. We think that the post is pitched reasonably. Ultimately, it will be for the sentencing council to determine the level at which it pitches its chief official and other staff, but we think that we have used a good basis for the costing.

Derek Brownlee: Similarly, the assumption that the accommodation will be in central Edinburgh is not prescriptive. If the assumption that the sentencing council will meet one day a month is correct, it is excessive to spend £165,000 annually on a conference room—a boardroom—in central Edinburgh when the support service could be based in many locations around the country that are significantly less expensive.

George Burgess: Indeed. The bulk of the staff could be located pretty much anywhere in Scotland—the research functions could be undertaken just about anywhere. As for meetings of the body, when the body is to be chaired by a top judge, I suspect that a strong preference will come from that quarter for it to be based in Edinburgh or Glasgow.

Derek Brownlee: Particularly if the budget for the council comes from the Scottish Court Service.

The Convener: Jackie Baillie is becoming impatient, which is dangerous. I want three quick questions. The first will be from James Kelly.

James Kelly: I have two quick questions. On costs that will be attributable to the Scottish Court Service, paragraph 738 of the financial memorandum says that “There is no indication of the numbers of cases likely to occur” as a result of the new disclosure requirements. Given that, how was the estimate of 4,200 cases in paragraph 761 arrived at?

Rachael Weir (Scottish Government Criminal Justice Directorate): It would probably be more accurate for the financial memorandum to say that estimating the number of cases with any certainty is difficult. Broadly speaking, we can predict on the basis of figures from 2007-08 the overall number of cases that might be dealt with, but the bill will introduce new forms of hearings. Whenever we enter into such an arena, it is difficult to predict the numbers with accuracy.

That said, we thought that it would not be satisfactory for us simply to say that it was impossible to predict the figures, which is why we attempted an estimate in paragraph 761. I understand why that might be seen to be contradictory, but the intention in paragraph 761 was to put some flesh on the numbers.

James Kelly: How was the estimate of 4,200 arrived at?

Rachael Weir: The estimate of 4,200 cases at preliminary hearings or first diets was based on the figures that the Scottish Court Service provided for preliminary hearings at present.

James Kelly: I have another quick question, convener.

The Convener: Okay.

James Kelly: Paragraph 746 says that police costs will be £5.3 million, but the table below the paragraph says that the costs will be only £3.5 million. Why does the table not include the £4 million for training costs in 2009-10?

Rachael Weir: The figures in the table are deliberate. The reason for that is linked with what Mr MacIntosh from the Crown Office and Procurator Fiscal Service said about the disclosure provisions in general.

The disclosure regime is being put on a statutory footing, although it exists already. There are currently obligations incumbent on the Crown in relation to disclosure and, as a consequence, the police require to take certain actions to ensure that the Crown is fully equipped to perform its functions.

There is currently a programme of training to ensure that officers are in the best possible position to carry out their functions. That is not a direct cost of the bill as such. We have reflected the direct costs of training separately in the table; other costs are incurred to ensure that officers are in the best possible position to implement the legislation in due course.

16:15

James Kelly: So the £4 million of costs for 2009-10 do not directly relate to the bill.

Rachael Weir: They do not.

David Whitton: I have a quick question for Mr Dickson, who has been sitting quietly waiting for his chance. On the involvement in serious and organised crime, paragraph 700 of the explanatory notes says:

“We anticipate around 2 new cases per year.”

George Dickson (Scottish Government Police and Community Safety Directorate): Yes. That was based—

David Whitton: How do you get to that number?

George Dickson: That was based on information given to us by the Crown Office and Procurator Fiscal Service.

David Whitton: So there will be two new cases, but we might get a bundle of other cases that we would normally get anyway.

George Dickson: Yes—there is a likelihood of a prosecution for different offences, but the information from the Crown Office indicated that there are likely to be only two prosecutions for the new offence that we are creating.

David Whitton: I am not sure who might answer this question about the Custodial Sentences and Weapons (Scotland) Act 2007. You will have seen the responses that we have received from the Scottish Prison Service and the Scottish Legal Aid Board on the matter. Why has the likely impact of that legislation not been included in the financial memorandum for the bill?

Annette Sharp: The impact of the changes to be implemented under the bill is included in the financial memorandum, at page 123. As it shows, the Government estimates that, once the 2007 act is modified, the consequent sentence management regime would cost less than the measures contained in the act as it stands.
In the financial memorandum, we reflect the costs that would arise if we implemented the Custodial Sentences and Weapons (Scotland) Act 2007 as it stands. That means applying a custody and community sentence to those who are sentenced to 15 days or more. The evidence that was given during scrutiny of the Custodial Sentences and Weapons (Scotland) Bill suggested that it would be unworkable to apply such sentences at 15 days. Severe pressure would be put on the Prison Service and the local authority criminal justice services. In the financial memorandum, we have reflected on the impact of moving that threshold from 15 days to, say, a year, on the Prison Service, on criminal justice services and on the Legal Aid Board. The fewer people who are on custody and community sentences, the more the costs are reduced, as would be the case at the two-year stage—if the measures are applied, as recommended by the Scottish Prisons Commission, to all those who are serving two years or more. In that case, the costs reduce.

David Whitton: So you think that you have answered the points that the SPS and the Scottish Legal Aid Board have made about that.

Annette Sharp: Yes.

David Whitton: Okay. I will let them be the judge of that—I am not sure that I am qualified to make that judgment.

I asked a witness on the previous panel about the additional burden that might fall on local authorities through increased demands for alternative remand accommodation for young offenders, particularly children. Have you any comment to make about East Ayrshire Council’s comments on that?

George Burgess: That is dealt with in the financial memorandum at paragraphs 841 and 842. The normal place for those youngsters to be remanded would indeed be in secure accommodation. Only in relatively rare and—judging by the figures referred to in paragraph 842—a decreasing number of instances are they placed on judicial unruly certificates and put into the prison environment. That is a policy matter, but there seems to be general agreement that putting them in the prison environment is not the right thing to do. The financial memorandum reflects the fact that there is a transfer of the responsibility from the Prison Service across to the local authority sector to provide for that.

David Whitton: Yes, but that puts the onus back on the local authority to provide some kind of secure remand facility. At the moment, there is a secure unit in my constituency that has 31 places. It is going to be cut in half and, in the future, will have only 18 places. As a consequence, the staff number will also be halved. One of the reasons for that is the fact that people are not being put forward by local authorities for one of those places. If they are not in there, they must be somewhere else; therefore, the cost surely falls on the local authority.

George Burgess: The memorandum identifies the fact that there is a cost to the local authorities of doing that. However, if the measure is passed, it will increase the demand for local authority secure accommodation and might reduce the need for the sort of reductions to which you refer. At the same time, it would produce a saving to the Scottish Prison Service.

Jackie Baillie: I was going to ask you all about community payback orders and I will not resist the temptation, despite the fact that much of the field has already been covered.

It is helpful that—if I understand correctly—you are going away to reflect on a possible increase in the number of social inquiry reports. However, I did not hear a similar commitment to an uplift in unit cost. Could I invite you to give such a commitment, given that the policy would, on the basis of the evidence that we have received from the community justice authorities, be underresourced from the start because of the significant challenges that the CJAs face?

Wilma Dickson: I can certainly undertake to go away and think about that, but I could not say any more about it now.

Jackie Baillie: That is very useful and helpful. We will also get a paper about the assumptions regarding the scale of the likely take-up of community payback orders. Somebody from the community justice authorities described the cost estimate for the policy as a leap in the dark. I accept that assumptions have to be made, but it is our duty to test their robustness. For example, the consequence of the 14,686 prisoners who are currently serving short-term sentences at 15 days or more about community payback orders and I will not resist the temptation, despite the fact that much of the field has already been covered.

It is helpful that—if I understand correctly—you are going away to reflect on a possible increase in the number of social inquiry reports. However, I did not hear a similar commitment to an uplift in unit cost. Could I invite you to give such a commitment, given that the policy would, on the basis of the evidence that we have received from the community justice authorities, be underresourced from the start because of the significant challenges that the CJAs face?

Wilma Dickson: I can certainly undertake to go away and think about that, but I could not say any more about it now.

Jackie Baillie: That is very useful and helpful. We will also get a paper about the assumptions regarding the scale of the likely take-up of community payback orders. Somebody from the community justice authorities described the cost estimate for the policy as a leap in the dark. I accept that assumptions have to be made, but it is our duty to test their robustness. For example, the consequence of the 14,686 prisoners who are currently serving short-term sentences at 15 days or more about community payback orders and I will not resist the temptation, despite the fact that much of the field has already been covered.

It is helpful that—if I understand correctly—you are going away to reflect on a possible increase in the number of social inquiry reports. However, I did not hear a similar commitment to an uplift in unit cost. Could I invite you to give such a commitment, given that the policy would, on the basis of the evidence that we have received from the community justice authorities, be underresourced from the start because of the significant challenges that the CJAs face? model of community sentences that commands public respect. In a sense, the first priority is to invest in getting the current sentences robust, with more effective ways of dealing with breach but also more supportive follow-up. That is the first stage, which is reflected in the first bit of the financial memorandum. The cabinet secretary has made it clear in recent public statements that investment in that area is a high priority for him—it is probably his top priority in the justice portfolio. To be fair, it is not all about investment; it is also about making more effective use of other resources. However, I accept that that argument will not get me very far this afternoon.

The answer is that we will have to find resources. That is a matter for the justice portfolio as a whole. George Burgess may want to add to that.

George Burgess: I do not have much to add. Overall, for simplicity rather than for any other reason, the figures in the financial memorandum have been based on the assumption that all the provisions in the bill will come into force in April 2010. Therefore, 2010-11 is the first year of costing. That is simply for illustrative purposes. At this stage, we have not set an implementation timetable for the whole bill, although individual policy areas might have timetables in mind for the implementation of particular measures. We have not set an implementation timetable for the whole bill—that might be counting our chickens.

Wilma Dickson: It is fair to say that, given the current economic climate, there are uncertainties ahead. After the budget tomorrow, we will be a bit clearer about the overall financial situation for the Government. It is clear that we can expect public expenditure to be quite constrained.

Jackie Baillie: I just want to be sure that I understand this. The first stage is to build confidence in the new system. Thereafter, the bill remains a high priority for the Cabinet Secretary for Justice. However, what I am not hearing is that the money is committed for a particular timescale and when all the costs will be met. You are introducing a bill, but some of it might not even be enacted.

Wilma Dickson: I would not say that. You have to accept that there are quite severe constraints on public expenditure at the moment, which affect prioritisation across the Government. The Government, across the piece, has to look at the position post budget and going into the new spending review period and it has to identify where it is going. It is rather hard for me to answer your question at this point.

Jackie Baillie: I suspect that the question is for ministers, rather than officials, but I always thought that legislation was an expression of the Government’s priorities and that resources should follow. I am slightly disturbed by the disconnect, but that is an issue to raise with others.

I want to ask about a couple of tiny things. First, we heard from Mr Merrill earlier and from you that the saving for the Scottish Prison Service was to do with the churn, rather than the number of places. That being the case, can you give me an idea of what kind of saving would result? People talked about prison officer time; I think that Mr Merrill even talked about staffing levels. When do you anticipate that the saving would be made and what will be the scale of it?

Wilma Dickson: We have to be clear whether we are talking about a cash saving or a staff-time saving. Any reduction in overcrowding relieves pressure on staff time. It frees up staff for more productive activity with people who really have to be in prison. It is fair to say that the Government’s first priority is public protection, part of which has to be about delivering prisons that are fit for purpose and providing accommodation for individuals in conditions that promote their rehabilitation. That is the other side of this argument, if you like.

It is not really for me to answer the question about cash savings—it is more for the SPS to answer that. The general view is that to make substantial staff-time and cash savings, you would probably have to be able to close either a cell block or, preferably, a prison. Is that a fair statement?

Annette Sharp: Yes.

Wilma Dickson: That is the general approach. We identified in the work that we did with our analytical services folk that, because people spend such a short time in prison, you have to cut an awful lot of sentences before you make a serious impact on prison places. The figure that we were given was that if the number of short sentences was reduced by 50 per cent, that would save about 300 prison places—that is not a prison. I do not want to put statements in the mouth of the Scottish Prison Service—that would be a little unfair—but that gives you an idea of the scale of the issue.

Jackie Baillie: To be fair, given that the Scottish Government funds the Scottish Prison Service, I would have looked for the Scottish Government to have a role in identifying the likely savings, whether they are cash or time-releasing savings. I hope that that can be given further consideration.

Our understanding is that justice of the peace courts will now be able to put in place community payback orders. Was that factored into the analysis of scale that was done?
16:30

Wilma Dickson: In a sense, justice of the peace courts already have the power to give probation orders, which are the largest single community disposal. Essentially, what is being added is the power to make unpaid work-related orders, which are the next biggest disposal. I fully accept that the use of such measures is likely to grow. I suspect that an element of the increase of between 10 and 20 per cent in community payback orders will be a relatively small initial increase in their use by the justice of the peace courts, but we have very little experience of how the courts will use the new disposal.

Jeremy Purvis: The community justice authorities stated in their written evidence that they had “insufficient time to consider the financial implications of this Bill and to consult CJA Boards and other partners.”

Why was that the case? That is probably a question for Mr Burgess.

George Burgess: Is that in relation to the—Jeremy Purvis: To the financial memorandum.

George Burgess: Am I not right in thinking that the committee requested the CJAs to consider the financial memorandum?

Jeremy Purvis: We asked bodies whether they had sufficient time to contribute to the consultation exercise on the financial assumptions in the financial memorandum. You heard members of a previous panel say that the Government did not give them sufficient time to consider the financial implications of the bill. Why was that? Does the Government have a view on what the community justice authorities have told the committee?

The Convener: It would be a good idea to follow up that matter in writing, as I do not think that we will take it any further today. The committee could write to you and you could respond.

George Burgess: Yes.

The Convener: Are you finished, Mr Purvis?

Jeremy Purvis: That was my question.

The Convener: The committee has no further questions. Do the witnesses wish to make any final statements?

George Burgess: May I be permitted to ask a question? I return to Mr Whitton’s first question, which was a general question about the bill and whether we had any comments to make on what might have been identified as disparities. I think that it was clear from the discussion that followed that the question was principally about community payback orders, but I want to check whether it was wider. Are there any other bits of the financial memorandum to the bill that the committee has concerns about and which have not come up in the discussion?

The Convener: There do not seem to be. That being so, I thank George Burgess, George Dickson, Wilma Dickson, Annette Sharp and Rachael Weir for their presence at the meeting and their evidence. There will be a suspension for a few moments to allow them to leave.

16:34

Meeting suspended.
Note: (DT) signifies a decision taken at Decision Time.

The meeting opened at 9.15 am.

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill: The Cabinet Secretary for Justice (Kenny MacAskill) moved S3M-5177—That the Parliament agrees to the general principles of the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill.

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill: The Parliament continued debating the general principles of the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill.

After debate, the motion was agreed to (DT).

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill: Financial Resolution: The Minister for Community Safety (Fergus Ewing) moved S3M-4544—That the Parliament, for the purposes of any Act of the Scottish Parliament resulting from the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill, agrees to any expenditure of a kind referred to in Rule 9.12.3(b)(i), (ii) or (iii) of the Parliament’s Standing Orders arising in consequence of the Act.

The motion was agreed to (DT).
Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill: Stage 1

The Deputy Presiding Officer (Alasdair Morgan): The next item of business is a debate on motion S3M-5177, in the name of Kenny MacAskill, on the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill.

10:00

The Cabinet Secretary for Justice (Kenny MacAskill): I begin by thanking members of the Justice Committee and their clerking team for their work in preparing the stage 1 report, which was published a couple of weeks ago, on the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill. The bill includes provisions on more than 80 topics. In the time available this morning, I can cover only some of the key parts of the bill, although I am sure that many parts will get a mention during the debate.

Tackling the scourge of serious organised crime in our communities has been one of the Government’s top priorities. That is why the serious organised crime task force was established. We are determined to tackle those who take part in serious organised crime at all levels, from the generals at the top, to their lieutenants, down to the foot soldiers and the fixers who turn a blind eye to the illegal dealings of their clients.

We welcome the committee’s strong support for the intentions underlying the serious organised crime provisions in sections 25 to 28. Equally, we recognise the concerns expressed by the committee and others about the definitions contained in some of those sections. Although some consider that the definitions are too wide, by its very nature, serious organised crime is wide ranging and evolving. From trafficking and peddling drugs that bring misery to our communities, to lower-level but high-volume crime, serious organised crime comes in many forms. That is why the definitions may have to be wide ranging.

In his stage 1 evidence, Chief Constable Stephen House of Strathclyde Police said:

“If we tighten … too much we will miss issues and new crimes. Criminals might even exploit the definition to ensure that activity does not fall within the definition of ‘serious organised crime’”.—[Official Report, Justice Committee, 26 May 2009; c 1906.]

We need to keep one step ahead and be able to anticipate the next form of criminality. However, the definitions need to be appropriate, and we are continuing to consider them with a view to lodging amendments at stage 2.
The scope of the “failure to report” offence in section 28 has caused some concern. Let me be clear: we are not trying to criminalise people who inadvertently discover during the course of their employment that another person may be involved in serious organised crime. Equally, however, we are clear that the offence must capture those people in professional occupations who knowingly contribute to and profit from the ends of serious organised criminals or who are used as fixers. The law should come down hard on them, and that is why section 28 is in the bill.

Following the work of Lord Coulsfield’s independent review, the bill includes provisions that will establish a statutory regime for disclosure of evidence in criminal trials. That statutory regime is crucial, as it will provide certainty for all those involved in the court process about which arrangements should be followed in that important area and will help to uphold justice for all.

We are pleased that the Justice Committee is generally content with the shape and content of the disclosure provisions. However, concerns have been expressed that some provisions are too complex and that others are too detailed. Although we want provisions that provide certainty and clarity for practitioners and accused persons, it is not our intention to impose an unnecessary burden on the police and prosecutors or to create an inflexible system. Disclosure is a simple duty to understand but a complex subject for which to legislate. Attempts to set out the duty in a simple form often miss critical elements. That said, we accept the concerns that the provisions are too complex, and that is why we will seek to amend the bill at stage 2 to simplify the provisions and to ensure that they are both comprehensive and well understood.

The bill takes forward our manifesto commitment to establish a Scottish sentencing council, which will have the power to develop sentencing guidelines to help to improve consistency, transparency and public confidence in sentencing. We are pleased that the committee expressed support for our aim to improve consistency in sentencing and recognised the need to tackle the poor public perception of sentencing. People have the right to understand why a particular sentence has been given in a specific case. We believe that the sentencing guidelines that the sentencing council produces will help to improve public understanding of, and therefore public confidence in, our justice system.

In the evidence that was taken at stage 1, there was much support for the creation of a sentencing council from a number of important criminal justice organisations. We believe that it is important that representatives of broader society sit on the sentencing council and that the council takes into account the views of others who have a role in the administration of criminal justice. The stage 1 report sets out the concerns from some quarters about the impact of the sentencing council on judicial discretion. We regard the council and its guidelines as a resource for the courts, but we are giving further consideration to the committee’s thoughts on how best to achieve our aims while maintaining the independence of the judiciary.

The bill provides a tough new community payback order sentence as a replacement for a number of existing community penalties. The community payback order will require offenders to repay communities for the damage that is done by offending and will help to tackle reoffending rates with quick justice. The stage 1 report supports the creation of the payback order. We welcome that conclusion, which acknowledges the facts about the effectiveness of community sentences versus short prison terms. It also reflects the public view, given that 84 per cent of people in Scotland think that community sentences are a good idea for minor crimes.

However, the committee expressed some concerns on the matter in its stage 1 report. It asked us to consider whether we have the terminology of “payback” right. The Scottish Prisons Commission was clear—as we are, and as we think the committee is—that payback to communities should be the focus of our community justice system.

Robert Brown (Glasgow) (LD): I entirely accept the cabinet secretary’s point, but does he accept that the important rehabilitation element of the community payback order is not entirely captured in its name?

Kenny MacAskill: For the first time, we will be able to provide for that in up to 20 per cent of an order. That is a significant indicator that we recognise that, although one aspect of an order has to be for the person to pay back for the harm done, we must also tackle the root problem of their offending, be that literacy problems, drug or alcohol addiction, or any other matter that the sheriff regards as relevant. We believe that we have struck the right balance in ensuring that people atone and are punished for the crimes that they commit; equally, as a society, we seek to assist offenders to tackle their underlying problems.

We see the importance of ensuring that the terms that we use accurately reflect the activity that the new community sentence will involve and that they do not create confusion. We will consider that further before stage 2.

The committee’s report highlights the need for additional resources to make the community payback order work. We recognise that, and we have provided significant extra funding for community service both this year and next year, to make the system tougher and tighter. The new funding will also help to provide for the transition to the new regime. As for the calls for the new sentence, when it is in place, to receive more additional funding, we have set out our budget for the next financial year and we have already provided extra resources. We absolutely share the Justice Committee’s conclusion that the new sentence must be adequately resourced; that will be our priority.

James Kelly (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab): On funding, given that there has been no movement in the community justice service line in the budget, what lines will the cabinet secretary cut in order to fund his policy of scrapping short sentences?

Kenny MacAskill: We are not creating the problems of cutting budgets. That comes from Westminster, and we have to address the consequences. As Mr Kelly knows, we are sitting down with the Association of Directors of Social Work and the community justice authorities, which are involved in front-line services. They are saying that it will be difficult but that they are satisfied that they will manage. Perhaps he should have more faith in the staff who work in community services and local government, rather than continually disparaging them.

Jeremy Purvis (Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale) (LD): Will the cabinet secretary take an intervention?

Kenny MacAskill: Not at the moment.

Alongside the community payback order, the bill proposes the introduction of a statutory presumption against the imposition by the courts of prison sentences of six months or less. We read the stage 1 evidence and the committee’s conclusions on that proposal with great care, and we found nothing that explains why some members of the committee oppose it. Many witnesses presented the committee with evidence that demonstrated the limitations of short custodial sentences. All members of the committee accept the evidence, as articulated in the stage 1 report, that "short prison sentences do not normally achieve much by way of rehabilitation", that they have "limited effect as a deterrent", and that any respite that they provide for victims and communities "is only for a limited period".

We agree with all that.

The Sheriffs Association gave evidence that short prison sentences are the only appropriate option in some circumstances, and that, in particular, custody must be an option for breach of a community sentence. We agree, and the bill acknowledges that point and contains safeguards that address it. Let me be clear that courts will still be able to impose sentences of less than six months. There will be no statutory bar to that.

However, the committee’s report gives several reasons to support the presumption against short prison sentences. David McKenna, the chief executive of Victim Support Scotland, which speaks up for those who suffer from crime and whose lives are blighted by it, said just last week:

"as an organisation we supported the introduction of robust and timeous community penalties for offenders in non-violent, non-serious cases, so we’re a bit disappointed that the committee has taken the decision not to support this proposal within the bill ... Certainly we hope that they can be assured that this will work for Scotland, because I think this is a golden opportunity really to take a radical and new view of how we deal with crime in our communities, making it better for communities but more importantly making it better for victims."

Richard Baker (North East Scotland) (Lab): When we talk about timeous community sentences, it is not the case that only a fraction of community sentences start within the seven-day target set by the cabinet secretary? When Victim Support Scotland gave evidence to the committee, it said that there should not be community sentences for, for example, serious offences, violent offences and assaults, yet the cabinet secretary’s presumption against custodial sentences will apply to indecent assault, assault, and two thirds of convictions for knife crime.

Kenny MacAskill: There are two points there. First, Richard Baker criticises the time lag. That is the current system, which we inherited from him and his predecessors. That is why we are bringing in measures to improve the system and to address questions of timing. If he is critical of the system, that criticism should lie at my predecessor’s door.

Secondly, I remind Richard Baker that we are talking about a presumption. In cases in which a sheriff believes that it is appropriate for respite care to be given, that a breach has occurred, or that no other sanction can be applied, we will fully support that sheriff in their decision. Richard Baker should perhaps think about supporting those who speak for and represent victims, who have been speaking out about what will really change things.

Members should remember that the status quo is not working. We inherited the revolving door, and communities are blighted as a result. For that reason we have established a broad coalition, from the former First Minister Henry McLeish, to the Scottish Prisons Commission and people such as David Strang, down to David McKenna. Yet some members of the Justice Committee have been unable to follow where the evidence led.
Members agreed that the priority for prison should be dealing with offenders who commit such serious acts that no other form of punishment will do. Committee members acknowledged that short prison sentences are of limited usefulness, but that specific instances may arise in which a short prison sentence may, nonetheless, be the only option. Committee members followed exactly the same path of reasoning as the Prisons Commission did, and as we have done in making the proposals that are set out in the bill. Therefore, why do some members of the committee and of the Parliament not support the presumption against short prison sentences?

Cathie Craigie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (Lab): Will the cabinet secretary take an intervention?

Kenny MacAskill: I am sorry; I must make some progress.

No good reason was found to stand against the presumption, and we call on the members concerned to support that important provision.

Sections 58 to 60 make changes to the operation of the system that allows the retention of forensic data in the justice system. The forensic data working group has made good progress with developing a list of relevant sexual and violent offences committed by children that will trigger retention of forensic data under section 59. It is important that we get those provisions right, so careful consideration must be given to them. As requested by the Justice Committee, we aim to provide a draft list of the relevant offences before stage 2. GeneWatch UK submitted stage 1 evidence to the effect that DNA samples should be destroyed once DNA profiles have been obtained. The forensic data working group is considering the issue. In considering the retention and use of forensic samples, we are determined always to strike the correct balance between the rights of individual citizens and the need to keep communities safe.

This is a licensing as well as a criminal justice bill. In it, we are implementing the recommendations of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 task group and are modifying a number of provisions in the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 to reduce costs, shorten process times, remove unintended barriers and close loopholes.

A number of provisions in the bill give rise to a need alter reserved legislation, and we are working with United Kingdom Government departments so that a section 104 order, under the Scotland Act 1998, can be made at the appropriate time.

The Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill is a comprehensive bill that shows this Government’s ambition to help make Scotland a safer and stronger land, and to change the status quo, which is clearly not working.

I move,

That the Parliament agrees to the general principles of the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: I call Bill Aitken to speak on behalf of the Justice Committee.

10:18

Bill Aitken (Glasgow) (Con): It is with pleasure, compounded with relief, that I present the Justice Committee’s stage 1 report on the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill. The relief is caused by the fact that a long, complex and convoluted experience is now at an end. My pleasure is formed from my belief that we have produced a fair, balanced and measured report on what is undoubtedly a complex and far-reaching piece of legislation.

It is a measure of that complexity that the committee required 24 meetings to deal with the bill, taking evidence from well over 50 witnesses. They included the Lord Justice General, the Lord Justice Clerk, the Sheriffs Association, senior police officers, voluntary groups, academics, the Law Society of Scotland, the Faculty of Advocates, the Lord Advocate and the Solicitor General. We also heard from local authorities, licensed trade representatives and, of course, the Cabinet Secretary for Justice. I put on record the committee’s appreciation for those who gave of their time so willingly and for the innumerable written submissions that we received. All were carefully considered and appreciated.

Before I deal with the content of the committee’s report, I also thank the members of the committee. My colleagues applied themselves with typical commitment and professionalism. I thank the clerking team, led by Andrew Mylne and Anne Peat, who kept up with the demands that the committee made of them—and with the frequently unreasonable demands of the convener.

Many of the measures in the bill are non-contentious and represent a valuable contribution to the modernisation of the law. Other aspects are controversial. Perhaps the most difficult issues to deal with were those that caused concerns across party lines, on which I hope there will be some movement before stage 2.

The controversy is largely restricted to part 1 and relates to sentencing. There might be no meetings of mind at the end of the process, but the divisions between us are perhaps less significant than some might think. The committee was lukewarm, it is fair to say, on the proposal that the bill needs to state the purposes of sentencing, as its purposes and principles are well established, nor does that proposal sit comfortably with the proposal that sentencing guidelines will be issued by the Scottish sentencing council.

It is easy to see the Government’s direction of travel in relation to the sentencing council, which has perhaps been formulated in response to a public perception of inconsistency in sentencing. The committee was not convinced that clear, objective evidence exists to substantiate that perception. There is an inevitable tension between such a council and the principle of the separation of powers, and the committee could not form a consensus around how that tension could best be addressed. A majority of members took the view that sentencing guidelines developed by any sentencing council should take effect only after formal endorsement by the appeal court; an alternative suggestion was that, if there is to be such a council, its composition should have a judicial majority. I think it is significant that, when he gave evidence to the committee in Alloa, Henry McLeish downplayed the significance of a sentencing council, stating that he had “no strong views” on how it should operate.

The issue of community payback orders was not particularly controversial, and the committee broadly supports the creation of such orders, which should simplify and strengthen the current range of community sentences. The committee was firmly of the view that the orders must be adequately resourced. We found it difficult to be satisfied as to whether sufficient funds have been or will be made available for them. The level of take-up of the orders will be closely linked to the views of sentencers as to their effectiveness, and their effectiveness will be related to whether there is adequate funding.

The committee was strongly of the view that if CPOs are to gain credibility among the general public, victims of crime and, most important, offenders, there must be immediacy, with the order enforced on the day of sentence or as soon as possible thereafter. Justice delayed is justice denied—and justice that is ineffective.

The issue of short custodial sentences is of course highly controversial, but let me state, in a typically consensual vein, that, as the cabinet secretary said, the committee unanimously accepted that short-term prison sentences do not normally achieve much by way of rehabilitation. The majority view—albeit on the basis of my casting vote—was that the Government’s proposals in that regard were totally unacceptable. I might have more to say about that later, but I am constrained by the role in which I am speaking. Significantly, the weight of evidence among academics was in favour of the Government’s proposals, whereas members of the judiciary, who actually work in the courts, tended to take the opposite view. The issue has somewhat further to run.

In relation to the difficulty with the operation of the Custodial Sentences and Weapons (Scotland) Act 2007 regarding monitoring after early release, the proposals in the bill come under the heading of good intentions, although there will clearly be practical difficulties and resource implications. We reckon that the Government has probably got it about right.

Finally on part 1, one would have thought that the view that drink is not a mitigating factor when it comes to sentencing was unanimous. Most members of the committee found it curious that the Government felt a need to codify that principle in statute.

Having dealt with the issues that are probably the most contentious, I turn to the proposals regarding serious and organised crime, on which the committee strongly supports the Government’s underlying intentions. Let no one doubt that the police, prosecutors and politicians are determined to do everything possible to hit the drug barons and their criminal associates hard. The bill is extremely well intentioned, but the committee was not certain that some of the detail was right.

There are difficulties, with which the cabinet secretary has dealt to some extent, around the definition of “involvement” and “directing”, on which further dialogue is necessary. We are also concerned about other definitions, such as what is meant by “serious and organised crime”. We have asked the Scottish Government to re-examine the extent to which it would be possible to tighten the definitions. The committee is keen to play its part in attempting to find a proper way forward.

Another issue of non-political, general concern relates to the age of criminal responsibility. We accept that Scotland is not in line with other jurisdictions, but, at the same time, there has to be some protection against the activities of the very small minority of youngsters who can do pretty serious things. Section 38 was the subject of long and anxious consideration. We have been unable to form a settled view on whether 12 is the appropriate age threshold for someone to be deemed capable of committing a crime or to be liable to prosecution. Before we proceed, we need to get some assurances from the cabinet secretary that there is a sufficient range of disposals in the children’s hearings system for children under the age of 12. The committee would welcome further dialogue on that matter.

The retention of samples is a controversial issue. The committee agrees that it is sensible to enable fingerprint and other forensic data to be subject to the same European convention on human rights-compatible retention regime as DNA.
However, we are less certain whether it is appropriate to extend those provisions to those who are offered alternatives to prosecution. Appropriate thought does not appear to have been given to the proportionality of such a measure, bearing in mind the minor offences that are likely to be involved. That requires further examination.

The retention of DNA and other evidence, particularly from children and persons who have not been convicted of significant crimes, raises issues under article 8 of the ECHR. Once the Government has had time to absorb the committee’s report, we would expect it to report to us to advise us what progress has been made with the forensic data working group, particularly on whether a draft list of offences is required. I have taken some encouragement from what the cabinet secretary said earlier.

Part 4 relates to evidence. The issue of witness statements and, in particular, the provision that will enable a civilian witness to look at their statement shortly before giving evidence troubled a number of committee members and we could not formulate a consensus on it. The legal profession and the judiciary shared our doubt, so we ask the Government to look at the issue again.

On the requirement for the spouse or civil partner of an accused to give evidence, although the Government’s measures are undoubtedly well intentioned, we draw to its attention the evidence that the committee took and ask it to consider whether, in retrospect, what it proposes is the most satisfactory way forward.

There are a number of other sensible measures, such as the proposal to increase the age of jurors to 70. However, the provisions on disclosure in part 6 caused considerable anxiety. The rationale was fully understood, but there were concerns about defence statements being made available to the Crown. The committee was not persuaded that there is merit in the proposal to make defence statements compulsory in solemn cases, as that could prejudice important principles of justice, so perhaps the Government will give its justification further thought. There was a view that the disclosure provisions should be kept as simple as possible, as was highlighted in the excellent report by Lord Coulsfield, who provided valuable evidence.

The bill also deals with licensing, on which there are important provisions. It is unfortunate that the length of the criminal justice aspects of the bill preclude an exhaustive examination today of its licensing aspects, although that can take place in due course. Most of the licensing measures are common sense. However, I draw to the Parliament’s attention the committee’s concerns under a number of headings, such as the provision of antisocial behaviour reports to licensing boards and the committee’s view that a sledgehammer was being used to crack a nut in respect of the charging of, or potential costs to, non-commercial groups for obtaining licences for charitable events.

Some events that councils require to license will require the council to expend a considerable amount of money in ensuring that everything is in order. The most obvious example is that of a rock concert, which would involve building control, environmental health and other council services. However, small events such as sales of work or flower shows—such events are familiar to many members of the Parliament—do not require the same level of council input. Perhaps the Government could look again at the matter, because, undoubtedly, there is a possibility that the good intentions of very well-intentioned people who work for charities could be frustrated if the costs that are involved become prohibitive. We cannot have charities suffer because of overtight regulation.

Other aspects of licensing are worthy of consideration, such as the definition of “fit and proper person”. We are not totally relaxed that the law as it is at present is exactly the way forward, so perhaps some work could be carried out in that respect.

It would be wrong to suggest other than that the criminal justice provisions dominate the bill. Some aspects are good; some are, to my mind, capable of being improved, but the legislative thought process around them is entirely satisfactory and they would receive the approval of the majority of the Parliament; and others, such as the provisions on short periods of imprisonment, are bitterly controversial. In a conciliatory manner, I ask the cabinet secretary to look again at that issue. It may well be that Victim Support Scotland and other bodies took a differing view from half of the committee, but the committee has got it right and is speaking on behalf of the majority of the people of Scotland. As I said, I will have more to say on that later.

I hope that the Parliament will accept that a great deal of time and effort has gone into the preparation of the report, which will provide an informed basis on which the debate that will take place over the next few months can proceed.

10:33

Richard Baker (North East Scotland) (Lab): I congratulate the Justice Committee on its stage 1 report on the bill and I congratulate the convener on his self-restraint in presenting it. Given the breadth of the bill, the committee has had a lot of ground to cover. The Scottish National Party’s supposed flagship bill on law and order involves many exercises in consolidation and proposals that are technical in nature. Like others, I will not have time this morning to cover all the issues in the bill.

However, the proposal to legislate for a presumption against custodial sentences of six months or less is significant, because it is unworkable, unfunded and unjust. I am fulsome in my praise for the committee’s report, because it was right to reject that proposal. It has often been said that the intention is that minor offenders should not be placed in custody—indeed, the cabinet secretary referred to that this morning. However, it is clear that that presumption will not apply simply to minor offenders but to all sentences of under six months, which would include 40 per cent of those convicted of indecent assault, 85 per cent of those convicted of assault and two thirds of those convicted of knife crime. That sends out entirely the wrong message on this key area of crime. It will not do anything to make our communities safer, which should be the focus of the bill—I am afraid that it is not.

There is a false debate about whether the measure in itself will reduce reoffending. We, too, want to reduce reoffending and we believe that community sentences have an important role to play in that, but reoffending rates are higher for those who are sentenced to prison because—alas—by the time that somebody receives a prison sentence, they have normally already received several other disposals. Almost by definition, a person who is given a prison sentence is a repeat offender. Putting offenders who would otherwise be in custody back in the community will not make communities safer. We should be clear about the consequences that that might have. Scottish Women’s Aid has said that the presumption could “have a negative impact on women, children and young people experiencing domestic abuse.”

The cabinet secretary’s argument that offenders will be sentenced to robust community payback programmes is fantasy. It is on his watch and not ours that community sentences are—as sadly—losing public confidence. He referred to a survey in which 84 per cent of respondents said that they wanted community sentences as alternatives, but the same surveys show that people are losing confidence in such disposals.

Margo MacDonald (Lothians) (Ind): Is Richard Baker in favour of the short custodial sentences that are normally imposed on women who fail to pay a fine that is incurred for soliciting? Would he continue such measures?

Richard Baker: I certainly take on board Margo MacDonald’s point. The Equal Opportunities Committee has reported on a range of issues in relation to women offenders and we will certainly consider that committee’s proposals carefully.

I am afraid that the current state of community sentences cannot be ignored. One third are breached and a fraction start on time. Even those who agree with the cabinet secretary’s proposal on six-month sentences say that it must be properly funded, yet in the next three years a black hole of some £66 million to provide the additional community sentences would result from the proposal.

We believe in the staff who deliver community sentences—they do a fantastic job—but the cabinet secretary is not resourcing them adequately. He says that he is increasing the available funding, but we know that the community justice budget is at best flatlining—as James Kelly said—and that the cabinet secretary has used unidentified underspend to say that he is supporting the funding in the financial memorandum. His calculations do not add up. That is a recipe for disaster that will push an overstretched community sentencing system to the point of collapse. All those who will be responsible for delivering the greatly increased number of sentences expressed concern to committees about funding. To be frank, the cabinet secretary has done no more than dismiss their concerns.

Robert Brown: I will leave aside the resource argument, which we all accept is important. Does Richard Baker accept in principle that a move away from short-term sentences, which do not work and cost huge amounts of money, is desirable? I do not see what option he is presenting.

Richard Baker: We oppose the presumption against short-term sentences in principle. We want more community sentences, but the resourcing issue cannot be escaped from—to be fair, Robert Brown does not try to do that. When the financial memorandum is scrutinised—Mr Purvis was good at doing that in committee, along with Labour members—the inescapable point is that the funding simply is not there. Everybody has said that, if the Government believes in the proposal, the investment should come first, but the investment has not been identified, even though the Scottish Government’s budget is increasing—of course, the cabinet secretary failed to refer to that.

We believe in robust and effective community sentences. That is why we pioneered drug treatment and testing orders, why we now propose the use of alcohol treatment and testing orders and why we first proposed the community court in Glasgow. In England and the USA, that model provides swift and effective community justice in which we can have confidence. Despite everything that the Government and the cabinet secretary have said about community sentences, the Scottish Government prevented the pilot community court from proceeding, although the Parliament voted for the pilot. Nothing else demonstrates so well the muddled thinking behind the bill and behind the presumption against short-term sentences.

If we are to look towards more and better community sentences, investment must come first. The cabinet secretary says that we cannot continue to spend money on prisons, but his officials told the Finance Committee that the proposals in the bill would not save a penny in the prison system. Front-loaded funding is needed, but the cabinet secretary is not providing that.

We will not support the failure to act effectively to tackle violent crime. We have proposed and will pursue a policy of mandatory minimum sentencing for knife crime. We still have some 3,500 charges of possession of an offensive weapon each year and higher violent crime rates than England has. That is why it is time to send out the clear message that if someone carries a knife, they will go to jail. Communities want tougher action to improve their safety, but the bill proposes that fewer people should go to jail for carrying a knife and that two thirds of the people who are convicted of such offences should not go to jail. The lack of action on knife crime in the bill is another unacceptable failure.

We support some measures in the bill. We do not oppose the sentencing council per se, but we have listened to the Lord President and others and believe that it should have a judicial majority, that a mechanism for it to report to the Justice Committee should exist and that it should have a narrower remit and reduced costs. The council should not have to take account of the prison population—it should have a clear and unadulterated focus on what is just in sentencing.

We will not oppose the change to the age of prosecution for children, but the Lord Advocate might need to retain the right to pursue a prosecution in exceptional serious circumstances. We will listen to views on that point and consider the detail of changes in the children’s hearings system, which we still await.

We do not oppose the rebranding of community sentences, but rebranding is of course useless if the resources are not provided to make the sentences work and we are concerned about the detail of the proposed changes. For example, the Sheriffs Association’s submission to the Justice Committee says that, under the proposals, no penalty would in effect be imposed for breaching supervised attendance orders. Normally, the penalty is additional hours, but as the bill sets an upper limit of 300 hours for orders, a subsequent breach would have no effect on those who have been sentenced to such an order. That requires to be addressed.

Scotland should not be left with weaker laws on DNA retention than the rest of the United Kingdom has. The report of a serious case only yesterday showed that DNA profiles can be an invaluable tool in detecting and preventing crime.

The proposals on tackling serious and organised crime are positive, but I understand from the financial memorandum that they will apply only to some two cases a year.

The reality is that—sadly—the positive proposals in the bill are far outweighed by the negative. Given the committee’s rejection of the Government’s proposed presumption against short custodial sentences, and to provide the opportunity for amendments to be lodged to make the bill effective in tackling violent crime, we will allow the bill to progress to stage 2. However, the reckless presumption against six-month custodial sentences and the Government’s unwillingness to take action on knife crime are lines in the sand. If they are crossed in the final stages, we will not support the bill. Labour will always, always put the safety of our communities first.

10:42

John Lamont (Roxburgh and Berwickshire) (Con): The bill is complex and epic in the proportions of what it covers. The Justice Committee is to be congratulated on its efforts to scrutinise the bill. Many provisions are not contentious and will simply tidy existing procedures in the criminal justice system. We welcome most of those.

The journey to reach the stage 1 debate has been interesting. I am sure that we have all read the many consultation papers in anticipation of the Scottish Government’s bill. I remember clearly the debate on the Scottish Prisons Commission’s report in September last year, when we discussed in depth the recommendations to reduce the average prison population to 5,000 and to scrap sentences of six months or less in favour of community supervision sentences. As members have done today, I expressed then my concern about where that approach to custody would take us. Despite what the cabinet secretary said today, I am disappointed that the Scottish Government has not heeded those concerns and dropped the proposals from the bill.

Stewart Maxwell (West of Scotland) (SNP): Will the member take an intervention?

John Lamont: I want to make progress.

As I said, we welcome some proposals in the bill. For example, we welcome the moves to crack down on the use in prison of personal communication devices, such as mobile phones. I recently visited several prisons and I was struck by the problems that communication devices present to our Scottish Prison Service. Prisoners share the hand-held phone device but have their own SIM cards, which makes detection harder. The use of communication devices in prison enables prisoners to continue their criminal activities as before. My colleague Ted Brocklebank will consider that in detail later.

We warmly welcome the extension of the upper age limit for jurors. That will bring the law of Scotland into line with that of the rest of the United Kingdom and will create a bigger pool of jurors on which the Scottish Court Service can draw. I anticipate that David McLetchie, who has campaigned hard on the issue since 2005, will have something to say on the matter in his speech.

I will spend some time focusing on the sentencing provisions in part 1, particularly the creation of community payback orders, and the presumption against short periods of imprisonment or detention. We welcome the creation of CPOs, which will help to simplify the current range of community sentences, but the Government must ensure that CPOs are not only adequately resourced, as the Justice Committee pointed out, but properly enforced.

Last year, 35 per cent of community service orders were not completed successfully and 35 per cent resulted in a breach application. With statistics like that it is not unsurprising that the public do not have much faith in community sentences, let alone the criminal justice system. The Scottish Conservatives are not anti community sentencing. Believe it or not, we do not want to see more people locked up in prison. We want to stop offending and, more particularly, reoffending. We believe that community sentences can play an important part in our sentencing regime. However, if they are to work, they must be rigorously enforced and complied with.

We have called for the creation of a community court in Glasgow. Such a court would ensure that justice was served and was seen to be done, and it would give offenders every opportunity to make positive choices, change their lives for the better and get out of the vicious cycle of persistent offending. It is therefore disappointing that the Scottish National Party Administration has rejected the setting up of a community court in Glasgow.

It should be remembered that imprisonment serves four functions in our society: to protect the public, to deter, to punish, and to rehabilitate. I accept that a sentence of six months or less may not give an offender access to the full range of rehabilitation facilities that someone who is imprisoned for a longer period can access. However, as important as rehabilitation is—and I believe that all people need to be given an opportunity to make positive changes in their lives—it is not the only purpose of imprisonment. Prison is also to deter people from reoffending; to show them that their behaviour is unacceptable to society and that the consequence of their actions is for them to lose their liberty for a set time as a punishment; and to protect our public and give them respite from a persistent offender or someone who is deemed to be a risk.

Robert Brown: If one visits Polmont young offenders institution, one finds that 91 per cent of the young offenders have been there before. That does not say much for the deterrence argument. What is the member’s comment on that?

John Lamont: We need to understand why they are repeat offenders and why we are not using their time in prison to rehabilitate them more effectively. The argument that short-term sentences are not working is not a reason for abolishing them completely. Those sentences should be more effective as a deterrent.

Short-term sentences offer sheriffs and judges the option of dealing with persistent offenders who continuously breach community service orders by giving them a short, sharp shock to ensure that they do not reoffend. They also provide respite to communities that are blighted by the actions of the accused. Short-term custodial sentences will always be a necessary part of any summary justice system. Judges and sheriffs do not send people to jail lightly.

Mike Rumbles (West Aberdeenshire and Kincardine) (LD): It is respite care, now.

Mike Pringle (Edinburgh South) (LD): Respite care!

John Lamont: I hear members querying my reference to respite. A number of my constituents rely on short-term sentences to provide them with respite from the blight that individuals cause to their communities. Members should not underestimate the effect that short-term sentences can have on our constituents across Scotland.

The licensing parts of the bill also require further consideration, particularly their impact on charitable organisations and community groups. The Justice Committee convener mentioned that point. Recently, like other members, I received an e-mail from the Church of Scotland Guild voicing its concerns about the effect that the bill would have on its events and activities. Many local groups run small fairs, coffee mornings and other events at which they invite local businesses to display goods. They also run rallies and ask local bookshops to provide a bookstall during the event. Although the group does not make a profit on many of these occasions, the new licensing measures will require the procurement of a licence. Local authorities will have discretion over charging, but there are concerns that groups in different parts of the country may be treated differently—which could lead to inequality and unfairness—and that having to get a licence may mean that they will not put on such events in the future. That would be unfortunate for not only the groups, but the local, mostly independent shops, which may suffer a negative impact.

In addition, the Scottish Sports Association voiced concerns about the impact that the bill would have on its ability to promote sport throughout Scotland. The SSA noted that the bill would make it unviable for sport clubs that work on a not-for-profit basis to continue to promote their activities or raise funds. Many of the funds that clubs receive from the sale of goods to the public are accrued in relatively small amounts. If they are required to obtain a market operators licence for such fundraising activities, it is clear that the situation may become unviable. We should encourage and not punish clubs that are being proactive in the pursuit of additional funds. The SSA also believes that the measure will act as a deterrent to volunteering. Without the work of many thousands of volunteers, many sports clubs would not survive. Those sports clubs provide coaching, competition and youth development opportunities to local communities. We should help to facilitate such community involvement.

In September, the Scottish Government published “On your marks... Get set... Go: A games legacy for Scotland”, in which it stated its ambitions for Scottish sport in the preparation for and years beyond the 2014 Commonwealth games in Glasgow. It speaks of a partnership between the Government and groups such as the SSA in delivering those sporting objectives in the community. How can the Government truly support such statements if it then places additional controls and financial burdens on clubs that are working to promote sport throughout Scotland?

We must recognise the effect that the bill could have on charities and community groups in the hope that we will not hinder their ability to continue to do good work in their local communities.

The Scottish Conservatives will vote for the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill tonight at decision time, but we look forward to seeing the amendments at stage 2 that I am sure will be lodged and which we hope to support.

10:52

Robert Brown (Glasgow) (LD): I commend Bill Aitken, the Justice Committee convener, for his comments on behalf of the committee. I do not always agree with him, but on this occasion I agreed with pretty much every word that he said.

The Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill is long and complex, with many separate and largely unconnected strands. As we have heard, some of its proposals are highly contentious. It is a tribute to my colleagues on the Justice Committee that we were able to produce a report that was the subject of only one formal vote. I say that given the differences of emphasis or expertise in the committee membership. That consensus gives added power to the broad themes of the stage 1 report. I hope that the Government will listen and respond appropriately—indeed, the cabinet secretary indicated that he will do so.

I will indicate the Liberal Democrat position on some of the central issues. This stage 1 debate is taking place in a different financial climate from that which pertained when the Scottish Prisons Commission reported and the bill was conceived. That must influence our approach. We must ask whether particular proposals are essential or just useful.

I say immediately that the Liberal Democrats are clear in principle that those most important sections that aim to reduce short-term prison sentences and replace them with tough, speedy and effective community sentences are absolutely vital and must be properly resourced. Frankly, aiming to reduce such short-term sentences is a no-brainer. The public is funding prison places at up to about £40,000 a year per prisoner. Some prisons are housing minor criminals in grossly overcrowded conditions from which they routinely leave worse than when they went in, the underlying causes of their offending not having been addressed and the family or employment supports that are key to their rehabilitation having been fractured.

The public are equally entitled to know that the punishment that is meted out by the state is the most effective possible in stopping their local community being troubled by violent disorder, vandalism, the consequences of alcohol or drug addiction, and repeated crimes of dishonesty—all of which cause huge annoyance, worry and fear to law-abiding citizens. The Government must adequately fund community payback orders if the public are to have confidence in such measures. In fairness to the cabinet secretary, he has responded specifically to Liberal Democrat concerns on the issue by providing an initial sum of £2 million and a further £5.5 million over two years to bring existing community sentences up to scratch. Despite what members have said in the debate, I know from my visits to community justice authorities that the money is having an effect: sentences are being speeded up and sharpened up.
However, we all know that the quality of different projects is patchy and that, in moving to the new form of community orders, it is a fundamental challenge to ensure that they are started immediately, managed and supervised with both skill and authority, and allowed not just to produce visible payback to the local community, which is hugely important, but to turn around the offender. As the Justice Committee said, the presumption against short-term sentences will lead to basic costs increasing by 10 or 20 per cent, according to the Government’s estimates—about which there are issues. There will also be additional costs for the Scottish Court Service and for the voluntary sector bodies that will be involved in delivering the new CPOs. The conditional requirements that will often accompany the orders may require drug or alcohol addiction treatment, mental health treatment or literacy support, all of which cost money.

James Kelly: Does Robert Brown accept the evidence of Government officials to the Finance Committee that releasing prisoners on short-term sentences will not save any money from prison budgets?

Robert Brown: I do. There will be longer-term savings, if we get CPOs right, but achieving short to medium-term savings will be a challenge. That is why bridging finance is an important issue in this area, as in so many others. Community justice authorities gave evidence that the unit cost figures that were used to calculate the costs of community orders may not be adequate. Liberal Democrats are clear that current resource levels will be inadequate and that the Government will need to find additional resources if the new CPOs and, more particularly, the presumption against short-term prison sentences are to be more than tokenistic and are to make the substantial difference to crime levels that we believe they are capable of making.

Liberal Democrats offer a partial way forward—to apply the presumption only to sentences of under three months, at least in the first instance, which would reduce the organisational and financial pressure. However, there is a difference in a broad sense between the pattern of crimes attracting sentences of less than three months, which looks more like that of those attracting community sentences at present, and the pattern of crimes attracting sentences of three to six months, which tend to look more like more serious crimes. As other members have said, why, for goodness’ sake, does the SNP not rethink its lamentable and short-sighted decision to abandon the Glasgow community court project—one of a growing number of projects that have not been properly assessed but have been binned by ministers who are too often hung up on administering the smack of firm but, in this instance, inadequate Government decision making?

I will say a word about the opposition on this general issue from Labour and the Tories. With respect, I say to Richard Baker that resource is a smokescreen for Labour—as he indicated in his response to my intervention, they are against the changes in principle. They operate on the principle that no press release should go out and no new policy should be announced that does not say that they want tough penalties or tough action, which implies that the only respectable sentence for any crime is to lock up the culprit and throw away the key. That used to be the preserve of Tory conferences, which rapturously received demands for the restoration of the death penalty or bringing back the birch. Since 1997, however, new Labour has positioned itself in such a way that no one can outdo it on being tough on crime. I say to Richard Baker and the Labour Party that the difference is that they know that short-term sentences do not work but are desperate to give the impression of ceaseless activity in fighting crime, to ensure favourable headlines in the tabloids—not least those owned by Rupert Murdoch, new Labour’s erstwhile but, it turns out, fair-weather friend. Richard Baker knows that demands for tough action on crime are a political spin-doctor’s invention and substantially irrelevant to the real issues that we face in fighting crime.

Richard Baker: Mr Brown’s accusation that we are seeking support from Rupert Murdoch is behind the times and gives the lie to the outrageous politicking of his statement, which is entirely wrong. Does he accept not only that we pioneered community sentences when we were in government with the Liberal Democrats but that we have looked for further alternatives to custody during this session, including alcohol treatment and testing orders, which we have pressed for in the context of the bill? The member’s statement was extremely unfair and misrepresented our position.

Robert Brown: I pay tribute to Richard Baker for some of the policies that he mentions, but I am making a general point about positioning, right down from the Labour Government in London to Labour members in the chamber.

It is no coincidence that about 80 per cent of the young children of five or six who come before the children’s panel as being in need of care and protection are back before the panel or the court at the age of 16, 17, or 18 for offending. One third of those entering prison are assessed as having an alcohol problem on admission, and 50 per cent as having a drug problem. If they do not have a drug problem when they go in, they are pretty likely to have one when they come out. Sadly, no less than 70 per cent have some form of mental health... problem, with huge proportions having literacy or numeracy challenges. I mentioned the Polmont young offenders institution to John Lamont. I do not know what sort of percentage he requires to be persuaded on these matters, but 91 per cent seems pretty high to me.

I want to take a sideways glance at the issue of women in prison. Staff at Cornton Vale tell me that their main job is to try to rebuild shattered and fragile lives, to make up for the devastating fact that women are taken away from their children and homes and that their self-respect is at rock bottom, their mental health fragile and the likelihood of a suicide bid high. To all intents and purposes, those women are there mostly for their protection rather than for that of the public. It is not obvious that we are too soft on their crimes—in fact, it is totally clear that society has failed those women, that life has been extraordinarily tough for them and that there is a high chance that their children will be among the next generation of offenders.

Bill Aitken: Will the member give way?

Robert Brown: I cannot at this point—I am heading towards the end of my speech.

In my view, the £1 million annual running costs of the proposed Scottish sentencing council are not justified in the present climate. It could be a useful body; however, if the cabinet secretary goes ahead with the proposal, he should for goodness’ sake pay heed to the judiciary’s justified concerns and square the circle by having the council’s proposals, influential as they will be, endorsed or amended by the appeal court, to ensure that there is separation of powers.

I conclude with a brief word about children. We need to sort out the age of criminal responsibility, in line with the report of the United Nations Committee on the Rights of the Child. We must also look at DNA issues, in the way that the Justice Committee recommended. The children’s hearings system was not set up to deal with legal issues of that kind, and it is almost impossible to define the cut-off point between serious and not serious crimes. The number of cases would be modest, and many would go to the sheriff anyway for a finding on the referral. Such cases should be referred or should go to the sheriff.

This is an important bill, but a great deal of work remains to be done to get it right. We expect to see our concerns addressed as the bill proceeds. For many people, failure creates despondency, aggression and more failure. The high challenge for the bill is to help to break the cycle of failure, to support the work of the violence reduction unit, early intervention and diversion from crime, and to build a system in which reoffending rates are not 91 per cent in Polmont or 75 per cent in prisons generally and the current 42 per cent for community sentences is bettered by as much as possible. That is the prize. If we succeed, our country and society will be much the better for it. Alas, we cannot say that for the position advanced by Labour and the Tories in the teeth of the majority of evidence that witnesses gave to the Justice Committee. They have generations of abysmal failure of so-called tough policies on crime to explain away. Liberal Democrats members will support the bill at stage 1 tonight.

11:03

Stewart Maxwell (West of Scotland) (SNP): I add my thanks to the many witnesses who provided evidence and to the committee clerking team for all its hard work.

I start with two proposals in the bill that have received particular attention. The first is the presumption against short custodial sentences—the one issue on which the committee could not agree a position. Four members voted in favour and four against. The vote displays why that proposal will feature heavily at stage 2 and, no doubt, at stage 3.

In my view, the arguments in favour of the proposal are overwhelming, whereas the arguments against do not stack up. Beyond a shadow of a doubt, the current policy has failed. It has been tried for years and has had little or no impact on turning people away from a life of crime. In fact, many people argue—in my view, cogently—that the exact opposite is the case and that short custodial sentences are a door into, rather than out of, a life of crime.

Despite some people’s attempts to cloud the issue, the bill proposes not the abolition of short custodial sentences but a presumption against them, with the judiciary retaining the freedom to impose such sentences where they are necessary and appropriate. Inevitably, it will be for the chamber to take a view on the matter at stage 3, as the 50:50 split in the committee reflects the diverse views that are held across the chamber.

I turn to the proposal for a sentencing council. I believe that we need a body to provide the courts with guidelines on sentencing and that the current arrangement is no longer the best way of dealing with the matter. As Robert Brown mentioned, there was a difference of opinion in the committee on judicial independence in the context of a sentencing council. I do not believe that we would be going far enough if we set up a sentencing council whose recommendations must then be approved by the court. That would not move us on particularly far. If there have to be changes to the bill, we should look at the make-up of the council and discuss whether there is a case for it to have a judicial majority.
James Kelly: On the £1 million funding for the sentencing council, does the member agree that, in these difficult economic times, some of that money would be better used to fund community payback orders?

Stewart Maxwell: James Kelly lays a false choice before the chamber. Of course it is important that we achieve value for money from our investment in this area—the committee made that point in its report—but it is not a straight choice between the two options as he suggests.

A judicial majority on the sentencing council might strike the right balance between maintaining judicial independence and providing us with a body that will introduce robust guidelines on sentencing.

I turn now to DNA retention and the committee’s conclusions at paragraph 372 of the report. A trend in recent years has been the increasing use of non-court disposals or direct measures such as fiscal fines. However, one of the unintended consequences of that trend has been that if two people commit an identical offence, receive an identical charge and both have their fingerprints and DNA taken, they can end up with two different outcomes. The person who chooses to go to court and is found guilty of the offence has their DNA and fingerprints retained, but the person who accepts the offer of a direct measure does not have their DNA and fingerprints retained. There is no justification for the difference and, as I have indicated to the cabinet secretary and the committee, I intend to lodge an amendment to close what I believe is an anomaly in the current rules.

One of the other issues that caused debate in the committee was the age of prosecution versus the age of criminal responsibility, as other members mentioned. The bill seeks to raise the age of prosecution to 12 from the current age of eight, while retaining the age of criminal responsibility at eight. That means that children between the ages of eight and 12 could no longer be prosecuted through the criminal courts. Although the change is long overdue, I do not support the proposals from some outside the chamber to raise the age of prosecution to 13, 14, 15 or even 16, neither do I support the idea that that trend should be reversed. There are cases of children below the age of 12 who are clearly capable of understanding the difference between right and wrong and who have committed crimes for which they must take responsibility. Therefore, I am content to support the position that is outlined in the bill.

I will mention briefly two other matters in the report. The first is serious organised crime. I realise that some people are concerned about some aspects of that area of the bill, in particular section 28, on failure to report serious organised crime. We must take a robust line on the matter as any gaps that we leave will be exploited by the very people with whom we are trying to deal. That is what happens at the moment. I recommend that members read the evidence on the matter that was provided to the committee by the Lord Advocate and the Solicitor General.

My final point relates to the proposal to allow non-invasive post mortems, to which paragraphs 645 to 651 refer. Although it is not a part of the current bill, I raised the matter with the cabinet secretary and the committee and asked questions of the Lord Advocate when she gave oral evidence. We also received written evidence about it from the Scottish Council of Jewish Communities. Therefore I ask that, if possible, we get a definitive response in the summing-up today to the questions raised about the possible use of non-invasive post mortems in Scotland and, in particular, to the question whether a change in legislation is required.

I ask all members to support the bill at decision time.

The Deputy Presiding Officer (Trish Godman): Before I call Bill Butler, I remind members that speeches should last five minutes rather than five and a half minutes.

11:09

Bill Butler (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab): As deputy convener of the Justice Committee, I place on record my sincere thanks to the committee’s clerking teams past and present, the Scottish Parliament information centre and the many witnesses who gave invaluable evidence to the committee.

There is no insurmountable difference between Labour and the Government on several measures in the bill that merit support, such as those on serious organised crime, voluntary intoxication by alcohol, people trafficking and the upper age limit for jurors. However, given the voluminous nature of the bill, I will confine my comments to some of the more controversial aspects of part 1 where no agreement has been found.

One of the most worrying aspects of this putative act is the Government’s proposal to introduce a presumption against six-month sentences other than in exceptional circumstances. The production of a coherent penal policy that leads to a safer and stronger Scotland is the aim of all members across the chamber; it is certainly central to the creation of a rational system of criminal justice.
A sensible and resilient penal policy must be capable of delivering several objectives: an improvement in public safety; the delivery of condign punishment when necessary; the protection of victims’ and communities’ interests; and a contribution to reducing reoffending and promoting rehabilitation. Those are desirable outcomes, but determining how we achieve all or any of them is where this serious debate must focus. I say to Robert Brown that these are complex and difficult areas of policy to which no easy answers or soundbite solutions exist. One of the most difficult questions is not only how we strike a rational balance between custodial and community sentences but how we develop consensus on the symmetry between punishment and rehabilitation that is acceptable to people in our communities and recognised by them as being workable.

I remain profoundly dissuaded of the Government’s policy to end six-month or shorter sentences other than in exceptional circumstances. Such a legislative change would send out entirely the wrong message to the public.

Stewart Maxwell: Will the member give way?

Bill Butler: No, thank you.

Pace the cabinet secretary, sentences of less than six months are not imposed on fine defaulters alone but cover, for example, those who push class A drugs in our most vulnerable neighbourhoods, some of which I represent. Such sentences cover housebreakers who leave behind a trail of damage and heartache and common fraudsters who prey on the old and weak in our communities. Such sentences also cover thugs who employ physical violence that can leave innocent passers-by hospitalised and, in some cases, permanently disfigured. Such a policy would be a serious misjudgement. Although it would not forbid sheriffs from imposing such sentences, it would unnecessarily restrict the scope within which the judiciary may act in cases where the safety of the public—our constituents—is paramount. I sincerely hope that the Government will think again before stage 3 about this controversial and ill-judged provision.

The other side of the equation is community disposals. If such disposals are to gain the confidence of the Scottish public, they must be visible, have immediacy and be resourced properly. I remain troubled as to whether community payback orders will be funded adequately. I have no problem with the principle of CPOs because, as my colleague Richard Baker said, they are a rebranding of the alternatives to custody that were introduced by the previous Labour-led Executive in coalition with the Liberal Democrats. Mine is a genuine worry about the \£66 million black hole that is echoed by the Finance Committee, which notes that it has not “received any evidence to allow it to understand whether the estimated update of CPOs, of between 10 and 20 per cent, is accurate or whether this figure is likely to increase year-on-year, along with the cost implications.”

I hope that the Government can provide comfort on that concern before stage 3 because it is not a cover; it is a serious concern and worry that we have on the Labour side of the chamber.

Labour will support the bill at stage 1 but, unless the Government thinks again about the matters that I mentioned, among others, we on these benches will not vote for the bill at stage 3. I hope that the Government has the wisdom to retreat and preserve the parts of the bill that are worth preserving.

11:14

Aileen Campbell (South of Scotland) (SNP): The Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill gives the Parliament an opportunity to take Scotland closer to being the safer, fairer country that we all want to live in. I welcome the wide-ranging consultation by the Scottish Government on the various aspects of the bill and the thorough scrutiny that was carried out by the Justice Committee. I made submissions to both the Government and the committee on aspects related to the legislation and will return to that shortly.

I endorse the general principles of the bill, as well as the wide range of specific measures that will help to tackle so much of the crime and its consequences that blight too many of our communities.

I am particularly interested in how the bill will affect the youngest members of our society. The Government is right to use the bill to reinforce the importance of ensuring that younger children who offend will continue to be dealt with in the hearings system and will be held, when that is necessary, in secure accommodation and not in adult courts or prisons. The approach is important, because it protects the rights of young people and meets their needs appropriately. It also has the effect of minimising contact with adult criminals and thereby reducing the risk of reoffending.

However, it is not just young offenders who are affected by the justice system. The children of adults who commit offences are also affected by sentencing decisions. Scotland’s Commissioner for Children and Young People published the report “Not Seen. Not Heard. Not Guilty: the Rights and Status of the Children of Prisoners in Scotland” in February 2008, and in June that year the Education, Lifelong Learning and Culture Committee discussed issues that were raised in the report with the then commissioner, Kathleen...
Marshall. In the report, the children of offenders were described as “the innocent victims of their parent’s offending”.

That sums up the situation in which so many of those children find themselves.

In 2002, a report by the Scottish Prison Service, “Making a Difference”, revealed that about 13,500 children in Scotland had a parent in prison. Families Outside, a Scottish charity that works with families who are affected by imprisonment, points out that, given the rise in the prison population since 2002, the current number is likely to be significantly higher. Kathleen Marshall said:

“...At least as many children are affected by the imprisonment of a parent as are looked-after children in Scotland.” [Official Report, Education, Lifelong Learning and Culture Committee, 25 June 2008; c 1257.]

Each case gives rise to costs of alternative care arrangements, problems for the parent when they try to get their children back after serving a custodial sentence and wider societal costs of depriving a child of a parent. Children who have a parent or primary carer in prison often exhibit regressive behaviour, such as bed wetting, or display emotional and behavioural problems. Families Outside noted that even having a parent who is remanded in custody can have a disproportionate and negative impact on a child.

The SCCY P has highlighted a ruling by the Constitutional Court in South Africa, which introduced child impact assessments, to be carried out by lower courts at the point of sentencing. Earlier this year, I was privileged to hear more about the system when I attended a moving lecture by one of the members of the court, Justice Albie Sachs. I congratulate Tam Baillie, the current children’s commissioner, on organising the lecture, which made a powerful impression on everyone who attended. Justice Sachs quoted from the judgment that he had given in the case of S v M, in which a woman who would otherwise have been jailed was kept out of jail because of consideration of the rights of her three sons. He said:

“Every child has his or her own dignity. If a child is to be constitutionally imagined as an individual with a distinct personality, and not merely as a miniature adult waiting to reach full size, he or she cannot be treated as a mere extension of his or her parents, umbilically destined to sink or swim with them ... the sins and traumas of fathers and mothers should not be visited on their children.”

The Cabinet Secretary for Justice is familiar with the issue, because he kindly met me and other interested parties to discuss it. Other members will be aware of the issue, thanks to the helpful briefings that Action for Children and others provided in advance of the debate.

I make it clear that I am not advocating that convicted criminals who are also primary care givers should not be properly punished. Any person who poses a threat to the public should be incarcerated, whether or not they have children. Nor am I suggesting that it is always in a child’s best interests not to lock up their parent or carer. In my submission to the Justice Committee, I argued that imprisoning low-level offenders who have children has a wider social impact as families are broken up. If we punish such offenders in the community, justice will be served and Scottish society will not have to deal with the long-term social consequences of family breakdown. I hope that the approach will also break the cycle whereby the children of prisoners are more likely to offend.

The presumption against short-term sentences will help to achieve that outcome to some extent, but there might also be a role for the Scottish sentencing council, which the bill will establish. In my submission to the Government’s consultation on the sentencing council, I suggested that, when the council is established, it might review the effectiveness of social inquiry reports, which can be carried out as part of the sentencing process, and consider whether a specific family impact assessment should be carried out whenever an offender has caring responsibilities for children or other dependants. I hope that the cabinet secretary and the Government will consider my suggestion as the bill continues through the parliamentary process.

I hope that there will be support for the bill in the Parliament and I look forward to supporting it at decision time.

11:19

Cathie Craigie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (Lab): Like other members, I pay tribute to the people who assisted the Justice Committee in preparing its report—I am a member of the committee, so I will take the credit that is going.

It is important that I say at the outset that although I agree with aspects of the bill, a number of areas cause me great concern. I have time to highlight only a few areas. To enshrine in law a presumption against short sentences is wrong and would send the wrong message. In the view of many of my constituents and many other people throughout Scotland, the Cabinet Secretary for Justice is not taking his position seriously. In the words of someone to whom I spoke at the weekend, he is “having a laugh” at the expense of communities throughout the country.

This is a serious matter and, if the Government will not take it seriously, the Parliament must do so. If the cabinet secretary thinks that scrapping sentences of six months or less will send the message that the SNP minority Government wants to tackle criminality and protect the public, and if the Government believes, as it seems to do, that people who are convicted of serious crimes should avoid a prison sentence, the Government is way out of touch with the Scottish public. The cabinet secretary quoted all sorts of organisations and academics in his speech, but I can quote the Mrs Smiths who live round the corner, who think that if someone has committed a serious crime, a custodial sentence is necessary.

Short custodial sentences work—there are examples of that in my constituency. If the cabinet secretary really believes that prison is a skoosh, he should bring to the Parliament measures to address the issue, rather than a stunt that will reduce prisoner numbers by leaving dangerous criminals on our streets.

Margo MacDonald: Will the member give way?

Cathie Craigie: No, I am sorry. I do not have time.

The sentence should fit the crime. If a judge or sheriff considers that a prison sentence of six months or less is appropriate, the sentence should take place and the judge’s time and court time should not be further taken up by report writing to explain the decision.

The Liberal Democrats should come off the fence. If they do not think that short sentences work, why are they prepared to compromise with the Government and talk about minimum sentences of three months? They should get their act together, stop judging other members and make a decision.

Jeremy Purvis: Will the member give way?

Cathie Craigie: I am sorry, but I do not have time.

On the Scottish sentencing council, I am not convinced that the bill will change anything. There is a perception of inconsistency in sentencing. The committee was disappointed that it could gather no hard evidence on the issue, but what did come to light was the difficulty of gathering measurable evidence. Dr Cyrus Tata, from the centre for sentencing research at the University of Strathclyde, cautioned us against drawing direct inferences from bald statistics that do not take account of possible differences in the cases that come before different courts. He cited a range of studies that provide evidence of inconsistency as well as consistency and said:

“‘The overall picture is rather like a bell curve, with a lot of consistency and some variation.’— Official Report, Justice Committee, 2 June 2009; c 2012.

The bill would require the sentencing council to include in its sentencing guidelines “an assessment of the likely effect of the guidelines on … the number of persons detained in prisons or other institutions”.

That is unbelievable. Are we saying that sentences and punishment in Glasgow, for example, should be decided not on the basis of whether they fit the crime but on the basis of whether Barlinnie prison happens to have a space? I do not have time to say more, but I ask the cabinet secretary to listen to the warning bells that Dr Tata sounded in that regard.

On licensing, the proposals in section 125 would have serious financial and administrative consequences for charitable and voluntary organisations. The policy memorandum to the bill is silent on the matter. There is not a word on why the Government thinks that change is necessary, and questioning of the cabinet secretary brought the committee no information on why section 125 is necessary. If section 125 is not amended, it will have a disastrous effect on the ability of charities and community groups to engage with and serve the public through fundraising events such as gala days. The cabinet secretary is unwilling to take responsibility for the change that he promotes but passes the buck to local authorities, leaving a real chance of differences being created all over the country. It is not acceptable to leave that hanging in the balance. We must make changes to the section and I inform the Parliament that I intend to introduce amendments to protect the status quo.

11:25

David McLetchie (Edinburgh Pentlands) (Con): As my colleague John Lamont already indicated, there is much in the bill to criticise. I will not waste the opportunity to do so later, but I will start on a more positive note by considering section 68, which deals with the upper age limit for jurors. I welcome the proposal to increase that limit from 65 to 70 years of age. It is a measure for which I have campaigned since July 2005 when the matter was first raised with me by my constituent Mrs Campbell, who wrote:

“Dear Mr McLetchie

I wonder if you might be interested in … progressing in the Scottish Parliament, a ‘niggle’ that arrived in the post this morning! I received a notice for potential jury service” in Edinburgh sheriff court

“but unfortunately as now aged 67, I am ‘too long in the tooth’ … but as I am now retired, I have at last the time and interest and maybe even some experience of ‘life’ to be able to serve if selected … why cannot jury service age be raised to at least 70?”

I took the matter up with Cathy Jamieson and then her successor, Mr MacAskill. Although it has taken more than four years, I am very pleased that the change will be enacted with, I hope, all-party support—even though, ironically, it will come too late to give Mrs Campbell an opportunity to serve. The age limit of 65 is long out of date and fails to represent the demography of Scottish society. Indeed, it is only one of many examples of age discrimination that still exist in our law.

Raising the age limit in Scotland to 70 will bring us into line with the rest of the United Kingdom and correct the long-standing and glaring anomaly in our justice system that judges can serve on the bench until they are 73 years of age, but a person who is over 65 cannot serve on a jury. Increasing the upper age limit for jurors will also increase the pool from which people are selected for jury duty by a further 200,000. That is important at a time when the court service finds it increasingly difficult to maintain a sufficient juror pool to fill our 15-member juries in Scotland.

I point out that it would be possible to have no upper age limit at all—as is the case in many jurisdictions—and move to a system in which anyone over 65 could serve but could choose not to do so. That is the system that is advocated by Help the Aged and Age Concern. Perhaps we may have an opportunity to debate the issue at stages 2 and 3.

Section 17 provides for the highly controversial presumption against short sentences. Like other members, I was sorry and angry to learn earlier this week that the number of incidents of domestic violence recorded by the police had risen by 8 per cent in the past year to 53,681. It is surely a particular concern that there was a 39 per cent increase in the number of incidents in which the victim had previously been abused. Last week, my colleague Bill Aitken discovered from a parliamentary answer that a mere 12 per cent of the 5,029 people who were convicted of domestic violence in 2007-08 received a custodial sentence, 19 per cent received a community sentence, 39 per cent were fined and 29 per cent were admonished. So much for zero tolerance; it is more like zero sentencing.

If there was ever an argument for short-term sentences, those figures surely provide it. A sentence of six months—or even three—can be long enough to give the victim of domestic violence a welcome respite and the opportunity to make a break from the past and create a new home and life for her and her family if that is her wish. Richard Baker was right to draw our attention to the comments of Scottish Women’s Aid on the proposed presumption because this week’s figures show that many women are trapped in a vicious cycle of abuse and are given no assistance by a criminal justice system that puts their abusers back in their homes.

Margo MacDonald: Will the member give way?

David McLetchie: I am sorry, but I must finish this point.

I am afraid that the SNP’s proposed presumption against short sentences would make the situation worse not better. There are many instances in which a short spell in custody serves as a respite to a community, person and family. When judges and sheriffs sentence convicted criminals, they take into account the wider picture. They do not send offenders to prison just because they can do so: they send them to prison because it is just to do so. Justice is in the title of the bill, but I am far from convinced that it is in all the content.

11:30

Angela Constance (Livingston) (SNP): If we are passionate about reducing crime and making communities safer, we need to cast a cool eye over the evidence and dispassionately decide what will work and what measures will bring about lasting change in our communities instead of resorting to populist, primitive, Old Testament views of justice. Justice requires proportionate punishment, but punishment alone does not work. By necessity, we need to focus on the control, change and care of offenders. The bill is an attempt to strike the correct balance.

In many regards, the tide has begun to turn, with more police, recorded crime being down by 11 per cent over the past two years, cashback for communities—or, as one of my constituents describes it, cashback from crooks—and the fact that we now have a serious organised crime task force. However, if we are to secure real and lasting changes, we need to make some bold decisions.

It is time to show some leadership and courage. Often, in such debates within and outwith the Parliament, there is much talk about who is tough and who is soft in the rather macho world of politics, but I put it to members that the soft ones are those who take the easy and lazy option: those who opt for political expedience and pander to the right-wing reactionaries as opposed to taking tough decisions and showing leadership in tackling real concerns.

One of the things that the McLeish commission demonstrated is that political factors often have more influence on high imprisonment rates than crime does. I would think that that would be a good, solid reason for a sentencing council. I would also think that a sentencing council would have a valid role in, and be a sensible vehicle for, introducing some good, robust guidelines on knife crime and domestic violence.

Women offenders have already been mentioned. Why is it that, since 1997, the female prisoner population has risen by 90 per cent? Have women all of a sudden become more bad? I diplomatically suggest that it may have something more to do with how the judiciary views women and women who offend. Therefore, society needs to have some say in how sentencing is operated.

Bill Aitken: Is Angela Constance aware that the percentage of convicted women offenders who are given custodial sentences is completely out of sync with that for male offenders? Women do not get sent to prison for serious crime to the extent that men do.

Angela Constance: Mr Aitken knows that I am no fan of benevolent paternalism in that many of the issues that women offenders face are exactly the same as many of those that the poor young white men in our prisons face, whether mental health or illiteracy. I am no statistician, but I would be interested to know whether Conservative members support the Equal Opportunities Committee’s work on women offenders, led by Margaret Mitchell. Perhaps the Conservative party could address that in its closing speech.

I support the Scottish Prisons Commission’s view that prison should be used wisely and sparingly. We have a misplaced confidence in prison. As Stewart Maxwell said, it is counterproductive and, as Robert Brown said, it disnae act as much of a deterrent. I commend the Government and the cabinet secretary for showing leadership in the bill and not being feart to lead the way and lead the debate.

I want to raise three issues, but I suspect that I will have time to raise only one of them, which is the proposal to raise the age of prosecution instead of raising the age of criminal responsibility. In my view, that just does not go far enough and is therefore not in keeping with the bill’s ambition. While unruly certificates will be gone and children will be remanded in local authority care in secure units and not prisons, I note the Commissioner for Children and Young People in Scotland’s concern that the proposal may not meet our international obligations. I agree with my colleague Aileen Campbell that children are not mini-adults.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: You should finish now, Ms Constance.

Angela Constance: I will finish on that point.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: I call Rhoda Grant. You have a very tight five minutes.

11:35

Rhoda Grant (Highlands and Islands) (Lab): I will address the changes to non-harassment orders in section 15 of the bill, which I do not think anyone has dealt with yet. I very much welcome section 15, but I feel that it does not go far enough. Many victims of abuse would benefit from a non-harassment order, but we can see from the financial memorandum that that disposal is seldom used. In 2006, 24 non-harassment orders were granted; in 2007, the figure was 23; and in 2008, there was a slight rise to 29. Contrast that with the figure that David McLetchie quoted of 53,681 cases of domestic abuse reported to the police—that shows a lamentable level of intervention by our courts.

When I visited Australia and New Zealand in October, I met people and agencies that are involved in combating domestic abuse. I was impressed by the seamless support that they give. I was especially surprised to see how much it was driven by the police and the justice department. In Australia, the police have powers to put in place a 24-hour injunction without the support or agreement of the victim. The injunction is formalised in court, and justice officials support the victim through the process and ensure that the court hearing occurs prior to the injunction being spent.

There is also real recognition of the damage that is done to a child who is brought up witnessing domestic abuse. Children, too, have access to the injunctions in their own right and can seek them with the support of children’s services. However, children’s services can apply for an injunction on the child’s behalf without their agreement. The abuser can then be removed from the home and resources can be put in place to support the children and the non-abusive parent.

The victim does not need to take any action and is not responsible for their own protection: the state is. That protects them from retribution, but it also takes into account the distinct nature of domestic abuse. It is the only crime I know of where the victim can be complicit in covering up the crime. That is because, by the time a recognised offence takes place, the victim has been undermined to the extent that they almost accept what is happening to them. The abuser ensures that the victim’s confidence and self-esteem is slowly undermined; only then does the physical abuse start.

In this country, we prosecute only the physical abuse; there is no offence that covers the mental abuse. That means that, when the relationship becomes violent, the victims often blame themselves. In many circumstances, they also feel unable to exist outside the relationship, so they tend to become the best witness for the defence. That is why Women’s Aid puts so much emphasis on building a victim’s confidence and self-esteem. Only after that has happened are they able to take steps to protect themselves and their children. We put the onus on victims to protect themselves; that does not happen with any other crime of assault, far less with crimes against property.

The bill amends the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 to enable the Crown Office and Procurator Fiscal Service to apply for a non-harassment order against a person who has been convicted of crimes involving harassment. The order is not a conviction in itself, but it guards against future harassment. A breach of the order is a criminal offence, which can be punished by up to five years in prison. An order can be applied for where there is evidence of a course of conduct, involving convictions for harassment. It cannot therefore be applied for unless there has been at least one previous conviction for harassment and the current incident before the court has also led to a conviction.

My reading of section 15 is that the amendment of the 1995 act lowers the barrier from “harassment” to “misconduct towards the victim”. However, it is not clear from the bill or the explanatory notes what offence would encompass “misconduct towards the victim” and whether it would be prosecuted or lead to a conviction. However, it is clear from the guidance that a previous conviction is still required, albeit for a lesser charge. The change also makes it easier for evidence of previous convictions to be presented to the court, but that does not remove the need for a previous conviction. It removes the requirement for a course of conduct amounting to harassment, but leaves the requirement for a course of conduct regarding “misconduct towards the victim”, which will have to lead to a criminal conviction. It is ludicrous that, in this most difficult of crimes to prosecute, a course of conduct is required. If an offence has been committed, a non-harassment order should be granted; one offence is one too many and any future recurrence should be prevented.

I ask the Government to lodge amendments at stage 2 that would give greater protection.

The Presiding Officer (Alex Fergusson): You must close, please.

Rhoda Grant: The state needs to protect all victims of crime.

The Presiding Officer: I am grateful to members for ensuring that we finished that session on time. The debate will continue this afternoon.
Resumed debate.

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill: Stage 1

The Presiding Officer: The next item of business is the continuation of this morning’s debate on motion S3M-5177, in the name of Kenny MacAskill, on stage 1 of the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill. We continue with speeches of no more than five minutes.

15:25

Nigel Don (North East Scotland) (SNP): Here comes the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill, stage 1, part 2. I shall watch the clock and try to avoid all the areas of contention that were well covered this morning, because I want to cover one or two other areas. However, I cannot help reflecting that we had one or two interesting comments this morning. The most interesting one that I recall from before lunch was the accusation that the Liberals are sitting on the fence. First, to be fair to them, I do not think that that is true. Secondly, my observation on the Liberals’ policy is that they are very good at finding the gaps in the fence and have never found any need to sit on it.

Let me look first—

Jeremy Purvis: I hope that Nigel Don was not expecting me to intervene there.

Nigel Don: No.

Let me look first at the sentencing council. The issue of consistency, or the perception of consistency, has been raised in that regard. The sentencing council is a good idea because it could lead on sentencing policy as things develop. For example, I am conscious, as other members will be, of the internet’s effect on our world, and I am not entirely convinced that common law will necessarily be up to the mark on internet offences. The sentencing council may well provide a useful way of sorting out how offences that arise in that environment should reasonably be addressed, rather than waiting for the bench to find its way there. The sentencing council will also have a value in relation to knife crime. I suspect, too, that a sentencing council would have been useful in the discussion on drink driving.

I flag up an issue that Rhoda Grant introduced this morning in relation to non-harassment orders, which are in section 15. I simply note, with pleasure, that the process is being changed so that an order can be granted after what is in effect a single event, rather than a stream of events being required. That is a significant step forward.

I turn now to the issue of disclosure, because there is a major issue that will affect much of what will be put in place on disclosure. Lord Coulsfield, who provided an extensive report on disclosure, expressed concerns to us about how the bill deals with the subject. It seems to me—I think that this was the Justice Committee’s general view—that, when we deal with a subject such as disclosure, we should set out the principles. If there are more than a couple of principles, there should clearly be a hierarchy so that we know what the overriding one is and what the subsidiaries are. Below that, there will necessarily be a set of rules, which I suspect will primarily lay out duties and responsibilities; it is clear that those should be in the statute. Below that, there will be a set of procedures and processes, and things that might go into a code of practice. I think that that is the way in which we are encouraging the Government to go. I take it from the cabinet secretary’s comments this morning that the Government has already got its mind round that issue, but I think that that is the structure to which it should work.

I note in passing that this is a huge bill, which will require a significant amount of time at stage 2. I hope that it is being timetabled appropriately. Further, who knows how long it might take at stage 3?

I draw members’ attention to the large number of areas where the Justice Committee was not sure what the answer was. There is a surprisingly long list: section 62, on witness statements; section 63, on spouse compellability; section 132, on antisocial behaviour reports; section 94, on defence statements; section 82, on compensation for miscarriages of justice; and section 38, on the prosecution of children, which was referred to this morning. I highlight those merely to make the point that, although there is a lot of good stuff in the bill and a lot of good thinking has undoubtedly been done—I do not criticise those who drew up the bill—there is a huge amount of discussion, rationalisation and reconsideration yet to come. I want to ensure that we have time and space to ensure that that happens properly.

Finally, on the bill’s proposed modifications to the Custodial Sentences and Weapons (Scotland) Act 2007, I merely repeat the Justice Committee convener’s remarks from this morning—

The Presiding Officer: You must close now.

Nigel Don: Again, the provisions involve an area of huge confusion, but we think that the Government has got them about right.

15:30

Duncan McNeil (Greenock and Inverclyde) (Lab): In the short time available, I intend to focus on the many concerns that we have in Inverclyde, which is a community whose experience has not always been a happy one. In recent years, the sad deaths of Damian Muir and Darren Pyper, who were killed by knives, shocked a community that had become sick of the endless cycle of violence.

We have worked as a community to try to break that cycle and to bring our experiences and influence to the Parliament. We have welcomed the changes over recent years whereby sentencing powers have been increased, although we have been disappointed that those powers have not been used to the full. Over the years, we have engaged with a wide range of groups and initiatives. We have met the violence reduction unit. We have joined with the medics against violence. We have supported the Inverclyde initiative in its aim of educating young people about the consequences of violence. We have rallied and marched with the friends and fellow pupils of tragic schoolboy Darren Pyper to create awareness of the dangers of knives. We raised a petition with John Muir, Damian’s father, and presented it to the Parliament to engage with the democratic process. We held a summit in the Parliament and another in our town hall—organised by the local paper, the Greenock Telegraph—to give voice to the community’s concerns. In the time since, John Muir has tirelessly campaigned across Scotland. His campaign has struck a chord everywhere that it has gone.

Having engaged in that parliamentary process, we saw the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill as an opportunity to introduce the tougher sentences and to fund the interventionist measures that people wanted. Today, they will have heard that their calls for tougher sentences are to be ignored in the bill and that funding for preventive measures are not in place. They will have heard that these violent people will be less likely to go to jail and their communities and neighbourhoods will not be safer as a result. To hear their concerns dismissed will greatly disappoint them. To hear the cabinet secretary describe short-term prison sentences as respite care will give no confidence to my community.

Rhoda Grant and David McLetchie outlined the detrimental impact that could result from the bill’s measures on domestic violence. A look at last week’s report by the Scottish Children’s Reporter Administration shows that nine children under the age of two—they were babies—died in recent years in incidents in which domestic violence and aggression were background factors. That is much more than just a debating point. Such an additional significant risk to the lives of our women and children must be measured against a proposal that the cabinet secretary hopes—only hopes—will reduce reoffending.

I believe that the bill is an opportunity for this Parliament of the Scottish people, which was set up to bring solutions to Scottish problems, to send a clear message to people who carry and use knives. My community does not have to look far for experiences in which knives have caused misery and heartbreak, as has happened across Scotland. Just a fortnight ago, we were told of an appalling murder whereby a young man, who was a visitor to this country, with a pregnant wife at home in India, was randomly murdered in the street. We heard of the sickening racial motive, but it is important to remember that the presence of a knife in that situation escalated that from a nasty confrontation to a vicious murder.

The people of my community—and people all over Scotland who supported John Muir’s campaign—have made it clear that they think that people who carry knives should go to jail. They have made it clear that they think that violent criminals should go to jail. The strong argument for mandatory minimum sentences for those who carry and use knives is a democratic one. Instead of dismissing their arguments, ignoring their experiences and writing off their demands as populist rants, it is time that this Parliament and this Government listened to people and acted on their concerns.

Although I will support the principles of the bill at stage 1 today, I will not hesitate to vote against the bill at stage 3 if it does not address the concerns of my community.

15:35

Mike Pringle (Edinburgh South) (LD): I congratulate the Justice Committee and, in particular, the committee clerks on an excellent report.

The Liberal Democrats believe that we need to change the mindset of our criminal justice system so that the goal of reducing reoffending is a key objective in the effort to cut crime in Scotland. It is clear that, wherever and whoever we are, that must be our aim. As well as having one of the highest rates of imprisonment in the European Union, Scotland has a persistently high rate of reoffending. The extent of the revolving-door syndrome in Scotland’s prisons shows that, for many people, prison does not work as a deterrent. It is clear that a radical overhaul of Scotland’s sentencing system is required.

Prison is, of course, the most appropriate place for serious and violent offenders, and prison sentences must be available not only as a method of punishment for serious crimes but as a way of protecting the public from dangerous individuals. However, Liberal Democrats believe that imprisoning offenders for a very short period of time provides little or no benefit in challenging the underlying causes of offending.

Karen Gillon (Clydesdale) (Lab): Will the member take an intervention?

Mike Pringle: No, I do not have time.

We believe that short prison sentences of less than three months should be replaced with tough community sentences that require offenders to work to pay something back to the communities that they have harmed.

Many witnesses were generally supportive of the establishment of sentencing guidelines, but there was a considerable amount of disagreement on whether a Scottish sentencing council, in the form that is laid out in the bill, is needed. We think that the proposed establishment of a sentencing council misses the point. Liberal Democrats do not support a proposal for what we think would, in effect, be no more than an additional quango to have influence over the highly respected and independent judicial system. The cabinet secretary was right when he said that the sentencing council had to provide for broader representation of Scottish society, but we think that if the proposal is to go ahead, the argument by witnesses that there should be a judicial majority on it is correct.

The Liberal Democrats are broadly supportive of the new proposal for community payback orders, but I suggest that the £1.1 million that it is proposed will be spent on setting up the sentencing council would be better spent on CPOs. If CPOs are to work, they will need to be adequately resourced, and the committee was not certain that that would be the case. The cabinet secretary has given some indications in that regard, but I genuinely believe that the amount that is to be provided will not be enough.

I agree with the committee—and will quote from its report, as I could not have put it better myself—when it said that it strongly believed that “If CPOs are to gain credibility with the public, and with the victims of crime in particular, they must begin (and be seen to begin) very shortly after sentence is declared – either on the day of sentence or (where this is not practicable, as we accept will sometimes be the case) as soon as possible thereafter.”

I can only say that I have always been firmly of that view.

Sections 16 and 17, on short periods of detention and imprisonment, are perhaps the most contentious. Many of the witnesses who gave evidence to the committee expressed support for the proposals on the grounds that short-term prison sentences are generally regarded as being expensive and ineffective, both in protecting communities and in rehabilitating offenders and reducing crime.

We must all agree that Scotland’s prisons suffer from chronic overcrowding, which makes them hugely expensive and extremely ineffective at preventing reoffending. I am sure that we all agree that the issue must be addressed, but the question is how we do that. All members of the committee recognise that the priority is to imprison offenders who commit offences that are so serious that no other form of punishment will do or who pose a threat of causing serious harm to the public. Most of those offenders will not, I suggest, be sentenced to less than six months’ imprisonment.

James Kelly: Will the member take an intervention?

Mike Pringle: I am sorry—I will not.

The SNP proposes to end sentences of six months or less, whereas we would like to see a three-month threshold instead. However, it must be accepted that short prison sentences do not achieve very much in the way of rehabilitation, so there needs to be a method of striking a proper balance between the imposition of short custodial sentences and the use of effective community disposals. I will leave that subject for the committee to address at stage 2.

I turn to section 24, “Voluntary intoxication by alcohol: effect in sentencing”. As I might have said in previous justice debates, I was a justice of the peace in Edinburgh. Early on in my time as a JP, I well remember being faced by a defence agent who said that his client could not remember what he had done because he was drunk. I asked the defence agent who had forced his client to become drunk and suggested that he had got himself drunk without any aid from anyone. The defence agent looked somewhat perplexed at the turn of events but then readily agreed that his client had not required assistance from anyone else to get drunk. Very quickly, lawyers in my court stopped justifying their clients’ actions by suggesting that being drunk was a mitigating factor in their behaviour.

The Presiding Officer: You must close please.

Mike Pringle: I agree with the committee report when it says:

“The evidence suggests the principle is already well understood by sentencers, and there may be a risk that a statutory provision will confuse the legal position”.

The Presiding Officer: You must close now, Mr Pringle.

Mike Pringle: This is a very important bill and I look forward to hearing the Government’s response to many of the issues raised by the committee.
I support the bill.
Helen Eadie (Dunfermline East) (Lab): As ever, we read the reports of the work of other committees and see a great deal of valuable evidence and advice provided by those who know and understand all the technical, professional and legal issues. It is clear to me that crimes of violence against people must be treated severely in sentencing policy in every constituency, whether they are committed by men or women.

My speech today is based on the experiences that I have heard about recently from the people whom I represent in Dunfermline East—the people of Cowdenbeath, Rosyth, Aberdour, Inverkeithing and all the other towns. I have been on the high streets, campaigning with my friends for signatures to a petition that calls for a mandatory jail sentence for anyone who carries a knife. People have queued to sign the petition everywhere I have gone. It is the petition of the Muir family and Duncan McNeil, but my people support it very strongly.

Bill Wilson (West of Scotland) (SNP): Will the member take an intervention?

Helen Eadie: No. I am sorry, but I have only just started my speech.

Those people support the petition even before I have told them why I was moved to do so. Like Duncan McNeil, I have heard people’s views following the tragic stabbing earlier this year of Sean Stark. Having heard a commotion outside, he left the comfort of his flat to see what he could do to restore peace. He was fatally stabbed. The people of Dunfermline East covered that part of the High Street with floral tributes to the young man, who left behind a partner, Melanie, and two little children. Our signatures from Dunfermline East will add to those that have been gathered by the Muir family from Duncan McNeil’s constituency. I hope that the petition will grow and grow until, eventually, Alex Salmond and the cabinet secretary will listen to the views of the victims just for once.

Given that two thirds of people who are convicted of knife crime receive either a fine or community service, it is hard to believe that the punishment fits the crime. That sends out the completely wrong message. I make no apology for saying again—because I believe it passionately—that Labour’s policy sends out the right message: carry a knife and you go to jail. There really is a need for a mandatory sentence.

Bill Wilson rose—

Stewart Maxwell rose—

Helen Eadie: Gathering signatures on the street in connection with knife crime was a salutary experience. I ask members to listen to the views of my constituents. The people whom I represent referred to an atmosphere of fear when they walk down the street. That fear exists when a brawl happens at a pub or a club on a weekend, which is when stabbings are regularly reported. [ Interruption. ]

The Presiding Officer: Order.

Helen Eadie: It is unacceptable that such a feeling exists in any community in Scotland in 2009. We all have a responsibility to change that.

One petitioner came to me and said, “Look here, in my neck. This is where I was stabbed.” The knife had just missed his jugular vein. Last Friday in Rosyth, a woman told me of her son who had been stabbed five times in his head. He lived, but operations and other procedures were required, and the distress that was caused to his family was beyond belief. I spoke with a young friend this morning who told me that she was out with her boyfriend when he said in a light-hearted, joking way to someone in a pub, “You’re sitting in my seat.” The guy pulled a knife on him. Labour cares very much about the victims, which is why our message is straightforward and to the point: people who carry knives will go to jail.

On a separate point, I am pleased to see that the bill addresses the issue of spousal compellability, the importance of which the cabinet secretary will concede. I have campaigned for that, asking parliamentary questions and writing to him and his predecessors over time. I am, therefore, very pleased to see the provisions included in the bill. I note that a variety of witnesses provided the Parliament with their reservations on the provisions on pages 77 to 79 of the bill. I hear, too, the views of Nigel Don with regard to the committee’s uncertainty of opinion on the matter. Nevertheless, I hope that the committee, the cabinet secretary and the Parliament will, at the very least, adopt the Law Society of Scotland’s proposal, which I believe is a middle way.

I shall support the representations that have been made to us by a range of organisations, but especially the Scottish Churches Parliamentary Office, on the issues for the many groups and churches that run small fairs and coffee mornings. My colleague Cathie Craigie has already highlighted that and I shall support her in her work as she lodges amendments on the issue. Unintended consequences might come about as a result of legislation that the Parliament puts through. I hope that the legislation that we pass will not impact heavily on people who give of their utmost by volunteering—we have done that before. We should not add to the administration burdens on those people by changing the licensing regime in a way that would impact hugely on them.
Like other members, I will support the bill at stage 1, but I have concerns and I will watch with interest to see what happens. I urge members to move on the spousal compellability issue.

The Presiding Officer: Members have the absolute right not to take interventions, but I have a very small amount of time in hand that I am willing to add on for members who wish to take an intervention.

15:51

Ted Brocklebank (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Con): As has become apparent from the wise and learned contributions of my colleagues Bill Aitken, John Lamont and David McLetchie this morning and, to be fair, the speeches of other members, the bill is wide ranging and complex. It seeks to implement more than 80 distinct policy proposals across a raft of criminal justice and licensing issues, but I intend to concentrate solely on the provisions that relate to the appalling incidence of hard drugs in prison and the linked problem of illegal mobile phones, which are often used to fuel prison drug trading.

As members will be well aware, the Scottish Conservatives have a zero-tolerance approach to drugs in prison. We urgently need in every jail a proactive rehabilitation programme through which agencies work with addicts, in and out of prison. Inmates who want to get off drugs should be given every help and encouragement to do so. At the same time, robust measures must be applied to anyone who supplies drugs to prisoners. Visiting privileges should be withdrawn and, in persistent cases, criminal charges should be brought. In short, we need a carrot-and-stick approach, to help those who wish to be helped and to deal responsibly with those who break the rules. Serious consideration should be given to using glass screens in prison visits to ensure that no contact occurs between prisoners and their visitors and thus to deny the opportunity for drugs to be passed over.

One of the most serious aspects of the issue is that not only drugs but mobile phones are passed over, which can allow prisoners to communicate directly with suppliers on the outside and to intimidate witnesses. Phones can allow incarcerated gang lords to continue managing their illegal businesses in communities outwith prisons. Members might have noticed that, earlier this week, David Jamieson, the chairman of Wandsworth prison’s independent monitoring board, said that, as well as fuelling prison drug trading, mobile phones contribute to bullying and gang activities. We therefore fully support section 29, which deals with articles that are banned in prison, including phones, and introduces more strenuous sentencing for those who attempt to flout the law in that respect.

The Minister for Community Safety (Fergus Ewing): I agree with much of what Ted Brocklebank says about mobile phones, but I assume that he is aware that, on 11 December last year, measures were taken to render illegal the use of mobile phones in Scottish prisons. I know, because I announced them at Saughton.

Ted Brocklebank: I am grateful to the minister for reminding us of that, but I was coming to that as part of my speech.

It is estimated that, behind bars, phones can cost £400 each. According to the Wandsworth board chairman, the trade in mobile phones was worth about £9 million in 2008, when 7,000 phones were seized. However, that does not take into account the phones that are not detected and which are still in operation, which is estimated at three times the number of those that were detected and confiscated. Figures for prisons in Scotland are estimated to be at least as bad. Ever-smaller handsets are being smuggled in by visitors, and some are even thrown over prison walls. It is right that those who are found guilty of involvement in dealing with phones, whether they are prison visitors or inmates, should face the new jail sentences of up to two years, fines or both.

It is also right that we go further, particularly with so many illegal phones in prisons going undetected. We agree that technical solutions should be explored to ensure that phones do not work from prison. We require effective signal-blocking technology or mobile phone blockers in prison grounds. As Fergus Ewing has mentioned, as early as next month, under an amendment to existing legislation—I gather that it is the Prisons (Scotland) Act 1989—it should be possible specifically to prohibit personal communication devices such as mobile phones. We commend that course of action, but it does not include the mobile phone-blocking technology that I have highlighted. Of course, there are problems. For example, many prisons, including Saughton, Barlinnie, Portofield and Perth, are situated in built-up urban areas where blocking might also affect local residents. However, we are optimistic that such difficulties can be resolved and we urge the Government to explore all possibilities.

Only when we cut the lines of communication for the so-called Mr Bigs—who, like captains on the bridges of great ocean-going vessels, lord it in their prison cells, issuing orders to underlings and meting out their own crude punishment—will yet another door slam on the drug tsars who inflict so much damage inside and outside our prisons. The benefits to society will be immense if we can match political will with developing the necessary technology to ban completely mobile messaging to and from prisons. There will be lower reoffending, less crime and a much safer prison environment, which will be good for addicts, good for families and, given how much crime in Scotland is fuelled by drugs, good for society as a whole.

15:56

Sandra White (Glasgow) (SNP): I am pleased to take part in this debate. I thank the cabinet secretary for introducing the bill, which I welcome, and the Justice Committee for taking the time to consider it and put together its stage 1 report and recommendations. I fully support the cabinet secretary's intention to take forward this wide range of criminal justice and licensing measures, which will modernise our laws in a positive way and make our communities safer and healthier.

At this point, I should say that I, too, have visited Cornton Vale, where one lady told me that she felt safer in prison, because outside it she had no recourse against violent partners and their families. I thank Ian McKee and Mike Pringle for their comments on that issue.

Other members have talked about crime and sentencing, but I want to focus on specific aspects of part 2 relating to criminal law. That part of the bill includes provisions to widen the scope of sexual offences prevention orders and to revise the statutory definition of "obscene material", measures that I believe will prove beneficial.

The bill will amend section 51 of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 to include extreme pornography within the definition of obscene material. Unlike "classified work", as defined in the Video Recordings Act 1984, such obscene material is solely for the purpose of sexual gratification, and includes images that explicitly and realistically depict extreme sexual acts that are a threat to life or would be "likely to result ... in a person's severe injury"; are forced as in, for example, rape; or feature other depraved activity. As such images frequently show abusive, disrespectful behaviour towards women, we must adopt the new framework in the bill to deal with such material and avoid the harm that it does to our culture, our society and women in general.

However, although the bill seeks to strengthen significantly laws that criminalise the pornographic exploitation of women, section 126 in part 8, which amends provisions in the 1982 act relating to public entertainment licences, falls short of recategorising the licensing of lap dancing clubs by taking them out of the alcohol licensing system. At the moment, such clubs, which represent another form of commercial exploitation that perpetuates the objectification of women as sexual objects for sexual gratification, are regulated and licensed by our local authorities under an alcohol and entertainment scheme similar to that for recorded music or live entertainment venues. That is not only misleading but leaves authorities without the necessary power to decide where—and indeed whether—lap dancing clubs belong in their community or to refuse a licence.

As adult entertainment venues, lap dancing clubs that are seeking a licence should be subject to more scrutiny than other venues. I know that many councils and communities agree, and I hope that, at stage 2, the necessary amendments are lodged to ensure that local authorities have the power to regulate and recategorise such clubs not as public entertainment venues but under some new licensing category. We need to allow each local authority to regulate lap dancing clubs effectively.

In England and Wales, the Policing and Crime Act 2009 has reclassified lap dancing clubs as sexual entertainment venues, made licences more expensive, required more frequent renewals and taken into account the views of local communities. I welcome the provisions in that act, which demonstrate the need for a progressive stance on the issue in Scotland. It is important that we in Scotland look at the issues of lap dancing clubs and the effect that they have on their local communities. In particular, I have been forceful in trying to ensure that we have better regulation of lap dancing clubs in Glasgow. I hope that, if amendments on the licensing of such venues are forthcoming from wherever at stage 2, the committee and ministers will look on them favourably.

I conclude by expressing again my support for the bill and specifically the strengthening of the law on sexual offences.

16:01

Johann Lamont (Glasgow Pollok) (Lab): My comments reflect the concerns of many of my constituents about some aspects of the bill. I regret that, this morning, the cabinet secretary seemed simply to dismiss those concerns rather than take them seriously.

Before I get to the substance of my speech, I will flag up a few issues that I trust will be revisited at stage 2. They include the issues that Sandra White flagged up in relation to trafficked women; prostitution and men who abuse women and prostitute them; and lap dancing. A further question that I hope we will revisit is how we make a connection between communities that suffer under the cosh of serious organised crime and the money that is secured as a consequence of that under the Proceeds of Crime Act 2002. There should be a direct link, with funding going back to the communities that have suffered the most.

On the broader debate, it seems that nothing is easy. It is unhelpful to try, as I think Dr McKee rather complacently did, to create the impression that somehow only those who are wilfully stupid wish to ignore the policy that the Scottish Government is taking forward. It is most unfortunate to demonise those in our communities who are demanding action and those of us who wish to highlight how victims often feel let down by the system. To do that is to deny a voice to those who, because of their day-to-day experience, feel that the justice system is unfair, irrational and out of touch with the way in which they have to live their lives.

Yes, we have to try to understand what causes people to commit offences, but we also have to stop infantilising people who choose to terrorise their partners, their families and their neighbours. We owe it to the young men who carry a knife, as much as to their potential victims, to do everything in our power to stop them doing that. We have worked with young men who, in later life, ended up either in prison on a murder charge or dead. If we take steps to address the needs of such young men as well as those of their victims, we will be doing something important.

Robert Brown: I do not think that anyone would disagree with that. The issue is what makes the difference. What is the tough sentence that turns such people around? That is the nub of the debate, which some people on my side of the chamber would say the Labour Party has not engaged with as it might.

Johann Lamont: I recognise that, but I do not think that there is recognition on the other side of the importance of deterring young people who are outside the core group that carry knives, who see that nothing happens to those people and who then carry knives themselves. We owe it to those young people to say, “This is serious,” in the same way that we punish people who drink drive to prevent others from doing that.

I am always struck by the degree to which people who come to me to ask for help because of disorder, crime and violence in their communities do so not simply because they want us to put people in jail and throw away the key but out of desperation about their circumstances. It is unjust and contemptuous to sneer at those who want tougher action on knife crime because of their direct experience of those who use violence to silence people, harm them and intimidate them to the point where they phone the police in a whisper. We owe it to those people to empower rather than disempower them and to listen to them. In that context, I urge the minister to reflect further on the action that he is taking and to test it against people’s need to have certainty that their communities will not be more dangerous and that the measures will not put them at further risk.

The scrapping of six-month sentences raises a number of issues. At First Minister’s question time, I highlighted the implication of the policy for the victims of domestic abuse and the fears of many people that it might increase risk. Following the First Minister’s response, I seek clarification on what the Scottish Government’s policy actually is. The First Minister said that serious offences should attract longer sentences. Is it the Government’s view that all domestic abuse cases that currently attract sentences of less than six months should attract longer sentences? If that is the case, how would that be enforced?

Kenny MacAskill: Will the member give way?

Johann Lamont: I am sorry, but I have only a minute left—the member can answer the point when he sums up.

Would that policy apply to other serious offences?

There is an issue around resources. It is not enough simply to say that the resources are available. We could end up with an experiment with no safety net, the costs of which will be borne by individuals and communities. The obvious fear is not just that there could be an increase in offending behaviour, but that there could be an increased lack of confidence in the justice system’s ability to serve people’s needs.

At the heart of the matter there is a puzzle. It is illogical to say that the only way to encourage community sentences is to end short sentences now—it could be done the other way round. It is also illogical to say that people can be rehabilitated in their communities working with them only five or 10 hours a week, yet absolutely nothing can be done with them over six months when they are in prison. I have never understood the logic in assuming that the Scottish Prison Service has no responsibility towards those who are in prison serving shorter sentences. I would have more confidence in the minister if we were not hearing that Sacro, Apex Scotland and other organisations that work with prisoners who come out of prison are being told that their funding is being cut.

In those circumstances, the lack of confidence in our communities must be addressed, not dismissed.

16:06

Margaret Smith (Edinburgh West) (LD): As one of its former members, I thank the Justice Committee for its report, and I welcome this opportunity to speak in the debate. There are a number of welcome provisions in the bill, such as the new offences to tackle serious organised crime and the clarification of Scots law on trafficking.

I believe that two aspects of the bill are capable of effecting positive change: the abolition of short prison sentences and the measures on community penalties. Wide-reaching reform in those areas, backed—crucially—by the proper levels of resources, can help to address reoffending and to provide what we all want: a cut in the levels of crime on our streets and in our communities.

Prison is appropriate for some people. Serious and violent offenders cannot and should not be allowed to remain a danger to our communities. However, Scotland’s prisons are chronically overcrowded. They are hugely expensive and massively inefficient at dealing with people who receive short-term sentences. Two of the purposes of sentencing are the punishment of offenders and the protection of the public, but they also include the reform and rehabilitation of offenders.

One paragraph of the committee’s stage 1 report jumped off the page. Professor McNeill of the Scottish Consortium on Crime and Criminal Justice remarked:

“three things help people to stop offending: getting older and becoming more mature; developing social ties that mean something to them; and changing their view of what they are about as a person. Short periods in prison do not help with any of those three things.”—[Official Report, Justice Committee, 19 May 2009; c 1893.]

I add, from my experience of talking to people in the Scottish Prison Service over many years, that people who are sent to prison for short periods often lose their families, homes and jobs—the very things that might make them not reoffend in future.

We have heard much about the revolving-door system. The cycle of reoffending is a blight on our communities and our criminal justice system. People offend, they are sentenced to a short stay in prison and, on release, they go on to offend again. More than 95 per cent of people who are currently serving sentences of less than three months have already spent time in custody. On release, 74 per cent of them will go on to offend again within two years. I am disappointed that some members are not prepared to recognise that short-term sentences fail completely in helping to reduce the level of crime. For many people, prison is not working as a deterrent.

Without a fundamental change to how we approach sentencing, we risk creating—or, at this point, reinforcing—a class of Norman Stanley Fletchers, a conveyor belt of offenders who, like the “Porridge” antihero, might be happy to be told that they are someone who accepts arrest as an occupational hazard and presumably accepts imprisonment in the same casual manner.”

It is surely right to emphasise that prison, for many people, should be viewed as a last resort, and that, for less serious offences, a genuine alternative should be sought. We must have a better option than sending people to prison for a few weeks, during which time there is no opportunity to work with them to address the issues that sent them there in the first place. That matter has been well covered in recent years by Andrew McLellan during his time as Her Majesty’s chief inspector of prisons for Scotland and by Henry McLeish and his Scottish Prisons Commission.

I welcome the focus on community sentences and the sensible move to a single community sentence, which will help to improve public understanding. However, it is fundamental that the Government ensures that the proper resources are in place to make that happen and to make it work.

The Justice Committee’s point about the timing of community sentences is important. Our communities want to know that action is being taken. There is still a perception that community sentencing is a soft option, but for many people it is not as soft an option as lying on their backside in a prison bed for two or three weeks. We have to ensure that people in our communities see that community sentences mean that rapid action is taken.

Although we agree with the Government’s direction of travel on short sentences, we would rather see an end to custodial sentences of three months or less, rather than six months or less. That would remove from the prison estate those whose crimes are least likely to have involved serious or violent offences. It would allow the available resources to be focused on those cases where there is the least chance of rehabilitation in the prison system and on cases where tough community sentences are more likely to bear fruit.

Those who are currently sentenced to short spells in prison are not in the system long enough for staff to obtain the relevant information about them or their needs. As a result, they do not receive the appropriate interventions, whether help for drug or alcohol issues, or further training or education, and they are not helped to tackle the issues that got them there in the first place.

Many of the very short sentences are being served for the same reasons and by the same social groups as they were a century ago—those who are blighted by poverty, those who suffer mental health problems and those with alcohol and drug misuse problems. That is not to take away from their offences; it is simply to say that we should get smarter and better at dealing with them when they are in any way brought into an interface with the criminal justice system. Those are not small problems—they are some of the biggest in Scotland—but they need to be tackled from the root. In many cases, they cannot be best tackled in our prisons.

I was shocked by some of the statistics. Compared with the general population, people in Scotland’s prisons are 13 times more likely to have been unemployed and 13 times more likely to have been in care as children. Seven out of 10 have suffered from at least two mental disorders and two out of 10 males have previously attempted suicide—a figure that increases to more than 37 per cent for women. Some 65 per cent have the numeracy skills of an 11-year-old and eight out of 10 have writing skills at the same level. Those are serious issues, which have to be dealt with seriously.

Getting rid of short-term sentences needs imagination, commitment and resources. I look forward to the challenges being further addressed and debated during the passage of the bill.

16:12

Bill Wilson (West of Scotland) (SNP): The bill is excellent, but I should like to take this opportunity to suggest an addition to it, which I hope will receive the cabinet secretary’s support.

The inadequacy of the present criminal justice legislation was recently highlighted by Louise Adamson of families against corporate killers, who said:

“An annual work-related death toll in excess of 1600 is tragic testimony to the fact that the current system of fining companies for health and safety offences has not served as strict enough punishment or strong enough deterrent.”

Last August, I consulted on a proposal for a member’s bill to improve the situation, which, if adopted, would introduce the principle of equity fines into Scots law and allow judges to order independent financial reports on convicted companies. The latter, as an amendment, would enhance the bill.

With the creation of new procurators fiscal who specialise in health and safety offences, the cabinet secretary has shown the Government’s commitment to tackling the horrific death toll that I have mentioned. The addition of independent inquiries would further strengthen the law. I hope that that would find support throughout the chamber.

The present low, and therefore non-deterrent, level of fines imposed on most convicted corporations is illustrated by the Health and Safety Executive figures for fines imposed by Scottish courts between 2001 and 2005. The median fine is the value of fine that half of all fines lie below. The other half lie above—I am sure that members worked that out. The great advantage of the median is that the results are not skewed by a limited number of very high or very low results. For cases resulting in death or injury, the median fine was only £4,000. When there was a fatality, the median fine was £12,500. In half of all cases resulting in a conviction in which a fatality occurred and for which a fine was imposed on the company, the value of the fine was £12,500 or less. That is £12,500 for being convicted of killing a human in the name of profit—and make no mistake, that is precisely what that represents.

Although hard to interpret, as the offences are not detailed, more recent figures on the HSE’s website give little cause for comfort. Average penalties per conviction for cases in which the HSE or local authorities took action have declined in the past three years.

The information under the title “Fixing the sentence” on the HSE’s website makes interesting reading. It says:

“Sentencing is entirely a matter for the sheriff or judge. The prosecutor is not entitled to make representations on this matter or to remind the court of their sentencing powers. The sheriff or judge should fix a fine which, in his opinion, reflects the circumstances of the offence. In so doing he must take into account all the circumstances of the case, including the financial circumstances of the accused, whether an individual, a partnership, or a company, and whether or not this has the effect of increasing or diminishing the amount of the fine.”

That is the crux of the matter.

One reason for the present low fine levels is that judges might underestimate the size of fine that a company can reasonably pay. A significant failing of the present system is the lack of a mechanism for ordering an independent report into a company’s financial situation. In a paper that was prepared for the previous Scottish Executive’s expert group on corporate homicide, Professor Hazel Croall recognised that situation and suggested

“that courts should routinely receive a form of Corporate Inquiry Report and should, where necessary, have powers to appoint a relevant expert to provide a professional assessment, paid for where appropriate by the company itself.”

It is instructive to compare the present law and procedures for companies with those for individuals. When an individual is brought to court for sentencing, social and other background reports are provided as a matter of course. In the case of companies, judges rely on the convicted party’s honesty. That is roughly the equivalent of the judge looking the prisoner in the eye, sternly wagging his finger at the convicted felon and saying in a severe—if not downright angry—tone,
“You are a very naughty fellow. Now, before I impose a sentence, could you just tell me what level of fine you can afford to pay?”

I hope that the cabinet secretary agrees that the present situation is unacceptable and that independent inquiries into a convicted company’s finances would be a significant and useful addition to Scots law. I hope that the cabinet secretary will lend his support to such an amendment to the bill.

16:17

Karen Gillon (Clydesdale) (Lab): I am pleased to participate in this important debate. I support the amendment that Bill Wilson describes. In the previous parliamentary session, I proposed a member’s bill with a similar purpose. I would jail individual directors of companies, because that is the only way to focus their minds on the acts of violence that they perpetrate on constituents such as mine.

I will deal with the provision in the bill to remove the exemption for charitable, religious, youth, recreational, community, political or similar organisations from holding a market operator’s licence. In the past couple of weeks in my local paper, the Carlisle Gazette, I have read about events that the Girls Brigade, the Kirkton players, the New Lanark Football Club, Biggar and district Oxfam and Castlehill Bowling Club were to hold and about the St Athanasius Christmas fayre. All those events are currently exempt from the licensing requirements. I will support Cathie Craigie’s amendments to keep the exemption, because such events should remain exempt. If something is not broken, why bother fixing it? Requiring a licence would be a tax on the groups in our communities that try to raise money and support their communities. I hope that the cabinet secretary will take out this silly measure at stage 2 and that common sense will prevail.

The second issue that I want to raise is knife crime. They say that people’s life experiences often determine how they react to issues. That is certainly true for me in relation to knife crime. In the early hours of 26 December 1994, there was a knock at my front door in Jedburgh. We had had an enjoyable Christmas day, and I thought that friends might want to continue the festivities. Unfortunately, the knock changed my life and the lives of my close family friends for ever.

John Frater was in the prime of his young life. He had not been in trouble; he was into rugby and was the vice-captain of Jed Thistle. He had spent Christmas day with his family and was walking his girlfriend home when he was murdered—as the result of a single stab wound—by a man who was intent on causing bother. John was simply a young man who was in the wrong place at the wrong time. He was not carrying a knife or looking for a fight, but he is now dead. His parents have lost their son and will not see him married or be able to look after his children. His death devastated them and affected me greatly. I cannot say without a doubt that tougher action on knife crime would have saved John Frater’s life, but it might have given him a better chance. Our attitude to blades needs to change.

John was killed 15 years ago. In those 15 years, his family have gone through terrible pain, as have many, many other families. We have tried convincing and cajoling, we have tried campaign after campaign, and we have tried amnesty after amnesty. However, the truth—and John Muir is testament to that truth—is that despite all of that, far too many young people have died in those 15 years. They have been killed by thoughtless, mindless thugs who carried a knife, intent on its use. We have failed to change that culture.

Someone does not go out with a knife tucked down their sock, slipped into their jacket pocket or somewhere else on their person just because they think it is cool; they do it because they think they are hard. They will use the knife if they are challenged. Like Johann Lamont, I believe that it is time to stop messing about on knife crime: it is time to send out a stronger message. We have tried the fines and the community sentences—they have not worked. Far too many innocent individuals such as John Frater are now dead.

I turn to the proposed abolition of sentences of six months or less. Let there be no mistake about it: I absolutely support the use of community sentences. Such sentences work for many offenders in providing an appropriate punishment and deterrent, but for many others they do not. The cabinet secretary talks about a revolving door, and that is as true for community sentences as it is for short-term prison sentences. As a youth worker, I met many young people who got community sentence after community sentence. They saw them as a soft option. The sentences did not change their behaviour. We need more investment in community sentences, not less.

Various excuses have been made in the debate for why we should get rid of short-term prison sentences. We have heard that there is no opportunity to work with prisoners if they are in prison for only six months. Why not? We have also heard that people cannot be rehabilitated in less than six months. Why not? Why do people lie on their backside for a few weeks in a prison cell? Why have we abdicated to the Scottish Prison Service the duty of care to those who are in our prisons? We should be dealing with the issue, head on. If sheriffs believe that someone needs to be sent to prison, they do so for a reason. We should be rehabilitating prisoners while they are in prison, not abdicating responsibility. We should not be returning people to their communities where they cause havoc.

The communities that I represent want this Government to defend people properly. Like Duncan McNeil, I reserve my right to vote against the bill at stage 3. I will do that if the Government does not listen to the people of Scotland; if it does not see sense on this important issue.

16:23

Jeremy Purvis (Tweeddale, Ettrick and Lauderdale) (LD): The fact that we have held a day’s debate on an issue of substance is a good advert for the Parliament.

I listened carefully to members of other parties whom I respect, such as Bill Butler and, in particular, Karen Gillon. That said, in my years in the Parliament, I have heard equally passionate speeches from Labour members in particular in favour of electronic tagging and early release into the community. Members spoke about finding alternatives to custody that are better for individuals, ensure that communities are protected and aim to reduce crime. That is as strong a territory for debate as it was in the days when the Labour Party was in office.

Cathie Craigie made a direct attack on me and my Liberal Democrat colleagues in speaking of our approach to the bill. This morning, Robert Brown made clear his position on sentencing, as he did his position on the proposed sentencing council. In debates such as this, Cathie Craigie and her Labour colleagues can so easily slip into believing that they have a monopoly on representing constituents who are affected by crime. They do not, nor do they have a monopoly on knowing what is effective in tackling the issue.

I represent Penicuik in Midlothian. Year after year, Labour has produced leaflets in which it attacks me for being soft on crime. Labour attacked me even when I was a member of the Justice 2 Sub-Committee for its inquiry into child sex offenders and yet, at the same time that I was being attacked, the Labour council in Midlothian was being castigated in official child protection reports. Indeed, the director of social work and the councillor with responsibility for the issue resigned as a result. Now we are being castigated for being soft on crime, at the same time as I have casework in the town on the Labour council’s woeful approach to antisocial behaviour, which is only now being corrected. The police have had to chair the relevant body in the council, to ensure that some order is imposed.

Let us not have rhetoric without the belief that action at council, Government and legislative levels must work. Communities do not want simply more tough talk—they want action on crime. Nor do we want just rhetoric from the Scottish Government on the bill. That is why the Finance Committee unanimously asked serious questions about the assumption that only 20 per cent of sentences will involve a community payback order, rather than custody. The bill team and the Scottish Government provided no convincing reason for including in the financial memorandum options of only 10 and 20 per cent for the likely increase in the number of community sentences. When Robert Brown and the Liberal Democrats raise financial and resource issues, they do so because they want the legislation to work, rather than simply to sit on the statute book, allowing ministers of any Administration to say, “We have legislated, therefore crime is being reduced.” That is not sufficient.

James Kelly: If, in the member’s view, the bill is not properly resourced at stage 3, will he vote against it?

Jeremy Purvis: Absolutely. In an intervention during Richard Baker’s speech, Robert Brown asked whether the resource issues were the point of principle for the member. I took careful note of Richard Baker’s response. He gave the impression of making a reasonable argument that, because resources may not be in place, the bill should not proceed. However, that is a reasonable argument only if one agrees in principle that very short sentences work. They do not. That is the point that Karen Gillon asked us to address. She asked why we cannot reform short sentences so that they can work, but it is in the nature of a short sentence that it cannot work.

Karen Gillon: Will the member give way?

Jeremy Purvis: I would ordinarily, but I cannot on this occasion.

The Conservatives argued that we have short sentences because they act as a deterrent. It was extremely telling that, when Robert Brown asked how that could be, given that 91 per cent of offenders in Polmont have served sentences there before, they had no answer.

In a reply to a parliamentary question, it was confirmed that 95.6 per cent of those who are currently serving sentences of less than three months have spent previous periods in custody. Short prison sentences are not a deterrent and do not affect reoffending. That is not surprising, given that we know that more than three quarters of young people in custody have a history of regular school truancy and a third have no formal educational qualifications. Parliament has known full well for a number of years that extremely low reading and numeracy levels are the biggest obstacle to successful interventions. Those arguments were rehearsed in a report by the Parliament on youth offending in 2005.

Johann Lamont: Will the member take an intervention?

Jeremy Purvis: I do not have time—I am in the last moments of my speech.

It is not enough to talk tough to communities—the issue is now critical, because offenders are the least employable section of the population. In the current economic situation, their prospects of being employable—the biggest factor in reducing reoffending—are near to zero. It is not acceptable for us to stand aside and to leave them on the scrapheap of unproductive, uneconomic and potentially reoffending individuals when we can do something about that. The bill is one part of that action.

16:29

Bill Aitken: I agree with Jeremy Purvis that we have had a genuinely good debate today with some passionate contributions. Some excellent points were made, not all of which came from the Opposition benches, and there were some astonishing displays of naivety, most of which came from the Government and Liberal benches.

I will go through some of the contributions in which some interesting points were made. In a worthwhile speech, Stewart Maxwell was correct to raise the clear anomaly that relates to DNA retention. The rest of his speech was less worth while. He spoke about the presumption against short-term prison sentences. There is a presumption against short-term prison sentences already and I assure Stewart Maxwell and his ilk that no judge, sheriff or magistrate sends anyone to prison when there is any alternative.

Robert Brown rightly raised the cost of prison sentences. However, if we reduce substantially the prison population there will be no significant saving. I know that Robert Brown acknowledges that fact. The jails still have to pay the staff and the only saving would be on a few flat-screen televisions in Addiewell.

Robert Brown: Does the member acknowledge that if we reduce the prison population, that would free up the prison authorities and give them more resource to deal more effectively with the serious prisoners who are in prison justifiably and who are a bigger danger to the public when they come out if they have not been rehabilitated?

Bill Aitken: That is part of a wider argument that I will address.

Not for the first time, Cathie Craigie spoke common sense in an excellent speech. She raised a valid point about charities. As constituency members in areas that have their problems, she, Karen Gillon and Duncan McNeil underlined the difficulties that arise in many of Scotland’s communities. They expressed the fear, which we share, that if the policy to end shorter sentences is imposed on the people of Scotland, things will get very much worse.

In a typically thoughtful speech, Nigel Don dealt with problems that might arise under the Custodial Sentences and Weapons (Scotland) Act 2007. The Government got it just about right in that respect.

Mike Pringle issued the usual mantra about tough community sentences. Whatever community sentences come, we can be assured that they will not be tough, nor will they be carried out. The other evening, I attended a lecture chaired by the cabinet secretary. The new chief inspector of prisons spoke about a conversation that he had had at Polmont, in which he had been told by one of the inmates that he did not like having to get up early to do community service. Nobody asked the prisoner how he had ended up in Polmont, if he did not like doing the community service. He had probably not done that community service, or he had reoffended as a result of it.

Bill Wilson raised a question about health and safety, which is an argument that could take place in another direction. Sandra White spoke about lap-dancing clubs, which is hardly the greatest priority given the amount of violent crime in Scotland.

Ian McKee, a man to whom I always enjoy listening, let me down a bit today. He said that prisons are a university of crime. If that is the case, some of the streets of Glasgow must be where criminals get their doctorates. He pointed out, correctly, the difficulty of drugs in prison. Surely the answer is to try to prevent drugs from getting into prison rather than bemoaning the fact—

Karen Gillon: Will the member reflect on the state hospital’s success in preventing drugs from entering the hospital? Perhaps the mainstream prison estate can learn lessons from there.

Bill Aitken: That might be of interest. I acknowledge that the Government has taken certain steps in that direction, but we are not yet at the stage where that will happen.

Those who advocate the ending of short prison sentences must acknowledge that the presumption is already against such sentences. They must tell us who should not be sent to prison, because all that the policy would do would be to give the green light to the fourth-time drunk and disqualified driver and to provide a get-out-of-jail-free card for the knife carrier, the wife beater and the small-time drug pusher. It would send the message “Carry on thieving” to the shoplifter who has had 40 or more court appearances. That is the issue that confronts us all. Those are the people who would normally get a sentence of six months or less.

The bill has much to commend it, under many headings. However, part 1 is so fatally flawed that it will be difficult for any right-thinking, sensible person to support it unless it is radically amended.

16:35

James Kelly (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab): I welcome the opportunity to make the closing speech on behalf of the Labour Party, and I thank the Justice Committee and its clerking team for their extensive and comprehensive report on the bill.

We have had an interesting, high-quality debate. The debate started in daylight, and as darkness falls there is no doubt that gloom will descend on the SNP benches, because the debate has underlined serious flaws in the bill. Chief among those flaws is the policy of scrapping six-month sentences. It is clear to me that that would send the wrong message to Scotland’s communities, as Bill Butler put it articulately. The scrapping of six-month sentences would mean that 75 per cent of people who have been found guilty of any crime, 40 per cent of people who have been found guilty of indecent assault and 71 per cent of housebreakers would be released into the community.

Members have quoted the experts and the academics, but the people in whom I put good store are the ones in my constituency: the pensioner who came to my surgery recently, who had had the door of her flat kicked in and her close vandalised; the man who had been attacked with a hammer and was afraid to return to his job on the rigs in case his family was attacked; and the constituent who was nearly beaten to death by a man who had been released from prison only that day. Those are the voices that speak strongly to me.

Mike Pringle and Ian McKee told us that prison does not work, but I do not see the logic of simply releasing people who are guilty of indecent assault, for example, back into the community. [ Interruption. ] That is not a matter about which to chuckle away, as the cabinet secretary has done during a number of serious speeches. This is an important debate.

Richard Baker made serious points about the cost of the policy. The Government’s bill team has provided no evidence to explain why the financial memorandum costs the policy on the basis of a 10 or 20 per cent increase in the use of community penalties.

Jeremy Purvis: Why is the Labour Party in favour of using electronic tagging as an alternative to custody in many of the instances that we have heard about during the debate?

James Kelly: That issue is not in the bill. I am addressing the serious shortfall in resources to implement the SNP’s policy of scrapping six-month sentences.

Prison statistics show that 8,200 people are serving sentences of six months or less. The figures in the financial memorandum would account for only 4,000 of those prisoners. In addition, there is nothing in the budget to support the policy. If the vast majority of the 8,200 prisoners were moved on to community sentences, the policy would cost £22 million. In a three-year period, a £66 million black hole would be created. The policy has not been costed properly. It is also important to destroy the myth that releasing prisoners from jail will save money. The Government officials made clear to the Finance Committee that it would save no money at all.

Robert Brown: I do not dissent from James Kelly’s point but could we have clarity in the debate? The bill does not propose scrapping short-term sentences; it proposes a presumption against them. That is an important difference and we should talk in clear terms about it. At the end of the day, the resource follows from all that.

James Kelly: The important point to bear in mind is that, if the bill is passed, a presumption against six-month sentences would be lodged in statute. As a result, we would see the examples that Bill Butler cited earlier of convicted offenders who would currently go to prison being released into the community.

The policy is not properly costed. It is broad-brush accountancy. I just hope that, when John Swinney finalises his budget, he does not look to the Cabinet Secretary for Justice for any advice because numbers are clearly not Mr MacAskill’s strong point.

I point out to Jeremy Purvis that the Labour Party supports the principle of community payback orders. In his opening remarks, Bill Aitken made the valid point that it is important for the public to see that community payback orders are immediate. There is work to be done to make them more effective.

There were important contributions on knife crime from Duncan McNeil, Helen Eadie and Karen Gillon, who spoke from experience in their constituencies about its horrendous human impact. There were 3,418 convictions for knife crime in 2007-08 but only 29 per cent of those offenders went to jail. As many Labour members have said, we need to send a strong message that knife crime is unacceptable and if somebody carries a knife they should go to jail.

Bill Wilson: Will the member give way?

James Kelly: Not at this point, sorry. I want to make my next point.

Robert Brown criticised Labour’s justice policy and said that we were more interested in getting into the pages of The Sun. It therefore came as a surprise to me to discover a newspaper clipping from December last year that quotes him widely—in fact, it has his photograph as well.

Richard Baker: It is in The Sun.

James Kelly: Yes, it is. As part of the article, Robert Brown says:

“Carrying knives is always stupid and should normally lead to a prison sentence for those caught with weapons.”

Once again, we have a change of Liberal Democrat policy. I only hope that we witness a further change at stage 2.

Kenny MacAskill: Is James Kelly saying that there would be no exception to Labour’s mandatory sentence for knife crime? If not, will he please define what the exceptions would be?

James Kelly: As the cabinet secretary knows, there are already exceptions in law. The Labour position is to support a mandatory minimum sentence for knife crime. That is the strong message that Scotland’s communities look for.

There are serious concerns about the costs of the sentencing council—£1.1 million annual running costs and £0.45 million set-up costs. As Professor Fergus McNeill told the Justice Committee, the £1 million annual cost is equivalent to 1,000 community penalties. The costs of the proposal should be closely examined.

Richard Baker covered DNA. The UK Government has indicated that it intends to extend the policy in England and Wales of holding DNA for six years. There are currently no such proposals in Scotland, but I would certainly support the extension of the use of DNA. It is clear that the policy has been effective in ensuring that more people have been caught and more criminals put behind bars in recent years.

There are serious concerns about the costs of the sentencing council—£1.1 million annual running costs and £0.45 million set-up costs. As Professor Fergus McNeill told the Justice Committee, the £1 million annual cost is equivalent to 1,000 community penalties. The costs of the proposal should be closely examined.

Richard Baker covered DNA. The UK Government has indicated that it intends to extend the policy in England and Wales of holding DNA for six years. There are currently no such proposals in Scotland, but I would certainly support the extension of the use of DNA. It is clear that the policy has been effective in ensuring that more people have been caught and more criminals put behind bars in recent years.

Cathie Craigie made an effective speech that highlighted the problems in the bill with exemptions for charity organisations and community groups. We all have experience of those problems in our constituencies. We do not want charities and community groups to be unable to hold local events because they cannot afford to pay for a licence. Further, the administration of licences would be a burden on councils.

Among other issues that were raised in the debate were antisocial behaviour reports, serious and organised crime and witness statements.

The bill’s proposals are flawed. They come from a cabinet secretary who told us that prison was “a skoosh”. The bill is a criminals’ charter, with a £66 million black hole at the centre of its proposals. Labour will not support the bill at stage 3 unless our concerns about short-term sentences and knife crime are addressed. It is time for the cabinet secretary to venture homeward to think again.

16:46

The Minister for Community Safety (Fergus Ewing): I thank the Justice Committee for the work that it has undertaken on what is a substantial bill with, as we heard during the wide-ranging debate, a large number of measures, many of which, I think it is reasonable to say, have been welcomed by members across the chamber.

The bill’s effect on charities was raised by Karen Gillon and, I think, by John Lamont and Mr Kelly. We will consider extremely carefully the arguments that were presented by members across the chamber. The point of having such debates is so that the Government can pay heed to issues, particularly when they are raised in a non-partisan, non-political way. We will reflect carefully on the arguments and report, as is appropriate, to the Justice Committee.

I will comment first on some of the bill’s less controversial measures and move into the shark-infested waters towards the end of my speech. I will move towards a crescendo, as it were.

I think that we all believe that extreme pornography is particularly vile and offensive, and that we will all support the measures that Sandra White talked about. She has rightly campaigned on that subject for many years.

Mr McLetchie rightly mentioned the extreme problem of domestic violence and the continuing stain on our nation of men who batter their wives—and the serious, complex and difficult issue of how, as a society, we deal with that. Of the 5,029 convictions with a domestic abuse aggravation in 2007-08, about 80 per cent involved common assault or breach of the peace, with very few resulting in custody. I am sure that Mr McLetchie will know well that the circumstances of those cases are hugely divergent. Plainly, the courts have taken a very stiff view and imposed serious and long sentences in the relatively small number of cases where a charge of serious assault or attempted murder was brought. However, we will reflect seriously on the detailed arguments that Mr McLetchie and others made.
Bill Wilson talked about his proposals for equity fines and how we deal with crimes that are committed from behind the corporate shield. Karen Gillon has long campaigned on an extremely serious incident that led to deaths in her constituency. I recently spoke on the issue, having had the pleasure of being invited to speak to a Scottish Trades Union Congress audience. I pay tribute to the work that Karen Gillon, Bill Wilson and others do in this field. It is, as they know only too well, a reserved issue, which we would prefer not to be the case. That fact has made consideration of the issue difficult. The cabinet secretary has offered to work with Mr Wilson and other members on proposals to ensure that courts have information about a company’s financial position to help determine sentencing. Bill Wilson alluded to one positive development that we should recognise and praise, which is the Crown Office’s appointment of a dedicated prosecutor who now leads a group of individuals dealing with health and safety offences. That will make a huge difference in practice to how such cases are pursued.

Reference was also made to various of the slightly more technical aspects of the bill concerning disclosure. My understanding—I am by no means an expert—is that the position on disclosure requires to be clearly stated. The issue is complex, so it is not possible to make the provisions as simple as we might like. Nonetheless, on that matter and on all others on which we are trying to achieve a corpus of law that is clear, coherent and effective, the Government is happy to continue to work with the Justice Committee to achieve the best possible result. The same point applies to defence statements, which several members referred to during the debate.

Ted Brocklebank raised, quite rightly, the issue of mobile phones in prisons. It is certainly the case—I know, because I did it—that the prison rules were changed to make introducing a mobile phone into a prison contrary to the rules. As Ted Brocklebank and other members who have visited prisons will know, prison officers do excellent, painstaking and detailed work day and daily to prevent the importation of drugs into our prisons. When I saw the videos showing drugs being passed from one individual to another I did not notice what was happening in any of those instances, but the prison officers, through their professionalism, detected those incidents and prevented the importation of drugs on those occasions. The ban on the use of mobile phones, coupled with the new offences that will be introduced by the bill, will take the tough action that I believe is supported by members of all parties in the Parliament.

Ted Brocklebank: The minister has described heavier sentencing under an amendment to the prison rules to deal with the trafficking of phones in and out of prison, but I asked about the blocking of mobile telephone signals. Such technology is available, but the minister has not referred to it.

Fergus Ewing: I had not finished responding to the specific points that Ted Brocklebank raised. I was about to say—in closing the debate, I have a duty to try my best to respond, in so far as is possible, to members who made specific points or recommendations—that work on a signal blocking device is being progressed by the Scottish Government, together with the SPS, the Ministry of Justice national offender management service and the Home Office scientific development branch to try to identify a viable solution to what Ted Brocklebank conceded is a difficult and complex problem. That is so not least because we do not want to block the mobile phone signals of people who live in Saughton outside the prison walls nor of those who live near our other prisons, which happen to be mostly in residential areas. I am sure that people who live on Inverness’s Culduthel Road near Porterfield prison would like to continue to enjoy chatting among themselves of an afternoon about activities in the Scottish Parliament—

Jamie Stone (Caithness, Sutherland and Easter Ross) (LD): Steady on.

Fergus Ewing:—however unlikely that may seem.

We take the matter of mobile phones in prison very seriously, in a way that I think Ted Brocklebank would approve of. We must also think about the safety and security of prison officers, who must be able to continue to use effective methods of communication. We will continue to ensure that they can do precisely that.

The more controversial aspects of the bill have certainly enlivened today’s proceedings. Our priority must be to keep the public safe. We must reduce the damage that crime does to victims and communities. That requires us to respond decisively and effectively when confronted by serious, violent crime, but it also requires us to use the best available evidence to work harder and to be smarter in challenging and changing offenders and in tackling the underlying social and cultural factors that so often drive offending and reoffending. I believe that our current uses of imprisonment make that extremely difficult.

“Scotland’s prisons hold too many prisoners on short sentences where there is no real expectation of being able to punish, rehabilitate or deter.”

Those words are, of course, not mine. Members will have recognised from the unusual succinctness and fluency of that passage that they are the words of Henry McLeish—they come from the foreword to the Scottish Prisons Commission.
Johann Lamont: Will you clarify why you are taking that approach? Why do you presume that nothing can be done with people who are literally a captive audience for six months, but expect it to be possible for those issues to be addressed in the community, even though the organisations that would provide that service are suffering cuts in their funding?

The Presiding Officer: I remind members to speak through the chair and not directly to each other—in other words, do not use the word “you”.

Fergus Ewing: I can give Johann Lamont the answer that she seeks and can explain exactly why we are taking that approach. We are doing so because we believe that it is the right approach. Unless we take it, we will not tackle the problem of crime and reoffending in this country.

I spell out that we are taking that approach because we learn not, as Mr Kelly said, from academics, but from people who should know—people such as Chief Constable David Strang—that it is the right approach. In his evidence to the Justice Committee, he said:

“We want a shift in the general approach to one that recognises that putting people in prison for a short time and then allowing them out unsupervised simply does not address the crime problems that Scotland faces. In principle, there should be a presumption against short sentences.”—[Official Report, Justice Committee, 26 May 2009; c 1931.]

We learn not from academics, but from people such as Professor Alec Spencer, who has been governor at Peterhead, Glenochil and Saughton prisons, occupations that are probably as unacademic in their daily duties as any that I can conceive. What did that non-academic have to say? He said:

“I think that the use of short-term and very short-term sentences is complete eye-wash. It has no effect at all on reducing crime.”

As a man who has governed three prisons, he should know, should he not?

Bill Aitken: Will the minister give way?

Fergus Ewing: I ask Bill Aitken to let me finish—there is more of that quote, as he will be pleased to hear. Professor Spencer went on to say:

“We know from research from around the world that where prison is used on its own—in general, short-term sentences involve only prison—crime increases by between 1 and 3 per cent.”—[Official Report, Justice Committee, 19 May 2009; c 1891.]

Bill Aitken: Is that the same Professor Spencer who suggested that a queuing system should be adopted at prisons to restrict prisoner numbers, which would mean that there would be a queue of offenders all the way down Smithycroft Road in Riddrie waiting to get into Barlinnie? Is that not eye-wash?

Fergus Ewing: I am reliably informed that that is a Swedish policy, and it is the Conservative party that has championed various aspects of Swedish penal policy.

While we are at it, and while we have a full chamber, I am sure that members would want to be updated on one of the Conservatives’ policies that they are unusually coy about expounding in detail. They think that we need more prisons and that we should use disused hospitals throughout Scotland to house our prisoners. Members may think that the walls of hospitals are gey thin and that they were designed not to keep people securely in prison but to divide wards in hospitals and are therefore fundamentally unsuitable for conversion into prison use. How is the great disused hospital hunt going? How many such hospitals have the Conservatives found? Where are they? How much will it cost to convert the disused hospitals that Annabel Goldie says exist all over the country to house the thousands upon thousands of additional prisoners who will end up in jail, who might include me?

The Presiding Officer: You must conclude, please, minister.

Fergus Ewing: I will finish on a consensual note.

The Presiding Officer: Quite quickly, please.

Fergus Ewing: We all deplore organised crime. I do not think that Mario Puzo—the author of the novel “The Godfather” in 1969—has ever been quoted in the Parliament before. He said:

“A lawyer with his briefcase can steal more than a thousand men with guns.”

We want to ensure that there are no covert consiglieres in Scotland helping organised criminals. We will stamp that out through our measures on organised crime.

I thank members for their generous support.
The Presiding Officer (Alex Fergusson): The next item of business is consideration of motion S3M-4544, in the name of John Swinney, on the financial resolution for the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill.

Motion moved,

That the Parliament, for the purposes of any Act of the Scottish Parliament resulting from the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill, agrees to any expenditure of a kind referred to in Rule 9.12.3(b)(i), (ii) or (iii) of the Parliament’s Standing Orders arising in consequence of the Act.—[Fergus Ewing.]
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill

Scottish Government response to the Stage 1 Report

Please find in Annexe A of this letter our responses to the various recommendations contained in the Justice Committee’s Stage 1 report on the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill.

The Committee may find it helpful to receive details of some new topics that we plan to seek to introduce into the Bill through Stage 2 amendments. Annexe B contains a summary of these new topics. I consider it is necessary to seek to add in the new topics into the Bill as there is an almost continual need for Scots criminal law to respond to developments in Scotland and at a UK and European level. Since preparation of the Bill for introduction was being completed in late 2008 and early 2009, there have been a number of developments within Scotland (e.g. court judgement relating to the common law powers of sheriffs to grant warrants), at a UK level (e.g. genocide offence changes) and at a European level (e.g. European Union Framework Decisions) where I consider that changes to Scots law are needed to be taken forward in this Parliamentary session. I am pleased this Bill represents an opportunity for quick and efficient Scottish Government action in response to issues that need addressing through primary legislative change.

I hope this is helpful.

Kenny MacAskill MSP
Cabinet Secretary for Justice
29 January 2010
ANNEXE A – SG RESPONSE TO STAGE 1 REPORT
RECOMMENDATIONS

(For ease of reference, the Committee’s comments are shown in bold and our responses are shown in plain text)

Sections 1-2
The Committee believes that the purposes or principles of sentencing, as established by common law, are already well understood by the courts. The common law has the advantage that it can more easily evolve and develop in response to changes in social attitudes; fixing this common-law understanding in statute carries a risk of unintended consequences, and may also lose some of the nuances of case-law jurisprudence.

What is more, it is generally understood to be a principle of legislative drafting to make provision only where it is necessary to do so – and, indeed, this has often been articulated by Ministers (both of the current and previous administrations) as a reason to resist backbench amendments.

Considering section 1 in isolation, therefore, we are not convinced that a sufficiently good case has been made for its inclusion. However, we recognise the Scottish Government’s view that an opening section setting out in broad terms what sentencing is for may be a useful preliminary to the creation of a Scottish Sentencing Council. Accordingly, we invite the Scottish Government both to justify the necessity for setting out the purposes and principles of sentencing in the Bill and to provide assurance that the provisions in sections 1 and 2 do not inadvertently change the law. Without adequate justification and assurance, we are liable to conclude that retaining these sections in the Bill may be problematic.

We acknowledge that all the purposes listed in subsection (1), and the “other matters” to which the courts must have regard listed in subsections (3) and (4), have a part to play in sentencing decisions. We believe it is important that, if these are to be listed in statute, they are regarded as non-exhaustive and unranked lists, with the order not implying any general priority of earlier items over later ones. We also note that, while the section title refers both to “purposes” and “principles”, only purposes are actually listed. In our view, principles of fairness, justice and proportionality are at least as important as the purposes already included, and we therefore invite the Scottish Government to consider including these principles within the section (or removing reference to “principles” from the section title).

The Committee is also uncertain as to why subsections (2) and (3) of section 1 are disapplied in relation to persons under the age of 18. Our presumption would be that the matters listed in subsection (3) are still relevant in that context, albeit in a context where the offender's age is also a significant factor.

We are also unclear what status subsection (1) is meant to have in relation to a young offender – it is not disapplied, but the court is under no obligation to have regard to it in sentencing that offender. We would invite the Scottish Government either to provide a better justification for its drafting approach here, or to bring forward amendments to clarify the application of section 1 to under-18 offenders.

The Committee has also found difficulty with the relationship between the purposes of sentencing in section 1 and the sentencing guidelines to be issued by the Scottish Sentencing Council (SSC). Specifically, the SSC does not appear to be required to reflect the purposes in preparing guidelines, but the courts are obliged to give precedence to the guidelines should they and the purposes of sentencing come into conflict (section 2(2)).

We do not see the logic of creating a statutory Sentencing Council and, at the same time, setting out the purposes of sentencing in statutory form if that Council is not itself made subject to those purposes in carrying out its work. That way, there should be no question of the council issuing guidelines that are inconsistent with the purposes of sentencing.

We recognise that the Scottish Sentencing Council is likely, in practice, to follow the purposes in any event, and there may also be reasons for not having this as a statutory obligation on the Council. Nevertheless, we believe the Scottish Government needs to do more to explain its thinking on these matters, so that the Committee can either satisfy itself that the relationship is an appropriate one, or consider how it might be amended at Stage 2.

Scottish Government response
Although it may well be the case that the courts understand the purposes and principles of sentencing, we do not consider they are well understood by the public, by those caught up in the criminal justice system as victims, witnesses or even offenders.

The judicially-led Sentencing Commission, which examined the issue of consistency in sentencing in Scotland, considered that a useful step towards the elimination of unwarranted disparity in sentencing would be to enshrine the purposes of sentencing in statute.

Public perception of justice and the sentencing process remains poor and if we are to improve confidence in the criminal justice system and promote consistency and transparency, we consider it necessary to set out clearly in statute the function and rationale of sentencing.
The provisions in the Bill require the sentencer to ‘have regard to’ the purposes of sentencing and the matters set out in section 1(3). We do not consider that this impacts on the ability of the sentencer to consider each case on its individual merits. The Bill provides that in the case of any conflict between the common law and the duties on the court under section 1, then the duties on the court under section 1 should prevail.

Section 1(1) has no application to young offenders as the duty on the court to have regard to the matters in section 1(1) is disapplied in respect of young offenders. The matters referred to in section 1(1) and 1(3) are still relevant to a young offender, but there are further principles that also need to be considered in relation to young offenders which we have not sought to set out in this Bill at this time.

It is likely that any Sentencing Council guidelines would be issued within the context of the purposes of sentencing and the matters referred to in section 1(3). Sentencing Council guidelines on specific offences may be more detailed than the matters referred to in section 1 of the Bill.

There is nothing in the text of the Bill to suggest that the purposes and principles are in any way ranked in order of importance. The list of purposes in section 1(1) is exhaustive whereas the matters that the court must have regard to under section 1(3) is non-exhaustive.

We plan to lodge amendments at Stage 2 to clarify that the matters that the court must have regard to under section 1(3) are to referred to as the principles of sentencing. The principles of fairness, justice and proportionality are the basis for the provisions we have made in the Bill.

Sections 3-13 and Schedule 1

The Committee recognises that some degree of inconsistency in sentencing is probably inevitable in any system that respects the independence both of the judiciary as a whole and of individual sentencers. We also accept that there is a perception, both among people working in the justice system and among the wider public as well, of at least a degree of inconsistency in the sentences given out by different judges or in different locations for similar offences. We have not been convinced that there is clear objective evidence – as opposed to anecdotal and circumstantial evidence – to substantiate this perception, no doubt partly because of the inherent difficulties involved in comparing individual sentencing decisions on a like-for-like basis.

We regard any actual – or indeed perceived – inconsistency as a problem, in that it runs counter to the principle of fairness that must be central to any justice system. We therefore support the aim of minimising inconsistency in sentencing. However, that aim cannot be an over-riding one, and must clearly be balanced against other considerations – including cost, and the potential for compromising other principles of justice.
A majority of the Committee is not yet convinced that a Scottish Sentencing Council, as proposed in the Bill, can be justified in terms of its capacity to reduce inconsistency beyond what might be achieved using existing mechanisms (such as the existing power of the Appeal Court to issue guideline judgments).

On the other hand, we are also conscious that there are other aims for the Council, including the consideration of wider sentencing issues, and the promotion of relevant research.

We accept that there may be a case for the setting of guidelines for sentencers, but recognise that there are issues as to how such guidelines are approved and promulgated. Overall, taking account of the other aims that it may serve, which we support, we recognise that there could be merit in a Sentencing Council. A Sentencing Council will inevitably have some influence on judicial discretion (indeed, there would be little point in having it if it did not), and there is a tension between that and the principle of separation of powers.

There was no consensus view in the Committee on how that tension is best addressed. A majority of members would prefer a structure in which sentencing guidelines developed by any Sentencing Council would take effect only after formal endorsement by the Appeal Court. These members argue that such endorsement would no doubt be forthcoming in the large majority of cases, but such a structure would also enable there to be a constructive dialogue in cases where the Court questioned some aspect of the guidelines proposed. These members also believe that having any guidelines issued with the authority of the Court itself is the best means of resolving the constitutional concerns about the role of the Sentencing Council that some witnesses have raised.

An alternative view within the Committee is that, to the extent that any adjustment to the provisions of the Bill is needed to address those concerns, it would be preferable to adjust the composition of the Council to provide a judicial majority. On this view, any structure that leaves the courts with the final say on sentencing guidelines would not represent a sufficient advance over the present arrangements. In that context we regard the safeguard in the Bill – that any court can decide not to follow a sentencing guideline so long as it states its reason for doing so – as essential, and the minimum necessary to preserve judicial independence. We will keep an open mind during Stage 2 as to whether further such safeguards are necessary, particularly whether the Council’s composition should be adjusted to ensure there is a judicial majority.

On other aspects of the Council’s composition, we can be more definite. We do not believe that a constable should be included among the “legal members” (although it will of course be important for the police to have a proper input in other ways to the Council’s deliberations). We also think there is at least a question whether a prosecutor should be included.

We do not support any of the various suggestions made to us for additional members (such as a representative of the Scottish Prisons Service, or of local authorities). We do, however, have sympathy with concerns made in evidence that the Bill would allow – at least in principle – the appointment of two sheriff principals but no sheriff, or two stipendiary magistrates but no JP – thus unbalancing the judicial composition of the Council. This may be unlikely in practice, but we suggest that some redrafting would address these concerns – perhaps by amalgamating what are currently separate requirements into a single requirement for three judicial members holding (any of) the offices of sheriff, sheriff principal, JP or stipendiary magistrate, of whom at least one must be a sheriff and at least one a JP.

We note the concerns of some witnesses as to the costs of establishing a Sentencing Council, and ask the Scottish Government to consider further whether this cost is still a priority for the use of scarce Justice Department resources at a time of financial stringency.

Scottish Government response

We are pleased that the Committee has indicated its support of our aim of improving consistency in sentencing and has recognised the need to tackle the current poor public perception of sentencing. We are also pleased to see that the Committee has recognised the merit in the creation of a Scottish Sentencing Council.

The Committee’s report set out the concerns from some quarters about the impact of the Sentencing Council on judicial independence. We see the Council and its guidelines as a resource for the courts and we will be giving further consideration to the thoughts of the Committee on how best to achieve our aims while maintaining judicial independence.

We have noted the Committee’s objection to the inclusion of a constable among the ‘legal members’ of the Sentencing Council and plan to lodge Stage 2 amendments to address this. We also plan to lodge Stage 2 amendments to address the Committee’s point about the possibility of unbalancing the judicial composition of the Council. The recommendation to include representation from the prosecuting authorities was included in the Sentencing Commission report on improving consistency and we continue to believe that there is merit in their inclusion.

We do still believe that the cost of the establishment of the Sentencing Council is justified. Compared to the overall cost of sentencing decisions, the cost of the proposed Council is minimal. Of course we will take every opportunity to minimise costs where practicable and will work closely with the Scottish Court Service to do so.
Section 14

The Committee broadly supports the creation of community payback orders (CPOs) on the grounds that they should simplify and strengthen the current range of community sentences, allowing more focus on offenders’ needs. However, we are also convinced that CPOs will not deliver the benefits envisaged for them unless they are adequately resourced – and we find it difficult or impossible to be sure at this stage whether sufficient funds have been or will be made available.

We are conscious that the level of take-up of CPOs will be closely linked to the views of sentencers on their effectiveness and the impact of any new statutory presumption against short-term custodial sentences, and that the Scottish Government itself cannot forecast with any confidence how many CPOs are likely to be made. What does seem clear is that there is very little prospect of any significant savings being made, in the short to medium term, in the largely fixed costs of running Scotland’s prisons even if the Bill succeeds in its aim of diverting a substantial number of offenders from custodial to community disposals.

Therefore, even though community sentences are generally cheaper than imprisonment, there will be a need for additional resources to make this approach work. (We also recognise, however, that if nothing is done to address rising prison populations, it will at some point become necessary to increase prison capacity, and that this will also have significant resource implications.)

We strongly believe that, if CPOs are to gain credibility with the public, and with the victims of crime in particular, they must begin (and be seen to begin) very shortly after sentence is declared – either on the day of sentence or (where this is not practicable, as we accept will sometimes be the case) as soon as possible thereafter. This is on the same principle that judgment should be given as soon as possible after an offence is committed – namely that justice delayed is justice denied.

The Cabinet Secretary has already announced some additional resources for existing community sentences, but until we know what the level of take-up will be, it is difficult or impossible to say whether current budgets will be sufficient. It is clear that many witnesses are concerned about this issue, and equally clear that an increased take up of CPOs of 10% or 20% (as postulated by the Scottish Government in the Financial Memorandum) will require additional resources.

We welcome the additional resources already committed, but note that they require to be used both to eliminate barriers to the speedy commencement of the orders, and to address issues of quality. There may also be issues about the adequacy of the unit cost calculation used in this context. Further, it is evident that the programme, residence, mental health treatment, drug treatment or alcohol treatment requirements that may be applied to the new orders will require additional resourcing.
The Committee asks the Scottish Government to provide further assurance as to how such costs are to be met. Thereafter we need a commitment by Ministers to keep the level of take-up under review, and to bring forward additional funding as required. In this connection, we are conscious that, while the main impact will be felt by criminal justice social work services, there will be resource implications for other areas. For example, there will be additional costs for the Scottish Court Service as a consequence of the progress reviews, and for voluntary sector bodies involved in the delivery of the new CPOs. Appropriate consideration must be given to these wider resource implications.

We do not agree with those witnesses who argued that progress courts should have been established as specialist courts, as the Prisons Commission recommended. We believe this should be a matter for individual sheriffs principal to consider in the light of local circumstances. We also believe the Bill gets it right in making progress reviews optional, so that the resources involved in them can be targeted to where they are most needed.

The Committee also recommends that the Scottish Government reconsider some of the terminology used in the Bill, specifically whether an alternative name might be considered to avoid confusion over the term “supervision requirement”. We also invite the Scottish Government to consider making the rehabilitative element in community payback orders clearer.

Scottish Government response
We are pleased that the Committee has broadly supported the introduction of the Community Payback Order.

The Community Payback Order will ensure that sentences served in the community are robust, immediate and visible to the community. We have already issued revised guidance to speed up the start of community service orders. From 1 June 2009, placements should begin within 7 working days of sentence being passed rather than 21 working days as in the past. We are also looking at opportunities to trial same-day starts, as the Committee is calling for. In addition to rapid starts, the Bill will support quicker completion of orders as the court will be able to specify that the unpaid work element of sentences will be completed in 6 months rather than 12. We believe these measures will help maintain and increase public confidence in community sentences.

We share the Committee's conclusion that the new sentence must be adequately resourced. That is why along with our partners, we will be monitoring the level of take-up of the CPO closely. As for the additional funding, we have set out our budget for 2010/11: we have announced extra resources and have said it will be baselined thereafter. We have announced a total of £9.5m additional funding into community service: £3.5m for 2009/10 and £6m for 2010/11. The extra £6m for 2010/11 will come from elsewhere in the Justice budget – areas not critical to community sentences. For example the ending of the mandatory drug testing pilot will make available £1.8m a year. There will also be transfers from other parts of the justice budget, primarily from the centrally-held budget established to address reductions in reoffending. Once the new CPO provisions have been implemented we will monitor its use as a key input to future resourcing decisions.

The costs associated with the provision of the requirements under the CPO will be met from within the existing baseline for criminal justice social work. While it is difficult to predict the size of any increase in the imposition of these requirements, experience in England & Wales since the introduction of the community order is that the average number of requirements per order has remained broadly constant. In Scotland, the average number of additional conditions per probation order is estimated at 1.2 per order. However, we will of course keep the level of take up under review.

In relation to the use of the term ‘supervision requirement’, we are aware that there are proposals contained in the draft Children’s Hearings Bill (published on 26 June 2009) to change the term in that context to ‘Compulsory Supervision Order’. Subject to the parliamentary process, if the draft changes in that Bill are enacted, we believe that any potential confusion should be eliminated.

The name ‘community payback order’ was based on the definition of ‘payback’ provided by the Prisons Commission in its report ‘Scotland’s Choice’ which was clear that payback to the community should be the focus of our criminal justice system. We have deliberately adopted this broader interpretation rather than the narrower definitions assumed by some. We remain convinced that public understanding of the purpose of the new community sentence, and confidence in it, will be supported by the name ‘community payback order’. We do not therefore propose to amend it.

Section 16
There is clearly uncertainty from the evidence about whether there are, in fact, any police cells in remote parts of Scotland that are certified for use for short-term detention. The Committee invites the Scottish Government to provide clarification on this point, and also to explain more fully how the process of certification operates. We would also suggest that further consideration be given to whether, even if no police cells are currently certified, this is a sufficient basis to repeal the provision that enables them to be so certified. We can envisage circumstances in which the facility to detain people in such cells, as an alternative to a long journey to the nearest prison, could continue to be useful.

Scottish Government response
The operation of ‘certified’ police cells is provided for within sections 206(2)-(6) of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 (‘the 1995 Act’) as follows:
SECTION 206 - MINIMUM PERIODS OF IMPRISONMENT

(2) Where a court of summary jurisdiction has power to impose imprisonment on an offender, it may, if any suitable place provided and certified as mentioned in subsection (4) below is available for the purpose, sentence the offender to be detained therein, for such period not exceeding four days as the court thinks fit, and an extract of the finding and sentence shall be delivered with the offender to the person in charge of the place where the offender is to be detained and shall be a sufficient authority for his detention in that place in accordance with the sentence.

(3) The expenses of the maintenance of offenders detained under this section shall be defrayed in like manner as the expenses of the maintenance of prisoners under the Prisons (Scotland) Act 1989.

(4) The Scottish Ministers may, on the application of any police authority, certify any police cells or other similar places provided by the authority to be suitable places for the detention of persons sentenced to detention under this section, and may by statutory instrument make regulations for the inspection of places so provided, the treatment of persons detained therein and generally for carrying this section into effect.

(5) No place certified under this section shall be used for the detention of females unless provision is made for their supervision by female officers.

(6) In this section the expression “police authority” has the same meaning as in the Police (Scotland) Act 1967.

The operation of ‘legalised’ police cells is provided for within section 14 of the Prisons (Scotland) Act 1989 (‘the 1989 Act’) as follows:

SECTION 14 – LEGALISED POLICE CELLS

1) The Scottish Ministers, on the application of a police authority, may from time to time by rules under section 39 of this Act declare that any police cells or other premises in the possession of the police authority shall be a legal prison for the detention of prisoners before, during or after trial for any period not exceeding 30 days. Any such police cells or other premises are hereinafter referred to as legalised police cells.

2) Any person charged with or convicted of any crime or offence committed within the area of a council who might have been lawfully confined in a prison situated therein may be lawfully confined in any legalised police cells situated in that area for such period as aforesaid.

3) The maintenance of prisoners confined in any legalised police cells shall be deemed to be the maintenance of prisoners under this Act:

Provided that the police authority shall not be entitled to any payment for the use of the legalised police cells or for services rendered by any of their officers in connection with the detention or removal of the prisoners so confined.

4) The police authority, notwithstanding anything in this section, shall at all times have a prior claim to the uninterrupted use of any legalised police cells in their area.

5) For the purposes of this section the police authority of the area of a council in which there are any legalised police cells and all persons in their employment shall be subject to the provisions of this Act and any rules made thereunder.

6) It shall be the duty of the Scottish Ministers to make any arrangements required for the removal of any prisoners confined in legalised police cells in the areas of the councils for Orkney Islands and Shetland Islands.

7) In this section the expression “police authority” means a council, except that where there is an amalgamation scheme in force under the Police (Scotland) Act 1967 it means a joint police board.

8) For the purposes of sections 8 and 39 of this Act, legalised police cells shall be deemed to be prisons.

9) In this section, “council” means a council constituted under section 2 of the Local Government etc. (Scotland) Act 1994.

There are currently Legalised Police Cells in 9 locations:
As a result of the operation of ‘legalised’ police cells, there have been no ‘certified’ police cells used for many years and we can confirm that, notwithstanding the evidence received by the Committee suggesting the contrary, Kirkwall (Orkney), Lerwick (Shetland) and Stornoway (the Western Isles) all have ‘legalised’ police cells rather than ‘certified’ police cells.

In conclusion, should any police authority wish to have available facilities to hold prisoners pending transfer to the nearest prison, then the powers under section 14 of the Prisons (Scotland) Act 1989 are sufficient and should be utilised in applying to the Scottish Ministers for police cells (or other police premises) to be designated as ‘legalised police cells’.

Section 17
The Committee agrees that there is a need to strike a proper balance between the imposition of short custodial sentences and effective community disposals. Additionally, the Committee agrees that there is a need to develop a range of community sentences in which the public can have confidence and which present the best chance of long-term rehabilitation of offenders. However, members were unable to agree on whether it was either necessary or desirable to create a statutory presumption against custodial sentences of six months or less in order to achieve that balance.

All Committee members recognise that the priority is to imprison offenders who (as the Prisons Commission said) commit offences so serious that no other form of punishment will do or who pose a threat of serious harm to the public. Committee members also recognise that those who have persistently failed to respond to non-custodial disposals may also have to be imprisoned. We acknowledge that this is, to a significant extent at least, what sentencers already aim to do, and that they do not lightly send people to prison if this is unlikely to benefit either them or those affected by their offending behaviour.

We accept that short prison sentences do not normally achieve much by way of rehabilitation, that while they provide respite for victims and communities, this is only for a limited period, and that high re-offending rates tend to demonstrate that they have limited effect as a deterrent. Finally, we all recognise that the Bill, although undoubtedly intended to shift sentencing behaviour, leaves the final decision in any individual case to the court, thus allowing a short-term prison sentence still to be

- Campbeltown
- Dunoon
- Hawick
- Kirkwall
- Lerwick
- Lochmaddy
- Oban
- Stornoway
- Thurso
given where the court is convinced that that is the best option in the circumstances.

Where Committee members do not agree is on how far short-term custodial sentences should continue to be regarded as an appropriate disposal (other than in exceptional circumstances), and on whether they are currently being overused, or inappropriately used.

Some members point to the weight of evidence, particularly from academics, suggesting that short sentences involve only “warehousing” of offenders and provide no real opportunity to engage them in programmes to tackle their offending behaviour or address their other problems – and indeed that imprisonment itself may make those problems worse. These members also cite Scotland’s high incarceration rate, and the re-offending statistics, in support of the view that current sentencing policy is not working.

However, other members question that evidence, pointing out in particular that, since the people the courts imprison are likely to be the more persistent or serious offenders, it is hardly surprising that their re-offending rates are higher than those given community disposals. These members also cite examples referred to by witnesses, where a short prison sentence has had a salutary effect in persuading an offender to change his or her behaviour, even where previous community disposals had failed to do so. They also question the assumption that short-term sentences are currently given out where better alternatives exist, and hence doubt that a statutory presumption will make any real difference.

At least one member of the Committee questions whether, in the context of a provision aimed at discouraging sentencers from imposing short custodial sentences, a six-month threshold is the right one to use. On this view, reducing this to (say) three months, at least initially, would focus the provision on those cases where there is the least chance of rehabilitation in prison and which are least likely to involve serious or violent offences.

Overall, the Committee did not agree with the proposal in the Bill to create a statutory presumption against short-term custodial sentences.

Scottish Government response

We note the Committee’s detailed consideration of this issue, and its agreement on the limited effectiveness of short prison sentences as a deterrent, for rehabilitation and in providing respite to communities.

The difference in reoffending rates is very marked: 74% of those released from short custodial sentences go on to reoffend within two years of getting out. Only 42% of people sentenced to community service orders go on to reoffend in the same period. Moreover, the average time spent in prison, after conviction, on a sentence of 6 months or less is only 3 weeks. That is not enough time to address reoffending.
We note the salutary effect that a short prison sentence can have in some cases, where community disposals have not worked. We recognise this and the bill allows for it. Judges will still be able to use short custodial sentences where they think it is the only option. And if an offender breaches a community payback order, the judge will be able to impose a custodial sentence where needed in almost all cases. On the doubt that a statutory presumption will make any real difference, we note the comments by Sheriff Michael Fletcher (Honorary President of the Sheriffs’ Association) who told the Committee on 12 May:

‘…all sheriffs and justices would have regard to that rule, because we are bound to do so. It would cause us to hesitate, because we would have to think about whether we can truly justify giving such a sentence.’

Most sentences of 6 months or less are given for a small group of offences of which the largest are shoplifting, breach of the peace, breaches of bail or social work orders, petty assault and handling of an offensive weapon. These are also the most common crimes in the list of offences receiving sentences of 3 months or less. In particular, 7% of sentenced receptions to prison for 6 months or less and 6% of sentenced receptions of 3 months or less are for handling offensive weapons. As the First Minister has said, people who commit serious offences should receive long jail sentences, not short sentences which the Committee has acknowledged do too little to deter and to prevent reoffending.

Section 18
The Committee has found this a particularly difficult provision to assess, because of the complex interface between the current law, the regime that would be introduced by commencing relevant provisions of the 2007 Act as it was enacted, and the version of that Act that would result from the amendments made by the Bill. We are grateful to Scottish Government officials and to SPICe for providing the Committee with additional briefing on this section at a late stage in our Stage 1 consideration.

We understand the general intention of the 2007 Act to move away from a system of automatic and unconditional early release to a system that allows appropriate conditions to be imposed. However, we also recognise the serious concerns that have been raised about the complexity and cost involved in implementing that Act unamended, given the number of prisoners who would be subject to supervision and assessment requirements.

We therefore agree that the Bill represents some improvement on the current law, as it will result in more prisoners being subject to statutory supervision on release and fewer to automatic unconditional early release, while avoiding the more onerous requirements of the 2007 Act.
We understand that the intention is to set the threshold at sentences of one or two years' duration, and we note the significant difference in the resource implications according to which of these is chosen. We also note the Subordinate Legislation Committee’s concerns about the unlimited nature of the power delegated by this provision, and welcome the Scottish Government’s commitment (in response to that Committee) to consider whether appropriate parameters might be specified in the Bill.

Scottish Government response
The proposed amendments to Custodial Sentences and Weapons (Scotland) Act 2007 reflect the recommendations in the Prisons Commission’s report about what would be required to make the custodial sentences measures in the 2007 Act viable and, in due course, enable the Scottish Government to replace the current system of early release.

When implemented, the measures in the 2007 Act (as amended by section 18 of the Bill) will remove the current custody-only provision in the 2007 Act and provide for a two tier custody and community regime determined by the length of the sentence. This will see all offenders sentenced to imprisonment provided with statutory supports during the community part of the sentence. This will include mandatory supervision for all but those sentenced to short periods of imprisonment although, even in these cases, supervision could be imposed as a licence condition if considered appropriate in any particular case.

Concerns have been raised about the current proposal to provide an order making power that will allow the Scottish Ministers to ‘set the bar’ at which the lower tier custody and community arrangements give over to the more intensive arrangements. We have considered whether appropriate parameters might be specified in the Bill but remain of the view that it would not be appropriate to set it now. Although we are committed to implementing the new measures as soon as practicable, this work is incorporated within the wider Reducing Reoffending Programme. This will enable the impact that the new measures will have on the SPS and local authority criminal justice services to be properly assessed and taken into account within the implementation pathway. As the Scottish Prisons Commission noted, the size of the prisoner population will be the critical factor in determining when the new arrangements can be brought on stream.

We need to assess the evidence in ‘real time’ to ensure that the period set provides for a modern and flexible offender management regime for those sentenced to imprisonment. We therefore believe that the proposal to provide an order making power to allow us to ‘set the bar’ between the proposed two tiers of sentence management is the best way to ensure that we can deliver the new measures in the 2007 Act (as amended by section 18 of the Bill) as quickly and effectively as possible taking account of future developments around the prison service, prisoner numbers and the local authorities’ resources. It may also prove, on the basis of future data (and in the light of the benefits of the investment in the prisons estate and the community payback strategy), that custody and community sentences are more effective for sentences of a certain length. Setting a limit in primary legislation beyond which the line could not be moved may impede that development.

Section 24
The Committee fully supports the principle that voluntary intoxication by alcohol should not be regarded as a mitigating factor in sentencing, but most members are less convinced of the case for codifying this principle in statute. The evidence suggests the principle is already well understood by sentencers, and there may be a risk that a statutory provision will confuse the legal position instead of clarifying it. This is partly because of uncertainty about the meaning of “voluntary” intoxication, and about the distinction between the intoxication itself and any underlying circumstances which might properly be regarded as mitigating.

It could also be inferred from the fact that the provision mentions only alcohol in the context of what is not to be regarded as a mitigating factor, that the position in respect of other forms of intoxication must be intended to be different. It would be unfortunate if one of the consequences of this well-intentioned provision was to make it easier to advance an argument for mitigation in the context of voluntary intoxication by drugs. We would therefore be grateful for further explanation from the Scottish Government about the rationale for this provision and its response to these concerns.

Scottish Government response
This provision forms part of our comprehensive framework for action to rebalance Scotland’s relationship with alcohol. There is a very strong link between alcohol misuse and offending – in particular violent offending.

In spite of the understanding of the courts, there is evidence that time and time again voluntary intoxication is being put before them as a mitigating factor. In her evidence to the Committee, the Lord Advocate said:

‘…day in, day out, notwithstanding the understanding that it does not mitigate, solicitors continue to put it before the courts in mitigation that their client would not have carried out the crime if sober. That is particularly prevalent as an excuse or as a form of mitigation in domestic abuse cases.’

We do not accept that the provision in the Bill prevents the court from considering the underlying reason for an offender’s intoxication as a mitigating factor (e.g. a bereavement) even though the intoxication itself cannot be a mitigating factor.

We also do not accept that the provision implies that the position in respect of other forms of intoxication must be intended to be different. The key issue here is the high level of offending associated with alcohol.
Sections 25-28
We strongly support the underlying intention of these sections of the Bill to provide additional tools for the police and the courts to tackle those involved in serious organised crime. We are less certain, however, that the Bill gets the detail right.

While there was contradictory evidence and most members are not entirely clear on what sections 25 and 27 add to the existing common law on conspiracy and incitement, and while we have some concern that the key terms of “involvement” and “direction” are insufficiently clear, on balance we support the creation of these new offences. We also support the new aggravation provided for in section 26, although we are not wholly convinced of the case for removing the normal requirement for corroborating evidence. We would therefore welcome a clearer justification for this element of the provision from Ministers.

We have considered carefully the evidence we have received about the definitions underpinning these new offences, namely the definitions of “serious organised crime” and “serious offence”. The main concern is that they are too widely drawn, and in this context we note that there is some dispute about whether offences need to be widely drawn in statute to ensure that the courts can apply them as intended. The Lord Advocate advanced this view, suggesting that ECHR case-law has made it increasingly difficult for the courts to “expand” on a narrowly-drawn statutory definition in deciding what constitutes an offence.

However, the Committee's criminal justice adviser (Professor Peter Duff) has suggested that the European Court of Human Rights extends a considerable “margin of appreciation” to domestic courts, and that if the serious organised crime offences were more tightly defined, the Court “would grant the Scottish courts considerable leeway in interpreting the legislation creatively to extend to all the types of mischief it was intended to cover”. Accordingly, we invite the Scottish Government to re-examine the extent to which it may be possible to tighten the definitions in the light of the evidence we have received.

Of the provisions on serious organised crime, the one that has given us most difficulty is the section 28 offence of failure to report serious organised crime. It would clearly aid the fight against serious organised crime if people who come into contact with it, even quite innocently or inadvertently, were more prepared to report their suspicions to the police – but it is much less clear that a criminal sanction for not doing so is a fair or indeed effective way of encouraging this. People may be reluctant to report suspicions to the police for quite understandable reasons.

We also think more allowance should be made for the nature of a person's role if they are to be held liable for not reporting suspicions arising from information gained in the course of their business or employment. For example, if unusually large amounts of cash are banked by a small business and this prompts suspicion among bank staff, it is one thing to hold liable for not reporting this a senior manager or trained professional, but another to hold liable a junior cashier. Similar concerns may arise about information gained through a “close personal relationships” from which a “material benefit” is derived, as this could apply to the teenage child of a gangster who has begun to understand where the family income comes from.

While we do not agree with Sir Gerald Gordon that section 28 has “totalitarian overtones”, we do agree with his view that the provision could certainly be improved. For the time being, we invite the Scottish Government either to provide a better justification for this provision, or to bring forward amendments that will address the concerns raised.

Scottish Government response

- What do these offences add to conspiracy etc.

The Scottish Government supported by the Serious Organised Crime Taskforce want to provide a range of statutory offences to help tackle serious organised crime. We recognise there is some overlap between section 25 and the offence of conspiracy but we consider it necessary to take specific action to give law enforcement more powers to deal with serious organised crime. We consider this offence will give them additional flexibility to tackle these people as well as putting on the public record that these offences have taken place in connection with serious organised crime.

- Terms of involvement and direction are insufficiently unclear

The offences are deliberately widely framed but we feel they need to be in order to catch the very wide ranging and evolving types of activity that serious organised crime involves itself in. Defining more closely would potentially restrict the effect of the offences and limit the kinds of acts we are trying to capture now and in the future. We do not want to be in a position where we have to repeatedly come back to Parliament to modify this section as and when future types of behaviour around serious organised crime become apparent to the authorities. The flexibility around these offences should allow law enforcement to stay ahead of the crime groups and to take prompt action not place them on the back foot as offending behaviour changes.

- Aggravation – removing corroborating evidence

We welcome the Committee’s support for the new aggravation around serious organised crime. The Committee are concerned though about the removal of normal requirement for corroborating evidence. Although in this section evidence from a single source is sufficient to establish the aggravation, it is important to emphasise that at least 2 sources of evidence will of course still be required to establish the accused’s guilt in relation to the offence charged. This does nothing to change that general principle of Scots criminal law. The aggravation does nothing to alter a finding of guilt established by corroborated evidence; it simply allows the sheriff/judge to take account of the serious organised crime context of the offence when sentencing and obliges them to record that aggravation. This is not a novel provision in statutory aggravations (sections 1(4) and 2(4) of the Offences (Aggravation by Prejudice) Act 2009 being one example). We hope this is enough to satisfy Committee but happy to engage further if necessary.

- Serious organised crime and serious offence definitions - too wide
  We are continuing to work in looking at these definitions. However we remain to be convinced that significant changes are required. Both the Lord Advocate and the Chief Constable of Strathclyde Police, Stephen House, made clear in their evidence to the Committee the need for wide ranging definitions and we need to ensure we give law enforcement and the prosecution the tools they require to be as flexible as possible. We want to capture all forms of serious organised crime, to get at its heart and provide flexibility. We are continuing to look at the definitions to ensure they are sufficiently tight but at the same time ensure that the wide variety and changing conduct involved is still effectively captured.

- Failing to report criminal sanction is not fair for not reporting
  Our intention is to penalise people who have benefited from not reporting serious organised crime. We do not want to capture people who have inadvertently become aware of or suspect criminality from going about their normal business. However where somebody has benefited from not reporting it, then they should be penalised. We intend to bring forward amendments at Stage 2 that we hope will satisfy Committee to ensure that a person would not unwittingly be caught by these provisions.

- Junior member
  We note the comments made and do accept the points made. We intend to address the issue as we do not intend to capture with this offence those junior members of staff who carry out a task at the instruction of an employer who knows or suspects that it relates to serious organised crime. We intend to lodge amendments to require a direct link between an individual’s knowledge, the service they provide and the benefit they receive from serious organised crime.

- Close personal relationships and material benefit- better justification required
  We have thought more around the ‘material benefit’ which can be wide ranging and we intend to bring forward amendments that will more accurately reflect the forms of benefits we are aiming to capture such as being linked to certain property.

Section 34
The Committee shares the Scottish Government’s aim to protect the public from extreme pornography, but has noted a range of concerns raised in evidence about the parameters of the new offence proposed. There are various points on which we would seek further clarification from the Scottish Government. The first is why the definition of “extreme image” includes a much broader reference to depictions of rape than was suggested in consultation and is provided for in the equivalent England and Wales legislation.
Secondly, we would be grateful for further explanation about why that definition refers to “realistic” depictions of sexual acts, and how that relates to cartoons or other images that have been distorted or have a fantasy element.

Thirdly, we would seek clarification on the rationale for using the term “obscene” as part of the definition of extreme pornography, when that term is itself undefined in the Bill, and whether any consideration was given to alternative definitions in terms of the cultural harm that pornography can cause.

Finally, we would be grateful for clarification of what is meant by “possession” of extreme pornography, and whether, in the absence of any definition in the Bill, what understanding of that term would be relied on by the courts (particularly where images come into someone’s possession through electronic transmission).

The Committee accepts the rationale for excluding from the offence of possessing extreme pornography images that form all or part of a classified work, such as a film granted a certificate by the British Board of Film Classification. However, we are uncertain about some of the practical implications, for example whether it offers protection from prosecution to the film-maker who is in possession of a film that the BBFC has not yet been able to consider for certification.

We are satisfied with the defences that are provided in inserted section 51C. In particular, while we note the concerns raised in evidence, we agree that the Bill is right to distinguish between the possession of an image by those who participated in the sexual activity depicted and the onward transmission of that image to third parties.

Scottish Government response

- Definition of ‘extreme image’

We believe that the specific inclusion of images of rape within the definition of extreme pornography sends out a clear message about the unacceptability of any pornographic depiction of rape.

We note that the majority of respondents to the Justice Committee’s consultation on the draft Bill who commented on this section were supportive of the inclusion of all pornographic images of rape. Rape Crisis Scotland, for example, commented:

‘Rape Crisis Scotland supports the inclusion in the bill of specific reference to rape and other non-consensual penetrative sexual activity within the definition of extreme pornography. Unlike similar legislation in England & Wales, the bill does not make a distinction between ‘violent’ rape, and rape in general, a distinction which is extremely unhelpful.’
The offence is based on that proposed by the short-life working group established by the then Scottish Executive to consider how an offence of possession of extreme pornography might be framed in Scots law. That group proposed a wider definition of ‘extreme pornography’ which would encompass all images of rape and non-consensual penetrative sexual activity.

- Definition refers to ‘realistic’ depictions of sexual acts
  The definition of an extreme image is intended to be restricted to images, whether moving or still, which appear to a reasonable person to depict an act which is real. Our view is that there is a risk that such images normalise sexual violence and that the risk is greatest where such activities are depicted in a realistic manner. Where the image is realistic, the person possessing it may have no way of knowing that it does not depict a real image of a serious sexual offence. Although there is no requirement that it is actually real, the offence does not apply to cartoons or other animations which clearly do not depict real people carrying out real acts. On the other hand, a computer generated image of sufficient sophistication as to appear to a reasonable person to be depicting a real act would be caught.

- Use of the term ‘obscene’
  Under section 51 of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982, it is an offence for any person to publish, sell, distribute, or to possess with a view to its eventual sale or distribution, any obscene material. An offence under section 51 will have been committed by someone in order for others to possess obscene material, but it can be difficult to take action to prevent its distribution as, where a person is found to be in possession of such material, the police require to find evidence of publication, sale or distribution of the material or an intention to sell or distribute it. The offence of possession of extreme pornographic material is intended to ensure that where this obscene material is extreme and pornographic, simple possession will be an offence, which will enable the police to seize the material and, if appropriate, submit a report to the procurator fiscal.

By providing that images must be obscene, in addition to being extreme and pornographic, we ensure that the possession of material which it is not currently illegal to sell or distribute is not inadvertently criminalised.

As to the absence of definition of obscene, it is not defined as we are of the view that obscenity is a relative concept which may vary according to time, circumstances and locality. The advantage of this approach is that the proper meaning of the term is left to the interpretation of the courts in the light of the prevailing moral consensus and the full facts and circumstances of each individual case. This is consistent with the approach in the 1982 Act which does not define obscene for the purposes of the section 51 offence. Therefore, obscenity is a concept with which the courts are already familiar by virtue of the 1982 Act.

- What is meant by ‘possession’ of extreme pornography
  The term ‘possession’ is used in equivalent legislation concerning indecent images of children at section 52A of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982. The police and the COPFS have confirmed that they are content with its use. Case law has defined possession in terms of a person having knowledge and control of the item in question. In normal circumstances, deleting images held on a computer is sufficient to divest possession of them. An exception would be where a person is shown to have intended to remain in control of the image even though he has apparently deleted it. For example, where the use of software can retrieve the image.

In the context of images which come into someone’s possession through electronic transmission, section 51C(2)(c) provides that it shall be a defence for a person to prove that he was sent the image concerned without any prior request having been made and did not keep it for an unreasonable time, or that he had not seen the image concerned and did not know, nor had any cause to suspect, it to be an extreme pornographic image. These defences are in line with those which apply in relation to the offence of possession of indecent images of children.

- Practical implications relating to ‘classified works’

The specific exemption for BBFC-certificated films has been included within the provisions for the avoidance of doubt, so as to reassure members of the public in possession of BBFC-certificated films that they will not be prosecuted for possession of extreme pornography.

We do not consider that any BBFC-certificated film would meet the definition of extreme pornography as the BBFC are clear that they would not give a certificate to a pornographic film containing depictions of rape, serious sexual violence, bestiality or sexual activity with a corpse. As such it is appropriate that there should be no exemption for films which have not yet received BBFC certification, as any film which would fall within the offence provisions would not, in any case, receive BBFC certification. It is up to film makers to ensure that their films would not constitute extreme pornography.

- Defences

We note the Committee’s comments.

Section 35

The Committee has no difficulties with this provision as far as it goes, but it would be useful to get a clearer indication of what else the Scottish Government is doing to tackle trafficking issues, particularly in view of the absence so far of convictions for sexual exploitation under the 2003 Act (notwithstanding suggestions that Glasgow has the highest number of trafficked persons outside London). We are sympathetic to the concerns expressed by ACPOS that the legislation should be sufficiently broad to cover all forms of trafficking.

We are particularly concerned that the problem may be exacerbated during the Commonwealth Games in 2014. We would therefore welcome assurances from the Cabinet Secretary that the changes made by the Bill will contribute meaningfully to addressing this problem.
Scottish Government response
We are grateful for the support of the Committee regarding these provisions.

- Other action to tackle Human Trafficking
A comprehensive range of measures designed to tackle all aspects of trafficking is set out in the UK Action Plan on Tackling Human Trafficking which is published jointly with UK Government. The Plan outlines our strategy in relation to trafficking in human beings and sets out work that is underway across the UK to address trafficking related issues.

- Coverage of Legislation
In relation to the concerns expressed by ACPOS, we would reassure the Committee that the current legislation already deals with the trafficking of human beings for labour exploitation, domestic servitude and organ harvesting and, in each case, covers trafficking into, within or outwith the UK. The provisions relating to trafficking of a human being for the purposes of forced labour etc. are contained in sections 4 and 5 of the Asylum and Immigration (Treatment of Claimants, etc.) Act 2004. This is additional to section 22 of the Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 2003, which makes provision relating to trafficking of a human being for the purposes of prostitution etc. As these provisions make it clear that it is an offence to arrange or facilitate the trafficking of a human being for exploitation then the activity around the transit process is already caught.

- Commonwealth Games 2014
Our aim is to ensure that any risk of human trafficking associated with the Commonwealth Games is assessed and addressed. That is why the Commonwealth Games features as a specific issue in the UK Action Plan on Human Trafficking. The Commonwealth Games Security Planning team, a multi-agency group, has a remit to identify and address potential security measures which includes trafficking in human beings. The legislative measures currently in place and those proposed in this Bill will help in tackling the potential threat around the Commonwealth Games.

We would draw the attention of the Committee in particular to the provisions relating to closure notices and orders contained in section 72 of the Bill. If approved by Parliament, these provisions will provide the police with specific powers to close premises associated with human trafficking and other forms of exploitation. For the purposes of the closure powers a list of ‘exploitation offences’ is contained in the provisions which ensures that premises used for certain immigration offences such as falsification of documents and the trafficking in human beings for forced labour, slavery, servitude, organ transplant or for the purposes of prostitution etc. will be covered. We believe that this new power will help police address the misery caused by all forms of trafficking in human beings, including any threats identified in relation to the Commonwealth Games.

Section 38
The Committee recognises that there are various ways of addressing concerns about the fact that Scots law allows children as young as eight to be regarded as criminally liable and prosecuted through the courts, when a minimum age of 12 is recommended by the UN Committee. However, we remain unclear why the Scottish Government has opted for raising the minimum age at which a child may be prosecuted, rather than also abolishing the rule of law on the age at which children cannot be guilty of an offence (as the Scottish Law Commission recommended).

An alternative, suggested by SCCYP, would have been to raise that age from eight to 12, and then to provide for a new “non-offence” ground to enable children below 12 to be referred to a Children's Hearing in cases where other grounds for referral do not apply. We find it difficult to assess whether the approach adopted in the Bill is the best available option without a fuller explanation of the Scottish Government’s reasoning.

While we recognise that the difference between the various approaches may be mostly theoretical, it would be useful to know how far the Scottish Government’s choice of approach was based on practical considerations, such as whether it would permit retention of children’s forensic data, or how offences committed by children would be recorded (and what implications this might have for their future prospects).

We recognise that children under 12 can sometimes do terrible things, and if there is to be a statutory ban on criminal prosecution in all such cases, it would be useful to have an assurance from the Cabinet Secretary that there is a sufficient range of disposals available within the children’s hearings system.

We note that the Bill does not change the existing situation in which the option of referring children to a Children's Hearing on the ground that they have committed an offence is unavailable for a child under the age of eight. We note that the Scottish Government intends to bring forward a Children's Hearings Bill in the near future and we trust that this issue will be properly and fully considered in that context.

On the question of whether 12 is the appropriate age threshold (either for being deemed capable of committing a crime, or for being liable to prosecution), we have no settled view. We recognise that any age is, to some extent, arbitrary, but there may be merit in having some consistency with age-limits in other relevant statutory contexts. We are conscious, in particular, that the new Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009 sets an age threshold of 13 for the definition of various sexual offences against young children, and we suggest that the Scottish Government could do more to explain why the same age was not adopted in the current context.

Scottish Government response
We believe section 38 moves Scots law towards the expectations of the UN Committee on the Rights of the Child (UNCRC). The UNCRC requires State Parties to set a minimum age below which children shall be presumed not to have the capacity to infringe the penal law and that age should be at least 12. We believe that setting 12 as the age under which children cannot be prosecuted draws in line civil and criminal practice. Children under the age of 12 are not considered to be sufficiently mature to instruct a solicitor in civil proceedings and as a consequence to have the capacity to pursue and defend civil proceedings themselves. It should be noted that 12 was the age recommended by the Scottish Law Commission in their 'Report on Age of Criminal Responsibility' published in January 2002.

The Scottish Law Commission recommended abolishing any rule on the age at which children can be found guilty of an offence. This recommendation was not implemented as, if it were, it would mean that children under the age of eight could be charged with any offence as adult offenders, albeit they would be immune from prosecution. Given that it is widely appreciated that children under age 8 do not have the mental capacity (mens rea) to commit criminal acts, the approach above has not been adopted. Instead, new grounds of referral are being included in the Children's Hearings Bill to cover all situations where a child is in need of compulsory measures of supervision through the hearing, including behaviour that might be considered criminal if committed by an adult.

Children between the ages of 8 and 12 who commit serious offences will continue to have information retained on the Criminal History System and may have forensic samples (including DNA) retained (under provisions in section 59 of the Bill). These measures ensure that communities will continue to be protected despite a change in practice. In certain circumstances it is appropriate to retain conviction information in order to protect the public from harm. There is a balance to be struck between the rights of children and the rights of communities to be protected. Work is ongoing with ACPOS, the Scottish Police Services Authority and Disclosure Scotland to ensure we can strike the right balance and only retain and disclose conviction information when it is appropriate to do so.

We believe that Scotland has an internationally renowned and envied Children’s Hearings system which already deals with the vast majority of offending behaviour, including very serious behaviour, committed by children under the age of 16. Children’s Hearings consider both the child’s behaviour and the measures that need to be put in place to change that behaviour. Improving the child’s circumstances is paramount so that they can become positive contributors to society once adults. Children’s Hearings have many disposals available to them, including placing children in secure care up to their 18 birthday if that is required. A Panel can also place a child on intensive support which can include an electronic tag. The Panel decides on the most appropriate intervention based on the needs of the child, the support required to change their behaviour and the measures needed to protect the public.

Sections 58-60
The Committee agrees with the Scottish Government that it is sensible to enable fingerprint data and other forensic data to be subject to the same ECHR-compatible retention regime as DNA data.
We are less certain about whether the current provisions in the Bill should be extended to cover forensic data taken from people who are then offered alternatives to prosecution. We certainly would not support any change that would result in the police being required or expected routinely to take samples in situations where, at present, fixed penalties or fiscal fines can be imposed with minimal time and bureaucracy.

However, we also recognise the logic of saying that, where a sample has already been taken from an individual in connection with an offence, the decision to offer an alternative to prosecution rather than institute criminal proceedings should not be sufficient to determine whether the forensic data can subsequently be retained. We would therefore look forward to a Stage 2 amendment that would allow for the retention of data in such circumstances. However, in considering the terms of any such amendment, particularly the duration of retention provided for, we would wish to ensure that an appropriate balance was struck between considerations of consistency and proportionality.

In relation to the retention of forensic data taken from children referred to a Children’s Hearing, we are sympathetic to the broad outline of what is proposed, but uncomfortable with the fact that the Bill leaves unspecified the sexual or violent offences that would enable the retention of data in such cases. We take the view that retention of DNA and other data from children would be required only in a small proportion of cases, probably involving serious violent or sexual crimes.

We note both the evident difficulties the Scottish Government has in defining the list of relevant offences satisfactorily and concerns that the children’s hearing system is not equipped to determine such questions. It would be helpful if the Scottish Government would provide us with its view of the suggestion by SCCYP that retention should only be on application to a sheriff.

The Committee is conscious that the retention of DNA and other evidence, particularly from children and from persons not convicted of significant crimes, can raise issues under Article 8 of ECHR and requires a proportional approach. We note both the suggestion by the Nuffield Council on Bioethics that there should be a presumption in favour of the removal of all records, fingerprints and DNA profiles, and the argument by GeneWatch that DNA samples should be destroyed once DNA profiles have been obtained, and would seek the comments of the Scottish Government on these matters.

We would therefore expect the Scottish Government to report in the Stage 1 debate on its position on these matters and on progress with the forensic data working group and, ideally, commit to providing us with a draft list of proposed relevant offences before Stage 2.
Scottish Government response

When we published our retention proposals for DNA and fingerprints in February 2009, we undertook to consider further the issue of retention in relation to fiscal disposals and police Fixed Penalty Notices (FPNs) issued under the Antisocial Behaviour (Scotland) Act 2004. Since then Stewart Maxwell has made public his intention to lodge a stage 2 amendment that would allow for the retention of data in relation to police FPNs. We understand that he also intends to lodge a similar amendment to ensure that DNA and fingerprints can also be retained in relation to disposals issued by Procurators Fiscal.

We note the terms of the suggestion by the Scotland’s Commissioner for Children and Young People (SCCYP) that forensic data taken from children should only be retained on application to a sheriff. Whilst we are sympathetic to these concerns, we are also clear about what we hope to achieve with these provisions. We have a unique Children’s Hearings system in Scotland where the needs of the child are put first. We do not want to detract from that, but we do want to ensure that those children who have committed a sexual or violent offence and who are at risk of committing further serious offences can be identified as early as possible, to enable the right interventions for the child and the right protection for the public.

While we can understand the principle behind the suggestion made by the office of the SCCYP, we have some concerns about this proposal - in particular, that we would be subjecting vulnerable and troubled children going through the Children’s Hearing system to judicial process. We believe that establishing a separate procedure following the Children’s Hearing to decide whether a child’s DNA and fingerprints should be kept would be stigmatising for the child. It would place this aspect of their case in the court system - the very environment that the Children’s Hearings system is designed to remove them from.

Section 59 of the Bill currently provides that forensic data which is taken from child upon their arrest or detention, who is subsequently referred to a children’s hearing, will only be retained if (a) that child is referred on grounds of having committed a relevant sexual or violent offence, and (b) accepts that such an offence has been committed or a sheriff finds this to be the case. If a child commits no further serious offence, records will be destroyed after 3 years, unless an application is made to extend the retention period and a sheriff decides that the child poses a continuing risk to the public. We believe that what we are proposing focuses on the welfare of the child and the protection of the public. The automatic and initial 3 year retention period we are proposing strikes the right balance. It does not require the Children’s Hearings system to make the decision to retain DNA and fingerprints and it does not subject the child to another process in a court setting. It is the right approach.

The list of relevant sexual and violent offences will be specified in an order subject to affirmative procedure. At present, the Bill provides that the order can only specify sexual and violent offences which are contained in section 19A(6) of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995. The forensic data working group, on which the SCCYP is represented, has made good progress with developing a list of relevant sexual and violent offences that will trigger retention. Although agreement has been reached on most of the offences to be included, the inclusion of a small number of offences is still under discussion. If the full draft list is not finalised prior to stage 2, we will provide details to the Committee of those offences which the group has agreed should be included.

Moving on to the argument put forward by GeneWatch that DNA samples should be destroyed once DNA profiles have been obtained – this issue will also be looked at by the Forensic Data Working Group. It is technical in nature and we must be clear that there would be no unintended consequences in doing so. We can assure the Committee, and GeneWatch, that we are determined to strike a balance between the rights of individual citizens and keeping the people who live in our communities safe, so the working group will give this proposal full consideration.

Section 62

The Committee was unable to reach consensus on the merits of this provision. On the one hand, we can understand why it seems anomalous that a witness, almost alone among those taking part in a trial, does not have access to the statement he or she made at the time the offence was investigated (which may have been months or even years previously). On the other hand, we understand the concerns expressed in evidence about the accuracy of these statements, and the risk of exacerbating a difference of treatment between prosecution and defence witness statements.

We would therefore appreciate clarification from the Scottish Government on its justification for this provision, particularly in view of the strong reservations expressed in evidence from the legal profession and the judiciary.

Scottish Government response

We note that there has been some debate over whether this provision is needed, and the strong reservations expressed in evidence by the legal profession and the judiciary.

Notwithstanding those reservations, we would draw the Committee’s attention to the fact that Lord Coulsfield considered that the provision was necessary after a thorough and detailed consideration of the law as a whole. The Solicitor General also gave evidence in support of the provision.

We are of the view that proper testing of witnesses is valid and important but witness’s evidence should not be reduced to a one-sided memory test, where every minor discrepancy is put under the microscope. This could have an inadvertent, detrimental effect on a witnesses ability to give evidence. The provisions in section 62 will avoid those problems, and in turn, may help to reduce the length of trials by reducing time spent on questioning witnesses on minor discrepancies and allow all concerned to focus on the issues at trial.

We recognise that this provision depends on statements accurately reflecting what witnesses have said. We accept that this is vital and a significant amount of training and guidance for police officers is in place to ensure that happens. In addition to that, by virtue of section 40 of the Bill, witnesses will have seen their own statements at an earlier stage and will have had the opportunity to correct any inaccuracies. These measures should ensure the accuracy of the witness’s statement.

It is not clear to us why the provision would exacerbate a difference of treatment between prosecution and defence witness statements. It is important to remember that, as was alluded to in evidence to the Committee, there are existing measures for the use of these statements, albeit in much more restrictive circumstances than we propose. Those apply equally to defence witnesses as to witnesses for the prosecution. Section 62 will apply to all witnesses, whether prosecution or defence, provided a statement has been taken from the witness. In many cases, the defence witness will have given a statement and, if that is the case, he or she will be able to refer to it. We understand the concern that, in some cases, the defence witness may come forward at a later stage and the police may not have taken a statement at the time of the incident. In such cases, however, prosecutors, when notified by the defence of the details of their witnesses, will attempt to make arrangements for a statement to be noted from the defence witness.

As such, we cannot see that defence witnesses will be placed at any more of a disadvantage at present and that any perceived disadvantage is greatly outweighed by the benefits to witnesses and to the delivery of justice.

Section 63
The Committee understands the underlying rationale for this provision, but acknowledges the concerns raised in evidence that removing entirely the current limits on compellability, and hence making persons who refuse to give evidence against their spouses or partners liable to a charge of contempt of court, risks putting them in an invidious position in certain circumstances. We therefore invite the Scottish Government to explain further its approach in the light of the evidence received.

Scottish Government response
A spouse is already a compellable witness where the accused is charged with an offence against him or her. The Law Society of Scotland pointed out that spouses who are compellable under the present rules nevertheless seldom give evidence. It is clear, therefore, that compellability is an issue dealt with sensitively by the courts, and there is no reason to believe that widening the grounds of compellability will mean this ceases to be the case. Even if extended compellability allows evidence to be obtained only in rare circumstances, however, it will still be worthwhile. Moreover, in today’s modern society, it is not clear why unmarried partners, even those who have co-habited for decades, should be compellable in circumstances where a spouse who had married the accused the day before proceedings got under way would not.

Section 66
The Committee accepts the rationale for this provision, but would invite the Scottish Government to reflect on the drafting in the light of the points raised by witnesses.

Scottish Government response
We are pleased the Committee accepts the rationale for these provisions but has asked us to reflect on the drafting of it in light of points raised by witnesses, specifically High Court Judges (HCJs) and the Scottish Crime and Drug Enforcement Agency (SCDEA).

Both the HCJs and SCDEA have expressed concern about ‘willingness’ in relation to the orders. The HCJs felt that condition D in section 271Q(6)(a) should be amended to read that ‘…the witness would not willingly testify if the proposed order were not made’ since any witness validly cited was obliged to do so. The SCDEA felt that the way condition D was framed suggested that witnesses may be denied anonymity because they would be willing to testify.

While we understand the point made by the HCJs, we do not wish to add the issue of compellability in this context. The policy intention is that a witness anonymity order would be available to witnesses who would ultimately comply and testify rather than restrict anonymity to situations where a witness says he/she will not co-operate. In relation to the SCDEA’s point, condition D comprises two tests – set out in subsections 271Q(6)(a) and (b) – either one of which will satisfy the condition if met. Further discussion with the SCDEA established that their concerns would be met by condition D(b), that is there would be real harm to the public interest if the witness were to testify without the proposed order being made.

We therefore plan to make no changes to this provision which remains consistent with the relevant provisions covering the rest of the UK in the Coroners and Justice Act 2009 (which itself updated the Criminal Evidence (Witness Anonymity) Act 2008). We are, however, considering what changes we might make to the explanatory and policy notes to make these issues clearer.

We have also reviewed all comments made about section 66 by witnesses, including the HCJs, the SCDEA and Scottish Women’s Aid. As a result, we plan to lodge amendments at Stage 2 as follows:

- in section 271N(5)(a)(i) (who is required to see the anonymous witness during proceedings) deleting reference to ‘or other members of the court’;
- deleting section 271N(5)(a)(iii) because of fears that interpreters might be intimidated or compromised;
- amending section 271P(4) (Applications) to make clear that any relevant information which is disclosed by or on behalf of the party before determination of the application must be disclosed in such a way as to prevent the witness' identity being disclosed;

• in section 271R(2)(b) (relevant considerations), deleting reference to the notion of 'weight' in relation to the anonymous witness's evidence;

• in section 271R(2)(c), removing the words ‘sole and decisive’ in relation to an anonymous witness’s evidence, and replacing these with the word ‘material’, to take account of the doctrine of corroboration; and

• in section 271(S)(2) replacing ‘warning’ with ‘direction’ to reflect modern practice.

• considering what changes we might make to the explanatory and policy notes to clarify other issues such as fears on the part of the witness about injury or serious harm to property.

We also plan to lodge a Stage 2 amendment to Paragraph 2 of Schedule 3 to the Bill (appeals against convictions) in order to remove references to ‘unsafe conviction’, which is not a concept in Scots law and replace it with a more appropriate reference referring simply to a miscarriage of justice having occurred.

Section 68

We endorse this provision, so far as it goes, but note that it will create an inconsistency in terms of the upper age limit for jurors in criminal and civil trials. While we recognise that this cannot be addressed through the present Bill, we recommend that the Scottish Government address this through separate legislation at the earliest practical opportunity.

Scottish Government response

We are aware of this inconsistency but, as the Committee noted, it cannot be dealt within the scope of this Bill. We will certainly consider addressing this anomaly as and when a suitable legislative opportunity arises in the future.

Section 82

The Subordinate Legislation Committee (SLC), in its report on the Bill, questioned why the ex gratia scheme was to be provided for in subordinate legislation, when the existing scheme was provided for directly in the 1988 Act. It also questioned the scope of the delegated power, which in its view went beyond what was required to achieve the Scottish Government’s stated purpose for the provision.

Although we explained to the SLC that the order making power was necessary in order to have flexibility in relation to how it gave statutory effect to the ex gratia scheme, the SLC concluded that “no adequate justification had been given by the Scottish Government for the power to extend the scheme beyond that currently operating”.

30
The Committee notes and endorses the concerns expressed by the Subordinate Legislation Committee about the scope of the delegated power proposed.

We therefore invite the Scottish Government either to justify that scope by reference to any changes of substance it might wish to make to the existing ex gratia scheme in the course of putting it on a statutory basis, or to limit the scope of the delegated power to what is required to replicate the existing scheme without substantial change.

Scottish Government response

It is not clear to us why concerns have been expressed about the scope of the delegated power proposed. We believe we provided adequate justification in our written response to the Subordinate Legislation Committee on 14 May 2009 as to why we wish to use delegated powers to provide a statutory basis for the ex gratia scheme. That is, the order-making power will allow that ex gratia scheme, which was set out in a Parliamentary written answer, to be expressed in appropriate statutory terms. This proposal will therefore introduce an element of Parliamentary control which is currently absent. We are not proposing to change the scope of the ex gratia scheme. However, the order making power would permit the expansion or narrowing of the scheme in future, if that were desired. Ministers may in future wish to recognise further circumstances in which compensation should be available, and without some flexibility in the power, the only way to do so would be through the creation of another ex gratia scheme. It is simply not necessary to make the power so narrow and intricate.

Sections 86-88

We support the general policy of clarifying the rules of disclosure, and accept that these provisions are motivated by good intentions. However, we agree with Lord Coulsfield that the way in which his recommendations have been given effect in the Bill is too complex and detailed, and risks losing sight of the underlying principle. We would prefer to see the basic duty of disclosure elevated to greater prominence. The Committee invites the Scottish Government to review, in the light of Lord Coulsfield’s comments, where the line has been drawn between what is set out in the Bill (including provision about schedules of information in solemn cases) and what is to be included the proposed code of practice (or in guidance). We welcome the Crown Office’s commitment to provide a copy of the draft code, and look forward to being given sight of it in advance of Stage 2.

We also note the evidence by the Sheriffs’ Association questioning the need for a distinction between “sensitive” and “highly sensitive” information, particularly when the latter is not separately defined. It would be helpful if the Scottish Government could provide a fuller justification for why this distinction is considered necessary and how it is to be applied.
Scottish Government response
When framing the provisions in Part 6 of the Bill, our thoughts were to set the provisions out in a chronological order, beginning with the definition of what information is, what the early steps in disclosure are (in provision of schedules) and then the duty itself. That said we can see the sense in a different approach which would afford the duty greater prominence and we are considering how best to achieve this and will bring forward any appropriate amendments at stage 2.

On the question of complexity of the provisions, we accept the concerns made and we will seek to amend the Bill at stage 2 to simplify the provisions. While we want provisions that provided certainty and clarity for practitioners, it is not our intention to increase burden or create an inflexible system. So we have looked again at the provisions and we will lodge amendments at Stage 2 which, if approved, will not only simplify the provisions on schedules of information in solemn cases but will also remove the detail on the precise form in which the information is provided. We accept the concerns expressed that such administrative detail would be best left for the Code of Practice or in guidance for prosecutors and the police.

Having said this, as the Solicitor General explained in his evidence to the Committee, disclosure is a complex matter. While we can attempt to simplify how it is presented, the underlying complexity will remain. We are continuing to look at the remaining provisions and, if we are able to identify provisions which could be included in the Code of Practice, in secondary legislation or in guidance rather than on the face of the Bill, we will bring forward any appropriate amendments at stage 2.

We can appreciate the concerns at the absence of a definition of ‘highly sensitive’ within the Bill. The reason for making provision on sensitivity of information was that certain duties follow from the designation of information that is ‘sensitive’. No duties follow, however, from the designation of information as being ‘highly sensitive’. Designation of information into categories such as ‘sensitive’ or ‘highly sensitive’ is an administrative exercise, concerned with the handling of information by the police and prosecutors which would be better specified in the Code of Practice. Decisions regarding materiality will be governed by the information itself and not the degree of sensitivity. The degree of sensitivity however will determine the appropriate level of security clearance required by the person who will view and consider this information within the COPFS. Accordingly it is intended that the Code will include a definition of ‘highly sensitive’.

We consider, also, that defining ‘sensitive’ sets the bar, above which information must be considered ‘highly sensitive’. If the information does not meet the definition then it is ‘non-sensitive’ and results in the crystallisation of the prosecutor’s duty to disclose details of that information, provided it is material and relevant.

We consider therefore that there is no need to define ‘highly sensitive’ or ‘non-sensitive’ in primary legislation.
We have drawn to the Crown’s attention the Committee’s comments in respect of seeing the Code of Practice in advance of Stage 2 proceedings. The Code is a matter for the Lord Advocate but we are advised that it is under development and a copy will be shared with the Committee as soon as it is finalised.

Sections 94-95

This is another provision on which the Committee has not been able to reach an agreed and settled view. We understand the rationale presented by the Scottish Government, but we also recognise the concerns expressed by some witnesses.

However, the Committee is not currently persuaded that there is merit in the proposal to make defence statements compulsory in solemn cases, as it appears that the timing of their production may risk jeopardising important principles of justice. Some further explanation of the Scottish Government’s thinking would therefore be appreciated, including on its reasons for departing from Lord Coulsfield’s recommendations on this issue.

Scottish Government response

The provisions in Part 6 of the Bill as a whole are concerned with making certain that the accused has a fair trial and, to ensure that, everything which the accused is entitled to have disclosed to him, is disclosed. The provision of defence statements by the accused to the Crown helps to ensure that, a view firmly supported by the Lord Advocate when she gave evidence. The Committee will recall, also, the practical examples presented by the Solicitor General in his evidence which we believe reinforce the need for this provision.

The nature and scale of solemn cases are such that the prosecutor’s task in assessing what information requires to be disclosed would be extremely difficult without knowing some information about the accused’s line of defence. Not having mandatory defence statements would risk essential information not being disclosed inadvertently and through no fault of the prosecutor or the accused. A fair trial hinges on disclosure and the decision as to what should be disclosed should not depend on the prosecutor’s best guess, however well informed, as to what the accused’s position might be. As the Lord Advocate explained to the Committee:

‘...in many cases, especially High Court cases, there may be more than 3,000 statements, thousands of productions, and information that is very broad. To understand what might be relevant or of interest to the defence, it is of considerable help—in establishing the rights of the accused to a fair trial under article 6 of the ECHR—to be able to anticipate in what the defence might be interested. It is not just about assisting the prosecution; it is also about assisting the accused.’
Requiring defence statements in solemn cases is the best way to confidently secure disclosure to the accused of all of the information which needs to be disclosed to him and, as a result, a fair trial.

It is also a more efficient and effective way for justice to be delivered. This is not the first time a requirement has been placed on the defence. The accused must, already, provide details of any special defence they intend to rely on. They must, also, notify the prosecutor of any witnesses they intend to lead. We do not think these requirements go far enough, however as they leave significant gaps which require to be filled. The requirement to provide a defence statement in solemn proceedings will supplement existing measures and will help to focus trials on the issues, something which was highlighted by the Solicitor General in his evidence to the Committee. Moreover, revealing the accused’s position to the prosecutor may result in the prosecutor taking a view as to whether proceedings should continue in the public interest. As the Lord Advocate explained to the committee:

‘...we should not waste the resources of the criminal justice system when a defence can clearly be made out. It is in the public interest for us to be aware of that at an early stage. Information that might assist the defence should be made known.’

Sections 102-106
The Committee accepts the case made by the Scottish Government, following Lord Coulsfield, for having a statutory process to allow non-disclosure of information in certain circumstances. However, we also recognise the inherent difficulties in achieving this objective while continuing to secure adequate protection for the rights of the accused. We are also concerned about the amount of detail set out in these sections of the Bill, and agree with witnesses that some of this provision would be better dealt with in subordinate legislation (subject to appropriate Parliamentary control) to allow them to be refined and developed over time.

Scottish Government response
We understand the Committee’s concern at the amount of detail in the Bill in relation to the non-disclosure of information in certain circumstances provisions and can see that dealing with some of the provisions in subordinate legislation has some attraction.

It is vital, however, that the disclosure scheme sets out fully both the procedure and considerations taken into account in these decisions so that there are sufficient judicial safeguards in place to ensure that information is not withheld on the grounds of public interest unless it is strictly necessary. To leave important details to subordinate legislation means ECHR compatibility is only achieved at a later date when Rules are brought forward. We need to be able to demonstrate to Parliament that the scheme made as a whole is compatible. If a bit of the scheme was contained elsewhere this may not be achieved. That said, we are looking again at the provisions ahead of Stage 2 and, if it is possible to reconcile the desires of the Committee with the need for a compatible scheme in primary legislation, we will bring forward any appropriate amendments.

Section 107
The Committee is satisfied that the provision for special counsel in this Bill do not fall foul of the human rights objections raised by the House of Lords in relation to control orders, and are appropriate in the context of a non-disclosure regime. However, we would be grateful for clarification about how special counsel would be paid for, and in particular whether any changes to legal aid regulations will be required.

Scottish Government response
The final details on how the scheme of appointment of special counsel has still to be finalised, including the question of payments. These are administrative details and are not in the Bill. However we can advise that the intention is that the costs of special counsel will fall to the state, not the accused and will not therefore be a charge on the funds available for legal aid.

Section 115
The Committee notes the concerns of the Subordinate Legislation Committee, and invites the Scottish Government to provide a fuller justification of the scope of the proposed power, and indeed why it is considered necessary in addition to existing powers to make Acts of Adjournal.

Scottish Government response
This is the first time that disclosure has been put on a statutory footing. In looking at how the scheme should operate, it was considered that section 305 of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 on Acts of Adjournal wasn’t sufficient for our purposes. What was needed was flexibility to enable the High Court to do everything we think it is likely require to do and more to ensure that the scheme works efficiently. What is proposed in the Bill is limited only to those aspects required to give full effect to the Part 6 provisions on disclosure of information in criminal proceedings. We therefore disagree with the Subordinate Legislation Committee that section 115 is an entirely open power – it is not as it relates only to the disclosure provisions in the Bill.

Sections 117-120
The Committee broadly supports this provision insofar as it implements the Scottish Law Commission’s recommendations. However, we are not yet confident that the proposed special defence of mental disorder has been appropriately defined, given the concerns raised in evidence and the differences of interpretation between Mr Chalmers and other witnesses about whether the special defence would be available to people who know their conduct is wrong, but are driven by their mental illness to do it anyway. We therefore invite the Scottish Government to consider carefully and respond to the points raised. We support the suggestion by James Chalmers that it should be open to the Crown as well as the accused to advance the special defence. We also invite the Scottish Government to comment on the issues raised by the Mental Welfare Commission relating to people with learning disability or cognitive impairment.

Scottish Government response
The provisions in sections 117-120 implement the Scottish Law Commission’s recommendations contained in their 2004 report on Insanity and Diminished Responsibility in Criminal Proceedings. Part 2 of the SLC’s report laid out their recommendations for reform of the law relating to insanity as a defence.

The recommendations, as laid out in Part 2 of the SLC’s report and contained within the Bill, are as follows:

- The common law test for insanity as a defence should be abolished;
- The defence of insanity should be retained as part of Scots criminal law;
- The defence dealing with criminal responsibility of persons with mental disorder should no longer be known as the ‘insanity’ defence;
- The test for the defence should require that at the time of the alleged offence the accused had a mental disorder. The term ‘mental disorder’ should be defined as meaning (a) mental illness; (b) personality disorder; or (c) learning disability;
- The defence should be defined in terms of a specific effect on the accused’s state of mind which has been brought about by his mental disorder;
- The defence should be defined in terms of the accused’s inability at the time of the offence to appreciate either the nature or the wrongfulness of his conduct;
- The definition of the defence should not contain any reference to volitional incapacities or disabilities of the accused; and
- The condition of psychopathic personality disorder should be excluded from the scope of the defence.

Section 117 of the Bill seeks to insert new section 51A into the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995. New section 51A(1) lays out the test to be applied as follows:

New section 51A(1)
A person is not criminally responsible for conduct constituting an offence, and is to be acquitted of the offence, if the person was at the time of the conduct unable by reason of mental disorder to appreciate the nature or wrongfulness of the conduct.

As can be seen, the test does not include reference to a volitional element. In other words, the test cannot be met simply by individuals claiming they were unable to control their conduct at the time of the offence. The test can only be met by individuals demonstrating they were unable to appreciate at the time of the offence either the nature or the wrongfulness of their conduct. Individuals who were able to appreciate the nature or wrongfulness of their conduct, but who were unable to control their conduct would not be able to meet the test.
The SLC took the view this was the correct approach. Paragraphs 2.54-2.55 of their report outlines their thinking:

‘...In the Discussion Paper we were inclined to adopt the position that the test for the defence should not contain a volitional element but we did not reach a concluded view on this point. We presented the issue in the form of a question whether the definition of the defence should contain any reference to volitional incapacities or disabilities. Consultees were divided on this question. However most agreed that the wider cognitive criterion of appreciation would cover any relevant volitional failing. About half of the consultees who responded on this issue accepted that there was no need for any volitional element. Two consultees gave clear support for it. It was of some significance that none of the consultees could provide any example where a person might fail the test for the defence on the appreciation criterion but satisfy it purely on a volitional one. It is also worth noting that the mental health experts whom we met were virtually unanimous in rejecting a category of mental disorder which was purely volitional in nature and which had no impact on cognitive functions.

Some consultees pointed out that a volitional element exists in the current test for the defence in some legal systems (including possibly Scots law). However the existence of a volitional element in the current law can be explained chiefly by the narrowness of the cognitive criteria used in many of the definitions of the defence. We take the view that if the 'appreciation' criterion is to be understood in a wide sense, as we argue that it should, then there is no need for any volitional element. Indeed, there might be dangers in adding on a volitional part to the defence as doing so might give rise to narrow interpretations of the scope of the appreciation element.’

For the reasons outlined in Part 2 of the SLC’s report, and in particular the reasons noted in paragraphs 2.54-2.55, we are content the test is appropriately defined as laid out in the Bill.

We note the comments made by James Chalmers, supported by the Committee, regarding the Crown being able to raise the new special defence. The Crown have advised that they are not persuaded of the need for a power to raise the new special defence as they do not envisage circumstances where they would make use of the power. The Crown have indicated though they will consider any further justification for providing them with this power if that can be provided.

More generally, we note the comments made by the Mental Welfare Commission for Scotland in respect of individuals appearing in court who have a learning disability or cognitive impairment but who do not meet the terms of the mental disorder test. We would expect the defence to draw to the attention of the court any issues of this sort to ensure the court has full disclosure of all relevant information relating to the accused prior to any decision regarding imposition of a suitable disposal in the case e.g. a community sentence.

In addition in the majority of cases where a court is considering either custody or a community disposal, it will ask for a Social Enquiry Report to be prepared to provide information to assist in deciding on the most appropriate way to deal with an offender. The Social Enquiry Report will include information on the circumstances of the offence and the offender's personal circumstances which may include, where appropriate, details of any medical or psychological treatment they are receiving and any underlying health conditions or issues such as an identified learning disability.

We consider therefore that appropriate procedures are already in place and are not convinced of the need to alter legislation in this area. We are however currently reviewing the National Standards for Criminal Justice Social Work and will explore where improvements can be made to the information for the courts in this context.

Section 123
The Committee notes the concerns raised by some witnesses about theft of metals and the implication that a mandatory system of licensing may have a role to play in tackling this problem. We recognise that tackling criminality is only one factor to be taken into account in deciding on an appropriate licensing regime, but we are also uncertain about the Scottish Government's rationale for proposing moving to an optional system of licensing in this area. We therefore invite the Cabinet Secretary to provide a fuller justification of this aspect of its policy intention.

Scottish Government response
Metal dealers were originally licensed due to the concern that their businesses could become involved in criminal activities. It would be fair to state that this concern tends to increase in line with the market price for metal (recently before the economic downturn there had been a significant rise in prices paid). We believe this justifies the need for a licensing system. The flexibility provided by an optional licensing regime has the advantage that as the position of the metal markets changes, it may be appropriate for Local Authorities to remove the burden of a mandatory licensing system on business if they consider it appropriate. We would only expect such action to be taken after a local authority had consulted with the relevant bodies in their area, in particular the Police.

Section 124
The Committee supports the proposal to require all applicants for taxi licences to have held a driving licence for the year immediately prior to their applications. We agree with the Cabinet Secretary that discretion for licensing authorities would not be appropriate in this context.

We also agree with the Cabinet Secretary that provision for sanctions against authorities that fail to review fares within the set period is unnecessary, given existing mechanisms to enable authorities to be held accountable.

While we would not wish to undermine the distinction between taxis that are entitled to ply for trade and private hire cars that are not, we accept that there may be a case for allowing local authorities to limit the number of private hire cars operating in their areas, just as they can limit the number of taxis. However, we agree that this is not a matter for the current Bill, not least because of the shortage of evidence we have taken on this issue and the fact that the Task Group did not address the point in its report.

Finally, we are surprised that the Scottish Government is unaware of concerns about the ability of licensing authorities to carry out appropriate checks on non-UK residents applying for a taxi or private hire car driver’s licence. Members of the Committee have, individually, heard such concerns expressed, and we would encourage the Scottish Government to adopt a more active approach to establishing whether this anecdotal impression is borne out by the evidence.

Scottish Government response

We are pleased that the Committee supports the various amendments included in section 124 of the Bill. These amendments seek to modernise the provisions within the 1982 Act and reflect recommendations of the Task Group that reviewed the licensing provisions of the 1982 Act.

We note that Committee members expressed some surprise that the Scottish Government are, save for the approach from City of Edinburgh Council, unsighted about the difficulties experienced by authorities over assessing the ‘fit and proper’ status of non-UK applicants for taxi and private hire car drivers’ licences. We would merely confirm that it is not an issue that has been raised with us by any other licensing authorities. We can advise though that we will however keep in touch with the Chair of Edinburgh’s Licensing board on this matter (and any other licensing authorities who express concerns) and we are proposing to conduct some research among licensing authorities to assess the extent of the problem.

Sections 125-126

The Committee shares concerns raised in evidence that the potential costs for non-commercial groups to obtain a market operator’s or public entertainment licence might prove prohibitive. We recognise that the Bill gives local authorities discretion over whether to charge for such licenses, but we can also understand concerns that where the power to charge exists, it may in practice be used.

The Committee also recognises the public safety concerns surrounding large-scale events that are free to enter, and hence currently do not require a public entertainment licence. We believe that it is important that community and charitable groups are able to hold small-scale events easily while also ensuring that licensing authorities have the power to control these large-scale events.

The Committee therefore invites the Scottish Government to consider the alternative of basing the requirement for a public entertainment licence on the scale of the event (recognising that this will require authorities that choose to impose a licensing regime also to exercise discretion in relation to the size of events that would then require to be licensed).

In relation to lap-dancing clubs, the Committee is strongly in favour of local authorities having sufficient powers under licensing legislation to be able to control the numbers of such venues in their area – including to the extent of setting zero as the appropriate number of such venues.

We would be grateful for an assessment by the Scottish Government of whether it considers those powers to be sufficient for this purpose. Subject to that, we are not convinced that re-categorising these venues for licensing purposes would necessarily be beneficial.

Scottish Government response

We have considered the argument put forward by the Third Sector and the Committee and, as I announced on 17 December 2009 in Ministerial Question Time\(^1\), we are happy to continue the exemption for charities with regards to market operators’ licences and will bring forward suitable amendments to section 125 of the Bill at Stage 2 in this regard.

In relation to lap dancing clubs, our position remains as it was at the start of transition to the new licensing regime of the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005. It is possible for Licensing Boards to justify through the licensing objectives a policy of only allowing this on a limited number of licensed premises to provide adult entertainment or even to justify a ban on such entertainment on licensed premises.

Such a policy could be set out in a Board’s licensing policy statement (which has to be consulted on with certain parties). Such a policy could continue to be applied as long as the justification for the policy remained. Boards can also set out what conditions such licensed premises must meet should they wish to provide such entertainment. As licensing policy statements are required to be revisited every three years, and as Licensing Boards are able to issue supplementary licensing policy statements at any time (for example at the suggestion of the local licensing forum), there are opportunities to revisit whether such policies need strengthening locally.

Section 127

The Committee considers that there is a case for broadening the definition for late night catering but supports local authorities retaining discretion in determining which types of premises require a licence.

---

\(^1\) http://www.scottish.parliament.uk/business/officialReports/meetingsParliament/or-09/sor1217-02.htm#Col22314
Scottish Government response
Local Authorities will continue to be able to apply a discretion not only in determining which types of premises but in which geographical location will require a licence. This will be achieved through the section 9 resolution required under the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 required to enact the licensing scheme.

Section 128

(Please note this issue was not covered in the Stage 1 report)

Following my evidence session in front of the Justice Committee on 1 September 2009, a letter was sent by the Convenor asking some further questions that were not able to be raised during the 1 September session.

One of the further questions raised was as follows:

‘…Section 128 of the Bill requires applicants to provide additional personal details to licensing authorities when submitting an application. There was concern that these details might be placed in the public domain, rather than only being used by applicable statutory bodies. What assurances can you give on this issue?’.

In our response of 7 September 2009, we indicated that we would expect local authorities to use the additional information provided in the application (the applicant’s date of birth and place of birth) only for the purpose of assisting relevant authorities such as the police in looking into the background of the applicant.

This response correctly summarises the policy intention as to how this additional information should be used. We went on to suggest in our response that no changes were required to the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 (‘the 1982 Act’) in order to ensure this policy intention was met.

However, upon further consideration of the relevant provisions within the 1982 Act, it has become clear that this statement was incorrect. Amendments are required to Schedule 1 to the 1982 Act to ensure that an applicant’s date of birth and place of birth are not included within the notices required for the purposes of a licence application under Part 2 of the 1982 Act.

An applicant for a licence under Part 2 of the 1982 Act is required to display a notice detailing various pieces of information about the licence application. In certain circumstances, a licensing authority must, following receipt of the licence application, publish a notice detailing various pieces of information about the licence application. We intend to lodge Stage 2 amendments to paragraphs 2(3) and 2(8) of Schedule 1 to the 1982 Act to ensure an applicant’s date of birth and place of birth should not be included in either of these notices.
Section 130
The Committee believes that a balance must be struck between the cost and burdens of notification and providing appropriate information. The Committee therefore recommends that the minimum notification required should consist of a summary of what is being proposed along with information on how to view the application in full.

Scottish Government response
We are happy to include the Committee's recommendation of the minimum requirement in the statutory guidance issued under section 142 of the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 which all Licensing Boards are required to have regard to.

Section 131
While acknowledging the concerns raised in evidence about giving licensing boards the power to suggest modifications to layout plans, the Committee is not convinced that this would be a problem in practice. The Committee nevertheless welcomes the Cabinet Secretary's commitment to discuss the matter further with the licensed trade.

Scottish Government response
We note the comments made.

Section 132
The Committee was unable to reach consensus on the merits of this provision. Some members of the Committee considered the current measures within the 2005 Act requiring chief constables to provide an antisocial behaviour report to licensing boards for all applications still to be appropriate.

Other members felt that such reports should only be provided by chief constables if requested to do so by the licensing board or if they choose to provide one, so as to target resources more effectively. The Committee specifically notes that, now that all premises licences are subject to the requirements of the 2005 Act, antisocial behaviour reports are required only in respect of applications for new licences. We also note that the provisions in the 2005 Act allowing a premises licence to be reviewed provide an opportunity for a licensing board to consider any evidence on antisocial behaviour associated with a particular licensed premises, or indeed to request an antisocial behaviour report itself.

While we note the evidence suggesting that antisocial behaviour reports are often not specific enough to aid a licensing board's consideration of an individual application, we do not consider this to demonstrate a problem with the legislation, and is something that should be addressed by better communication between boards and the police on the information required.

Scottish Government response
We note the comments made.
Section 134

While the Committee acknowledges the need for fast-tracking of some occasional licence applications, in light of points raised by witnesses it has some concerns that the procedure might be open to abuse. The Committee therefore seeks assurances from the Scottish Government that the procedure will minimise the scope for such abuse and notes the Cabinet Secretary’s willingness to look again at the provision.

The Committee also recommends that the power to approve such applications should be capable of being delegated to licensing authority officials.

Scottish Government response

In implementing a fast track procedure for occasional licences, we expect Licensing Boards will amend their licensing policy statements (required under the 2005 Act) to set out the circumstances under which they will accept such fast track applications. We will also adjust the statutory guidance (which all Licensing Boards must have regard to) setting out the importance of having such policies in place to avoid fast track procedures being abused.

We notes the Committee’s recommendation that the power to approve should be delegated to licensing officials. However we believe as an ordinary occasional licence can only be delegated to the Clerk of the Board, it would seem odd to extend a power to reduce the level of authorisation for a process where less scrutiny will have taken place and are therefore not in agreement with this recommendation.

Section 135

While generally content with the provision, the Committee notes that extended hours applications might increase the potential for irresponsible drinking.

The Committee therefore seeks clarification from the Scottish Government as to how it envisages licensing boards ensuring they take health and public order concerns into account when considering such applications.

Scottish Government response

Licensing Boards are already able to grant extended hours applications and in doing we would expect them to refer to the licensing objectives set out in section 4 of the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 of preventing crime and disorder, securing public safety, preventing public nuisance, protecting and implementing public health, and protecting children from harm. The provisions in section 135 further enhances Licensing Boards ability to take health and public order concerns into consideration by attaching additional conditions to how a licence may operate during these extended hours.

Section 136

The Committee supports these provisions for tightening the rules on applications for personal licences. We recognise the importance of the national database to make the provision effective, and accept the Cabinet Secretary's assurances about the practical measures being taken in this connection. We also support ACPOS's suggestion that chief constables should have wider powers to make representations to licensing boards in relation to personal licence applications, and would invite the Scottish Government to give this serious consideration.

Scottish Government response
The provisions within the Bill will enable the Police to object to a personal licence on a much wider basis than before but widens the circumstances in which they are able to call for a licensing board to hold a hearing into a personal licence holder in relation to their conduct. We can see no advantage in enabling the Police to comment on a personal licence application if it is not to object to the Licence as the Licensing Boards only course of action in relation to an application is to reject or pass an application.

Wider issues – Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005
The Committee acknowledges that concerns raised on the structure of alcohol licence fees, as defined in the 2005 Act, are outwith the scope of the current Bill. However, the Committee is of the view that there are some inequalities in the present system, including the difference in fees paid by different sized outlets, on-sales and off-sales premises and discrepancies across licensing boards.

The Committee therefore welcomes the Scottish Government’s decision to ask the Accounts Commission to consider these issues and would encourage the Commission to look in particular at the cost implications for smaller outlets in rural areas. The Committee looks forward to receiving the Scottish Government’s response to the Commission’s recommendations in due course.

Appeals - The Committee welcomes the Cabinet Secretary’s commitment to lodge amendments at Stage 2 to reinstate the summary appeals procedure.

The Committee shares the concerns raised in evidence about the procedures for obtaining a provisional premises licence under section 45 of the 2005 Act, and believes that there is a case for modifying these procedures within the current Bill. We therefore invite the Scottish Government to consider bringing forward suitable amendments at Stage 2. These amendments might re-introduce something similar to the site-only application procedure under the 1976 Act while also extending the current two-year time limit for provisional licences.

Transfer of licences - The Law Society of Scotland highlighted a potential difficulty with the 2005 Act regarding transferring licences to court-appointed administrators. The Law Society wrote — “In terms of the 1976 Act [Licensing (Scotland) Act 1976], there was no requirement for the licence to be transferred. The position now is that the administrator would be required to become the premises licence holder in his own right as opposed to as an agent of the insolvent company (and apply within 28 days of their appointment) and may be reluctant to do so.” Asked to comment on this, the Cabinet Secretary said he was unaware of the details, but was prepared to consider it further.

The Committee welcomes the Cabinet Secretary’s willingness to address this potential difficulty and trusts that an appropriate solution can be found.

Scottish Government response
We note the Committee’s comments on the some of the wider issues concerning the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005. As the Committee has noted previously, the 2005 Act must operate in a way that balances the needs of the Trade and protecting the community. The 1976 Act offered seven types of licence so there was an indication for Licensing Boards, the Police and the local community of what was being proposed and the statutory restrictions that would be automatically in place. That is not the case with the 2005 Act where there is a single generic premises licence and it is the application form together with the operating plan and layout plan that enable all to know what is being proposed and decide whether they would welcome or oppose such an operation.

Once a provisional licence is granted the holder has a premises licence in all but name, it cannot be revoked unless when completed it is significantly different from what was originally proposed. We believe this is the correct approach for it would be incorrect for a licence to be removed before a premises began to trade after the investment had been made. Similarly we believe it would be wrong to simply grant a licence or a number of licences (for example to a leisure/retail complex) without knowing what was being proposed as the end result could lead to a rise in public disorder and public nuisance which could blight the local community and place additional burdens on policing. We therefore believe the present balance is the correct one.

On transfers of licences, we believe it is important that there is always somebody responsible for a premises. This ensures that both the Police and the Licensing Board are able to hold those who control the premises to account for its operation. If people are not prepared to take such responsibility or appoint others to do so, then the premises must close. The option is always available for a new licence to be applied for should the business wish to reopen. We believe that local communities deserve and require that protection and we therefore do not propose to introduce any amendments in this area.

Non invasive post mortems
The Committee acknowledges the importance of this issue to the Jewish community and potentially other faith groups in Scotland. However, we are unclear whether an amendment of the sort sought by the Scottish Council of Jewish Communities is necessary to enable MRI to be used where appropriate. It must also be doubtful whether such an amendment would be within the scope of the current Bill, given that the issue of post-mortem examination is not directly a matter of criminal justice.

Nevertheless, since the matter has been raised with us, it would be helpful if the Scottish Government or the Crown Office could give us a more definitive view on whether it supports SCoJeC’s case for a change to the system of post-mortems in Scotland, whether legislative change would be required and, if so, when that legislation might be forthcoming.

We would certainly wish to ensure that a full range of techniques for the conduct of post-mortems is available in Scotland, so that non-invasive methods can be considered in appropriate circumstances. We accept that many relatives will understandably prefer such non-invasive methods where possible, but accept that this must always be a decision for the procurator fiscal, acting in the public interest.

Scottish Government response
We note the comments made.

We would firstly advise that primary legislative change is not necessary to enable non-invasive post mortems to take place in Scotland. Such a change can be done through guidance issued from the Crown Office and the Procurator Fiscal Service (COPFS) to forensic healthcare professionals/doctors undertaking forensic work for the COFPS.

Since the representations were made to the Justice Committee in May 2009, we are aware the Lord Advocate has met with faith groups, including the Scottish Council of Jewish Communities, to discuss their concerns and to explain death investigation procedures.

It should be recognised that non-invasive procedures, such as 'View and Grant' external examination, in association with medical records, are already used extensively in Scotland, which are not available in other countries in the UK such as England. Procurators Fiscal do currently specify in instructions to pathologists the nature of the examination to be carried out. Following the discussions mentioned above, the COPFS are considering the possibility of other forms of non-invasive post mortem examination such as Magnetic Resonance Imaging scans (MRI scans).

The Scottish Council of Jewish Communities have also raised this issue at meetings with First Minister. The Crown Office and Scottish Government Health officials are actively discussing the practical issues surrounding the use of MRI scans for non-invasive post mortems and relevant officials have undertaken to revert back to the Scottish Council of Jewish Communities with the outcome of these discussions.

In conclusion, we agree with the Committee in recognising there is a balance to be struck between meeting the wishes of relatives in respect of the carrying out of non-invasive post mortems in some cases and ensuring that the COPFS are able to properly investigate the circumstances and cause of a person's death.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>SCOTTISH GOVERNMENT STAGE 2 AMENDMENTS: NEW TOPICS</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>DESCRIPTION OF TOPIC</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>BENEFITS AND ANY ADDITIONAL RELEVANT INFORMATION</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>EUFD on mutual recognition to judgements and probation decisions</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Taking an enabling power to implement the European Union Framework Decision on the application of the principle of mutual recognition to judgements and probation decisions with a view to the supervision of probation measures and alternative sanctions.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>We are responding with taking a power to ensure changes to Scots law can be made to comply with the European Union Framework Decision. This will help ensure individuals who move between member states will be required to still undertake any outstanding probation or other alternative sanctions and therefore will not be able to defeat the ends of justice.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Genocide offences</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Altering the current law in respect of offences of genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes in Part 1 of the International Criminal Court (Scotland) Act 2001 so that offences committed since 1991 can be tried (and not 2001 as currently is the case) and clarifying how courts should decide whether an individual meets the ‘residence’ test within the 2001 Act.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>We are responding to changes made to the International Criminal Court Act 2001 by the UK Government in section 70 of the Coroners and Justice Act 2009. This will help ensure those who have committed such atrocious crimes since 1991 can be brought to justice.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Knife possession offences</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Clarifying the law in relation to the definition of a ‘public place’ for the purposes of prosecution of knife possession offences (especially whether a ‘common close’ in a tenement is a ‘public place’).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>We are responding to the (unreported) case of Templeton v HM Advocate (August 2008). This will help ensure clarity of the law in this important area.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Voyeurism offences</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Extend the statutory offences of voyeurism (as contained in the yet to be commenced Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009) to include also the use of equipment to record or observe a person’s genitals, buttocks or breasts either through or beneath a person’s outer clothing, without that person’s consent or any reasonable belief that the person consents, where the perpetrator acts for the purpose of obtaining sexual gratification (whether for his own or a third party’s benefit) or to cause humiliation, alarm or distress to the victim. Also minor changes to correct drafting errors in the 2009 Act.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>We are ensuring Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009 operates effectively. This issue was raised too late to be included in the Sexual Offences Bill and this is the next suitable legislative vehicle.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Procedures for libelling of charges</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Provide that in a single charge in an indictment or complaint it is competent to libel one or more statutory offences under the Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009 cumulatively with each other and with offences at common law as is possible with multiple common law offences.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>We are ensuring Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009 operates effectively. We are ensuring that, following commencement of the Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009, prosecutors retain the flexibility they currently have under common law to libel two or more offences together in a single charge so that the ability to prosecute a course of conduct...</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Human trafficking

A series of changes relating to human trafficking law:

- Extending the definition of trafficking to include the exploitation of children and vulnerable adults whose involvement in their trafficking is entirely passive in nature;
- Increasing the age of automatic entitlement to special measures under the Vulnerable Witnesses (Scotland) Act 2004 from under age 16 to under age 18 for cases involving human trafficking;
- Section 4(2) of the Asylum and Immigration (Treatment of Claimants, etc.) Act 2004 makes it an offence for a person to arrange or facilitate travel within the UK of an individual, whom he believes has been trafficked into the UK for exploitation, where the person intends to exploit that individual in the UK or elsewhere, or where he believes that the individual is to be so exploited by another person. In order to make it easier to prosecute this conduct in internal trafficking cases, an amendment to section 4(2) is being made so as to remove the requirement that the person has a belief that the individual has been trafficked into the UK;
- Creating a new offence to ensure that UK nationals and certain UK residents are subject to criminal sanctions where they traffic a human being into, within or out of any country other than the UK and to ensure that Scottish courts have jurisdiction to deal with these offences; and
- Creating a new offence of holding another person in slavery or servitude or requiring a person to perform forced or compulsory labour.

All of these amendments are either in response to legislation taken forward by the UK Government and/or in response to an European Commission proposal for a Framework Decision on preventing and combating trafficking in human beings and protecting victims. As the Lisbon Treaty came into effect on 1 December 2009 this instrument will be re-tabled as a Directive. These amendments will help ensure we have a comprehensive criminal law to tackle those who undertake human trafficking.

Fraud offences

Creation of two new statutory offences in relation to a) possession or control of articles intended to be used for fraudulent purposes; and b) the making/adaptation/supply or offering to supply an article which has either been designed or adapted for fraudulent purposes, or where the person intends that the article is to be used for the purposes of fraud. Where an individual is found with, say, a card skimming machine in their possession, but no proof they have attempted to undertake a fraud, no offence has been committed though it is clear the article is to be used for fraudulent purposes.

These two new offences will help close current gaps in the law. Following publication of 'Her Majesty’s Inspectorate of Constabulary for Scotland: Thematic Inspection Serious Fraud' in May 2008, an ACPOS led short life working group looked at whether changes to fraud law were needed. They recommended the creation of two new offences based on similar new offences contained in sections 6 and 7 of the Fraud Act 2006 (which does not extend to Scotland). This will help ensure a comprehensive law in relation to fraud operates in Scotland.
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Abolition of common law offence of sedition and leasing-making</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Abolishing common law offence of sedition which consists in wilfully, unlawfully and mischievously, and in violation of the party’s allegiance, and in breach of the peace, and to the public danger, uttering language calculated to produce popular disaffection, disloyalty, resistance to lawful authority, or, in more aggravated cases, violence and insurrection. Abolishing common law offence of leasing-making which consists of maliciously making untruthful statements with the intention of damaging the Queen’s reputation.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>We are legislating to remove redundant provisions from statute, following similar provisions included by the UK Government in section 73 of the Coroners and Justice Act, 2009. This will help reduce the risk of error and confusion.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Granting of common law warrants</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Changes to Police, Public Order and Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 2006 to clarify the right of sheriffs and justices of the peace to grant warrants to Scottish Crime and Drug Enforcement Agency constables. An issue has arisen in a recent judgement which cast doubt on the ability of sheriffs and JPs to grant warrants under common law to SCDEA constables (consideration also being given to whether a wider issue exists with granting of warrants to non SCDEA constables which may be included in the amendments).</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>We are responding to doubts that have been expressed so as to clarify the law in this area to help ensure the operation of an efficient justice system.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Repeal of redundant provisions</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Repeal of redundant provisions in section 24 of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 relating to remote monitoring of restrictions while on bail. Also repeal of redundant provisions contained in the Incest and Related Offences (Scotland) Act 1986.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>We are tidying up the law to reduce the risk of error and confusion.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Minor change to Vulnerable Witnesses (Scotland) Act 2004</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Amendments to section 288C, 288D and 288E of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 (as inserted by the Vulnerable Witnesses Act) so that an accused person is prevented from conducting his defence in person at any relevant hearing in criminal proceedings, not just trials, preliminary hearings, and victim statement proofs.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>We are correcting a small gap in legislation to ensure the law operates effectively in this important area.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>European Union Framework Decision on previous convictions</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Changes to ensure compliance with the European Union Framework Decision on taking account of convictions in the Member States of the European Union in the course of new criminal proceedings.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>We are responding with changes to ensure Scots law complies with the European Union Framework Decision. This will help ensure courts are able to make decisions based on full information.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Retention of forensic data</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Amendments to system of forensic data retention within the justice system:</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>• Confirming a Scottish police force or anyone</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>We are taking forward further improvements to the system of retention of forensic data so as to ensure our criminal law is up-to-date and</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
acting on such a force’s behalf can check any of the information listed in section 19C(1) of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 which they hold lawfully against such information held by anyone else, for the purposes mentioned in section 19C(2) of the 1995 Act:

- Confirming that the Scottish Police Services Authority has the power to process checking of samples from outwith Scotland; and
- Section 19A of the 1995 Act enables the police to take and retain relevant physical data and samples from those who have been convicted in respect of certain relevant sexual and violent offences. Amendments to insert ‘public indecency’ to the list of “relevant sexual offences” in section 19A(6) of the 1995 Act and inserting offences relating to the carrying of offensive weapons to the list of “relevant violent offences” in section 19A(6) of the 1995 Act.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Procedures for giving of evidence in sexual offence trials</th>
<th>We are responding to the HMA vs. Geddes case (May 2008) which called into question the current common law practice in this area. This will help ensure the law operates upholding the interests of fairness.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Provide a basis in law for complainers in sexual offence trials to be able to give their evidence in full in circumstances in which aspects of the assault are not charged owing to a lack of corroboration. This may occur where, for example, a complainer alleges rape, but only indecent assault (or sexual assault under the Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009) can be corroborated.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Establishing the competence of witnesses</td>
<td>We are responding to difficulties that have been encountered in cases where the courts have interpreted the requirement in section 260(2)(c) in opposition to what the policy intent is. This will help clarify the law in this important area.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Clarify that in relation to a prior statement made by a witness, the requirement in section 260(2)(c) of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 to establish the competence of a witness is not a requirement to establish that a witness could understand the difference between truth and lies at the time they made their statement.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>European Union Framework Decision on the European evidence warrant</td>
<td>We are responding with taking a power to ensure changes to Scots law can be made to comply with the European Union Framework Decision. This will help ensure the efficient and efficient operation of the justice system across Europe.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Taking an enabling power to implement the European Union Framework Decision on the European evidence warrant for the purpose of obtaining objects, documents and data for use in proceedings in criminal matters.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sex offender notification requirements relating to homeless offenders</td>
<td>This will help ensure a more robust system for monitoring homeless sex offenders. This will also ensure consistency with the rest of the UK.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amendments to sections 85 and 138 of the Sexual Offences Act 2003 to tighten up the application of the sex offender notification requirements (SONR) in relation to homeless sex offenders who have no fixed</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Issue</td>
<td>Description</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>-------</td>
<td>-------------</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>abode.</td>
<td>A regulation making power will be taken to prescribe how often homeless sex offenders who are subject to SONR will require to report to the police. Under present law, it will be a year before a homeless sex offender subject to SONR is required to report to the police and the regulation making power will be used to reduce this.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Minor changes to operation of system for Risk of Sexual Harm Orders</td>
<td>Changes to allow evidence of previous convictions which are spent for the purposes of the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974 to be led in proceedings for Risk of Sexual Harm Orders (RSHOs) in Scotland.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Prison healthcare</td>
<td>Providing a statutory framework for shifting responsibility for providing prison healthcare from SPS to the Health Boards.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>• Help reduce health inequalities; • Provide better continuity of care; • Bring about long term sustainable and high quality healthcare services with appropriate clinical governance arrangements; and • Scotland can meet accepted international standards for the treatment of people in prison.</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Equal Opportunities Committee: Report on female offenders in the criminal justice system</td>
<td>The Equal Opportunities Committee: Report on female offenders in the criminal justice system recommended that the Scottish Government should consider again whether the health service could take over responsibility of health care in Scottish prisons within a much shorter period than is currently envisaged.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>‘Vicarious responsibility’ for licensing offences</td>
<td>Introduce the concept of ‘vicarious responsibility’ to certain offences under the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Licensing appeals</td>
<td>Reforms to some of the appeal processes in the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Opening remarks from the Cabinet Secretary for Justice

Thank you for inviting us here today.

Early last week, we sent our response to your Stage 1 report on the Bill. We responded to your comments on provisions within the Bill and also took the opportunity to include details of a number of new topics we plan to seek to introduce into the Bill at Stage 2.

Before we take questions, it may help if we take a little time to highlight some key aspects of our approach to Stage 2.

On the matter of the Sentencing Council, we are pleased to see that the Committee clearly indicated its support with our aim of improving consistency in sentencing and recognised the need to tackle the current poor public perception of sentencing.

People have the right to understand why a sentence was given in a specific case; they have a right to know what the judge took into account.

We believe that sentencing guidelines will help to improve public understanding and therefore public confidence in our justice system.

The Committee recognised the merit in the creation of a Scottish Sentencing Council and this reflects the evidence in support of the provisions in the Bill from organisations such as Victim Support Scotland, the Scottish Police Federation, Community Justice Authorities, the Scottish Prisons Commission and the Crown Office.

Your Stage 1 report did set out the concerns from some quarters about the impact of the Sentencing Council on judicial discretion. The Committee concluded that the tension between the separation of powers and the impact of sentencing guidelines should be addressed.
A majority of you supported the idea of a structure in which sentencing guidelines would take effect only after endorsement from the Appeal Court. We have taken this recommendation and entered into discussions with representatives of the judiciary, with a view to taking it forward in a way that answers the concerns about judicial discretion.

Those discussions are still ongoing but we are hopeful of obtaining judicial support before taking forward amendments at Stage 2.

Turning to our plans to introduce the new Community Payback Order, we appreciate and value the Committee’s general endorsement of these proposals.

This new order offers a real opportunity to make positive changes to the effectiveness of community penalties and to increase the understanding and confidence of both the judiciary and the community as a whole, of the value of community based sanctions.

At Stage 2, we propose to introduce a number of changes to make the Community Payback Order more robust.

We intend to add to the existing requirements which a court may attach to a Community Payback order – a new General Requirement.

This will allow the court to make a requirement tailored to the needs of the individual case before them where they consider that necessary to promote good behaviour or prevent further offending.

For example, they might wish to prohibit contact with a particular person or persons, or bar an individual from going to a specified locality.

A key factor in ensuring the effectiveness of this new order will of course be robust enforcement. We will therefore seek to amend the Bill to ensure that in all cases of a proven breach of the new order the court will have available to it, as an ultimate sanction, the ability to impose a custodial sentence.

This will include cases where the original offence would not have attracted a prison sentence.

To strengthen this provision we also propose to increase the maximum penalties for breach of the new order for fine defaulters.

We will also be making a substantial number of technical amendments to the Community Payback Order provisions, many of which seek to place the procedural detail more clearly on the face of the Bill.

As regards the presumption against custodial sentences of six months or less, we are clearly aware of the range of positions represented on the Committee.
However we remain convinced that the presumption – as it appears in the Bill – is the right way to proceed. We are not fettering the judges’ discretion – they will still be able to impose a sentence of six months or less where required.

You yourselves have accepted in your Stage 1 report that short prison sentences do not normally achieve much by way of rehabilitation, and that there is little evidence of their deterrent effect. So we will be resisting the proposal that this provision should be deleted from the Bill.

On Disclosure we have considered the comments made during Stage 1 scrutiny that the provisions are too complex.

We have looked again at the parts of the Bill that have been the subject of comment:

- Section 85 which concerns the meaning of the expression “information” where it is used in the Bill,
- Provisions on disclosure schedules in solemn cases,
- Section 89 which concerns the new statutory test for disclosure and the provisions relating to non-disclosure of information.

We intend to bring forward Stage 2 amendments to meet some of the criticisms on the complexity of the provisions and to delete some of the finer detail in the provisions which, as the Committee noted, might be better placed within subordinate legislation, rules of court or in the statutory code of practice.

There will also be amendments covering some technical changes to add detail and clarification to some of the disclosure provisions following Stage 1 evidence.

We also will seek to make some changes to the Public Interest non-disclosure provisions, associated court hearings and appeals from such hearings. It should be stressed that some complexity here is unavoidable, though.

We also intend to bring Stage 2 amendments which will make provision in relation to the Crown’s disclosure in appeals and post conviction.

Disclosure in criminal proceedings is a complex matter; and we need to ensure that the overall schemes for disclosure and for non-disclosure of evidence as presented in the Bill are both:

- compatible with ECHR;
- and that Parliament is given its proper opportunity to scrutinise the provisions.

Since preparation of the Bill for introduction was being completed in late 2008, there have been a number of developments within Scotland, at a UK level, and at a European level which we consider gives rise to a need to make changes to Scots law.

Turning to the specifics of new Stage 2 topics, we are seeking to make changes to a number of existing offences and also to introduce some new offences.

We are taking the opportunity to clarify the law in relation to the definition of a ‘public place’ in respect of knife and offensive weapon offences.

We are seeking to address an anomaly in the definition of ‘public place’ in the Criminal Law (Consolidation) (Scotland) Act 1995 that allows people carrying knives or offensive weapons on stairs or common landings such as those found in tenement blocks or high rise flats to escape prosecution. Clarity of the law is crucial in this important area and we are taking forward the necessary action in that regard.

Dealing with human trafficking is a priority. Your Stage 1 report sought reassurance from us that we are committed to tackling trafficking issues. Of course, the law is but one part of the picture but our package of Stage 2 measures will help ensure we have a comprehensive criminal law to tackle those who undertake human trafficking.

We propose two new statutory fraud offences to complement the existing common law of fraud. These offences will criminalise the possession of and the making, adaption or supplying of articles which have been designed or adapted for fraudulent purposes.

What this means is that in future, if the police catch someone with, say, a credit card skimming machine in their possession but with no evidence a fraud has yet been committed but a fraud was planned, the police can now charge the person under these new offences.

ACPOS asked us to take forward legislation in this area and we are happy to use this Bill to lodge suitable Stage 2 amendments to ensure we have a robust fraud law.

There are a number of Stage 2 amendments we intend to lodge in relation to three European Framework Decisions – the framework decision on previous convictions, the framework decision on the European evidence warrant and the framework decision on the mutual recognition of judgements and probation decisions.

These amendments will allow the necessary changes to Scots law to be made, either directly in this Bill or through taking enabling powers in this Bill which we can then use in the future to ensure Scots law complies with the terms of the framework decisions.

We need to ensure our justice system operates effectively. Responding to a recent court judgement where doubts were raised, we will clarify the law so as to ensure Scottish Crime and Drug Enforcement Agency constables are able to be granted warrants. We also plan to lodge some other amendments to improve criminal procedure.

We all want a robust system for managing sex offenders. We will lodge Stage 2 amendments that seek to tighten the regime for homeless offenders subject to sex offender notification requirements.

At present, sex offenders, who are subject to the notification requirements, are required to attend a police station on an annual basis to verify the information which they have provided to the police.

We intend to take a regulation making power that will enable Ministers to specify that homeless sex offenders should be required to report to the police at more frequent intervals for the purpose of verifying the information which they have notified. This reflects the greater difficulties encountered by the police in keeping track of homeless sex offenders than those with a permanent address.

As recommended by the Equal Opportunities Committee in their recent report on female offenders in the criminal justice system, we intend to lodge Stage 2 amendments that will provide the statutory framework for the transfer of responsibility for providing prison healthcare from the Scottish Prison Service to the Health Boards. The Prison Healthcare Advisory Board considered this issue very carefully and recommended the shift in responsibility so as to help reduce health inequalities, provide better continuity of care and bring about long term sustainable and high quality healthcare services for prisoners.

This is a Criminal Justice and Licensing Bill. Along with a number of improvements to existing licensing provisions within the Bill, we intend to lodge Stage 2 amendments that will introduce the concept of ‘vicarious responsibility’ to certain offences under the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005. This will ensure premises licence holders can be held liable for the actions of frontline staff. We are including this at the request of ACPOS and will help ensure robust operation of licensing law.

We are pleased that this Bill represents an opportunity to take quick and effective action in response to issues that need addressing through primary legislative change.

We are happy to take any questions you have.

Kenny MacAskill MSP
Cabinet Secretary for Justice
9 February 2010
Justice Committee

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill

Letter from the Cabinet Secretary for Justice

Ahead of the start of Stage 2 of the Criminal Justice and Licensing Bill and further to our informal briefing session on 9 February, we are writing in relation to a number of Stage 2 matters.

Section 28 of the Bill - Failure to Report Serious Organised Crime

During Stage 1, the Justice Committee raised a number of concerns about the failing to report offence in section 28 of the Bill. In particular the Committee sought to ensure that there should be no criminal sanction for not reporting information which people have come across inadvertently and that more allowance should be made to safeguard the position of junior staff who are simply carrying out their job.

In my response to your Stage 1 report of 29 January, we said that we would be taking steps to make it clear that there must be a clear and direct link to such knowledge and the provision of goods and services and that a material benefit has been obtained. On reflection we have concluded that these changes are not necessary.

Section 28 of the Bill makes it an offence to fail to report knowledge or suspicion that a serious organised crime offence has been committed under sections 25 – 27 of the Bill in 2 situations:

i. Where the individual has a close personal relationship with the person committing the offence, in which case the bill already provides that individual has to have obtained a material benefit from the knowledge or suspicion; and

ii. Where the person has obtained the knowledge or suspicion during their employment.

The section is intended to address 2 policy objectives which were identified by members of the serious organised crime taskforce, firstly that partners and other relatives of serious organised criminals are living off the proceeds of the crime and secondly that professionals are colluding with serious organised crime by failing to report their suspicions or knowledge. In both those circumstances we consider it right that individuals should be liable for prosecution if they do not report their suspicions. The Bill also provides (in section 25) a new offence of being involved in serious organised crime which is intended to cover the situation where friends and professionals are actively involved in supporting organised crime rather than simply being wilfully blind to it.

We can assure you we are not seeking to criminalise teenage children of serious organised criminals. Equally we do not intend to capture innocent junior officials who unwittingly stumble across information during the course of their work, although we need to be aware that in some cases it could be the junior member of staff who has a suspicion or knowledge about serious organised crime and we would not therefore want to provide a blanket exemption for this group.

Having reviewed this section in consultation with the Solicitor General we have concluded that as drafted it already provides sufficient safeguards to meet the Committee’s concerns and that no amendments are necessary.

In the case of close personal relationships the Bill already provides that a person is only under an obligation to report their suspicions where they have obtained material benefit. We are proposing an amendment to section 25 to clarify the definition of material benefit. The Committee raised a specific question about liability for a teenage child. As you will be aware the law already provides (section 42 of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995) that any prosecution of under 16s can only take place at the instruction of the Lord Advocate which is a significant safeguard.

In the case of a suspicion or knowledge arising out of employment the section provides that the knowledge or suspicion would have to come about from information obtained in the course of employment (therefore not including information people come across in other contexts) and that they knew or suspected that a serious organised crime offence has been committed. The section also provides a defence for a person charged with this offence to prove that they had a reasonable excuse for not doing so. This may cover a junior member of staff who wasn’t aware of the significance of a particular piece of information or action. It would not, however excuse them where they did have knowledge that a crime had been committed and we think that is right.

Although we are not proposing to amend this section we do recognise the Committee’s concerns about the need to ensure this offence is use proportionately and in a targeted way. As a result the Solicitor General has indicated that the Law Officers will issue prosecutorial guidance which will clearly target the proportionate use of the offence against those in a position of authority in relation to the supply of goods and services and those who have benefitted from their connection with serious organised crime. In addition this will guide prosecutors when the treatment of a person as a witness would be more appropriate than prosecution. Also the Solicitor General is minded to direct that no prosecution will proceed under this section without the consent of Crown Counsel.

We hope this provides you with sufficient reassurance to support this section which will be a valuable tool in our efforts to tackle serious organised crime in Scotland.
Serious organised crime offences – common law of conspiracy

At the informal session, we agreed to provide some further information in this area. There is a difficulty in tackling and prosecuting serious organised crime by using the law of conspiracy. Therefore we need to pursue options to provide further flexibility to the law to assist the procurators fiscal when tackling the important players in the chain of serious organised crime.

There are a number of common law crimes and statutory offences which are relevant to this area of criminality. These in themselves capture particular aspects of wrongdoing but do not provide a sufficiently comprehensive description of the various types of conduct which are to be captured by the involvement or indeed the other serious organised crime offences.

The new offence of involvement will better describe the conduct which we seek to criminalise. It is more narrowly focused on the particular activities of serious organised criminals and so provides a more targeted approach to this particular mischief than the very wide-ranging common law offence of conspiracy. In addition, a conviction of this offence will put on the record that the offender’s conduct was in connected to serious organised crime rather than just badged as a conspiracy.

So while we recognise that there are similarities and indeed an overlap with the common law of conspiracy we do think it necessary and legitimate to take specific action to give law enforcement specific powers to deal with serious organised crime and place such offences on the public record.

That view was reflected in the evidence provided at Stage 1 by the Law Officers who support the introduction of this offence and the other serious organised crime offences and consider that it provides a useful framework for prosecutors. The Lord Advocate provided a useful scenario explaining how the prosecution would benefit from the involvement offence rather than conspiracy:

“we have evidence that does not quite show that the person was at the actual conspiracy stage, rather it relates to their becoming involved in a conspiracy. The person will have set up himself or herself and their business to become involved in that, but we could not get sufficient evidence to show the commission of a specific crime, albeit the generic evidence was available that showed involvement with people connected with money laundering, drug supplying or human trafficking, for instance”

That is one example of a case where the common law crime of conspiracy would have proved inadequate to deal with serious organised criminals, but where the new offence of involvement, with its more bespoke approach, may have filled the gap in the law.

It is also worth bearing in mind that it is not novel for Parliament to make laws to deal with particular social problems even though these problems are already addressed to some extent by existing common law rules. For example, the Emergency Workers (Scotland) Act 2005 addresses conduct which might have been dealt with using the common law on assault. But in that case, as with this proposed offence, we consider having a specific statutory offence places on the public record that the offence took place in a particular context which merits special treatment.

Threatening, alarming or distressing behaviour

We have decided to introduce an amendment at Stage 2 to create a new statutory offence of engaging in threatening, alarming or distressing behaviour. The need for this has arisen in the light of the Appeal Court’s Opinion in Harris v HMA which concluded that some public element is essential for the offence of breach of the peace to be committed. While the Appeal Court’s decision does not affect the majority of breach of the peace cases, which take place in a public place, there is concern that it would make it difficult for the criminal law to intervene in domestic disputes and in other circumstances where the offence of breach of the peace has in the past been used to prosecute conduct where there is not necessarily a public element such as, for example, stalking.

The amendment will provide for an offence criminalising conduct which, either recklessly or by intention, is likely to cause a reasonable person alarm or distress or fear for their personal safety or the personal safety of another person. There would be no requirement for a public element and the conduct could take place with only the perpetrator and the victim being present (or, in fact, without either having been together at the same time in the case of written threats, phone calls, texts, emails etc.) The offence will ensure that the criminal law remains able to intervene in domestic disputes where the behaviour is such as to cause a reasonable person fear, alarm or distress. It will also enable the prosecution of ‘stalking’ behaviour where the perpetrator follows, pursues, spies upon on watches someone, and the circumstances are such that their behaviour would cause a reasonable person fear, alarm or distress.

Increase in penalties for the existing offences of brothel keeping and living on the earnings of prostitution

To the best of our knowledge human trafficking for sexual exploitation in Scotland is exclusively for indoor prostitution. We therefore welcome the Inquiry by the Equality and Human Rights Commission into the trafficking of human beings which will focus on sexual exploitation, and the also the Inquiry by the Parliament’s Equal Opportunities Committee into the impact of migration and trafficking. The findings from both these Inquiries will contribute to the overall picture and help inform the development of a strategy in relation to addressing the issue. Also, the findings will assist in ensuring that any measures required to be put in place are necessary, practicable and sustainable.
Proposing substantial changes to the current law relating to the issue of prostitution could be seen to prejudge the outcome of both Inquiries. To complement the provisions already in the Bill on human trafficking and the closure of premises associated with human exploitation, we have nevertheless decided to bring forward relatively straightforward amendments which will be of practical assistance to the police.

The penalties for the existing offences of ‘Brothel Keeping’ and ‘Living on the earnings of prostitution’ in the Criminal Law (Consolidation) (Scotland) Act 1995 have become outdated and the maximum financial penalty for a conviction for these offences does not represent an effective disincentive to criminality. We therefore propose to increase the maximum penalty for these offences to 7 years (in line with the equivalent English offences) and an unlimited fine. An increase in these penalties is supported by ACPOS.

Section 134 of the Bill – Occasional licences

Further to the matter being raised at the informal session on 9 February, we are grateful for Nigel Don in raising the issue of approvals under our section 134 provisions in relation to occasional licences. We are giving this further consideration including having discussions with Licensing Board officials to the question raised with regards to who approves occasional licences and whether additional flexibility is needed. If following these discussions, there is a need to amend legislation we would intend to use this Bill (either at Stage 2 or 3) in making the necessary changes.

I hope this is helpful.

Kenny MacAskill MSP
Cabinet Secretary for Justice
19 February 2010
Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill

1st Marshalled List of Amendments for Stage 2

The Bill will be considered in the following order—

Sections 1 to 3 Schedule 1
Sections 4 to 18 Schedule 2
Sections 19 to 66 Schedule 3
Sections 67 to 139 Schedule 4
Sections 140 to 145 Schedule 5
Sections 146 to 148 Long Title

Amendments marked * are new (including manuscript amendments) or have been altered.

Section 1

Robert Brown

26 In section 1, page 1, line 10, after <The> insert <primary purposes of sentencing are—

(a) fairness, and
(b) justice.

( ) The other>

Robert Brown

27 In section 1, page 1, line 10, leave out <are> and insert <include>

Robert Brown

28 In section 1, page 1, line 15, at end insert—

<( ) The primary principle of sentencing is proportionality, that is to say, imposing the least oppressive sentence that is consistent with securing the purposes mentioned in subsection (1)(b) and (d).>

Robert Brown

29 In section 1, page 1, line 20, after <seriousness> insert <, nature and character>

Robert Brown

30 In section 1, page 1, line 25, at end insert—

<( ) whether the offender pled guilty to the offence and, if so, at what stage of proceedings the plea was entered or guilt otherwise acknowledged,>
Robert Brown
31 In section 1, page 1, line 25, at end insert—
   <( ) whether the offender was aged under 21 at the time of the offence.>

Aileen Campbell
32 In section 1, page 2, line 8, after <circumstances> insert <(including any responsibilities the offender has for the care of children or dependent adults)>

Robert Brown
33 In section 1, page 2, leave out line 12

Robert Brown
34 In section 1, page 2, leave out lines 13 and 14

Kenny MacAskill
35 In section 1, page 2, line 15, at end insert—
   <( ) an interim compulsion order under section 53 of the 1995 Act,
   ( ) a supervision and treatment order under section 57(2)(d) of, and Schedule 4 to, that Act,>

Kenny MacAskill
36 In section 1, page 2, line 16, leave out <the 1995> and insert <that>

Kenny MacAskill
37 In section 1, page 2, line 20, at end insert—
   <( ) The matters to which a court must have regard under subsection (3) in sentencing an offender in respect of an offence are referred to in this Part as the “principles of sentencing”.

Robert Brown
Supported by: Bill Aitken
38 Leave out section 1

Section 2

Robert Brown
39 In section 2, page 2, line 30, leave out subsection (2)

Robert Brown
Supported by: Bill Aitken
40 Leave out section 2
Schedule 1

Kenny MacAskill

41 In schedule 1, page 140, leave out line 11 and insert—
   <( ) one person holding the office of sheriff (other than a sheriff principal),>

Bill Butler

12 In schedule 1, page 140, line 12, leave out <one person> and insert <two persons>

Bill Aitken

42 In schedule 1, page 140, line 12, leave out <or> and insert <, and ( ) one person holding the office of>

Kenny MacAskill

43 In schedule 1, page 140, line 12, at end insert <, and ( ) one other person holding—
      (i) any of the offices mentioned in paragraphs (a) to (c), or
      (ii) the office of sheriff principal.>

Bill Aitken

44 In schedule 1, page 140, leave out line 14

Bill Butler

Supported by: Kenny MacAskill

13 In schedule 1, page 140, leave out line 15

Bill Aitken

45 In schedule 1, page 140, line 16, after <prosecutor> insert <within the meaning of section 307 of the 1995 Act>

Bill Aitken

46 In schedule 1, page 140, line 18, after <is> insert <such>

Kenny MacAskill

47 In schedule 1, page 140, line 19, at end insert—
   <( ) one constable,>

Robert Brown

48 In schedule 1, page 140, line 21, after <crime,> insert—
   <( ) one member of a community justice authority,
( ) one person nominated by the Scottish Prison Service to represent its views and interests.

Bill Butler

Supported by: Bill Aitken

14 In schedule 1, page 140, line 22, leave out <two other persons neither of whom is> and insert <one other person who is not>

Bill Butler

15 In schedule 1, page 140, line 23, at end insert—

< ( ) Of the judicial members appointed under paragraph 1(3)(b) and (c) above, at least one must be a sheriff and at least one must be a justice of the peace.>

Bill Aitken

49 In schedule 1, page 140, line 27, leave out <after consulting> and insert <with the approval of>

Kenny MacAskill

50 In schedule 1, page 141, line 19, at end insert—

< ( ) In this paragraph, “a member” means a member appointed by the Lord Justice General or the Scottish Ministers.>

Kenny MacAskill

51 In schedule 1, page 142, line 24, leave out <preparing and publishing sentencing guidelines> and insert <submitting sentencing guidelines to the High Court of Justiciary for approval>

Section 4

Robert Brown

52 In section 4, page 3, line 10, at end insert—

( ) promote the effectiveness and optimum use of—

(i) sentences of imprisonment or detention, and

(ii) non-custodial sentences,

by reference to the purposes and principles of sentencing>

Section 5

Kenny MacAskill

53 In section 5, page 3, line 12, leave out subsection (1) and insert—

< ( ) The Council is from time to time to prepare, for the approval of the High Court of Justiciary, guidelines relating to the sentencing of offenders.>
Bill Butler

16 In section 5, page 3, line 12, leave out <and publish> and insert <for the approval of the Lord Justice General>.

Robert Brown

54 In section 5, page 3, line 14, at end insert—

<( ) Sentencing guidelines must be consistent with the purposes and principles of sentencing.>

Angela Constance

394 In section 5, page 3, line 14, at end insert—

<( ) Sentencing guidelines must in particular relate to the sentencing of offenders aged under 18 at the time of the offence, including the circumstances in which it would be appropriate to refer such offenders to a children’s hearing.>

Kenny MacAskill

55 In section 5, page 3, line 23, leave out <include in any sentencing guidelines> and insert <, on preparing any sentencing guidelines, also prepare>

Bill Butler

17 In section 5, page 3, leave out lines 27 and 28

Supported by: Kenny MacAskill

56 In section 5, page 3, line 30, leave out subsections (6) and (7)

Bill Butler

18 In section 5, page 3, line 32, at end insert—

<(7A) The Lord Justice General, on receipt of guidelines prepared under subsection (1), must—

(a) refer the guidelines to such other Lords Commissioner of Justiciary as the Lord Justice General considers appropriate, inviting their comments,

(b) having taken account of any comments made by virtue of paragraph (a), either—

(i) approve the guidelines, or

(ii) refer the guidelines back to the Council for further consideration, giving reasons for so doing.

(7B) Where the Lord Justice General approves guidelines under subsection (7A)(b)(i), the Council must publish them.>
(7C) Where guidelines are referred back to the Council under subsection (7A)(b)(ii), the Council must review the guidelines and, taking account of the reasons given for the reference, prepare revised guidelines for the approval of the Lord Justice General; and subsection (7A) applies to revised guidelines prepared under this subsection as it applies to guidelines prepared under subsection (1).>

Robert Brown

18A As an amendment to amendment 18, line 7, after <guidelines> insert <with or without amendments>

Robert Brown

18B As an amendment to amendment 18, line 11, leave out <Council must publish them> and insert <Clerk of Justiciary must publish them, as approved, under the authority of the High Court>

Robert Brown

57 In section 5, page 3, line 34, leave out <by it> and insert <under the authority of the High Court>

Kenny MacAskill

58 In section 5, page 3, line 35, leave out <publish revised guidelines> and insert <prepare, for the approval of the High Court of Justiciary, revised guidelines>

Bill Butler

19 In section 5, page 3, line 35, leave out <publish> and insert <prepare for the approval of the Lord Justice General>

Kenny MacAskill

59 In section 5, page 3, line 36, leave out subsection (9) and insert—

   <( ) In this section and sections 6 to 13, references to sentencing guidelines include references to revised sentencing guidelines.>

Robert Brown

60 In section 5, page 3, line 36, at end insert—

   <( ) This section is without prejudice to the power of the High Court to pronounce an opinion on the sentence that is appropriate in certain types of case under section 118(7) or 189(7) of the 1995 Act.>

Section 6

Bill Butler

20 In section 6, page 4, line 2, leave out <before publishing> and insert <in preparing for the approval of the Lord Justice General>
Kenny MacAskill

61 In section 6, page 4, line 2, leave out from <publishing> to <guidelines> in line 3 and insert <submitting any sentencing guidelines to the High Court of Justiciary for approval>.

Kenny MacAskill

62 In section 6, page 4, line 4, after <guidelines> insert <together with a draft of the assessments referred to in section 5(5)>.

Kenny MacAskill

63 In section 6, page 4, line 5, leave out <draft> and insert <drafts>.

Robert Brown

64 In section 6, page 4, line 5, at end insert—

<(< ) the Lord Justice General (who may, in turn, consult other Lords Commissioner of Justiciary),>.

Bill Butler

21 In section 6, page 4, line 7, at end insert—

<( ) any committee of the Scottish Parliament for the time being established under the Parliament’s standing orders with a remit that includes the criminal justice system,>.

Angela Constance

395 In section 6, page 4, line 7, at end insert—

<( ) persons aged under 18 who have been victims of offences relevant to the proposed guidelines, and bodies providing support to such persons,>.

Angela Constance

396 In section 6, page 4, line 8, after <persons> insert <and bodies>.

Kenny MacAskill

65 In section 6, page 4, line 9, leave out subsection (2).

Kenny MacAskill

66 In section 6, page 4, line 10, leave out <sentencing guidelines or revised sentencing guidelines> and insert <guidelines and assessments for submission to the High Court of Justiciary>.

Bill Butler

22 In section 6, page 4, line 11, after <guidelines> insert <for approval by the Lord Justice General>.

Kenny MacAskill

67 In section 6, page 4, line 11, leave out <draft> and insert <drafts>.
After section 6

Kenny MacAskill

68 After section 6, insert—

<Approval of sentencing guidelines by High Court

(1) Sentencing guidelines have no effect unless approved by the High Court of Justiciary.

(2) On submitting sentencing guidelines to the High Court for approval, the Council must also provide the High Court with the assessments referred to in section 5(5).

(3) Where the Council submits sentencing guidelines to the High Court for approval, the Court may—

(a) approve the proposed guidelines—

(i) in whole or in part,

(ii) with or without modifications, or

(b) reject the proposed guidelines, in whole or in part.

(4) Where the High Court—

(a) rejects any of the proposed guidelines, or

(b) modifies any of them,

the Court must state its reasons for doing so.

(5) Sentencing guidelines approved by the High Court take effect on such date as the Court may determine.

(6) Different dates may be determined in relation to—

(a) different provisions of the guidelines, or

(b) different purposes.

(7) As soon as possible after the approval of sentencing guidelines by the High Court, the Council must publish—

(a) the guidelines as approved (including the date on which they take effect), and

(b) the assessments referred to in section 5(5) (revised as necessary to take account of any modifications of the guidelines prior to their approval).

(8) The guidelines and assessments are to be published in such manner as the Council considers appropriate.>

Section 7

Kenny MacAskill

69 In section 7, page 4, line 19, after <guidelines,> insert <or to depart from them in accordance with provision contained in them under section 5(3)(d),>
Section 8

Angela Constance

397 In section 8, page 5, line 10, after <may> insert <, after consulting such persons and bodies as they consider appropriate,>

Kenny MacAskill

70 In section 8, page 5, line 10, leave out from <publishing> to end of line 11 and insert—

< ( ) preparing, for the approval of the High Court of Justiciary, sentencing guidelines on any matter, or

( ) reviewing any sentencing guidelines published by the Council.>

Bill Butler

23 In section 8, page 5, line 10, leave out <publishing> and insert <preparing for the approval of the Lord Justice General>

Section 9

Kenny MacAskill

71 Leave out section 9 and insert—

<High Court’s power to require preparation or review of sentencing guidelines

(1) Where the High Court of Justiciary pronounces an opinion under section 118(7) or 189(7) of the 1995 Act, the Court may require the Council to—

(a) prepare, for the Court’s approval, sentencing guidelines on any matter, or

(b) review any sentencing guidelines published by the Council on any matter.

(2) On making a requirement under subsection (1), the High Court must state its reasons for doing so.

(3) The Council must comply with a requirement made under subsection (1) and, in doing so, must have regard to the High Court’s reasons for making the requirement.>

After section 9

Kenny MacAskill

72 After section 9, insert—

/Publication of High Court guideline judgments

(1) The Council must publish the opinions of the High Court of Justiciary pronounced under section 118(7) or 189(7) of the 1995 Act.

(2) As soon as possible after the High Court pronounces such an opinion, the Scottish Court Service must provide the Council with a copy of the opinion.

(3) The copy opinion is to be provided in such form and by such means as the Council may require.
(4) The opinions are to be published in such manner, and at such times, as the Council considers appropriate.

(5) This section does not affect any power or responsibility of the Scottish Court Service in relation to the publication of opinions of the High Court.

Section 11

Robert Brown

73 In section 11, page 6, line 17, leave out subsections (2) and (3)

Section 12

Robert Brown

74 In section 12, page 7, line 5, at end insert—

<(  ) the Lord Justice General (who may, in turn, consult other Lords Commissioner of Justiciary),>

Section 13

Kenny MacAskill

75 In section 13, page 7, line 26, at end insert—

<(  ) any sentencing guidelines submitted during the year to the High Court of Justiciary for approval and of the Court’s response to them,>

Kenny MacAskill

76 In section 13, page 7, line 30, leave out <references made by the High Court of Justiciary under section 9> and insert <requirements made by the High Court of Justiciary under section (High Court’s power to require preparation or review of sentencing guidelines)>

Section 14

Kenny MacAskill

199 In section 14, page 8, line 8, leave out <in respect of> and insert <on>

Robert Brown

77 In section 14, page 8, line 8, at end insert—

<(  ) The purpose of a community payback order is to punish an offender in a way that—

(a) helps to pay back to the community adversely affected by the conduct of the offender, and

(b) supports the offender in addressing the behaviour or circumstances that have contributed to that conduct.>
Robert Brown
78 In section 14, page 8, line 11, leave out  and insert <an offender>

Kenny MacAskill
200 In section 14, page 8, line 11, at end insert—

   <(  ) a compensation requirement,>

Kenny MacAskill
201 In section 14, page 8, line 17, at end insert—

   <(  ) a conduct requirement,>

Kenny MacAskill
202 In section 14, page 8, line 23, leave out <in respect of> and insert <on>

Kenny MacAskill
203 In section 14, page 8, line 24, at end insert—

   <(  ) a supervision requirement,>

Kenny MacAskill
204 In section 14, page 8, line 25, leave out from second <or> to end of line 26 and insert—

   <(  ) a conduct requirement,>

Robert Brown
79 In section 14, page 8, line 26, leave out second  and insert <an offender>

Kenny MacAskill
205 In section 14, page 8, line 27, leave out from <impose> to <imposes> in line 28 and insert <only impose a community payback order imposing>

Robert Brown
80 In section 14, page 8, line 29, leave out  and insert <an offender>

Kenny MacAskill
206 In section 14, page 8, line 29, at end insert—

   <(  ) a compensation requirement,>

Kenny MacAskill
207 In section 14, page 8, line 31, at end insert—

   <(  ) a conduct requirement,>
In section 14, page 8, line 33, leave out <making> and insert <imposing>

In section 14, page 8, line 37, leave out <in> and insert <by>

In section 14, page 9, line 4, after <section> insert <and sections 227B to 227ZI, except where the context requires otherwise>

In section 14, page 9, leave out lines 7 and 8

In section 14, page 9, line 11, leave out <in respect of> and insert <on>

In section 14, page 9, line 13, leave out from <such> to end of line 14 and insert <information about the offender and the offender’s circumstances.>

An Act of Adjournal may prescribe—

(a) the form of a report under subsection (2), and

(b) the particular information to be contained in it.

In section 14, page 9, line 14, at end insert—

( ) Subsection (2) does not apply where the court is considering imposing a community payback order—

(a) imposing only a level 1 unpaid work or other activity requirement, or

(b) under section 227M(2).

In section 14, page 9, line 28, leave out <make> and insert <impose>

In section 14, page 9, line 33, leave out <is subject to section 227M(7)> and insert <does not apply where the court is considering imposing a community payback order under section 227M(2)>

In section 14, page 9, line 35, leave out <in respect of> and insert <on>
In section 14, page 10, line 2, leave out <five> and insert <two>.

In section 14, page 10, line 7, leave out from <and> to end of line 10 and insert—

<( ) require the offender to report to the responsible officer in accordance with instructions given by that officer,

( ) require the offender to notify the responsible officer without delay of—

(i) any change of the offender’s address, and

(ii) the times, if any, at which the offender usually works (or carries out voluntary work) or attends school or any other educational establishment, and

( ) where the order imposes an unpaid work or other activity requirement, require the offender to undertake for the number of hours specified in the requirement such work or activity as the responsible officer may instruct, and at such times as may be so instructed.>

In section 14, page 10, line 16, leave out <or discharge any of them> and insert <, revoke or discharge the order>.

In section 14, page 10, line 18, leave out <in respect of> and insert <on>.

In section 14, page 10, line 20, leave out <five> and insert <two>.

In section 14, page 10, line 21, leave out <Saturdays and Sundays> and insert .

In section 14, page 10, leave out lines 22 to 39.

In section 14, page 11, line 2, leave out <in respect of> and insert <on>.

In section 14, page 11, line 6, leave out <in respect of> and insert <on>.
Kenny MacAskill
227 In section 14, page 11, line 7, leave out from <from> to end of line 10 and insert <imposing a fine or any other sentence (other than imprisonment), or making any other order, that it would be entitled to impose or make in respect of the offence.>

Kenny MacAskill
228 In section 14, page 11, line 11, leave out <in respect of> and insert <on>

Kenny MacAskill
229 In section 14, page 11, line 13, leave out <imposing the community payback order>

Kenny MacAskill
230 In section 14, page 11, line 20, leave out <imposing the community payback order>

Kenny MacAskill
231 In section 14, page 11, line 28, leave out <An order imposing a> and insert <A>

Kenny MacAskill
232 In section 14, page 11, line 31, leave out <in respect of> and insert <on>

Kenny MacAskill
233 In section 14, page 11, line 39, at end insert—

<227FA Payment of offenders’ travelling and other expenses>

(1) The Scottish Ministers may by order made by statutory instrument provide for the payment to offenders of travelling or other expenses in connection with their compliance with requirements imposed on them by community payback orders.

(2) An order under subsection (1) may—

(a) specify expenses or provide for them to be determined under the order,
(b) provide for the payments to be made by or on behalf of local authorities,
(c) make different provision for different purposes.

(3) An order under subsection (1) is subject to annulment in pursuance of a resolution of the Scottish Parliament.>

Robert Brown
81 In section 14, page 12, line 3, leave out  and insert <an “offender supervision”>

Robert Brown
82 In section 14, page 12, line 8, leave out second  and insert <an offender>
Kenny MacAskill
234 In section 14, page 12, line 10, leave out from <and> to end of line 12 and insert <at the time the order is imposed,>.

Kenny MacAskill
235 In section 14, page 12, line 13, at end insert—
<(zi) a compensation requirement,>

Kenny MacAskill
236 In section 14, page 12, leave out lines 19 and 20 and insert—
<( ) a conduct requirement.>

Robert Brown
83 In section 14, page 12, line 19, leave out  and insert <an offender>

Kenny MacAskill
237 In section 14, page 12, line 21, at end insert—
<(A) Subsection (3) is subject to subsection (3B) and section 227ZB(7B).
(3B) In the case of a supervision requirement imposed on a person aged 16 or 17 along with only a level 1 unpaid work or other activity requirement, the specified period must be no more than whichever is the greater of—
(a) the specified period under section 227L in relation to the level 1 unpaid work or other activity requirement, and
(b) 3 months.>

Kenny MacAskill
238 In section 14, page 12, line 22, leave out from <the> to end of line 23 and insert <“specified”, in relation to a supervision requirement, means specified in the requirement.>

Robert Brown
84 In section 14, page 12, line 22, leave out  and insert <an offender>

Kenny MacAskill
239 In section 14, page 12, leave out lines 24 to 41 and insert—
<Compensation requirement

227H Compensation requirement
(1) In this Act, a “compensation requirement” is, in relation to an offender, a requirement that the offender must pay compensation for any relevant matter in favour of a relevant person.
(2) In subsection (1)—
“relevant matter” means any personal injury, loss, damage or other matter in respect of which a compensation order could be made against the offender under section 249 of this Act, and

“relevant person” means a person in whose favour the compensation could be awarded by such a compensation order.

(3) A compensation requirement may require the compensation to be paid in a lump sum or in instalments.

(4) The offender must complete payment of the compensation before the earlier of the following—

(a) the end of the period of 18 months beginning with the day on which the compensation requirement is imposed,

(b) the beginning of the period of 2 months ending with the day on which the supervision requirement imposed under section 227G(2) ends.

(5) The following provisions of this Act apply in relation to a compensation requirement as they apply in relation to a compensation order, and as if the references in them to a compensation order included a compensation requirement—

(a) section 249(3), (4), (5) and (8) to (10),

(b) section 250(2),

(c) section 251(1), (1A) and (2)(b), and

(d) section 253.

Robert Brown

85 In section 14, page 12, line 26, leave out  and insert <an offender>

Robert Brown

86* In section 14, page 12, line 38, after second <the> insert <offender>

Robert Brown

87 In section 14, page 12, line 40, after second <the> insert <offender>

Kenny MacAskill

240 In section 14, page 13, line 6, leave out from <and> to end of line 7 and insert <or—

( ) unpaid work and other activity.

( ) Whether the offender must undertake other activity as well as unpaid work is for the responsible officer to determine.>

Kenny MacAskill

241 In section 14, page 13, line 8, after <and> insert <any>
Angela Constance

398 In section 14, page 13, line 9, after <officer> insert <but must be such as the responsible officer considers provides significant benefits in the area in which the work or activity is undertaken>.

Kenny MacAskill

242 In section 14, page 13, line 22, at end insert—

<( ) An order under subsection (6) may only substitute for the number of hours for the time being specified in a provision mentioned in the first column of the following table a number of hours falling within the range set out in the corresponding entry in the second column.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Provision</th>
<th>Range</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>No fewer than</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Subsection (3)(a)</td>
<td>10 hours</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Subsection (3)(b)</td>
<td>250 hours</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Subsections (4) and (5)</td>
<td>70 hours</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Kenny MacAskill

243 In section 14, page 13, line 33, at end insert—

<( ) Subsection (2) does not apply where the court is considering imposing a community payback order—

(a) imposing only a level 1 unpaid work or other activity requirement, or

(b) under section 227M(2).>

Kenny MacAskill

244 In section 14, page 14, line 6, leave out <total>.

Kenny MacAskill

245 In section 14, page 14, leave out line 9 and insert—

<( ) any other activity to be undertaken.>

Kenny MacAskill

246 In section 14, page 14, line 12, leave out <total>.

Kenny MacAskill

247 In section 14, page 14, line 14, leave out from <amend> to  in line 16 and insert—

<(a) substitute another percentage for the percentage for the time being specified in subsection (2)(a),

(b) substitute another number of hours for the number of hours for the time being specified in subsection (2)(b).>
An order is not to be made under subsection (3) unless a draft of the statutory instrument containing the order has been laid before and approved by.

Kenny MacAskill

248 In section 14, page 14, line 19, leave out <total>

Kenny MacAskill

249 In section 14, page 14, line 19, after <and> insert <any>

Kenny MacAskill

250 In section 14, page 14, line 22, at end insert <beginning with the imposition of the requirement.>

Kenny MacAskill

251 In section 14, page 14, line 23, leave out from <such> to end of line 29 and insert—

(a) in relation to a level 1 unpaid work or other activity requirement, 3 months or such longer period as the court may specify in the requirement,

(b) in relation to a level 2 unpaid work or other activity requirement, 6 months or such longer period as the court may specify in the requirement.

Kenny MacAskill

252 In section 14, page 14, line 36, leave out <sentence> and insert <period>

Kenny MacAskill

253 In section 14, page 15, line 1, leave out <sentence> and insert <period>

Kenny MacAskill

254 In section 14, page 15, line 3, at end insert—

<( ) The court, in imposing a community payback order under subsection (2) on a person aged 16 or 17, must also impose a supervision requirement.>

Kenny MacAskill

255 In section 14, page 15, line 5, leave out <total>

Kenny MacAskill

256 In section 14, page 15, line 7, after <and> insert <any>

Kenny MacAskill

257 In section 14, page 15, line 11, leave out <in respect of> and insert <on>
Kenny MacAskill
258 In section 14, page 15, leave out lines 14 to 17

Kenny MacAskill
259 In section 14, page 15, leave out lines 21 and 22

Kenny MacAskill
260 In section 14, page 15, line 29, leave out <in respect of> and insert <on>

Kenny MacAskill
261 In section 14, page 15, line 32, leave out <such requirements in respect of> and insert <community payback orders imposing such a requirement on>

Kenny MacAskill
262 In section 14, page 15, line 36, leave out <so directs> and insert <makes a direction under subsection (2)>

Kenny MacAskill
263 In section 14, page 15, line 39, leave out <so direct> and insert <make a direction under subsection (2)>

Kenny MacAskill
264 In section 14, page 15, line 41, leave out from <300> to end of line 42 and insert <the number of hours specified in section 227I(3)(b) less the aggregate of the number of hours of unpaid work or activity still to be completed under each existing requirement at the time the new requirement is imposed.>

( ) In calculating that aggregate, if any existing requirement is concurrent with another (by virtue of a direction under subsection (2)), hours that count for the purposes of compliance with both (or, as the case may be, all) are to be counted only once.

Kenny MacAskill
265 In section 14, page 16, leave out lines 12 and 13

Kenny MacAskill
266 In section 14, page 16, line 14, after <and> insert <any>

Kenny MacAskill
267 In section 14, page 16, line 14, at end insert—

<( ) Rules under subsection (1) may—>

(a) confer functions on responsible officers,
(b) contain rules about the way responsible officers are to exercise functions under this Act.

Robert Brown
In section 14, page 16, line 33, after first <the> insert <offender>

Robert Brown
In section 14, page 17, line 10, after third <the> insert <offender>

Kenny MacAskill
In section 14, page 17, line 20, leave out <chartered> and insert <registered>

Kenny MacAskill
In section 14, page 17, line 30, leave out <chartered> and insert <registered>

Kenny MacAskill
In section 14, page 17, line 39, leave out <chartered> and insert <registered>

Robert Brown
In section 14, page 18, line 12, after third <the> insert <offender>

Kenny MacAskill
In section 14, page 18, line 19, after <practitioner> insert <(within the meaning of the Mental Health (Care and Treatment) (Scotland) Act 2003 (asp 13))>

Kenny MacAskill
In section 14, page 19, line 1, leave out <chartered> and insert <registered>

Kenny MacAskill
In section 14, page 19, line 24, leave out <chartered> and insert <registered>

Robert Brown
In section 14, page 20, line 7, after third <the> insert <offender>

Kenny MacAskill
In section 14, page 20, line 17, after <been> insert <, or can be,>

Robert Brown
In section 14, page 21, line 1, after third <the> insert <offender>
In section 14, page 21, line 13, at end insert—

<Conduct requirement

227VA Conduct requirement

(1) In this Act, a “conduct requirement” is, in relation to an offender, a requirement that the offender must, during the specified period, do or refrain from doing specified things.

(2) A court may impose a conduct requirement on an offender only if the court is satisfied that the requirement is necessary with a view to—

(a) securing or promoting good behaviour by the offender, or

(b) preventing further offending by the offender.

(3) The specified period must be not more than 3 years.

(4) The specified things must not include anything that—

(a) could be required by imposing one of the other requirements listed in section 227A(2), or

(b) would be inconsistent with the provisions of this Act relating to such other requirements.

(5) In this section, “specified”, in relation to a conduct requirement, means specified in the requirement.>

In section 14, page 21, line 13 at end, insert—

<Community payback orders: commencement and standards

227VB Commencement of community payback orders

(1) Each community payback order must specify—

(a) if the order imposes a supervision requirement, the date by which the specified period (within the meaning of section 227G) must have begun,

(b) if the order imposes an unpaid work or other activity requirement, the date by which the offender must have begun to undertake the unpaid work or other activity.

(2) At least one of the dates specified by virtue of subsection (1) must, wherever possible, be either the day on which the community payback order is imposed, or the weekday immediately following that day.

(3) Both the dates specified by virtue of subsection (1) must be as soon after the day on which the community payback order is imposed as is practicable.

227VC Standards with which community payback orders must comply

(1) The Scottish Ministers may, by regulations made by statutory instrument, specify standards with which community payback orders must comply.

(2) Standards specified under subsection (1) must aim to ensure that community payback orders (and any requirements imposed by them) are—
(a) capable of being delivered promptly,
(b) effective,
(c) proportionate to the nature of the offence and the circumstances of the offender, and
(d) consistent with the purposes and principles of sentencing.

(3) Regulations under subsection (1) are subject to annulment in pursuance of a resolution of the Scottish Parliament.

Kenny MacAskill

277 In section 14, page 21, line 16, leave out <in respect of> and insert <on>

Kenny MacAskill

278 In section 14, page 21, line 22, leave out <by the appropriate court> and insert <(if different) the appropriate court, and, where those courts are different, the court must specify in the order which of those courts is to carry out the reviews>

Kenny MacAskill

279 In section 14, page 21, line 33, at end insert—

<(8A) Subsections (8B) and (8C) apply where, in the course of carrying out a progress review in respect of a community payback order, it appears to the court that the offender has failed to comply with a requirement imposed by the order.

(8B) The court must—

(a) provide the offender with written details of the alleged failure,
(b) inform the offender that the offender is entitled to be legally represented, and
(c) inform the offender that no answer need be given to the allegation before the offender—

(i) has been given an opportunity to take legal advice, or
(ii) has indicated that the offender does not wish to take legal advice.

(8C) The court must then—

(a) if it is the appropriate court, appoint another hearing for consideration of the alleged failure in accordance with section 227ZB, or
(b) if it is not the appropriate court, refer the alleged failure to that court for consideration in accordance with that section.>

Kenny MacAskill

280 In section 14, page 22, line 2, leave out <in respect of> and insert <on>

Kenny MacAskill

281 In section 14, page 22, line 5, leave out <proposes to vary, revoke or discharge> and insert <is considering varying, revoking or discharging>
Kenny MacAskill

282 In section 14, page 22, line 6, leave out <under section 227W(9) or 227X(1)> and insertimposed on an offender>

Kenny MacAskill

283 In section 14, page 22, line 9, at end insert—

<(  ) Subsection (2) does not apply where the court is considering varying the order under section 227ZB(5)(c).>}

Kenny MacAskill

284 In section 14, page 22, line 13, at end insert—

<(  ) include provision for progress reviews under section 227W,(  ) where the order already includes such provision, vary that provision.>}

Kenny MacAskill

285 In section 14, page 22, line 18, leave out <total>

Robert Brown

93 In section 14, page 22, line 19, leave out first  and insert <an offender>

Kenny MacAskill

286 In section 14, page 22, line 19, leave out from <supervision> to <227H> in line 20 and insert<compensation requirement>

Kenny MacAskill

287 In section 14, page 22, leave out lines 22 to 24

Kenny MacAskill

288 In section 14, page 22, line 25, leave out <total>

Kenny MacAskill

289 In section 14, page 22, line 26, leave out from <maximum> to end of line 27 and insert<appropriate maximum.

(  ) The appropriate maximum is the number of hours specified in section 227I(3)(b) at the time the unpaid work or other activity requirement being varied was imposed less the aggregate of the number of hours of unpaid work or other activity still to be completed under each other unpaid work or other activity requirement (if any) in effect in respect of the offender at the time of the variation (a “current requirement”).
( ) In calculating that aggregate, if any current requirement is concurrent with another (by virtue of a direction under section 227N(2)), hours that count for the purposes of compliance with both (or, as the case may be, all) are to be counted only once.

Kenny MacAskill

290 In section 14, page 22, line 27, at end insert—

<( ) The court may not, under subsection (4)(c), increase the amount of compensation beyond the maximum that could have been awarded at the time the requirement was imposed.>

Kenny MacAskill

291 In section 14, page 22, line 28, leave out <in> and insert <by>

Kenny MacAskill

292 In section 14, page 22, line 35, at end insert—

<( ) Subsection (8) applies in relation to a community payback order imposed under section 227M(2) as if the reference to the offence in relation to which the order was imposed were a reference to the failure to pay in respect of which the order was imposed.>

Kenny MacAskill

293 In section 14, page 22, line 36, leave out <proposes to vary, revoke or discharge> and insert <is considering varying, revoking or discharging>

Kenny MacAskill

294 In section 14, page 22, line 39, after <227W(6)> insert <or 227ZB(2)(b)>

Kenny MacAskill

295 In section 14, page 23, line 5, leave out <in respect of> and insert <imposed on>

Kenny MacAskill

296 In section 14, page 23, line 7, leave out from <such> to end of line 8 and insert <information about the offender and the offender’s circumstances.>

( ) An Act of Adjournal may prescribe—

(a) the form of a report under subsection (2), and

(b) the particular information to be contained in it.

Kenny MacAskill

297 In section 14, page 23, line 8, at end insert—

<( ) Subsection (2) does not apply where the court is considering varying a community payback order—>
(a) which imposes only a level 1 unpaid work or other activity requirement, or
(b) imposed under section 227M(2).>

Kenny MacAskill

298 In section 14, page 23, line 21, leave out <under section 227W for it to be reviewed> and insert <for a progress review under section 227W>

Kenny MacAskill

299 In section 14, page 23, line 31, leave out <in> and insert <by>

Kenny MacAskill

300 In section 14, page 23, line 32, leave out <made> and insert <imposed>

Kenny MacAskill

301 In section 14, page 23, line 36, leave out <in> and insert <by>

Kenny MacAskill

302 In section 14, page 23, line 36, leave out <made> and insert <imposed>

Kenny MacAskill

303 In section 14, page 23, line 36, at end insert—

<( ) Subsection (6)(a) does not prevent the imposition of a restricted movement requirement under section 227ZB(5)(c).
( ) In determining for the purpose of subsection (6)(a) whether an unpaid work or other activity requirement is a requirement that could have been imposed by the order when the order was imposed, the effect of section 227N(6) is to be ignored.>

Kenny MacAskill

304 In section 14, page 23, line 39, leave out second <in> and insert <by>

Kenny MacAskill

305 In section 14, page 23, line 40, leave out <made> and insert <imposed>

Kenny MacAskill

306 In section 14, page 23, line 40, at end insert—

<( ) Subsections (4) and (5) of section 227E apply, with the necessary modifications, where a community payback order is varied as they apply where such an order is imposed.>
Kenny MacAskill

307 In section 14, page 24, line 3, leave out <in respect of> and insert <on>

Kenny MacAskill

308 In section 14, page 24, line 3, leave out <is in force> and insert <has been imposed>

Kenny MacAskill

309 In section 14, page 24, line 7, leave out from <an> to <varied> in line 8 and insert <the court is considering varying the order>

Kenny MacAskill

310 In section 14, page 24, line 10, leave out <as proposed in the application>

Kenny MacAskill

311 In section 14, page 24, line 14, leave out <as proposed in the application>

Kenny MacAskill

312 In section 14, page 24, line 21, leave out <in respect of> and insert <on>

Kenny MacAskill

313 In section 14, page 24, line 22, leave out <in> and insert <by>

Kenny MacAskill

314 In section 14, page 24, line 30, at end insert—

<(4A) The court must, before considering the alleged failure—
(a) provide the offender with written details of the alleged failure,
(b) inform the offender that the offender is entitled to be legally represented, and
(c) inform the offender that no answer need be given to the allegation before the offender—
   (i) has been given an opportunity to take legal advice, or
   (ii) has indicated that the offender does not wish to take legal advice.

(4B) Subsection (4A) does not apply if the offender has previously been provided with those details and informed about those matters under section 227W(8B) of this Act.>

Kenny MacAskill

315 In section 14, page 24, line 34, at beginning insert <where the order was imposed under section 227A(1),>
Kenny MacAskill
316 In section 14, page 24, line 36, at end insert—

(ba) where the order was imposed under section 227A(4), revoke the order and impose on the offender a sentence of imprisonment for a term not exceeding—

(i) where the court is a justice of the peace court, 60 days,

(ii) in any other case, 3 months,

(bb) where the order was imposed under section 227M(2), revoke the order and impose on the offender a period of imprisonment for a term not exceeding—

(i) where the court is a justice of the peace court, 60 days,

(ii) in any other case, 3 months,

Kenny MacAskill
317 In section 14, page 24, line 38, after <or> insert <revoke or>

Kenny MacAskill
318 In section 14, page 24, line 38, at end insert <, or

( ) both impose a fine under paragraph (a) and vary the order under paragraph (c).>

Kenny MacAskill
319 In section 14, page 24, line 38, at end insert—

(5A) Where the court revokes a community payback order under subsection (5)(b) or (ba) and the offender is, in respect of the same offence, also subject to—

(a) a drug treatment and testing order, by virtue of section 234J, or

(b) a restriction of liberty order, by virtue of section 245D(3),

the court must, before dealing with the offender under subsection (5)(b) or (ba), revoke the drug treatment and testing order or, as the case may be, restriction of liberty order.>

Kenny MacAskill
320 In section 14, page 24, line 38, at end insert—

( ) If the court is satisfied that the offender has failed to comply with a requirement imposed by the order but had a reasonable excuse for the failure, the court may, subject to section 227Y(2), vary the order so as to impose a new requirement, vary any requirement imposed by the order or revoke or discharge any requirement imposed by the order.>

Kenny MacAskill
321 In section 14, page 25, line 1, leave out <imposes> and insert <varies the order so as to impose>
Robert Brown

94 In section 14, page 25, line 2, leave out first  and insert <an offender>

Robert Brown

95 In section 14, page 25, line 2, leave out second  and insert <an offender>

Kenny MacAskill

322 In section 14, page 25, line 3, at end insert—

<(7A) The court must ensure that the specified period under section 227G in relation to the supervision requirement is at least as long as the period for which the restricted movement requirement has effect and, where the community payback order already imposes a supervision requirement, must vary it accordingly, if necessary.>

<(7B) The minimum period of 6 months in section 227G(3) does not apply in relation to a supervision requirement imposed under subsection (7).>}

Kenny MacAskill

323 In section 14, page 25, leave out lines 8 to 11

Robert Brown

96 In section 14, page 25, line 10, after second <the> insert <offender>

Kenny MacAskill

324 In section 14, page 25, leave out lines 19 to 24

Kenny MacAskill

325 In section 14, page 25, line 24, at end insert—

<( ) Subsections (5)(b) and (ba) and (5A) are subject to section 42(9) of the Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 2003 (asp 7) (powers of drugs courts to deal with breach of community payback orders).>}

Kenny MacAskill

326 In section 14, page 25, leave out lines 26 to 32

Robert Brown

97 In section 14, page 25, line 36, leave out second  and insert <an offender>

Kenny MacAskill

327 In section 14, page 25, line 37, leave out from <supervision> to end of line 38 and insert <compensation requirement.>
In section 14, page 26, line 14, leave out from <A> to <offender> and insert <In imposing a restricted movement requirement containing provision under subsection (2)(a), the court must ensure that the offender is not required, either by the requirement alone or the requirement taken together with any other relevant requirement or order,>

In section 14, page 26, line 15, at end insert—

<(  ) In subsection (3), “other relevant requirement or order” means—

(a) any other restricted movement requirement in effect in respect of the offender at the time the court is imposing the requirement referred to in subsection (3), and

(b) any restriction of liberty order under section 245A in effect in respect of the offender at that time.>

In section 14, page 26, line 18, leave out <of not more than 12 months>

In section 14, page 26, line 18, at end insert—

<(4A) The period specified under subsection (4)(b) must be—

(a) not less than 14 days, and

(b) subject to subsections (4B) and (4C), not more than 12 months.

(4B) Subsection (4C) applies in the case of a restricted movement requirement imposed for failure to comply with a requirement of a community payback order—

(a) where the offender was under 18 years of age at the time the order was imposed, or

(b) where the only requirement imposed by the order is a level 1 unpaid work or other activity requirement.

(4C) The period specified under subsection (4)(b) must be not more than—

(a) where the order was imposed by a justice of the peace court, 60 days, or

(b) in any other case, 3 months.>

In section 14, page 26, line 28, leave out <(4)(b)> and insert <(4A)(b)>

In section 14, page 27, line 11, leave from <an> to <varied> in line 12 and insert <the court is considering varying the requirement>
Kenny MacAskill

334 In section 14, page 27, line 14, leave out <proposed in the application>

Kenny MacAskill

335 In section 14, page 27, line 20, leave out <proposed in the application>

Kenny MacAskill

336 In section 14, page 27, line 34, leave out <in respect of> and insert <on>

Kenny MacAskill

337 In section 14, page 28, line 19, after <person> insert <and to the responsible officer>

Kenny MacAskill

338 In section 14, page 28, line 24, leave out <in respect of> and insert <on>

Robert Brown

98 In section 14, page 29, line 3, after <consult> insert—

(a) persons or organisations representing victims of crime,
(b) community councils established in their area, and
(c)

Kenny MacAskill

339 In section 14, page 29, line 5, leave out <in respect of> and insert <on>

Robert Brown

99 In section 14, page 29, line 11, at end insert—

<Annual reports on community payback orders

227ZJA Annual reports on community payback orders

(1) Each local authority must, as soon as practicable after the end of each reporting year, publish a report on the operation of community payback orders within their area during that reporting year.

(2) A report under subsection (1) must specify—

(a) in relation to unpaid work or other activity under section 227I—

(i) the number of offenders undertaking the unpaid work or other activity,
(ii) the total number of hours of unpaid work or other activity undertaken,
(iii) the nature of the unpaid work or other activity undertaken,
(iv) the cost of organising and managing the unpaid work or other activity, and the estimated value of that work and activity,
(b) in relation to programmes under section 227P—
   (i) the number of offenders participating in the programmes,
   (ii) the number and nature of those programmes,
   (iii) the cost of providing those programmes.

(3) The Scottish Ministers must, as soon as practicable after the end of each reporting year, lay before the Scottish Parliament and publish a report on the operation of community payback orders during that reporting year.

(4) A report under subsection (3) must—
   (a) collate and summarise the data included in the various reports under subsection (1),
   (b) provide an assessment of the overall costs and effectiveness of community payback orders.

(5) In this section, “reporting year” means—
   (a) the period of 12 months beginning on the day this section comes into force, or
   (b) any subsequent period of 12 months beginning on an anniversary of that day.

Kenny MacAskill
340 In section 14, page 29, line 23, leave out <(1)(b)> and insert <(1)>

Kenny MacAskill
341 In section 14, page 29, line 24, leave out <the order imposing>

Kenny MacAskill
342 In section 14, page 29, line 25, at end insert—
   <(2) Schedule (Community payback orders: consequential modifications) modifies enactments in consequence of this section.>

After schedule 1

Kenny MacAskill
343 After schedule 1, insert—
<SCHEDULE
(introduced by section 14(2))

COMMUNITY PAYBACK ORDERS: CONSEQUENTIAL MODIFICATIONS

PART 1

The 1995 Act

The 1995 Act is amended as follows.

1 In section 52H(3) (early termination of assessment order), the following are repealed—
   (a) the word “or” immediately following paragraph (e), and
   (b) paragraph (f).

2 In section 52R(3) (termination of treatment order), the following are repealed—
   (a) the word “or” immediately following paragraph (e), and
   (b) paragraph (f).

3 In section 53(12)(a) (interim compulsion orders), for sub-paragraphs (vi) and (vii) substitute—
   “(vi) impose a community payback order;
   (vii) make a drug treatment and testing order; or
   (viii) make a restriction of liberty order.”.

4 In section 57A(15)(a) (compulsion order), for sub-paragraphs (vi) and (vii) substitute—
   “(vi) impose a community payback order;
   (vii) make a drug treatment and testing order; or
   (viii) make a restriction of liberty order.”.

5 In section 58(8) (order for hospital admission or guardianship), for “make a probation order or a community service order” substitute “impose a community payback order or make a drug treatment and testing order”.

6 In section 106(1) (right of appeal), for paragraph (d) substitute—
   “(d) against any drug treatment and testing order.”.

7 In section 108 (Lord Advocate’s right of appeal against disposal)—
   (a) in subsection (1), paragraphs (d) and (e) are repealed, and
   (b) in subsection (2)(b)(iii), for “(d) to (e)” substitute “(dd)”.

8 In section 121A(4) (suspension of certain sentences pending determination of appeal), for paragraphs (a) to (c) substitute—
   “(aa) a community payback order;”.

9 In section 175 (right of appeal)—
   (a) in subsection (2)(c), for “probation order, drug treatment and testing order or any community service order” substitute “drug treatment and testing order”,
   (b) in subsection (4), paragraphs (d) and (e) are repealed, and
   (c) in subsection (4A)(b)(iii), for “(d) to (e)” substitute “(dd)”.
In section 193A(4) (suspension of certain sentences pending determination of appeal)—
(a) for paragraphs (a) to (c) substitute—
“(aa) a community payback order;”, and
(b) paragraph (c) is repealed.

Sections 228 to 234 (probation) are repealed.

In section 234H (disposal on revocation of drug treatment and testing order)—
(a) in subsection (1), for “drugs” substitute “drug”, and
(b) in subsection (3), for the words from “subject to” where they first occur to the end substitute “, in respect of the same offence, also subject to a community payback order, by virtue of section 234J, or a restriction of liberty order, by virtue of section 245D, the court shall, before disposing of the offender under subsection (1) above, revoke the community payback order or restriction of liberty order (as the case may be).”.

Section 234J (concurrent drug treatment and testing and probation orders) is amended as follows.

(a) for “sections 228(1) and” substitute “section”, and
(b) for “probation order” substitute “community payback order”.

In subsection (3)—
(a) for “probation order” substitute “community payback order”, and
(b) for paragraphs (b) and (c) substitute—
“(ba) the local authority within whose area the offender will reside for the duration of each order.”.

(4) In subsection (4)—
(a) in paragraph (a), for “probation order and is dealt with under section 232(2)(c)” substitute “community payback order and is dealt with under section 227ZB(5)(c)”, and
(b) in paragraph (b), for “232(2)(c) of this Act in relation to the probation order” substitute “227ZB(5)(c) of this Act in relation to the community payback order”.

In subsection (5)—
(a) for “probation order” substitute “community payback order”, and
(b) for “232(2)” substitute “227ZB(5)”. Sections 235 to 245 (supervised attendance orders and community service orders) are repealed.

Section 245A (restriction of liberty orders) is amended as follows.

(a) for “sections 228(1) and” substitute “section”, and
(b) for “probation order” substitute “community payback order”.

In subsection (3)—
(a) for “probation order” substitute “community payback order”, and
(b) for “232(2)” substitute “227ZB(5)”. Sections 235 to 245 (supervised attendance orders and community service orders) are repealed.

Section 245A (restriction of liberty orders) is amended as follows.

(a) for “sections 228(1) and” substitute “section”, and
(b) for “probation order” substitute “community payback order”.

In subsection (3)—
(a) for “probation order” substitute “community payback order”, and
(b) for “232(2)” substitute “227ZB(5)”. Sections 235 to 245 (supervised attendance orders and community service orders) are repealed.
“(2A) In making a restriction of liberty order containing provision under subsection (2)(a), the court must ensure that the offender is not required, either by the order alone or the order taken together with any other relevant order or requirement, to be in any place or places for a period or periods totalling more than 12 hours in any one day.

(2B) In subsection (2A), “other relevant order or requirement” means—

(a) any other restriction of liberty order in effect in respect of the offender at the time the court is making the order referred to in subsection (2A), and

(b) any restricted movement requirement under section 227ZD in effect in respect of the offender at that time.”.

(4) In subsection (12)(a), for “subsection (2)” substitute “subsection (2A)”.

17 (1) Section 245D (combination of restriction of liberty orders with other orders) is amended as follows.

(2) In subsection (1)(b)—

(a) in sub-paragraph (i), for “probation order made under section 228(1)” substitute “community payback order imposed under section 227A(1)”, and

(b) in sub-paragraph (ii)—

(i) for “probation order made under section 228(1) of this Act,” substitute “community payback order imposed under section 227A(1) of this Act or”, and

(ii) the words “or both such orders” are repealed.

(3) In subsection (2), for “probation order” substitute “community payback order”.

(4) In subsection (3)—

(a) the word “228(1),” is repealed,

(b) in paragraph (a), for “probation order” substitute “community payback order”, and

(c) in paragraph (b), for “either or both of a probation order and” substitute “either a community payback order or”.

(5) In subsection (4)—

(a) for “probation order” substitute “community payback order”, and

(b) for paragraph (b) substitute—

“(b) the local authority within whose area the offender will reside for the duration of each order.”.

(6) Subsection (6) is repealed.

(7) In subsection (7)—

(a) in paragraph (a)—

(i) for “contained in a probation order and is dealt with under section 232(2)(c)” substitute “imposed by a community payback order and is dealt with under section 227ZB(5)(c),” and

(ii) the words from “234G(2)(b)” to “section” where it third occurs are repealed,
(b) in paragraph (b), the words from “232(2)(c)” to “section” where it third occurs are repealed, and

(c) in paragraph (c), for “232(2)(c) of this Act in relation to a probation order” substitute “227ZB(5)(c) of this Act in relation to a community payback order”.

(8) In subsection (8), for “232(2)” substitute “227ZB”.

(9) In subsection (9)—

(a) in paragraph (a), for “probation order” substitute “community payback order”, and

(b) paragraph (c) is repealed.

18 (1) Section 245G (disposal on revocation of restriction of liberty order) is amended as follows.

(2) In subsection (2), for the words from “by virtue” to the end substitute “in respect of the same offence, also subject to a community payback order or a drug treatment and testing order, by virtue of section 245D(3), it shall before disposing of the offender under subsection (1) above, revoke the community payback order or drug treatment and testing order.”.

(3) In subsection (3), for “probation order discharged” substitute “community payback order”.

(4) Subsection (4) is repealed.

19 In section 245J (breach of certain orders: adjourning hearing and remanding in custody etc.)—

(a) in subsection (1)—

(i) for “a probationer or” substitute “an”,

(ii) for “probation order” substitute “community payback order”, and

(iii) the words “supervised attendance order, community service order” are repealed,

(b) in subsection (2), the words “probationer or” are repealed, and

(c) in subsection (4), for “A probationer or” substitute “An”.

20 Sections 245K to 245Q (community reparation orders) are repealed.

21 In section 246 (admonition and absolute discharge), in each of subsections (2) and (3), the words “and that a probation order is not appropriate” are repealed.

22 In section 249(2) (compensation order against convicted person), for paragraph (b) substitute—

“(ab) where, under section 227A of this Act, it imposes a community payback order;”.

23 In section 307 (interpretation)—

(a) in subsection (1)—

(i) insert at the appropriate places—

““alcohol treatment requirement” has the meaning given in section 227V(1);”
““community payback order” means a community payback order (within the meaning of section 227A(2)) imposed under section 227A(1) or (4) or 227M(2);”

““compensation requirement” has the meaning given in section 227H(1);”

““conduct requirement” has the meaning given in section 227VA(1);”

““drug treatment requirement” has the meaning given in section 227U(1);”

““mental health treatment requirement” has the meaning given in section 227R(1);”

““programme requirement” has the meaning given in section 227P(1);”

““residence requirement” has the meaning given in section 227Q(1);”

““responsible officer”, in relation to a community payback order, is to be construed in accordance with section 227C;”

““restricted movement requirement” has the meaning given in section 227ZD(1);”

““supervision requirement” has the meaning given in section 227G(1);”

““unpaid work or other activity requirement” has the meaning given in section 227I(1), and “level 1 unpaid work or other activity requirement” and “level 2 unpaid work or other activity requirement” are to be construed in accordance with section 227I(4) and (5) respectively;”, and

(ii) the definitions of the following terms are repealed—

“appropriate court”
“community service order”
“probationer”
“probation order”
“probation period”, and

(b) subsection (3) is repealed.

24 Schedules 6 and 7 are repealed.

PART 2

OTHER ENACTMENTS

The Social Work (Scotland) Act 1968 (c.49)

25 (1) The Social Work (Scotland) Act 1968 is amended as follows.

(2) In section 27 (supervision and care of persons put on probation or released from prisons etc.), in subsection (1)(b)—

(a) in paragraph (iii), for the words from “community service order” to the end substitute “community payback order imposed under section 277A or 227M of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 imposing an unpaid work or other activity requirement”, and

(b) sub-paragraphs (iv) and (va) are repealed.
(3) In section 86(3) (adjustments between authority providing accommodation etc. and authority of area of residence), after “supervision order” insert “, community payback order under section 227A of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995.”.

The Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974 (c.53)

26 (1) The Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974 is amended as follows.

(2) In section 5(4A) (rehabilitation periods for particular sentences), the words “a probation order or” are repealed.

(3) In section 6(3) (the rehabilitation period applicable to a conviction), the following are repealed—

(a) the words “or a probation order was made”,

(b) the words “or a breach of the order”, and

(c) the words “or probation order”.

The Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) (Scotland) Act 1980 (c.55)

27 In Schedule 1 to the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) (Scotland) Act 1980, in Part 2 (ineligibility for and disqualification and excusal from jury service), in paragraph (bb)—

(a) for sub-paragraph (i) substitute—

“(i) a community payback order under section 227A of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.46);”, and

(b) sub-paragraph (iii) is repealed.

The Local Government and Planning (Scotland) Act 1982 (c.43)

28 In section 24 of the Local Government and Planning (Scotland) Act 1982 (councils’ functions in relation to the provision of gardening assistance for the disabled and the elderly), in subsection (3), for the words from “instruction” to “that Act” substitute “determination that may be made or instruction that may be given, for the purposes of an unpaid work or other activity requirement imposed in a community payback order under section 227A of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.46), by the responsible officer in relation to the order,”.

The Foster Children (Scotland) Act 1984 (c.56)

29 In section 2 of the Foster Children (Scotland) Act 1984 (exceptions to section 1), in subsection (3), for “probation order” substitute “community payback order under section 227A of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.46)”.

The Road Traffic Offenders Act 1988 (c.53)

30 In section 46(3)(b) of the Road Traffic Offenders Act 1988 (combination of disqualification and endorsement with probation orders and orders for discharge), the words “section 228 (probation) or” are repealed.
The Criminal Procedure (Consequential Provisions) (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.40)

31 In Schedule 3 to the Criminal Procedure (Consequential Provisions) (Scotland) Act 1995 (transitional provisions, transitory modifications and savings), in Part 2, paragraph 13 is repealed.

The Proceeds of Crime (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.43)

32 (1) The Proceeds of Crime (Scotland) Act 1995 is amended as follows.

(2) In section 25(9) (recall or variation of suspended forfeiture order), the words “probation order or” are repealed.

(3) In section 26(9) (property wrongly forfeited: return or compensation), the words “probation order or” are repealed.

The Crime and Punishment (Scotland) Act 1997 (c.48)

33 In the Crime and Punishment (Scotland) Act 1997, the following provisions are repealed—

(a) section 26 (evidence concerning certain orders), and

(b) in Schedule 1 (minor and consequential amendments), in paragraph 21, subparagraphs (27) to (29).

The Crime and Disorder Act 1998 (c.37)

34 In the Crime and Disorder Act 1998, in Schedule 6 (drug treatment and testing orders: amendment of the 1995 Act), in Part 1, paragraphs 1 and 2 are repealed.

The Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 (c.6)

35 In Schedule 9 to the Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 (consequential amendments), paragraphs 176 to 178 are repealed.

The Criminal Justice and Court Services Act 2000 (c.43)

36 (1) Schedule 7 to the Criminal Justice and Court Services Act 2000 (minor and consequential amendments) is amended as follows.

(2) In paragraph 4(2), in the entry relating to the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995, for “sections 209(3)(a) and 234(1)(a)” substitute “section 209(3)(a)”.

(3) Paragraphs 122 to 125 are repealed.

The Social Security Fraud Act 2001 (c.11)

37 In section 7(9)(b) of the Social Security Fraud Act 2001 (loss of benefit for commission of benefit offences), the words “or a court in Scotland makes a probation order” are repealed.
In Schedule 4 to the Justice (Northern Ireland) Act 2002 (functions of justices of the peace), paragraph 37 is repealed.

The Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 2003 (asp 7)

39 (1) The Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 2003 is amended as follows.

(2) In section 42 (drugs courts)—

(a) in subsection (4)—

(i) for “probationer with the requirements of a probation order” substitute “community payback order”,

(ii) in paragraph (b), for the words from “make” to “work” substitute “in the case of a failure to comply with the requirements of a drug treatment and testing order, make a community payback order imposing a level 1 unpaid work or other activity requirement, so however that the total hours of unpaid work or other activity”, and

(iii) for “probation order” where those words second occur substitute “community payback order”,

(b) in subsection (6), for paragraph (b) substitute—

“(b) alleged at—

(i) a progress review carried out by such a court in relation to a community payback order; or

(ii) a diet of such a court to which an offender has been cited under section 227ZB(2) of that Act (breach of community payback order), that the offender has failed to comply with a requirement imposed by a community payback order,“,

(c) in subsection (7)—

(i) the words “or probationer” are repealed, and

(ii) for “232” substitute “227ZB”,

(d) for subsection (9) substitute—

“(9) If a community payback order is revoked under section 227ZB(5)(b) of the 1995 Act, the court (whether or not a drugs court) must, in dealing with the offender by virtue of that section, take into account any sentence which has been imposed under paragraph (a) of subsection (4) of this section in relation to a failure to comply with the community payback order.”,

(e) in subsection (10)—

(i) insert at the appropriate places—

““community payback order” means an order imposed under section 227A of the 1995 Act;”

““level 1 unpaid work or other activity requirement” has the meaning given in section 227L(4) of the 1995 Act;”, and
(ii) the definition of “probation order” is repealed, and
(f) in subsection (11), paragraphs (a) and (b) are repealed.

(3) Section 46 (requirement for remote monitoring in probation order) is repealed.
(4) In section 50 (amendments in relation to certain non-custodial sentences), subsections
(1), (2) and (4) are repealed.
(5) In section 60 (unified citation provisions)—
   (a) in subsection (1), paragraphs (a), (b), (e) and (f) are repealed, and
   (b) subsections (3) and (4) are repealed.

The Mental Health (Care and Treatment) (Scotland) Act 2003 (asp 13)
40 In the Mental Health (Care and Treatment) (Scotland) Act 2003, the following provisions are repealed—
   (a) section 135 (amendment of 1995 Act: probation for treatment of mental disorder),
and
   (b) in schedule 4 (minor and consequential amendments), in paragraph 8, sub-paragraph (15).

The Criminal Justice Act 2003 (c.44)
41 In Schedule 32 to the Criminal Justice Act 2003 (amendments relating to sentencing), paragraphs 69 to 72 are repealed.

The Antisocial Behaviour etc. (Scotland) Act 2004 (asp 8)
42 In the Antisocial Behaviour etc. (Scotland) Act 2004, the following provisions are repealed—
   (a) section 120 (community reparation orders), and
   (b) in schedule 4 (minor and consequential amendments), in paragraph 5, subparagraphs (3), (5), (6) and (11).

The Management of Offenders etc. (Scotland) Act 2005 (asp 14)
43 (1) The Management of Offenders etc. (Scotland) Act 2005 is amended as follows.
   (2) In section 10 (arrangements for assessing and managing risks posed by certain offenders), in subsection (1)(b), for sub-paragraph (i) substitute—
      “(i) is subject to a community payback order imposed under section 227A of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.46), or”.
   (3) Section 12 (probation progress review) is repealed.

The Criminal Proceedings etc. (Reform) (Scotland) Act 2007 (asp 6)
44 In the Criminal Proceedings etc. (Reform) (Scotland) Act 2007, the following provisions are repealed—
(a) in section 49 (compensation orders), subsection (4),
(b) section 57 (probation and community service orders), and
(c) in paragraph 26 of the schedule (modification of enactments), sub-paragraphs (l) and (n).

The Criminal Justice and Immigration Act 2008 (c.4)

In Part 1 of Schedule 4 to the Criminal Justice and Immigration Act 2008 (youth rehabilitation orders: consequential amendments), paragraphs 43 to 46 are repealed.

Section 15

Rhoda Grant

399 In section 15, page 29, line 29, after <subsection (1)> insert—

<(  ) at the beginning insert “Subject to subsection (1A),”, and
(  )>.

Rhoda Grant

400 In section 15, page 29, line 29, at end insert—

<(  ) after subsection (1) insert—

“(1A) The prosecutor must, where a person (“A”) is convicted of the offence of stalking a person (“B”), apply to the court to make a non-harassment order against A requiring A to refrain from such conduct in relation to—

(a) B, or
(b) any other person in relation to whom the course of conduct engaged in by A, and which constituted the offence, related,
as may be specified in the order for such period (which includes an indeterminate period) as may be so specified, in addition to any other disposal which may be made in relation to the offence.”.”.

Rhoda Grant

401 In section 15, page 29, line 30, after <subsection (2)> insert—

<(  ) after “subsection (1)” insert “or (1A)”, and
(  )>.

Rhoda Grant

5 In section 15, page 29, line 30, leave out <“harassment (or further harassment)”> and insert <“misconduct (or further misconduct)”>

Rhoda Grant

6 In section 15, page 30, line 18, leave out <“harassment” and “conduct” are> and insert <“conduct” is>
In section 15, page 30, line 20, at end insert <whether on one or more than one occasion>

Section 17

Robert Brown

In section 17, page 30, line 32, leave out <6> and insert <3>

Robert Brown

In section 17, page 31, line 2, leave out <6> and insert <3>

Robert Brown

In section 17, page 31, line 7, at end insert—

<(4) The Scottish Ministers may not bring subsection (1), (2) or (3) into force until they have—

(a) prepared a report setting out—

(i) the reduction in the number of sentences of imprisonment or detention imposed annually that is expected as a result of bringing those subsections into force,

(ii) the increase in the number of community payback orders imposed annually that is expected as a result of bringing those subsections into force (by comparison with the number of such orders imposed annually that would be expected if those subsections were not brought into force),

(iii) the estimated annual cost implications of the changes referred to in sub-paragraphs (i) and (ii),

(iv) the additional funding, if any, that Ministers will provide to community justice authorities or local authorities to ensure that they have the capacity to support the requirements expected to be imposed by any additional community payback orders identified under sub-paragraph (ii).

(b) laid that report before the Scottish Parliament; and

(c) taken into account any views expressed on it by any committee of the Parliament the remit of which includes the criminal justice system.>

Richard Baker
Supported by: Bill Aitken

Leave out section 17

After section 17

Robert Brown

After section 17, insert—
Report on operation of sections 14 and 17

(1) The Scottish Ministers must, no later than 5 years after sections 14 and 17 come fully into force, lay before the Scottish Parliament and publish a report on the operation of those sections.

(2) The report under subsection (1) must, in particular, include an assessment of whether and to what extent those sections, individually or collectively, have—
   (a) reduced offending,
   (b) increased public safety.

After section 20

Bill Wilson

103 After section 20, insert—

Pre-sentencing reports about organisations

After section 203 of the 1995 Act (reports), insert—

“203A Reports about organisations”

(1) This section applies where an organisation is convicted of an offence.

(2) Before dealing with the organisation in respect of the offence, the court may obtain a report into the organisation’s financial affairs and structural arrangements.

(3) The report is to be prepared by a person appointed by the court.

(4) The person appointed to prepare the report is referred to in this section as the “reporter”.

(5) The court may issue directions to the reporter about—
   (a) the information to be contained in the report,
   (b) the particular matters to be covered by the report,
   (c) the time by which the report is to be submitted to the court.

(6) The court may order the organisation to give the reporter and any person acting on the reporter’s behalf—
   (a) access at all reasonable times to the organisation’s books, documents and other records,
   (b) such information or explanation as the reporter thinks necessary.

(7) The reporter’s costs in preparing the report are to be paid by the clerk of court, but the court may order the organisation to reimburse to the clerk all or a part of those costs.

(8) An order under subsection (7) may be enforced by civil diligence as if it were a fine.

(9) On submission of the report to the court, the clerk of court must provide a copy of the report to—
   (a) the organisation,
   (b) the organisation’s solicitor (if any), and
(c) the prosecutor.

(10) The court must have regard to the report in deciding how to deal with the organisation in respect of the offence.

(11) If the court decides to impose a fine, the court must, in determining the amount of the fine, have regard to—

   (a) the report, and

   (b) if the court makes an order under subsection (7), the amount of costs that the organisation is required to reimburse under the order.

(12) Where the court—

   (a) makes an order under subsection (7), and

   (b) imposes a fine on the organisation,

any payment by the organisation is first to be applied in satisfaction of the order under subsection (7).

(13) Where the court also makes a compensation order in respect of the offence, any payment by the organisation is first to be applied in satisfaction of the compensation order before being applied in accordance with subsection (12).”.

Section 24

Robert Brown
Supported by: Bill Aitken

104 Leave out section 24

After section 24

Kenny MacAskill

105 After section 24, insert—

<Mutual recognition of judgments and probation decisions

(1) The Scottish Ministers may by order make provision for the purposes of and in connection with implementing any obligations of the United Kingdom created by or arising under the Framework Decision (so far as they have effect in or as regards Scotland).

(2) The provision may, in particular, confer functions—

   (a) on the Scottish Ministers,

   (b) on other persons.

(3) An order under subsection (1) may modify any enactment.

(4) In this section, the “Framework Decision” means Council Framework Decision 2008/947/JHA of 27 November 2008 on the application of the principle of mutual recognition to judgments and probation decisions with a view to the supervision of probation measures and alternative sanctions.>
Richard Baker

10 After section 24, insert—

Minimum sentence for having in a public place an article with a blade or point

(1) In section 49 of the Criminal Law (Consolidation) (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.39) (offence of having in a public place an article with a blade or point), after subsection (5) insert—

“(5A) Subsection (5B) applies where—

(a) a person is convicted of an offence under subsection (1),

(b) the offence was committed after the commencement of this subsection, and

(c) when the offence was committed, the person was aged 16 or over.

(5B) Where this subsection applies, the court must impose a sentence of imprisonment of at least 6 months (with or without a fine) unless the court is of the opinion that there are exceptional circumstances relating to the offence or to the offender which justify not doing so.”.

(2) In section 207(3A) of the 1995 Act (detention of young offenders: minimum sentences), after paragraph (a) insert—

“(aa) section 49(5B) of the Criminal Law (Consolidation) (Scotland) Act 1995 (minimum sentence for having in a public place an article with a blade or point);”.

Bill Aitken

10A As an amendment to amendment 10, line 11, leave out from <6> to end of line 13 and insert <2 years (with or without a fine) unless the court is satisfied, having regard to all the circumstances, that there are grounds for mitigating the normal consequences of the conviction and thinks fit to order the offender to be imprisoned for a shorter period or not to order the offender to be imprisoned>

Section 25

Kenny MacAskill

344 In section 25, page 38, line 34, at end insert—

Without limiting the generality of subsection (1), a person agrees to become involved in serious organised crime if the person—

(a) agrees to do something (whether or not the doing of that thing would itself constitute an offence), and

(b) knows or suspects, or ought reasonably to have known or suspected, that the doing of that thing will enable or further the commission of serious organised crime.

Robert Brown

345 In section 25, page 38, line 36, leave out <involving> and insert—
(a) that would reasonably be regarded as being both serious and organised, and
(b) that involves>

Kenny MacAskill

346 In section 25, page 39, line 2, leave out <securing> and insert <obtaining>

Kenny MacAskill

347 In section 25, page 39, line 4, leave out <serious>

Robert Brown

348 In section 25, page 39, line 4, leave out <serious violence> and insert <violence or intimidation>

Kenny MacAskill

349 In section 25, page 39, line 4, after <committed> insert <or a threat made>

Kenny MacAskill

350 In section 25, page 39, line 4, leave out <securing> and insert <obtaining>

Kenny MacAskill

351 In section 25, page 39, line 5, at end insert <, and

“material benefit” means a right or interest of any description in any property, whether heritable or moveable and whether corporeal or incorporeal.>

Section 26

Robert Brown

352 In section 26, page 39, line 21, leave out subsection (4)

Section 27

Robert Brown

353 In section 27, page 39, line 35, leave out  and insert <an offence under section 25(1)>

Kenny MacAskill

354 In section 27, page 40, line 9, leave out subsection (4)

Robert Brown

355 In section 27, page 40, line 14, leave out  and insert <an offence under section 25(1)>
Kenny MacAskill

356 In section 27, page 40, line 17, leave out subsection (6)

Section 28

Robert Brown

357 In section 28, page 40, line 28, after <suspects> insert <with good reason>

Bill Aitken
Supported by: Robert Brown

106 In section 28, page 40, line 36, at end insert—

<(  ) In the case of knowledge or suspicion originating from information obtained by the person in the course of the person’s trade, profession, business or employment, this section applies only where the person’s experience or seniority in that trade, profession, business or employment makes it reasonable to assume that the person should be aware of any offence of the sort mentioned in subsection (1) that the other person has or may have committed.>

Kenny MacAskill

358 In section 28, page 40, line 39, leave out <derived> and insert <obtained>

Robert Brown

359 In section 28, page 41, line 1, after <constable> insert <or other specified public official>

Robert Brown

360 In section 28, page 41, line 20, at end insert—

<(  ) In subsection (3), “specified public official” means a person holding a public office specified in an order made by the Scottish Ministers.>

After section 28

Kenny MacAskill

107 After section 28, insert—

<Genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes>

Genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes: UK residents

(1) The International Criminal Court (Scotland) Act 2001 (asp 13) is amended as follows.

(2) After section 8, insert—

“8A Meaning of “United Kingdom national” and “United Kingdom resident”

(1) In this Part—

“United Kingdom national” means—
(a) a British citizen, a British Overseas Territories citizen, a British National (Overseas) or a British Overseas citizen,
(b) a person who under the British Nationality Act 1981 (c.61) is a British subject, or
(c) a British protected person within the meaning of that Act,

“United Kingdom resident” means a person who is resident in the United Kingdom.

(2) To the extent that it would not otherwise be the case, the following individuals are to be treated for the purposes of this Part as being resident in the United Kingdom—

(a) an individual who has indefinite leave to remain in the United Kingdom,
(b) any other individual who has made an application for such leave (whether or not it has been determined) and who is in the United Kingdom,
(c) an individual who has leave to enter or remain in the United Kingdom for the purposes of work or study and who is in the United Kingdom,
(d) an individual who has made an asylum claim, or a human rights claim, which has been granted,
(e) any other individual who has made an asylum claim or a human rights claim (whether or not the claim has been determined) and who is in the United Kingdom,
(f) an individual named in an application for indefinite leave to remain, an asylum claim or a human rights claim as a dependant of the individual making the application or claim if—
   (i) the application or claim has been granted, or
   (ii) the named individual is in the United Kingdom (whether or not the application or claim has been determined),
(g) an individual who would be liable to removal or deportation from the United Kingdom but cannot be removed or deported because of section 6 of the Human Rights Act 1998 (c.42) or for practical reasons,
(h) an individual—
   (i) against whom a decision to make a deportation order under section 5(1) of the Immigration Act 1971 (c.77) by virtue of section 3(5)(a) of that Act (deportation conducive to the public good) has been made,
   (ii) who has appealed against the decision to make the order (whether or not the appeal has been determined), and
   (iii) who is in the United Kingdom,
(i) an individual who is an illegal entrant within the meaning of section 33(1) of the Immigration Act 1971 or who is liable to removal under section 10 of the Immigration and Asylum Act 1999 (c.33),
(j) an individual who is detained in lawful custody in the United Kingdom.
(3) When determining for the purposes of this Part whether any other individual is resident in the United Kingdom regard is to be had to all relevant considerations including—

(a) the periods during which the individual is, has been or intends to be in the United Kingdom,

(b) the purposes for which the individual is, has been or intends to be in the United Kingdom,

(c) whether the individual has family or other connections to the United Kingdom and the nature of those connections, and

(d) whether the individual has an interest in residential property located in the United Kingdom.

(4) In this section—

“asylum claim” means—

(a) a claim that it would be contrary to the United Kingdom’s obligations under the Refugee Convention for the claimant to be removed from, or required to leave, the United Kingdom,

(b) a claim that the claimant would face a real risk of serious harm if removed from the United Kingdom,

“Convention rights” means the rights identified as Convention rights by section 1 of the Human Rights Act 1998,

“detained in lawful custody” means—

(a) detained in pursuance of a sentence of imprisonment or detention, a sentence of custody for life or a detention and training order,

(b) remanded in or committed to custody by an order of a court,

(c) detained pursuant to an order under section 2 of the Colonial Prisoners Removal Act 1884 (c.31) or a warrant under section 1 or 4A of the Repatriation of Prisoners Act 1984 (c.47),

(d) detained under Part 3 of the Mental Health Act 1983 (c.20) or by virtue of an order under section 5 of the Criminal Procedure (Insanity) Act 1964 (c.84) or section 6 or 14 of the Criminal Appeal Act 1968 (c.19) (hospital orders etc.),

(e) detained by virtue of an order under Part 6 of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.46) (other than an order under section 60C) or a hospital direction under section 59A of that Act, and includes detention by virtue of the special restrictions set out in Part 10 of the Mental Health (Care and Treatment) (Scotland) Act 2003 (asp 13) to which a person is subject by virtue of an order under section 59 of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995,

(f) detained under Part 3 of the Mental Health (Northern Ireland) Order 1986 (SI 1986/595) or by virtue of an order under section 11 or 13(5A) of the Criminal Appeal (Northern Ireland) Act 1980 (c. 47),
“human rights claim” means a claim that to remove the claimant from, or to require the claimant to leave, the United Kingdom would be unlawful under section 6 of the Human Rights Act 1998 (public authority not to act contrary to Convention) as being incompatible with the person’s Convention rights,

“the Refugee Convention” means the Convention relating to the Status of Refugees done at Geneva on 28 July 1951 and the Protocol to the Convention,

“serious harm” has the meaning given by article 15 of Council Directive 2004/83/EC on minimum standards for the qualification and status of third country nationals or stateless persons as refugees or as persons who otherwise need international protection and the content of the protection granted.

(5) In this section, a reference to having leave to enter or remain in the United Kingdom is to be construed in accordance with the Immigration Act 1971.

(6) This section applies in relation to any offence under this Part (whether committed before or after the coming into force of this section).

(3) In section 28(1) (interpretation), the definitions of “United Kingdom national” and “United Kingdom resident” are repealed.

Kenny MacAskill

108 After section 28, insert—

<Genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes: retrospective application

After section 9 of the International Criminal Court (Scotland) Act 2001 (asp 13) insert—

“9A Retrospective application of certain offences

(1) Section 1 of this Act applies to acts committed on or after 1 January 1991.

(2) But that section does not apply to an act committed before 17 December 2001 which constitutes a crime against humanity or a war crime within article 8.2(b) or (e) unless, at the time the act was committed, it amounted in the circumstances to a criminal offence under international law.

(3) Section 2 of this Act applies to conduct engaged in on or after 1 January 1991.

(4) The references in subsections (1), (3) and (5) of that section to an offence include an act or conduct that would not constitute an offence but for this section.

(5) Any enactment or rule of law relating to an offence ancillary to a relevant offence applies—

(a) to conduct engaged in on or after 1 January 1991, and

(b) even if the act or conduct constituting the relevant offence would not constitute such an offence but for this section.

(6) But section 2 of this Act, and any enactment or rule of law relating to an offence ancillary to a relevant offence, do not apply to—

(a) conduct engaged in before 17 December 2001, or
(b) conduct engaged in on or after that date which was ancillary to an act or conduct that—
   (i) was committed or engaged in before that date, and
   (ii) would not constitute a relevant offence but for this section, unless, at the time the conduct was engaged in, it amounted in the circumstances to a criminal offence under international law.

(7) Section 5 of this Act, so far as it has effect in relation to relevant offences, applies—
   (a) to failures to exercise control of the kind mentioned in subsection (2) or (3) of that section which occurred on or after 1 January 1991, and
   (b) even if the act or conduct constituting the relevant offence would not constitute an offence but for this section.

(8) But section 5 of this Act, so far as it has effect in relation to relevant offences, does not apply to a failure to exercise control of the kind mentioned in subsection (2) or (3) of that section which occurred before 17 December 2001 unless, at the time it occurred, it amounted in the circumstances to a criminal offence under international law.

(9) In this section, “relevant offence” means an offence under section 1 or 2 of this Act or an offence ancillary to such an offence.

9B Provision supplemental to section 9A: modification of penalties

(1) This section applies in relation to—
   (a) an offence under section 1 of this Act on account of an act committed before 17 December 2001 constituting genocide, if at the time the act was committed it also amounted to an offence under section 1 of the Genocide Act 1969,
   (b) an offence under section 1 of this Act on account of an act committed before 1 September 2001 constituting a war crime, if at the time the act was committed it also amounted to an offence under section 1 of the Geneva Conventions Act 1957 (c.52) (grave breaches of the Conventions),
   (c) an offence ancillary to an offence within paragraph (a) or (b) above.

(2) Section 3(5) of this Act has effect in relation to such an offence as if for “30 years” there were substituted “14 years”.

After section 31

Kenny MacAskill

109 After section 31, insert—

<Offensive weapons etc.

Offensive weapons etc.

(1) The Criminal Law (Consolidation) (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.39) is amended as follows.
(2) In section 47 (prohibition of the carrying of offensive weapons)—
   (a) in subsection (1), the words from “without” to “him,” are repealed,
   (b) after subsection (1), insert—
   “(1A) It is a defence for a person charged with an offence under subsection (1) to show that the person had a reasonable excuse or lawful authority for having the weapon with the person in the public place.”, and
   (c) for subsection (4), substitute—
   “(4) In this section—
   “offensive weapon” means any article—
   (a) made or adapted for use for causing injury to a person, or
   (b) intended, by the person having the article, for use for causing injury to a person by—
      (i) the person having it, or
      (ii) some other person,
   “public place” means any place other than—
   (a) domestic premises,
   (b) school premises (within the meaning of section 49A(6)),
   (c) a prison (within the meaning of section 49C(7)),
   “domestic premises” means premises occupied as a private dwelling (including any stair, passage, garden, yard, garage, outhouse or other appurtenance of such premises which is not used in common by the occupants of more than one such dwelling).”.

(3) In section 49 (offence of having in public place article with blade or point)—
   (a) in subsection (4), for the words “prove that he had good reason” substitute “show that the person had a reasonable excuse”,
   (b) in subsection (5), for “prove” substitute “show”, and
   (c) for subsection (7), substitute—
   “(7) In this section, “public place” has the same meaning as in section 47(4).”.

(4) In section 49A (offence of having article with blade or point (or offensive weapon) on school premises)—
   (a) in subsection (3), for the words “prove that he had good reason” substitute “show that the person had a reasonable excuse”, and
   (b) in subsection (4), for “prove” substitute “show”.

(5) In section 49C(2) (offence of having offensive weapon etc. in prison), for the words “prove that he had good reason” substitute “show that the person had a reasonable excuse”.

(6) In section 50(4) (extension of constable’s power to stop, search and arrest without warrant), for “3” substitute “4”.

52
11* After section 31, insert—

<Offence of having article with blade or point (or offensive weapon) on workplace premises

(1) The Criminal Law (Consolidation) (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.39) is amended as follows.

(2) After section 49A, insert—

“49AA Offence of having article with blade or point (or offensive weapon) on workplace premises

(1) Any person who has an article to which section 49 of this Act applies with him on workplace premises is guilty of an offence.

(2) Any person who has an offensive weapon within the meaning of section 47 of this Act with him on workplace premises is guilty of an offence.

(3) It is a defence for a person charged with an offence under subsection (1) or (2) above to prove that he had good reason or lawful authority for having the article or weapon with him on the premises in question.

(4) Without prejudice to the generality of subsection (3) above, it is a defence for a person charged with an offence under subsection (1) or (2) above to prove that he had the article or weapon in question with him—

(a) for use at work (whether on the premises in question or otherwise),

(b) for religious reasons, or

(c) as part of any national costume.

(5) A person guilty of an offence—

(a) under subsection (1) above is liable—

(i) on summary conviction to imprisonment for a term not exceeding twelve months, or a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum, or both;

(ii) on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding four years, or a fine, or both;

(b) under subsection (2) above is liable—

(i) on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months, or a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum, or both;

(ii) on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding four years, or a fine, or both.

(6) In this section and section 49B of this Act, “workplace premises” means any premises (other than school premises) used for the purposes of an undertaking carried on by an employer and made available to any employee of the employer as a place of work; and includes—

(a) any part of those premises to which such an employee has access while at work;

(b) any premises (other than a public road or other public place within the meaning of section 49 of this Act)—
(i) which are a means of access to or egress from the place of work; or
(ii) where facilities are provided for use in connection with the place of work.”.

(3) In section 49B(1)—
   (a) after “school premises” insert “or workplace premises”;
   (b) after “49A” insert “or 49AA”.

(4) In section 50(3), for “or section 49A(1) or (2)” substitute “, 49A(1) or (2) or 49AA(1) or (2)”.>

Rhoda Grant

402 After section 31, insert—

<Stalking

Offence of stalking

(1) A person (“A”) commits an offence, to be known as the offence of stalking, where A stalks another person (“B”).

(2) For the purposes of subsection (1), A stalks B where—
   (a) A engages in a course of conduct,
   (b) subsection (3) or (4) applies, and
   (c) A’s course of conduct causes B to suffer—
      (i) physical or psychological harm, or
      (ii) apprehension or fear for B’s own safety or for the safety of any other person.

(3) This subsection applies where A engages in the course of conduct with the intention of causing such harm to B or of arousing such apprehension or fear in B.

(4) This subsection applies where A knows, or ought in all the circumstances to have known, that engaging in the course of conduct would be likely to cause such harm or arouse such apprehension or fear.

(5) It is a defence for a person charged with an offence under this section to show that the course of action—
   (a) was authorised by virtue of any enactment or rule of law,
   (b) was engaged in for the purpose of preventing or detecting crime, or
   (c) was, in the particular circumstances, reasonable.

(6) In this section—
   “conduct” includes (but is not limited to)—
   (a) following B or any other person,
   (b) contacting B or any other person by post, telephone, email, text message or any other method,
   (c) publishing any statement or other material—
      (i) relating or purporting to relate to B or to any other person,
(ii) purporting to originate from B or from any other person,

(d) tracing the use by B or by any other person of the internet, email or any other form of electronic communication,

(e) entering or loitering in the vicinity of—

   (i) the place of residence of B or of any other person,
   (ii) the place of work or business of B or of any other person,
   (iii) any place frequented by B or of any other person,

(f) interfering with any property in the possession of B or of any other person,

(g) giving offensive material to B or to any other person or leaving such material where it may be found by, given to or brought to the attention of B or any other person,

(h) keeping B or any other person under surveillance,

(i) acting in any other way that a reasonable person would expect would arouse apprehension or fear in B for B’s own safety or for the safety of any other person, and

“course of conduct” involves conduct on at least two occasions.

(7) A person convicted of the offence of stalking is liable—

   (a) on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 5 years or to a fine or to both,

   (b) on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 6 months or to a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum or to both.

Section 34

Kenny MacAskill

361 In section 34, page 49, line 4, leave out <(and any sounds accompanying it)>.

Kenny MacAskill

362 In section 34, page 49, line 5, leave out <(and any sounds accompanying them)>.

Kenny MacAskill

363 In section 34, page 49, line 7, at end insert—

   <and reference may also be had to any sounds accompanying the image or the series of images.>

Kenny MacAskill

364 In section 34, page 49, line 31, after <images> insert—

   <(i) any sounds accompanying the series of images,

   (ii)>
Robert Brown

365 In section 34, page 50, line 4, leave out from <“excluded” to <work> and insert <image is an “excluded image” if it is all or part of a classified work, and is so excluded from the time that an application for a classification certificate is received by the designated authority>.

Kenny MacAskill

366 In section 34, page 50, line 18, after <images> insert—

(ii) any sounds accompanying the series of images,

Kenny MacAskill

367 In section 34, page 50, line 19, leave out <and section 51C>.

Kenny MacAskill

368 In section 34, page 50, line 27, leave out <and “extreme pornographic image” are> and insert <is>.

Kenny MacAskill

369 In section 34, page 51, line 23, at end insert—

<(  ) In this section “image” and “extreme pornographic image” are to be construed in accordance with section 51A.”.>

After section 34

Kenny MacAskill

110 After section 34, insert—

<Voyeurism: additional forms of conduct>

(1) The Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009 (asp 9) is amended as follows.

(2) In section 9 (voyeurism)—

(a) after subsection (4), insert—

“(4A) The fourth thing is that A—

(a) without another person (“B”) consenting, and

(b) without any reasonable belief that B consents, operates equipment beneath B’s clothing with the intention of enabling A or another person (“C’”), for a purpose mentioned in subsection (7), to observe B’s genitals or buttocks (whether exposed or covered with underwear) or the underwear covering B’s genitals or buttocks, in circumstances where the genitals, buttocks or underwear would not otherwise be visible.

(4B) The fifth thing is that A—

(a) without another person (“B”) consenting, and

(b) without any reasonable belief that B consents, records an image beneath B’s clothing of B’s genitals or buttocks (whether exposed or covered with underwear) or the underwear covering B’s genitals or buttocks, in circumstances where the genitals, buttocks or underwear would not otherwise be visible, with the intention that A or another person (“C”), for a purpose mentioned in subsection (7), will look at the image.”,

(b) in subsection (5)—
   (i) for “fourth” substitute “sixth”, and
   (ii) for paragraph (b), substitute—
   “(b) constructs or adapts a structure or part of a structure, with the intention of enabling A or another person to do an act referred to in subsection (2), (3), (4), (4A) or (4B).”, and

(c) in subsection (7), for “and (4)” substitute “, (4), (4A) and (4B)”.

(3) In section 10(2) (interpretation of section 9), after “section 9(3)” insert “and (4A)”.

(4) In section 26 (voyeurism towards a young child)—
   (a) after subsection (4), insert—
   “(4A) The fourth thing is that A operates equipment beneath B’s clothing with the intention of enabling A or another person (“C”), for a purpose mentioned in subsection (7), to observe—
   (a) B’s genitals or buttocks (whether exposed or covered with underwear), or
   (b) the underwear covering B’s genitals or buttocks,
   in circumstances where the genitals, buttocks or underwear would not otherwise be visible.

(4B) The fifth thing is that A records an image beneath B’s clothing of—
   (a) B’s genitals or buttocks (whether exposed or covered with underwear),
   or
   (b) the underwear covering B’s genitals or buttocks,
   in circumstances where the genitals, buttocks or underwear would not otherwise be visible, with the intention that A or another person (“C”), for a purpose mentioned in subsection (7), will look at the image.”,

(b) in subsection (5)—
   (i) for “fourth” substitute “sixth”, and
   (ii) for paragraph (b), substitute—
   “(b) constructs or adapts a structure or part of a structure, with the intention of enabling A or another person to do an act referred to in subsection (2), (3), (4), (4A) or (4B).”,

(c) in subsection (7), for “and (4)” substitute “, (4), (4A) and (4B)”, and

(d) in subsection (8)—
   (i) after “section 9(3)” insert “, (4A)”, and
   (ii) after “subsections (3)” insert “, (4A)”.

57
(5) In section 36 (voyeurism towards an older child)—

(a) after subsection (4), insert—

“(4A) The fourth thing is that A operates equipment beneath B’s clothing with the intention of enabling A or another person (“C”), for a purpose mentioned in subsection (7), to observe—

(a) B’s genitals or buttocks (whether exposed or covered with underwear), or

(b) the underwear covering B’s genitals or buttocks,

in circumstances where the genitals, buttocks or underwear would not otherwise be visible.

(4B) The fifth thing is that A records an image beneath B’s clothing of—

(a) B’s genitals or buttocks (whether exposed or covered with underwear), or

(b) the underwear covering B’s genitals or buttocks,

in circumstances where the genitals, buttocks or underwear would not otherwise be visible, with the intention that A or another person (“C”), for a purpose mentioned in subsection (7), will look at the image.”.

(b) in subsection (5)—

(i) for “fourth” substitute “sixth”, and

(ii) for paragraph (b), substitute—

“(b) constructs or adapts a structure or part of a structure,

with the intention of enabling A or another person to do an act referred to in subsection (2), (3), (4), (4A) or (4B).”.

(c) in subsection (7), for “and (4)” substitute “, (4), (4A) and (4B)”, and

(d) in subsection (8)—

(i) after “section 9(3)” insert “, (4A)”, and

(ii) after “subsections (3)” insert “, (4A)”.

Kenny MacAskill

After section 34, insert—

<Sexual offences: defences in relation to offences against older children

In section 39 of the Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009 (asp 9) (defences in relation to offences against older children), in subsection (4)(c), after “section 30(2)(d)” insert “or (e)”.

Kenny MacAskill

After section 34, insert—

<Penalties for offences of brothel-keeping and living on the earnings of prostitution

(1) The Criminal Law (Consolidation) (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.39) is amended as follows.

(2) In section 11 (trading in prostitution and brothel-keeping)—
(a) in subsection (1), for the words from “liable” to the end substitute “guilty of an offence and liable to the penalties set out in subsection (1A)”,

(b) after that subsection insert—

“(1A) A person—

(a) guilty of the offence set out in subsection (1)(a) is liable—

(i) on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding seven years, to a fine, or to both,

(ii) on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 12 months, to a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum, or to both,

(b) guilty of the offence set out in subsection (1)(b) is liable—

(i) on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years,

(ii) on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 12 months.”,

(c) in subsection (4), for “subsection (1)” substitute “subsection (1A)(a)”, and

(d) for subsection (6) substitute—

“(6) A person guilty of an offence under subsection (5) is liable—

(a) on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding seven years, to a fine, or to both,

(b) on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 12 months, to a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum, or to both.”.

(3) In section 13(9) (living on earnings of another from male prostitution), for paragraphs (a) and (b) substitute—

“(a) on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding seven years, to a fine, or to both,

(b) on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 12 months, to a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum, or to both.”.

Trish Godman

8* After section 34, insert—

<Offences of engaging in, advertising and facilitating paid-for sexual activities

(1) The Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009 (asp 9) is amended as follows.

(2) After section 11 insert—

“Engaging in, advertising and facilitating paid-for sexual activities

11A Engaging in a paid-for sexual activity

(1) A person (“A”) commits an offence, to be known as the offence of engaging in a paid-for sexual activity, if A knowingly engages in a paid-for sexual activity with another person (“B”).

(2) A sexual activity is paid for where B engages in that activity in exchange for payment.
(3) For the purposes of subsection (2), it is immaterial whether the payment is made—

(a) by A or by another person, or

(b) to B or to another person on B’s behalf.

11B Advertising paid-for sexual activities

A person commits an offence, to be known as the offence of advertising paid-for sexual activities, if that person knowingly advertises, by any means, the availability of sexual activities that can be engaged in for payment.

11C Facilitating engagement in a paid-for sexual activity

(1) A person (“A”) commits an offence, to be known as the offence of facilitating engagement in a paid-for sexual activity, if A knowingly facilitates the engagement of another person (“B”) in a paid-for sexual activity with another person (“C”).

(2) A sexual activity is paid for where C engages in that activity in exchange for payment.

(3) For the purposes of subsection (2), it is immaterial whether the payment is made—

(a) by A, by B or by another person, or

(b) to C or to another person on C’s behalf.

(4) For the purposes of subsection (1), facilitating the engagement by B in a paid-for sexual activity includes (but is not limited to)—

(a) arranging B’s engagement in the activity,

(b) making payment to C or to another person on C’s behalf,

(c) making available premises in which the activity takes place, or

(d) transporting B, or arranging transport for B, to where the activity takes place.

11D Arrest for offences under sections 11A to 11C

(1) Where a constable reasonably believes that a person is committing or has committed an offence under section 11A, 11B or 11C, the constable may arrest the person without warrant.

(2) Subsection (1) is without prejudice to any power of arrest conferred by law apart from that subsection.”.
(3) In the table in schedule 2 insert at the appropriate place—

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th></th>
<th>Section</th>
<th>Description</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>45</td>
<td>11A</td>
<td>“Engaging in a paid-for sexual activity”</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>50</td>
<td>11B</td>
<td>Advertising paid-for sexual activities</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>55</td>
<td>11C</td>
<td>Facilitating engagement in a paid-for sexual activity</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Margo MacDonald

8A As an amendment to amendment 8, line 15, at end insert—

<11AA Causing alarm etc. by engaging in a paid-for sexual activity
In the circumstances described in section 11A(1), A and B commit an offence, to be known as the offence of causing alarm etc. by engaging in a paid-for sexual activity, if their engaging in the activity that constitutes the offence under that section causes alarm to another person (“C”), endangers C or creates a nuisance for C.>

Margo MacDonald

8B As an amendment to amendment 8, line 15, at end insert—

<11AB Profiting from coerced paid-for sexual activities
A person commits an offence, to be known as the offence of profiting from coerced paid-for sexual activities, if that person knowingly secures a direct benefit (whether financial or otherwise) from a paid-for sexual activity involving a person whose engagement in that activity has been secured as a result of coercion.>

Margo MacDonald

8C As an amendment to amendment 8, line 40, after <11A,> insert <11AA, 11AB>

Margo MacDonald

8D As an amendment to amendment 8, line 48, at end insert—
Section 35

Kenny MacAskill
371 In section 35, page 51, line 30, at end insert—

<( ) after subsection (1) insert—

“(1A) A person to whom subsection (6) applies commits an offence if the person arranges or facilitates—

(a) the arrival in or the entry into a country (other than the United Kingdom), or travel there (whether or not following such arrival or entry) by, an individual and—

(i) intends to exercise control over prostitution by the individual or to involve the individual in the making or production of obscene or indecent material; or

(ii) believes that another person is likely to exercise such control or so to involve the individual,

there or elsewhere; or

(b) the departure from a country (other than the United Kingdom) of an individual and—

(i) intends to exercise such control or so to involve the individual; or

(ii) believes that another person is likely to exercise such control or so to involve the individual, outwith the country.”,>

Kenny MacAskill
372 In section 35, page 51, line 30, at end insert—

<( ) in subsection (2), for “subsection (1)” substitute “subsections (1) and (1A)”>,

Kenny MacAskill
373 In section 35, page 51, line 32, leave out <Subsection (1) applies> and insert <Subsections (1) and (1A) apply>
Kenny MacAskill

374 In section 35, page 51, line 34, leave out <proceeded against, indicted> and insert <prosecuted>

Kenny MacAskill

375 In section 35, page 51, line 40, after <on> insert <the>

Kenny MacAskill

376 In section 35, page 52, leave out line 1 and insert—

<(  ) in subsection (6)—

(i) the word “and” immediately following paragraph (e) is repealed, and
(ii) after paragraph (f) insert—

“(g) a person who at the time of the offence was habitually resident in Scotland, and
(h) a body incorporated under the law of a part of the United Kingdom.”.>

Kenny MacAskill

377 In section 35, page 52, line 2, leave out subsection (2) and insert—

<(  ) In section 4 of the Asylum and Immigration (Treatment of Claimants, etc.) Act 2004 (c.19) (trafficking people for exploitation)—

(a) in subsection (1), after “arrival in” insert “or the entry into”,
(b) in subsection (2), the words from “in” where it first occurs to “committed” are repealed,
(c) after subsection (3) insert—

“(3A) A person to whom section 5(2) applies commits an offence if—

(a) in relation to an individual (the “passenger”), he arranges or facilitates—

(i) the arrival in or the entry into a country other than the United Kingdom of the passenger,
(ii) travel by the passenger within a country other than the United Kingdom,
(iii) the departure of the passenger from a country other than the United Kingdom, and
(b) he—

(i) intends to exploit the passenger, or
(ii) believes that another person is likely to exploit the passenger, (wherever the exploitation is to occur).”,
(d) in subsection (4)—

(i) in paragraph (b), the words from “as a result” to “Act 2004,” become sub-paragraph (i),
(ii) immediately following that sub-paragraph insert “or—
(ii) which, were it done in Scotland, would constitute an offence mentioned in sub-paragraph (i),”.

(iii) after paragraph (b) insert—

“(ba) he is encouraged, required or expected to do anything in connection with the removal of any part of a human body—

(i) as a result of which he or another person would commit an offence under the law of Scotland (other than an offence mentioned in paragraph (b)(i)), or

(ii) which, were it done in Scotland, would constitute such an offence,”, and

(iv) for paragraph (d) substitute—

“(d) another person uses or attempts to use him for any purpose within sub-paragraph (i), (ii) or (iii) of paragraph (c), having chosen him for that purpose on the grounds that—

(i) he is mentally or physically ill or disabled, he is young, or he has a family relationship with a person, and

(ii) a person without the illness, disability, youth or family relationship would be likely to refuse to be used for that purpose.”.

( ) In section 5 of that Act—

(a) in subsection (1), for the words from “(3)” to the end substitute “(3A) of section 4 apply to anything done in or outwith the United Kingdom.”,

(b) in subsection (2)—

(i) the word “and” immediately following paragraph (e) is repealed, and

(ii) after paragraph (f) insert—

“(g) a person who at the time of the offence was habitually resident in Scotland, and

(h) a body incorporated under the law of a part of the United Kingdom.”,

(c) after subsection (2) insert—

“(2A) A person may be prosecuted, tried and punished for any offence to which section 4 applies—

(a) in any sheriff court district in which the person is apprehended or is in custody, or

(b) in such sheriff court district as the Lord Advocate may determine, as if the offence had been committed in that district (and the offence is, for all purposes incidental to or consequential on the trial or punishment, to be deemed to have been committed in that district).

(2B) In subsection (2A), “sheriff court district” is to be construed in accordance with section 307(1) of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.46) (interpretation).”.
After section 35

Kenny MacAskill

112 After section 35, insert—

Slavery, servitude and forced or compulsory labour

(1) A person (“A”) commits an offence if—

(a) A holds another person in slavery or servitude and the circumstances are such that A knows or ought to know that the person is so held, or

(b) A requires another person to perform forced or compulsory labour and the circumstances are such that A knows or ought to know that the person is being required to perform such labour.

(2) In subsection (1) the references to holding a person in slavery or servitude or requiring a person to perform forced or compulsory labour are to be construed in accordance with Article 4 of the Human Rights Convention (which prohibits a person from being held in slavery or servitude or being required to perform forced or compulsory labour).

(3) A person guilty of an offence under this section is liable—

(a) on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 14 years, or to a fine, or to both,

(b) on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 12 months, or to a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum, or to both.

(4) In this section “Human Rights Convention” means the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms agreed by the Council of Europe at Rome on 4 November 1950.

After section 36

Kenny MacAskill

113 After section 36, insert—

Articles for use in fraud

(1) A person (“A”) commits an offence if A has in A’s possession or under A’s control an article for use in, or in connection with, the commission of fraud.

(2) A person guilty of an offence under subsection (1) is liable—

(a) on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 12 months or to a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum, or to both,

(b) on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 5 years or to a fine, or to both.

(3) A person commits an offence if the person makes, adapts, supplies or offers to supply an article—

(a) knowing that the article is designed or adapted for use in, or in connection with, the commission of fraud, or

(b) intending the article to be used in, or in connection with, the commission of fraud.
(4) A person guilty of an offence under subsection (3) is liable—
   (a) on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 12 months or to a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum, or to both,
   (b) on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 10 years or to a fine, or to both.

(5) In this section, “article” includes a program or data held in electronic form.

After section 37

Kenny MacAskill

114 After section 37, insert—

<Abolition of offences of sedition and leasing-making

Abolition of offences of sedition and leasing-making
The following offences under the common law of Scotland are abolished—
   (a) the offence of sedition,
   (b) the offence of leasing-making.

Kenny MacAskill

378 After section 37, insert—

<Threatening, alarming or distressing behaviour

Threatening, alarming or distressing behaviour

(1) A person (“A”) commits an offence if—
   (a) A behaves in such a manner that a reasonable person would be likely to—
      (i) fear for the safety of any person on account of the behaviour, or
      (ii) be alarmed or distressed by the behaviour, and
   (b) the condition in subsection (2) is satisfied.

(2) That condition is that A—
   (a) intends by the behaviour to cause fear, alarm or distress, or
   (b) is reckless as to whether the behaviour would cause fear, alarm or distress.

(3) It does not matter—
   (a) whether A’s behaviour is directed at anyone in particular,
   (b) if it is directed at a particular person, whether that person is aware of the behaviour, or
   (c) whether A’s behaviour—
      (i) actually causes anyone fear, alarm or distress, or
      (ii) takes place in public or private.

(4) Subsection (1) applies to—
(a) behaviour of any kind including, in particular, things said or otherwise communicated as well as things done,

(b) behaviour consisting of—
   (i) a single act, or
   (ii) a course of conduct.

(5) The reference in subsection (1)(a)(i) to fear for a person’s safety is to fear that the person’s life could be endangered or that the person’s physical or psychological well-being could be harmed.

(6) A person guilty of an offence under subsection (1) is liable—
   (a) on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 5 years, or to a fine, or to both, or
   (b) on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 12 months, or to a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum, or to both.

Bill Aitken

115 After section 37, insert—

<PART

DOUBLE JEOPARDY

Rule against double jeopardy

(1) It is not competent to charge a person who, whether on indictment or complaint (the “original” indictment or complaint), has been convicted or acquitted of an offence—
   (a) with an offence of which it would have been competent to convict the person on the original indictment or complaint, or
   (b) with an offence which—
      (i) arises out of the same, or largely the same, acts or omissions as gave rise to the original indictment or complaint, and
      (ii) is an aggravated way of committing the offence of which the person was convicted or acquitted.

(2) Whether the conviction or acquittal was before or after the coming into force of this section is, for the purposes of the section, immaterial.

(3) Subsection (1) is subject to sections (Tainted acquittals), (Admission subsequent to acquittal) and (New evidence) and is without prejudice to sections 118(1)(c) (disposal of appeals), 119 (provision where High Court authorises new prosecution), 183(1)(d) (stated case: disposal of appeal) and 185 (authorisation of new prosecution) of the 1995 Act.

(4) In this Part, reference to a person being convicted of an offence is—
   (a) to the person being found guilty of the offence, or
   (b) to the prosecutor accepting the person’s plea of guilty to the offence, in either case whether or not sentence is passed.

>
After section 37, insert—

Plea in bar of trial

1. A person charged with an offence—
   a. whether on indictment or complaint, but
   b. other than by virtue of a section mentioned in section (Rule against double jeopardy) (3), may aver, as a plea in bar of trial, that the offence arises out of the same, or largely the same, acts or omissions as have already given rise to the person being tried for, and convicted or acquitted of, an offence (the “original offence”).

2. Whether the conviction or acquittal was before or after the coming into force of this section is, for the purposes of the section, immaterial.

3. If the court is satisfied, on a balance of probabilities, as to the truth of the person’s averment, the plea is to be sustained unless the prosecutor persuades the court that there is some special reason why the case should proceed to trial (as for example, but without prejudice to the generality of this subsection, where trials were separated on the application of, or with the consent of, the person).

4. Subsections (1) to (3) apply irrespective of where the person was tried; but this subsection is subject to subsection (5).

5. Where the person was tried outwith the United Kingdom the court may disregard a conviction or acquittal if—
   a. it determines that it is in the interests of justice to do so, and
   b. to permit the case to proceed to trial would not be inconsistent with the obligations of the United Kingdom under Article 54 of the Schengen Convention (that is to say, of the Convention of 19th June 1990 implementing the Schengen Agreement of 14th June 1985).

6. In making a determination in pursuance of subsection (5)(a), the court is in particular to have regard to—
   a. whether the purpose of bringing the person to trial in the foreign country appears to have been to assist the person to evade justice,
   b. whether the proceedings in the foreign country appear to have been conducted—
      i. independently and impartially, and
      ii. in a manner consistent with dealing justly with the person,
   c. whether such sentence (or other disposal) as might be imposed in the foreign country for an offence of the kind for which the person has been acquitted or convicted is commensurate with any that might be imposed for an offence of that kind in Scotland, and
   d. the extent to which the acts or omissions can be considered to have occurred in, respectively—
      i. Scotland,
      ii. the foreign country.
Bill Aitken

117 After section 37, insert—

<Eventual death of injured person>

(1) This section applies where—

   (a) a person (“A”) sustains physical injuries,

   (b) another person (“B”) is, whether on indictment or complaint, acquitted or convicted of an offence (“offence Y”) which comprises the infliction of the injuries, and

   (c) after the acquittal or conviction A dies, ostensibly from the injuries.

(2) Whether the conviction or acquittal was before or after the coming into force of this section is, for the purposes of the section, immaterial.

(3) If B was acquitted of offence Y (and was not then convicted of a different offence, “offence Z”, which comprised the infliction of the injuries) it is not competent to charge B with—

   (a) the murder of A,

   (b) culpable homicide as respects A, or

   (c) any other offence comprising causing A’s death.

(4) If B was convicted of offence Y (or of offence Z), then—

   (a) for the purposes of sections (Rule against double jeopardy) and (Plea in bar of trial) the offences mentioned in paragraphs (a) to (c) of subsection (3) are not to be treated as offences arising out of the same, or largely the same, acts or omissions as the offence of which B was convicted, but

   (b) on B being acquitted or convicted of any of the offences mentioned in those paragraphs, the court may, on the motion of B and after hearing the parties on that motion, quash B’s conviction of offence Y (or offence Z) where satisfied that it is appropriate to do so.

(5) A party may appeal to the High Court against the granting or refusing of a motion under subsection (4)(b).>

Bill Aitken

118 After section 37, insert—

<Tainted acquittals>

(1) A person who, whether on indictment or complaint (the “original” indictment or complaint), has been acquitted of an offence (the “original offence”) which, provided that the conditions mentioned in subsection (3) are satisfied, be charged with, and prosecuted anew for—

   (a) the original offence, or

   (b) an offence arising out of the same, or largely the same, acts or omissions as gave rise to the original offence.

(2) Whether the acquittal was before or after the coming into force of this section is, for the purposes of the section, immaterial.

(3) The conditions are—
(a) either—

(i) that the acquitted person or some other person has (or the acquitted person and some other person have) been convicted of an offence against the course of justice, being an offence in connection with proceedings on the original indictment or complaint, or

(ii) that on the application of the Lord Advocate the High Court has concluded on a balance of probabilities that the acquitted person or some other person has (or the acquitted person and some other person have) committed such an offence against the course of justice, and

(b) that on the application of the Lord Advocate the High Court has—

(i) set aside the acquittal, and

(ii) granted authority to bring, by virtue of this section, a new prosecution.

(4) On making an application under subsection (3), the Lord Advocate is to send a copy of that application to the acquitted person.

(5) The acquitted person is entitled to appear or to be represented at any hearing of the application.

(6) For the purpose of—

(a) hearing and coming to a conclusion on any application under subsection (3)(a)(ii), or

(b) hearing and determining any application under subsection (3)(b),

three of the Lords Commissioners of Justiciary are a quorum of the Court (the application being determined by majority vote of those sitting).

(7) The decision of the Court on the application is final.

(8) Subsection (7) is without prejudice to any power of those sitting to remit the application to a differently constituted sitting of the Court (as for example to the whole Court sitting together).

(9) The Court may appoint counsel to act as amicus curiae at the hearing in question.

(10) Subsections (11) and (12) apply in a case where (or as the case may be where the Court, in coming to a conclusion under subsection (3)(a)(ii), is satisfied on a balance of probabilities that) the offence against the course of justice consisted of or included interference with a juror or with the trial judge.

(11) An acquittal is to be set aside under subsection (3)(b)(i) if the Court is unable to conclude that the interference had no effect on the outcome of the proceedings on the original indictment or complaint.

(12) But it is not to be so set aside if in the course of the trial, the interference (being interference with a juror and not with the trial judge) became known to the trial judge, who then allowed the trial to proceed to its conclusion.

(13) Subsection (14) applies in a case other than is mentioned in subsection (10).

(14) An acquittal is not to be set aside under subsection (3)(b)(i) unless the Court is satisfied on a balance of probabilities—

(a) that the offence led—

(i) to the withholding of evidence which, had it been given, would have been, or
(ii) to the giving of false evidence which was, evidence capable of being regarded as credible and reliable by a reasonable jury, and

(b) that the withholding, or as the case may be the giving, of the evidence was likely to have had a material effect on the outcome of the proceedings on the original indictment or complaint.

(15) And an acquittal is not to be set aside under subsection (3)(b)(i), whether by virtue of subsections (10) to (12) or by virtue of subsections (13) and (14), if the court considers that setting it aside would be contrary to the interests of justice.

(16) In this section, the expression “offence against the course of justice”—

(a) means an offence of perverting, or of attempting to pervert, the course of justice (by whatever means and however the offence is described), and

(b) without prejudice to the generality of paragraph (a), includes—

(i) an offence under section 45(1) of the Criminal Law (Consolidation) (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.39) (aiding, abetting, counselling, procuring or suborning the commission of an offence under section 44 of that Act),

(ii) the crime of subornation of perjury, and

(iii) the crime of bribery.

(17) But the expression does not include—

(a) the crime of perjury, or

(b) an offence under section 44(1) of that Act (statement on oath which is false or which the person making it does not believe to be true).>

Bill Aitken

119 After section 37, insert—

<Further provision as regards prosecution by virtue of section (Tainted acquittals)

(1) A prosecution may be brought by virtue of section (Tainted acquittals) notwithstanding that any time limit for the commencement of such proceedings has elapsed.

(2) In proceedings in a prosecution brought by virtue of section (Tainted acquittals) it is competent for either party to lead evidence which it was competent for that party to lead in the earlier proceedings.

(3) But the indictment or complaint in the prosecution is to identify any matters as respects which the prosecutor intends to lead evidence by virtue of subsection (2) (being matters as respects which it would not have been competent to lead evidence but for that subsection).

(4) On granting authority under section (Tainted acquittals)(3)(b)(ii) to bring a new prosecution, the High Court may, after giving the parties an opportunity of being heard, order the detention of the accused person in custody or admit that person to bail.

(5) In—

(a) solemn proceedings, section 65(4)(aa) and (b) and (4A) to (9), and

(b) summary proceedings, section 147,
of the 1995 Act (prevention of delay in trials) applies to an accused person who is detained under subsection (4) as it applies to an accused person detained by virtue of being committed until liberated in due course of law.

Bill Aitken

120 After section 37, insert—

<Admission subsequent to acquittal

(1) A person who, whether on indictment or complaint (the “original” indictment or complaint), has been acquitted of an offence but subsequently admits to committing it may, provided that the condition mentioned in subsection (3) is satisfied, be charged with, and prosecuted anew for, the offence.

(2) Whether the acquittal was before or after the coming into force of this section is, for the purposes of the section, immaterial.

(3) The condition is that on the application of the Lord Advocate the High Court has—

(a) set aside the acquittal, and

(b) granted authority to bring, by virtue of this section, a new prosecution.

(4) On making an application under subsection (3), the Lord Advocate is to send a copy of that application to the acquitted person.

(5) The acquitted person is entitled to appear or to be represented at any hearing of the application.

(6) For the purpose of hearing and determining the application, three of the Lords Commissioners of Justiciary are a quorum of the Court (the application being determined by majority vote of those sitting).

(7) An acquittal is not to be set aside under subsection (3)(a) unless the Court is satisfied—

(a) on a balance of probabilities, that subsequent to the acquittal the person credibly admitted having committed the offence, and

(b) that evidence is available sufficient to corroborate the admission.

(8) Even if the Court is satisfied as is mentioned in subsection (7), it is not to set aside the acquittal if it considers that to do so would be contrary to the interests of justice.>

Robert Brown

120A As an amendment to amendment 120, line 15, at end insert—

<( ) Before hearing an application under subsection (3), the Court is to order that no publicity be given to the application, or to any document prepared in connection with the application, until—

(a) the application is refused,

(b) a final decision has been made not to bring, or to discontinue, a new prosecution, or

(c) the new trial is concluded.>

Bill Aitken

121 After section 37, insert—
<Further provision as regards prosecution by virtue of section (Admission subsequent to acquittal)

(1) No sentence may be passed on conviction in a new prosecution brought by virtue of section (Admission subsequent to acquittal) which could not have been passed under the proceedings on the original indictment or complaint (“the earlier proceedings”).

(2) A new prosecution may be brought by virtue of section (Admission subsequent to acquittal) notwithstanding that any time limit, other than the time limit mentioned in subsection (3), for the commencement of such proceedings has elapsed.

(3) Proceedings in a new prosecution brought by virtue of section (Admission subsequent to acquittal) are to be commenced within 2 months after the date on which authority to bring the prosecution was granted.

(4) In proceedings in a new prosecution brought by virtue of section (Admission subsequent to acquittal) it is competent for either party to lead evidence which it was competent for that party to lead in the earlier proceedings.

(5) But the indictment or complaint in the new prosecution is to identify any matters as respects which the prosecutor intends to lead evidence by virtue of subsection (4) (being matters as respects which it would not have been competent to lead evidence but for that subsection).

(6) For the purposes of subsection (3), proceedings are deemed commenced—

(a) in a case where a warrant to apprehend the accused is granted—

(i) on the date on which the warrant is executed, or

(ii) if it is executed without unreasonable delay, on the date on which it is granted, and

(b) in any other case, on the date on which the accused is cited.

(7) Where the 2 months mentioned in subsection (3) elapse and no new prosecution has been brought under this section, the order under section (Admission subsequent to acquittal)(3)(a) setting aside the acquittal has the effect, for all purposes, of an acquittal.

(8) On granting authority under section (Admission subsequent to acquittal)(3)(b) to bring a new prosecution, the High Court may, after giving the parties an opportunity of being heard, order the detention of the accused person in custody or admit that person to bail.

(9) In—

(a) solemn proceedings, section 65(4)(aa) and (b) and (4A) to (9), and

(b) summary proceedings, section 147,

of the 1995 Act (prevention of delay in trials) applies to an accused person who is detained under subsection (8) as it applies to an accused person detained by virtue of being committed until liberated in due course of law.

(10) It is immaterial, for the purposes of this section, whether the acquittal was before or after the coming into force of the section.>

Bill Aitken

122 After section 37, insert—
New evidence

(1) A person who has been acquitted, after the coming into force of this section (or on the day on which it comes into force), of an offence may—

(a) if there is new evidence that the person committed the offence, and

(b) the conditions mentioned in subsection (2) are satisfied,

be charged with, and prosecuted for, the offence anew.

(2) The conditions are—

(a) that the person’s acquittal was of an offence mentioned in subsection (9), and

(b) that on the application of the Lord Advocate the High Court has—

(i) set aside the acquittal, and

(ii) granted authority to bring, by virtue of this section, a new prosecution.

(3) The setting aside of the acquittal and the granting of such authority may, under subsection (2)(b), be applied for on one occasion only.

(4) On making an application under that subsection, the Lord Advocate is to send a copy of the application to the acquitted person.

(5) The acquitted person is entitled to appear or to be represented at any hearing of the application.

(6) For the purpose of hearing and determining the application under subsection (2)(b), three of the Lords Commissioners of Justiciary are a quorum of the Court (the application being determined by majority vote of those sitting).

(7) An acquittal is not to be set aside under subsection (2)(b)(i) unless the Court is satisfied that—

(a) the case against the accused is strengthened substantially by the new evidence,

(b) the new evidence is evidence which was not available, and could not with the exercise of reasonable diligence have been made available, at the trial in respect of the original offence, and

(c) on the new evidence and the evidence which was led at that trial it is highly likely that a reasonable jury properly instructed would have convicted the person of the offence.

(8) Even if the Court is satisfied as is mentioned in subsection (7), it is not to set aside the acquittal if it considers that to do so would be contrary to the interests of justice.

(9) The offences are—

(a) murder,

(b) at common law, rape, and

(c) an offence under either section 1 (rape) or section 18 (rape of a young child) of the Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009 (asp 9).

(10) The Scottish Ministers may by order amend subsection (9) so as to add further offences to those for the time being mentioned in that subsection.

(11) But subsection (1) does not apply as respects a person’s acquittal of an offence so added if the date of acquittal is earlier than that on which the addition is effected.>
After section 37, insert—

Further provision as regards prosecution by virtue of section (New evidence)

1. No sentence may be passed on conviction in a new prosecution brought by virtue of section (New evidence) which could not have been passed under the indictment on the trial of which the person was acquitted of the offence in question.

2. A new prosecution may be brought by virtue of section (New evidence) notwithstanding that any time limit for the commencement of such proceedings, other than the time limit mentioned in subsection (3), has elapsed.

3. Proceedings in a new prosecution brought by virtue of section (New evidence) are to be commenced within 2 months after the date on which authority to bring the prosecution was granted.

4. In proceedings in a new prosecution brought by virtue of section (New evidence) it is competent for either party to lead evidence which it was competent for that party to lead in the earlier proceedings.

5. But the indictment in the new prosecution is to identify any matters as respects which the prosecutor intends to lead evidence by virtue of subsection (4) (being matters as respects which it would not have been competent to lead evidence but for that subsection).

6. For the purposes of subsection (3), proceedings are deemed commenced—

   a. in a case where a warrant to apprehend the accused is granted—

      i. on the date on which the warrant is executed, or

      ii. if it is executed without unreasonable delay, on the date on which it is granted, and

   b. in any other case, on the date on which the accused is cited.

7. Where the 2 months mentioned in subsection (3) elapse and no new prosecution has been brought under this section, the order under section (New evidence)(2)(b)(i) setting aside the acquittal has the effect, for all purposes, of an acquittal.

8. On granting authority under section (New evidence)(2)(b)(ii) to bring a new prosecution, the High Court is, after giving the parties an opportunity of being heard, to order the detention of the accused person in custody or to admit that person to bail.

9. Subsections (4)(aa) and (b) and (4A) to (9) of section 65 of the 1995 Act (prevention of delay in trials) apply to an accused person who is detained under subsection (8) as they apply to an accused person detained by virtue of being committed until liberated in due course of law.

---

After section 37, insert—

Nullity of proceedings on previous indictment or complaint

1. Subsection (3) applies where—

   a. a person has, whether on indictment or complaint—

      i. been charged with, and
(ii) acquitted or convicted of, an offence, and
(b) the conditions mentioned in subsection (4) are satisfied.

(2) Whether the conviction or acquittal was before or after the coming into force of this section is, for the purposes of the section, immaterial.

(3) The person may be charged with, and prosecuted anew for, the offence.

(4) The conditions are that, on the application of the prosecutor and after hearing the parties, the High Court is satisfied—
(a) that the proceedings on the indictment or complaint were a nullity, and
(b) that it would not be contrary to the interests of justice to proceed as mentioned in subsection (3).

Bill Aitken

125 After section 37, insert—

<Amendment of Schedule 1 to the Contempt of Court Act 1981

(1) Schedule 1 to the Contempt of Court Act 1981 (c.49) (times when proceedings are active for the purposes of section 2 of that Act) is amended as follows.

(2) After paragraph 1 (the expressions “criminal proceedings” and “appellate proceedings”), there is inserted—

“1A Proceedings under sections (Plea in bar of trial) to (Nullity of proceedings on previous indictment or complaint) of the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Act 2010 (asp 00) are criminal proceedings (and are not appellate proceedings) for the purposes of this Schedule.”.

(3) In paragraph 4 (initial steps of criminal proceedings), at the end there is added—

“(f) the making of an application under section (Tainted acquittals)(3)(a)(ii) or (b) (tainted acquittals), (Admission subsequent to acquittal)(3) (admission subsequent to acquittal) or (New evidence)(2)(b) (new evidence) of the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Act 2010 (asp 00).”.

(4) In paragraph 5 (conclusion of criminal proceedings), at the end there is added—

“(d) where the initial steps of the proceedings are as mentioned in paragraph 4(f)—
(i) by refusal of the application,
(ii) if the application is granted and within 2 months thereafter a new prosecution is brought, by acquittal, or as the case may be by sentence, in the new prosecution.”.

(5) In paragraph 7 (discontinuance of proceedings), at the end there is added—

“(d) where the initial steps of the proceedings are as mentioned in paragraph 4(f) and the application is granted, if no new prosecution is brought within 2 months thereafter.”.>
Section 38

Robert Brown

379 In section 38, page 53, line 15, leave out subsection (2) and insert—

<(2) In section 41 (age of criminal responsibility), for “eight” substitute “12”.

Bill Aitken

126 In section 38, page 53, line 17, after <not> insert <normally>

Bill Aitken

127 In section 38, page 53, line 18, after <not> insert <normally>

Richard Baker

389 In section 38, page 53, line 26, at end insert—

<(5) The Scottish Ministers must, as soon as possible after the end of each of the reporting years, lay before the Scottish Parliament and publish a report on the disposal of cases (“relevant cases”) involving children who, but for section 41A of the 1995 Act (as inserted by subsection (2)), could have been prosecuted.

(6) For the purposes of subsection (5), the “reporting years” are—

(a) the period of 12 months beginning with the day on which this section comes into force, and

(b) the periods of 12 months beginning with the first and second anniversaries of that day.

(7) A report under subsection (5) must, in particular—

(a) specify the number of relevant cases disposed of during the reporting year,

(b) set out how those cases were disposed of, the costs and other resources involved in those disposals, and what (if any) alternative disposals were considered, and

(c) state what (if any) consideration the Scottish Ministers have given during the year covered by the report to the merits of altering the range of disposals available in such cases.>

Robert Brown

390 In section 38, page 53, line 26, at end insert—

<( ) The Scottish Ministers may not bring subsections (1) to (4) into force until the Children’s Hearings (Scotland) Act 2010 (asp 00) is fully in force.>

Section 39

Kenny MacAskill

128 In section 39, page 53, line 32, after <offence> insert <committed by the partnership>
Kenny MacAskill

129 In section 39, page 54, line 9, at end insert—

\(<\ ( )\) In subsection (1), the references to a partner of a partnership include references to a person purporting to act as a partner of the partnership.>

Section 40

Kenny MacAskill

130 In section 40, page 54, line 23, leave out \(<all\ reasonable\ hours>\) and insert \(<a\ reasonable\ time\ and\ in\ a\ reasonable\ place>\)

Bill Aitken
Supported by: Robert Brown

131 Leave out section 40

After section 40

Margaret Curran

403 After section 40, insert—

\(<\textit{Parole: victims’ representation}\\n\\n\textbf{Victims’ representation at Parole Board hearings}\\n\\n(1) Section 17 of the Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 2003 (asp 7) is amended as follows.\\n(2) After subsection (1), insert—\\n\quad “(1A) Representations under subsection (1) may include a request by the victim to be heard (either in person or through a representative) at the relevant hearing of the Parole Board for Scotland.\\n\quad (1B) In this section, the “relevant hearing” of the Board is the hearing at which the Board is to consider the convicted person’s case in order to decide whether to recommend, or direct, that person’s release on licence.”.\\n(3) In subsection (3), for “Parole Board for Scotland” substitute “Board”.\\n(4) After subsection (5), insert—\\n\quad “(5A) Where representations are made under subsection (1) which include a request to be heard at the relevant hearing, the Board must—\\n\qquad (a) give the victim reasonable notice in writing of when and where the hearing is to take place and invite the victim to—\\n\qquad \quad (i) attend the hearing, with or without an accompanying person, in order to be heard in person; or\\n\qquad \quad (ii) send a representative to the hearing to be heard on the victim’s behalf;\\n\qquad (b) in so doing, give the victim appropriate information about the hearing and how it is likely to be conducted including, in particular—

78
(i) information about any parts of the hearing from which the victim and any accompanying person are, or the victim’s representative is, to be excluded, and

(ii) any limits on their participation during the other parts of the hearing;

(c) at the hearing, afford the victim (or the victim’s representative) a reasonable opportunity to be heard.

(5B) A victim’s representative may only be a member of the victim’s immediate family or a friend of the victim.

(5C) In reaching its decision at or after the hearing, the Board must take account of—

(a) any written representations made under subsection (1); and

(b) anything said by the victim (or the victim’s representative) at the hearing.”.

After section 43

Kenny MacAskill

132 After section 43, insert—

<Bail conditions: remote monitoring requirements

Sections 24A to 24E of the 1995 Act (bail conditions: remote monitoring) are repealed.>

Section 58

James Kelly

404 In section 58, page 71, line 4, leave out from <18(7A)> to <Act),> in line 5 and insert <18 (prints, samples etc. in criminal investigations)—

( ) in subsection (3), the words “or on the conclusion of such proceedings otherwise than with a conviction or an order under section 246(3) of this Act” are repealed, and

( ) in subsection (7A),>

James Kelly

405 In section 58, page 71, leave out line 6, and insert—

<( ) The title of section 18A becomes “Retention of samples, etc.: persons prosecuted but not convicted etc.”, and in that section>

James Kelly

406 In section 58, page 71, line 11, after <(2)> insert—

<( ) the words “in respect of a relevant sexual offence or a relevant violent offence” are repealed, and

( )>
James Kelly
407 In section 58, page 71, line 13, at end insert—

<(  ) in subsection (4)(a), for “3” substitute “6”>,>

James Kelly
408 In section 58, page 71, line 18, at end insert <, and

(  ) the definition of “relevant sexual offence” and “relevant violent offence” is repealed.>

Section 59

James Kelly
409 In section 59, page 72, line 19, leave out from <such> to second <offence> and insert—

<(  ) an offence of assault, categorised by the Principal Reporter as grave, or (  ) such—
(i) other relevant violent offence, or
(ii) relevant sexual offence,>

James Kelly
410 In section 59, page 72, leave out lines 21 to 36

Robert Brown
380 In section 59, page 72, leave out lines 21 and 22, and insert—

<(7) Where this section applies, the sheriff may, on summary application by the relevant chief constable, make an order that, subject to section 18C(6) and (7), the relevant physical data, sample or the information must be destroyed no later than the destruction date.

(7A) The sheriff may only make the order referred to in subsection (7) if satisfied that the child continues to pose a risk to public safety and that retention of the relevant physical data, sample or information until the destruction date is justified by that risk.>

Robert Brown
381 In section 59, page 72, line 40, at end insert—

<“relevant chief constable” has the same meaning as in section 18A(11), with the modification that references to the person referred to in subsection (2) of that section are references to the child referred to in subsection (1)>.

James Kelly
411 In section 59, page 73, leave out lines 4 to 40
Robert Brown
382  In section 59, page 73, line 37, leave out from <18A(11)> to end of line 40 and insert <18B(10)>

James Kelly
412  In section 59, page 74, line 2, leave out from <after> to end of line and insert <at beginning insert “Except where section 18B applies and”>

Section 61

Kenny MacAskill
133  In section 61, page 76, line 6, after <reasons> insert <for making the reference>

Section 62(8,15),(992,994)

Robert Brown
383  In section 62, page 77, line 1, after <may> insert <, if satisfied that there is good reason to do so,>

After section 64

Kenny MacAskill
384  After section 64, insert—
<Child witnesses in proceedings for people trafficking offences>

In section 271 of the 1995 Act (vulnerable witnesses: main definitions)—
(a)  in subsection (1)(a), for “age of 16” substitute “relevant age”, and
(b)  after subsection (1), insert—
“(1A) In subsection (1)(a), “the relevant age” means—
(a) in the case of a person who is giving or is to give evidence in proceedings for an offence under section 22 of the Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 2003 (asp 7) (trafficking in prostitution etc.) or section 4 of the Asylum and Immigration (Treatment of Claimants, etc.) Act 2004 (c.19) (trafficking people for exploitation), the age of 18, and
(b) in any other case, the age of 16.”.>
Section 70

Kenny MacAskill

136 In section 70, page 89, line 34, leave out <and Wales>

Kenny MacAskill

137 In section 70, page 90, line 21, leave out from <body> to end of line 23 and insert <health and social care body mentioned in paragraphs (a) to (e) of section 1(5) of the Health and Social Care (Reform) Act (Northern Ireland) 2009 (c.1).>
Kenny MacAskill

144  In section 72, page 95, line 14, leave out <42> and insert <54>

After section 74

Kenny MacAskill

145  After section 74, insert—

<Sex offender notification requirements

Sex offender notification requirements

(1) The Sexual Offences Act 2003 (c.42) is amended as follows.

(2) In section 85 (notification requirements: periodic notification)—

(a) in subsection (1), for “period of one year” substitute “applicable period”,

(b) in subsection (3), for “period referred to in subsection (1)” substitute “applicable period”, and

(c) after subsection (4) insert—

“(5) In this section, the “applicable period” means—

(a) in any case where subsection (6) applies to the relevant offender, such period not exceeding one year as the Scottish Ministers may prescribe in regulations, and

(b) in any other case, the period of one year.

(6) This subsection applies to the relevant offender if the last home address notified by the offender under section 83(1) or 84(1) or subsection (1) was the address or location of such a place as is mentioned in section 83(7)(b).”.

(3) In section 86 (notification requirements: travel outside the United Kingdom), subsection (4) is repealed.

(4) In section 87 (method of notification and related matters), subsection (6) is repealed.

(5) In section 96 (information about release or transfer), subsection (4) is repealed.

(6) In section 138 (orders and regulations)—

(a) in subsection (2), after “84,” insert “85,”, and

(b) after subsection (3) insert—

“(4) Orders or regulations made by the Scottish Ministers under this Act may—

(a) make different provision for different purposes,

(b) include supplementary, incidental, consequential, transitional, transitory or saving provisions.”.

After section 75

Kenny MacAskill

146  After section 75, insert—
Risk of sexual harm orders: spent convictions

In section 7 of the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974 (c.53) (limitations on rehabilitation under the Act), in subsection (2), after paragraph (bb) insert—

“(bc) in any proceedings on an application under section 2, 4 or 5 of the Protection of Children and Prevention of Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2005 (asp 9) or in any appeal under section 6 of that Act;”.

Section 80

Angela Constance

In section 80, page 100, line 29, after <victims> insert <(including children and young people)>

Section 89

Bill Aitken

In section 89, page 106, line 37, leave out <review all the> and insert <disclose to the accused all>

Bill Aitken

In section 89, page 106, line 38, leave out from <and> to end of line 14 on page 107

Bill Aitken

In section 89, page 107, line 15, leave out <(5)> and insert <(2)>

Section 90

Bill Aitken

In section 90, page 107, line 19, leave out <(5) or (6)> and insert <(2)>

Bill Aitken

In section 90, page 107, leave out lines 24 to 26 and insert <and

(b) disclose to the accused any such information not already disclosed under section 89(2).>

Bill Aitken

In section 90, page 107, line 28, leave out <(5) or (6)> and insert <(2)>

Section 91

Bill Aitken

In section 91, page 108, line 5, leave out <89(5) or 90(2)> and insert <89(2) or 90(2)(b)>
Section 92

Bill Aitken

154 In section 92, page 108, line 10, leave out <89(5), 90(2)(c), 94(1)(c) or 95(3)(c)> and insert <89(2) or 90(2)(b)>

Section 93

Bill Aitken

155 In section 93, page 108, line 20, leave out <(5)> and insert <(2)>

Section 94

Bill Aitken

Supported by: Robert Brown

156 Leave out section 94

Section 95

Bill Aitken

Supported by: Robert Brown

157 Leave out section 95

Section 96

Bill Aitken

158 In section 96, page 110, line 28, leave out <89(5), 90(2)(c), 94(1)(c) or 95(3)(c)> and insert <89(2) or 90(2)(b)>

Section 97

Bill Aitken

159 In section 97, page 110, line 36, leave out <89(5), 90(2)(c), 94(1)(c) or 95(3)(c)> and insert <89(2) or 90(2)(b)>

Section 98

Bill Aitken

160 In section 98, page 111, line 5, leave out <89(5), 90(2)(c), 94(1)(c) or 95(3)(c)> and insert <89(2) or 90(2)(b)>
Section 100

Bill Aitken

161 In section 100, page 111, line 36, leave out <89(5), 90(2)(c), 94(1)(c) or 95(3)(c)> and insert <89(2) or 90(2)(b)>.

Section 102

Bill Aitken

162 In section 102, page 112, line 26, leave out from <89(5)> to <information> in line 28 and insert <89(2) or 90(2)(b) the prosecutor is required to disclose an item of information to an accused>.

Bill Aitken

163 In section 102, page 113, line 5, leave out from <89(5)> to end of line 6 and insert <89(2) or, as the case may be, 90(2)(b)>.

Section 106

Bill Aitken

164 In section 106, page 115, line 14, leave out <89(5), 90(2)(c), 94(1)(c) or 95(3)(c)> and insert <89(2) or 90(2)(b)>.

Section 111

Bill Aitken

165 In section 111, page 117, line 6, leave out <89(5), 90(2)(c), 94(1)(c) or 95(3)(c)> and insert <89(2) or 90(2)(b)>.

Section 116

Bill Aitken

166 In section 116, page 119, line 24, leave out from <89(5)> to end of line 27 and insert <89(2),
   (b) section 90(1) and (2),
   (c) section 93(2) (where it first occurs),>.

Section 117

Angela Constance

24 In section 117, page 120, line 10, at end insert <, or
   (b) to determine or control that conduct despite being able to appreciate the nature or wrongfulness of it.>.
Kenny MacAskill

167 In section 117, page 120, line 31, leave out <it> and insert <such abnormality>

Section 121

Kenny MacAskill

168 In section 121, page 123, leave out lines 2 and 3 and insert—

<(3A) No order may be made under subsection (1) unless a draft of the statutory instrument containing the order has been laid before and approved by resolution of the Scottish Parliament.>

Section 122

Kenny MacAskill

169 In section 122, page 125, line 1, leave out from <5,> to <29> in line 2 and insert <5 and 11>

Section 123

Robert Brown

385 Leave out section 123

After section 124

Kenny MacAskill

170 After section 124, insert—

<Licensing of street trading: food hygiene certificates>

(1) Section 39 of the 1982 Act (street traders’ licences) is amended as follows.

(2) In subsection (4), for the words from “the requirements” to the end substitute “such requirements as the Scottish Ministers may by order made by statutory instrument specify”.

(3) After subsection (4), insert—

“(5) An order under subsection (4) may specify requirements by reference to provision contained in another enactment.

(6) A statutory instrument containing an order made under subsection (4) is subject to annulment in pursuance of a resolution of the Scottish Parliament.”.

Section 125

Kenny MacAskill

171 In section 125, page 128, line 24, at beginning insert <In>
Kenny MacAskill
172 In section 125, page 128, line 24, leave out from <is> to <In> in line 26 and insert <, in>

Cathie Craigie
2 In section 125, page 128, line 25, leave out subsection (2)

Cathie Craigie
3 In section 125, page 128, line 26, leave out subsection (3)

Cathie Craigie
Supported by: Robert Brown
4 Leave out section 125

Section 128

Kenny MacAskill
173 In section 128, page 129, line 25, at end insert—

<(  ) in paragraph 2(3)(b), after “application” insert “(other than the date and place of birth of any person)”),

(  ) in paragraph 2(8)(a), after “application” insert “(other than the date and place of birth of any person)”),>

Section 129

Kenny MacAskill
174 Leave out section 129

After section 131

Kenny MacAskill
175 After section 131, insert—

<Reviews of premises licences: notification of determinations

(1) The 2005 Act is amended as follows.
(2) After section 39 (Licensing Board’s powers on review), insert—

“39A Notification of determinations

(1) Where a Licensing Board, at a review hearing—

(a) decides to take one of the steps mentioned in section 39(2), or

(b) decides not to take one of those steps,

the Board must give notice of the decision to each of the persons mentioned in subsection (2).>
(2) The persons referred to in subsection (1) are—
   (a) the holder of the premises licence, and
   (b) where the decision is taken in connection with a premises licence review application, the applicant.

(3) Where subsection (1)(a) applies, the holder of the premises licence may, by notice to the clerk of the Board, require the Board to give a statement of reasons for the decision.

(4) Where—
    (a) subsection (1)(a) or (b) applies, and
    (b) the decision is taken in connection with a premises licence review
        application,
    the applicant may, by notice to the clerk of the Board, require the Board to give a statement of reasons for the decision.

(5) Where the clerk of a Board receives a notice under subsection (3) or (4), the Board must issue a statement of the reasons for the decision to—
    (a) the person giving the notice, and
    (b) any other person to whom the Board gave notice under subsection (2).

(6) A statement of reasons under subsection (5) must be issued—
    (a) by such time, and
    (b) in such form and manner,
    as may be prescribed.”.

After section 132

Kenny MacAskill

176 After section 132, insert—

<Premises licence applications: food hygiene certificates

(1) Section 50 of the 2005 Act (certificates as to planning, building standards and food hygiene) is amended as follows.

(2) In subsection (7), for the words from “the requirements” to the end substitute “such requirements as the Scottish Ministers may, by order, specify.”.

(3) After subsection (7), insert—
    “(7A) An order under subsection (7) may specify requirements by reference to provision contained in another enactment.”.

(4) In subsection (8)(c), for “the 1990 Act” substitute “section 5 of the Food Safety Act 1990 (c.16)”.

Section 136

Kenny MacAskill

177 In section 136, page 135, line 3, at end insert—
“(ba) the notice does not include a recommendation under section 73(4),”

Kenny MacAskill

178 In section 136, page 135, leave out lines 22 to 27 and insert—

(a) hold a hearing for the purposes of considering and determining the application, and

(b) after having regard to the circumstances in which the personal licence previously held expired or, as the case may be, was surrendered—

(i) refuse the application, or

(ii) grant the application.”.

After section 137

Kenny MacAskill

179 After section 137, insert—

<Appeals

In section 131(2) of the 2005 Act (appeals), the words “by way of stated case, at the instance of the appellant,” are repealed.>

Schedule 4

Kenny MacAskill

180 In schedule 4, page 149, line 11, leave out <22(2) or>

Kenny MacAskill

181 In schedule 4, page 150, leave out lines 18 to 21

Section 140

Kenny MacAskill

182 Leave out section 140

Section 142

Kenny MacAskill

183 Leave out section 142

Section 143

Robert Brown

391 In section 143, page 138, line 30, after <148(1)> insert <other than one bringing into force section 17(1), (2) or (3)>
Kenny MacAskill

184 In section 143, page 138, line 32, at end insert—

<( ) an order under section (Mutual recognition of judgments and probation decisions)(1),>

Bill Aitken

185 In section 143, page 138, line 32, at end insert—

<( ) an order under section (New evidence)(10),>

Kenny MacAskill

186 In section 143, page 138, leave out line 33

Kenny MacAskill

187 In section 143, page 138, line 33, at end insert—

<( ) an order under section 146(1) containing provisions which modify any enactment (including this Act), or>

Kenny MacAskill

188 In section 143, page 138, line 34, leave out <146(1) or>

Robert Brown

392 In section 143, page 138, line 35, at end insert <or

( ) an order under section 148(1) bringing into force section 17(1), (2) or (3),>

Schedule 5

Kenny MacAskill

189 In schedule 5, page 151, line 35, at end insert—

<The Libel Act 1792 (c.60)

The Libel Act 1792 is repealed.

The Criminal Libel Act 1819 (c.8)

The Criminal Libel Act 1819 is repealed.

The Defamation Act 1952 (c.66)

In the Defamation Act 1952, section 17(2) is repealed.>

Kenny MacAskill

190 In schedule 5, page 152, line 24, at end insert—

<The Incest and Related Offences (Scotland) Act 1986 (c.36)

The Incest and Related Offences (Scotland) Act 1986 is repealed.>
In schedule 5, page 153, line 3, after <89> insert <, 111>

In schedule 5, page 153, line 3, at end insert—

In section 243(4)(b) of the Trade Union and Labour Relations (Consolidation) Act 1992 (restriction of offence of conspiracy: Scotland), the words “or seditious” are repealed.

In schedule 5, page 153, line 12, at end insert—

In Schedule 4 to the Criminal Procedure (Consequential Provisions) (Scotland) Act 1995 (minor and consequential amendments), in paragraph 44, sub-paragraph (2) is repealed.

In schedule 5, page 153, line 35, at end insert—

In section 11 (certain offences committed outside Scotland)—

(a) in subsection (3), for “proceeded against, indicted” substitute “prosecuted”,

(b) in subsection (4), for “dealt with, indicted” substitute “prosecuted”.

In schedule 5, page 157, line 8, at end insert—

In the Defamation Act 1996, section 20(2) is repealed.

In schedule 5, page 157, line 10, leave out paragraph 44 and insert—

The Crime and Punishment (Scotland) Act 1997 is amended as follows.

(1) In section 9 (power to specify hospital unit), in subsection (1)(a), for “insane” substitute “found not criminally responsible or unfit for trial”.

(2) In section 13 (increase in sentences available to sheriff and district courts), subsection (2) is repealed.

(4) In section 56 (powers of the court on remand or committal of children and young persons), subsection (3) is repealed.

In schedule 5, page 157, line 28, at end insert—
<The Legal Deposit Libraries Act 2003 (c.28)>

Section 10 of the Legal Deposit Libraries Act 2003 (exemption from liability: activities in relation to publications) is amended as follows—

(a) in subsection (1), the words “, or subject to any criminal liability,” are repealed,

(b) in subsection (2)(a), the words “in the case of liability in damages” are repealed,

(c) in subsection (3), the words “, or subject to any criminal liability,” are repealed,

(d) in subsection (4)(a), the words “in the case of liability in damages” are repealed,

(e) in subsection (6)(a), the words “, or subject to any criminal liability,” are repealed, and

(f) in subsection (8), the words “and criminal liability” are repealed.

Kenny MacAskill

197 In schedule 5, page 158, line 36, at end insert <and

    (ii) sub-paragraph (b) is repealed.>

Kenny MacAskill

387 In schedule 5, page 159, line 12, at end insert—

<The Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009 (asp 9)>

In section 55(7) of the Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009 (offences committed outside the United Kingdom), for “proceeded against, indicted” substitute “prosecuted”.

Kenny MacAskill

198 In schedule 5, page 159, line 14, leave out <134> and insert <156>

Section 148

Robert Brown

393 In section 148, page 139, line 19, after <sections> insert <17(4) and>
1st Groupings of Amendments for Stage 2

This document provides procedural information which will assist in preparing for and following proceedings on the above Bill. The information provided is as follows:

- the list of groupings (that is, the order in which amendments will be debated). Any procedural points relevant to each group are noted;
- the text of amendments to be debated on the first day of Stage 2 consideration, set out in the order in which they will be debated. THIS LIST DOES NOT REPLACE THE MARSHALLED LIST, WHICH SETS OUT THE AMENDMENTS IN THE ORDER IN WHICH THEY WILL BE DISPOSED OF.

Groupings of amendments

Purposes and principles of sentencing
26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 37, 38

Circumstances in which courts not to have regard to purposes and principles
33, 34, 35, 36

Relationship between section 1 and other law
39, 40, 54

Scottish Sentencing Council – composition (general)
41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 15

Scottish Sentencing Council – case for judicial majority
12, 13, 14

Scottish Sentencing Council – members (appointment, term of office)
49, 50

Sentencing guidelines – role of judiciary in approval and publication
51, 53, 16, 18, 18A, 18B, 57, 58, 19, 59, 20, 61, 66, 22, 68, 70, 23, 75

Notes on amendments in this group
Amendment 53 pre-empts amendment 16
Amendment 58 pre-empts amendment 19
Amendment 70 pre-empts amendment 23

Scottish Sentencing Council – objectives
52

Sentencing guidelines – application to young people
394
Assessments to accompany sentencing guidelines
55, 17, 62, 63, 65, 67

Dates on which sentencing guidelines to take effect
56

Relationship with existing power of High Court to issue sentencing guidelines
60, 71, 72, 76

Consultation on draft sentencing guidelines
64, 21, 395, 396

Effect of sentencing guidelines
69

Ministers’ power to request Council to prepare or review guidelines
397

Scottish Sentencing Council – power to provide information, advice etc.
73

Consultation on Scottish Sentencing Council’s business plan
74

Community payback orders (and requirements under CPOs) to be imposed on offenders

Purpose of community payback orders
77

Title of “supervision requirement”
78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, 90, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97

Notes on amendments in this group
Amendment 79 is pre-empted by amendment 204 in the group “Conduct requirements”
Amendment 83 is pre-empted by amendment 236, also in that group
Amendments 85, 86 and 87 are pre-empted by amendment 239 in the group “Compensation requirements”

Compensation requirements
200, 206, 235, 239, 286, 290, 327

Notes on amendments in this group
Amendment 239 pre-empts amendments 85, 86 and 87 in the previous group
Conduct requirements
201, 204, 207, 236, 275

Notes on amendments in this group
Amendments 204 and 236 pre-empt, respectively, amendments 79 and 83 in group “Title of “supervision requirement””

Supervision requirements
203, 234, 237, 238

Community payback orders – definitions
210, 211

Community payback orders – local authority (responsible officer and reports on offenders)
213, 214, 218, 219, 220, 222, 223, 224, 267, 296, 337

Community payback orders – special provision for level 1 unpaid work or other activity requirements
216, 243, 254, 259, 297

Community payback orders – alternative disposals available to court
227

Community payback orders – payment of offenders’ expenses
233, 265

Community payback orders – unpaid work or other activity requirement

Community payback orders – fine defaulters
252, 253, 258, 292

Community payback orders – mental health treatment requirements (chartered psychologists)
268, 269, 270, 271, 272, 273

Community payback orders – drug treatment requirement
274

Community payback orders – commencement and standards
276

Community payback orders – progress reviews
278, 279
Community payback orders – revocation, variation and discharge, including where CPO breached

Notes on amendments in this group
Amendment 323 pre-empts amendment 96 in the group “Title of “supervision requirement””

Community payback orders – restricted movement requirement
328, 329, 330, 331, 332, 333, 334, 335

Unpaid work and other activity requirement – consultation
98

Annual reports on community payback orders
99

Community payback orders – consequential modifications
342, 343

Offence of stalking, offence of threatening, alarming or distressing behaviour
399, 400, 401, 402, 378

Non-harassment orders – course of conduct
5, 6, 7

Presumption against short periods of imprisonment or detention
100, 101, 388, 1, 391, 392, 393

Report on operation of sections 14 and 17
102

Pre-sentencing reports about organisations
103

Voluntary intoxication by alcohol – effect in sentencing
104

Mutual recognition of judgments and probation decisions
105, 184

Minimum sentence for having in a public place an article with a blade or point
10, 10A

Involvement in serious organised crime
344, 345, 346, 347, 348, 349, 350, 351, 358

Notes on amendments in this group
Amendment 347 pre-empts amendment 348
Offences aggravated by connection with serious organised crime (corroboration)
352

Directing serious organised crime
353, 354, 355, 356

Failure to report serious organised crime
357, 106, 359, 360

Genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes
107, 108

Clarification of existing offence prohibiting the carrying of offensive weapons 109

Offence of having article with blade or point (or offensive weapon) on workplace premises
11

Extreme pornography – sounds accompanying images
361, 362, 363, 364, 366

Extreme pornography – excluded images
365, 367, 368, 369

Voyeurism – additional forms of conduct
110

Sexual offences – defences in relation to offences against older children 111

Penalties for offences of brothel-keeping and living on the earnings of prostitution
370

Engaging in, advertising and facilitating paid-for sexual activities
8, 8A, 8B, 8C, 8D, 9, 9A

People trafficking (and consequential provision)
371, 372, 373, 374, 375, 376, 377, 386, 387

Slavery, servitude and forced or compulsory labour
112, 143

Articles for use in fraud
113

Abolition of offences of sedition and leasing-making
114, 189, 192, 194, 196

Double jeopardy (Scottish Law Commission report)
115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 120A, 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 185
Children – age of criminal responsibility and minimum age of prosecution
379, 126, 127, 389, 390

Offences – liability of partners
128, 129

Witness statements
130, 131

Victims’ representation at Parole Board hearings
403

Bail conditions – remote monitoring requirements
132, 197

Retention of samples etc. – adults
404, 405, 406, 407, 408

Retention of samples etc. – children referred to children’s hearings (application to sheriff)
409, 410, 380, 381, 411, 382, 412

Notes on amendments in this group
Amendment 410 pre-empt amendment 380
Amendment 411 pre-empt amendment 382

Scottish Criminal Cases Review Commission – grounds for appeal
133, 134, 135

Witness statements – use during trial
383

Child witnesses in proceedings for people trafficking offences
384

Data matching for detection of fraud etc.
136, 137

Closure of premises associated with human exploitation etc. (minor corrections etc.)
138, 139, 140, 141, 142, 144, 198

Sex offender notification requirements
145

Risk of sexual harm orders – spent convictions
146

Assistance for victim support
413
Prosecutor’s duty to disclose information
147, 148, 149, 150, 151, 152, 153, 154, 155, 156, 157, 158, 159, 160, 161, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166

Mental disorder and unfitness for trial
24, 167, 195

Conditions to which licences under the 1982 Act are to be subject 168

Licensing – powers of entry etc. (definition of “authorised civilian employee”) 169

Licensing of metal dealers
385

Licensing of street trading – food hygiene certificates
170

Licensing of market operators
171, 172, 2, 3, 4

Notes on amendments in this group
Amendment 172 pre-empts amendments 2 and 3

Applications for licences
173

Provisions to be considered as part of the Alcohol (Scotland) Bill
174, 182, 186

Reviews of premises licences – notification of determinations
175

Premises licence applications
176, 180, 181

Personal licence applications
177, 178

Appeals against decisions of licensing board
179

Corruption in public bodies
183

Orders and regulations – circumstances in which affirmative procedure required 187, 188
Incest and related offences
190

Criminal law – revision
191, 193
Present:

Bill Aitken (Convener)
Robert Brown
Bill Butler (Deputy Convener)
Angela Constance
Cathie Craigie
Nigel Don
James Kelly
Stewart Maxwell

Also present: Richard Baker, Aileen Campbell, Rhoda Grant, Trish Godman and John Scott.

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill: The Committee considered whether to take evidence on Stage 2 amendments raising significant issues not considered during Stage 1. The Committee agreed to seek oral and written evidence on amendments 10 and 10A (minimum sentence for having in a public place an article with a blade or point); amendments 399-402 (new offence of stalking) and 378 (new offence of threatening, alarming or distressing behaviour); and amendments 370 (penalties for offences of brothel-keeping and living on the earnings of prostitution) and 8, 8A-8D, 9 and 9A (offences of engaging in, advertising and facilitating paid-for sexual activities).

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill: The Committee considered the Bill at Stage 2 (Day 1).

The following amendments were agreed to (without division): 33, 35, 36, 37, 41, 43, 13, 47, 50 and 51.

The following amendments were agreed to (by division)—

38 (For 5, Against 3, Abstentions 0)
40 (For 5, Against 3, Abstentions 0)
12 (For 5, Against 3, Abstentions 0)
14 (For 4, Against 4, Abstentions 0; amendment agreed to on casting vote)
49 (For 5, Against 3, Abstentions 0)
53 (For 4, Against 1, Abstentions 3)

The following amendments were disagreed to (by division)—

26 (For 4, Against 4, Abstentions 0; amendment disagreed to on casting vote)
27 (For 4, Against 4, Abstentions 0; amendment disagreed to on casting vote)
28 (For 1, Against 7, Abstentions 0)
29 (For 1, Against 7, Abstentions 0)
32 (For 3, Against 5, Abstentions 0)
39 (For 1, Against 7, Abstentions 0)
52 (For 1, Against 4, Abstentions 3)

Amendment 394 was moved and, with the agreement of the Committee, withdrawn.

Amendment 16 was pre-empted.

The following amendments were not moved: 30, 31, 34, 42, 44, 45, 46, 48, 15 and 54.

Sections 3 and 4 were agreed to without amendment.

Schedule 1 was agreed to as amended.

The Committee ended consideration of the Bill for the day, amendment 394 having been disposed of.
Scottish Parliament
Justice Committee

Tuesday 2 March 2010

[The Convener opened the meeting at 10:13]

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill

The Convener (Bill Aitken): Good morning, ladies and gentlemen. Welcome to the meeting. I remind everyone to ensure that mobile phones are switched off in order to avoid disrupting proceedings. All members of the committee are in attendance, so there are no apologies. I welcome Aileen Campbell MSP and Richard Baker MSP. I also welcome Rhoda Grant, who had escaped my vision. All of them are here in connection with amendments to the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill.

Item 1 is consideration of a paper by the clerk—paper J/S3/10/8/1—on the options that are available to the committee if it wishes to take evidence on amendments to the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill at stage 2. The key questions for the committee are summarised in paragraphs 18 and 19 of the paper.

10:15

An unfortunate, but perhaps inevitable, part of dealing with such complex legislation is that late in the day we receive amendments, some of which are far reaching. No one is to blame for that; all the amendments from the Government and from members that have been lodged late in the day are, of course, worthy of consideration and will be considered. However, the amendments concern several issues on which the committee has not taken evidence. We should have the benefit of evidence on those issues before making determinations on the relevant amendments.

I refer members to paragraph 6 on page 2 of paper J/S3/10/8/1, which highlights several issues. The double-jeopardy issue has largely gone away, because of a comment by the Cabinet Secretary for Justice in the chamber the other day and because of private discussions that I have had with him. I am reconciled to the situation for the moment—although we will see what develops—so we need not take evidence on that.

However, we must consider taking evidence on the new offence of stalking, which Rhoda Grant proposes in amendment 402, and on the new offence of threatening, alarming or distressing behaviour, which is in Scottish Government amendment 378. We should also take evidence—possibly restricted—on the minimum sentence for having in a public place an article with a blade or point, which is in Richard Baker’s amendment 10 and my amendment 10A, which would apply after section 24. Other issues are penalties for the offences of brothel keeping and living on the earnings of prostitution, which are in Government amendment 370, and the offences of engaging in, advertising and facilitating paid-for sexual activities, to which Trish Godman’s amendment 8 refers.

My view is that we should arrange to take evidence on those matters. I ask for members’ comments.

James Kelly (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab): There is no doubt that the bill is complex. Many stage 2 amendments have been lodged, several of which deal with matters that were not discussed at stage 1 and on which the committee did not have the opportunity to take evidence. Given that, the clerk’s note sets out several matters on which our considering whether to take further evidence is valid.

In relation to Rhoda Grant’s amendments, the Government’s counter-amendments and the amendments on prostitution, it is clear from representations made to committee members that many strong feelings have been aroused on both sides of the arguments about both subjects. It makes sense for the committee to take further evidence and to take stock before considering how to proceed with those amendments.

I take on board the convener’s points about knives. It has been the subject of much analysis and discussion in public, so we are more informed about it, although I would not be against taking limited evidence.

Stewart Maxwell (West of Scotland) (SNP): I agree with the convener. Apart from the fact that several amendments have been lodged slightly late in the day, the issue is that a number of amendments concern new issues on which the committee has not taken evidence. We should have the benefit of evidence on those issues before making determinations on the relevant amendments.

I refer members to paragraph 6 on page 2 of paper J/S3/10/8/1, which highlights several issues. The double-jeopardy issue has largely gone away, because of a comment by the Cabinet Secretary for Justice in the chamber the other day and because of private discussions that I have had with him. I am reconciled to the situation for the moment—although we will see what develops—so we need not take evidence on that.

However, we must consider taking evidence on the new offence of stalking, which Rhoda Grant proposes in amendment 402, and on the new offence of threatening, alarming or distressing behaviour, which is in Scottish Government amendment 378. We should also take evidence—possibly restricted—on the minimum sentence for having in a public place an article with a blade or point, which is in Richard Baker’s amendment 10 and my amendment 10A, which would apply after section 24. Other issues are penalties for the offences of brothel keeping and living on the earnings of prostitution, which are in Government amendment 370, and the offences of engaging in, advertising and facilitating paid-for sexual activities, to which Trish Godman’s amendment 8 refers.

My view is that we should arrange to take evidence on those matters. I ask for members’ comments.

James Kelly (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab): There is no doubt that the bill is complex. Many stage 2 amendments have been lodged, several of which deal with matters that were not discussed at stage 1 and on which the committee did not have the opportunity to take evidence. Given that, the clerk’s note sets out several matters on which our considering whether to take further evidence is valid.

In relation to Rhoda Grant’s amendments, the Government’s counter-amendments and the amendments on prostitution, it is clear from representations made to committee members that many strong feelings have been aroused on both sides of the arguments about both subjects. It makes sense for the committee to take further evidence and to take stock before considering how to proceed with those amendments.

I take on board the convener’s points about knives. It has been the subject of much analysis and discussion in public, so we are more informed about it, although I would not be against taking limited evidence.

Stewart Maxwell (West of Scotland) (SNP): I agree with the convener. Apart from the fact that several amendments have been lodged slightly late in the day, the issue is that a number of amendments concern new issues on which the bill contains nothing. We took no written or oral evidence on many of those matters at stage 1.

I slightly disagree with James Kelly about knives. We took no evidence whatever on knives at stage 1. People have views on the appropriate sentences for knife crime, but it would be reasonable—to say the least—to take proper evidence on that. I am slightly concerned about James Kelly’s use of the word “limited”. Of course, all the evidence that we take will be limited, but evidence on knife crime should be no more limited than that on other subjects.

Although I have a great deal of sympathy with Trish Godman’s amendment, I am concerned about the fact that we have had a lot of late submissions on the issue with which it deals—we have received new material only this morning—so further evidence requires to be submitted to, and considered by, the committee on that amendment, and on the other ones that have been mentioned, before we move forward.

Robert Brown (Glasgow) (LD): I agree with a good deal of what has been said, not least the convener’s summation. I agree that there are three areas on which we should divide our attention, but it is worth making a few additional comments.

Stalking—which Rhoda Grant’s amendment deals with—and the Government’s proposed new breach-of-the-peace-type statutory offence represent new areas as far as the bill is concerned, but they are relatively discrete areas, on which it would be possible for us to take substantial evidence without departing from the general issues in the bill. In a sense, that makes them easier to deal with.

The proposed prostitution-type offences are pretty wide ranging. The concern is that over the years, all sorts of views have been expressed about the best way of tackling the issue. Everyone is anxious for progress to be made and for the harm that is caused by prostitution to be diminished, but it is a big issue. To be frank, it is the sort of issue that would benefit from the setting up of a body such as a Government commission to examine the ins and outs of where we are and whether legislative changes would be worth while. Such matters are difficult to deal with by way of a by-blow in the context of a bill that is primarily about other issues.

On knife crime, it is true that there is a lot of information and heated opinion in the public domain, but there is much less clear research evidence—the committee has certainly not seen any—on what effects, deterrent or otherwise, particular sentences might have, were the legislation to be changed in that regard. I am talking about the cost implications and the effect on the number of people in prison, for example. As Stewart Maxwell rightly said, we require to take not limited but quite substantial evidence on all that. It is not just a matter of repeating the views on either side; it is a question of seeing what lies beneath those views and testing the evidence in the way that the committee would normally do and has done at stage 1 on other issues. We need to adopt a wider approach to the amendments on knife crime.

The Convener: I think that we should take limited oral evidence on that, but I am more than happy to ensure that relevant academic studies and statistical information be made available. I am sure that the clerks will involve Stewart Maxwell and Robert Brown in that.

Robert Brown: What format will the evidence seeking take? At stage 1, we would normally advertise in the usual way. At the very least, we should do something of that sort this time round, although I appreciate that the timescales are difficult and that, as the paper points out, there may be a need to defer our conclusion of stage 2, which would obviously affect the progress of the bill.

The Convener: As Robert Brown says, there is a time inhibition, but clearly our proposal would be to take any oral evidence before we had to deal with the relevant amendments. We are okay for this week and for next week—there is enough for us to get on with. We can certainly advertise in the usual manner and see what results that brings in, but I propose that we have a brief and limited oral evidence session on this topic involving two witnesses two weeks hence. We can, of course, return to it during consideration of the amendments.

Stewart Maxwell: I do not object to that course of action; I just suggest that the Scottish Parliament information centre may be of great assistance in directing requests for factual and research evidence. That would be preferable to issuing a general call.

The Convener: That is a helpful suggestion, which we will certainly take up.

James Kelly: The suggestion that the convener has outlined is sensible. It will allow us to take some oral evidence that captures the issues and gives us a sense of the differing views on them. As other members have said, our inviting written submissions will allow us to explore matters in more detail and come to a more considered opinion before we deal with the amendments.

The Convener: I would like to bring our discussion to a conclusion. We have agreed to take evidence under the headings that have been stated. Is it agreed that we should take what is the easiest administrative route and carry on considering amendments this week and next week, that we attempt to complete the evidence two weeks from today, and that we deal with the question of written evidence along the lines that have been suggested, in particular by involving SPICe?

Members indicated agreement.

Stewart Maxwell: For clarity, are you suggesting that we take written and oral evidence on the issues of knives and prostitution and written evidence on Rhoda Grant’s amendments on stalking, as per Robert Brown’s comments, or are you suggesting that we do the same for all three issues?
The Convener: We will have to take oral evidence on stalking, as well.

Stewart Maxwell: That is fine. I just wanted clarification.

The Convener: I am sorry if I did not make that clear.

Stewart Maxwell: I know that we are under time pressure, but I would prefer to treat the areas with the respect that they deserve, and to give them the time that they deserve. If that means going back and asking for a slight extension, it would be appropriate to do that.

The Convener: I think that the Minister for Parliamentary Business has been made aware of the difficulties under which we are operating. I have indicated to him that we will do our best but that a time extension might well be necessary.

The other decision that we have to make is whether to invite written submissions and, if so, by what deadline. At this stage, I welcome Trish Godman and John Scott, who have joined us for the current agenda item. I understand that Mr Scott wishes to say something.

John Scott (Ayr) (Con): I thank the committee for considering taking evidence on stalking. In particular, I am here to support my constituent Anne Moulds, who has—

The Convener: You have heard what we are going to do about the issue.

John Scott: I put on the record my thanks.

The Convener: That is appreciated. Ms Godman—do you have anything to add at this juncture?

Trish Godman (West Renfrewshire) (Lab): Yes. I agree with Stewart Maxwell that the issues are serious and that the more evidence the committee has, both written and oral, the better informed you will be in making decisions. I certainly support that position. Thank you.

The Convener: As has been made fairly clear, you are pushing at an open door.

Which persons or organisations do we wish to speak to? On knives, John Muir and the chief constable of Lothian and Borders Police, David Strang, who has had things to say about the issue, are the obvious choices.

Nigel Don (North East Scotland) (SNP): I echo a thought that I heard from across the table. I have great respect for John Muir. We have heard from him many times, and those of us who are on the Public Petitions Committee have heard from him more. If I may say so, what we need is not opinion, however well informed it is, but the benefit of research and a wider view of what works and what does not. I say that with the greatest respect to the views of John Muir and David Strang. I therefore suggest that we wait to see what kind of written responses we get, what research is available and where the experts are before we decide from whom we should hear.

The Convener: Those two aspects are not mutually exclusive. I believe that we need to take oral evidence, but that is enough for us to be going on with. We do not require to make final decisions today as to who will be involved.

Robert Brown: As what I said before perhaps suggested, I support what Nigel Don said. I agree that we should not exclude other people’s evidence, but we need people such as the Scottish Consortium on Crime and Criminal Justice not just to give written evidence but to give oral evidence so that we can test people about exactly what they are saying. I wonder whether we will need two evidence-taking sessions, either in one go or in successive weeks. I know that it would be difficult to find the time for that and that you are anxious to cut the evidence down, but the matter is important.

The Convener: It is important. Clearly, I would prefer to take more time to get a satisfactory result rather than to move forward too expeditiously, but time is finite, as I said.

Richard Baker (North East Scotland) (Lab): Absolutely, convener. I do not disagree that the committee should take further evidence on knife crime, because it has not been considered during stage 1, but it is important to reflect on the fact that we have had a parliamentary process through the petition by John Muir, which was also the subject of a summit in the chamber. We received a huge amount of research and evidence as part of that process, which the committee should take on board. In addition, victims of knife crime, particularly Mr Muir, have informed and strong opinions on the issue. It is important that the committee give those their due credence and respect.

The Convener: We do not need to finalise the decision today, but there has been a reasonable exchange of views and we know our direction of travel. The Cabinet Secretary for Justice, who is present, will appreciate our difficulties. As ever, we will do everything possible to proceed with the matter expeditiously.
On resuming—

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill: Stage 2

The Convener: Item 3 is the first day of stage 2 proceedings on the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill. The committee will consider amendments to parts 1 and 2 of the bill and will not proceed beyond that. I welcome the Cabinet Secretary for Justice, Kenny MacAskill, who is accompanied by senior officials from his department. In the event of our reaching amendment 103, in the name of Bill Wilson, Angela Constance will speak to it. Members should have copies of the bill and of the marshalled list and groupings of amendments for today’s consideration.

Section 1—Purposes and principles of sentencing

The Convener: Amendment 26, in the name of Robert Brown, is grouped with amendments 27 to 32, 37 and 38.

Robert Brown: I am glad to welcome several familiar faces to the table along with the cabinet secretary this morning. My comments on the group will be reasonably lengthy, but they will deal with some of the issues that we will come to later.

The Convener: That is perfectly understandable.

Robert Brown: The first three groups of amendments relate to the Government’s desire to state the purposes and principles of sentencing in statutory form. Broadly, I am against that, as it gives unnecessary rigidity to the law and leads to unintended consequences. There is little doubt in my mind as to the purposes and principles of sentencing. They are applied every day in the courts, and they are understood by the public. They involve, in various ways, the protection of the public, punishment, deterrence, reform, vindication of public repugnance against particular crimes, and compensation for victims, either by allowing them to see justice done or by including some sort of reparation to them.

It is the job of sentencers to apply those principles to various degrees in various situations, and that is where the professional skill of the sentencer comes in. Their job changes over time, in accordance with changing social norms. Prison reform, and the introduction of a wide range of community sentences, has meant that the sentence is intended not just to protect the public but, if possible, to reform the offender. There was not much evidence of that sort of thing in the days when people were hanged for stealing a sheep.
As soon as those principles are analysed and set down, inadequacies become apparent. What about mitigatory factors? What about the youth or poor upbringing of the offender—which is more important? What about the interests of the victim? If someone can be reformed by on-going supervision that lasts for five years, is that proportionate to an offence of breach of the peace? Is that an economic use of public funds?

My primary proposition is contained in amendment 38, and also in amendment 40, in group 3, which between them would delete sections 1 and 2. However, the first group of amendments seeks to improve the statement of the purposes and principles of sentencing, if we are to have it at all. That should be the first exercise.

Amendment 26 proposes that, although there cannot be a hierarchy of purposes of sentencing, it is all subject to the overriding purposes of fairness and justice, and the committee will recall our significant evidence on that from representatives of research bodies including the Scottish Consortium on Crime and Criminal Justice. Fairness and justice are wide concepts. They embrace justice to the offender, to the victim and to society, and they are the correct, overriding purposes of sentencing. Fairness and justice must take priority because, as has been said in evidence, the system has limited capacity to deliver other objectives such as deterrence and reform.

Amendment 27 makes the other purposes of sentencing in section 1 non-inclusive, and it allows flexibility for existing jurisprudence. It is a guard against unintended consequences or omissions. For example, the purposes of sentencing as drafted do not quite include the element of the indication of public distaste for particular crimes. There is a broad social desire to indicate the unacceptability of domestic violence, for example, but that is not quite covered by the other purposes that are in the bill.

Government amendment 37 successfully meets the committee’s view that there should be a clearer division between the purposes and principles of sentencing.

Amendment 28 arises from the evidence of the Scottish Consortium on Crime and Criminal Justice, whose representatives spoke about the principle of parsimony. The general point is that the state is entitled to interfere with the liberty of the citizen only to the extent that is necessary to achieve its purpose. The state intentionally draws out punishment and the reduction of crime as its key interests. Amendment 28 introduces the important principle of proportionality: that the sentence should fit the crime but should not be overly harsh and excessive—nor should it be inadequate.

Amendment 29 inserts further words into section 1(3)(a). The court needs to have regard to the nature and character of the crime, not just to its seriousness. It could be argued, for example, that a sex crime was less serious than a murder, on the basis that no life has been lost, but there are some such crimes that, by their nature, character and detail, are even more deserving of punishment than a particular murder offence.

Amendment 30 adds to the principles the early acceptance of guilt, which has traditionally been accepted as mitigatory, while the absence of such acceptance has been regarded as aggravatory. That is for all sorts of good reasons, not least of which is saving the victim and other close witnesses the ordeal of giving evidence. Omitting that aspect is another example of the possible unintended consequences of trying to state such principles in a statutory form.

Amendment 31 is intended to deal with the oddity that was noted by the committee in section 1(5), which is that the purposes and principles of sentencing only sort of apply, and only partially, to offenders under 18. That is linked to amendment 33, in group 2. The treatment of offenders under the age of 21 has always differed in kind from that of offenders over the age of 21, whether in terms of a greater latitude for youth, incarceration in a different sort of establishment or other ways.

There are, of course, other cut-offs—at 12, 13, 16 and 18—but they can be accommodated within the high-level principle of drawing attention to the fact that the offenders’ age is under 21. Again, the issue is missing from the bill. However, it is a vital and necessary principle that regard be had to the youth and, perhaps, immaturity of the offender.

Amendment 32, in the name of Aileen Campbell, is intended to place emphasis on the well-known fact that imprisoning a parent, especially a woman—I refer members to the evidence that we heard recently heard about Cornton Vale—has evil effects on his or her children, which, in turn, are likely to rebound on society. I would like to hear the debate on this amendment, with which I have some sympathy in principle. What would Aileen Campbell’s position mean in practice? Could it or should it mean that an offender with dependent children could escape prison in circumstances in which a childless offender would not? It is possible that that happens under the existing law. If it does not, however, what are the implications of the amendment?

Section 1 is an important section, and I have, in my amendments, attempted to improve areas in which the bill is not quite right and could be damaging. However, I remain concerned that there are certain things on which we have not heard evidence or about which we have not thought, but which could distort existing or future practice, not because we intend that to happen or because the motivations are not good, but because we have accidentally omitted something or overstated or understressed something else.

The committee was prepared to consider some leeway on the issue because stating what sentencing is for is viewed as a preliminary to the creation of the proposed sentencing council. However, after reflection, I have come to the view that that is not a valid proposition, and that the sentencing council can stand on its own without sections 1 and 2, if it is desired to proceed with it when we come to the consideration of the substantive matters on that area.

I move amendment 26.

Aileen Campbell (South of Scotland) (SNP): In February 2008, Scotland’s Commissioner for Children and Young People published a report called “Not seen. Not heard. Not guilty. The rights and status of the children of prisoners in Scotland”. The report argues, in relation to sentencing, that the children of prisoners are the invisible victims of crime and of our penal system. As well as the emotional loss of contact with a parent or significant carer, children might suffer from a financial disadvantage, a need to move house, bullying, shame, stigma, stress, regressive behaviour and the loss of a care-free childhood. The report also found that, in many social inquiry reports, information on children was included only if they were at risk from the offender, and further research suggests inconsistencies in relation to those reports.

As you know, convener, I have taken an interest in this issue since it was first raised by the children’s commissioner, and I wrote to the committee on the subject while it was taking evidence on the bill at stage 1. I have also raised the issue with the cabinet secretary, and I have been grateful for the support of a range of children’s organisations in developing a way forward. Action for Children and Children in Scotland have provided important perspectives on the rights of children in these situations. Families Outside, which supports people with family members in prison, has also done important work in this area, and estimates that there are currently 16,000 children in Scotland who are affected by the imprisonment of a parent or guardian.

It is also worth noting, as Robert Brown did, that the recent Equal Opportunities Committee report on female offenders cited Home Office figures showing that about half of the children of female prisoners will end up in prison. In light of that, it is essential that the best interests of the children of offenders are taken into account as part of the sentencing process.

I recognise that some members of the committee might have concerns about the rights of victims of crime and the desirability of consistency in sentencing on the basis of the crime that has been committed. I am not suggesting that parenthood should be a get-out-of-jail-free card. There will always be circumstances in which nothing but a prison sentence will be appropriate. Indeed, on some occasions, a custodial sentence will be in the best interests of the child. However, I think that information about a person’s caring responsibilities should be one of the factors that a court must consider when deciding on a sentence, while accepting that the independence of the judiciary is a cornerstone of the Scottish criminal justice system.

10:45

The Cabinet Secretary for Justice (Kenny MacAskill): Robert Brown’s amendments to section 1 are no doubt partly inspired by the Justice Committee’s stage 1 report.

Amendment 26 seeks to add fairness and justice as the primary purposes of sentencing. I recognise the committee’s view that “principles of fairness, justice and proportionality are at least as important as the purposes already included”.

I set aside for now the fact that amendment 26 would erect those as purposes, rather than principles as the committee had suggested. That may not have been helped by the lack of a proper label for the part of section 1 that constitutes the principles of sentencing, which we are now putting right in amendment 37.

Who could disagree with the importance of fairness and justice? I note, however, that if our proposals have been criticised as teaching granny to suck eggs, the proposals in these amendments are even more liable to criticism. References to fairness and justice are simply too high level to be of any use. We have instead in section 1 an expression of what is needed to deliver justice and ensure fairness.

Amendment 27 seeks to make the list of purposes in section 1(1) inclusive rather than exclusive. I recognise that the committee, in paragraph 36 of its report, took the view that the lists in subsections (1), (3) and (4) should be non-exhaustive and unranked. I agree with that, except in relation to the purposes that are set out in subsection (1).

Subsection (1) should be a complete expression of the purposes of sentencing, and that is what we believe we have created. Allowing the courts or others to establish their own purposes that do not fall within the list in subsection (1) would undermine the justice and fairness that the committee seeks. As we have said in the explanatory memorandum, the list is not intended to prevent the courts from considering other matters—including the non-exhaustive set of principles in subsection (3)—when sentencing offenders.

Amendment 28 would establish proportionality as the primary principle of sentencing. By proportionality, the amendment means the least oppressive sentence that is consistent with securing the reduction of crime and the protection of the public. That is in line with the suggestion by the Scottish Consortium on Crime and Criminal Justice to the committee that we include a principle of sentencing parsimony, but that suggestion was apparently not picked up by the committee in its conclusions.

I admit that the suggestion has some attractions. Sentences should certainly be no more oppressive than necessary, and by setting out the five purposes of sentencing in subsection (1), we avoid any suggestion that sentencing is all about punishment. However, I wonder whether it is right to single out the two purposes of securing the reduction of crime and the protection of the public in the way that amendment 28 does. Why are punishment, reform and rehabilitation and reparation excluded? Why should a court not require an offender to make reparation to his victim, just because that would not be necessary to reduce crime or protect the public? Amendment 28 is flawed, so I cannot accept it.

Amendment 29 would require the court to have regard to the nature and character of an offence as well as to its seriousness, as the Sheriffs Association suggested. I have difficulty in seeing what, if anything, that would add. In my view, the seriousness of an offence is a product of its nature and character; they are not really distinct elements. If we were to include all three words in the provision, we would be likely to tie the court in knots as it tried to work out what Parliament meant. I believe that the single word “seriousness” does what we want it to.

Amendment 30 would require the court to have regard to pleas of guilty and the stage at which they are tendered, as suggested by the Royal Society of Edinburgh. However, such provision is not necessary, as section 196 of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 already requires the court to take into account the stage in proceedings at which an intention to plead guilty is indicated, and the circumstances in which that indication is given. The court is then required to state whether the sentence that is imposed is different from what it would otherwise have been.

The committee will be aware of other provisions that require particular factors to be taken into account in sentencing, including those in the Offences (Aggravation by Prejudice) (Scotland) Act 2009. Those requirements are already in place, and there is no need to place the courts under a double duty to take those factors into account. Section 2(1) of the bill is also intended to ensure that other enactments, such as those that I have mentioned, take precedence over the purposes and principles of sentencing to the extent that they are inconsistent.

Amendment 31 would add a further sentencing principle, which would require the court to have regard to whether the offender was aged under 21 at the time of the offence. We certainly agree that the age of the offender is relevant to sentencing, but we believe that it is already covered by section 1(3)(e), which requires the court to have regard to the information that is before it about the circumstances of the offender.

There are, of course, other limitations in the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 on the sentencing of young offenders, including the requirement for a social inquiry report. There is some risk that, even though the list of matters in section 1(3) of the bill is inclusive, the reference to a specific age in amendment 31 may limit the ability of the court to take account of age more generally.

Accordingly, I invite the committee to reject Robert Brown’s amendments.

I am grateful to Aileen Campbell for lodging amendment 32. The purposes and principles that are set out in section 1 provide that courts must have regard to a number of elements, including the information that is before them about an offender’s family circumstances. Amendment 32 highlights the need for courts to be aware of the wider implications of their sentences, particularly their impacts on the children of offenders. It strikes an appropriate balance between justice for victims and sentencing in the best interests of the children of offenders. Therefore, we support it.

At stage 1, it was queried what exactly was meant by the term “principles of sentencing” in section 1. Amendment 37 is intended to bring clarity to section 1 and to identify clearly the principles of sentencing to which the courts must have regard.

Amendment 38 seeks to leave out section 1 in its entirety. I recognise that the committee was not convinced that, taking section 1 in isolation, a sufficiently good case had been made for its inclusion, but it recognised our view that an opening section that sets out in broad terms what sentencing is for may be a useful preliminary to the creation of a Scottish sentencing council.
The committee invited us to justify the necessity for setting out the purposes and principles of sentencing in the bill and to provide assurance that the provisions in sections 1 and 2 would not inadvertently change the law. The very fact that other amendments to section 1 have been lodged and debated demonstrates the value of section 1. If the purposes and principles of sentencing were widely agreed on and consistently understood, as some of those who gave evidence to the committee suggested, there would be no need for debate—we would all have drunk them in with our mother’s milk and would understand them implicitly. If we want our justice system to work effectively, we need a common understanding of what sentencing is for, and it is the Parliament’s role to provide that. We believe that setting out the purposes and principles of sentencing is important, not just as a preamble to the Scottish sentencing council provisions, but for its own sake.

James Kelly: I support amendments 26 and 27 and oppose amendments 28 to 32. I would like to make brief comments on two of the amendments in particular.

On amendment 28, in the name of Robert Brown, I think that we all agree that a prime principle in sentencing should be getting its proportionality and fairness correct. However, I am not comfortable with the words “imposing the least oppressive sentence”, which are inconsistent with the principle of proportionality.

I am not minded to support amendment 32, in the name of Aileen Campbell. I think that we all agree that it is important to take into account the children of offenders and the impact that any sentence may have on them, but it is also important to strike a balance. When a crime, particularly a violent crime, has been committed, we must balance the rights of the children against the rights of victims. If we went down the proposed route, there could be inconsistency in sentencing—Aileen Campbell alluded to that—and people who had committed the same crime could be given different sentences, depending on whether they had children. That is not an appropriate way to proceed. Obviously, courts are able to consider background reports. That allows the sheriff in sentencing to consider issues relating to the offender’s family, and that is the appropriate way to take such matters into account. If the amendment were agreed to, it could raise issues to do with inconsistency of treatment. I therefore oppose amendment 32.

Richard Baker: I have anxieties about setting down the principles and purposes of sentencing in legislation, and I share some of the concerns that Robert Brown has expressed. There can be unintended consequences in setting down the principles and purposes of sentencing in legislation. It has been clearly understood that matters that have previously been set down would inform the exercise of justice by the judiciary and the courts. As in many other instances in legislation, it can be dangerous to define such matters in law, particularly because of unforeseen omissions and because the application and evolution of justice policy changes over time, as Robert Brown rightly said. I appreciate that he seeks to improve the principles of sentencing if section 1 is passed and, in that spirit, I support amendments 26 and 27, but not 28, 29, 30 and 31, not least because aspects of those amendments are already taken into account by our justice system.

I appreciate the intention behind amendment 32 and agree that the welfare of those children whose parents are in the criminal justice system is extremely important. The matter was raised during the recent debate on female offending, although the amendment is not gender specific. When the matter was first raised by the children’s commissioner, it was highlighted that the courts take such matters into consideration already. Although I appreciate the intention, I am not persuaded of the need for the amendment or for the matter to be included in the bill.

I am sure that we all agree that the most important factor in determining a sentence must be the severity of the crime, but it is also right that the welfare of children involved must be a consideration and that a balance must be struck. If the amendments are accepted, the need for the court to take into account the offender’s family circumstances will be retained. We also need to consider that, unfortunately, in some circumstances it will be better for the child to have their parent removed. I acknowledge that Aileen Campbell made that point in her speech. I appreciate the concern raised by the children’s commissioner in his briefing on the matter that in many cases at present, information about an offender’s children does not come before the court and is not included in social inquiry reports. I do not think that anyone would argue that that should remain the case, although amendment 32 does not create such a specific requirement. In seeking to strike the right balance on such an important matter, I appreciate the intention behind the amendment, but I am not persuaded that we should put it in the bill.

I know that colleagues will listen to the rest of the debate before reaching a conclusion on amendment 38. However, having observed the difficulty of improving section 1, I think that there are strong reasons not to include it and I agree with Robert Brown that it is not necessary to retain the section as a preamble to the sentencing council.

Stewart Maxwell: I am content with the cabinet secretary’s comments about amendments 26 to 31. His arguments are reasoned and make perfect sense to me. I have concerns about amendment 32 and share some of the views expressed by Richard Baker and James Kelly, not about the principle involved but about whether what it seeks to achieve should be in the bill and whether it is necessary. As I understand it, the courts already take into account the offender’s family circumstances and section 1(4)(c) says that the matters to be taken account of include “the offender’s family circumstances”. I am not sure what including the words “responsibilities the offender has for the care of children or dependent adults” would add to what is in the bill. I have not yet firmly made up my mind about it, but it seems odd to add those words. I am slightly concerned that highlighting that consideration as something that a court must take into account—as opposed to any other family circumstances—would run the risk of skewing the court’s decision and it might be better to leave the wording as “family circumstances”.

11:00

The Convener: As there are no other contributions, I will make one of my own. Amendment 38 would delete section 1. It is important to clear up any misunderstanding following the cabinet secretary’s comments that Robert Brown was constrained in what he could do. We are required to look at the individual sections to see how they might be improved prior to determining whether to accept or reject them. Robert Brown has operated—very professionally, if I may say so—on that basis, although I do not agree with some of his arguments.

Section 1 is not vital. Members have heard me say that legislation should be specific and should not be open ended and, in that respect, section 1 fails. The purposes and principles of sentencing have been well established over the centuries and there is little or no need to put them in statute. A basic principle of legislation is that it should be simple and readily understandable. Section 1 will leave us very much open to uncertainties, because it is inevitable that something will be omitted or open to dual interpretation, despite the best intentions of everyone concerned. I am minded to support amendments 37 and 38.

I will not go through the other amendments in the group seriatim. Some are unnecessary and go against the grain of natural justice. The case for amendment 32 is arguable and has been advanced very eloquently by Aileen Campbell, but I think that the amendment is unnecessary. In proceeding to sentence, a court will require a social inquiry report if the offender is under 21 or has not previously been in custody. Any social inquiry report is bound to reflect the offender’s family circumstances, and if the social worker who prepared the report failed to draw the court’s attention to the family circumstances, I have no doubt that the defence solicitor would bring the matter firmly before the court. Although amendment 32 is well intentioned and constructive, I am unable to support it.

Robert Brown: I thank the convener for his kind words. The debate has been useful and interesting and has demonstrated and illustrated my central point, which is that the inclusion of a statement of the purposes and principles of sentencing, which has no obvious utility, is fraught with difficulties. I stand by amendment 38, which would leave out section 1. That approach has been borne out by the debate.

On the details, the convener is right to say that section 1 is perhaps not the most important section in the bill. Nevertheless, if we are to agree to include a statement of the purposes and principles of sentencing, we must get the balance right. I am grateful for members’ support for amendments 26 and 27. The cabinet secretary said that a reference to fairness and justice would be too high level to be of use. I do not agree that those are high-level issues in this regard. As a number of witnesses to the committee made clear, the concepts of fairness and justice underlie the whole basis of our approach to the criminal justice system and give guidance in practical circumstances—even if they are in with the bricks in terms of how judges and sheriffs view such matters.

On amendment 27, the cabinet secretary stuck by the approach in section 1(1), which he suggested provides the final word on the matter. However, that is not the final word, as was illustrated by the emergence of certain issues in the debate. Restorative justice is not mentioned in that context, as witnesses pointed out.

I will move amendment 28, which raises an important issue about the approach that we take, but I accept that there is a debate about whether the provision should be restricted to paragraphs (b) and (d) of section 1(1) or should be wider in context. The issue could be dealt with at stage 3, if appropriate.

On amendment 29, I am not persuaded by the cabinet secretary’s suggestion that the nature and character of an offence are implied by the word “seriousness”. Amendment 29 would add depth and meaning and—at least as far as I can see—would not have unintended consequences.
On amendment 30, I accept the cabinet secretary's point. I add only that, if we are to lay out the purposes and principles of sentencing in one place, it would not be inappropriate to repeat a reference to the mitigatory effect of an early plea of guilty. It makes sense to do that and it adds transparency to the procedure.

You could argue about the wording of amendment 31—I am prepared to discuss that—but I think that it brings out the age issue in a slightly different way from how Aileen Campbell brought out the issue of children. That is important if we are dealing with high-level purposes and principles. I was not persuaded by the cabinet secretary's point in that regard.

On amendment 32, the evidence that we got from the children's commissioner about what is put into social inquiry reports and what is not is not unimportant. I must confess that I was surprised to hear that, according to the survey that was carried out, there were a significant number of instances in which information about children was not present in the report. That needs to be dealt with and I hope that the cabinet secretary will take on board the observations that have been made in that regard to see whether there are other ways of tackling the issue. I share the view that other members have expressed that the phraseology of amendment 32 either does not add anything to what is in section 1(3)(e) or has a slightly distorting effect, which is not terribly helpful. I think that Stewart Maxwell expressed similar views and concerns about that.

At the end of the day, one has to make a judgment as to whether section 1 is necessary. I stand by the view that, even with the amendments, it is not necessary and that, if anything, it will have unintended and perhaps damaging consequences for the way in which the courts operate—there is no apparent public utility in doing things in that way.

I will press amendment 26.

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 26 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Brown, Robert (Glasgow) (LD)
Butler, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab)
Craigie, Cathie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (Lab)
Kelly, James (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab)

Against
Aitken, Bill (Glasgow) (Con)
Constance, Angela (Livingston) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West of Scotland) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 4, Against 4, Abstentions 0. I use my casting vote against the amendment.

Amendment 26 disagreed to.

Amendment 27 moved—[Robert Brown].

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 27 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Brown, Robert (Glasgow) (LD)
Butler, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab)
Craigie, Cathie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (Lab)
Kelly, James (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab)

Against
Aitken, Bill (Glasgow) (Con)
Constance, Angela (Livingston) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West of Scotland) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 4, Against 4, Abstentions 0. I use my casting vote against the amendment.

Amendment 27 disagreed to.

Amendment 28 moved—[Robert Brown].

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 28 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Brown, Robert (Glasgow) (LD)

Against
Aitken, Bill (Glasgow) (Con)
Butler, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab)
Constance, Angela (Livingston) (SNP)
Craigie, Cathie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (Lab)
Don, Nigel (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Kelly, James (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab)
Maxwell, Stewart (West of Scotland) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 1, Against 7, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 28 disagreed to.

Amendment 29 moved—[Robert Brown].

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 29 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Brown, Robert (Glasgow) (LD)
Against
Aitken, Bill (Glasgow) (Con)
Butler, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab)
Constance, Angela (Livingston) (SNP)
Craigie, Cathie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (Lab)
Don, Nigel (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Kelly, James (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab)
Maxwell, Stewart (West of Scotland) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 1, Against 7, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 29 disagreed to.

Amendment 30 not moved.

The Convener: I call amendment 31, in the name of Robert Brown.

Robert Brown: I will not move amendment 31, because I might come back to its phraseology at a later point.

The Convener: You are reserving your position and not moving amendment 31.

Amendment 31 not moved.

Amendment 32 moved—[Aileen Campbell].

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 32 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Constance, Angela (Livingston) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West of Scotland) (SNP)

Against
Aitken, Bill (Glasgow) (Con)
Brown, Robert (Glasgow) (LD)
Butler, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab)
Craigie, Cathie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (Lab)
Kelly, James (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 3, Against 5, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 32 disagreed to.

The Convener: The second group of amendments comes under the heading “Circumstances in which courts not to have regard to purposes and principles”. Amendment 33, in the name of Robert Brown, is grouped with amendments 34 to 36.

Robert Brown: Amendments 33 and 34 are designed to get rid of, respectively, section 1(5)(a) and section 1(5)(b).

On section 1(5)(a), as I mentioned previously and as was pointed out in the committee’s stage 1 report, it is odd and unnecessary to disapply the purposes and principles of sentencing to offenders under the age of 18. I appreciate that there should be differences in how we deal with young offenders, but those should be additions to the normal purposes rather than exceptions. It really cannot be said that punishment, deterrence, reform, protection of the public and the reduction of crime apply with less force to young offenders than to others, although the balance may vary.

Section 1(5)(b) is unnecessary. Where a specific sentence is set by law, nothing in the bill would override that express direction. Even with fixed sentences, such as the minimum recommended term for murder, there are issues on which the purposes and principles of sentencing would be brought to bear. An interesting point is whether the presumed sentences, which we will consider later in various forms, are fixed by law and therefore come within section 1(5)(b), which is possibly the case. In any event, the matter is already covered by sections 2(1) and 2(3).

I have no particular comments on amendments 35 and 36, on which I await the cabinet secretary’s comments with interest.

I move amendment 33.

Kenny MacAskill: Amendment 33 would leave out section 1(5)(a), with the effect that the requirement to have regard to the purposes and principles of sentencing would apply when the court is dealing with offenders aged under 18. The committee’s stage 1 report queried the application of section 1(1) to young offenders. Section 1(1) has no application to young offenders, as the duty on the court to have regard to the matters in sections 1(1) and 1(3) is disapplied in respect of young offenders.

As the committee recognised, the matters referred to in sections 1(1) and 1(3) are still relevant to young offenders, but further principles need to be considered in relation to young offenders, although we have not sought to set them out in the bill at this time. However, if the committee takes the view that the purposes and principles in the bill, and the associated duties on the courts, should apply to offenders under the age of 18, we will be content for amendment 33 to be agreed to.

Amendment 34 would leave out section 1(5)(b), with the effect that the requirement to have regard to the purposes and principles of sentencing would apply even when dealing with an offence for which the sentence is fixed by law. In our view, that would be pointless. Where Parliament has fixed the sentence for an offence, such as a life sentence for murder, there is no point in requiring the court to have regard to the purposes and principles of sentencing only to arrive back at the answer that Parliament has already dictated. It is important to remember that the exclusion operates only “so far as the sentence … is fixed by law”, so the purposes and principles will still be relevant in setting the punishment part of a mandatory life sentence or in other cases in which a mandatory sentence can be mitigated in exceptional circumstances.

Grouped with those amendments are our amendments 35 and 36. Amendment 35 will make a minor technical amendment to section 1(5)(c), which sets out a list of mental health disposals that are available to courts. Courts are not required to have regard to the principles of sentencing as set out in sections 1(2) and 1(3) in circumstances in which those disposals are to be used. The purpose of amendment 35 is to complete the list of mental health disposals that are available to courts. Amendment 36 is consequential on amendment 35.

Stewart Maxwell: I speak in favour of amendment 33, in the name of Robert Brown.
When the issue came up during stage 1, it made little sense to the committee that the purposes and principles of sentencing that are outlined in section 1(1) should not apply to offenders under the age of 18, therefore Robert Brown is quite correct to move amendment 33 to delete section 1(5)(a).
That is perfectly sensible.

However, I do not support amendment 34. As the cabinet secretary has argued, disapplying the purposes and principles to the imposition of sentences where the penalty is “fixed by law”, as section 1(5)(b) says, makes perfect sense, therefore I will not support amendment 34, which would delete section 1(5)(b).

The Convener: Amendments 35 and 36 are perfectly straightforward and require no comment.

As amendment 33 seeks to ensure a degree of consistency, I am minded to support it. However, I see little merit in amendment 34 for reasons similar to those that Stewart Maxwell has advanced.

11:15

Robert Brown: With regard to amendment 34, it was valid to raise the issue. I am not entirely satisfied with the cabinet secretary’s response but, given that this is a technical issue, I am prepared to go with the Government’s view. As a result, I will not move amendment 34.

Amendment 33 agreed to.

Amendment 34 not moved.

Amendments 35 to 37 moved—[Kenny
MacAskill]—and agreed to.

Amendment 38 moved—[Robert Brown].

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 38 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Aitken, Bill (Glasgow) (Con)
Brown, Robert (Glasgow) (LD)
Butler, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab)
Craigie, Cathie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (Lab)
Kelly, James (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab)

Against
Constance, Angela (Livingston) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West of Scotland) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 5, Against 3, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 38 agreed to.

Section 2—Relationship between section 1 and other law

The Convener: Amendment 39, in the name of Robert Brown, is grouped with amendments 40
and 54.

Robert Brown: This group of amendments centres on the relationship between the sentencing principles—which are no longer in the bill, but I think that we still have to consider a way forward—and the proposed sentencing council. I have to say that I regarded it as not just wrong but a constitutional outrage that a quango should be established that not only could give direction on sentencing to the courts but would itself be excluded from having to follow the very purposes and principles of sentencing. We will debate the sentencing council later, but I very much welcome the likely change in its status and relationships.

Obviously, in light of agreeing to amendment 38,
we will have to consider further how everything works together, but for the present purposes I will be moving and pressing the amendments in this group. Amendment 39 seeks to get rid of section 2(2), thereby subordinating the sentencing council to the law and taking away any power that it might have to go off on its own tangent outwith the sentencing purposes and principles. That is as it should be.

Amendment 40 seeks to continue the process of preventing the statutory enactment of these measures, which is only reasonable and follows what has already been agreed. Amendment 54 seeks to complete that process by expressly requiring sentencing guidelines to comply “with the purposes and principles of sentencing” laid down in section 1. I am well aware that that stipulation has in a sense become obsolete, but the principle behind it should be agreed to. We can consider how to put it into legislative form when we tidy up the effects of these amendments at stage 3. It means that we will have to make some tricky decisions, but stage 3 will allow us to sort things out in a practical way.

My point is that the sentencing council has to be subordinate to the general principles of sentencing, although I accept that we might have to look at the phraseology later on. As I say, I will move amendment 54 at the appropriate point.

I move amendment 39.

Kenny MacAskill: As I have already said, the committee invited us both to justify the necessity for setting out the purposes and principles of sentencing in the bill and to provide assurances that the provisions in sections 1 and 2 would not inadvertently change the law. Amendment 39 seeks to leave out section 2(2), which effectively provides that sentencing guidelines take precedence over the purposes and principles of sentencing, and amendment 40 seeks to leave out section 2 altogether.

I recognise that the committee found difficulty with the relationship between the purposes of sentencing in section 1 and the sentencing guidelines to be issued by the Scottish sentencing council. Specifically, the committee commented that the sentencing council does not appear to be required to reflect the purposes in preparing guidelines but the courts are obliged by section 2(2) to give precedence to the guidelines, should they and the purposes of sentencing come into conflict.

We are imposing new duties on the courts and it is essential that the courts are clear how those duties fit together. That is what section 2 does, and I consider that it is an essential part of the structure. Amendment 54 requires that sentencing guidelines are consistent with the purposes and principles of sentencing. Section 2(2) clarifies the relationship between the purposes and principles and the sentencing guidelines. It provides that, if a sentencing guideline is not consistent with the purposes and principles, the court need not comply with the purposes and principles to that extent. It is likely that sentencing council guidelines will be issued within the context of the purposes and principles of sentencing, as noted by the committee.

However, we cannot know what issues will be dealt with by sentencing guidelines in the future, and we feel that it is necessary to provide the scope and leeway for guidelines to tackle specific and detailed issues that cannot be predicted. A guideline on a particular type of offence might well give greater prominence to one of the purposes of sentencing or a particular principle. We would not want the council to be troubled with arguments about whether that is “consistent” with the purposes and principles.

We believe that it is right that specific guidelines about specific offences should have precedence over the more general requirements of section 1. If the committee agrees to the amendments in a later group, which will provide for the High Court itself to set sentencing guidelines, the argument for that will be even stronger.

We resist amendments 39, 40 and 54.

The Convener: The arguments have been fairly well canvassed already, but I return to Robert Brown to wind up and to press or withdraw amendment 39.

Robert Brown: My only observation is that, obviously, the Government will have to deal with the passage of amendment 38, which deleted section 1. The cabinet secretary’s comments have not come to grips with all of the implications of that. I have reread amendment 54 in particular, and I think that it stands by itself, despite the departure of section 1, although obviously “the purposes and principles of sentencing” now relate primarily to common-law purposes and principles of sentencing. We may need to examine that phrase in the future, but it is a useful constraint, notwithstanding the departure of section 1 and, I hope, section 2. I press amendment 39.

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 39 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

Brown, Robert (Glasgow) (LD)

Against
Aitken, Bill (Glasgow) (Con)
Butler, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab)
Constance, Angela (Livingston) (SNP)
Craigie, Cathie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (Lab)
Don, Nigel (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Kelly, James (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab)
Maxwell, Stewart (West of Scotland) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 1, Against 7, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 39 disagreed to.

Amendment 40 moved—[Robert Brown].

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 40 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.
2705  2 MARCH 2010  2706

For
Aitken, Bill (Glasgow) (Con)
Brown, Robert (Glasgow) (LD)
Butler, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab)
Craigie, Cathie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (Lab)
Kelly, James (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab)

Against
Constance, Angela (Livingston) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West of Scotland) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 5, Against 3, Absentions 0.

Amendment 40 agreed to.

The Convener: I suspend the meeting for five minutes.
11:23
Meeting suspended.
11:29
On resuming—
Section 3 agreed to.

Schedule 1—The Scottish Sentencing Council

The Convener: Amendment 41, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is grouped with amendments 42 to 48 and 15.

Kenny MacAskill: In paragraph 112 of its stage 1 report, the committee expressed concern that the existing wording of the schedule could result in a membership of two sheriffs principal and no sheriff. Amendment 41 addresses those concerns by providing that, in addition to the Lord Justice Clerk and one other High Court judge, one of the judicial members must be a sheriff. One member must also be a justice of the peace or a stipendiary magistrate.

Government amendment 43 provides that the final judicial member may be a High Court judge, a sheriff, a sheriff principal, a justice of the peace or a stipendiary magistrate. That provides the Lord Justice General with more flexibility in appointing the judicial members, meaning that, in line with the committee’s recommendations, a balanced judicial membership can be created. Furthermore, Government amendments have been lodged to recast the council as an advisory body and provide the High Court with the power to approve sentencing guidelines. In light of those points, I do not support amendments 42 or 15.

Amendment 44 and consequential amendments 45 and 46 seek to remove the prosecutor from the membership of the council. Input from the prosecution service is key to ensuring that the sentencing council creates balanced and well-thought-out guidelines. Although the bill requires consultation with the Lord Advocate, among others, on draft guidelines, that is no substitute for having prosecutorial experience at the council table.

Government amendment 47—and amendment 13, in the name of Bill Butler—will have the effect, when considered together, of responding to comments by the committee in its stage 1 report about listing the constable as a legal member of the council. It is essential to have police representation on the council. The police play a critical role in the front line of the criminal justice system and have a particular insight into the impact of offences on members of the public and on communities, as well as an understanding of long-term crime prevention. Government amendment 47 moves the constable from the list of legal members of the sentencing council to the list of lay members. I will, therefore, support amendment 13, in the name of Bill Butler, as it works together with Government amendment 47.

Amendment 48 adds two further members to the sentencing council, drawn from community justice authorities and the Scottish Prison Service. I am aware that, when we consulted on the creation of the sentencing council and subsequently during stage 1, there were calls for those two areas to be represented on the council, given their experience in offender management. The committee did not support those calls. The current membership of the council provides for two lay members; there is no reason why they should not be drawn from those who work with offenders in prisons and the community, if that were thought to give the council the best mix of experience and skills.

I move amendment 41.

The Convener: I now face the onerous task of calling myself to speak to amendment 42 and other amendments in the group.

Amendment 42 would enable representatives of the lower courts to be on the sentencing council. It stipulates that one member must be a justice and another must be a stipendiary magistrate. The stipendiary magistrate system is unique to Glasgow but has played a valuable role in the Scottish justice system for many years. By virtue of their office, the stipendiaries have become exceptionally experienced and are probably better placed even than sheriffs to express views on summary justice issues. In due course, the stipendiary system—albeit under a different name—may be extended to other jurisdictions. The Gill report recommends the appointment of district judges, who would resemble stipendiary magistrates and have limited civil jurisdiction. On that basis, it is highly desirable that a stipendiary magistrate be appointed to any sentencing council, to ensure that there is the appropriate input on summary matters.
Generally, this group of amendments has considerable merit. I am particularly attracted to some of Bill Butler’s amendments, which will have the effect of achieving a greater degree of balance on the proposed council.

I listened carefully to what the cabinet secretary said about the prosecutor’s membership of the council. Committee members will be aware that amendment 44, in my name, seeks to delete that provision. The long-established principle of the Scottish courts is that the Crown has no locus in so far as sentencing matters are concerned. That said, having listened to the cabinet secretary, I am persuaded that, on this occasion, there should perhaps be some input from the Crown. I intend therefore not to move amendment 44.

Robert Brown: I support Government amendment 47 for “one constable” to become a non-legal member of the council. Initially, I preferred Bill Butler’s formulation under his amendment 15, on the sheriffs and magistrates issue, but my interest is in the end result. I do not support the convener’s amendment 45 with its dilution of the prosecutor role. I think that he has conceded the argument; we need to retain the role. The prosecutor has a vital input to make to the sentencing council, but only if the council is constituted as an advisory body, as the Government concedes.

On my amendment 48, views were expressed on the Scottish Prison Service in submissions and evidence to the committee. Again, it is important to recognise the changes that I hope we will pass later today on the role of the sentencing council. If the intention had been for the council to be the top dog, so to speak, in giving orders to the courts, I would have been strongly against the prosecutor—or, in this instance, the Scottish Prison Service and others—being involved in its membership. However, having the sentencing council as an advisory body is a different ball game, and it would benefit from the input of the Scottish Prison Service and a community justice authority. In their various ways, the SPS and CJAs know about the effects of sentences on offenders. They also know about resources and the inputs that are required, and many other relevant issues. Despite the view that the committee expressed, albeit in a different context, I hope that members will, on reflection, regard my proposed additions as sensible additions that will add to the breadth and effectiveness of the sentencing council.

Bill Butler (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab): I support the cabinet secretary’s amendment 47 on the inclusion of “one constable”. It is an eminently sensible suggestion, particularly when it is taken with my eminently sensible suggestion in amendment 13, which picks up on a concern that the committee raised at paragraph 112 of its stage 1 report. As the committee said, we do not want to unbalance the council’s judicial composition. I lodged amendment 15 to try to get a balanced composition. That said, I accept that the cabinet secretary’s and convener’s amendments take us towards the eminently sensible position of a balanced composition on the putative council.

I do not accept that the SPS should be on the council. That view ties in exactly with the concerns that the committee raised in paragraph 112. I acknowledge Robert Brown’s point, but the principle of better caution means that I will not support it at this stage.

Stewart Maxwell: I speak in support of amendments 41 and 43, in the name of the cabinet secretary. If I am not mistaken, Bill Butler has accepted that the amendments deal with the issue that he is trying to deal with in his amendment 15. I am sure that the cabinet secretary’s amendments have dealt with it.

I also support the cabinet secretary’s amendment 47 and Bill Butler’s amendment 13. It is clear that amendment 13 deals with the issue that the committee raised in its stage 1 report and in the stage 1 debate. The cabinet secretary’s proposal under amendment 47 that “one constable” should become a lay member is entirely sensible and acceptable.

I disagree with Robert Brown’s amendment 48. The sentencing council was never intended to be “top dog”, to use his words. That is not how it has been laid out and the context has not changed much, if at all, such that we should now support including a CJA member and an SPS representative as he suggests. We should stick with what we agreed in our stage 1 report and not support amendment 48.

James Kelly: As the convener and Bill Butler have said, it is important to get right the balance and the expertise on the sentencing council. Several of the amendments are complementary in seeking to achieve that aim.

I oppose amendment 48, in Robert Brown’s name, because I am uncomfortable with the Scottish Prison Service being represented on the council. The SPS comes under the umbrella of the Government, so having an SPS representative could undermine the sentencing council’s independence.

Angela Constance (Livingston) (SNP): I will comment on Robert Brown’s amendment 48. I have long-standing sympathy with the idea of the SPS being represented on the sentencing council, and I was somewhat surprised that, when the SPS gave evidence to the committee, it did not appear to have the appetite for that, if my recollection serves me right. Given that, I will not support
Robert Brown’s amendment, with a bit of a heavy heart.

The Convener: I can see that.

Amendment 41 agreed to.

The Convener: Amendment 12, in the name of Bill Butler, is grouped with amendments 13 and 14.

Bill Butler: The policy intention behind the amendments is to secure the minimum balance that achieves a judicial majority of one on the council. The balance of judicial to non-judicial members is currently five to seven. The amendments would remove the reference to a constable, to which the cabinet secretary and other members have referred. I am grateful that the Scottish Government has shown, by lodging amendment 47 and supporting amendment 13, that it is willing to delete the constable. My amendments would make two other changes in favour of the judicial membership.

That is basically it. As I say, the amendment to leave out the constable would achieve the balance that we all want, so I hope that members will see fit to support amendments 12 to 14.

I move amendment 12.

The Convener: We are all of a mind about what we are trying to achieve. Once the amendments in the group are agreed to, they will achieve our aim.

Kenny MacAskill: The Government amendments in group 7, which we will deal with later, will recast the sentencing council as an advisory body that drafts sentencing guidelines for formal endorsement by the High Court. Those amendments will mean that guidelines will be issued with the High Court’s full authority. That is in line with the committee’s recommendations.

Amendments 12 to 14 relate to the sentencing council’s membership. Amendment 12 would ensure that sheriffs and justices of the peace were guaranteed representation on the council. I am conscious that concern was expressed at stage 1 that the provisions did not ensure that they would be represented.

Amendment 13 removes the constable from the council’s membership. However, it is essential that the police are represented, as has been said, because the police have a critical role. Government amendment 47, which we have dealt with, makes a constable a lay member of the council. We would have sought to lodge an amendment in identical terms to amendment 13; in order for the amendment to be accepted, we require the council to have police representation, as amendment 47 makes clear.

11:45

Amendment 14 would reduce to one the number of lay members on the council. It is essential that the council has a balance of opinions from legal and lay sources. The lay members may be drawn from the general public, from those with prison service or criminal justice social work experience, or from academia. It is essential to have balanced representation on the council if it is to improve public confidence in our system. For that reason, we cannot support amendments that seek to create a judicial majority on the council, particularly given our amendments that make the council an advisory body. That approach reflects the committee’s argument that a council with a judicial majority and a structure that left the final say on guidelines to the court would not represent a sufficient advance on the current arrangements.

I ask Bill Butler to withdraw amendment 12 and to not move amendment 14. I fully support amendment 13.

Bill Butler: I hear clearly what the cabinet secretary is saying. We just have a disagreement on the matter. I will not waste time by saying anything other than that I urge members to support amendments 12 and 14.

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 12 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Aitken, Bill (Glasgow) (Con)
Brown, Robert (Glasgow) (LD)
Butler, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab)
Craigie, Cathie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (Lab)
Kelly, James (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab)

Against
Constance, Angela (Livingston) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West of Scotland) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 5, Against 3, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 12 agreed to.

Amendment 42 not moved.

Amendment 43 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

Amendment 44 not moved.

Amendment 13 moved—[Bill Butler]—and agreed to.

Amendments 45 and 46 not moved.

Amendment 47 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.
Amendment 48 not moved.
Amendment 14 moved—[Bill Butler].

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 14 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Aitken, Bill (Glasgow) (Con)
Butler, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab)
Craigie, Cathie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (Lab)
Kelly, James (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab)

Against
Brown, Robert (Glasgow) (LD)
Constance, Angela (Livingston) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West of Scotland) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 4, Against 4, Abstentions 0. The casting vote is for the amendment, on the basis of what I said earlier.

Amendment 14 agreed to.
Amendment 15 not moved.

The Convener: The next group is on the appointment and term of office of members of the Scottish sentencing council. Amendment 49, in my name, is grouped with amendment 50.

Amendment 49 simply makes a requirement that any appointments are made with the approval of the Lord Justice General. In doing so, it changes the emphasis of the bill. The advantage is to take away some powers from Scottish ministers and ensure that the appropriate degree of detachment is taken in respect of appointments. I stress that I am in no way suggesting that the Government—or indeed any other Government of which I have had experience in this august assembly—is likely to bring about any undue influence in that respect. However, democracy is a tender plant that requires to be nurtured carefully, and the appropriate detachment is required in such circumstances. That is the justification for the amendment.

I move amendment 49.

Kenny MacAskill: Amendment 49 would require the approval of the Lord Justice General before the Scottish ministers could appoint the lay members of the Scottish sentencing council. Paragraph 2 of schedule 1 currently requires the Scottish ministers to consult the Lord Justice General before appointing the lay members of the council and also requires the Lord Justice General to consult the Scottish ministers before appointing the remaining members of the council. I see no merit in creating an imbalance between the procedures for appointing the lay and other members of the council, nor for creating what would, in effect, be a joint appointment procedure for lay members alone. The procedure is not about picking teams to be pitted against one another in the council. I expect the council to operate by consensus.

Government amendment 50 will clarify that the rule preventing any member from sitting on the council for more than five years does not apply to the Lord Justice Clerk as chairing member.

The Convener: In winding up the debate, I simply adhere to my earlier comments. A degree of detachment is required. I cast absolutely no aspersions on any previous Government or the present one, but that detachment is necessary.

The question is, that amendment 49 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Aitken, Bill (Glasgow) (Con)
Brown, Robert (Glasgow) (LD)
Butler, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab)
Craigie, Cathie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (Lab)
Kelly, James (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab)

Against
Constance, Angela (Livingston) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West of Scotland) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 5, Against 3, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 49 agreed to.
Amendment 50 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

The Convener: We turn to the role of the judiciary in the approval and publication of sentencing guidelines. Amendment 51, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is grouped with amendments 53, 16, 18, 18A, 18B, 57, 58, 19, 59, 20, 61, 66, 22, 68, 70, 23 and 75. I draw members’ attention to the pre-emption information that is shown on the groupings list. In addition, amendment 20 pre-empts amendment 61, but that was inadvertently omitted from the list.

Kenny MacAskill: During stage 1 it became clear that there were substantial concerns about the influence of sentencing guidelines on judicial discretion and how the Scottish sentencing council would function alongside the High Court. In light of that, and in line with the committee’s recommendations, we have re-examined the status of the sentencing council and lodged amendments that will recast it as an advisory body that will prepare sentencing guidelines for endorsement by the High Court. We believe, the committee does, that that will address the tension between the principle of the separation of powers and the influence of sentencing guidelines on judicial discretion.

Amendment 53 is the key amendment. It amends section 5(1) to require the sentencing council to prepare guidelines on the sentencing of offenders for the approval of the High Court. That means that guidelines must have the endorsement of the High Court before they can come into force. Government amendments 51, 58, 59, 61, 66, 70, 75 and 76 are consequential. They amend the provisions to reflect the altered role of the sentencing council and the High Court in preparing and endorsing new and revised guidelines. In due course, I will support Robert Brown’s amendment 56, which is in group 11, as it provides that it is no longer for the sentencing council to decide when a guideline comes into effect. Under our new model, that will instead be for the High Court to decide.

Amendment 68 will insert a new section that sets out the process of approval or rejection of the guidelines that the council prepares for the High Court.

Bill Butler’s and Robert Brown’s amendments would amend the provisions on the Scottish sentencing council. Those amendments, which no doubt reflect elements of the committee’s report as well as evidence that the committee received during stage 1, would change the approval process for sentencing guidelines and require them to be approved by the Lord Justice General, which in effect would make the sentencing council an advisory body. The Government amendments have a similar effect, by recasting the sentencing council as an advisory body that drafts sentencing guidelines for formal endorsement by the High Court sitting as the court of appeal. The Government amendments mean that guidelines would be issued with the full authority of the High Court, which is in line with the committee’s recommendations.

Robert Brown’s amendments 18A and 18B would further amend the guideline approval process that is set out in Bill Butler’s amendment 18. Amendment 18A would allow the Lord Justice General to approve sentencing guidelines with or without amendments, but does not require him to state his reasons for any amendments. Government amendment 68 provides for the High Court to approve guidelines with modifications, but requires it to state its reasons.

Amendment 18B provides that the clerk of justiciary must publish approved sentencing guidelines, whereas Government amendment 68 provides that the sentencing council must publish such guidelines. When we come to group 12, we will deal with Government amendment 72, which provides for the sentencing council to publish guideline judgments that are pronounced by the High Court. The intention is to ensure that all sentencing guidelines and guideline judgments are available in one place and are accessible to the public. That does not affect the role of the Scottish Court Service in relation to the publication of High Court opinions. In light of that, I cannot support Bill Butler’s or Robert Brown’s amendments in this group.

I move amendment 51.

Bill Butler: In my view, the principal amendment in the group is amendment 18, which would make it clear that the Lord Justice General, rather than the sentencing council, would have the final say, should any difference of view arise about a proposed sentencing guideline. The Lord Justice General could refer it back to the council, and the council would have to revise it to address the concerns that had been raised.

The reference in proposed new subsection (7A)(a) of section 5 to “Lords Commissioner of Justiciary” is how I understand judges are referred to formally in a criminal context. The phrase covers all the same judges who, in a civil context, sit in a Court of Session, inner house and outer house. The proposed drafting would allow the Lord Justice General to decide how many and which judges to involve in consideration of the proposed guidelines. The choice could be different each time. In practice, he would presumably select a small number of judges who had particular experience in criminal cases, depending on their availability. There is nothing to preclude the judges who are consulted in that context from including judges who are already members of the council.

The approach that I have suggested mostly involves amending section 5. In particular, it involves seeking to qualify the existing reference to the council publishing guidelines to make it clear that it could do so only after having had them approved by the Lord Justice General.

My amendments 19, 20 and 23 are consequential on amendment 16. Amendment 22 is necessary to reflect the fact that, by virtue of amendment 16, the council will, under section 6, finalise only proposed guidelines rather than guidelines.

Robert Brown: I will not move amendments 18A, 18B and 57, which the cabinet secretary commented on.

We are discussing an important group of amendments. The committee as a whole is grateful to the Government for responding to the evidence and the views of the committee on where the sentencing council should stand vis-à-vis the court and the Government. I have thought from the beginning that all our constitutional principles on the independence of the judiciary and the rule of law require the High Court to give the final imprimatur on sentencing guidelines, and my view was reinforced by the evidence of the Lord Justice General, the Lord Justice Clerk and other significant witnesses.

I think that the Government’s amendments ensure that that will be the case. I must confess that I have got slightly lost on the interrelation between them and Bill Butler’s amendments, but I am happy to support whatever is necessary to achieve the purpose.

Stewart Maxwell: I am happy to support Kenny MacAskill’s amendments 51 and onwards. As all members of the committee understand, the issue here is the delicate balance between the independence of the judiciary and the right of the public to expect clarity that enables them to understand sentencing. In that regard, the Government’s amendments respond to the stage 1 report.

I am disappointed that, as a result of the previous set of amendments, the judiciary will not only appoint members of the sentencing council but will have a majority on it and will get to approve the guidelines that it produces. I am not quite sure how much further forward that takes us; I think that the balance has been rather skewed the other way. However, I am happy that the Government has lodged amendments to deal with part of our stage 1 report, and I will support them.

Richard Baker: I do not share Stewart Maxwell’s anxiety about the position that we have reached. The important thing is what will work, and I think that the changes that we proposed will make the system work better. In addition, I put on record my welcome for the change in policy that the cabinet secretary has proposed.

We have been guided by what we think will work. We want a more transparent system of sentencing that people can be confident is consistent, but clearly it is also important to respect the separation of powers and the role of the judiciary, and to have the judiciary’s cooperation in developing a proposal to make the system work. That has been the motivation behind all Bill Butler’s amendments, both in this group and on membership of the council. It will still be possible for lay members, including victim representatives, to be on the council.

I am sure that the key issue of making the proposition work is what lies behind the cabinet secretary’s amendments 53 and 68, which are a welcome response to the points that the committee raised in its report. I strongly believe that nothing will be lost in relation to what it is hoped that the sentencing council will achieve. The amendments will bring practical benefits in ensuring that the council works well and that guidelines will be used effectively by the courts.

12:00

The Convener: If no other member wishes to make a contribution, I will speak.

I freely and frankly acknowledge that the Government has made every possible effort to achieve a satisfactory outcome on the issue. I appreciate that, as with many of the other issues with which we are dealing, the proximity of amendments has made life a bit difficult for us all. Perhaps we can all learn a lesson and consider it at an earlier stage in future, so that we do not have to go through a fairly convoluted process to arrive—largely—at the situation that we seek to reach.

Amendment 51 agreed to.

Schedule 1, as amended, agreed to.

Section 4—The Council’s objectives

The Convener: Amendment 52, in the name of Robert Brown, is in a group on its own.

Robert Brown: Amendment 52 is designed to give some shape and definition to the objectives of the sentencing council by bringing to the fore the effectiveness of the use that is made of prisons and of community sentences. Every professional who is involved in the criminal justice system knows that prison is the most expensive and the poorest and least successful way of meeting our criminal justice objectives—beyond, of course, the central objective of protecting the public. Equally, community sentences are often patchy and are far less successful in reducing crime or reforming offenders than we sometimes like to think.

Consideration of those issues should be at the heart of what the sentencing council will do. Consistency is no doubt a virtue, public awareness is invaluable and the research role will be vital, but what will tick the boxes and make the sentencing council worth the considerable expenditure that is proposed will be its impact on helping us to get the most effective use out of the considerable resources that are swallowed up by the criminal justice system. I hope that the committee will support that addition.

I move amendment 52.

The Convener: Are there any other contributions?

Stewart Maxwell: I have more of a question for Robert Brown than a contribution. The last line of amendment 52 states:

“by reference to the purposes and principles of sentencing”.
Given that we have removed all that from the bill, does Robert Brown believe that amendment 52 is still valid? Should the amendment be agreed to? If it is agreed to, would that line have to be deleted at stage 3?

The Convener: That is a contribution to the debate rather than a specific question, but I have no doubt that Robert Brown will answer that point in summing up.

My brief contribution is to say that I would have asked the same question as Stewart Maxwell, and I underline the necessity for an answer at the summing-up stage.

Kenny MacAskill: The convener and Stewart Maxwell have both alluded to the last line of amendment 52. The definition of “optimum” is a more difficult matter; I suspect that members around the table would have different views about what might be “optimum” depending on the emphasis that is given to particular purposes of sentencing. I doubt that the sentencing council would find that an easy requirement to put into practice and, accordingly, I cannot support amendment 52.

Robert Brown: I accept the point about the last line—the context has obviously changed as a result of earlier decisions—but that can be readily dealt with by deletion at stage 3, or now, if that is possible, although it is probably not worth getting into such complications. Nevertheless, it is important that the principle of the amendment is given effect, leaving any subsidiary matters to be sorted out later on.

I do not accept the cabinet secretary’s objections to amendment 52. Any word that is used in statute can give rise to issues of definition, but we should bear it in mind that we are giving a steer on what the sentencing council will do. It is, in a sense, up to the council to define the words and to operate in that general direction of travel. The provision would not affect in an immediate sense how people would be sentenced—it affects the work of the sentencing council. Against that background, I confess that I am not really too bothered about the precise meaning of words in the same way as the cabinet secretary. I press amendment 52.

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 52 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Brown, Robert (Glasgow) (LD)
Constance, Angela (Livingston) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West of Scotland) (SNP)

Against
Aitken, Bill (Glasgow) (Con)
Constance, Angela (Livingston) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West of Scotland) (SNP)

Abstentions
Butler, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab)
Craigie, Cathie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (Lab)
Kelly, James (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 1, Against 4, Abstentions 3.

Amendment 52 disagreed to.

Section 4 agreed to

Section 5—Sentencing guidelines

The Convener: Amendment 53, in the name of the minister, has already been debated with amendment 51. I point out that if amendment 53 is agreed to, amendment 16 will be pre-empted.

Amendment 53 moved—[Kenny MacAskill].

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 53 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Brown, Robert (Glasgow) (LD)
Constance, Angela (Livingston) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West of Scotland) (SNP)

Against
Aitken, Bill (Glasgow) (Con)

Abstentions
Butler, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab)
Craigie, Cathie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (Lab)
Kelly, James (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 4, Against 1, Abstentions 3.

Amendment 53 agreed to.

Amendment 54 not moved.

The Convener: Amendment 394, in the name of Angela Constance, is in a group on its own.

Angela Constance: I should say in the interests of clarity and transparency that I lodged amendment 394 after representations were made to me by Action for Children Scotland. Amendment 394 would require the Scottish sentencing council to publish guidelines on the sentencing of young offenders, including when it would be appropriate for the young offender to be referred to the children’s hearings system.

I am aware that section 5(3)(c) of the bill already states that guidelines may relate to “the particular types of sentence that are appropriate for particular types of offence or offender”.

That might cover young offenders, but amendment 394 would require that the Scottish sentencing council’s guidelines did that; it is about the difference between “can” and “must”. As mentioned in earlier debates, the motivation for the amendment is consistency in sentencing and good practice. We are all aware that the criminogenic and rehabilitation needs of young offenders are different to those of adults. The opportunities and challenges of working with young offenders are also very different.

Reflecting on the earlier debates about the composition of the Scottish sentencing council, which now has a judicial majority and therefore less room for other experts, I propose that it is now more appropriate for the application of sentencing guidelines to young people to be particularly specific.

I move amendment 394.

Robert Brown: I support the principle of what Angela Constance is trying to do with amendment 394, but I do not think that she has got it quite right.

“Sentencing guidelines must in particular relate to the sentencing of offenders”.

Does that mean every sentencing guideline? I rather think that it does. I accept that it could be a priority of the sentencing council to focus on the position of offenders under the age of 18. That is valid and I would support that.

The amendment seems to go beyond sentencing, which I am not sure is correct either, and deals with when young offenders are sent to the children’s panel. Although I appreciate that such a decision can be part of the sentencing process, more normally it is made before the case arrives at court so it is obviously more a matter for the Parliament than the sentencing council. It might be worth while looking again at amendment 394, but I cannot support it in its present form.

Stewart Maxwell: I echo some of Robert Brown’s comments. Although I understand the principle behind Angela Constance’s amendment, the use of the word “must” gives me some concern. I can think of examples of sentences for offences that have nothing to do with under 18s. There are issues about the inflexibility that the amendment would bring to the process. On reflection, I would find it difficult to support the amendment as drafted.

The Convener: Before the minister responds, I say that I find amendment 394 unobjectionable and understand Angela Constance’s direction of travel. However, I point out that it is highly likely, as she will know from her criminal justice social work experience, that in the circumstances that she is considering, even though the offender is over 16, a court might well seek the advice of the children’s panel prior to final disposal of the case. In the circumstances, unless the member can persuade me in her summing up, I am not minded to support the amendment.

Kenny MacAskill: As was mentioned by other committee members and the convener, sentencing guidelines already cover the matters raised in amendment 394. Section 5(3)(c) of the bill says that sentencing guidelines will relate to “the particular types of sentence that are appropriate for particular types of offence or offender” and so covers the sentencing of under 18s. It would not be helpful to require each and every sentencing guideline to deal with under 18s and references to children’s hearings. Where appropriate, we can rely on the sentencing council to ensure that that is covered in its work. I accept the spirit in which Angela Constance lodged amendment 394 and subsequent ones, but we view it as unnecessary.

Angela Constance: Given the comments and contributions from my learned colleagues, I seek leave to withdraw amendment 394.

Amendment 394, by agreement, withdrawn.

The Convener: Bearing in mind the time and that this is a sensible point to adjourn, the committee will finish its consideration of the bill today and move into private session.

12:13

Meeting continued in private until 13:15.
Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill

2nd Marshalled List of Amendments for Stage 2

The Bill will be considered in the following order—

- Sections 1 to 3 Schedule 1
- Sections 4 to 18 Schedule 2
- Sections 19 to 66 Schedule 3
- Sections 67 to 139 Schedule 4
- Sections 140 to 145 Schedule 5
- Sections 146 to 148 Long Title

Amendments marked * are new (including manuscript amendments) or have been altered.

Section 5

Kenny MacAskill

55 In section 5, page 3, line 23, leave out <include in any sentencing guidelines> and insert <, on preparing any sentencing guidelines, also prepare>

Bill Butler

17 In section 5, page 3, leave out lines 27 and 28

Robert Brown
Supported by: Kenny MacAskill

56 In section 5, page 3, line 30, leave out subsections (6) and (7)

Bill Butler

18 In section 5, page 3, line 32, at end insert—

<(7A) The Lord Justice General, on receipt of guidelines prepared under subsection (1), must—

(a) refer the guidelines to such other Lords Commissioner of Justiciary as the Lord Justice General considers appropriate, inviting their comments,

(b) having taken account of any comments made by virtue of paragraph (a), either—

(i) approve the guidelines, or

(ii) refer the guidelines back to the Council for further consideration, giving reasons for so doing.

(7B) Where the Lord Justice General approves guidelines under subsection (7A)(b)(i), the Council must publish them.
(7C) Where guidelines are referred back to the Council under subsection (7A)(b)(ii), the Council must review the guidelines and, taking account of the reasons given for the reference, prepare revised guidelines for the approval of the Lord Justice General; and subsection (7A) applies to revised guidelines prepared under this subsection as it applies to guidelines prepared under subsection (1).>

Robert Brown

18A As an amendment to amendment 18, line 7, after <guidelines> insert <with or without amendments>

Robert Brown

18B As an amendment to amendment 18, line 11, leave out <Council must publish them> and insert <Clerk of Justiciary must publish them, as approved, under the authority of the High Court>

Robert Brown

57 In section 5, page 3, line 34, leave out <by it> and insert <under the authority of the High Court>

Kenny MacAskill

58 In section 5, page 3, line 35, leave out <publish revised guidelines> and insert <prepare, for the approval of the High Court of Justiciary, revised guidelines>

Bill Butler

19 In section 5, page 3, line 35, leave out <publish> and insert <prepare for the approval of the Lord Justice General>

Kenny MacAskill

59 In section 5, page 3, line 36, leave out subsection (9) and insert—

<(  ) In this section and sections 6 to 13, references to sentencing guidelines include references to revised sentencing guidelines.>

Robert Brown

60 In section 5, page 3, line 36, at end insert—

<(  ) This section is without prejudice to the power of the High Court to pronounce an opinion on the sentence that is appropriate in certain types of case under section 118(7) or 189(7) of the 1995 Act.>

Section 6

Bill Butler

20 In section 6, page 4, line 2, leave out <before publishing> and insert <in preparing for the approval of the Lord Justice General>
In section 6, page 4, line 2, leave out from <publishing> to <guidelines> in line 3 and insert <submitting any sentencing guidelines to the High Court of Justiciary for approval>.

In section 6, page 4, line 4, after <guidelines> insert <together with a draft of the assessments referred to in section 5(5)>.

In section 6, page 4, line 5, leave out <draft> and insert <drafts>.

In section 6, page 4, line 5, at end insert—

<(  ) the Lord Justice General (who may, in turn, consult other Lords Commissioner of Justiciary),>

In section 6, page 4, line 7, at end insert—

<(  ) any committee of the Scottish Parliament for the time being established under the Parliament’s standing orders with a remit that includes the criminal justice system,>

In section 6, page 4, line 7, at end insert—

<(  ) persons aged under 18 who have been victims of offences relevant to the proposed guidelines, and bodies providing support to such persons.>

In section 6, page 4, line 8, after <persons> insert <and bodies>.

In section 6, page 4, line 9, leave out subsection (2).

In section 6, page 4, line 10, leave out <sentencing guidelines or revised sentencing guidelines> and insert <guidelines and assessments for submission to the High Court of Justiciary>.

In section 6, page 4, line 11, after <guidelines> insert <for approval by the Lord Justice General>.

In section 6, page 4, line 11, leave out <draft> and insert <drafts>.
After section 6

Kenny MacAskill

68 After section 6, insert—

<Approval of sentencing guidelines by High Court

(1) Sentencing guidelines have no effect unless approved by the High Court of Justiciary.

(2) On submitting sentencing guidelines to the High Court for approval, the Council must also provide the High Court with the assessments referred to in section 5(5).

(3) Where the Council submits sentencing guidelines to the High Court for approval, the Court may—

(a) approve the proposed guidelines—

(i) in whole or in part,

(ii) with or without modifications, or

(b) reject the proposed guidelines, in whole or in part.

(4) Where the High Court—

(a) rejects any of the proposed guidelines, or

(b) modifies any of them,

the Court must state its reasons for doing so.

(5) Sentencing guidelines approved by the High Court take effect on such date as the Court may determine.

(6) Different dates may be determined in relation to—

(a) different provisions of the guidelines, or

(b) different purposes.

(7) As soon as possible after the approval of sentencing guidelines by the High Court, the Council must publish—

(a) the guidelines as approved (including the date on which they take effect), and

(b) the assessments referred to in section 5(5) (revised as necessary to take account of any modifications of the guidelines prior to their approval).

(8) The guidelines and assessments are to be published in such manner as the Council considers appropriate.>

Section 7

Kenny MacAskill

69 In section 7, page 4, line 19, after <guidelines,> insert <or to depart from them in accordance with provision contained in them under section 5(3)(d),>
Section 8

Angela Constance

397 In section 8, page 5, line 10, after <may> insert <, after consulting such persons and bodies as they consider appropriate,>

Kenny MacAskill

70 In section 8, page 5, line 10, leave out from <publishing> to end of line 11 and insert—

<(  ) preparing, for the approval of the High Court of Justiciary, sentencing guidelines on any matter, or (  ) reviewing any sentencing guidelines published by the Council.>

Bill Butler

23 In section 8, page 5, line 10, leave out <publishing> and insert <preparing for the approval of the Lord Justice General>

Section 9

Kenny MacAskill

71 Leave out section 9 and insert—

<High Court’s power to require preparation or review of sentencing guidelines>

(1) Where the High Court of Justiciary pronounces an opinion under section 118(7) or 189(7) of the 1995 Act, the Court may require the Council to—

(a) prepare, for the Court’s approval, sentencing guidelines on any matter, or
(b) review any sentencing guidelines published by the Council on any matter.

(2) On making a requirement under subsection (1), the High Court must state its reasons for doing so.

(3) The Council must comply with a requirement made under subsection (1) and, in doing so, must have regard to the High Court’s reasons for making the requirement.

After section 9

Kenny MacAskill

72 After section 9, insert—

<Publication of High Court guideline judgments>

(1) The Council must publish the opinions of the High Court of Justiciary pronounced under section 118(7) or 189(7) of the 1995 Act.

(2) As soon as possible after the High Court pronounces such an opinion, the Scottish Court Service must provide the Council with a copy of the opinion.

(3) The copy opinion is to be provided in such form and by such means as the Council may require.
(4) The opinions are to be published in such manner, and at such times, as the Council considers appropriate.

(5) This section does not affect any power or responsibility of the Scottish Court Service in relation to the publication of opinions of the High Court.

Section 11

Robert Brown

73 In section 11, page 6, line 17, leave out subsections (2) and (3)

Section 12

Robert Brown

74 In section 12, page 7, line 5, at end insert—

<(  ) the Lord Justice General (who may, in turn, consult other Lords Commissioner of Justiciary),>

Section 13

Kenny MacAskill

75 In section 13, page 7, line 26, at end insert—

<(  ) any sentencing guidelines submitted during the year to the High Court of Justiciary for approval and of the Court’s response to them,>

Kenny MacAskill

76 In section 13, page 7, line 30, leave out <references made by the High Court of Justiciary under section 9> and insert <requirements made by the High Court of Justiciary under section (High Court’s power to require preparation or review of sentencing guidelines)>

Section 14

Kenny MacAskill

199 In section 14, page 8, line 8, leave out <in respect of> and insert <on>

Robert Brown

77 In section 14, page 8, line 8, at end insert—

<(  ) The purpose of a community payback order is to punish an offender in a way that—

(a) helps to pay back to the community adversely affected by the conduct of the offender, and

(b) supports the offender in addressing the behaviour or circumstances that have contributed to that conduct.>
Robert Brown
78 In section 14, page 8, line 11, leave out  and insert <an offender>

Kenny MacAskill
200 In section 14, page 8, line 11, at end insert—
  <( ) a compensation requirement,>

Kenny MacAskill
201 In section 14, page 8, line 17, at end insert—
  <( ) a conduct requirement,>

Kenny MacAskill
202 In section 14, page 8, line 23, leave out <in respect of> and insert <on>

Kenny MacAskill
203 In section 14, page 8, line 24, at end insert—
  <( ) a supervision requirement,>

Kenny MacAskill
204 In section 14, page 8, line 25, leave out from second <or> to end of line 26 and insert—
  <( ) a conduct requirement,>

Robert Brown
79 In section 14, page 8, line 26, leave out second  and insert <an offender>

Kenny MacAskill
205 In section 14, page 8, line 27, leave out from <impose> to <imposes> in line 28 and insert <only impose a community payback order imposing>

Robert Brown
80 In section 14, page 8, line 29, leave out  and insert <an offender>

Kenny MacAskill
206 In section 14, page 8, line 29, at end insert—
  <( ) a compensation requirement,>

Kenny MacAskill
207 In section 14, page 8, line 31, at end insert—
  <( ) a conduct requirement,>
Kenny MacAskill
208 In section 14, page 8, line 33, leave out <making> and insert <imposing>

Kenny MacAskill
209 In section 14, page 8, line 37, leave out <in> and insert <by>

Kenny MacAskill
210 In section 14, page 9, line 4, after <section> insert <and sections 227B to 227ZI, except where the context requires otherwise>

Kenny MacAskill
211 In section 14, page 9, leave out lines 7 and 8

Kenny MacAskill
212 In section 14, page 9, line 11, leave out <in respect of> and insert <on>

Kenny MacAskill
213 In section 14, page 9, line 13, leave out from <such> to end of line 14 and insert <information about the offender and the offender’s circumstances.>

( ) An Act of Adjournal may prescribe—

(a) the form of a report under subsection (2), and
(b) the particular information to be contained in it.>

Kenny MacAskill
214 In section 14, page 9, line 14, at end insert—

<( ) Subsection (2) does not apply where the court is considering imposing a community payback order—

(a) imposing only a level 1 unpaid work or other activity requirement, or
(b) under section 227M(2).>

Kenny MacAskill
215 In section 14, page 9, line 28, leave out <make> and insert <impose>

Kenny MacAskill
216 In section 14, page 9, line 33, leave out <is subject to section 227M(7)> and insert <does not apply where the court is considering imposing a community payback order under section 227M(2)>

Kenny MacAskill
217 In section 14, page 9, line 35, leave out <in respect of> and insert <on>
In section 14, page 10, line 2, leave out <five> and insert <two>

In section 14, page 10, line 7, leave out from <and> to end of line 10 and insert—

<(  ) require the offender to report to the responsible officer in accordance with instructions given by that officer,

(  ) require the offender to notify the responsible officer without delay of—

(i) any change of the offender’s address, and

(ii) the times, if any, at which the offender usually works (or carries out voluntary work) or attends school or any other educational establishment, and

(  ) where the order imposes an unpaid work or other activity requirement, require the offender to undertake for the number of hours specified in the requirement such work or activity as the responsible officer may instruct, and at such times as may be so instructed.>

In section 14, page 10, line 16, leave out <or discharge any of them> and insert <, revoke or discharge the order>

In section 14, page 10, line 18, leave out <in respect of> and insert <on>

In section 14, page 10, line 20, leave out <five> and insert <two>

In section 14, page 10, line 21, leave out <Saturdays and Sundays> and insert

In section 14, page 10, leave out lines 22 to 39

In section 14, page 11, line 2, leave out <in respect of> and insert <on>

In section 14, page 11, line 6, leave out <in respect of> and insert <on>
Kenny MacAskill

227 In section 14, page 11, line 7, leave out from <from> to end of line 10 and insert <imposing a fine or any other sentence (other than imprisonment), or making any other order, that it would be entitled to impose or make in respect of the offence.>

Kenny MacAskill

228 In section 14, page 11, line 11, leave out <in respect of> and insert <on>

Kenny MacAskill

229 In section 14, page 11, line 13, leave out <imposing the community payback order>

Kenny MacAskill

230 In section 14, page 11, line 20, leave out <imposing the community payback order>

Kenny MacAskill

231 In section 14, page 11, line 28, leave out <An order imposing a> and insert <A>

Kenny MacAskill

232 In section 14, page 11, line 31, leave out <in respect of> and insert <on>

Kenny MacAskill

233 In section 14, page 11, line 39, at end insert—

Payment of offenders’ travelling and other expenses

(1) The Scottish Ministers may by order made by statutory instrument provide for the payment to offenders of travelling or other expenses in connection with their compliance with requirements imposed on them by community payback orders.

(2) An order under subsection (1) may—

   (a) specify expenses or provide for them to be determined under the order,

   (b) provide for the payments to be made by or on behalf of local authorities,

   (c) make different provision for different purposes.

(3) An order under subsection (1) is subject to annulment in pursuance of a resolution of the Scottish Parliament.

Robert Brown

81 In section 14, page 12, line 3, leave out  and insert <an “offender supervision”>

Robert Brown

82 In section 14, page 12, line 8, leave out second  and insert <an offender>
In section 14, page 12, line 10, leave out from <and> to end of line 12 and insert <at the time the order is imposed,>.

In section 14, page 12, line 13, at end insert —

<(zi) a compensation requirement,>

In section 14, page 12, leave out lines 19 and 20 and insert —

<( ) a conduct requirement,>

In section 14, page 12, line 19, leave out  and insert <an offender>

In section 14, page 12, line 21, at end insert —

<(3A) Subsection (3) is subject to subsection (3B) and section 227ZB(7B).

(3B) In the case of a supervision requirement imposed on a person aged 16 or 17 along with only a level 1 unpaid work or other activity requirement, the specified period must be no more than whichever is the greater of—

(a) the specified period under section 227L in relation to the level 1 unpaid work or other activity requirement, and

(b) 3 months.>

In section 14, page 12, line 22, leave out from <the> to end of line 23 and insert <“specified”, in relation to a supervision requirement, means specified in the requirement,>.

In section 14, page 12, line 22, leave out  and insert <an offender>

In section 14, page 12, leave out lines 24 to 41 and insert —

<Compensation requirement

(1) In this Act, a “compensation requirement” is, in relation to an offender, a requirement that the offender must pay compensation for any relevant matter in favour of a relevant person.

(2) In subsection (1) —
“relevant matter” means any personal injury, loss, damage or other matter in respect of which a compensation order could be made against the offender under section 249 of this Act, and

“relevant person” means a person in whose favour the compensation could be awarded by such a compensation order.

(3) A compensation requirement may require the compensation to be paid in a lump sum or in instalments.

(4) The offender must complete payment of the compensation before the earlier of the following—

(a) the end of the period of 18 months beginning with the day on which the compensation requirement is imposed,

(b) the beginning of the period of 2 months ending with the day on which the supervision requirement imposed under section 227G(2) ends.

(5) The following provisions of this Act apply in relation to a compensation requirement as they apply in relation to a compensation order, and as if the references in them to a compensation order included a compensation requirement—

(a) section 249(3), (4), (5) and (8) to (10),

(b) section 250(2),

(c) section 251(1), (1A) and (2)(b), and

(d) section 253.

Robert Brown

85 In section 14, page 12, line 26, leave out  and insert <an offender>

Robert Brown

86 In section 14, page 12, line 38, after second <the> insert <offender>

Robert Brown

87 In section 14, page 12, line 40, after second <the> insert <offender>

Kenny MacAskill

240 In section 14, page 13, line 6, leave out from <and> to end of line 7 and insert <or—

( ) unpaid work and other activity.

( ) Whether the offender must undertake other activity as well as unpaid work is for the responsible officer to determine.>

Kenny MacAskill

241 In section 14, page 13, line 8, after <and> insert <any>
Angela Constance

In section 14, page 13, line 9, after <officer> insert <but must be such as the responsible officer considers provides significant benefits in the area in which the work or activity is undertaken>.

Kenny MacAskill

In section 14, page 13, line 22, at end insert—

<( ) An order under subsection (6) may only substitute for the number of hours for the time being specified in a provision mentioned in the first column of the following table a number of hours falling within the range set out in the corresponding entry in the second column.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Provision</th>
<th>No fewer than</th>
<th>No more than</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Subsection (3)(a)</td>
<td>10 hours</td>
<td>40 hours</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Subsection (3)(b)</td>
<td>250 hours</td>
<td>350 hours</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Subsections (4) and (5)</td>
<td>70 hours</td>
<td>150 hours</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Kenny MacAskill

In section 14, page 13, line 33, at end insert—

<( ) Subsection (2) does not apply where the court is considering imposing a community payback order—

(a) imposing only a level 1 unpaid work or other activity requirement, or

(b) under section 227M(2).>.

Kenny MacAskill

In section 14, page 14, line 6, leave out <total>.

Kenny MacAskill

In section 14, page 14, leave out line 9 and insert—

<( ) any other activity to be undertaken.>.

Kenny MacAskill

In section 14, page 14, line 12, leave out <total>.

Kenny MacAskill

In section 14, page 14, leave out from <amend> to  in line 16 and insert—

<(a) substitute another percentage for the percentage for the time being specified in subsection (2)(a),
(b) substitute another number of hours for the number of hours for the time being specified in subsection (2)(b).>
An order is not to be made under subsection (3) unless a draft of the statutory instrument containing the order has been laid before and approved by.

248 In section 14, page 14, line 19, leave out <total>

249 In section 14, page 14, line 19, after <and> insert <any>

250 In section 14, page 14, line 22, at end insert <beginning with the imposition of the requirement.>

251 In section 14, page 14, line 23, leave out from <such> to end of line 29 and insert—

(a) in relation to a level 1 unpaid work or other activity requirement, 3 months or such longer period as the court may specify in the requirement,

(b) in relation to a level 2 unpaid work or other activity requirement, 6 months or such longer period as the court may specify in the requirement.>

252 In section 14, page 14, line 36, leave out <sentence> and insert <period>

253 In section 14, page 15, line 1, leave out <sentence> and insert <period>

254 In section 14, page 15, line 3, at end insert—

( ) The court, in imposing a community payback order under subsection (2) on a person aged 16 or 17, must also impose a supervision requirement.>

255 In section 14, page 15, line 5, leave out <total>

256 In section 14, page 15, line 7, after <and> insert <any>

257 In section 14, page 15, line 11, leave out <in respect of> and insert <on>
Kenny MacAskill
258 In section 14, page 15, leave out lines 14 to 17

Kenny MacAskill
259 In section 14, page 15, leave out lines 21 and 22

Kenny MacAskill
260 In section 14, page 15, line 29, leave out <in respect of> and insert <on>

Kenny MacAskill
261 In section 14, page 15, line 32, leave out <such requirements in respect of> and insert <community payback orders imposing such a requirement on>

Kenny MacAskill
262 In section 14, page 15, line 36, leave out <so directs> and insert <makes a direction under subsection (2)>

Kenny MacAskill
263 In section 14, page 15, line 39, leave out <so direct> and insert <make a direction under subsection (2)>

Kenny MacAskill
264 In section 14, page 15, line 41, leave out from <300> to end of line 42 and insert <the number of hours specified in section 227I(3)(b) less the aggregate of the number of hours of unpaid work or activity still to be completed under each existing requirement at the time the new requirement is imposed.>

( ) In calculating that aggregate, if any existing requirement is concurrent with another (by virtue of a direction under subsection (2)), hours that count for the purposes of compliance with both (or, as the case may be, all) are to be counted only once.

Kenny MacAskill
265 In section 14, page 16, leave out lines 12 and 13

Kenny MacAskill
266 In section 14, page 16, line 14, after <and> insert <any>

Kenny MacAskill
267 In section 14, page 16, line 14, at end insert—

<( ) Rules under subsection (1) may—

(a) confer functions on responsible officers,
(b) contain rules about the way responsible officers are to exercise functions under this Act.

Robert Brown
88 In section 14, page 16, line 33, after first <the> insert <offender>

Robert Brown
89 In section 14, page 17, line 10, after third <the> insert <offender>

Kenny MacAskill
268 In section 14, page 17, line 20, leave out <chartered> and insert <registered>

Kenny MacAskill
269 In section 14, page 17, line 33, leave out <chartered> and insert <registered>

Kenny MacAskill
270 In section 14, page 17, line 39, leave out <chartered> and insert <registered>

Robert Brown
90 In section 14, page 18, line 12, after third <the> insert <offender>

Kenny MacAskill
271 In section 14, page 18, line 19, after <practitioner> insert <(within the meaning of the Mental Health (Care and Treatment) (Scotland) Act 2003 (asp 13))>

Kenny MacAskill
272 In section 14, page 19, line 1, leave out <chartered> and insert <registered>

Kenny MacAskill
273 In section 14, page 19, line 24, leave out <chartered> and insert <registered>

Robert Brown
91 In section 14, page 20, line 7, after third <the> insert <offender>

Kenny MacAskill
274 In section 14, page 20, line 17, after <been> insert <, or can be,>

Robert Brown
92 In section 14, page 21, line 1, after third <the> insert <offender>
Kenny MacAskill

275 In section 14, page 21, line 13, at end insert—

<Conduct requirement

227VA Conduct requirement

(1) In this Act, a “conduct requirement” is, in relation to an offender, a requirement that the offender must, during the specified period, do or refrain from doing specified things.

(2) A court may impose a conduct requirement on an offender only if the court is satisfied that the requirement is necessary with a view to—

(a) securing or promoting good behaviour by the offender, or

(b) preventing further offending by the offender.

(3) The specified period must be not more than 3 years.

(4) The specified things must not include anything that—

(a) could be required by imposing one of the other requirements listed in section 227A(2), or

(b) would be inconsistent with the provisions of this Act relating to such other requirements.

(5) In this section, “specified”, in relation to a conduct requirement, means specified in the requirement.>

Robert Brown

276 In section 14, page 21, line 13 at end, insert—

<Community payback orders: commencement and standards

227VB Commencement of community payback orders

(1) Each community payback order must specify—

(a) if the order imposes a supervision requirement, the date by which the specified period (within the meaning of section 227G) must have begun,

(b) if the order imposes an unpaid work or other activity requirement, the date by which the offender must have begun to undertake the unpaid work or other activity.

(2) At least one of the dates specified by virtue of subsection (1) must, wherever possible, be either the day on which the community payback order is imposed, or the weekday immediately following that day.

(3) Both the dates specified by virtue of subsection (1) must be as soon after the day on which the community payback order is imposed as is practicable.

227VC Standards with which community payback orders must comply

(1) The Scottish Ministers may, by regulations made by statutory instrument, specify standards with which community payback orders must comply.

(2) Standards specified under subsection (1) must aim to ensure that community payback orders (and any requirements imposed by them) are—
(a) capable of being delivered promptly,
(b) effective,
(c) proportionate to the nature of the offence and the circumstances of the offender, and
(d) consistent with the purposes and principles of sentencing.

(3) Regulations under subsection (1) are subject to annulment in pursuance of a resolution of the Scottish Parliament.

---

Kenny MacAskill

277 In section 14, page 21, line 16, leave out <in respect of> and insert <on>

Kenny MacAskill

278 In section 14, page 21, line 22, leave out <by the appropriate court> and insert <(if different) the appropriate court, and, where those courts are different, the court must specify in the order which of those courts is to carry out the reviews>

Kenny MacAskill

279 In section 14, page 21, line 33, at end insert—

<(8A) Subsections (8B) and (8C) apply where, in the course of carrying out a progress review in respect of a community payback order, it appears to the court that the offender has failed to comply with a requirement imposed by the order.

(8B) The court must—

(a) provide the offender with written details of the alleged failure,
(b) inform the offender that the offender is entitled to be legally represented, and
(c) inform the offender that no answer need be given to the allegation before the offender—

(i) has been given an opportunity to take legal advice, or
(ii) has indicated that the offender does not wish to take legal advice.

(8C) The court must then—

(a) if it is the appropriate court, appoint another hearing for consideration of the alleged failure in accordance with section 227ZB, or
(b) if it is not the appropriate court, refer the alleged failure to that court for consideration in accordance with that section.>

Kenny MacAskill

280 In section 14, page 22, line 2, leave out <in respect of> and insert <on>

Kenny MacAskill

281 In section 14, page 22, line 5, leave out <proposes to vary, revoke or discharge> and insert <is considering varying, revoking or discharging>
Kenny MacAskill

282 In section 14, page 22, line 6, leave out <under section 227W(9) or 227X(1)> and insert <imposed on an offender>

Kenny MacAskill

283 In section 14, page 22, line 9, at end insert—

< ( ) Subsection (2) does not apply where the court is considering varying the order under section 227ZB(5)(c).>

Kenny MacAskill

284 In section 14, page 22, line 13, at end insert—

<( ) include provision for progress reviews under section 227W, ( ) where the order already includes such provision, vary that provision.>

Kenny MacAskill

285 In section 14, page 22, line 18, leave out <total>

Robert Brown

93 In section 14, page 22, line 19, leave out first  and insert <an offender>

Kenny MacAskill

286 In section 14, page 22, line 19, leave out from <supervision> to <227H> in line 20 and insert <compensation requirement>

Kenny MacAskill

287 In section 14, page 22, leave out lines 22 to 24

Kenny MacAskill

288 In section 14, page 22, line 25, leave out <total>

Kenny MacAskill

289 In section 14, page 22, line 26, leave out from <maximum> to end of line 27 and insert <appropriate maximum.>

( ) The appropriate maximum is the number of hours specified in section 227I(3)(b) at the time the unpaid work or other activity requirement being varied was imposed less the aggregate of the number of hours of unpaid work or other activity still to be completed under each other unpaid work or other activity requirement (if any) in effect in respect of the offender at the time of the variation (a “current requirement”).
In calculating that aggregate, if any current requirement is concurrent with another (by virtue of a direction under section 227N(2)), hours that count for the purposes of compliance with both (or, as the case may be, all) are to be counted only once.

Kenny MacAskill

290 In section 14, page 22, line 27, at end insert—

<( ) The court may not, under subsection (4)(c), increase the amount of compensation beyond the maximum that could have been awarded at the time the requirement was imposed.>

Kenny MacAskill

291 In section 14, page 22, line 28, leave out <in> and insert <by>

Kenny MacAskill

292 In section 14, page 22, line 35, at end insert—

<( ) Subsection (8) applies in relation to a community payback order imposed under section 227M(2) as if the reference to the offence in relation to which the order was imposed were a reference to the failure to pay in respect of which the order was imposed.>

Kenny MacAskill

293 In section 14, page 22, line 36, leave out <proposes to vary, revoke or discharge> and insert <is considering varying, revoking or discharging>

Kenny MacAskill

294 In section 14, page 22, line 39, after <227W(6)> insert <or 227ZB(2)(b)>

Kenny MacAskill

295 In section 14, page 23, line 5, leave out <in respect of> and insert <imposed on>

Kenny MacAskill

296 In section 14, page 23, line 7, leave out from <such> to end of line 8 and insert <information about the offender and the offender’s circumstances.>

( ) An Act of Adjournal may prescribe—

(a) the form of a report under subsection (2), and

(b) the particular information to be contained in it.

Kenny MacAskill

297 In section 14, page 23, line 8, at end insert—

<( ) Subsection (2) does not apply where the court is considering varying a community payback order—

20
(a) which imposes only a level 1 unpaid work or other activity requirement, or

(b) imposed under section 227M(2).>

Kenny MacAskill

298 In section 14, page 23, line 21, leave out <under section 227W for it to be reviewed> and insert <for a progress review under section 227W>

Kenny MacAskill

299 In section 14, page 23, line 31, leave out <in> and insert <by>

Kenny MacAskill

300 In section 14, page 23, line 32, leave out <made> and insert <imposed>

Kenny MacAskill

301 In section 14, page 23, line 36, leave out <in> and insert <by>

Kenny MacAskill

302 In section 14, page 23, line 36, leave out <made> and insert <imposed>

Kenny MacAskill

303 In section 14, page 23, line 36, at end insert—

<(  ) Subsection (6)(a) does not prevent the imposition of a restricted movement requirement under section 227ZB(5)(c).

(  ) In determining for the purpose of subsection (6)(a) whether an unpaid work or other activity requirement is a requirement that could have been imposed by the order when the order was imposed, the effect of section 227N(6) is to be ignored.>

Kenny MacAskill

304 In section 14, page 23, line 39, leave out second <in> and insert <by>

Kenny MacAskill

305 In section 14, page 23, line 40, leave out <made> and insert <imposed>

Kenny MacAskill

306 In section 14, page 23, line 40, at end insert—

<(  ) Subsections (4) and (5) of section 227E apply, with the necessary modifications, where a community payback order is varied as they apply where such an order is imposed.>
In section 14, page 24, line 3, leave out <in respect of> and insert <on>.

In section 14, page 24, line 3, leave out <is in force> and insert <has been imposed>.

In section 14, page 24, line 7, leave out from <an> to <varied> in line 8 and insert <the court is considering varying the order>.

In section 14, page 24, line 10, leave out <as proposed in the application>.

In section 14, page 24, line 14, leave out <as proposed in the application>.

In section 14, page 24, line 21, leave out <in respect of> and insert <on>.

In section 14, page 24, line 22, leave out <in> and insert <by>.

In section 14, page 24, line 30, at end insert—

<(4A) The court must, before considering the alleged failure—
  (a) provide the offender with written details of the alleged failure,
  (b) inform the offender that the offender is entitled to be legally represented, and
  (c) inform the offender that no answer need be given to the allegation before the offender—
     (i) has been given an opportunity to take legal advice, or
     (ii) has indicated that the offender does not wish to take legal advice.

(4B) Subsection (4A) does not apply if the offender has previously been provided with those details and informed about those matters under section 227W(8B) of this Act.>
Kenny MacAskill
316 In section 14, page 24, line 36, at end insert—

<(ba) where the order was imposed under section 227A(4), revoke the order and impose on the offender a sentence of imprisonment for a term not exceeding—

(i) where the court is a justice of the peace court, 60 days,
(ii) in any other case, 3 months,

(bb) where the order was imposed under section 227M(2), revoke the order and impose on the offender a period of imprisonment for a term not exceeding—

(i) where the court is a justice of the peace court, 60 days,
(ii) in any other case, 3 months,>

Kenny MacAskill
317 In section 14, page 24, line 38, after <or> insert <revoke or>

Kenny MacAskill
318 In section 14, page 24, line 38, at end insert <, or

( ) both impose a fine under paragraph (a) and vary the order under paragraph (c).>

Kenny MacAskill
319 In section 14, page 24, line 38, at end insert—

<(5A) Where the court revokes a community payback order under subsection (5)(b) or (ba) and the offender is, in respect of the same offence, also subject to—

(a) a drug treatment and testing order, by virtue of section 234J, or
(b) a restriction of liberty order, by virtue of section 245D(3),

the court must, before dealing with the offender under subsection (5)(b) or (ba), revoke the drug treatment and testing order or, as the case may be, restriction of liberty order.>

Kenny MacAskill
320 In section 14, page 24, line 38, at end insert—

<( ) If the court is satisfied that the offender has failed to comply with a requirement imposed by the order but had a reasonable excuse for the failure, the court may, subject to section 227Y(2), vary the order so as to impose a new requirement, vary any requirement imposed by the order or revoke or discharge any requirement imposed by the order.>

Kenny MacAskill
321 In section 14, page 25, line 1, leave out <imposes> and insert <varies the order so as to impose>
Robert Brown
94 In section 14, page 25, line 2, leave out first  and insert <an offender>

Robert Brown
95 In section 14, page 25, line 2, leave out second  and insert <an offender>

Kenny MacAskill
322 In section 14, page 25, line 3, at end insert—

< (7A) The court must ensure that the specified period under section 227G in relation to the supervision requirement is at least as long as the period for which the restricted movement requirement has effect and, where the community payback order already imposes a supervision requirement, must vary it accordingly, if necessary.

(7B) The minimum period of 6 months in section 227G(3) does not apply in relation to a supervision requirement imposed under subsection (7).>

Kenny MacAskill
323 In section 14, page 25, leave out lines 8 to 11

Robert Brown
96 In section 14, page 25, line 10, after second <the> insert <offender>

Kenny MacAskill
324 In section 14, page 25, leave out lines 19 to 24

Kenny MacAskill
325 In section 14, page 25, line 24, at end insert—

< ( ) Subsections (5)(b) and (ba) and (5A) are subject to section 42(9) of the Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 2003 (asp 7) (powers of drugs courts to deal with breach of community payback orders).>

Kenny MacAskill
326 In section 14, page 25, leave out lines 26 to 32

Robert Brown
97 In section 14, page 25, line 36, leave out second  and insert <an offender>

Kenny MacAskill
327 In section 14, page 25, line 37, leave out from <supervision> to end of line 38 and insert <compensation requirement.>
In section 14, page 26, line 14, leave from <A> to <offender> and insert <In imposing a restricted movement requirement containing provision under subsection (2)(a), the court must ensure that the offender is not required, either by the requirement alone or the requirement taken together with any other relevant requirement or order,>.

In section 14, page 26, line 15, at end insert—

( ) In subsection (3), “other relevant requirement or order” means—

(a) any other restricted movement requirement in effect in respect of the offender at the time the court is imposing the requirement referred to in subsection (3), and

(b) any restriction of liberty order under section 245A in effect in respect of the offender at that time.

In section 14, page 26, line 18, leave out <of not more than 12 months>.

In section 14, page 26, line 18, at end insert—

(4A) The period specified under subsection (4)(b) must be—

(a) not less than 14 days, and

(b) subject to subsections (4B) and (4C), not more than 12 months.

(4B) Subsection (4C) applies in the case of a restricted movement requirement imposed for failure to comply with a requirement of a community payback order—

(a) where the offender was under 18 years of age at the time the order was imposed, or

(b) where the only requirement imposed by the order is a level 1 unpaid work or other activity requirement.

(4C) The period specified under subsection (4)(b) must be not more than—

(a) where the order was imposed by a justice of the peace court, 60 days, or

(b) in any other case, 3 months.

In section 14, page 26, line 28, leave out <(4)(b)> and insert <(4A)(b)>.

In section 14, page 27, line 11, leave from <an> to <varied> in line 12 and insert <the court is considering varying the requirement>.
Kenny MacAskill
334 In section 14, page 27, line 14, leave out <proposed in the application>

Kenny MacAskill
335 In section 14, page 27, line 20, leave out <proposed in the application>

Kenny MacAskill
336 In section 14, page 27, line 34, leave out <in respect of> and insert <on>

Kenny MacAskill
337 In section 14, page 28, line 19, after <person> insert <and to the responsible officer>

Kenny MacAskill
338 In section 14, page 28, line 24, leave out <in respect of> and insert <on>

Robert Brown
98 In section 14, page 29, line 3, after <consult> insert—

   <(a) persons or organisations representing victims of crime,
       (b) community councils established in their area, and (c)>}

Kenny MacAskill
339 In section 14, page 29, line 5, leave out <in respect of> and insert <on>

Robert Brown
99 In section 14, page 29, line 11, at end insert—

<Annual reports on community payback orders

227ZJA Annual reports on community payback orders

(1) Each local authority must, as soon as practicable after the end of each reporting year, publish a report on the operation of community payback orders within their area during that reporting year.

(2) A report under subsection (1) must specify—

   (a) in relation to unpaid work or other activity under section 227I—

      (i) the number of offenders undertaking the unpaid work or other activity,

      (ii) the total number of hours of unpaid work or other activity undertaken,

      (iii) the nature of the unpaid work or other activity undertaken,

      (iv) the cost of organising and managing the unpaid work or other activity, and the estimated value of that work and activity,
(b) in relation to programmes under section 227P—
   (i) the number of offenders participating in the programmes,
   (ii) the number and nature of those programmes,
   (iii) the cost of providing those programmes.

(3) The Scottish Ministers must, as soon as practicable after the end of each reporting year, lay before the Scottish Parliament and publish a report on the operation of community payback orders during that reporting year.

(4) A report under subsection (3) must—
   (a) collate and summarise the data included in the various reports under subsection (1),
   (b) provide an assessment of the overall costs and effectiveness of community payback orders.

(5) In this section, “reporting year” means—
   (a) the period of 12 months beginning on the day this section comes into force, or
   (b) any subsequent period of 12 months beginning on an anniversary of that day.

Kenny MacAskill
340 In section 14, page 29, line 23, leave out <(1)(b)> and insert <(1)>

Kenny MacAskill
341 In section 14, page 29, line 24, leave out <the order imposing>

Kenny MacAskill
342 In section 14, page 29, line 25, at end insert—
   <(2) Schedule (Community payback orders: consequential modifications) modifies enactments in consequence of this section.>

After schedule 1

Kenny MacAskill
343 After schedule 1, insert—
   <SCHEDULE
   (introduced by section 14(2))
   COMMUNITY PAYBACK ORDERS: CONSEQUENTIAL MODIFICATIONS
   PART 1
   THE 1995 ACT

The 1995 Act
1 The 1995 Act is amended as follows.
In section 52H(3) (early termination of assessment order), the following are repealed—
(a) the word “or” immediately following paragraph (e), and
(b) paragraph (f).

In section 52R(3) (termination of treatment order), the following are repealed—
(a) the word “or” immediately following paragraph (e), and
(b) paragraph (f).

In section 53(12)(a) (interim compulsion orders), for sub-paragraphs (vi) and (vii) substitute—
“(vi) impose a community payback order;
(vii) make a drug treatment and testing order; or
(viii) make a restriction of liberty order.”.

In section 57A(15)(a) (compulsion order), for sub-paragraphs (vi) and (vii) substitute—
“(vi) impose a community payback order;
(vii) make a drug treatment and testing order; or
(viii) make a restriction of liberty order.”.

In section 58(8) (order for hospital admission or guardianship), for “make a probation order or a community service order” substitute “impose a community payback order or make a drug treatment and testing order”.

In section 106(1) (right of appeal), for paragraph (d) substitute—
“(d) against any drug treatment and testing order;”.

In section 108 (Lord Advocate’s right of appeal against disposal)—
(a) in subsection (1), paragraphs (d) and (e) are repealed, and
(b) in subsection (2)(b)(iii), for “(d) to (e)” substitute “(dd)”.

In section 121A(4) (suspension of certain sentences pending determination of appeal), for paragraphs (a) to (c) substitute—
“(aa) a community payback order;”.

In section 175 (right of appeal)—
(a) in subsection (2)(c), for “probation order, drug treatment and testing order or any community service order” substitute “drug treatment and testing order”;
(b) in subsection (4), paragraphs (d) and (e) are repealed, and
(c) in subsection (4A)(b)(iiii), for “(d) to (e)” substitute “(dd)”.

In section 193A(4) (suspension of certain sentences pending determination of appeal)—
(a) for paragraphs (a) to (c) substitute—
“(aa) a community payback order;”, and
(b) paragraph (e) is repealed.

Sections 228 to 234 (probation) are repealed.

In section 234H (disposal on revocation of drug treatment and testing order)—
(a) in subsection (1), for “drugs” substitute “drug”, and
(b) in subsection (3), for the words from “subject to” where they first occur to the end substitute “, in respect of the same offence, also subject to a community payback order, by virtue of section 234J, or a restriction of liberty order, by virtue of section 245D, the court shall, before disposing of the offender under subsection (1) above, revoke the community payback order or restriction of liberty order (as the case may be).”.

14 (1) Section 234J (concurrent drug treatment and testing and probation orders) is amended as follows.

(2) In subsection (1)—
   (a) for “sections 228(1) and” substitute “section”, and
   (b) for “probation order” substitute “community payback order”.

(3) In subsection (3)—
   (a) for “probation order” substitute “community payback order”, and
   (b) for paragraphs (b) and (c) substitute—
       “(ba) the local authority within whose area the offender will reside for the duration of each order.”.

(4) In subsection (4)—
   (a) in paragraph (a), for “probation order and is dealt with under section 232(2)(c)” substitute “community payback order and is dealt with under section 227ZB(5)(c)”, and
   (b) in paragraph (b), for “232(2)(c) of this Act in relation to the probation order” substitute “227ZB(5)(c) of this Act in relation to the community payback order”.

(5) In subsection (5)—
   (a) for “probation order” substitute “community payback order”, and
   (b) for “232(2)” substitute “227ZB(5)”.

15 Sections 235 to 245 (supervised attendance orders and community service orders) are repealed.

16 (1) Section 245A (restriction of liberty orders) is amended as follows.

(2) In subsection (2), the words from “but” to the end are repealed.

(3) After subsection (2) insert—
   “(2A) In making a restriction of liberty order containing provision under subsection (2)(a), the court must ensure that the offender is not required, either by the order alone or the order taken together with any other relevant order or requirement, to be in any place or places for a period or periods totalling more than 12 hours in any one day.

   (2B) In subsection (2A), “other relevant order or requirement” means—
       (a) any other restriction of liberty order in effect in respect of the offender at the time the court is making the order referred to in subsection (2A), and
       (b) any restricted movement requirement under section 227ZD in effect in respect of the offender at that time.”.

(4) In subsection (12)(a), for “subsection (2)” substitute “subsection (2A)”.

29
17 (1) Section 245D (combination of restriction of liberty orders with other orders) is amended as follows.

(2) In subsection (1)(b)—
   (a) in sub-paragraph (i), for “probation order made under section 228(1)” substitute “community payback order imposed under section 227A(1)”, and
   (b) in sub-paragraph (ii)—
      (i) for “probation order made under section 228(1) of this Act,” substitute “community payback order imposed under section 227A(1) of this Act or”, and
      (ii) the words “or both such orders” are repealed.

(3) In subsection (2), for “probation order” substitute “community payback order”.

(4) In subsection (3)—
   (a) the word “228(1),” is repealed,
   (b) in paragraph (a), for “probation order” substitute “community payback order”, and
   (c) in paragraph (b), for “either or both of a probation order and” substitute “either a community payback order or”.

(5) In subsection (4)—
   (a) for “probation order” substitute “community payback order”, and
   (b) for paragraph (b) substitute—
      “(b) the local authority within whose area the offender will reside for the duration of each order.”.

(6) Subsection (6) is repealed.

(7) In subsection (7)—
   (a) in paragraph (a)—
      (i) for “contained in a probation order and is dealt with under section 232(2)(c)” substitute “imposed by a community payback order and is dealt with under section 227ZB(5)(c)”, and
      (ii) the words from “234G(2)(b)” to “section” where it third occurs are repealed,
   (b) in paragraph (b), the words from “232(2)(c)” to “section” where it third occurs are repealed, and
   (c) in paragraph (c), for “232(2)(c) of this Act in relation to a probation order” substitute “227ZB(5)(c) of this Act in relation to a community payback order”.

(8) In subsection (8), for “232(2)” substitute “227ZB”.

(9) In subsection (9)—
   (a) in paragraph (a), for “probation order” substitute “community payback order”, and
   (b) paragraph (c) is repealed.

18 (1) Section 245G (disposal on revocation of restriction of liberty order) is amended as follows.
(2) In subsection (2), for the words from “by virtue” to the end substitute “in respect of the same offence, also subject to a community payback order or a drug treatment and testing order, by virtue of section 245D(3), it shall before disposing of the offender under subsection (1) above, revoke the community payback order or drug treatment and testing order.”.

(3) In subsection (3), for “probation order discharged” substitute “community payback order”.

(4) Subsection (4) is repealed.

19 In section 245J (breach of certain orders: adjourning hearing and remanding in custody etc.)—

(a) in subsection (1)—

(i) for “a probationer or” substitute “an”,
(ii) for “probation order” substitute “community payback order”, and
(iii) the words “supervised attendance order, community service order” are repealed,

(b) in subsection (2), the words “probationer or” are repealed, and

(c) in subsection (4), for “A probationer or” substitute “An”.

20 Sections 245K to 245Q (community reparation orders) are repealed.

21 In section 246 (admonition and absolute discharge), in each of subsections (2) and (3), the words “and that a probation order is not appropriate” are repealed.

22 In section 249(2) (compensation order against convicted person), for paragraph (b) substitute—

“(ab) where, under section 227A of this Act, it imposes a community payback order;”.

23 In section 307 (interpretation)—

(a) in subsection (1)—

(i) insert at the appropriate places—

““alcohol treatment requirement” has the meaning given in section 227V(1);”
““community payback order” means a community payback order (within the meaning of section 227A(2)) imposed under section 227A(1) or (4) or 227M(2);”
““compensation requirement” has the meaning given in section 227H(1);”
““conduct requirement” has the meaning given in section 227VA(1);”
““drug treatment requirement” has the meaning given in section 227U(1);”
““mental health treatment requirement” has the meaning given in section 227R(1);”
““programme requirement” has the meaning given in section 227P(1);”
““residence requirement” has the meaning given in section 227Q(1);”
“‘responsible officer’, in relation to a community payback order, is to be construed in accordance with section 227C;”
“‘restricted movement requirement’ has the meaning given in section 227ZD(1);”
“‘supervision requirement’ has the meaning given in section 227G(1);”
“‘unpaid work or other activity requirement’ has the meaning given in section 227I(1), and “level 1 unpaid work or other activity requirement” and “level 2 unpaid work or other activity requirement” are to be construed in accordance with section 227I(4) and (5) respectively;”, and

(ii) the definitions of the following terms are repealed—
“appropriate court”
“community service order”
“probationer”
“probation order”
“probation period”, and

(b) subsection (3) is repealed.

24 Schedules 6 and 7 are repealed.

PART 2
OTHER ENACTMENTS

The Social Work (Scotland) Act 1968 (c.49)

25 (1) The Social Work (Scotland) Act 1968 is amended as follows.

(2) In section 27 (supervision and care of persons put on probation or released from prisons etc.), in subsection (1)(b)—

(a) in paragraph (iii), for the words from “community service order” to the end substitute “community payback order imposed under section 277A or 227M of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 imposing an unpaid work or other activity requirement”, and

(b) sub-paragraphs (iv) and (va) are repealed.

(3) In section 86(3) (adjustments between authority providing accommodation etc. and authority of area of residence), after “supervision order” insert “, community payback order under section 227A of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995,”.

The Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974 (c.53)

26 (1) The Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974 is amended as follows.

(2) In section 5(4A) (rehabilitation periods for particular sentences), the words “a probation order or” are repealed.

(3) In section 6(3) (the rehabilitation period applicable to a conviction), the following are repealed—

(a) the words “or a probation order was made”,

(b) the words “or a breach of the order”, and
(c) the words “or probation order”.

The Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) (Scotland) Act 1980 (c.55)

27 In Schedule 1 to the Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) (Scotland) Act 1980, in Part 2 (ineligibility for and disqualification and excusal from jury service), in paragraph (bb)—

(a) for sub-paragraph (i) substitute—

“(i) a community payback order under section 227A of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.46);”, and

(b) sub-paragraph (iii) is repealed.

The Local Government and Planning (Scotland) Act 1982 (c.43)

28 In section 24 of the Local Government and Planning (Scotland) Act 1982 (councils’ functions in relation to the provision of gardening assistance for the disabled and the elderly), in subsection (3), for the words from “instruction” to “that Act” substitute “determination that may be made or instruction that may be given, for the purposes of an unpaid work or other activity requirement imposed in a community payback order under section 227A of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.46), by the responsible officer in relation to the order,”.

The Foster Children (Scotland) Act 1984 (c.56)

29 In section 2 of the Foster Children (Scotland) Act 1984 (exceptions to section 1), in subsection (3), for “probation order” substitute “community payback order under section 227A of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.46)”.

The Road Traffic Offenders Act 1988 (c.53)

30 In section 46(3)(b) of the Road Traffic Offenders Act 1988 (combination of disqualification and endorsement with probation orders and orders for discharge), the words “section 228 (probation) or” are repealed.

The Criminal Procedure (Consequential Provisions) (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.40)

31 In Schedule 3 to the Criminal Procedure (Consequential Provisions) (Scotland) Act 1995 (transitional provisions, transitory modifications and savings), in Part 2, paragraph 13 is repealed.

The Proceeds of Crime (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.43)

32 (1) The Proceeds of Crime (Scotland) Act 1995 is amended as follows.

(2) In section 25(9) (recall or variation of suspended forfeiture order), the words “probation order or” are repealed.

(3) In section 26(9) (property wrongly forfeited: return or compensation), the words “probation order or” are repealed.
The Crime and Punishment (Scotland) Act 1997 (c.48)

33 In the Crime and Punishment (Scotland) Act 1997, the following provisions are repealed—

(a) section 26 (evidence concerning certain orders), and
(b) in Schedule 1 (minor and consequential amendments), in paragraph 21, subparagraphs (27) to (29).

The Crime and Disorder Act 1998 (c.37)

34 In the Crime and Disorder Act 1998, in Schedule 6 (drug treatment and testing orders: amendment of the 1995 Act), in Part 1, paragraphs 1 and 2 are repealed.

The Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 (c.6)

35 In Schedule 9 to the Powers of Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 (consequential amendments), paragraphs 176 to 178 are repealed.

The Criminal Justice and Court Services Act 2000 (c.43)

36 (1) Schedule 7 to the Criminal Justice and Court Services Act 2000 (minor and consequential amendments) is amended as follows.

(2) In paragraph 4(2), in the entry relating to the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995, for “sections 209(3)(a) and 234(1)(a)” substitute “section 209(3)(a)”.

(3) Paragraphs 122 to 125 are repealed.

The Social Security Fraud Act 2001 (c.11)

37 In section 7(9)(b) of the Social Security Fraud Act 2001 (loss of benefit for commission of benefit offences), the words “or a court in Scotland makes a probation order” are repealed.

The Justice (Northern Ireland) Act 2002 (c.26)

38 In Schedule 4 to the Justice (Northern Ireland) Act 2002 (functions of justices of the peace), paragraph 37 is repealed.

The Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 2003 (asp 7)

39 (1) The Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 2003 is amended as follows.

(2) In section 42 (drugs courts)—

(a) in subsection (4)—

(i) for “probationer with the requirements of a probation order” substitute “community payback order”,

34
(ii) in paragraph (b), for the words from “make” to “work” substitute “in the case of a failure to comply with the requirements of a drug treatment and testing order, make a community payback order imposing a level 1 unpaid work or other activity requirement, so however that the total hours of unpaid work or other activity”, and

(iii) for “probation order” where those words second occur substitute “community payback order”,

(b) in subsection (6), for paragraph (b) substitute—

“(b) alleged at—

(i) a progress review carried out by such a court in relation to a community payback order; or

(ii) a diet of such a court to which an offender has been cited under section 227ZB(2) of that Act (breach of community payback order), that the offender has failed to comply with a requirement imposed by a community payback order,”,

(c) in subsection (7)—

(i) the words “or probationer” are repealed, and

(ii) for “232” substitute “227ZB”,

(d) for subsection (9) substitute—

“(9) If a community payback order is revoked under section 227ZB(5)(b) of the 1995 Act, the court (whether or not a drugs court) must, in dealing with the offender by virtue of that section, take into account any sentence which has been imposed under paragraph (a) of subsection (4) of this section in relation to a failure to comply with the community payback order.”,

(e) in subsection (10)—

(i) insert at the appropriate places—

““community payback order” means an order imposed under section 227A of the 1995 Act;”

““level 1 unpaid work or other activity requirement” has the meaning given in section 227I(4) of the 1995 Act;”, and

(ii) the definition of “probation order” is repealed, and

(f) in subsection (11), paragraphs (a) and (b) are repealed.

(3) Section 46 (requirement for remote monitoring in probation order) is repealed.

(4) In section 50 (amendments in relation to certain non-custodial sentences), subsections (1), (2) and (4) are repealed.

(5) In section 60 (unified citation provisions)—

(a) in subsection (1), paragraphs (a), (b), (e) and (f) are repealed, and

(b) subsections (3) and (4) are repealed.

The Mental Health (Care and Treatment) (Scotland) Act 2003 (asp 13)
40 In the Mental Health (Care and Treatment) (Scotland) Act 2003, the following provisions are repealed—
   (a) section 135 (amendment of 1995 Act: probation for treatment of mental disorder), and
   (b) in schedule 4 (minor and consequential amendments), in paragraph 8, sub-paragraph (15).

The Criminal Justice Act 2003 (c.44)
41 In Schedule 32 to the Criminal Justice Act 2003 (amendments relating to sentencing), paragraphs 69 to 72 are repealed.

The Antisocial Behaviour etc. (Scotland) Act 2004 (asp 8)
42 In the Antisocial Behaviour etc. (Scotland) Act 2004, the following provisions are repealed—
   (a) section 120 (community reparation orders), and
   (b) in schedule 4 (minor and consequential amendments), in paragraph 5, subparagraphs (3), (5), (6) and (11).

The Management of Offenders etc. (Scotland) Act 2005 (asp 14)
43 (1) The Management of Offenders etc. (Scotland) Act 2005 is amended as follows.
   (2) In section 10 (arrangements for assessing and managing risks posed by certain offenders), in subsection (1)(b), for sub-paragraph (i) substitute—
        “(i) is subject to a community payback order imposed under section 227A of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.46), or”.
   (3) Section 12 (probation progress review) is repealed.

The Criminal Proceedings etc. (Reform) (Scotland) Act 2007 (asp 6)
44 In the Criminal Proceedings etc. (Reform) (Scotland) Act 2007, the following provisions are repealed—
   (a) in section 49 (compensation orders), subsection (4),
   (b) section 57 (probation and community service orders), and
   (c) in paragraph 26 of the schedule (modification of enactments), sub-paragraphs (l) and (n).

The Criminal Justice and Immigration Act 2008 (c.4)
45 In Part 1 of Schedule 4 to the Criminal Justice and Immigration Act 2008 (youth rehabilitation orders: consequential amendments), paragraphs 43 to 46 are repealed.>
Section 15

Rhoda Grant

399 In section 15, page 29, line 29, after <subsection (1)> insert—

<(  ) at the beginning insert “Subject to subsection (1A),”, and
(  )>

Rhoda Grant

400 In section 15, page 29, line 29, at end insert—

<(  ) after subsection (1) insert—

“(1A) The prosecutor must, where a person (“A”) is convicted of the offence of stalking a person (“B”), apply to the court to make a non-harassment order against A requiring A to refrain from such conduct in relation to—

(a) B, or
(b) any other person in relation to whom the course of conduct engaged in by A, and which constituted the offence, related,
as may be specified in the order for such period (which includes an indeterminate period) as may be so specified, in addition to any other disposal which may be made in relation to the offence.”,

Rhoda Grant

401 In section 15, page 29, line 30, after <subsection (2)> insert—

<(  ) after “subsection (1)” insert “or (1A)”, and
(  )>

Rhoda Grant

5 In section 15, page 29, line 30, leave out <“harassment (or further harassment)”> and insert <“misconduct (or further misconduct)”>

Rhoda Grant

6 In section 15, page 30, line 18, leave out <“harassment” and “conduct” are> and insert <“conduct” is>

Rhoda Grant

7 In section 15, page 30, line 20, at end insert <whether on one or more than one occasion>

Section 17

Robert Brown

100 In section 17, page 30, line 32, leave out <6> and insert <3>
Robert Brown

101 In section 17, page 31, line 2, leave out <6> and insert <3>

Robert Brown

388 In section 17, page 31, line 7, at end insert—

<4> The Scottish Ministers may not bring subsection (1), (2) or (3) into force until they have—

(a) prepared a report setting out—

(i) the reduction in the number of sentences of imprisonment or detention imposed annually that is expected as a result of bringing those subsections into force,

(ii) the increase in the number of community payback orders imposed annually that is expected as a result of bringing those subsections into force (by comparison with the number of such orders imposed annually that would be expected if those subsections were not brought into force),

(iii) the estimated annual cost implications of the changes referred to in sub-paragraphs (i) and (ii),

(iv) the additional funding, if any, that Ministers will provide to community justice authorities or local authorities to ensure that they have the capacity to support the requirements expected to be imposed by any additional community payback orders identified under sub-paragraph (ii).

(b) laid that report before the Scottish Parliament; and

(c) taken into account any views expressed on it by any committee of the Parliament the remit of which includes the criminal justice system.>

Richard Baker

Supported by: Bill Aitken

1 Leave out section 17

After section 17

Robert Brown

102 After section 17, insert—

<Report on operation of sections 14 and 17

(1) The Scottish Ministers must, no later than 5 years after sections 14 and 17 come fully into force, lay before the Scottish Parliament and publish a report on the operation of those sections.

(2) The report under subsection (1) must, in particular, include an assessment of whether and to what extent those sections, individually or collectively, have—

(a) reduced offending,

(b) increased public safety.>
After section 20

Bill Wilson

103 After section 20, insert—

<Pre-sentencing reports about organisations

After section 203 of the 1995 Act (reports), insert—

“203A Reports about organisations

(1) This section applies where an organisation is convicted of an offence.

(2) Before dealing with the organisation in respect of the offence, the court may obtain a report into the organisation’s financial affairs and structural arrangements.

(3) The report is to be prepared by a person appointed by the court.

(4) The person appointed to prepare the report is referred to in this section as the “reporter”.

(5) The court may issue directions to the reporter about—

(a) the information to be contained in the report,

(b) the particular matters to be covered by the report,

(c) the time by which the report is to be submitted to the court.

(6) The court may order the organisation to give the reporter and any person acting on the reporter’s behalf—

(a) access at all reasonable times to the organisation’s books, documents and other records,

(b) such information or explanation as the reporter thinks necessary.

(7) The reporter’s costs in preparing the report are to be paid by the clerk of court, but the court may order the organisation to reimburse to the clerk all or a part of those costs.

(8) An order under subsection (7) may be enforced by civil diligence as if it were a fine.

(9) On submission of the report to the court, the clerk of court must provide a copy of the report to—

(a) the organisation,

(b) the organisation’s solicitor (if any), and

(c) the prosecutor.

(10) The court must have regard to the report in deciding how to deal with the organisation in respect of the offence.

(11) If the court decides to impose a fine, the court must, in determining the amount of the fine, have regard to—

(a) the report, and

(b) if the court makes an order under subsection (7), the amount of costs that the organisation is required to reimburse under the order.
(12) Where the court—
   (a) makes an order under subsection (7), and
   (b) imposes a fine on the organisation,
any payment by the organisation is first to be applied in satisfaction of the order under subsection (7).

(13) Where the court also makes a compensation order in respect of the offence, any payment by the organisation is first to be applied in satisfaction of the compensation order before being applied in accordance with subsection (12).”.

Section 24

Robert Brown
Supported by: Bill Aitken

104 Leave out section 24

After section 24

Kenny MacAskill

105 After section 24, insert—

<Mutual recognition of judgments and probation decisions

(1) The Scottish Ministers may by order make provision for the purposes of and in connection with implementing any obligations of the United Kingdom created by or arising under the Framework Decision (so far as they have effect in or as regards Scotland).

(2) The provision may, in particular, confer functions—
   (a) on the Scottish Ministers,
   (b) on other persons.

(3) An order under subsection (1) may modify any enactment.

(4) In this section, the “Framework Decision” means Council Framework Decision 2008/947/JHA of 27 November 2008 on the application of the principle of mutual recognition to judgments and probation decisions with a view to the supervision of probation measures and alternative sanctions.>

Richard Baker

10 After section 24, insert—

<Minimum sentence for having in a public place an article with a blade or point

(1) In section 49 of the Criminal Law (Consolidation) (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.39) (offence of having in a public place an article with a blade or point), after subsection (5) insert—

   “(5A) Subsection (5B) applies where—
   (a) a person is convicted of an offence under subsection (1),
(b) the offence was committed after the commencement of this subsection, and
(c) when the offence was committed, the person was aged 16 or over.

(5B) Where this subsection applies, the court must impose a sentence of imprisonment of at least 6 months (with or without a fine) unless the court is of the opinion that there are exceptional circumstances relating to the offence or to the offender which justify not doing so.”.

(2) In section 207(3A) of the 1995 Act (detention of young offenders: minimum sentences), after paragraph (a) insert—

“(aa) section 49(5B) of the Criminal Law (Consolidation) (Scotland) Act 1995 (minimum sentence for having in a public place an article with a blade or point);”.

Bill Aitken

10A As an amendment to amendment 10, line 11, leave out from <6> to end of line 13 and insert <2 years (with or without a fine) unless the court is satisfied, having regard to all the circumstances, that there are grounds for mitigating the normal consequences of the conviction and thinks fit to order the offender to be imprisoned for a shorter period or not to order the offender to be imprisoned>

Section 25

Kenny MacAskill

344 In section 25, page 38, line 34, at end insert—

<( ) Without limiting the generality of subsection (1), a person agrees to become involved in serious organised crime if the person—
(a) agrees to do something (whether or not the doing of that thing would itself constitute an offence), and
(b) knows or suspects, or ought reasonably to have known or suspected, that the doing of that thing will enable or further the commission of serious organised crime.>

Robert Brown

345 In section 25, page 38, line 36, leave out <involving> and insert—

(a) that would reasonably be regarded as being both serious and organised, and
(b) that involves>

Kenny MacAskill

346 In section 25, page 39, line 2, leave out <securing> and insert <obtaining>

Kenny MacAskill

347 In section 25, page 39, line 4, leave out <serious>
Robert Brown
348 In section 25, page 39, line 4, leave out <serious violence> and insert <violence or intimidation>

Kenny MacAskill
349 In section 25, page 39, line 4, after <committed> insert <or a threat made>

Kenny MacAskill
350 In section 25, page 39, line 4, leave out <securing> and insert <obtaining>

Kenny MacAskill
351 In section 25, page 39, line 5, at end insert <, and “material benefit” means a right or interest of any description in any property, whether heritable or moveable and whether corporeal or incorporeal.>

Section 26

Robert Brown
352 In section 26, page 39, line 21, leave out subsection (4)

Section 27

Robert Brown
353 In section 27, page 39, line 35, leave out  and insert <an offence under section 25(1)>

Kenny MacAskill
354 In section 27, page 40, line 9, leave out subsection (4)

Robert Brown
355 In section 27, page 40, line 14, leave out  and insert <an offence under section 25(1)>

Kenny MacAskill
356 In section 27, page 40, line 17, leave out subsection (6)

Section 28

Robert Brown
357 In section 28, page 40, line 28, after <suspects> insert <with good reason>

42
In section 28, page 40, line 36, at end insert—

<(  ) In the case of knowledge or suspicion originating from information obtained by the person in the course of the person’s trade, profession, business or employment, this section applies only where the person’s experience or seniority in that trade, profession, business or employment makes it reasonable to assume that the person should be aware of any offence of the sort mentioned in subsection (1) that the other person has or may have committed.>

In section 28, page 40, line 39, leave out <derived> and insert <obtained>

In section 28, page 41, line 1, after <constable> insert <or other specified public official>

In section 28, page 41, line 20, at end insert—

<(  ) In subsection (3), “specified public official” means a person holding a public office specified in an order made by the Scottish Ministers.>

After section 28

After section 28, insert—

<Genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes

Genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes: UK residents

(1) The International Criminal Court (Scotland) Act 2001 (asp 13) is amended as follows.

(2) After section 8, insert—

“8A Meaning of “United Kingdom national” and “United Kingdom resident”

(1) In this Part—

“United Kingdom national” means—

(a) a British citizen, a British Overseas Territories citizen, a British National (Overseas) or a British Overseas citizen,

(b) a person who under the British Nationality Act 1981 (c.61) is a British subject, or

(c) a British protected person within the meaning of that Act,

“United Kingdom resident” means a person who is resident in the United Kingdom.

(2) To the extent that it would not otherwise be the case, the following individuals are to be treated for the purposes of this Part as being resident in the United Kingdom—
(a) an individual who has indefinite leave to remain in the United Kingdom,
(b) any other individual who has made an application for such leave (whether or not it has been determined) and who is in the United Kingdom,
(c) an individual who has leave to enter or remain in the United Kingdom for the purposes of work or study and who is in the United Kingdom,
(d) an individual who has made an asylum claim, or a human rights claim, which has been granted,
(e) any other individual who has made an asylum claim or a human rights claim (whether or not the claim has been determined) and who is in the United Kingdom,
(f) an individual named in an application for indefinite leave to remain, an asylum claim or a human rights claim as a dependant of the individual making the application or claim if—
   (i) the application or claim has been granted, or
   (ii) the named individual is in the United Kingdom (whether or not the application or claim has been determined),
(g) an individual who would be liable to removal or deportation from the United Kingdom but cannot be removed or deported because of section 6 of the Human Rights Act 1998 (c.42) or for practical reasons,
(h) an individual—
   (i) against whom a decision to make a deportation order under section 5(1) of the Immigration Act 1971 (c.77) by virtue of section 3(5)(a) of that Act (deportation conducive to the public good) has been made,
   (ii) who has appealed against the decision to make the order (whether or not the appeal has been determined), and
   (iii) who is in the United Kingdom,
(i) an individual who is an illegal entrant within the meaning of section 33(1) of the Immigration Act 1971 or who is liable to removal under section 10 of the Immigration and Asylum Act 1999 (c.33),
(j) an individual who is detained in lawful custody in the United Kingdom.

(3) When determining for the purposes of this Part whether any other individual is resident in the United Kingdom regard is to be had to all relevant considerations including—

(a) the periods during which the individual is, has been or intends to be in the United Kingdom,
(b) the purposes for which the individual is, has been or intends to be in the United Kingdom,
(c) whether the individual has family or other connections to the United Kingdom and the nature of those connections, and
(d) whether the individual has an interest in residential property located in the United Kingdom.
In this section—

“asylum claim” means—

(a) a claim that it would be contrary to the United Kingdom’s obligations under the Refugee Convention for the claimant to be removed from, or required to leave, the United Kingdom,

(b) a claim that the claimant would face a real risk of serious harm if removed from the United Kingdom,

“Convention rights” means the rights identified as Convention rights by section 1 of the Human Rights Act 1998,

“detained in lawful custody” means—

(a) detained in pursuance of a sentence of imprisonment or detention, a sentence of custody for life or a detention and training order,

(b) remanded in or committed to custody by an order of a court,

(c) detained pursuant to an order under section 2 of the Colonial Prisoners Removal Act 1884 (c.31) or a warrant under section 1 or 4A of the Repatriation of Prisoners Act 1984 (c.47),

(d) detained under Part 3 of the Mental Health Act 1983 (c.20) or by virtue of an order under section 5 of the Criminal Procedure (Insanity) Act 1964 (c.84) or section 6 or 14 of the Criminal Appeal Act 1968 (c.19) (hospital orders etc.),

(e) detained by virtue of an order under Part 6 of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.46) (other than an order under section 60C) or a hospital direction under section 59A of that Act, and includes detention by virtue of the special restrictions set out in Part 10 of the Mental Health (Care and Treatment) (Scotland) Act 2003 (asp 13) to which a person is subject by virtue of an order under section 59 of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995,

(f) detained under Part 3 of the Mental Health (Northern Ireland) Order 1986 (SI 1986/595) or by virtue of an order under section 11 or 13(5A) of the Criminal Appeal (Northern Ireland) Act 1980 (c. 47),

“human rights claim” means a claim that to remove the claimant from, or to require the claimant to leave, the United Kingdom would be unlawful under section 6 of the Human Rights Act 1998 (public authority not to act contrary to Convention) as being incompatible with the person’s Convention rights,

“the Refugee Convention” means the Convention relating to the Status of Refugees done at Geneva on 28 July 1951 and the Protocol to the Convention,

“serious harm” has the meaning given by article 15 of Council Directive 2004/83/EC on minimum standards for the qualification and status of third country nationals or stateless persons as refugees or as persons who otherwise need international protection and the content of the protection granted.
(5) In this section, a reference to having leave to enter or remain in the United Kingdom is to be construed in accordance with the Immigration Act 1971.

(6) This section applies in relation to any offence under this Part (whether committed before or after the coming into force of this section).”.

(3) In section 28(1) (interpretation), the definitions of “United Kingdom national” and “United Kingdom resident” are repealed.

Kenny MacAskill

108 After section 28, insert—

<Genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes: retrospective application

After section 9 of the International Criminal Court (Scotland) Act 2001 (asp 13) insert—

“9A Retrospective application of certain offences

(1) Section 1 of this Act applies to acts committed on or after 1 January 1991.

(2) But that section does not apply to an act committed before 17 December 2001 which constitutes a crime against humanity or a war crime within article 8.2(b) or (e) unless, at the time the act was committed, it amounted in the circumstances to a criminal offence under international law.

(3) Section 2 of this Act applies to conduct engaged in on or after 1 January 1991.

(4) The references in subsections (1), (3) and (5) of that section to an offence include an act or conduct that would not constitute an offence but for this section.

(5) Any enactment or rule of law relating to an offence ancillary to a relevant offence applies—

(a) to conduct engaged in on or after 1 January 1991, and

(b) even if the act or conduct constituting the relevant offence would not constitute such an offence but for this section.

(6) But section 2 of this Act, and any enactment or rule of law relating to an offence ancillary to a relevant offence, do not apply to—

(a) conduct engaged in before 17 December 2001, or

(b) conduct engaged in on or after that date which was ancillary to an act or conduct that—

(i) was committed or engaged in before that date, and

(ii) would not constitute a relevant offence but for this section, unless, at the time the conduct was engaged in, it amounted in the circumstances to a criminal offence under international law.

(7) Section 5 of this Act, so far as it has effect in relation to relevant offences, applies—

(a) to failures to exercise control of the kind mentioned in subsection (2) or (3) of that section which occurred on or after 1 January 1991, and

(b) even if the act or conduct constituting the relevant offence would not constitute an offence but for this section.
(8) But section 5 of this Act, so far as it has effect in relation to relevant offences, does not apply to a failure to exercise control of the kind mentioned in subsection (2) or (3) of that section which occurred before 17 December 2001 unless, at the time it occurred, it amounted in the circumstances to a criminal offence under international law.

(9) In this section, “relevant offence” means an offence under section 1 or 2 of this Act or an offence ancillary to such an offence.

9B Provision supplemental to section 9A: modification of penalties

(1) This section applies in relation to—

(a) an offence under section 1 of this Act on account of an act committed before 17 December 2001 constituting genocide, if at the time the act was committed it also amounted to an offence under section 1 of the Genocide Act 1969,

(b) an offence under section 1 of this Act on account of an act committed before 1 September 2001 constituting a war crime, if at the time the act was committed it also amounted to an offence under section 1 of the Geneva Conventions Act 1957 (c.52) (grave breaches of the Conventions),

(c) an offence ancillary to an offence within paragraph (a) or (b) above.

(2) Section 3(5) of this Act has effect in relation to such an offence as if for “30 years” there were substituted “14 years”.>
the person having it, or

(ii) some other person,

“public place” means any place other than—

(a) domestic premises,
(b) school premises (within the meaning of section 49A(6)),
(c) a prison (within the meaning of section 49C(7)),

“domestic premises” means premises occupied as a private dwelling (including any stair, passage, garden, yard, garage, outhouse or other appurtenance of such premises which is not used in common by the occupants of more than one such dwelling).”.

(3) In section 49 (offence of having in public place article with blade or point)—

(a) in subsection (4), for the words “prove that he had good reason” substitute “show that the person had a reasonable excuse”,
(b) in subsection (5), for “prove” substitute “show”, and
(c) for subsection (7), substitute—

“(7) In this section, “public place” has the same meaning as in section 47(4).”.

(4) In section 49A (offence of having article with blade or point (or offensive weapon) on school premises)—

(a) in subsection (3), for the words “prove that he had good reason” substitute “show that the person had a reasonable excuse”, and
(b) in subsection (4), for “prove” substitute “show”.

(5) In section 49C(2) (offence of having offensive weapon etc. in prison), for the words “prove that he had good reason” substitute “show that the person had a reasonable excuse”.

(6) In section 50(4) (extension of constable’s power to stop, search and arrest without warrant), for “3” substitute “4”.

Johann Lamont

11 After section 31, insert—

<Offence of having article with blade or point (or offensive weapon) on workplace premises

(1) The Criminal Law (Consolidation) (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.39) is amended as follows.

(2) After section 49A, insert—

“49AA Offence of having article with blade or point (or offensive weapon) on workplace premises

(1) Any person who has an article to which section 49 of this Act applies with him on workplace premises is guilty of an offence.

(2) Any person who has an offensive weapon within the meaning of section 47 of this Act with him on workplace premises is guilty of an offence.
(3) It is a defence for a person charged with an offence under subsection (1) or (2) above to prove that he had good reason or lawful authority for having the article or weapon with him on the premises in question.

(4) Without prejudice to the generality of subsection (3) above, it is a defence for a person charged with an offence under subsection (1) or (2) above to prove that he had the article or weapon in question with him—

(a) for use at work (whether on the premises in question or otherwise),

(b) for religious reasons, or

(c) as part of any national costume.

(5) A person guilty of an offence—

(a) under subsection (1) above is liable—

(i) on summary conviction to imprisonment for a term not exceeding twelve months, or a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum, or both;

(ii) on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding four years, or a fine, or both;

(b) under subsection (2) above is liable—

(i) on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months, or a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum, or both;

(ii) on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding four years, or a fine, or both.

(6) In this section and section 49B of this Act, “workplace premises” means any premises (other than school premises) used for the purposes of an undertaking carried on by an employer and made available to any employee of the employer as a place of work; and includes—

(a) any part of those premises to which such an employee has access while at work;

(b) any premises (other than a public road or other public place within the meaning of section 49 of this Act)—

(i) which are a means of access to or egress from the place of work; or

(ii) where facilities are provided for use in connection with the place of work.”.

(3) In section 49B(1)—

(a) after “school premises” insert “or workplace premises”;

(b) after “49A” insert “or 49AA”.

(4) In section 50(3), for “or section 49A(1) or (2)” substitute “, 49A(1) or (2) or 49AA(1) or (2)”.

Rhoda Grant

402 After section 31, insert—
<Stalking

Offence of stalking

(1) A person ("A") commits an offence, to be known as the offence of stalking, where A stalks another person ("B").

(2) For the purposes of subsection (1), A stalks B where—
   (a) A engages in a course of conduct,
   (b) subsection (3) or (4) applies, and
   (c) A’s course of conduct causes B to suffer—
      (i) physical or psychological harm, or
      (ii) apprehension or fear for B’s own safety or for the safety of any other person.

(3) This subsection applies where A engages in the course of conduct with the intention of causing such harm to B or of arousing such apprehension or fear in B.

(4) This subsection applies where A knows, or ought in all the circumstances to have known, that engaging in the course of conduct would be likely to cause such harm or arouse such apprehension or fear.

(5) It is a defence for a person charged with an offence under this section to show that the course of action—
   (a) was authorised by virtue of any enactment or rule of law,
   (b) was engaged in for the purpose of preventing or detecting crime, or
   (c) was, in the particular circumstances, reasonable.

(6) In this section—
   “conduct” includes (but is not limited to)—
   (a) following B or any other person,
   (b) contacting B or any other person by post, telephone, email, text message or any other method,
   (c) publishing any statement or other material—
      (i) relating or purporting to relate to B or to any other person,
      (ii) purporting to originate from B or from any other person,
   (d) tracing the use by B or by any other person of the internet, email or any other form of electronic communication,
   (e) entering or loitering in the vicinity of—
      (i) the place of residence of B or of any other person,
      (ii) the place of work or business of B or of any other person,
      (iii) any place frequented by B or of any other person,
   (f) interfering with any property in the possession of B or of any other person,
   (g) giving offensive material to B or to any other person or leaving such material where it may be found by, given to or brought to the attention of B or any other person,
(h) keeping B or any other person under surveillance,

(i) acting in any other way that a reasonable person would expect would arouse apprehension or fear in B for B’s own safety or for the safety of any other person, and

“course of conduct” involves conduct on at least two occasions.

(7) A person convicted of the offence of stalking is liable—

(a) on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 5 years or to a fine or to both,

(b) on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 6 months or to a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum or to both.

Section 34

Kenny MacAskill

361 In section 34, page 49, line 4, leave out <(and any sounds accompanying it)>.

Kenny MacAskill

362 In section 34, page 49, line 5, leave out <(and any sounds accompanying them)>.

Kenny MacAskill

363 In section 34, page 49, line 7, at end insert—

<and reference may also be had to any sounds accompanying the image or the series of images.>

Kenny MacAskill

364 In section 34, page 49, line 31, after <images> insert—

<

(i) any sounds accompanying the series of images,

(ii)>

Robert Brown

365 In section 34, page 50, line 4, leave out from <“excluded” to <work> and insert <image is an “excluded image” if it is all or part of a classified work, and is so excluded from the time that an application for a classification certificate is received by the designated authority>

Kenny MacAskill

366 In section 34, page 50, line 18, after <images> insert—

<

(i) any sounds accompanying the series of images,

(ii)>

Kenny MacAskill

367 In section 34, page 50, line 19, leave out <and section 51C>
368 In section 34, page 50, line 27, leave out <and “extreme pornographic image” are> and insert <is>

369 In section 34, page 51, line 23, at end insert—

<(  ) In this section “image” and “extreme pornographic image” are to be construed in accordance with section 51A.”.>

After section 34

110 After section 34, insert—

<Voyeurism: additional forms of conduct

(1) The Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009 (asp 9) is amended as follows.

(2) In section 9 (voyeurism)—

(a) after subsection (4), insert—

“(4A) The fourth thing is that A—

(a) without another person (“B”) consenting, and

(b) without any reasonable belief that B consents,

operates equipment beneath B’s clothing with the intention of enabling A or another person (“C”), for a purpose mentioned in subsection (7), to observe B’s genitals or buttocks (whether exposed or covered with underwear) or the underwear covering B’s genitals or buttocks, in circumstances where the genitals, buttocks or underwear would not otherwise be visible.

(4B) The fifth thing is that A—

(a) without another person (“B”) consenting, and

(b) without any reasonable belief that B consents,

records an image beneath B’s clothing of B’s genitals or buttocks (whether exposed or covered with underwear) or the underwear covering B’s genitals or buttocks, in circumstances where the genitals, buttocks or underwear would not otherwise be visible, with the intention that A or another person (“C”), for a purpose mentioned in subsection (7), will look at the image.”,

(b) in subsection (5)—

(i) for “fourth” substitute “sixth”, and

(ii) for paragraph (b), substitute—

“(b) constructs or adapts a structure or part of a structure, with the intention of enabling A or another person to do an act referred to in subsection (2), (3), (4), (4A) or (4B).”, and

(c) in subsection (7), for “and (4)” substitute “, (4), (4A) and (4B)”.

(3) In section 10(2) (interpretation of section 9), after “section 9(3)” insert “and (4A)”.

52
(4) In section 26 (voyeurism towards a young child)—

(a) after subsection (4), insert—

“(4A) The fourth thing is that A operates equipment beneath B’s clothing with the intention of enabling A or another person (“C”), for a purpose mentioned in subsection (7), to observe—

(a) B’s genitals or buttocks (whether exposed or covered with underwear), or

(b) the underwear covering B’s genitals or buttocks,

in circumstances where the genitals, buttocks or underwear would not otherwise be visible.

(4B) The fifth thing is that A records an image beneath B’s clothing of—

(a) B’s genitals or buttocks (whether exposed or covered with underwear), or

(b) the underwear covering B’s genitals or buttocks,

in circumstances where the genitals, buttocks or underwear would not otherwise be visible, with the intention that A or another person (“C”), for a purpose mentioned in subsection (7), will look at the image.”,

(b) in subsection (5)—

(i) for “fourth” substitute “sixth”, and

(ii) for paragraph (b), substitute—

“(b) constructs or adapts a structure or part of a structure, with the intention of enabling A or another person to do an act referred to in subsection (2), (3), (4), (4A) or (4B).”,

(c) in subsection (7), for “and (4)” substitute “, (4), (4A) and (4B)”, and

(d) in subsection (8)—

(i) after “section 9(3)” insert “, (4A)”, and

(ii) after “subsections (3)” insert “, (4A)”.

(5) In section 36 (voyeurism towards an older child)—

(a) after subsection (4), insert—

“(4A) The fourth thing is that A operates equipment beneath B’s clothing with the intention of enabling A or another person (“C”), for a purpose mentioned in subsection (7), to observe—

(a) B’s genitals or buttocks (whether exposed or covered with underwear), or

(b) the underwear covering B’s genitals or buttocks,

in circumstances where the genitals, buttocks or underwear would not otherwise be visible.

(4B) The fifth thing is that A records an image beneath B’s clothing of—

(a) B’s genitals or buttocks (whether exposed or covered with underwear), or
(b) the underwear covering B’s genitals or buttocks,
in circumstances where the genitals, buttocks or underwear would not otherwise be visible, with the intention that A or another person (“C”), for a purpose mentioned in subsection (7), will look at the image.”;

(b) in subsection (5)—

(i) for “fourth” substitute “sixth”, and

(ii) for paragraph (b), substitute—

“(b) constructs or adapts a structure or part of a structure, with the intention of enabling A or another person to do an act referred to in subsection (2), (3), (4), (4A) or (4B).”;

(c) in subsection (7), for “and (4)” substitute “, (4), (4A) and (4B)”, and

(d) in subsection (8)—

(i) after “section 9(3)” insert “, (4A)”, and

(ii) after “subsections (3)” insert “, (4A)”.

Kenny MacAskill

After section 34, insert—

Sexual offences: defences in relation to offences against older children

In section 39 of the Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009 (asp 9) (defences in relation to offences against older children), in subsection (4)(c), after “section 30(2)(d)” insert “or (e)”.

Kenny MacAskill

After section 34, insert—

Penalties for offences of brothel-keeping and living on the earnings of prostitution

(1) The Criminal Law (Consolidation) (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.39) is amended as follows.

(2) In section 11 (trading in prostitution and brothel-keeping)—

(a) in subsection (1), for the words from “liable” to the end substitute “guilty of an offence and liable to the penalties set out in subsection (1A)”,

(b) after that subsection insert—

“(1A) A person—

(a) guilty of the offence set out in subsection (1)(a) is liable—

(i) on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding seven years, to a fine, or to both,

(ii) on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 12 months, to a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum, or to both,

(b) guilty of the offence set out in subsection (1)(b) is liable—

(i) on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years,
(ii) on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 12 months.”,

(c) in subsection (4), for “subsection (1)” substitute “subsection (1A)(a)”, and

(d) for subsection (6) substitute—

“(6) A person guilty of an offence under subsection (5) is liable—

(a) on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding seven years, to a fine, or to both,

(b) on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 12 months, to a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum, or to both.”.

(3) In section 13(9) (living on earnings of another from male prostitution), for paragraphs (a) and (b) substitute—

“(a) on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding seven years, to a fine, or to both,

(b) on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 12 months, to a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum, or to both.”.

Trish Godman

8 After section 34, insert—

<Offences of engaging in, advertising and facilitating paid-for sexual activities>

(1) The Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009 (asp 9) is amended as follows.

(2) After section 11 insert—

“Engaging in, advertising and facilitating paid-for sexual activities

11A Engaging in a paid-for sexual activity

(1) A person ("A") commits an offence, to be known as the offence of engaging in a paid-for sexual activity, if A knowingly engages in a paid-for sexual activity with another person ("B").

(2) A sexual activity is paid for where B engages in that activity in exchange for payment.

(3) For the purposes of subsection (2), it is immaterial whether the payment is made—

(a) by A or by another person, or

(b) to B or to another person on B’s behalf.

11B Advertising paid-for sexual activities

A person commits an offence, to be known as the offence of advertising paid-for sexual activities, if that person knowingly advertises, by any means, the availability of sexual activities that can be engaged in for payment.

11C Facilitating engagement in a paid-for sexual activity

(1) A person ("A") commits an offence, to be known as the offence of facilitating engagement in a paid-for sexual activity, if A knowingly facilitates the engagement of another person ("B") in a paid-for sexual activity with another person ("C").
(2) A sexual activity is paid for where C engages in that activity in exchange for payment.

(3) For the purposes of subsection (2), it is immaterial whether the payment is made—
   (a) by A, by B or by another person, or
   (b) to C or to another person on C’s behalf.

(4) For the purposes of subsection (1), facilitating the engagement by B in a paid-for sexual activity includes (but is not limited to)—
   (a) arranging B’s engagement in the activity,
   (b) making payment to C or to another person on C’s behalf,
   (c) making available premises in which the activity takes place, or
   (d) transporting B, or arranging transport for B, to where the activity takes place.

11D  Arrest for offences under sections 11A to 11C

(1) Where a constable reasonably believes that a person is committing or has committed an offence under section 11A, 11B or 11C, the constable may arrest the person without warrant.

(2) Subsection (1) is without prejudice to any power of arrest conferred by law apart from that subsection.”.

(3) In the table in schedule 2 insert at the appropriate place—

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>“Engaging in a paid-for sexual activity”</th>
<th>Section 11A</th>
<th>A fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Advertising paid-for sexual activities</td>
<td>Section 11B</td>
<td>A fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Facilitating engagement in a paid-for sexual activity</td>
<td>Section 11C</td>
<td>A fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale”&gt;</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Margo MacDonald

8A  As an amendment to amendment 8, line 15, at end insert—

<11AA  Causing alarm etc. by engaging in a paid-for sexual activity

In the circumstances described in section 11A(1), A and B commit an offence, to be known as the offence of causing alarm etc. by engaging in a paid-for sexual activity, if their engaging in the activity that constitutes the offence under that section causes alarm to another person (“C”), endangers C or creates a nuisance for C.>
Margo MacDonald

8B As an amendment to amendment 8, line 15, at end insert—

<11AB Profiting from coerced paid-for sexual activities

A person commits an offence, to be known as the offence of profiting from coerced paid-for sexual activities, if that person knowingly secures a direct benefit (whether financial or otherwise) from a paid-for sexual activity involving a person whose engagement in that activity has been secured as a result of coercion.>

Margo MacDonald

8C As an amendment to amendment 8, line 40, after <11A,> insert <11AA, 11AB>

Margo MacDonald

8D As an amendment to amendment 8, line 48, at end insert—

| “Causing alarm etc. by engaging in a paid-for sexual activity | Section 11AA | A fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale |
| Profiting from coerced paid-for sexual activities | Section 11AB | A fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale |

Nigel Don

461 After section 34, insert—

<Offence of paying for sexual services of a prostitute subjected to force etc.

(1) The Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009 (asp 9) is amended as follows.

(2) After section 11 insert—

“Paying for sexual services of a prostitute subjected to force etc.

11E Paying for sexual services of a prostitute subjected to force etc.

(1) A person (“A”) commits an offence, to be known as the offence of paying for sexual services of a coerced prostitute, if—

(a) A makes or promises payment for the sexual services of a prostitute (“B”),

(b) a third person (“C”) has engaged in exploitative conduct of a kind likely to induce or encourage B to provide the sexual services for which A has made or promised payment, and

(c) C engaged in that conduct for or in the expectation of gain for C or another person (apart from A or B).

(2) The following are irrelevant—

(a) where in the world the sexual services are to be provided and whether those services are provided, whether A is, or ought to be, aware that C has engaged in exploitative conduct.

(3) C engages in exploitative conduct if—

(a) C uses force, threats (whether or not relating to violence) or any other form of coercion, or

(b) C practises any form of deception.”.

(3) In the table in schedule 2 insert at the appropriate place—

| “Paying for sexual services of a coerced prostitute” | Section 11E | A fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale”.

Section 35

Kenny MacAskill

371 In section 35, page 51, line 30, at end insert—

“(1A) A person to whom subsection (6) applies commits an offence if the person arranges or facilitates—

(a) the arrival in or the entry into a country (other than the United Kingdom), or travel there (whether or not following such arrival or entry) by, an individual and—

(i) intends to exercise control over prostitution by the individual or to involve the individual in the making or production of obscene or indecent material; or

(ii) believes that another person is likely to exercise such control or so to involve the individual, there or elsewhere; or

(b) the departure from a country (other than the United Kingdom) of an individual and—

(i) intends to exercise such control or so to involve the individual; or

(ii) believes that another person is likely to exercise such control or so to involve the individual, outwith the country.”,

Kenny MacAskill

372 In section 35, page 51, line 30, at end insert—

“( ) in subsection (2), for “subsection (1)” substitute “ subsections (1) and (1A)”,

Kenny MacAskill

373 In section 35, page 51, line 32, leave out <Subsection (1) applies> and insert <Subsections (1) and (1A) apply>
Kenny MacAskill

374 In section 35, page 51, line 34, leave out <proceeded against, indicted> and insert <prosecuted>

Kenny MacAskill

375 In section 35, page 51, line 40, after <on> insert <the>

Kenny MacAskill

376 In section 35, page 52, leave out line 1 and insert—

<(  ) in subsection (6)="

(i) the word “and” immediately following paragraph (e) is repealed, and

(ii) after paragraph (f) insert—

“(g) a person who at the time of the offence was habitually resident in Scotland, and

(h) a body incorporated under the law of a part of the United Kingdom.”,>

Kenny MacAskill

377 In section 35, page 52, line 2, leave out subsection (2) and insert—

<(  ) In section 4 of the Asylum and Immigration (Treatment of Claimants, etc.) Act 2004 (c.19) (trafficking people for exploitation)—

(a) in subsection (1), after “arrival in” insert “or the entry into”,

(b) in subsection (2), the words from “in” where it first occurs to “committed” are repealed,

(c) after subsection (3) insert—

“(3A) A person to whom section 5(2) applies commits an offence if—

(a) in relation to an individual (the “passenger”), he arranges or facilitates—

(i) the arrival in or the entry into a country other than the United Kingdom of the passenger,

(ii) travel by the passenger within a country other than the United Kingdom,

(iii) the departure of the passenger from a country other than the United Kingdom, and

(b) he—

(i) intends to exploit the passenger, or

(ii) believes that another person is likely to exploit the passenger,

(wherever the exploitation is to occur).”,

(d) in subsection (4)—

(i) in paragraph (b), the words from “as a result” to “Act 2004,” become sub-paragraph (i),

(ii) immediately following that sub-paragraph insert “or—
(ii) which, were it done in Scotland, would constitute an offence mentioned in sub-paragraph (i),”.

(iii) after paragraph (b) insert—

“(ba) he is encouraged, required or expected to do anything in connection with the removal of any part of a human body—

(i) as a result of which he or another person would commit an offence under the law of Scotland (other than an offence mentioned in paragraph (b)(i)), or

(ii) which, were it done in Scotland, would constitute such an offence,”, and

(iv) for paragraph (d) substitute—

“(d) another person uses or attempts to use him for any purpose within sub-paragraph (i), (ii) or (iii) of paragraph (c), having chosen him for that purpose on the grounds that—

(i) he is mentally or physically ill or disabled, he is young, or he has a family relationship with a person, and

(ii) a person without the illness, disability, youth or family relationship would be likely to refuse to be used for that purpose.”.

( ) In section 5 of that Act—

(a) in subsection (1), for the words from ““(3) ” to the end substitute ““(3A) of section 4 apply to anything done in or outwith the United Kingdom.””.

(b) in subsection (2)—

(i) the word “and” immediately following paragraph (e) is repealed, and

(ii) after paragraph (f) insert—

“(g) a person who at the time of the offence was habitually resident in Scotland, and

(h) a body incorporated under the law of a part of the United Kingdom.”,

(c) after subsection (2) insert—

“(2A) A person may be prosecuted, tried and punished for any offence to which section 4 applies—

(a) in any sheriff court district in which the person is apprehended or is in custody, or

(b) in such sheriff court district as the Lord Advocate may determine, as if the offence had been committed in that district (and the offence is, for all purposes incidental to or consequential on the trial or punishment, to be deemed to have been committed in that district).

(2B) In subsection (2A), “sheriff court district” is to be construed in accordance with section 307(1) of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.46) (interpretation).”.

60
After section 35

Kenny MacAskill

112 After section 35, insert—

<Slavery, servitude and forced or compulsory labour

Slavery, servitude and forced or compulsory labour

(1) A person ("A") commits an offence if—

   (a) A holds another person in slavery or servitude and the circumstances are such that A knows or ought to know that the person is so held, or

   (b) A requires another person to perform forced or compulsory labour and the circumstances are such that A knows or ought to know that the person is being required to perform such labour.

(2) In subsection (1) the references to holding a person in slavery or servitude or requiring a person to perform forced or compulsory labour are to be construed in accordance with Article 4 of the Human Rights Convention (which prohibits a person from being held in slavery or servitude or being required to perform forced or compulsory labour).

(3) A person guilty of an offence under this section is liable—

   (a) on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 14 years, or to a fine, or to both,

   (b) on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 12 months, or to a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum, or to both.

(4) In this section “Human Rights Convention” means the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms agreed by the Council of Europe at Rome on 4 November 1950.>

After section 36

Kenny MacAskill

113 After section 36, insert—

<Articles for use in fraud

(1) A person ("A") commits an offence if A has in A’s possession or under A’s control an article for use in, or in connection with, the commission of fraud.

(2) A person guilty of an offence under subsection (1) is liable—

   (a) on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 12 months or to a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum, or to both,

   (b) on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 5 years or to a fine, or to both.

(3) A person commits an offence if the person makes, adapts, supplies or offers to supply an article—

   (a) knowing that the article is designed or adapted for use in, or in connection with, the commission of fraud, or

   (b) intending the article to be used in, or in connection with, the commission of fraud.
A person guilty of an offence under subsection (3) is liable—

(a) on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 12 months or to a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum, or to both,

(b) on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 10 years or to a fine, or to both.

In this section, “article” includes a program or data held in electronic form.

After section 37

Kenny MacAskill

114 After section 37, insert—

<Abolition of offences of sedition and leasing-making

Abolition of offences of sedition and leasing-making

The following offences under the common law of Scotland are abolished—

(a) the offence of sedition,

(b) the offence of leasing-making.

Kenny MacAskill

378 After section 37, insert—

<Threatening, alarming or distressing behaviour

Threatening, alarming or distressing behaviour

(1) A person (“A”) commits an offence if—

(a) A behaves in such a manner that a reasonable person would be likely to—

(i) fear for the safety of any person on account of the behaviour, or

(ii) be alarmed or distressed by the behaviour, and

(b) the condition in subsection (2) is satisfied.

(2) That condition is that A—

(a) intends by the behaviour to cause fear, alarm or distress, or

(b) is reckless as to whether the behaviour would cause fear, alarm or distress.

(3) It does not matter—

(a) whether A’s behaviour is directed at anyone in particular,

(b) if it is directed at a particular person, whether that person is aware of the behaviour, or

(c) whether A’s behaviour—

(i) actually causes anyone fear, alarm or distress, or

(ii) takes place in public or private.

(4) Subsection (1) applies to—
(a) behaviour of any kind including, in particular, things said or otherwise communicated as well as things done,

(b) behaviour consisting of—
   (i) a single act, or
   (ii) a course of conduct.

(5) The reference in subsection (1)(a)(i) to fear for a person’s safety is to fear that the person’s life could be endangered or that the person’s physical or psychological well-being could be harmed.

(6) A person guilty of an offence under subsection (1) is liable—
   (a) on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 5 years, or to a fine, or to both, or
   (b) on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 12 months, or to a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum, or to both.

Bill Aitken

115 After section 37, insert—

  <PART
  DOUBLE JEOPARDY

  Rule against double jeopardy

  (1) It is not competent to charge a person who, whether on indictment or complaint (the “original” indictment or complaint), has been convicted or acquitted of an offence—
   (a) with an offence of which it would have been competent to convict the person on the original indictment or complaint, or
   (b) with an offence which—
      (i) arises out of the same, or largely the same, acts or omissions as gave rise to the original indictment or complaint, and
      (ii) is an aggravated way of committing the offence of which the person was convicted or acquitted.

  (2) Whether the conviction or acquittal was before or after the coming into force of this section is, for the purposes of the section, immaterial.

  (3) Subsection (1) is subject to sections (Tainted acquittals), (Admission subsequent to acquittal) and (New evidence) and is without prejudice to sections 118(1)(c) (disposal of appeals), 119 (provision where High Court authorises new prosecution), 183(1)(d) (stated case: disposal of appeal) and 185 (authorisation of new prosecution) of the 1995 Act.

  (4) In this Part, reference to a person being convicted of an offence is—
   (a) to the person being found guilty of the offence, or
   (b) to the prosecutor accepting the person’s plea of guilty to the offence, in either case whether or not sentence is passed.>
Bill Aitken

116 After section 37, insert—

<Plea in bar of trial

(1) A person charged with an offence—

(a) whether on indictment or complaint, but

(b) other than by virtue of a section mentioned in section (Rule against double jeopardy)(3), may aver, as a plea in bar of trial, that the offence arises out of the same, or largely the same, acts or omissions as have already given rise to the person being tried for, and convicted or acquitted of, an offence (the “original offence”).

(2) Whether the conviction or acquittal was before or after the coming into force of this section is, for the purposes of the section, immaterial.

(3) If the court is satisfied, on a balance of probabilities, as to the truth of the person’s averment, the plea is to be sustained unless the prosecutor persuades the court that there is some special reason why the case should proceed to trial (as for example, but without prejudice to the generality of this subsection, where trials were separated on the application of, or with the consent of, the person).

(4) Subsections (1) to (3) apply irrespective of where the person was tried; but this subsection is subject to subsection (5).

(5) Where the person was tried outwith the United Kingdom the court may disregard a conviction or acquittal if—

(a) it determines that it is in the interests of justice to do so, and

(b) to permit the case to proceed to trial would not be inconsistent with the obligations of the United Kingdom under Article 54 of the Schengen Convention (that is to say, of the Convention of 19th June 1990 implementing the Schengen Agreement of 14th June 1985).

(6) In making a determination in pursuance of subsection (5)(a), the court is in particular to have regard to—

(a) whether the purpose of bringing the person to trial in the foreign country appears to have been to assist the person to evade justice,

(b) whether the proceedings in the foreign country appear to have been conducted—

(i) independently and impartially, and

(ii) in a manner consistent with dealing justly with the person,

(c) whether such sentence (or other disposal) as might be imposed in the foreign country for an offence of the kind for which the person has been acquitted or convicted is commensurate with any that might be imposed for an offence of that kind in Scotland, and

(d) the extent to which the acts or omissions can be considered to have occurred in, respectively—

(i) Scotland,

(ii) the foreign country.>
<Eventual death of injured person>

(1) This section applies where—
   (a) a person (“A”) sustains physical injuries,
   (b) another person (“B”) is, whether on indictment or complaint, acquitted or convicted of an offence (“offence Y”) which comprises the infliction of the injuries, and
   (c) after the acquittal or conviction A dies, ostensibly from the injuries.

(2) Whether the conviction or acquittal was before or after the coming into force of this section is, for the purposes of the section, immaterial.

(3) If B was acquitted of offence Y (and was not then convicted of a different offence, “offence Z”, which comprised the infliction of the injuries) it is not competent to charge B with—
   (a) the murder of A,
   (b) culpable homicide as respects A, or
   (c) any other offence comprising causing A’s death.

(4) If B was convicted of offence Y (or of offence Z), then—
   (a) for the purposes of sections (Rule against double jeopardy) and (Plea in bar of trial) the offences mentioned in paragraphs (a) to (c) of subsection (3) are not to be treated as offences arising out of the same, or largely the same, acts or omissions as the offence of which B was convicted, but
   (b) on B being acquitted or convicted of any of the offences mentioned in those paragraphs, the court may, on the motion of B and after hearing the parties on that motion, quash B’s conviction of offence Y (or offence Z) where satisfied that it is appropriate to do so.

(5) A party may appeal to the High Court against the granting or refusing of a motion under subsection (4)(b).>

<Tainted acquittals>

(1) A person who, whether on indictment or complaint (the “original” indictment or complaint), has been acquitted of an offence (the “original offence”) may, provided that the conditions mentioned in subsection (3) are satisfied, be charged with, and prosecuted anew for—
   (a) the original offence, or
   (b) an offence arising out of the same, or largely the same, acts or omissions as gave rise to the original offence.

(2) Whether the acquittal was before or after the coming into force of this section is, for the purposes of the section, immaterial.

(3) The conditions are—
(a) either—
   (i) that the acquitted person or some other person has (or the acquitted person and some other person have) been convicted of an offence against the course of justice, being an offence in connection with proceedings on the original indictment or complaint, or
   (ii) that on the application of the Lord Advocate the High Court has concluded on a balance of probabilities that the acquitted person or some other person has (or the acquitted person and some other person have) committed such an offence against the course of justice, and

(b) that on the application of the Lord Advocate the High Court has—
   (i) set aside the acquittal, and
   (ii) granted authority to bring, by virtue of this section, a new prosecution.

(4) On making an application under subsection (3), the Lord Advocate is to send a copy of that application to the acquitted person.

(5) The acquitted person is entitled to appear or to be represented at any hearing of the application.

(6) For the purpose of—
   (a) hearing and coming to a conclusion on any application under subsection (3)(a)(ii), or
   (b) hearing and determining any application under subsection (3)(b),
   three of the Lords Commissioners of Justiciary are a quorum of the Court (the application being determined by majority vote of those sitting).

(7) The decision of the Court on the application is final.

(8) Subsection (7) is without prejudice to any power of those sitting to remit the application to a differently constituted sitting of the Court (as for example to the whole Court sitting together).

(9) The Court may appoint counsel to act as amicus curiae at the hearing in question.

(10) Subsections (11) and (12) apply in a case where (or as the case may be where the Court, in coming to a conclusion under subsection (3)(a)(ii), is satisfied on a balance of probabilities that) the offence against the course of justice consisted of or included interference with a juror or with the trial judge.

(11) An acquittal is to be set aside under subsection (3)(b)(i) if the Court is unable to conclude that the interference had no effect on the outcome of the proceedings on the original indictment or complaint.

(12) But it is not to be so set aside if in the course of the trial, the interference (being interference with a juror and not with the trial judge) became known to the trial judge, who then allowed the trial to proceed to its conclusion.

(13) Subsection (14) applies in a case other than is mentioned in subsection (10).

(14) An acquittal is not to be set aside under subsection (3)(b)(i) unless the Court is satisfied on a balance of probabilities—
   (a) that the offence led—
      (i) to the withholding of evidence which, had it been given, would have been, or
(ii) to the giving of false evidence which was, evidence capable of being regarded as credible and reliable by a reasonable jury, and

(b) that the withholding, or as the case may be the giving, of the evidence was likely to have had a material effect on the outcome of the proceedings on the original indictment or complaint.

(15) And an acquittal is not to be set aside under subsection (3)(b)(i), whether by virtue of subsections (10) to (12) or by virtue of subsections (13) and (14), if the court considers that setting it aside would be contrary to the interests of justice.

(16) In this section, the expression “offence against the course of justice”—

(a) means an offence of perverting, or of attempting to pervert, the course of justice
(by whatever means and however the offence is described), and

(b) without prejudice to the generality of paragraph (a), includes—

(i) an offence under section 45(1) of the Criminal Law (Consolidation) (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.39) (aiding, abetting, counselling, procuring or suborning the commission of an offence under section 44 of that Act),

(ii) the crime of subornation of perjury, and

(iii) the crime of bribery.

(17) But the expression does not include—

(a) the crime of perjury, or

(b) an offence under section 44(1) of that Act (statement on oath which is false or which the person making it does not believe to be true).

Bill Aitken

119 After section 37, insert—

<Further provision as regards prosecution by virtue of section (Tainted acquittals)

(1) A prosecution may be brought by virtue of section (Tainted acquittals) notwithstanding that any time limit for the commencement of such proceedings has elapsed.

(2) In proceedings in a prosecution brought by virtue of section (Tainted acquittals) it is competent for either party to lead evidence which it was competent for that party to lead in the earlier proceedings.

(3) But the indictment or complaint in the prosecution is to identify any matters as respects which the prosecutor intends to lead evidence by virtue of subsection (2) (being matters as respects which it would not have been competent to lead evidence but for that subsection).

(4) On granting authority under section (Tainted acquittals)(3)(b)(ii) to bring a new prosecution, the High Court may, after giving the parties an opportunity of being heard, order the detention of the accused person in custody or admit that person to bail.

(5) In—

(a) solemn proceedings, section 65(4)(aa) and (b) and (4A) to (9), and

(b) summary proceedings, section 147, of the 1995 Act (prevention of delay in trials) applies to an accused person who is detained under subsection (4) as it applies to an accused person detained by virtue of being committed until liberated in due course of law.

Bill Aitken

120 After section 37, insert—

<Admission subsequent to acquittal>

(1) A person who, whether on indictment or complaint (the “original” indictment or complaint), has been acquitted of an offence but subsequently admits to committing it may, provided that the condition mentioned in subsection (3) is satisfied, be charged with, and prosecuted anew for, the offence.

(2) Whether the acquittal was before or after the coming into force of this section is, for the purposes of the section, immaterial.

(3) The condition is that on the application of the Lord Advocate the High Court has—

(a) set aside the acquittal, and
(b) granted authority to bring, by virtue of this section, a new prosecution.

(4) On making an application under subsection (3), the Lord Advocate is to send a copy of that application to the acquitted person.

(5) The acquitted person is entitled to appear or to be represented at any hearing of the application.

(6) For the purpose of hearing and determining the application, three of the Lords Commissioners of Justiciary are a quorum of the Court (the application being determined by majority vote of those sitting).

(7) An acquittal is not to be set aside under subsection (3)(a) unless the Court is satisfied—

(a) on a balance of probabilities, that subsequent to the acquittal the person credibly admitted having committed the offence, and
(b) that evidence is available sufficient to corroborate the admission.

(8) Even if the Court is satisfied as is mentioned in subsection (7), it is not to set aside the acquittal if it considers that to do so would be contrary to the interests of justice.

Robert Brown

120A As an amendment to amendment 120, line 15, at end insert—

<( ) Before hearing an application under subsection (3), the Court is to order that no publicity be given to the application, or to any document prepared in connection with the application, until—

(a) the application is refused,
(b) a final decision has been made not to bring, or to discontinue, a new prosecution,
or
(c) the new trial is concluded.>
After section 37, insert—

<Further provision as regards prosecution by virtue of section (Admission subsequent to acquittal)>

(1) No sentence may be passed on conviction in a new prosecution brought by virtue of section (Admission subsequent to acquittal) which could not have been passed under the proceedings on the original indictment or complaint (“the earlier proceedings”).

(2) A new prosecution may be brought by virtue of section (Admission subsequent to acquittal) notwithstanding that any time limit, other than the time limit mentioned in subsection (3), for the commencement of such proceedings has elapsed.

(3) Proceedings in a new prosecution brought by virtue of section (Admission subsequent to acquittal) are to be commenced within 2 months after the date on which authority to bring the prosecution was granted.

(4) In proceedings in a new prosecution brought by virtue of section (Admission subsequent to acquittal) it is competent for either party to lead evidence which it was competent for that party to lead in the earlier proceedings.

(5) But the indictment or complaint in the new prosecution is to identify any matters as respects which the prosecutor intends to lead evidence by virtue of subsection (4) (being matters as respects which it would not have been competent to lead evidence but for that subsection).

(6) For the purposes of subsection (3), proceedings are deemed commenced—

(a) in a case where a warrant to apprehend the accused is granted—

(i) on the date on which the warrant is executed, or

(ii) if it is executed without unreasonable delay, on the date on which it is granted, and

(b) in any other case, on the date on which the accused is cited.

(7) Where the 2 months mentioned in subsection (3) elapse and no new prosecution has been brought under this section, the order under section (Admission subsequent to acquittal)(3)(a) setting aside the acquittal has the effect, for all purposes, of an acquittal.

(8) On granting authority under section (Admission subsequent to acquittal)(3)(b) to bring a new prosecution, the High Court may, after giving the parties an opportunity of being heard, order the detention of the accused person in custody or admit that person to bail.

(9) In—

(a) solemn proceedings, section 65(4)(aa) and (b) and (4A) to (9), and

(b) summary proceedings, section 147,

of the 1995 Act (prevention of delay in trials) applies to an accused person who is detained under subsection (8) as it applies to an accused person detained by virtue of being committed until liberated in due course of law.

(10) It is immaterial, for the purposes of this section, whether the acquittal was before or after the coming into force of the section.>
Bill Aitken

122 After section 37, insert—

<New evidence>

(1) A person who has been acquitted, after the coming into force of this section (or on the day on which it comes into force), of an offence may—

(a) if there is new evidence that the person committed the offence, and

(b) the conditions mentioned in subsection (2) are satisfied,

be charged with, and prosecuted for, the offence anew.

(2) The conditions are—

(a) that the person’s acquittal was of an offence mentioned in subsection (9), and

(b) that on the application of the Lord Advocate the High Court has—

(i) set aside the acquittal, and

(ii) granted authority to bring, by virtue of this section, a new prosecution.

(3) The setting aside of the acquittal and the granting of such authority may, under subsection (2)(b), be applied for on one occasion only.

(4) On making an application under that subsection, the Lord Advocate is to send a copy of the application to the acquitted person.

(5) The acquitted person is entitled to appear or to be represented at any hearing of the application.

(6) For the purpose of hearing and determining the application under subsection (2)(b), three of the Lords Commissioners of Justiciary are a quorum of the Court (the application being determined by majority vote of those sitting).

(7) An acquittal is not to be set aside under subsection (2)(b)(i) unless the Court is satisfied that—

(a) the case against the accused is strengthened substantially by the new evidence,

(b) the new evidence is evidence which was not available, and could not with the exercise of reasonable diligence have been made available, at the trial in respect of the original offence, and

(c) on the new evidence and the evidence which was led at that trial it is highly likely that a reasonable jury properly instructed would have convicted the person of the offence.

(8) Even if the Court is satisfied as is mention in subsection (7), it is not to set aside the acquittal if it considers that to do so would be contrary to the interests of justice.

(9) The offences are—

(a) murder,

(b) at common law, rape, and

(c) an offence under either section 1 (rape) or section 18 (rape of a young child) of the Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009 (asp 9).

(10) The Scottish Ministers may by order amend subsection (9) so as to add further offences to those for the time being mentioned in that subsection.
(11) But subsection (1) does not apply as respects a person’s acquittal of an offence so added if the date of acquittal is earlier than that on which the addition is effected.

Bill Aitken

123 After section 37, insert—

<Further provision as regards prosecution by virtue of section (New evidence)

(1) No sentence may be passed on conviction in a new prosecution brought by virtue of section (New evidence) which could not have been passed under the indictment on the trial of which the person was acquitted of the offence in question.

(2) A new prosecution may be brought by virtue of section (New evidence) notwithstanding that any time limit for the commencement of such proceedings, other than the time limit mentioned in subsection (3), has elapsed.

(3) Proceedings in a new prosecution brought by virtue of section (New evidence) are to be commenced within 2 months after the date on which authority to bring the prosecution was granted.

(4) In proceedings in a new prosecution brought by virtue of section (New evidence) it is competent for either party to lead evidence which it was competent for that party to lead in the earlier proceedings.

(5) But the indictment in the new prosecution is to identify any matters as respects which the prosecutor intends to lead evidence by virtue of subsection (4) (being matters as respects which it would not have been competent to lead evidence but for that subsection).

(6) For the purposes of subsection (3), proceedings are deemed commenced—

(a) in a case where a warrant to apprehend the accused is granted—

(i) on the date on which the warrant is executed, or

(ii) if it is executed without unreasonable delay, on the date on which it is granted, and

(b) in any other case, on the date on which the accused is cited.

(7) Where the 2 months mentioned in subsection (3) elapse and no new prosecution has been brought under this section, the order under section (New evidence)(2)(b)(i) setting aside the acquittal has the effect, for all purposes, of an acquittal.

(8) On granting authority under section (New evidence)(2)(b)(ii) to bring a new prosecution, the High Court is, after giving the parties an opportunity of being heard, to order the detention of the accused person in custody or to admit that person to bail.

(9) Subsections (4)(aa) and (b) and (4A) to (9) of section 65 of the 1995 Act (prevention of delay in trials) apply to an accused person who is detained under subsection (8) as they apply to an accused person detained by virtue of being committed until liberated in due course of law.>

Bill Aitken

124 After section 37, insert—

<Nullity of proceedings on previous indictment or complaint

(1) Subsection (3) applies where—
(a) a person has, whether on indictment or complaint—

(i) been charged with, and

(ii) acquitted or convicted of, an offence, and

(b) the conditions mentioned in subsection (4) are satisfied.

(2) Whether the conviction or acquittal was before or after the coming into force of this section is, for the purposes of the section, immaterial.

(3) The person may be charged with, and prosecuted anew for, the offence.

(4) The conditions are that, on the application of the prosecutor and after hearing the parties, the High Court is satisfied—

(a) that the proceedings on the indictment or complaint were a nullity, and

(b) that it would not be contrary to the interests of justice to proceed as mentioned in subsection (3).

Bill Aitken

125 After section 37, insert—

<Amendment of Schedule 1 to the Contempt of Court Act 1981

(1) Schedule 1 to the Contempt of Court Act 1981 (c.49) (times when proceedings are active for the purposes of section 2 of that Act) is amended as follows.

(2) After paragraph 1 (the expressions “criminal proceedings” and “appellate proceedings”), there is inserted—

“1A Proceedings under sections (Plea in bar of trial) to (Nullity of proceedings on previous indictment or complaint) of the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Act 2010 (asp 00) are criminal proceedings (and are not appellate proceedings) for the purposes of this Schedule.”.

(3) In paragraph 4 (initial steps of criminal proceedings), at the end there is added—

“(f) the making of an application under section (Tainted acquittals)(3)(a)(ii) or (b) (tainted acquittals), (Admission subsequent to acquittal)(3) (admission subsequent to acquittal) or (New evidence)(2)(b) (new evidence) of the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Act 2010 (asp 00).”.

(4) In paragraph 5 (conclusion of criminal proceedings), at the end there is added—

“(d) where the initial steps of the proceedings are as mentioned in paragraph 4(f)—

(i) by refusal of the application,

(ii) if the application is granted and within 2 months thereafter a new prosecution is brought, by acquittal, or as the case may be by sentence, in the new prosecution.”.

(5) In paragraph 7 (discontinuance of proceedings), at the end there is added—

“(d) where the initial steps of the proceedings are as mentioned in paragraph 4(f) and the application is granted, if no new prosecution is brought within 2 months thereafter.”.
Section 38

Robert Brown

379  In section 38, page 53, line 15, leave out subsection (2) and insert—

<(2) In section 41 (age of criminal responsibility), for “eight” substitute “12”.>

Bill Aitken

126  In section 38, page 53, line 17, after <not> insert <normally>

Bill Aitken

127  In section 38, page 53, line 18, after <not> insert <normally>

Richard Baker

389  In section 38, page 53, line 26, at end insert—

<(5) The Scottish Ministers must, as soon as possible after the end of each of the reporting years, lay before the Scottish Parliament and publish a report on the disposal of cases (“relevant cases”) involving children who, but for section 41A of the 1995 Act (as inserted by subsection (2)), could have been prosecuted.

(6) For the purposes of subsection (5), the “reporting years” are—

(a) the period of 12 months beginning with the day on which this section comes into force, and

(b) the periods of 12 months beginning with the first and second anniversaries of that day.

(7) A report under subsection (5) must, in particular—

(a) specify the number of relevant cases disposed of during the reporting year,

(b) set out how those cases were disposed of, the costs and other resources involved in those disposals, and what (if any) alternative disposals were considered, and

(c) state what (if any) consideration the Scottish Ministers have given during the year covered by the report to the merits of altering the range of disposals available in such cases.>

Robert Brown

390  In section 38, page 53, line 26, at end insert—

<( ) The Scottish Ministers may not bring subsections (1) to (4) into force until the Children’s Hearings (Scotland) Act 2010 (asp 00) is fully in force.>

Section 39

Kenny MacAskill

128  In section 39, page 53, line 32, after <offence> insert <committed by the partnership>
Kenny MacAskill

129 In section 39, page 54, line 9, at end insert—

<( ) In subsection (1), the references to a partner of a partnership include references to a person purporting to act as a partner of the partnership.>

Section 40

Kenny MacAskill

130 In section 40, page 54, line 23, leave out <all reasonable hours> and insert

Bill Aitken
Supported by: Robert Brown

131 Leave out section 40

After section 40

Margaret Curran

403 After section 40, insert—

<Parole: victims’ representation

Victims’ representation at Parole Board hearings

(1) Section 17 of the Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 2003 (asp 7) is amended as follows.

(2) After subsection (1), insert—

“(1A) Representations under subsection (1) may include a request by the victim to be heard (either in person or through a representative) at the relevant hearing of the Parole Board for Scotland.

(1B) In this section, the “relevant hearing” of the Board is the hearing at which the Board is to consider the convicted person’s case in order to decide whether to recommend, or direct, that person’s release on licence.”.

(3) In subsection (3), for “Parole Board for Scotland” substitute “Board”.

(4) After subsection (5), insert—

“(5A) Where representations are made under subsection (1) which include a request to be heard at the relevant hearing, the Board must—

(a) give the victim reasonable notice in writing of when and where the hearing is to take place and invite the victim to—

(i) attend the hearing, with or without an accompanying person, in order to be heard in person; or

(ii) send a representative to the hearing to be heard on the victim’s behalf;

(b) in so doing, give the victim appropriate information about the hearing and how it is likely to be conducted including, in particular—
(i) information about any parts of the hearing from which the victim and any accompanying person are, or the victim’s representative is, to be excluded, and

(ii) any limits on their participation during the other parts of the hearing;

(c) at the hearing, afford the victim (or the victim’s representative) a reasonable opportunity to be heard.

(5B) A victim’s representative may only be a member of the victim’s immediate family or a friend of the victim.

(5C) In reaching its decision at or after the hearing, the Board must take account of—

(a) any written representations made under subsection (1); and

(b) anything said by the victim (or the victim’s representative) at the hearing.”.

After section 41

Kenny MacAskill

420 After section 41, insert—

<Grant of warrants

Grant of warrants for execution by constables and police members of SCDEA

(1) A sheriff or justice of the peace does not lack power or jurisdiction to grant a warrant for execution by a person mentioned in subsection (2) solely because the person is not a constable of a police force for a police area lying wholly or partly in the sheriff’s or justice’s sheriffdom.

(2) The persons referred to in subsection (1) are—

(a) a constable,

(b) a police member of the Scottish Crime and Drug Enforcement Agency.>

After section 43

Kenny MacAskill

132 After section 43, insert—

<Bail conditions: remote monitoring requirements

Sections 24A to 24E of the 1995 Act (bail conditions: remote monitoring) are repealed.>

Section 44

Kenny MacAskill

421 In section 44, page 58, line 5, at end insert—

<( ) The title of section 287 becomes “Demission from office of Lord Advocate and Solicitor General for Scotland”.”>
In section 44, page 58, line 6, leave out from <subsection> to <Advocate)> and insert <that section>

In section 44, page 58, line 11, at end insert <and

( ) after “successor” insert “or the Solicitor General”>

In section 44, page 58, line 13, insert—

<( ) for “in name of” substitute “at the instance of Her Majesty’s Advocate or”, and>

In section 44, page 58, line 17, at end insert—

<(2AA) All indictments which have been raised at the instance of the Solicitor General shall remain effective notwithstanding the holder of the office of Solicitor General subsequently having died or demitted office and may be taken up and proceeded with by his successor or the Lord Advocate.>

In section 44, page 58, line 19, leave out from <as> to end of line 20

In section 44, page 58, line 24, at end insert—

<( ) in paragraph (a), after “subsection (1)” insert “or (2AA)”,>

After section 46

After section 288B of the 1995 Act insert—

“Dockets and charges in sex cases

Dockets for charges of sexual offences

(1) An indictment or a complaint may include a docket which specifies any act or omission that is connected with a sexual offence charged in the indictment or complaint.

(2) Here, an act or omission is connected with such an offence charged if it—

(a) is specifiable by way of reference to a sexual offence, and
(b) relates to—
  (i) the same event as the offence charged, or
  (ii) a series of events of which that offence is also part.

(3) The docket is to be in the form of a note apart from the offence charged.

(4) It does not matter whether the act or omission, if it were instead charged as an offence, could not competently be dealt with by the court (including as particularly constituted) in which the indictment or complaint is proceeding.

(5) Where under subsection (1) a docket is included in an indictment or a complaint, it is to be presumed that—
  (a) the accused person has been given fair notice of the prosecutor’s intention to lead evidence of the act or omission specified in the docket,
and
  (b) evidence of the act or omission is admissible as relevant.

(6) The references in this section to a sexual offence are to—
  (a) an offence under the Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009,
  (b) any other offence involving a significant sexual element.

288BB Mixed charges for sexual offences

(1) An indictment or a complaint may include a charge that is framed as mentioned in subsection (2) or (3) (or both).

(2) That is, framed so as to comprise (in a combined form) the specification of more than one sexual offence.

(3) That is, framed so as to—
  (a) specify, in addition to a sexual offence, any other act or omission, and
  (b) do so in any manner except by way of reference to a statutory offence.

(4) Where a charge in an indictment or a complaint is framed as mentioned in subsection (2) or (3) (or both), the charge is to be regarded as being a single yet cumulative charge.

(5) The references in this section to a sexual offence are to an offence under the Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009.”.

After section 51

Kenny MacAskill

429  After section 51, insert—

<Personal conduct of case by accused

Prohibition of personal conduct of case by accused in certain proceedings

(1) The 1995 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In section 288C (prohibition of personal conduct of defence in cases of certain sexual offences)—
(a) for subsection (1) substitute—

“(1) An accused charged with a sexual offence to which this section applies is prohibited from conducting his case in person at, or for the purposes of, any relevant hearing in the course of proceedings (other than proceedings in a JP court) in respect of the offence.

(1A) In subsection (1), “relevant hearing” means a hearing at, or for the purposes of, which a witness is to give evidence.”, and

(b) subsection (8) is repealed.

(3) In section 288D (appointment of solicitor by court in cases to which section 288C applies)—

(a) in subsection (1), after “proceedings” insert “(other than proceedings in a JP court)”,

(b) in subsection (2)(a), for sub-paragraphs (i) and (ii) substitute—

“(i) the conduct of his case at, or for the purposes of, any relevant hearing (within the meaning of section 288C(1A)) in the proceedings; or”, and

(c) in subsection (6), for the words from “of the accused’s defence” to the end substitute “referred to in subsection (2)(a) above.”.

(4) In section 288E (prohibition of personal conduct of defence in certain cases involving child witness under the age of 12)—

(a) subsection (1) is repealed,

(b) in subsection (2)(b), for “the trial” substitute “any hearing in the course of the proceedings”,

(c) after subsection (2) insert—

“(2A) The accused is prohibited from conducting his case in person at, or for the purposes of, any hearing at, or for the purposes of, which the child witness is to give evidence.”,

(d) in subsection (4), at the end insert “and as if references to a relevant hearing were references to a hearing referred to in subsection (2A) above”,

(e) in subsection (6)—

(i) for paragraphs (za) and (a) substitute—

“(a) that his case at, or for the purposes of, any hearing in the course of the proceedings at, or for the purposes of, which the child witness is to give evidence may be conducted only by a lawyer.”, and

(ii) in paragraph (c), for the words from “preliminary” to “trial” substitute “hearing”, and

(f) subsection (8) is repealed.

(5) In section 288F (power to prohibit personal conduct of defence in other cases involving vulnerable witnesses)—

(a) in subsection (1), for “the trial” substitute “any hearing in the course of the proceedings”,

78
(b) in subsection (2), for the words from “defence” to the end substitute “case in person at any hearing at, or for the purposes of, which the vulnerable witness is to give evidence.”,

(c) in subsection (3)(a), for “trial” substitute “hearing”,

(d) in subsection (4), for the words from “after” to the end substitute “in relation to a hearing after, as well as before, the hearing has commenced.”,

(e) subsection (4A) is repealed,

(f) in subsection (5), at the end insert “and as if references to a relevant hearing were references to any hearing in respect of which an order is made under this section”, and

(g) subsection (6) is repealed.

Section 58

James Kelly

404 In section 58, page 71, line 4, leave out from <18(7A)> to <Act),> in line 5 and insert <18 (prints, samples etc. in criminal investigations)—

( ) in subsection (3), the words “or on the conclusion of such proceedings otherwise than with a conviction or an order under section 246(3) of this Act” are repealed, and

( ) in subsection (7A),>

James Kelly

405 In section 58, page 71, leave out line 6, and insert—

<( ) The title of section 18A becomes “Retention of samples, etc.: persons prosecuted but not convicted etc.”, and in that section>

James Kelly

406 In section 58, page 71, line 11, after <(2)> insert—

<( ) the words “in respect of a relevant sexual offence or a relevant violent offence” are repealed, and

( )>

James Kelly

407 In section 58, page 71, line 13, at end insert—

<( ) in subsection (4)(a), for “3” substitute “6”,>

James Kelly

408 In section 58, page 71, line 18, at end insert <, and

( ) the definition of “relevant sexual offence” and “relevant violent offence” is repealed.>
After section 58

Stewart Maxwell

418 After section 58, insert—

<Retention of samples etc. where offer under sections 302 to 303ZA of 1995 Act accepted

After section 18A of the 1995 Act insert—

“18AA Retention of samples etc. where offer under sections 302 to 303ZA accepted

(1) This section applies to—

(a) relevant physical data taken from or provided by a person under section 18(2), and

(b) any sample, or any information derived from a sample, taken from a person under section 18(6) or (6A),

where the conditions in subsection (2) are satisfied.

(2) The conditions are—

(a) the relevant physical data or sample was taken from or provided by the person while the person was under arrest or being detained in connection with the offence or offences in relation to which a relevant offer is issued to the person, and

(b) the person—

(i) accepts a relevant offer, or

(ii) in the case of a relevant offer other than one of the type mentioned in paragraph (d) of subsection (3), is deemed to accept a relevant offer.

(3) In this section “relevant offer” means—

(a) a conditional offer under section 302,

(b) a compensation offer under section 302A,

(c) a combined offer under section 302B, or

(d) a work offer under section 303ZA.

(4) Subject to subsections (6) and (7) and section 18AB(9) and (10), the relevant physical data, sample or information must be destroyed no later than the destruction date.

(5) In subsection (4), “destruction date” means—

(a) in relation to a relevant offer that relates only to—

(i) a relevant sexual offence,

(ii) a relevant violent offence, or

(iii) both a relevant sexual offence and a relevant violent offence, the date of expiry of the period of 3 years beginning with the date on which the relevant offer is issued or such later date as an order under section 18AB(2) or (6) may specify,
(b) in relation to a relevant offer that relates to—

(i) an offence or offences falling within paragraph (a), and

(ii) any other offence,

the date of expiry of the period of 3 years beginning with the date on which the relevant offer is issued or such later date as an order under section 18AB(2) or (6) may specify,

c) in relation to a relevant offer that does not relate to an offence falling within paragraph (a), the date of expiry of the period of 2 years beginning with the date on which the relevant offer is issued.

(6) If the relevant offer is recalled by virtue of section 302C(5) or a decision to uphold it is quashed under section 302C(7)(a), all record of the relevant physical data, sample and information derived from the sample must be destroyed as soon as possible after the recall or, as the case may be, quashing of the decision.

(7) If the relevant offer is set aside by virtue of section 303ZB, all record of the relevant physical data, sample and information derived from the sample must be destroyed as soon as possible after the setting aside.

(8) In this section, “relevant sexual offence” and “relevant violent offence” have, subject to the modification in subsection (9), the same meanings as in section 19A(6) and include any attempt, conspiracy or incitement to commit such an offence.

(9) The modification is that the definition of “relevant sexual offence” in section 19A(6) is to be read as if for paragraph (g) there were substituted—

“(g) public indecency if it is apparent from the relevant offer (as defined in section 18AA(3)) relating to the offence that there was a sexual aspect to the behaviour of the person to whom the relevant offer is issued;”.

Section 18AA: extension of retention period where relevant offer relates to certain sexual or violent offences

(1) This section applies where the destruction date for relevant physical data, a sample or information derived from a sample falls within section 18AA(5)(a) or (b).

(2) On a summary application made by the relevant chief constable within the period of 3 months before the destruction date, the sheriff may, if satisfied that there are reasonable grounds for doing so, make an order amending, or further amending, the destruction date.

(3) An application under subsection (2) may be made to any sheriff—

(a) in whose sheriffdom the appropriate person resides,

(b) in whose sheriffdom that person is believed by the applicant to be, or

(c) to whose sheriffdom the person is believed by the applicant to be intending to come.

(4) An order under subsection (2) must not specify a destruction date more than 2 years later than the previous destruction date.

(5) The decision of the sheriff on an application under subsection (2) may be appealed to the sheriff principal within 21 days of the decision.
(6) If the sheriff principal allows an appeal against the refusal of an application under subsection (2), the sheriff principal may make an order amending, or further amending, the destruction date.

(7) An order under subsection (6) must not specify a destruction date more than 2 years later than the previous destruction date.

(8) The sheriff principal’s decision on an appeal under subsection (5) is final.

(9) Section 18AA(4) does not apply where—

(a) an application under subsection (2) has been made but has not been determined,

(b) the period within which an appeal may be brought under subsection (5) against a decision to refuse an application has not elapsed, or

(c) such an appeal has been brought but has not been withdrawn or finally determined.

(10) Where—

(a) the period within which an appeal referred to in subsection (9)(b) may be brought has elapsed without such an appeal being brought,

(b) such an appeal is brought and is withdrawn or finally determined against the appellant, or

(c) an appeal brought under subsection (5) against a decision to grant an application is determined in favour of the appellant,

the relevant physical data, sample or information derived from a sample must be destroyed as soon as possible after the period has elapsed, or, as the case may be, the appeal is withdrawn or determined.

(11) In this section—

“appropriate person” means the person from whom the relevant physical data was taken or by whom it was provided or from whom the sample was taken,

“destruction date” has the meaning given by section 18AA(5),

“the relevant chief constable” has the same meaning as in subsection (11) of section 18A, with the modification that references to the person referred to in subsection (2) of that section are references to the appropriate person.”.

Stewart Maxwell

419 After section 58, insert—

Retention of samples etc. taken or provided in connection with certain fixed penalty offences

After section 18A of the 1995 Act insert—

“18AC Retention of samples etc. taken or provided in connection with certain fixed penalty offences

(1) This section applies to—
(a) relevant physical data taken from or provided by a person under section 18(2), and
(b) any sample, or any information derived from a sample, taken from a person under section 18(6) or (6A),
where the conditions in subsection (2) are satisfied.

(2) The conditions are—

(a) the person was arrested or detained in connection with a fixed penalty offence,
(b) the relevant physical data or sample was taken from or provided by the person while the person was under arrest or being detained in connection with that offence,
(c) after the relevant physical data or sample was taken from or provided by the person, a constable gave the person under section 129(1) of the 2004 Act—
   (i) a fixed penalty notice in respect of that offence (the “main FPN”), or
   (ii) the main FPN and one or more other fixed penalty notices in respect of fixed penalty offences arising out of the same circumstances as the offence to which the main FPN relates, and
(d) the person, in relation to the main FPN and any other fixed penalty notice of the type mentioned in paragraph (c)(ii)—
   (i) pays the fixed penalty, or
   (ii) pays any sum that the person is liable to pay by virtue of section 131(5) of the 2004 Act.

(3) Subject to subsections (4) and (5), the relevant physical data, sample or information derived from a sample must be destroyed before the end of the period of 2 years beginning with—

(a) where subsection (2)(c)(i) applies, the day on which the main FPN is given to the person,
(b) where subsection (2)(c)(ii) applies and—
   (i) the main FPN and any other fixed penalty notice are given to the person on the same day, that day,
   (ii) the main FPN and any other fixed penalty notice are given to the person on different days, the later day.

(4) Where—

(a) subsection (2)(c)(i) applies, and
(b) the main FPN is revoked under section 133(1) of the 2004 Act,
the relevant physical data, sample or information derived from a sample must be destroyed as soon as possible after the revocation.

(5) Where—

(a) subsection (2)(c)(ii) applies, and
(b) the main FPN and any other fixed penalty notices are revoked under section 133(1) of the 2004 Act,
the relevant physical data, sample or information derived from a sample must be destroyed as soon as possible after the revocations.

(6) In this section—
“the 2004 Act” means the Antisocial Behaviour etc. (Scotland) Act 2004 (asp 8),
“fixed penalty notice” has the meaning given by section 129(2) of the 2004 Act,
“fixed penalty offence” has the meaning given by section 128(1) of the 2004 Act.”.>

Section 59

James Kelly

409 In section 59, page 72, line 19, leave out from <such> to second <offence> and insert—
<(  ) an offence of assault, categorised by the Principal Reporter as grave, or (  ) such—
   (i) other relevant violent offence, or
   (ii) relevant sexual offence,>

James Kelly

410 In section 59, page 72, leave out lines 21 to 36

Robert Brown

380 In section 59, page 72, leave out lines 21 and 22, and insert—
<(7) Where this section applies, the sheriff may, on summary application by the relevant chief constable, make an order that, subject to section 18C(6) and (7), the relevant physical data, sample or the information must be destroyed no later than the destruction date.

(7A) The sheriff may only make the order referred to in subsection (7) if satisfied that the child continues to pose a risk to public safety and that retention of the relevant physical data, sample or information until the destruction date is justified by that risk.>

Robert Brown

381 In section 59, page 72, line 40, at end insert—
<“relevant chief constable” has the same meaning as in section 18A(11), with the modification that references to the person referred to in subsection (2) of that section are references to the child referred to in subsection (1);>
James Kelly
411 In section 59, page 73, leave out lines 4 to 40

Robert Brown
382 In section 59, page 73, line 37, leave out from <18A(11)> to end of line 40 and insert <18B(10)>

James Kelly
412 In section 59, page 74, line 2, leave out from <after> to end of line and insert <at beginning insert “Except where section 18B applies and”>

Section 61

Kenny MacAskill
133 In section 61, page 76, line 6, after <reasons> insert <for making the reference>

Kenny MacAskill
134 In section 61, page 76, line 9, leave out from <additional> to end of line 10 and insert <the appellant to found the appeal on additional grounds>

Kenny MacAskill
135 In section 61, page 76, line 19, leave out <additional grounds to be raised> and insert <the appeal to be founded on additional grounds>

Before section 62

Kenny MacAskill
430 Before section 62, insert—

<Admissibility of prior statements of witnesses: abolition of competence test

(1) This section applies in relation to a prior statement made by a witness before the commencement of section 24 of the Vulnerable Witnesses (Scotland) Act 2004 (asp 3) (“the 2004 Act”) (which abolishes the competence test for witnesses in criminal and civil proceedings).

(2) For the purpose of the application of subsection (2)(c) of section 260 of the 1995 Act (admissibility of prior statement depends on competence of the witness at the time of the statement) in relation to the statement, section 24 of the 2004 Act is taken to have been in force at the time the statement was made.

(3) In this section, “prior statement” has the meaning it has in section 260 of the 1995 Act.>

Section 62

Robert Brown
383 In section 62, page 77, line 1, after <may> insert <, if satisfied that there is good reason to do so,>
After section 64

Kenny MacAskill

384 After section 64, insert—

<Child witnesses in proceedings for people trafficking offences

In section 271 of the 1995 Act (vulnerable witnesses: main definitions)—

(a) in subsection (1)(a), for “age of 16” substitute “relevant age”, and

(b) after subsection (1), insert—

“(1A) In subsection (1)(a), “the relevant age” means—

(a) in the case of a person who is giving or is to give evidence in proceedings for an offence under section 22 of the Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 2003 (asp 7) (trafficking in prostitution etc.) or section 4 of the Asylum and Immigration (Treatment of Claimants, etc.) Act 2004 (c.19) (trafficking people for exploitation), the age of 18, and

(b) in any other case, the age of 16.”.

Section 66

Kenny MacAskill

431 In section 66, page 80, line 13, leave out from <other> to end of line 16 and insert <the jury>

Kenny MacAskill

432 In section 66, page 80, line 18, leave out <any persons within paragraph (a)(i) to (iii)> and insert <the judge or the jury>

Kenny MacAskill

433 In section 66, page 81, line 6, leave out <material> and insert <information>

Kenny MacAskill

434 In section 66, page 81, line 8, leave out <may> and insert <must>

Kenny MacAskill

435 In section 66, page 81, line 12, leave out <material”> and insert <information”>

Kenny MacAskill

436 In section 66, page 82, line 16, leave out <the weight of>

Kenny MacAskill

437 In section 66, page 82, line 18, leave out <the sole or decisive evidence> and insert <material in>
In section 66, page 82, line 36, leave out <warning> and insert <direction>

In section 66, page 83, leave out lines 33 to 36

Schedule 3

In schedule 3, page 148, line 28, leave out <treat the conviction as unsafe> and insert <quash the conviction>

In schedule 3, page 148, line 31, leave out <treat the conviction as unsafe> and insert <quash the conviction>

After section 67

After section 67, insert—

European evidence warrants

(1) The Scottish Ministers may by order make provision for the purposes of and in connection with implementing any obligations of the United Kingdom created by or arising under the Framework Decision (so far as they have effect in or as regards Scotland).

(2) The provision may, in particular, confer functions—

(a) on the Scottish Ministers,

(b) on the Lord Advocate,

(c) on other persons.

(3) An order under subsection (1) may modify any enactment.

(4) An order under subsection (1) may contain provision creating offences and a person who commits such an offence is liable to such penalties, not exceeding those mentioned in subsection (5), as are provided for in the order.

(5) Those penalties are—

(a) on conviction on indictment, imprisonment for a period not exceeding 2 years, or a fine, or both,

(b) on summary conviction, imprisonment for a period not exceeding 12 months, or a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum, or both.

Before section 68

Kenny MacAskill

443 Before section 68, insert—

<Lists of jurors>

(1) The 1995 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In section 84 (juries: returns of jurors and preparation of lists)—

(a) in subsection (3), for “list” substitute “lists”,

(b) for subsection (4) substitute—

“(4) For the purpose of a trial in the sheriff court, the sheriff principal must furnish the clerk of court with a list of names, containing the number of persons required, from lists of potential jurors of—

(a) the sheriff court district in which the trial is to be held (the “local district”), and

(b) if the sheriff principal considers it appropriate, any other sheriff court district or districts in the sheriffdom in which the trial is to be held (“other districts”).

(4A) Where the sheriff principal furnishes a list containing names of potential jurors of other districts, the sheriff principal may determine the proportion as between the local district and the other districts in which jurors are to be summoned.”,

(c) in subsection (5), for “list”, in both places where it occurs, substitute “lists”, and

(d) subsection (7) is repealed.

(3) In section 85(4) (juries: citation and attendance of jurors)—

(a) for the words from the beginning to “shall”, in the first place where it occurs, substitute “The sheriff clerk of—

(a) the sheriffdom in which the High Court is to sit, or

(b) the sheriff court district in which a trial in the sheriff court is to be held, shall”, and

(b) the word “such”, in the first place where it occurs, is repealed.”>

Section 68

David McLetchie

415 In section 68, page 86, line 14, leave out from <for> to <relevant”> and insert <at beginning insert “subject to subsection (1A),”>

David McLetchie

416 In section 68, page 86, leave out lines 17 to 19 and insert—

<“(1A) In relation to criminal proceedings, a person is qualified and liable to serve as a juror despite being over 65 years of age.”>
Section 69

David McLetchie

417 In section 69, page 86, line 30, at end insert <and ( ) persons who have attained the age of 71;>

Section 70

Kenny MacAskill

136 In section 70, page 89, line 34, leave out <and Wales>

Kenny MacAskill

137 In section 70, page 90, line 21, leave out from <body> to end of line 23 and insert <health and social care body mentioned in paragraphs (a) to (e) of section 1(5) of the Health and Social Care (Reform) Act (Northern Ireland) 2009 (c.1).>

Section 72

Kenny MacAskill

138 In section 72, page 94, line 29, leave out <Law> and insert <Justice>

Trish Godman

9 In section 72, page 94, line 39, at end insert <, other than an offence under section 11A (engaging in a paid-for sexual activity) or 11B (advertising paid-for sexual activities)>

Margo MacDonald

9A As an amendment to amendment 9, line 2, after <activity)> insert <, 11AA (causing alarm etc. by engaging in a paid-for sexual activity)>

Kenny MacAskill

139 In section 72, page 94, line 41, leave out <27> and insert <37>

Kenny MacAskill

140 In section 72, page 94, line 42, leave out <penetrative>

Kenny MacAskill

141 In section 72, page 95, line 1, leave out <31> and insert <42>

Kenny MacAskill

142 In section 72, page 95, line 2, leave out <35> and insert <46>
Kenny MacAskill

143 In section 72, page 95, line 3, at end insert—

<(  ) an offence under section (Slavery, servitude and forced or compulsory labour) (slavery, servitude and forced or compulsory labour) of the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Act 2010 (asp 00).>

Kenny MacAskill

144 In section 72, page 95, line 14, leave out <42> and insert <54>

Section 74

Kenny MacAskill

444 In section 74, page 96, line 23, after <station> insert <in Scotland>

Kenny MacAskill

445 In section 74, page 97, line 5, leave out from  to end of line and insert—

<(a) a requirement under section 117A(2) (surrender of passports: England and Wales and Northern Ireland), or
(b) a requirement under section 117B(2) (surrender of passports: Scotland).”.

Kenny MacAskill

446 In section 74, page 97, line 5, at end insert—

<(1C) A person may be prosecuted, tried and punished for any offence under subsection (1B)—

(a) in any sheriff court district in which the person is apprehended or is in custody, or
(b) in such sheriff court district as the Lord Advocate may determine, as if the offence had been committed in that district (and the offence is, for all purposes incidental to or consequential on the trial or punishment, to be deemed to have been committed in that district).”.

After section 74

Kenny MacAskill

145 After section 74, insert—

<Sex offender notification requirements

Sex offender notification requirements

(1) The Sexual Offences Act 2003 (c.42) is amended as follows.
(2) In section 85 (notification requirements: periodic notification)—

(a) in subsection (1), for “period of one year” substitute “applicable period”,

90
(b) in subsection (3), for “period referred to in subsection (1)” substitute “applicable period”, and
(c) after subsection (4) insert—
“(5) In this section, the “applicable period” means—
(a) in any case where subsection (6) applies to the relevant offender, such period not exceeding one year as the Scottish Ministers may prescribe in regulations, and
(b) in any other case, the period of one year.

(6) This subsection applies to the relevant offender if the last home address notified by the offender under section 83(1) or 84(1) or subsection (1) was the address or location of such a place as is mentioned in section 83(7)(b).”.

(3) In section 86 (notification requirements: travel outside the United Kingdom), subsection (4) is repealed.

(4) In section 87 (method of notification and related matters), subsection (6) is repealed.

(5) In section 96 (information about release or transfer), subsection (4) is repealed.

(6) In section 138 (orders and regulations)—
(a) in subsection (2), after “84,” insert “85,”, and
(b) after subsection (3) insert—
“(4) Orders or regulations made by the Scottish Ministers under this Act may—
(a) make different provision for different purposes,
(b) include supplementary, incidental, consequential, transitional, transitory or saving provisions.”.

After section 75

Kenny MacAskill

146 After section 75, insert—

<Risk of sexual harm orders: spent convictions

In section 7 of the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974 (c.53) (limitations on rehabilitation under the Act), in subsection (2), after paragraph (bb) insert—

“(bc) in any proceedings on an application under section 2, 4 or 5 of the Protection of Children and Prevention of Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2005 (asp 9) or in any appeal under section 6 of that Act;”.

After section 79

Kenny MacAskill

447 After section 79, insert—

<Rehabilitation of offenders

Spent alternatives to prosecution: Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974

(1) The Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974 (c.53) is amended as follows.
(2) After section! 8A (protection afforded to spent cautions), insert—

“8B Protection afforded to spent alternatives to prosecution: Scotland

(1) For the purposes of this Act, a person has been given an alternative to prosecution in respect of an offence if the person (whether before or after the commencement of this section)—

(a) has been given a warning in respect of the offence by—

(i) a constable in Scotland, or

(ii) a procurator fiscal,

(b) has accepted, or is deemed to have accepted—

(i) a conditional offer issued in respect of the offence under section 302 of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.46), or

(ii) a compensation offer issued in respect of the offence under section 302A of that Act,

(c) has had a work order made against the person in respect of the offence under section 303ZA of that Act,

(d) has been given a fixed penalty notice in respect of the offence under section 129 of the Antisocial Behaviour etc. (Scotland) Act 2004 (asp 8),

(e) has accepted an offer made by a procurator fiscal in respect of the offence to undertake an activity or treatment or to receive services or do any other thing as an alternative to prosecution, or

(f) in respect of an offence under the law of a country or territory outside Scotland, has been given, or has accepted or is deemed to have accepted, anything corresponding to a warning, offer, order or notice falling within paragraphs (a) to (e) under the law of that country or territory.

(2) In this Act, references to an “alternative to prosecution” are to be read in accordance with subsection (1).

(3) Schedule 3 to this Act (protection for spent alternatives to prosecution: Scotland) has effect.”.

(3) After section 9A (unauthorised disclosure of spent cautions), insert—

“9B Unauthorised disclosure of spent alternatives to prosecution: Scotland

(1) In this section—

(a) “official record” means a record that—

(i) contains information about persons given an alternative to prosecution in respect of an offence, and

(ii) is kept for the purposes of its functions by a court, police force, Government department, part of the Scottish Administration or other local or public authority in Scotland,

(b) “relevant information” means information imputing that a named or otherwise identifiable living person has committed, been charged with, prosecuted for or given an alternative to prosecution in respect of an offence which is the subject of an alternative to prosecution which has become spent,
(c) “subject of the information”, in relation to relevant information, means the named or otherwise identifiable living person to whom the information relates.

(2) Subsection (3) applies to a person who, in the course of the person’s official duties (anywhere in the United Kingdom), has or has had custody of or access to an official record or the information contained in an official record.

(3) The person commits an offence if the person—
(a) obtains relevant information in the course of the person’s official duties,
(b) knows or has reasonable cause to suspect that the information is relevant information, and
(c) discloses the information to another person otherwise than in the course of the person’s official duties.

(4) Subsection (3) is subject to the terms of an order under subsection (6).

(5) In proceedings for an offence under subsection (3), it is a defence for the accused to show that the disclosure was made—
(a) to the subject of the information or to a person whom the accused reasonably believed to be the subject of the information, or
(b) to another person at the express request of the subject of the information or of a person whom the accused reasonably believed to be the subject of the information.

(6) The Scottish Ministers may by order provide for the disclosure of relevant information derived from an official record to be excepted from the provisions of subsection (3) in cases or classes of cases specified in the order.

(7) A person guilty of an offence under subsection (3) is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding level 4 on the standard scale.

(8) A person commits an offence if the person obtains relevant information from an official record by means of fraud, dishonesty or bribery.

(9) A person guilty of an offence under subsection (8) is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding level 5 on the standard scale, or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 6 months, or to both.”.

(4) After Schedule 2 (protection for spent convictions) insert—

“SCHEDULE 3

PROTECTION FOR SPENT ALTERNATIVES TO PROSECUTION: SCOTLAND

Preliminary

1 (1) For the purposes of this Act, an alternative to prosecution given to any person (whether before or after the commencement of this Schedule) becomes spent—
(a) in the case of—
(i) a warning referred to in paragraph (a) of subsection (1) of section 8B, or
(ii) a fixed penalty notice referred to in paragraph (d) of that subsection, at the time the warning or notice is given,
(b) in any other case, at the end of the relevant period.

(2) The relevant period in relation to an alternative to prosecution is the period of 3 months beginning on the day on which the alternative to prosecution is given.

(3) Sub-paragraph (1)(a) is subject to sub-paragraph (5).

(4) Sub-paragraph (2) is subject to sub-paragraph (6).

(5) If a person who is given a fixed penalty notice referred to in section 8B(1)(d) in respect of an offence is subsequently prosecuted and convicted of the offence, the notice—

(a) becomes spent at the end of the rehabilitation period for the offence, and

(b) is to be treated as not having become spent in relation to any period before the end of that rehabilitation period.

(6) If a person who is given an alternative to prosecution (other than one to which sub-paragraph (1)(a) applies) in respect of an offence is subsequently prosecuted and convicted of the offence—

(a) the relevant period in relation to the alternative to prosecution ends at the same time as the rehabilitation period for the offence ends, and

(b) if the conviction occurs after the end of the period referred to sub-paragraph (2), the alternative to prosecution is to be treated as not having become spent in relation to any period before the end of the rehabilitation period for the offence.

2 (1) In this Schedule, “ancillary circumstances”, in relation to an alternative to prosecution, means any circumstances of the following—

(a) the offence in respect of which the alternative to prosecution is given or the conduct constituting the offence,

(b) any process preliminary to the alternative to prosecution being given (including consideration by any person of how to deal with the offence and the procedure for giving the alternative to prosecution),

(c) any proceedings for the offence which took place before the alternative to prosecution was given (including anything that happens after that time for the purpose of bringing the proceedings to an end),

(d) any judicial review proceedings relating to the alternative to prosecution,

(e) in the case of an offer referred to in paragraph (e) of subsection (1) of section 8B, anything done or undergone in pursuance of the terms of the offer.

(2) Where an alternative to prosecution is given in respect of two or more offences, references in sub-paragraph (1) to the offence in respect of which the alternative to prosecution is given includes a reference to each of the offences.

(3) In this Schedule, “proceedings before a judicial authority” has the same meaning as in section 4.
Protection for spent alternatives to prosecution and ancillary circumstances

3 (1) A person who is given an alternative to prosecution in respect of an offence is, from the time the alternative to prosecution becomes spent, to be treated for all purposes in law as a person who has not committed, been charged with or prosecuted for, or been given an alternative to prosecution in respect of, the offence.

(2) Despite any enactment or rule of law to the contrary—

(a) where an alternative to prosecution given to a person in respect of an offence has become spent, evidence is not admissible in any proceedings before a judicial authority exercising its jurisdiction or functions in Scotland to prove that the person has committed, been charged with or prosecuted for, or been given an alternative to prosecution in respect of, the offence,

(b) a person must not, in any such proceedings, be asked any question relating to the person’s past which cannot be answered without acknowledging or referring to an alternative to prosecution that has become spent or any ancillary circumstances, and

(c) if a person is asked such a question in any such proceedings, the person is not required to answer it.

(3) Sub-paragraphs (1) and (2) do not apply in relation to any proceedings—

(a) for the offence in respect of which the alternative to prosecution was given, and

(b) which are not part of the ancillary circumstances.

4 (1) This paragraph applies where a person (“A”) is asked a question, otherwise than in proceedings before a judicial authority, seeking information about—

(a) A’s or another person’s previous conduct or circumstances,

(b) offences previously committed by A or the other person, or

(c) alternatives to prosecution previously given to A or the other person.

(2) The question is to be treated as not relating to alternatives to prosecution that have become spent or to any ancillary circumstances and may be answered accordingly.

(3) A is not to be subjected to any liability or otherwise prejudiced in law because of a failure to acknowledge or disclose an alternative to prosecution that has become spent or any ancillary circumstances in answering the question.

5 (1) An obligation imposed on a person (“A”) by a rule of law or by the provisions of an agreement or arrangement to disclose any matter to another person does not extend to requiring A to disclose an alternative to prosecution (whether one given to A or another person) that has become spent or any ancillary circumstances.

(2) An alternative to prosecution that has become spent or any ancillary circumstances, or any failure to disclose an alternative to prosecution that has become spent or any ancillary circumstances, is not a ground for dismissing or excluding a person from any office, profession, occupation or employment, or for prejudicing the person in any way in any occupation or employment.

6 The Scottish Ministers may by order—
(a) exclude or modify the application of any of paragraphs (a) to (c) of paragraph 3(2) in relation to questions put in such circumstances as may be specified in the order,

(b) provide for exceptions from any of the provisions of paragraphs 4 and 5 in such cases or classes of case, or in relation to alternatives to prosecution of such descriptions, as may be specified in the order.

7 Paragraphs 3 to 5 do not affect—

(a) the operation of an alternative to prosecution, or

(b) the operation of an enactment by virtue of which, because of an alternative to prosecution, a person is subject to a disqualification, disability, prohibition or other restriction or effect for a period extending beyond the time at which the alternative to prosecution becomes spent.

8 (1) Section 7(2), (3) and (4) apply for the purpose of this Schedule as follows.

(2) Subsection (2), apart from paragraphs (b) and (d), applies to the determination of any issue, and the admission or requirement of evidence, relating to alternatives to prosecution previously given to a person and to ancillary circumstances as it applies to matters relating to a person’s previous convictions and circumstances ancillary thereto.

(3) Subsection (3) applies to evidence of alternatives to prosecution previously given to a person and ancillary circumstances as it applies to evidence of a person’s previous convictions and the circumstances ancillary thereto.

(4) For that purpose, subsection (3) has effect as if—

(a) a reference to subsection (2) or (4) of section 7 were a reference to that subsection as applied by this paragraph, and

(b) the words “or proceedings to which section 8 below applies” were omitted.

(5) Subsection (4) applies for the purpose of excluding the application of paragraph 3.

(6) For that purpose, subsection (4) has effect as if the words “(other than proceedings to which section 8 below applies)” were omitted.

(7) References in the provisions applied by this paragraph to section 4(1) are to be read as references to paragraph 3.”>

Kenny MacAskill

448 After section 79, insert—

<Medical services in prisons

Medical services in prisons

(1) For section 3A of the Prisons (Scotland) Act 1989 (c.45) (medical services in prisons) substitute—

“3A Medical officers for prisons

(1) The Scottish Ministers must designate one or more medical officers for each prison.
(2) A person may be designated as a medical officer for a prison only if the person is a registered medical practitioner performing primary medical services for prisoners at the prison under the National Health Service (Scotland) Act 1978 (c.29).

(3) A medical officer has the functions that are conferred on a medical officer for a prison by or under this Act or any other enactment.

(4) A medical officer is not an officer of the prison for the purposes of this Act.

(5) Rules under section 39 of this Act may provide for the governor of a prison to authorise the carrying out by officers of the prison of a search of any person who is in, or is seeking to enter, the prison for the purpose of providing medical services for any prisoner at the prison.

(6) Nothing in rules made by virtue of subsection (5) allows the governor to authorise an officer of a prison to require a person to remove any of the person’s clothing other than an outer coat, jacket, headgear, gloves and footwear.”.

(2) In section 41D of that Act (unlawful disclosure of information by medical officers), for subsection (1) substitute—

“(1) This section applies to—
(a) a medical officer for a prison, and
(b) any person acting under the supervision of such a medical officer.”.

(3) In section 107 of the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 (c.33) (officers of contracted out prisons), for subsections (6) to (8) substitute—

“(6) The director must designate one or more medical officers for the prison.

(7) A person may be designated as a medical officer for the prison only if the person is a registered medical practitioner performing primary medical services for prisoners at the prison under the National Health Service (Scotland) Act 1978 (c.29).”.

(4) In section 110 of that Act (consequential modifications of the 1989 Act etc.)—

(a) in each of subsections (3) and (4), for “3A(6)” substitute “3A(5) and (6)”,
(b) subsection (4A) is repealed, and
(c) in subsection (6), for “3A(1) to (5) (medical services)” substitute “3A(1) and (2) (medical officers)”.

(5) In section 111(3) of that Act (intervention by the Scottish Ministers), in paragraph (c), after “prison” insert “and the medical officer or officers for the prison”.

Section 80

Angela Constance

413 In section 80, page 100, line 29, after <victims> insert <(including children and young people)>
Section 89

Bill Aitken

147 In section 89, page 106, line 37, leave out <review all the> and insert <disclose to the accused all>

Bill Aitken

148 In section 89, page 106, line 38, leave out from <and> to end of line 14 on page 107

Bill Aitken

149 In section 89, page 107, line 15, leave out <(5)> and insert <(2)>

Section 90

Bill Aitken

150 In section 90, page 107, line 19, leave out <(5) or (6)> and insert <(2)>

Bill Aitken

151 In section 90, page 107, leave out lines 24 to 26 and insert <and

(b) disclose to the accused any such information not already disclosed under section 89(2).>

Bill Aitken

152 In section 90, page 107, line 28, leave out <(5) or (6)> and insert <(2)>

Section 91

Bill Aitken

153 In section 91, page 108, line 5, leave out <89(5) or 90(2)> and insert <89(2) or 90(2)(b)>

Section 92

Bill Aitken

154 In section 92, page 108, line 10, leave out <89(5), 90(2)(c), 94(1)(c) or 95(3)(c)> and insert <89(2) or 90(2)(b)>

Section 93

Bill Aitken

155 In section 93, page 108, line 20, leave out <(5)> and insert <(2)>
Section 94

Bill Aitken
Supported by: Robert Brown

Leave out section 94

Section 95

Bill Aitken
Supported by: Robert Brown

Leave out section 95

Section 96

Bill Aitken

In section 96, page 110, line 28, leave out <89(5), 90(2)(c), 94(1)(c) or 95(3)(c)> and insert <89(2) or 90(2)(b)>

Section 97

Bill Aitken

In section 97, page 110, line 36, leave out <89(5), 90(2)(c), 94(1)(c) or 95(3)(c)> and insert <89(2) or 90(2)(b)>

Section 98

Bill Aitken

In section 98, page 111, line 5, leave out <89(5), 90(2)(c), 94(1)(c) or 95(3)(c)> and insert <89(2) or 90(2)(b)>

Section 100

Bill Aitken

In section 100, page 111, line 36, leave out <89(5), 90(2)(c), 94(1)(c) or 95(3)(c)> and insert <89(2) or 90(2)(b)>

Section 102

Bill Aitken

In section 102, page 112, line 26, leave out from <89(5)> to <information> in line 28 and insert <89(2) or 90(2)(b) the prosecutor is required to disclose an item of information to an accused>
Bill Aitken

163 In section 102, page 113, line 5, leave out from <89(5)> to end of line 6 and insert <89(2) or, as the case may be, 90(2)(b)>

Section 106

Bill Aitken

164 In section 106, page 115, line 14, leave out <89(5), 90(2)(c), 94(1)(c) or 95(3)(c)> and insert <89(2) or 90(2)(b)>

Section 111

Bill Aitken

165 In section 111, page 117, line 6, leave out <89(5), 90(2)(c), 94(1)(c) or 95(3)(c)> and insert <89(2) or 90(2)(b)>

Section 116

Bill Aitken

166 In section 116, page 119, line 24, leave out from <89(5)> to end of line 27 and insert <89(2),
   (b) section 90(1) and (2),
   (c) section 93(2) (where it first occurs),>

Section 117

Angela Constance

24 In section 117, page 120, line 10, at end insert <, or
   (b) to determine or control that conduct despite being able to appreciate the nature or wrongfulness of it.>

Kenny MacAskill

167 In section 117, page 120, line 31, leave out <it> and insert <such abnormality>

Section 121

Kenny MacAskill

168 In section 121, page 123, leave out lines 2 and 3 and insert—
   <(3A) No order may be made under subsection (1) unless a draft of the statutory instrument containing the order has been laid before and approved by resolution of the Scottish Parliament.>
Section 122

Kenny MacAskill

169  In section 122, page 125, line 1, leave out from <5,> to <29> in line 2 and insert <5 and 11>

Section 123

Robert Brown

385  Leave out section 123

After section 124

Kenny MacAskill

170  After section 124, insert—

<

Licensing of street trading: food hygiene certificates

(1)  Section 39 of the 1982 Act (street traders’ licences) is amended as follows.

(2)  In subsection (4), for the words from “the requirements” to the end substitute “such requirements as the Scottish Ministers may by order made by statutory instrument specify”.

(3)  After subsection (4), insert—

“(5)  An order under subsection (4) may specify requirements by reference to provision contained in another enactment.

(6)  A statutory instrument containing an order made under subsection (4) is subject to annulment in pursuance of a resolution of the Scottish Parliament.”>

Section 125

Kenny MacAskill

171  In section 125, page 128, line 24, at beginning insert <In>

Kenny MacAskill

172  In section 125, page 128, line 24, leave out from <is> to <In> in line 26 and insert <, in>

Cathie Craigie

2  In section 125, page 128, line 25, leave out subsection (2)

Cathie Craigie

3  In section 125, page 128, line 26, leave out subsection (3)
Leave out section 125

Section 128

Kenny MacAskill

173 In section 128, page 129, line 25, at end insert—

<(  ) in paragraph 2(3)(b), after “application” insert “(other than the date and place of birth of any person)”;

(  ) in paragraph 2(8)(a), after “application” insert “(other than the date and place of birth of any person)”,>

Section 129

Kenny MacAskill

174 Leave out section 129

After section 130

Bill Aitken

460 After section 130, insert—

<Premises licence applications: crime prevention objective

In section 23(5) of the 2005 Act (grounds for refusal of premises licence application), after paragraph (b), insert—

“(ba) that the appropriate chief constable has made a recommendation under section 21(5) that the application be refused,”.>

After section 131

Kenny MacAskill

175* After section 131, insert—

<Reviews of premises licences: notification of determinations

(1) The 2005 Act is amended as follows.

(2) After section 39 (Licensing Board’s powers on review), insert—

“39A Notification of determinations

(1) Where a Licensing Board, at a review hearing—

(a) decides to take one of the steps mentioned in section 39(2), or

(b) decides not to take one of those steps,

the Board must give notice of the decision to each of the persons mentioned in subsection (2).
(2) The persons referred to in subsection (1) are—
   (a) the holder of the premises licence, and
   (b) where the decision is taken in connection with a premises licence review application, the applicant.

(3) Where subsection (1)(a) applies, the holder of the premises licence may, by notice to the clerk of the Board, require the Board to give a statement of reasons for the decision.

(4) Where—
   (a) subsection (1)(a) or (b) applies, and
   (b) the decision is taken in connection with a premises licence review application,
   the applicant may, by notice to the clerk of the Board, require the Board to give a statement of reasons for the decision.

(5) Where the clerk of a Board receives a notice under subsection (3) or (4), the Board must issue a statement of the reasons for the decision to—
   (a) the person giving the notice, and
   (b) any other person to whom the Board gave notice under subsection (1).

(6) A statement of reasons under subsection (5) must be issued—
   (a) by such time, and
   (b) in such form and manner,
   as may be prescribed.”.>

After section 132

Kenny MacAskill

176 After section 132, insert—

<Premises licence applications: food hygiene certificates

(1) Section 50 of the 2005 Act (certificates as to planning, building standards and food hygiene) is amended as follows.

(2) In subsection (7), for the words from “the requirements” to the end substitute “such requirements as the Scottish Ministers may, by order, specify.”.

(3) After subsection (7), insert—
   “(7A) An order under subsection (7) may specify requirements by reference to provision contained in another enactment.”.

(4) In subsection (8)(c), for “the 1990 Act” substitute “section 5 of the Food Safety Act 1990 (c.16)”.

>
After section 134

Kenny MacAskill

449 After section 134, insert—

<Extended hours applications: notification period

(1) Section 69 of the 2005 Act (notification of extended hours application) is amended as follows.

(2) After subsection (3), add—

“(4) Subsections (5) and (6) apply where the Licensing Board is satisfied that the application requires to be dealt with quickly.

(5) Subsections (2) and (3) have effect in relation to the application as if the references to the period of 10 days were references to such shorter period of not less than 24 hours as the Board may determine.

(6) Subsection (3) has effect in relation to the application as if for the word “must” there were substituted “may”.”.>

Section 136

Kenny MacAskill

177 In section 136, page 135, line 3, at end insert—

“(ba) the notice does not include a recommendation under section 73(4),”>

Kenny MacAskill

178 In section 136, page 135, leave out lines 22 to 27 and insert—

“(a) hold a hearing for the purposes of considering and determining the application, and

(b) after having regard to the circumstances in which the personal licence previously held expired or, as the case may be, was surrendered—

(i) refuse the application, or

(ii) grant the application.”.>

After section 137

Kenny MacAskill

179 After section 137, insert—

<Appeals

In section 131(2) of the 2005 Act (appeals), the words “by way of stated case, at the instance of the appellant,” are repealed.”>
Schedule 4

Kenny MacAskill

180  In schedule 4, page 149, line 11, leave out <22(2) or>

Kenny MacAskill

181  In schedule 4, page 150, leave out lines 18 to 21

Section 140

Kenny MacAskill

182  Leave out section 140

Section 142

Kenny MacAskill

183  Leave out section 142

Section 143

Robert Brown

391  In section 143, page 138, line 30, after <148(1)> insert <other than one bringing into force section 17(1), (2) or (3)>

Kenny MacAskill

184  In section 143, page 138, line 32, at end insert—

\(<( \ ) \) an order under section (Mutual recognition of judgments and probation decisions)(1),>

Kenny MacAskill

450  In section 143, page 138, line 32, at end insert—

\(<( \ ) \) an order under section (European evidence warrants)(1),>

Bill Aitken

185  In section 143, page 138, line 32, at end insert—

\(<( \ ) \) an order under section (New evidence)(10),>

Kenny MacAskill

186  In section 143, page 138, leave out line 33
Kenny MacAskill

187 In section 143, page 138, line 33, at end insert—

< ( ) an order under section 146(1) containing provisions which modify any enactment (including this Act), or>

Kenny MacAskill

188 In section 143, page 138, line 34, leave out <146(1) or>

Robert Brown

392 In section 143, page 138, line 35, at end insert <or

( ) an order under section 148(1) bringing into force section 17(1), (2) or (3).>

Schedule 5

Kenny MacAskill

189 In schedule 5, page 151, line 35, at end insert—

<The Libel Act 1792 (c.60)
The Libel Act 1792 is repealed.
The Criminal Libel Act 1819 (c.8)
The Criminal Libel Act 1819 is repealed.
The Defamation Act 1952 (c.66)
In the Defamation Act 1952, section 17(2) is repealed.>

Kenny MacAskill

451 In schedule 5, page 152, line 10, at end insert—

<The Law Officers Act 1944 (c.25)
In section 2(3) of the Law Officers Act 1944 (Lord Advocate and Solicitor General for Scotland), for the words from “three” to the end substitute “287 of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.46)”.

Kenny MacAskill

452 In schedule 5, page 152, line 12, leave out from <In> to <1974> and insert—

< ( ) The Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974 is amended as follows.
( ) In section 1>

Kenny MacAskill

453 In schedule 5, page 152, line 15, at end insert—

< ( ) In section 6(6)(bb) (convictions in service disciplinary proceedings), for “the Schedule” substitute “Schedule 1”.
( ) The Schedule (service disciplinary proceedings) is renumbered as Schedule 1.>
Kenny MacAskill

190 In schedule 5, page 152, line 24, at end insert—

<The Incest and Related Offences (Scotland) Act 1986 (c.36)>

The Incest and Related Offences (Scotland) Act 1986 is repealed.>

Kenny MacAskill

191 In schedule 5, page 153, line 3, after <89> insert <, 111>

Kenny MacAskill

192 In schedule 5, page 153, line 3, at end insert—

<The Trade Union and Labour Relations (Consolidation) Act 1992 (c.52)>

In section 243(4)(b) of the Trade Union and Labour Relations (Consolidation) Act 1992 (restriction of offence of conspiracy: Scotland), the words “or sedition” are repealed.>

Kenny MacAskill

193 In schedule 5, page 153, line 12, at end insert—

<The Criminal Procedure (Consequential Provisions) (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.40)>

In Schedule 4 to the Criminal Procedure (Consequential Provisions) (Scotland) Act 1995 (minor and consequential amendments), in paragraph 44, sub-paragraph (2) is repealed.>

Kenny MacAskill

386 In schedule 5, page 153, line 35, at end insert—

<In section 11 (certain offences committed outside Scotland)—>

(a) in subsection (3), for “proceeded against, indicted” substitute “prosecuted”,
(b) in subsection (4), for “dealt with, indicted” substitute “prosecuted”.

Kenny MacAskill

454 In schedule 5, page 153, line 35, at end insert—

<In section 17A (right of person accused of sexual offence to be told about restriction on conduct of defence: arrest), in subsection (1)—>

(a) for paragraphs (za) and (a) substitute—

“(a) that his case at, or for the purposes of, any relevant hearing (within the meaning of section 288C(1A)) in the course of the proceedings may be conducted only by a lawyer,”, and
(b) in paragraph (c), for the words from “preliminary” to “trial” substitute “hearing”.>

Kenny MacAskill

455 In schedule 5, page 154, line 5, at end insert—

<In section 35 (judicial examination), in subsection (4A)—>
(a) for paragraphs (za) and (a) substitute—

“(a) that his case at, or for the purposes of, any relevant hearing (within the meaning of section 288C(1A)) in the course of the proceedings may be conducted only by a lawyer,”, and

(b) in paragraph (c), for the words from “preliminary” to “trial” substitute “hearing”.

Kenny MacAskill

456 In schedule 5, page 154, line 42, at end insert—

<In section 66 (service and lodging of indictment etc.), in subsection (6A)(a)—

(a) for sub-paragraphs (zi) and (i) substitute—

“(i) that his case at, or for the purposes of, any relevant hearing (within the meaning of section 288C(1A)) in the course of the proceedings (including at any commissioner proceedings) may be conducted only by a lawyer,”, and

(b) in sub-paragraph (iii), for the words from “preliminary” to “trial” substitute “hearing”.

In section 71 (first diet)—

(a) in subsection (A1), for the words “his defence at the trial” substitute “the conduct of his case at any relevant hearing in the course of the proceedings”,

(b) in subsection (B1)(c), for the words “before the trial diet” substitute “in relation to any hearing in the course of the proceedings”,

(c) in subsection (1A)(a), for “the trial” substitute “any hearing in the course of the proceedings”,

(d) in subsection (1B)(a), for “the trial” substitute “any hearing in the course of the proceedings”,

(e) in subsection (5A)(b), for the words “his defence at the trial” substitute “the conduct of his case at any relevant hearing in the course of the proceedings”, and

(f) after subsection (7), insert—

“(7A) In subsections (A1) and (5A)(b), “relevant hearing” means—

(a) in relation to proceedings mentioned in paragraph (a) of subsection (B1), any hearing at, or for the purposes of, which a witness is to give evidence,

(b) in relation to proceedings mentioned in paragraph (b) of that subsection, a hearing referred to in section 288E(2A),

(c) in relation to proceedings mentioned in paragraph (c) of that subsection, a hearing in respect of which an order is made under section 288F.”.

Kenny MacAskill

457 In schedule 5, page 155, line 3, at end insert—

<In section 79 (preliminary pleas and preliminary issues), in subsection (2)(b)(ii), after “under section” insert “22ZB(3)(b),”.

108
In schedule 5, page 155, line 23, at end insert—

<In section 140 (citation), in subsection (2A)—

(a) for paragraph (a) substitute—

“(a) that his case at, or for the purposes of, any relevant hearing (within the meaning of section 288C(1A)) in the course of the proceedings (including at any commissioner proceedings) may be conducted only by a lawyer,”, and

(b) in paragraph (c), for the words “his defence at the trial” substitute “the conduct of his case at, or for the purposes of, the hearing”.

In section 144 (procedure at first diet), in subsection (3A)—

(a) for paragraph (a) substitute—

“(a) that his case at, or for the purposes of, any relevant hearing (within the meaning of section 288C(1A)) in the course of the proceedings may be conducted only by a lawyer,”, and

(b) in paragraph (c), for the words “his defence at the trial” substitute “the conduct of his case at, or for the purposes of, the hearing”.

In section 146 (plea of not guilty), in subsection (3A)—

(a) for paragraph (a) substitute—

“(a) that his case at, or for the purposes of, any relevant hearing (within the meaning of section 288C(1A)) in the course of the proceedings may be conducted only by a lawyer,”, and

(b) in paragraph (c), for the words “his defence at the trial” substitute “the conduct of his case at, or for the purposes of, the hearing”.>
(4) In section 56 (powers of the court on remand or committal of children and young persons), subsection (3) is repealed.

Kenny MacAskill

196 In schedule 5, page 157, line 28, at end insert—

<The Legal Deposit Libraries Act 2003 (c.28)

Section 10 of the Legal Deposit Libraries Act 2003 (exemption from liability: activities in relation to publications) is amended as follows—

(a) in subsection (1), the words “, or subject to any criminal liability,” are repealed,
(b) in subsection (2)(a), the words “in the case of liability in damages” are repealed,
(c) in subsection (3), the words “, or subject to any criminal liability,” are repealed,
(d) in subsection (4)(a), the words “in the case of liability in damages” are repealed,
(e) in subsection (6)(a), the words “, or subject to any criminal liability,” are repealed, and
(f) in subsection (8), the words “and criminal liability” are repealed.>

Kenny MacAskill

459 In schedule 5, page 157, line 36, at end insert—

<The Criminal Procedure (Amendment) (Scotland) Act 2004 (asp 5)

In the Criminal Procedure (Amendment) (Scotland) Act 2004 the following provisions are repealed—

(a) in section 4 (prohibition on accused conducting case in person in certain cases), subsection (4),
(b) section 17 (bail conditions: remote monitoring of restrictions on movements), and
(c) in the schedule (further modifications of the 1995 Act), paragraph 55.>

Kenny MacAskill

197 In schedule 5, page 158, line 36, at end insert <and

(ii) sub-paragraph (b) is repealed.>

Kenny MacAskill

387 In schedule 5, page 159, line 12, at end insert—

<The Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009 (asp 9)

In section 55(7) of the Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009 (offences committed outside the United Kingdom), for “proceeded against, indicted” substitute “prosecuted”.

Kenny MacAskill

198 In schedule 5, page 159, line 14, leave out <134> and insert <156>
Section 148

Robert Brown

In section 148, page 139, line 19, after <sections> insert <17(4) and>
2nd Groupings of Amendments for Stage 2

This document provides procedural information which will assist in preparing for and following proceedings on the above Bill. The information provided is as follows:

- the list of groupings (that is, the order in which amendments will be debated). Any procedural points relevant to each group are noted;
- a list of any amendments already debated;
- the text of amendments to be debated on the second day of Stage 2 consideration, set out in the order in which they will be debated. THIS LIST DOES NOT REPLACE THE MARSHALLED LIST, WHICH SETS OUT THE AMENDMENTS IN THE ORDER IN WHICH THEY WILL BE DISPOSED OF.

Groupings of amendments

Assessments to accompany sentencing guidelines
55, 17, 62, 63, 65, 67

Dates on which sentencing guidelines to take effect
56

Relationship with existing power of High Court to issue sentencing guidelines
60, 71, 72, 76

Consultation on draft sentencing guidelines
64, 21, 395, 396

Effect of sentencing guidelines
69

Ministers’ power to request Council to prepare or review guidelines
397

Scottish Sentencing Council – power to provide information, advice etc.
73

Consultation on Scottish Sentencing Council’s business plan
74

Community payback orders (and requirements under CPOs) to be imposed on offenders

Purpose of community payback orders
77
Title of “supervision requirement”
78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, 90, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97

Notes on amendments in this group
Amendment 79 is pre-empted by amendment 204 in the group “Conduct requirements”
Amendment 83 is pre-empted by amendment 236, also in that group
Amendment 84 is pre-empted by amendment 238 in the group “Supervision requirements”
Amendments 85, 86 and 87 are pre-empted by amendment 239 in the group “Compensation requirements”
Amendment 96 is pre-empted by amendment 323 in the group “Community payback orders – revocation, variation and discharge, including where CPO breached”

Compensation requirements
200, 206, 235, 239, 286, 290, 327

Notes on amendments in this group
Amendment 239 pre-empts amendments 85, 86 and 87 in the previous group

Conduct requirements
201, 204, 207, 236, 275

Notes on amendments in this group
Amendments 204 and 236 pre-empt, respectively, amendments 79 and 83 in group “Title of “supervision requirement””

Supervision requirements
203, 234, 237, 238

Notes on amendments in this group
Amendment 238 pre-empts amendment 84 in the group “Title of “supervision requirement””

Community payback orders – definitions
210, 211

Community payback orders – local authority (responsible officer and reports on offenders)
213, 214, 218, 219, 220, 222, 223, 224, 267, 296, 337

Community payback orders – special provision for level 1 unpaid work or other activity requirements
216, 243, 254, 259, 297

Community payback orders – alternative disposals available to court
227

Community payback orders – payment of offenders’ expenses
233, 265
Community payback orders – unpaid work or other activity requirement

Community payback orders – fine defaulters
252, 253, 258, 292

Community payback orders – mental health treatment requirements (chartered psychologists)
268, 269, 270, 271, 272, 273

Community payback orders – drug treatment requirement
274

Community payback orders – commencement and standards
276

Community payback orders – progress reviews
278, 279

Community payback orders – revocation, variation and discharge, including where CPO breached

Notes on amendments in this group
Amendment 323 pre-empts amendment 96 in the group “Title of “supervision requirement””

Community payback orders – restricted movement requirement
328, 329, 330, 331, 332, 333, 334, 335

Unpaid work and other activity requirement – consultation
98

Annual reports on community payback orders
99

Community payback orders – consequential modifications
342, 343, 414

Offence of stalking, offence of threatening, alarming or distressing behaviour
399, 400, 401, 402, 378

Non-harassment orders – course of conduct
5, 6, 7

Presumption against short periods of imprisonment or detention
100, 101, 388, 1, 391, 392, 393

Report on operation of sections 14 and 17
102
Pre-sentencing reports about organisations
103

Voluntary intoxication by alcohol – effect in sentencing
104

Mutual recognition of judgments and probation decisions
105, 184

Minimum sentence for having in a public place an article with a blade or point
10, 10A

Involvement in serious organised crime
344, 345, 346, 347, 348, 349, 350, 351, 358

Notes on amendments in this group
Amendment 347 pre-empts amendment 348

Offences aggravated by connection with serious organised crime (corroboration)
352

Directing serious organised crime
353, 354, 355, 356

Failure to report serious organised crime
357, 106, 359, 360

Genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes
107, 108

Clarification of existing offence prohibiting the carrying of offensive weapons
109

Offence of having article with blade or point (or offensive weapon) on workplace premises
11

Extreme pornography – sounds accompanying images
361, 362, 363, 364, 366

Extreme pornography – excluded images
365, 367, 368, 369

Voyeurism – additional forms of conduct
110

Sexual offences – defences in relation to offences against older children 111

Penalties for offences of brothel-keeping and living on the earnings of prostitution
370
Engaging in, advertising and facilitating paid-for sexual activities
8, 8A, 8B, 8C, 8D, 461, 9, 9A

People trafficking (and consequential provision)
371, 372, 373, 374, 375, 376, 377, 386, 387

Slavery, servitude and forced or compulsory labour
112, 143

Articles for use in fraud
113

Abolition of offences of sedition and leasing-making
114, 189, 192, 194, 196

Double jeopardy (Scottish Law Commission report)
115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 120A, 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 185

Children – age of criminal responsibility and minimum age of prosecution
379, 126, 127, 389, 390

Notes on amendments in this group
Amendment 379 pre-empts amendments 126 and 127

Offences – liability of partners
128, 129

Witness statements
130, 131

Victims’ representation at Parole Board hearings
403

Power of sheriff or JP to grant warrants to police based outside sheriffdom 420

Bail conditions – remote monitoring requirements
132, 197

Prosecution on indictment – Scottish Law Officers
421, 422, 423, 424, 425, 426, 427, 451

Dockets and charges in sex cases
428

Prohibition of personal conduct of case by accused 429, 454, 455, 456, 458, 459

Retention of samples etc. – adults
404, 405, 406, 407, 408
Retention of samples etc. – alternatives to prosecution
418, 419

Retention of samples etc. – children referred to children’s hearings (application to sheriff)
409, 410, 380, 381, 411, 382, 412

Notes on amendments in this group
Amendment 410 pre-empts amendment 380
Amendment 411 pre-empts amendment 382

Scottish Criminal Cases Review Commission – grounds for appeal
133, 134, 135

Prior statements by witnesses – abolition of competence test
430

Witness statements – use during trial
383

Child witnesses in proceedings for people trafficking offences
384

Witness anonymity orders
431, 432, 433, 434, 435, 436, 437, 438, 439, 440, 441

European evidence warrants
442, 450

Jurors in criminal trials
443, 415, 416, 417

Data matching for detection of fraud etc.
136, 137

Closure of premises associated with human exploitation etc. (minor corrections etc.)
138, 139, 140, 141, 142, 144, 198

Foreign travel orders – surrender of passports
444, 445, 446

Sex offender notification requirements
145

Risk of sexual harm orders – spent convictions
146

Rehabilitation of offenders – spent alternatives to prosecution
447, 452, 453
Medical services in prisons
448

Assistance for victim support
413

Prosecutor’s duty to disclose information
147, 148, 149, 150, 151, 152, 153, 154, 155, 156, 157, 158, 159, 160, 161, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166

Mental disorder and unfitness for trial
24, 167, 195

Conditions to which licences under the 1982 Act are to be subject 168

Licensing – powers of entry etc. (definition of “authorised civilian employee”) 169

Licensing of metal dealers
385

Licensing of street trading – food hygiene certificates
170

Licensing of market operators
171, 172, 2, 3, 4

Notes on amendments in this group
Amendment 172 pre-empts amendments 2 and 3

Applications for licences
173

Provisions to be considered as part of the Alcohol (Scotland) Bill
174, 182, 186

Premises licence applications
460, 176, 180

Reviews of premises licences – notification of determinations
175

Extended hours applications – notification period
449

Personal licence applications
177, 178, 181
Appeals against decisions of licensing board
179

Corruption in public bodies
183

Orders and regulations – circumstances in which affirmative procedure required 187, 188

Incest and related offences
190

Criminal law – revision
191, 193

Breach of undertakings – consequential modification 457

Amendments already debated

Sentencing guidelines – role of judiciary in approval and publication
With 51 – 18, 18A, 18B, 57, 58, 19, 59, 20, 61, 66, 22, 68, 70, 23, 75

Notes on amendments in this group
Amendment 58 pre-empts amendment 19
Amendment 20 pre-empts amendment 61
Amendment 70 pre-empts amendment 23
Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill: The Committee considered the Bill at Stage 2 (Day 2).

The following amendments were agreed to (by division):

17 (For 4, Against 4, Abstentions 0; amendment agreed to on casting vote)
73 (For 5, Against 3, Abstentions 0)
78 (For 5, Against 3, Abstentions 0)
80 (For 5, Against 3, Abstentions 0)
233 (For 5, Against 0, Abstentions 3)
81 (For 5, Against 3, Abstentions 0)
82 (For 5, Against 3, Abstentions 0)
89 (For 5, Against 3, Abstentions 0)
90 (For 5, Against 3, Abstentions 0)
91 (For 5, Against 3, Abstentions 0)
92 (For 5, Against 3, Abstentions 0)
93 (For 5, Against 3, Abstentions 0)
94 (For 5, Against 3, Abstentions 0)
95 (For 5, Against 3, Abstentions 0)
97 (For 5, Against 3, Abstentions 0)

The following amendments were disagreed to (by division):
Amendments 60, 397, 276, 98 and 99 were moved and, with the agreement of the Committee, withdrawn.

Amendments 19, 23, 79, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87 and 96 were pre-empted.

The following amendments were not moved: 18 (and as a consequence 18A and 18B), 57, 20, 395, 396, 22, 74 and 398.

Sections 10 and 12 were agreed to without amendment.

Sections 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 11, 13 and 14 were agreed to as amended.

The Committee ended consideration of the Bill for the day, amendment 343 having been disposed of.
On resuming—

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill (Stage 2)

The Convener: This is the second day of stage 2 proceedings on the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill. The committee will consider amendments to part 1 of the bill. However, it will not proceed beyond section 15 and line 29 on page 29 of the bill, because at its meeting next week it will take evidence on amendments that relate to subsequent provisions. I welcome again the Cabinet Secretary for Justice, who is accompanied by officials various. Members should have a copy of the bill, the marshalled list of amendments and the list of groupings for today’s consideration.

Section 5—Sentencing guidelines

The Convener: Amendment 55, in the name of the minister, is grouped with amendments 17, 62, 63, 65 and 67.

Kenny MacAskill: Amendments 55 and 17 relate to the costs and benefits assessment of guidelines that section 5(5) requires the Scottish sentencing council to produce. When giving evidence to the committee on 12 May 2009, the Sheriffs Association expressed concern that the assessment of costs and benefits would be part of the guidelines, reflecting that it would be inappropriate for sentencers to take such matters into account. In light of that, Government amendment 55 provides that the assessment is not part of a guideline but should be prepared alongside it and published during the consultation process. That makes it clear that the courts are not expected to have regard to the costs and benefits impact of a guideline when applying it.

We do not support the removal of the requirement for the assessment to contain information on the likely effect of the guidelines on the number of persons detained and the number of persons serving community sentences. We consider that it is essential to know the impact of a guideline on the number of people detained and the number of people undertaking community service during consultation, so that consultees are fully informed, but we agree that those matters should not be part of the consideration of an individual sentence and our amendments address that.

Government amendments 62, 63, 65 and 67 are consequential. They amend the provisions to reflect the altered roles of both the sentencing council and the High Court in preparing and endorsing new and revised guidelines.
I move amendment 55.

10:15

Bill Butler (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab): I hope that members agree that amendment 17 is straightforward. It would remove the obligation on the sentencing council to consider the likely effect of sentencing guidelines on

“the number of persons detained in prisons or other institutions”

and

“the number of persons serving sentences in the community”.

It would be inappropriate for such an obligation to be placed on the council. The amendment rightly retains the obligation to consider so I hope that members will be able to support this reasonable and logical amendment.

“the likely effect of the guidelines on ... the criminal justice system generally”.

Robert Brown: I oppose Bill Butler’s amendment 17. It is reasonable and sensible to include in the provisions on the sentencing council the obligation that the amendment would delete, particularly as that provision is elaborated by amendment 55, which the minister moved. If the sentencing council is to have benefit, it must consider the overall position in relation to prisons, community sentences and the like—not, as the minister rightly says, at the individual level but at the corporate level—so that politicians, the public and policy makers have an idea of the implications of sentencing guidelines. After all, prison overcrowding and the evil effects to which it has given rise in the system are one of the big issues that the committee has dealt with over the months. We need information about such issues when considering the likely effects of sentencing policy.

Stewart Maxwell (West of Scotland) (SNP): I support amendments 55, 62, 63, 65 and 67 but oppose amendment 17.

Amendment 55 in particular deals with the committee’s concern at stage 1 about the wording of section 5(5). The amendment changes the wording from

“The Council must include in any sentencing guidelines” to

“The Council must, on preparing any sentencing guidelines, also prepare”.

The amendment therefore separates out the guidelines and the assessment of their likely effect, as Robert Brown indicated, but leaves the fact that the matters mentioned in section 5(5) are important to any guidelines and that the likely effect of any guidelines on those matters must be taken into account, although not as part of the guidelines themselves.

Amendment 55 deals with the issue that concerned some members at stage 1. The information would still be available but would not, as originally intended, be included in the sentencing guidelines. That deals with the problem.

Cathie Craigie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (Lab): I support Bill Butler’s amendment 17. My recollection of the evidence that was received during stage 1, including from the Scottish Police Federation, was that the sentencing council should not be required to include in any guidelines an assessment of their likely effects on prison numbers. The courts and the sentencing council should not have that responsibility.

The Convener: The issue is whether it is appropriate for guidelines to indicate that the problems of prison capacity should affect judicial determinations. In my view, it would not be appropriate for them so to do, which is why I am attracted by the merits of Bill Butler’s amendment.

Amendment 55 agreed to.

Amendment 17 moved—[Bill Butler].

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 17 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For

Aitken, Bill (Glasgow) (Con)
Butler, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab)
Craigie, Cathie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (Lab)
Kelly, James (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab)

Against

Brown, Robert (Glasgow) (LD)
Constance, Angela (Livingston) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West of Scotland) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 4, Against 4, Abstentions 0. I use my casting vote in favour of the amendment on the basis of what I have already said.

Amendment 17 agreed to.

The Convener: The next group of amendments is on the dates on which sentencing guidelines are to take effect. Amendment 56, in the name of Robert Brown, is the only amendment in the group.

Robert Brown: Amendment 56 is simple. It removes the requirement that the sentencing council must specify the date on which guidelines are to take effect, because the guidelines are ultimately for the court under the arrangements that have now been decided. It is a consequence of other amendments that we have agreed to.

I move amendment 56.

Kenny MacAskill: I fully support Robert Brown on this amendment.

The Convener: Does Robert Brown feel the need to wind up?

Robert Brown: No.

The Convener: I think that that is a question of quitting while one is winning.

Amendment 56 agreed to.

Amendment 18 not moved.

The Convener: Amendment 18A, in the name of Robert Brown, has already been debated with amendment 51. Mr Brown, would you like to move or not move the amendment?

Robert Brown: Sorry, I have to confess that I have lost track of this one. Not moved, I think.

Bill Butler: If I may comment, convener, I remember that Robert Brown indicated two weeks ago that he would not move 18A or 18B.

Robert Brown: That is what I thought.

Amendments 18A, 18B and 57 not moved.

The Convener: Amendment 58, in the name of the minister, has already been debated with amendment 51. If amendment 58 is agreed to, I will not be able to call amendment 19, on the ground of pre-emption.

Amendments 58 and 59 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

The Convener: The next group of amendments is on the relationship with the existing power of the High Court to issue sentencing guidelines. Amendment 60, in the name of Robert Brown, is grouped with amendments 71, 72 and 76.

Robert Brown: Amendment 60 makes it clear that the High Court is still entitled to exercise its jurisdiction to issue guideline judgments. I also support Government amendments 71, 72 and 76, which provide for the court to require the sentencing council to prepare guidelines following a guideline judgment, and for the publication of guideline judgments. That seems sensible. I suppose that it could be argued that amendment 60 is not necessary, but it would be useful to clarify matters in the bill.

I move amendment 60.

Kenny MacAskill: Amendment 60 provides that section 5 is without prejudice to the power of the High Court to pronounce guideline judgments. Such a provision is not necessary as section 5 does not prejudice the existing power of the High Court in any way. The bill is framed in such a way that the system for the High Court to pronounce guideline judgments and the new role for the sentencing council to prepare sentencing guidelines can coexist harmoniously. We therefore resist amendment 60.

Government amendment 72 seeks to strengthen the guideline judgments system by providing a clearer mechanism for their promulgation. It provides for the sentencing council to publish guideline judgments pronounced by the High Court under existing powers, as well as sentencing guidelines.

The intention behind the amendment is to ensure that all sentencing guidelines and guideline judgments are available in one place and are easily accessible to the public. That does not affect the role of the Scottish Court Service in relation to the publication of High Court opinions.

Amendment 71 is consequential on amendment 53 and reflects the revised roles of the sentencing council and the High Court. Amendment 76 is also consequential on amendment 53, and amends section 13, which provides for the sentencing council to produce an annual report. Those amendments reflect the revised function of the council as an advisory body.

The Convener: I see that there are no other contributions; I do not think that there is any great division on the matter. I ask Robert Brown to wind up.

Robert Brown: The minister has put on record the position with regard to the existing powers of the High Court, so I withdraw amendment 60.

Amendment 60, by agreement, withdrawn.

Section 5, as amended, agreed to.

Section 6—Procedure for publication and review of sentencing guidelines

The Convener: Amendment 20, in the name of Bill Butler, has already been debated with amendment 51. I point out that if amendment 20 is agreed to, I will not be able to call amendment 61, on the ground of pre-emption.

Amendment 20 not moved.

Amendments 61 to 63 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.
agreed that the High Court ought to approve the eventual guidelines, it is more efficient and sensible to have its views at an earlier stage. That will get it thinking about the issue and involve its views in the procedure, which I hope will sort out any issues along the line, as we would not want any dispute about those matters.

I support Bill Butler's amendment 21, to add the Justice Committee to the list of consultees. I am interested to hear Angela Constance’s argument for consulting young people who are under 18 and the bodies that support them. I am not sure that it is necessary to single out groups in that way, but it might be better to specify more clearly how the draft is published and made known to such groups—there might be another way of tackling the issue. I suspect that amendment 396 might not be necessary, as I assume that the definition of the term “persons” includes bodies, but no doubt the minister will enlighten us on that matter.

I move amendment 64.

Bill Butler: I support Robert Brown’s amendment 64, as it seems pertinent and sensible.

Amendment 21, in my name, is both easier and more complex than it might at first appear. It is easier, in so far as the bill already provides a procedure for the sentencing council to publish proposed guidelines in draft, consult certain persons and have regard to their comments prior to finalisation. However, the difficulty is that it is not appropriate—so I am informed—to refer to the committee as such in statute, as it is not a body that is required by statute. The Scotland Act 1998 allows for the Parliament to establish committees, but there is no requirement for it to do so, and certainly no requirement—even under standing orders—to have a justice committee.

In addition, there are times, such as during dissolution and for a few weeks after an election, when, in practice, there are no committees in existence. That makes it necessary for amendment 21 to refer to > “any committee ... with a remit that includes the criminal justice system”.

The obligation to consult simply would not apply if there were no such committee at the time. That is my information. I hope that that is reasonably clear. That, in essence, is the purpose of amendment 21. I believe that it is a modest but logical addition and I ask members to support it.

10:30

Angela Constance (Livingston) (SNP): I lodged amendments 395 and 396 after discussions with Action for Children Scotland. Amendment 395 would require consultation of young people who have been victims of crime and organisations that work with young people and which support young people who have been victims of crime. Amendment 396 would require the sentencing council to consult relevant agencies and organisations before publishing guidelines.

My motivation in lodging the amendments is that I really want the perspective and experience of young people, who are far more likely to be victims than perpetrators of crime, to be captured. Of course, we know that only a small minority of young people offend. The group most at risk of becoming victims are young men between the ages of 16 and 24. Sometimes, the same people can be both victims and perpetrators, and there are clear links between victimisation and offending.

On amendment 396, it is important that before guidelines are published > the Scottish sentencing council consults key stakeholders who have experience in working with young people both as victims and as offenders.

That will promote consistency and relevance in any guidelines that are published.

Section 6(1)(b)(iii) refers to > “such other persons as the Council considers appropriate.”

Does that include bodies? I am not sure what the technical definition of “persons” is.

The Convener: I am sure that the minister will address that issue when he gets the opportunity.

Stewart Maxwell: I will speak first to Angela Constance’s amendments. I have some sympathy with the arguments that she makes about the impact of much of this on young people, but I share other members’ concerns that picking out one particular group can sometimes have unintended consequences. I am not sure that the amendments are a good way to achieve what she is trying to achieve. It may well be that other methods could be brought into play that would achieve the aims that underlie the amendments without putting those provisions in the bill, because I am not sure that that is the best place for them.

I am concerned about Bill Butler’s amendment 21, given that, as he said, there are a number of occasions on which no such committee of the Parliament exists, although I know that the amendment tries to deal with that. However, I have a larger concern. Often in this committee we say that we are concerned about possible or perceived political interference with the judicial system. By making the Justice Committee a formal consultee on the guidelines we might be slightly overstepping the mark. I ask him to consider that point. There is an issue about politicians, whether on this committee or on any other committee, being formal consultees in relation to sentencing guidelines. I am not sure that I can support amendment 21 on that basis.

I think that Robert Brown’s amendment 64 is unnecessary. As I said last week, I think that we are getting to the point of overkill in relation to the legal profession’s input into the guidelines. The issue is already covered and I do not think that the amendment is necessary.

James Kelly (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab): I oppose Angela Constance’s amendment 395. I have no doubt that it is well intentioned, but the bill already gives the option for “such other persons as the Council considers appropriate” to be consulted, and that covers it. I agree with Stewart Maxwell’s point that if we opened it up and inserted a line on one specific group, we would need to consider the relevance of including others.

The Convener: We have heard some interesting arguments from the three members who lodged the amendments. All the arguments have a degree of validity and they were expressed in fairly cogent and logical terms. I think that we all accept the intent of Robert Brown’s amendment 64, but I am not persuaded that the matter is not already picked up in the bill.

Bill Butler’s amendment 21 seeks to extend the consultation by widening the input process. I will listen to the minister’s comments on that. I am not certain that it would be appropriate for a parliamentary committee to have input, bearing in mind that such committees are made up of politicians, as Stewart Maxwell correctly said. I have doubts about amendment 21, but I will listen to further arguments before making a determination.

Angela Constance makes the obvious point that young people are frequently the victims of crime as well as the perpetrators. Her case is arguable, but I am just a little bit dubious about the advisability of selecting one particular group out of the wider range of persons who might be consulted. She raises an interesting point, but I am not persuaded by it.

Kenny MacAskill: Amendment 64 adds the Lord Justice General to the list of those who must be consulted on sentencing guidelines. There is nothing in the bill to prevent the Lord Justice General from being consulted on sentencing guidelines, and given that draft guidelines will be presented to the High Court for approval I see no need for the proposed provision.

Amendment 21 adds the Justice Committee to the required list of consultees on sentencing guidelines. As drafted, the bill allows the council to consult any committee of the Parliament if it considers it appropriate to do so.

Amendment 395 would require the sentencing council to consult young people who have been the victims of crime and bodies that work with them. Section 6 already requires consultation with the Scottish ministers, the Lord Advocate and “such other persons as the Council considers appropriate” on draft guidelines. We can rely on the council’s good sense in deciding who it is appropriate to consult. For some types of offence, consultation with young victims will be essential, but for others a statutory requirement to consult them would be of no value. The bill already requires one of the lay members of the council to be a person who appears to the Scottish ministers to have knowledge of the issues that are faced by the victims of crime, so the interests of victims of crime in general will not be forgotten.

Amendment 396 would amend section 6(1)(b)(iii) to require the sentencing council to consult such “persons and bodies” as it considers appropriate on draft guidelines. The amendment is unnecessary. The general rules for the interpretation of acts of the Scottish Parliament already provide that a reference to a person includes a body of persons, whether corporate or unincorporated, so the requirement on the sentencing council to consult “persons” already includes bodies.

Robert Brown: As the convener said, we have had an interesting debate. The issues are perhaps not world shattering, but they are nevertheless interesting and relevant to the operation of the sentencing council.

I am not persuaded by the opposition to amendment 64. It seems to me that I am suggesting a slightly different thing. I appreciate that the High Court gets involved at the stage of the draft guidelines. My point is that there is some advantage in its being more in with the bricks at an earlier stage. Against that background, I will press amendment 64.

On amendment 21, mention has been made of possible political interference from the Justice Committee. One takes the point, but if that is the case I cannot see why the Scottish ministers should be mentioned. Surely the Scottish ministers stand in a similar position to that of the committee. If there is objection to consulting the Justice Committee, the same objection should apply to the Scottish ministers. Bill Butler’s suggestion in amendment 21 is reasonable. I am minded to suggest that the committee supports it.

I have a lot of sympathy for Angela Constance’s amendment 395. However, as I have said, it is the wrong way in which to do things. After the meeting, the cabinet secretary might give some thought to the ways in which the viewpoint of young people can be more adequately taken on board. I am interested in what he said about there being someone on the sentencing council to represent the viewpoints of victims in general, but that is not quite the same as Angela Constance’s proposal. He may want to look again to see whether the perspective of young people can be brought to bear on the workings of the sentencing council either through its procedures or in the way in which things are done.

I press amendment 64.

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 64 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Brown, Robert (Glasgow) (LD)
Butler, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab)
Craigie, Cathie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (Lab)
Kelly, James (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab)

Against
Aitken, Bill (Glasgow) (Con)
Constance, Angela (Livingston) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West of Scotland) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 4, Against 4, Abstentions 0.

I exercise my casting vote against amendment 64. The matter is adequately dealt with in the bill.

Amendment 64 disagreed to.

Amendment 21 moved—[Bill Butler].

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 21 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Brown, Robert (Glasgow) (LD)
Butler, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab)
Craigie, Cathie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (Lab)
Kelly, James (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab)

Against
Aitken, Bill (Glasgow) (Con)
Constance, Angela (Livingston) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West of Scotland) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 4, Against 4, Abstentions 0.

I exercise my casting vote against amendment 21. As I stated earlier, the amendment would introduce political involvement into the process, which we do not wish to have.

Amendment 21 disagreed to.

The Convener: I call amendment 395, in the name of Angela Constance.

Angela Constance: I highlighted young people in my amendment 395 because of the disproportionate focus on them for right and wrong reasons, but given committee members' comments I will not move it. Similarly, given the cabinet secretary’s comments, I will not move amendment 396.

Amendments 395 and 396 not moved.

Amendments 65 and 66 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

Amendment 22 not moved.

Amendment 67 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

Section 6, as amended, agreed to.

After section 6

Amendment 68 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

Section 7—Effect of sentencing guidelines

10:45

The Convener: Amendment 69, in the name of the minister, is in a group on its own.

Kenny MacAskill: Amendment 69 clarifies that when the court departs from a guideline it must state why, even if its reasons are based on another guideline.

I move amendment 69.

Amendment 69 agreed to.

Section 7, as amended, agreed to.

Section 8—Ministers’ power to request that guidelines be published or reviewed

The Convener: Amendment 397, in the name of Angela Constance, is the only amendment in the group.

Angela Constance: The purpose of amendment 397 is to require the Scottish ministers to consult relevant persons and bodies before a request goes to the Scottish sentencing council to publish or review guidelines. I am interested to know whether the Scottish Government anticipates that it will, in practice, consult relevant key stakeholders on the need to publish or review specific sentencing guidelines. I imagine that there will be dialogue between the Government and civil servants and various interest groups about what representations need to be made for particular requests to the Scottish sentencing council. I hope that that dialogue will be a two-way process.

I move amendment 397.

Kenny MacAskill: Amendment 397 would require the Scottish ministers to consult such relevant persons and bodies as they consider appropriate before requesting the sentencing council to consider or review sentencing guidelines. Given that the guidelines themselves will have to be consulted on, adding on a further mandatory consultation at the beginning of the process does not seem justified. There may be cases where stakeholders make a case to the Scottish ministers about the need for a guideline, and that might be part of the reason for ministers inviting the council to do a particular bit of work. Section 12 also requires the council to consult widely in preparing its business plan. That provides another opportunity for stakeholders to suggest areas that the council should examine, not just in relation to sentencing guidelines but in relation to how it uses its other powers in section 11 to conduct research, disseminate information or provide advice and guidance about sentencing. We resist amendment 397.

The Convener: I ask Angela Constance whether she wishes to press or withdraw amendment 397.

Angela Constance: I will withdraw amendment 397.

Amendment 397, by agreement, withdrawn.

The Convener: Amendment 70, in the name of the minister, was debated with amendment 51. I point out that if amendment 70 is agreed to, amendment 23 will be pre-empted.

Amendment 70 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

Section 8, as amended, agreed to.

Section 9—High Court’s power to request review of guidelines

Amendment 71 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

Section 9, as amended, agreed to.

After section 9

Amendment 72 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

Section 10 agreed to.

Section 11—The Council’s power to provide information, advice etc

The Convener: Amendment 73, in the name of Robert Brown, is in a group on its own.

Robert Brown: Amendment 73 deals with an important issue. It seems to me entirely appropriate for the sentencing council to be asked by Government to look at particular issues as part of its remit, but it is something else altogether for the council to be required or to be requested to give advice to the Scottish Government, far less an MSP, on sentencing matters as opposed to preparing draft sentencing guidelines for the High Court. The Government has an array of lawyers—some are in the room today—and civil servants to advise it. The Government is not responsible for sentencing; that is a matter for the courts. It is certainly true that there are issues to do with the availability, resourcing or effectiveness of community sentences and prison sentences, for example, and no doubt the council might publish material on them, but it is not obvious to me that the council has a role as a Government or parliamentary adviser. That is a confusion of its role and, indeed, its independence.

I move amendment 73.

Nigel Don (North East Scotland) (SNP): I think sections 11(2) and 11(3) are in the bill to establish that it is lawful for the sentencing council to provide advice. They simply mean that if somebody chooses to ask for advice, the council is not required to say that it does not have the statutory power to provide it. On that basis, those provisions seem perfectly reasonable. I am interested to hear what the minister has to say.

Kenny MacAskill: Section 11 gives the sentencing council the power to provide advice or submit proposals on sentencing matters to the Scottish ministers or any member of the Scottish Parliament. I see no reason to remove that power from the sentencing council and therefore cannot support amendment 73. The council’s role is more than to frame sentencing guidelines: it should become a valuable source of knowledge and expertise—the natural place where ministers and parliamentarians turn for advice.

Robert Brown: I do not accept the minister’s view of the matter. Section 5, which concerns sentencing guidelines, clearly states:

“The function of the Council is to prepare and publish guidelines relating to the sentencing of offenders.”

That is its function, not to provide advice to ministers or MSPs. The minister’s reply left a little bit to be desired on the reasoning for sections 11(2) and 11(3). It is an important constitutional point, so I press amendment 73.

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 73 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.
The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Aitken, Bill (Glasgow) (Con)
Brown, Robert (Glasgow) (LD)
Butler, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab)
Craigie, Cathie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (Lab)
Kelly, James (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab)

Against
Constance, Angela (Livingston) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West of Scotland) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 5, Against 3, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 73 agreed to.

Section 11, as amended, agreed to.

Section 12—Business plan

The Convener: The next group concerns consultation on the Scottish sentencing council’s business plan. Amendment 74, in the name of Robert Brown, is the only amendment in the group.

Robert Brown: In light of the earlier decision on the Lord Justice General’s involvement in matters, I will not pursue the amendment.

Amendment 74 not moved.

Section 12 agreed to.

Section 13—Annual report

Amendments 75 and 76 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

Section 13, as amended, agreed to.

Section 14—Community payback orders

The Convener: The next group is on community payback orders—and requirements under CPOs—to be imposed on offenders. Amendment 199, in the name of the minister, is grouped with amendments 202, 205, 208, 209, 212, 215, 217, 221, 225, 226, 228 to 232, 257, 260, 277, 280, 291, 295, 299 to 302, 304, 305, 308, 312, 313, 336 and 338 to 341.

Kenny MacAskill: Amendments 199, 202, 212, 217, 221, 225, 226, 228, 232, 257, 260, 277, 280, 295, 307, 312, 336, 338 and 339 are minor technical and drafting amendments to ensure consistent use of language. References to “made”, “making” or “make” in relation to a community payback order are changed to “imposed”, “imposing” or “impose.” Reference to “in” a community payback order is changed to “by” a community payback order. Amendment 308 deletes “is in force” at section 14, page 24, line 3 and substitutes “has been imposed”. Amendment 341 deletes “the order imposing”, which is superfluous. The amendments are designed to remove inconsistencies in language and terminology.

Amendment 340 is a minor and technical amendment that relates to the definition of “locality”. It will ensure that when a community payback order is imposed in the sheriff or justice of the peace court, the appropriate court is determined by reference to the locality in which the offender resides.

I move amendment 199.

The Convener: The matter seems remarkably simple.

Amendment 199 agreed to.

The Convener: The next group is on the purpose of community payback orders. Amendment 77, in the name of Robert Brown, is the only amendment in the group.

Robert Brown: The intention behind amendment 77 is to state reasonably clearly what a community payback order is for. As members know, I am concerned about whether the order’s name really describes its rehabilitative aspects. For transparency and public understanding, it is important that the names of criminal sanctions resonate with people.

I was not convinced about saying that an offender pays back to the community by sorting his drugs problem or whatever—that is not a straightforward use of the English language—but I could not think of a better name for the order. I therefore thought that describing the order’s purpose would be useful, and the phraseology that the clerks have used at my request succeeds in that. I hope that the amendment will appeal to the committee as a sensible and helpful definition of community payback order.
I move amendment 77.

Kenny MacAskill: Amendment 77 seeks to define the purpose of community payback orders. It identifies their dual purpose as providing payback to the community and support to the offender in addressing the underlying causes of his or her offending.

We understand and support the intention behind the amendment, but we have two reservations about its drafting. The first reservation is technical: the amendment does not make it clear that the court must have regard to the stated purpose when imposing a community payback order. The second reservation is more substantial. In our response to the committee’s stage 1 report, we underlined to the committee the fact that the name “community payback order” is based on the wider definition of payback that is assumed in the Scottish Prisons Commission’s report. That underlines that offenders paying back to those whom they harmed should be at the heart of the justice system and that a range of ways of paying back exists, including paying back by working at change.

Separating payback from rehabilitation, as the amendment would do, might blur the fact that ceasing to offend is an important aspect of payback and that addressing the causes of offending is in itself an important contribution to payback.

We therefore resist amendment 77 and invite the member to withdraw it.

Robert Brown: I thank the minister for his comments and I understand what he says. I am not sure whether the objection that the amendment does not expressly require the court to have regard to the purpose has as much substance as it appears to have at first glance. If the amendment were agreed to, it would be part of the law. I did not intend to affect in a detailed way how the court deals with such issues, but it cannot be said that the provision would have no meaning—that is a different matter.

I take the point about the community payback order’s line of descent, as it were, from the Scottish Prisons Commission, but we are still left with a lack of transparency about what the order is. Against that background, I am minded to press amendment 77, although I am not averse to re-examining the situation if technical improvements can be made.

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 77 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For

Brown, Robert (Glasgow) (LD)
Butler, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab)
Craigie, Cathie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (Lab)
Kelly, James (Glasgow Rutherford) (Lab)

Against

Aitken, Bill (Glasgow) (Con)
Constance, Angela (Livingston) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West of Scotland) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 4, Against 4, Abstentions 0.

The casting vote goes against the amendment. I will give the reasons for that. Robert Brown has throughout the process consistently expressed his concerns about the purpose of community payback orders and he was of course entitled to move amendment 77. However, I am not persuaded by it. The technical arguments against the amendment are sound. It might not be Mr Brown’s last word on the subject. For the moment, I adhere to the original intent of the bill.

Amendment 77 disagreed to.

The Convener: The next group is on title of “supervision requirement”. Amendment 78, in the name of Robert Brown, is grouped with amendments 79 to 97. I draw members’ attention to the pre-emption information on the groupings list.

11:00

Robert Brown: Amendment 78 and the other amendments in the group—quite a lot of them are needed to produce the desired effect—are designed to replace the phrase “supervision requirement” with the phrase “offender supervision requirement”.

There are two reasons for that. The first, and most obvious, is that the phrase “supervision requirement” is associated more with the children’s hearings system and therefore causes a degree of confusion that could be avoided. The second reason, which I believe has some validity, is that a supervision requirement does not really sound as if it is an order of the court, of a penal nature, on a person who has committed a crime. On a point of transparency, it is desirable that the phrase has some meaning to the public.

I therefore suggest that the phrase “offender supervision requirement” is an improvement. I do not pretend that it provides finality, but it makes clearer what the order is all about, and that there lies behind it a penal requirement in an order that has been imposed by a court.

I move amendment 78.
Stewart Maxwell: We have before us a choice between two options. Robert Brown’s amendments and the Government’s proposals in the Children’s Hearings (Scotland) Bill both seek to address the issue, which we queried at stage 1, of the nature of that particular phrase. On the face of it, I am happy with the Government’s proposals, although I entirely understand Robert Brown’s intention.

The Convener: I do not think that there is any great divide on the matter, although Robert Brown’s amendments have—at this stage, at least—a slight edge in terms of clarity on the Government’s proposals. Perhaps the minister can persuade me otherwise.

Kenny MacAskill: Amendments 78 to 97 are technical amendments that seek to change the term “supervision requirement” to “offender supervision requirement”. As Stewart Maxwell said, the issue was recorded in the Justice Committee’s stage 1 report, following the Scottish Children’s Reporter Administration’s written evidence to the committee.

That evidence sought to highlight what the SCRA saw as the potential for confusion arising as a result of the existing supervision requirement, which can be imposed under section 70 of the Children (Scotland) Act 1995, given the possibility that both types of supervision might apply to a child or young person.

The Scottish Government’s response to the committee’s stage 1 report explained the proposals that were contained in the draft Children’s Hearings (Scotland) Bill, published on 26 June 2009, to change the term “supervision requirement” in that context to “compulsory supervision order”. In the Children’s Hearings (Scotland) Bill, which was introduced to Parliament on 23 February 2010, the terminology remains as “compulsory supervision order”. If that bill is enacted without change in that regard, any potential confusion with regard to the terminology should be eliminated. We will not therefore support amendments 78 to 97.

Robert Brown: I accept that it is not the most major of issues, but the term “supervision requirement” has been so much—and for so long—associated with the children’s hearings system that proposals to change the terminology for that system will not do the trick.

As the convener rightly said, the issue is relatively marginal, but my amendment 78 provides clarity. Notwithstanding the minister’s comments, I hope that the committee will support it. I press the amendment.

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 78 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Aitken, Bill (Glasgow) (Con)
Brown, Robert (Glasgow) (LD)
Butler, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab)
Craigie, Cathie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (Lab)
Kelly, James (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab)

Against
Constance, Angela (Livingston) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West of Scotland) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 5, Against 3, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 78 agreed to.

The Convener: The next group is on compensation requirements. Amendment 200, in the name of the minister, is grouped with amendments 206, 235, 239, 286, 290 and 327. I draw members’ attention to the pre-emption information on the groupings list.

Kenny MacAskill: In imposing a community payback order, the court may impose a supervision requirement. A supervision requirement can include a requirement to pay compensation. Amendments 200, 206, 235 and 239 seek to amend the bill to create a separate compensation requirement, although it should be noted that if a compensation requirement is imposed in a community payback order, the court must also impose a supervision requirement.

The offender must complete payment of the compensation within 18 months of the imposition of the compensation requirement or two months before the end of the relevant supervision requirement, whichever is the earlier.

Amendment 239 provides that some of the provisions in the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 that relate to compensation orders also apply to compensation requirements. That will mean that, for example, the types of loss for which compensation may be ordered and the arrangements for payment of compensation will apply to compensation requirements in the same way as they apply to a compensation order.

Amendment 239 provides that some of the provisions in the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 that relate to compensation orders also apply to compensation requirements. That will mean that, for example, the types of loss for which compensation may be ordered and the arrangements for payment of compensation will apply to compensation requirements in the same way as they apply to a compensation order.

Amendments 286 and 327 are consequential on the amendments that provide for a separate compensation requirement. Amendment 290 provides that a variation to a CPO cannot increase the amount of compensation that could have been awarded at the time the requirement was imposed.

I move amendment 200.

Robert Brown: Broadly speaking, I support the minister’s amendments, but will he comment on the implications of the decision on amendment 78 and how he wants to take matters forward in light of it? There are some pre-emption issues. I am happy to agree to the amendments on the understanding that we will tidy up the bill at stage 3 in light of the consequences of amendment 78.

The Convener: The amendments will of course be dealt with in due course.

Robert Brown: Yes. I just wanted some guidance on how we might juggle all the technical matters.

Kenny MacAskill: We do not anticipate any difficulties. We are talking about minor technical matters.

The Convener: The issue is straightforward. Is there any need to wind up, Mr MacAskill?

Kenny MacAskill: No.

Amendment 201 agreed to.

The Convener: The next group is on conduct requirements. Amendment 201, in the name of the minister, is grouped with amendments 204, 207, 236 and 275. Again, members should note the pre-emption information in the groupings document.

Kenny MacAskill: Amendments 201, 204, 207, 236 and 275 provide for a court at any level that is imposing a community payback order to include within that order a conduct requirement. In a conduct requirement, the court may require that the offender must do or refrain from doing specified things in a way that is conducive to achieving the outcome of promoting good behaviour or preventing further offending. The provision is similar to the power of the court in relation to probation orders in section 229 of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995.

The changes will give the courts more flexibility than is provided under the community payback order provisions. At present, the law allows the court to impose similar requirements as part of a probation order. More than 1,000 instances of such general conditions were imposed by courts in 2007-08. They included such restrictions as requiring an offender not to go into the centre of town and not to live in a house with anyone under the age of 17.

The amendments provide that the conduct requirement must be accompanied by the imposition of a supervision requirement. Further, they provide that what is required under a conduct requirement must not include or be inconsistent with anything that could be required under one of the other community payback order requirements.

I move amendment 201.

The Convener: There is merit in the amendments. Indeed, had the Government not come up with them, I would have been tempted to do so myself, as they plug a loophole. The courts have historically applied probation orders with conditions, and it is an obvious and useful corollary to do so with community payback orders.

Amendment 201 agreed to.

Amendment 202 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

The Convener: The next group is on supervision requirements. Amendment 203, in the name of the minister, is grouped with amendments 234, 237 and 238. Again, I draw members’ attention to the pre-emption information.

Kenny MacAskill: Amendment 203 adds a supervision requirement to the list of requirements that the court may impose when it imposes a CPO on an offender who is convicted of a non-imprisonable offence. The amendment provides that the supervision requirement may be imposed on its own or with other requirements.

When a court imposes a CPO under proposed new section 227G(2)(a) on an offender who is under 18 years of age, it must also impose a supervision requirement if the court is satisfied as to the services that the local authority will provide for the offender’s support and rehabilitation. Amendment 234 amends that to provide that, when the offender is under 18 at the time the court order is imposed, a supervision requirement must be imposed. As a supervision requirement will be obligatory, local authorities will have to ensure that suitable provision for supervision of young offenders who are sentenced to a CPO exists in their locality.

Amendment 237 limits the length of time for which the supervision requirement must be imposed on offenders aged 16 and 17 whose order includes only a supervision requirement and a level 1 unpaid work or other activity requirement. Amendment 238 clarifies the meaning of the word “specified” in relation to a supervision requirement.

I move amendment 203.

Amendment 203 agreed to.

The Convener: If amendment 204 is agreed to, I will be unable to call amendment 79 due to pre-emption.

Amendments 204 and 205 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

Amendment 80 moved—[Robert Brown].

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 80 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.
For
Aitken, Bill (Glasgow) (Con)
Brown, Robert (Glasgow) (LD)
Butler, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab)
Craigie, Cathie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (Lab)
Kelly, James (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab)

Against
Constance, Angela (Livingston) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West of Scotland) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the amendment is:
For 5, Against 3, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 80 agreed to.

Amendments 206 to 209 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

The Convener: The next group is on community payback orders—definitions.

Amendment 210, in the name of the minister, is grouped with amendment 211.

Kenny MacAskill: Amendments 210 and 211 are minor technical amendments to proposed new section 227A of the 1995 act. Amendment 210 clarifies that the meanings of “court” and “imprisonment” are the same throughout section 14. Amendment 211 deletes an unnecessary reference to the definition of a level 1 unpaid work or other activity requirement from proposed new section 227A of the 1995 act as the definition will be inserted elsewhere in that act as a consequence of amendment 343.

I move amendment 210.

Amendment 210 agreed to.

Amendments 211 and 212 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

The Convener: The next group is on community payback orders—definitions.

Amendment 213, in the name of the minister, is grouped with amendments 214, 218 to 220, 222 to 224, 267, 296 and 337.

Kenny MacAskill: Amendments 210 and 211 are minor technical amendments to proposed new section 227A of the 1995 act. Amendment 210 clarifies that the meanings of “court” and “imprisonment” are the same throughout section 14. Amendment 211 deletes an unnecessary reference to the definition of a level 1 unpaid work or other activity requirement from proposed new section 227A of the 1995 act as the definition will be inserted elsewhere in that act as a consequence of amendment 343.

I move amendment 210.

Amendment 210 agreed to.

Amendments 211 and 212 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

The Convener: The next group is on community payback orders—definitions.

Amendment 213, in the name of the minister, is grouped with amendments 214, 218 to 220, 222 to 224, 267, 296 and 337.

Kenny MacAskill: Amendment 213 relates to the requirement on the court to take account of a report from an officer of the local authority about the offender’s circumstances and makes it clear that the form and content of such a report may be, but need not be, specified by an act of adjournal.

I move amendment 213.

Amendment 213 agreed to.

Amendments 214 and 215 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

The Convener: The next group is on community payback orders—special provision for level 1 unpaid work or other activity requirements.

Amendment 216, in the name of the minister, is grouped with amendments 243, 254, 259 and 297.

Kenny MacAskill: Amendment 216 clarifies that the offender’s willingness to comply with an order is not needed when the court is imposing a community payback order that is imposed in relation to fine default. In line with current legislation, it will be mandatory for the court to impose a community payback order in relation to fine default.

Amendment 243 identifies instances in which a court need not take account of a report from an officer of the local authority before deciding to impose a community payback order. The instances are when the order consists of only a level 1 unpaid work or other activity requirement and when the court has no option but to impose the order because the offender has defaulted on a fine.

Amendment 254 provides that, when the court imposes a community payback order on a person aged 16 or 17 for fine default, it must also impose a supervision requirement. Amendment 259 is a minor technical amendment to take account of amendments to proposed new section 227B(6).

Amendment 297 provides that there is no requirement on the court to obtain and take account of a report by an officer of a local authority when it is considering whether to vary a community payback order when the order imposed only a level 1 unpaid work or other activity requirement or was imposed in respect of fine default.

I move amendment 216.

Amendment 216 agreed to.

The Convener: Does any member object to a single question being put on amendments 217 to 226 inclusive?

Members: No.

The Convener: Why does that not surprise me?

Amendments 217 to 226 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

The Convener: The next group is on community payback orders—alternative disposals available to court. Amendment 227, in the name of the minister, is the only amendment in the group.

Kenny MacAskill: Amendment 227 widens proposed new section 227E(3) to provide that the imposition of a community payback order does not prevent the court from imposing any other additional penalties, other than imprisonment, that may be available to it.

I move amendment 227.

Amendment 227 agreed to.

Amendments 228 to 232 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

The Convener: The next group is on community payback orders—payment of offenders’ expenses. Amendment 233, in the name of the minister, is grouped with amendment 265.

Kenny MacAskill: Amendments 233 and 265 are technical amendments. Proposed new section 227O(2)(c) that section 14 will insert into the 1995 act provides that rules under proposed new section 227O(1) of the 1995 act may make provision for the payment of travelling and other expenses in connection with the undertaking of unpaid work or other activity. Amendment 265 removes that provision and amendment 233 enables provision to be made in an order made by the Scottish ministers for the payment to offenders of travelling or other expenses in connection with the undertaking of any of the requirements of a community payback order.

The current position is that offenders receive travelling expenses that are incurred in complying with probation orders and community service orders. Amendment 233 will ensure that similar arrangements may be made for the requirements of a CPO. Such rules will be subject to negative resolution.

I move amendment 233.

James Kelly: I have some general concerns about the financial back-up on the bill. As I stated during the stage 1 debate, the figures in the financial memorandum on the numbers of people who would go on to community payback orders are not robust enough. The finance that is required to back up the policy has been estimated at between £6 million and £11 million, but I believe that it is closer to the £20 million mark.

There are genuine concerns about the financing of the bill. I note what amendment 233 seeks to achieve but there is a financial commitment associated with it, so I have some concerns and will therefore abstain.

Angela Constance: My understanding is that amendment 233 takes the opportunity of the bill to put into legislation what already happens in practice whereby, if a supervising officer is working with an offender who is on a very limited income, they provide the offender’s bus fares or other travel expenses via the criminal justice social work service to get the offender to their community service. Although that might be anathema to some people, it is what happens in practice already. From recollection of my former experience, supervising officers did not provide such expenses routinely; it was done on a case-by-case basis and the merits of the situation were taken into account.

Some vulnerable individuals—albeit that they are offenders—are on very limited incomes and we need to do what we can to enable such people to comply with their orders. My recollection, albeit that I am talking about some years ago, is that expenses were not provided routinely; it was done on a case-by-case basis. Therefore, with respect, I think that Mr Kelly is overstating his case.

The Convener: I certainly would not think it appropriate for an offender who was ordered to attend a drugs detoxification centre some distance from his home, which might involve considerable expense in getting to and from the centre, to be denied the opportunity of getting the appropriate finance. At the same time, I would be a little bit concerned if expenses of a fairly nominal nature were paid for someone to attend a community project to which he had been ordered to go to carry out community service.

As ever, I value Angela Constance’s input on the basis of her previous career, which indicates that, as we stand, decisions in this respect are taken on a case-by-case basis. At this stage, that persuades me that there is some merit in amendment 233. However, I await total reassurance from the cabinet secretary in that respect.

Kenny MacAskill: We seek to regulate and formalise a procedure that already happens and which was introduced as long ago as the 1995 act. As Angela Constance says, it does not happen in every instance but is a matter of supervision. That is where we are coming from. James Kelly and I have disagreed on the matters that he raises throughout the progress of the bill and, doubtless, we will continue to do so. I press amendment 233.

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 233 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Aitken, Bill (Glasgow) (Con)
Brown, Robert (Glasgow) (LD)
Butler, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab)
Craigie, Cathie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (Lab)
Kelly, James (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab)

Against
Constance, Angela (Livingston) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West of Scotland) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 5, Against 3, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 81 agreed to.

Amendment 82 moved—[Robert Brown].

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 82 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Aitken, Bill (Glasgow) (Con)
Brown, Robert (Glasgow) (LD)
Butler, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab)
Craigie, Cathie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (Lab)
Kelly, James (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab)

Against
Constance, Angela (Livingston) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West of Scotland) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 5, Against 3, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 82 agreed to.

Amendments 234 and 235 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

The Convener: If amendment 236 is agreed to, amendment 83 will be pre-empted.

Amendments 236 and 237 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

The Convener: If amendment 238 is agreed to, amendment 84 will be pre-empted.
Amendment 238 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—
and agreed to.

The Convener: If amendment 239 is agreed to, amendments 85 to 87 will be pre-empted.

Amendment 239 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—
and agreed to.

The Convener: The next group is on community payback orders and the unpaid work or other activity requirement. Amendment 240, in the name of the minister, is grouped with amendments 241, 398, 242, 244 to 251, 255, 256, 261 to 264, 266, 285, 288 and 289.

Kenny MacAskill: The purpose of amendments 240, 241, 245, 249, 256 and 266 is to make it clear that, under “an unpaid work or other activity requirement,” unpaid work—which is the clearest form of payback by the offender to the community—must be undertaken, but that the “other activity” is at the discretion of the responsible officer.

The responsible officer has some flexibility to decide on activities that may be important for the offender to undertake, such as work on literacy or employability. That does not mean that the court itself cannot impose such activities on the offender, through one of the other requirements that are available under the community payback order. However, it provides a flexibility in the order, which can often be valuable in light of information about the offender and his or her circumstances that becomes available to the responsible officer after the court has imposed its sentence.

Amendments 242 and 247 respond to observations by the Subordinate Legislation Committee and limit the Scottish ministers in terms of the powers that are set out in the proposed new sections 227I(6) and 227K(3) to make regulations that vary the maximum and minimum hours for which unpaid work or other activities can be required.

Amendments 244, 246, 248 and 255 are minor technical amendments that remove the word “total” from references to an unpaid work or other activity requirement. That is to avoid implying, incorrectly, that the figure is the result of adding different components.

Amendments 250 and 251 make it clear that three months is the normal period for completion of a level 1 unpaid work or other activity requirement, that six months is the normal period for completion of a level 2 requirement and that any extension of those periods must be the decision of the court.

Amendments 261 and 264 amend the proposed new section 227N of the 1995 act, which applies where an offender is subject to more than one unpaid work or other activity requirement. The purpose of amendment 261 is to clarify that there may be only one unpaid work and other activity requirement included in a community payback order.

Amendment 264 provides that when considering the number of hours that might be specified in an unpaid work or other activity requirement where another such requirement is still in place, the court should take account of only the net hours that are still to be undertaken by the offender in respect of the earlier orders, not the total hours that were originally imposed.

Where the hours that are specified under any existing unpaid work or other activity requirement are concurrent with another such requirement, hours that count towards both requirements are only counted once in determining the net balance of hours that are still to be undertaken.

Amendments 262 and 263 are minor technical amendments to the proposed new sections 227N(3) and (4) that clarify phrasing on the directions of the court in relation to section 227N(2).

Amendments 285 and 288 are minor drafting amendments that resolve inconsistencies in the language and terminology that is used. Amendment 289 provides that where a CPO is varied, the hours that are specified in an unpaid work or other activity requirement cannot be increased beyond the “appropriate maximum”.

Proposed new section 227I provides that the nature of the unpaid work or other activity that is to be undertaken by the offender is for the responsible officer to determine. Amendment 398 lays on the responsible officer the duty of ensuring that any unpaid work and any other activity that is undertaken by an offender will bring significant benefits to the area in which it is undertaken. It will be no surprise to the committee that we agree that unpaid work can bring huge benefits to communities. However, we have made it clear in our response to the committee’s stage 1 report and elsewhere that our definition of “payback” to communities is wider than unpaid work. It would include, for example, tackling a long-standing alcohol problem that fuelled offending behaviour. We therefore have no difficulty with the principle that unpaid work and other activities should benefit both the offender and the wider community. However, there are some technical problems with the way in which the amendment is drafted. The test that it sets refers to “significant benefits in the area in which the work or activity is undertaken”.

A responsible officer might conclude, for example, that an offender should undergo a course of alcohol counselling or engage with a local provider of literacy services. That would not necessarily bring immediate benefit to the area in which the drug counselling or literacy project is located, even if in the longer term it would benefit the community more widely if the offender beat their addiction or acquired new literacy skills that enabled them to enter the labour market. In many cases it would be difficult to demonstrate immediate local benefit to the geographic area in which the activity was carried out. We have therefore concluded that amendment 398 as drafted would place unnecessary restrictions on the responsible officer, and we are unable to support it.

I move amendment 240.

Angela Constance: Amendment 398 is designed to provide that the responsible officer, in determining the nature of unpaid work or other activity to be undertaken, ensures that it brings considerable benefits to the area or community.

Community payback orders provide the opportunity for offenders not just to address their own issues but to bring significant benefits to the community. The work that an offender undertakes while on a community payback order should be meaningful and not just work for the sake of it, and there should be a direct benefit to the community. I accept that unpaid work is not the only way in which an offender can pay back and that their addressing the underlying causes of their offending in the longer term will also be a meaningful payback to the community.

The debate about the amendment has a lot of parallels with that on Robert Brown’s amendment 77. That amendment ultimately failed, and I suspect that amendment 398 may go the same way.

The Convener: The principal issue in this group is amendment 398; the amendments proposed by Mr MacAskill are fairly cogent.

There is considerable merit in amendment 398. It would be greatly beneficial, both to offenders and to our hard-pressed communities, if there were visible and tangible signs of community payback within a community. However, the amendment fails on its practicality. There might not be work available in a number of areas and, as such, it could not be done.

That said, as I am sure that the minister would do, I would encourage supervising officers to see whether it is possible for work to be done in the area where the offence is perpetrated. One of the great successes of the community court system in New York, of which members will have heard me speak in the past, is the fact that there is that visibility, which works as an effective deterrent and encourages the people in the community to recognise that the law is on their side.

On the basis of the practicalities, I would have to vote against Miss Constance’s well-thought-out and well-argued amendment 398.

Kenny MacAskill: We accept the spirit and ethos of what Angela Constance seeks to achieve, but I agree with you, convener, that it is the practicality that causes difficulty.

Amendment 240 agreed to.

Amendment 241 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

Amendment 398 not moved.

Amendments 242 to 251 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

The Convener: The next group is on community payback orders and fine defaulters. Amendment 252, in the name of the minister, is grouped with amendments 253, 258 and 292.

Kenny MacAskill: Amendments 252 and 253 are minor technical amendments to proposed new sections 227M(1) and (2) of the 1995 act to replace the phrase “sentence of imprisonment” with “period of imprisonment” as fine defaulters receive only a period of imprisonment and not a sentence of imprisonment.

Amendment 258 will remove the option of the offender paying part of the outstanding fine in order that the court vary a CPO that was imposed for fine default. The amendment is considered necessary to avoid both potential significant practical administrative problems and the likely difficulty in determining how such an order should be varied. However, an offender can still pay the outstanding fine or the instalment of the fine that resulted in the CPO in full in one payment, the effect of which will be to discharge both the fine and the CPO.

Amendment 292 has the effect that the court, when revoking an order imposed for fine default, may deal with the offender in any way that it could have done in respect of the fine default for which the CPO was imposed.

I move amendment 252.

11:45

The Convener: I will resist the temptation to speak on the issue of unpaid fines.

Amendment 252 agreed to.

Amendments 253 to 267 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

Amendment 88 moved—[Robert Brown].

Nigel Don: I think that we have passed the stage at which there is any point in opposing Robert Brown’s amendments on this matter. For consistency, we should just accept them.

The Convener: We will record that as agreement. No doubt you can pursue the matter in another place.

Amendment 88 agreed to.

Amendment 89 moved—[Robert Brown].

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 89 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Aitken, Bill (Glasgow) (Con)
Brown, Robert (Glasgow) (LD)
Butler, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab)
Craigie, Cathie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (Lab)
Kelly, James (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab)

Against
Constance, Angela (Livingston) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West of Scotland) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 5, Against 3, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 89 agreed to.

The Convener: The next group is on community payback orders, mental health treatment requirements and chartered psychologists. Amendment 268, in the name of the minister, is grouped with amendments 269 to 273.

Kenny MacAskill: These are minor technical amendments. Paragraph 3 of part 1 of schedule 5 to the Health Care and Associated Professions (Miscellaneous Amendments and Practitioner Psychologists) Order 2009 (SI 2009/1182) amends section 230 of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995, which makes similar provision in relation to probation orders, to replace references to “chartered psychologists” with “registered psychologists”. Amendments 268 to 270, 272 and 273 bring proposed new sections 227R and 227T of the 1995 act into line with the amendments that the 2009 order made to section 230 of the 1995 act.

Amendment 271 updates a cross-reference that relates to the definition of “approved medical practitioner”. Proposed new section 227S of the 1995 act uses the term “approved medical practitioner”. That term is defined in the Mental Health (Care and Treatment) (Scotland) Act 2003 rather than in the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995. Where the term is used in proposed new section 227R(4)(a) of the 1995 act, reference is made to its having the meaning that is given in the 2003 act. Amendment 271 inserts a similar reference into proposed new section 227S of the 1995 act.

I move amendment 268.

The Convener: That was a perfectly straightforward, if somewhat convoluted, explanation.

Amendment 268 agreed to.

Amendments 269 and 270 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

Amendment 90 moved—[Robert Brown].

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 90 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Aitken, Bill (Glasgow) (Con)
Brown, Robert (Glasgow) (LD)
Butler, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab)
Craigie, Cathie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (Lab)
Kelly, James (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab)

Against
Constance, Angela (Livingston) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West of Scotland) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 5, Against 3, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 90 agreed to.

Amendments 271 to 273 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

Amendment 91 moved—[Robert Brown].

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 91 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Aitken, Bill (Glasgow) (Con)
Brown, Robert (Glasgow) (LD)
Butler, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab)
Craigie, Cathie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (Lab)
Kelly, James (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab)

Against
Constance, Angela (Livingston) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West of Scotland) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 5, Against 3, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 91 agreed to.

The Convener: The next group is on community payback orders and drug treatment... requirements. Amendment 274, in the name of the minister, is the only amendment in the group.

Kenny MacAskill: Proposed new section 227U of the 1995 act provides that a court may impose a community payback order with a drug treatment requirement provided that it is satisfied that arrangements have been made for the proposed treatment. Amendment 274 will clarify that the court may also impose a community payback order where it is satisfied that the proposed treatment can be made available.

I move amendment 274.

Amendment 274 agreed to.

Amendment 92 moved—[Robert Brown].

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 92 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For

Aitken, Bill (Glasgow) (Con)
Brown, Robert (Glasgow) (LD)
Butler, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab)
Craigie, Cathie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (Lab)
Kelly, James (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab)

Against

Constance, Angela (Livingston) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West of Scotland) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 5, Against 3, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 92 agreed to.

Amendment 275 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

The Convener: The next group is on the commencement and standards of community payback orders. Amendment 276, in the name of Robert Brown, is the only amendment in the group.

Robert Brown: We are aware that community payback orders, in their own context and in the wider context of later changes in the bill, are pretty important. My amendment 276 is intended to firm up the speedy and effective start of community payback orders that the committee agrees is vital. I pay tribute to the Scottish Government’s investment in improving the existing community orders and getting them to start more quickly, but I think that I am right in saying that those arrangements are not statutory. There is a strong case for making them so. Statutory direction is one of the most effective drivers of public policy. Courts, criminal justice authorities and social workers, among others, know that the order is to commence immediately, especially if it says so in statute. My amendment 276 proposes to insert new section 227VB into the 1995 act. In it, I have retained enough flexibility by providing that the order must start on the day on which it is imposed or the next weekday, but have qualified that with the phrase, “wherever possible”. As one can imagine, there may be circumstances in which there are issues, but the norm should be very clear.

My amendment also proposes to insert new section 227VC into the 1995 act. That new section would give ministers specific powers to lay down standards for community payback orders to ensure that they are prompt, effective and proportional, and that they make a difference. It is vital to have national standards in that area. While the Government has in the past indicated its views on those matters to community justice authorities and others, it would be useful if ministers had a specific power to develop standards in that regard.

I move amendment 276.

The Convener: This is an important issue, and I look forward to hearing what Mr MacAskill has to say about it.

Kenny MacAskill: The first part of amendment 276 proposes a new section 227VB, which would require that a court imposing a community payback order with a supervision or an unpaid work requirement must specify commencement dates in respect of those requirements. In addition, the dates to be specified for commencement should be either the day on which the community payback order is imposed or as soon after that date as is practicable. Obviously, there has been no opportunity to consult local authorities on the potentially significant practical and resource impacts of such statutory provision. We agree that a speedy start to a CPO is critical, but we should also recognise our commitment to working in partnership with local authorities. We have taken the approach of joint agreement to new timescales, which are included in guidance that took effect in June 2009 and are already making a difference to delivery. We do not think that such provision in the bill would be helpful. That part of amendment 276 should be resisted.

The second part of amendment 276 would insert new section 227VC into the 1995 act, to provide that the Scottish ministers may specify standards of compliance for community payback orders by means of statutory instrument. There are already powers in the bill to make rules in connection with the undertaking of unpaid work, and we are amending the bill to make it clear that the rules may confer functions on responsible officers and specify how they are to exercise their functions under the bill. The provision that amendment 276 seeks to make would be much broader and we have difficulty in seeing how it would work. For example, it is not clear how one would set out standard provisions that would support an “effective” community payback order—“effective” is not defined.

Some of the provisions in proposed new section 227VC mirror provision that is already in the bill. The bill makes it clear in section 227A(3) that a community payback order can be imposed only if the offence or offences committed were sufficiently serious. That part of amendment 276 should also be resisted and I invite Robert Brown to withdraw the amendment.

Robert Brown: I listened with interest to what the cabinet secretary said. The issue is important, as he said. I have worries—if I can put it that way—about how everything will fit together, and I depend on Government guidance in that regard. However, I am keen that the bill should provide the stronger statutory drive that I talked about. There was general agreement in the committee that it would be good if community payback activity started pretty much in the way that prison sentences do.

Although I understand and appreciate what the Government has done to try to move things forward, I wonder whether the cabinet secretary will give further consideration to the issue, to ascertain whether the approach can be tightened up. I do not want to impose on the Government a formulation that overlaps with other provisions in the bill, as the cabinet secretary pointed out. I would appreciate further discussion or ministerial consideration of the matter prior to stage 3. If such consideration is forthcoming I will seek leave to withdraw amendment 276.

The Convener: I will allow the cabinet secretary to respond to Robert Brown, because we are talking about an important issue.

Kenny MacAskill: Draft standards and guidelines will be published, but I will be more than happy to discuss the matter with Robert Brown or any other member of the committee, if that would help. We must ensure that we work together. We accept the ethos behind what Mr Brown and the committee seek to achieve; we simply seek to work with partners and statutory agencies who are charged with delivery, so that we move together and ensure that there is no replication.

The Convener: It is important that there should be immediacy. However, on the basis of the cabinet secretary’s undertaking, I ask Robert Brown what his attitude is to amendment 276.

Robert Brown: In the circumstances, I will seek leave to withdraw amendment 276.

Amendment 276, by agreement, withdrawn.

Amendment 277 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

The Convener: The next group is on progress reviews in relation to community payback orders. Amendment 278, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is grouped with amendment 279.

Kenny MacAskill: Amendment 278 will provide that where the court that imposes a community payback order is not the appropriate court to carry out the progress review, it must specify in the order the appropriate court.

In the course of a progress review, if it is alleged that the offender has failed to comply with a requirement that was imposed by the order, amendment 279 will provide that the court must “(a) provide the offender with written details of the alleged failure,
(b) inform the offender that the offender is entitled to be legally represented,
and
(c) inform the offender that no answer need be given to the allegation before the offender—
(i) has been given an opportunity to take legal advice, or
(ii) has indicated that the offender does not wish to take legal advice.”

Amendment 279 will also provide that the court must appoint another hearing, at which it can consider the matter in accordance with the breach provisions in proposed new section 227ZB of the 1995 act. If the court is not the appropriate court, it must refer the matter to the appropriate court.

The provisions make it clear that a separate breach hearing must be held whenever, in the course of a progress review, it appears to the court that a breach of the order has been committed. They spell out more clearly an offender’s rights when it appears that there has been a breach of a community payback order.

I move amendment 278.

Amendment 278 agreed to.

Amendments 279 and 280 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

12:00

The Convener: We turn to community payback orders—revocation and so on. Amendment 281, in the name of the minister, is grouped with amendments 282 to 284, 287, 293, 294, 298, 303, 306, 309 to 311 and 314 to 326. I draw members’ attention to the pre-emption information that is shown on the groupings list.

Kenny MacAskill: Amendments 281 to 284, 293, 294, 298, 303 and 306 relate to the court’s powers when varying, revoking or disbursing a CPO. Amendments 281, 282, and 293 are minor drafting amendments to resolve inconsistencies in the language and terminology. Amendment 284 will insert two further options that will be available to the court when varying an order: making provision for progress reviews, or varying such provision when it is already included in the order.

Amendment 287 will remove proposed new section 227Y(5) of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995, as it is unnecessary because the same effect will be provided by proposed new section 227Z(7) of that act. Amendment 294 will remove the requirement for the court to issue a citation that requires the offender to appear in cases in which the offender is already required to appear in respect of breach of a CPO. There is separate provision for the court to issue a citation in breach cases. Amendment 298 will clarify the wording in relation to the duty on the court to explain the requirements for a progress review that is included in a CPO following its variation.

Amendment 303 will insert into proposed new section 227Z of the 1995 act two new provisions that relate to the imposition of new requirements following variation. As the bill is drafted, only the requirements that were available to the court when the order was originally imposed can be imposed following a variation of the order. Amendment 303 will provide that that does not apply when a restricted movement requirement is being imposed as a result of a breach of a CPO. Amendment 303 will also provide that the limitation on the maximum number of unpaid work or other activity hours that could have been imposed when the order was first imposed is disregarded when varying an order. However, there will still be limits on the number of hours that can be specified in an unpaid work or other activity requirement, on variation of a CPO.

Amendment 306 will ensure that, when a court has varied a CPO, a copy of the varied order is provided to the relevant local authority as well as to the offender.

Amendment 283 will insert a new subsection into proposed new section 227Y of the 1995 act in respect of the court’s powers to vary an order. The amendment will provide that the requirement that the court may vary, discharge or revoke a CPO only if it is in the interests of justice to do so, does not apply when the court is considering varying the order as a consequence of breach of the CPO. The test for varying a CPO on breach is set out in proposed new section 227ZB(5) of the 1995 act.

Amendments 309 to 311 will remove the requirement for an application for a variation to a community payback order to be made before the court can consider varying the order to specify a new local authority, following a change of address by the offender. That will provide the court with more flexibility when varying a community payback order.

Amendment 314 will ensure that the court provides the offender with a copy of any alleged breach and notifies him or her of their rights to legal representation.

Amendments 315, 316 and 326 will amend the provisions relating to the power of the court to impose custody when revoking a CPO as a consequence of a breach. In cases in which a CPO is imposed for an offence that is not punishable by imprisonment, or for one that is imposed for fine default, the court may impose custody for up to 60 days in the case of the justice of the peace court and three months in any other court.

Amendment 317 will allow the court, when dealing with breach, to revoke any single requirement that has been imposed by the order. Amendment 318 will provide the court with the additional option, as well as that of varying the order, of imposing a fine. Amendment 320 will enable the court to vary the order if it is satisfied that the offender has failed to comply with the CPO, but has reasonable excuse for that failure.

Amendment 319 applies to a breach of a CPO that was originally imposed concurrently with a drug treatment and testing order or restriction of liberty order, and in respect of the same offence. In such cases, if the CPO is revoked as a result of breach, the court will also have to revoke any drug treatment and testing order or restriction of liberty order that was imposed for the same offence.

Amendment 322 relates to the requirement that any CPO that contains a restricted movement requirement must also contain a supervision requirement. The amendment specifies that the court must ensure that the supervision period is at least as long as the period of the restricted movement requirement. When the restricted movement requirement is less than six months in duration, the period of supervision may also be less than six months.

Amendments 323 and 324 will remove the provisions about the period of the restricted movement, as those will be dealt with by amendment 331. Amendment 325 provides that, when the court that deals with an alleged breach of a CPO is a drug court, the additional powers of a drug court also apply.

I move amendment 281.

The Convener: The amendments are reasonably straightforward, but Robert Brown has a comment.

"If the court is satisfied that the offender has failed without reasonable excuse to comply with a requirement".
The CPO can be varied, and so forth. It strikes me that there will be situations in which there is a reasonable excuse. Nevertheless, problems with the operation of the orders have been experienced and it might be advantageous to both the offender and the public to vary an order. Is there a power to vary the order in such circumstances? If not, would such a power be worth considering?

Kenny MacAskill: That is a fair point. Amendment 320 is meant to do what Robert Brown suggests—it will enable the court to vary a CPO if it is satisfied that the offender has failed to comply with the order but has reasonable excuse for that failure. There is a general discretionary power for the sheriff.

Robert Brown: Thank you. I had not followed the explanation as well as I should have done.

The Convener: It is as well that such matters are highlighted. I will assume that Mr MacAskill’s response was his summing up.

Kenny MacAskill: Yes.

Amendment 281 agreed to.

Amendments 282 to 285 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

Amendment 93 moved—[Robert Brown].

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 93 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Aitken, Bill (Glasgow) (Con)
Brown, Robert (Glasgow) (LD)
Butler, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab)
Craigie, Cathie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (Lab)
Kelly, James (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab)

Against
Constance, Angela (Livingston) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West of Scotland) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 5, Against 3, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 94 agreed to.

Amendment 95 moved—[Robert Brown].

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 95 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Aitken, Bill (Glasgow) (Con)
Brown, Robert (Glasgow) (LD)
Butler, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab)
Craigie, Cathie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (Lab)
Kelly, James (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab)

Against
Constance, Angela (Livingston) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West of Scotland) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 5, Against 3, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 95 agreed to.

Amendment 94 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

The Convener: I call amendment 323. If the amendment is agreed to, I cannot call amendment 96, due to pre-emption.

Amendments 323 to 326 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

Amendment 97 moved—[Robert Brown].

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 97 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Aitken, Bill (Glasgow) (Con)
Brown, Robert (Glasgow) (LD)
Butler, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab)
Craigie, Cathie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (Lab)
Kelly, James (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab)
Constance, Angela (Livingston) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West of Scotland) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 5, Against 3, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 97 agreed to.

Amendment 327 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

The Convener: We come to amendments on community payback orders—restricted movement requirement. Amendment 328, in the name of the minister, is grouped with amendments 329 to 335.

Kenny MacAskill: Amendments 328 to 335 relate to the provisions about restricted movement requirements, a requirement which may be imposed in a CPO following breach. Amendments 328 and 329 will require the court, when imposing a restricted movement requirement, to take account of any other restricted movement requirements or restriction of liberty orders the offender is subject to, and to ensure that the cumulative effect of those requirements does not require the offender to remain at the specified address for more than 12 hours in any one day.

Amendment 331 will insert new subsections into proposed new section 227ZD of the 1995 act to provide for the minimum and maximum durations of a restricted movement requirement. The minimum duration for such a requirement will be 14 days; the maximum duration will depend on which court imposed the original order, the age of the offender at the time the order was imposed and what requirements were included in the original order. Where the offender was under 18 at the time the order was imposed or where the order only included a level 1 unpaid work requirement, the maximum duration of a restricted movement requirement will be 60 days if the order has been imposed in the JP court, and three months if imposed in any other court. Those maximums are in line with the maximum custody periods that are available in other circumstances for breach of a CPO. In all other cases the maximum duration is 12 months. Amendments 330 and 332 are consequential on amendment 331.

Amendment 333 will allow the court to vary the address that is specified in the restricted movement requirement without the requirement for an application. That might be needed if the court decides to vary the requirement following a breach. Amendments 334 and 335 are consequential on amendment 333.

Amendment 337 will require the court to forward to the responsible officer a copy of any restricted movement requirement that is varied under proposed new section 227ZF of the 1995 act.

Amendment 328 agreed to.

Amendments 329 to 338 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

The Convener: We come to the group on unpaid work and other activity requirement—consultation. Amendment 98, in the name of Robert Brown, is the only amendment in the group.

Robert Brown: Amendment 98 is designed to ensure that there is a proper relationship between victims of crime and communities on the one hand, and the arrangements that are made for community work on the other. In fairness, there is growing good practice and experience in this area, but it is vital that both victims and local communities have confidence in the arrangements, know what work is being done to repay them and have an input into that. The importance of that requires specific mention over and above the “prescribed persons” who are specified in the existing section 14. That would be appropriate in the case of community councils and adds a little to their functions in a helpful way. I hope that the committee will be sympathetic to the amendment.

I move amendment 98.

Kenny MacAskill: As Robert Brown says, proposed new section 227ZJ of the 1995 act sets out the duties of local authorities in relation to consulting “prescribed persons” about the nature of unpaid work and other activities to be undertaken by offenders in the local authority area where the community payback order is imposed. Amendment 98 seeks to include in proposed new section 227ZJ two particular classes of persons whom the local authority should consult, namely “persons or organisations representing victims of crime” and community councils established in their area.

Rather than amend the section, as proposed, it would be better to allow Parliament to look at the list of prescribed persons in the round when the necessary regulations are laid. According to current plans, that will be in autumn 2010.

Amendment 98 should be resisted. However, both the categories that it mentions would be obvious consultees, so I am happy to give Mr Brown a commitment that we will include individuals or organisations representing victims of crime and representatives of community councils as prescribed persons in the draft regulations, so I invite him to withdraw amendment 98.

12:15

The Convener: No doubt Robert Brown will address that in his winding up.
Robert Brown: Yes. I do not have a totally strong view on the matter. There is some merit in making mention of victims in the bill, but the end result is the important thing. I am in the hands of the committee on this one—I am not sure whether members are anxious to pursue the matter. We have had a satisfactory assurance from the cabinet secretary that I am minded to accept at this stage. We can return to the issue at stage 3 if there are further qualms on the matter. I seek leave to withdraw amendment 98.

Amendment 98, by agreement, withdrawn.

The Convener: That is the sensible solution. There is merit in the amendment, and I think that all of us are encouraged by what the cabinet secretary said.

Amendment 339 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

The Convener: We turn to annual reports and community payback orders. Amendment 99, in the name of Robert Brown, is the only amendment in the group.

Robert Brown: Amendment 99 is the natural corollary to the previous amendment. At the time of the Christmas bad weather, some fuss made was rightly made about whether people on community sentences were being employed in gritting the roads. Most of us have no idea of the work that offenders do, how many people are involved and how much it all costs. It is important that elected Government and the public should know that information, both locally and nationally and in a structured way. The importance of the issue goes beyond that; information will be an important contributor to the success of the new orders and their public acceptability. Amendment 99 proposes an important provision, which matches the Government’s general desire for consultation on the nature of the work that is being done, public knowledge of the details and transparency.

I move amendment 99.

James Kelly: I support amendment 99, which is both important and helpful in the general context of the bill. From our discussions this morning and previously, it is clear that there is cross-party support for the principle of community payback orders—we want to see them working. The amendment will allow us to demonstrate what is being done. Proper evaluation of the scheme would also be undertaken. I will not repeat my previous concerns about finances. The proposed annual report would give additional information on finances, which would be helpful to the Government and local authorities in predicting their future budgeting requirements.

Kenny MacAskill: Amendment 99 would impose reporting requirements on local authorities individually and the Scottish Government in relation to the impact of community payback orders, particularly in relation to the extent, cost and nature of unpaid work and the extent, cost and nature of the programmes that are undertaken. It would also impose additional statutory reporting burdens on local authorities without due opportunity for advance consultation with the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities.

At this stage, our view is that amendment 99 should be resisted. That said, we fully accept the principle of making available adequate information on the delivery, uptake and impact of the community payback order. I would be very happy to write to the committee to set out in detail the work that we are doing to improve information collection. In particular, we are working in partnership with stakeholders to review the scope and collection of criminal justice social work statistics. Instead of imposing any new burden on local authorities, we are taking forward this work within our existing arrangements. We are working in collaboration with stakeholders who deal with front-line services as well as collating the information that the public and Parliament require.

I invite Robert Brown to seek leave to withdraw amendment 99.

Robert Brown: I am grateful for the minister’s response. I am not sure that what is proposed would place a great burden on local authorities, but I am prepared to consider the matter further between now and stage 3. I will discuss it with the minister and wait to see his letter. If committee colleagues continue to have an interest in the matter, we could return to it at stage 3.

It is important that there is a degree of statutory pressure on the operation of community payback orders, as it is central to their success that the public have confidence in them. The information that would be provided under my proposal, both on individual local authority areas and at a national level, would inform debate. It is information that we ought to have, although I am open to discussions about the detail.

Against that background, I seek the committee’s leave to withdraw amendment 99.

The Convener: I take it that you seek leave to withdraw amendment 99 on the understanding that the issue might be revisited at stage 3, because there are merits in your arguments.

Robert Brown: Yes.

Amendment 99, by agreement, withdrawn.

Amendments 340 and 341 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.
The Convener: We turn to the group on community payback orders—consequential modifications. Amendment 342, in the name of the minister, is grouped with amendments 343 and 414.

Kenny MacAskill: Amendment 342 will insert a schedule into the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 that lists amendments that are consequential on the introduction of community payback orders. Amendment 414 seeks to remove the amendments in schedule 5 to the bill that relate to the introduction of community payback orders, as they will be dealt with in the schedule that is proposed in amendment 342.

Amendment 343 contains the schedule that details the amendments that are consequential on the introduction of CPOs, the majority of which relate to the repealing of references to “probation order”, “community service order” and “supervised attendance order”—the orders that are being replaced by CPOs—and their replacement with references to “community payback order”, where appropriate.

There are a few amendments that are more substantial, such as those that relate to the combination of CPOs, drug treatment and testing orders and restriction of liberty orders, which a court may impose for the same offence, and to the action that a court requires to take when it revokes such an order.

I move amendment 342.

Amendment 342 agreed to.

Section 14, as amended, agreed to.

After Schedule 1

Amendment 343 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

The Convener: Before I conclude this item, I point out that the committee has gone through some 36 pages of amendments. That would not have been possible had everyone not come to the meeting so well prepared and organised. I offer my congratulations to all at the table, including the cabinet secretary, on the way in which business has been conducted this morning.

I remind members that the main item on next week’s agenda will be oral evidence on stage 2 amendments to the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill. Formal stage 2 consideration will resume after the Easter recess, on 13 April. A target for the furthest point in the bill that the committee will reach on that day—day 3 of stage 2—will be announced shortly. I remind members that they will be expected to lodge all remaining amendments up to that point by the lodging deadline of 12 noon on 25 March.

I thank members for their attendance.

Meeting closed at 12:24.
JUSTICE COMMITTEE

EXTRACT FROM THE MINUTES

11th Meeting, 2010 (Session 3)

Tuesday 23 March 2010

Present:

Bill Aitken (Convener)  Robert Brown
Bill Butler (Deputy Convener)  Angela Constance
Cathie Craigie  Nigel Don
James Kelly  Stewart Maxwell

Also present: Richard Baker, Trish Godman, Rhoda Grant and Margo MacDonald.

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill — witness expenses: The Committee agreed to delegate to the Convener responsibility for arranging for the SPCB to pay, under Rule 12.4.3, any expenses of witnesses invited to give evidence on Stage 2 amendments to the Bill.

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill: The Committee took evidence on Stage 2 amendments relating to prostitution offences from—

George Lewis, Co-chair, Scot-PEP;

Ann Hamilton, Head of Equalities and Women's Services, Glasgow Community and Safety Services;

Assistant Chief Constable Iain Livingstone, Lothian and Borders Police, Association of Chief Police Officers in Scotland; on Stage 2 amendments relating to stalking etc. from—

Ann Moulds, Campaign Founder, Action Scotland Against Stalking;

Frida Petersson, Senior Research and Policy Officer, Victim Support Scotland;

Assistant Chief Constable Iain Livingstone, Lothian and Borders Police, and Detective Chief Inspector Peter McPike, Strathclyde Police, Association of Chief Police Officers in Scotland; on Stage 2 amendments relating to sentencing on knife crime from—

John Muir, "Damian's Law" Campaigner;

Chief Constable David Strang, Executive Vice President, Association of Chief Police Officers in Scotland.
Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill — written evidence (in private):
The Committee considered requests to accept certain written submissions on Stage 2 amendments on the basis that they would be seen in full by the Committee but not published. The Committee did not agree to these requests, but agreed that it could accept these submissions on the basis that they would be published with all references that would enable individuals to be identified redacted.
Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill

10:08

The Convener: Item 3 is on the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill. The committee is invited to delegate to me the responsibility for arranging for the Scottish Parliamentary Corporate Body to pay, under rule 12.4.3 of standing orders, any expenses of witnesses who are invited to give evidence on stage 2 amendments to the bill. Are members content with that delegation?

Members indicated agreement.

The Convener: That leads us to item 4, which is the main item on the agenda today and under which the committee will take evidence on stage 2 amendments to the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill. I particularly welcome Trish Godman MSP and Margo MacDonald MSP, who have a specific interest in the first item to be discussed. It is probable that other members will join us later.

The first evidence session relates to prostitution offences and, specifically, to the offence of engaging in paid-for sexual activity and related new offences. Amendment 8, which has been lodged by Trish Godman, proposes changes to the Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009 to create three new offences: engaging in a paid-for sexual activity; advertising paid-for sexual activities; and facilitating engagement in a paid-for sexual activity. Amendments 8A to 8D, which have been lodged by Margo MacDonald, propose the addition of two further offences: causing alarm etc by engaging in a paid-for sexual activity; and profiting from coerced paid-for sexual activities. Finally, amendment 461, which was recently lodged by Nigel Don, would create the offence of paying for the sexual services of a prostitute subjected to force etc.

I welcome the first panel of witnesses: George Lewis is co-chair of SCOT-PEP, the Scottish prostitutes education project; Ann Hamilton is the head of equalities and women’s services at Glasgow Community and Safety Services; and Assistant Chief Constable Iain Livingstone is from the Association of Chief Police Officers in Scotland. I thank you very much for agreeing to join us later.

Nigel Don (North East Scotland) (SNP): Good morning, and welcome to the cauldron. There is a great deal of public interest in what will be said here this morning, so I am sure that we will be careful in what we do.

My first question might best be addressed to Assistant Chief Constable Livingstone. To what extent is indoor prostitution, provided that it does not involve coercion or children, or cause a public nuisance, currently tolerated by the police?

Assistant Chief Constable Iain Livingstone (Association of Chief Police Officers in Scotland): Our main concern with regard to indoor prostitution is the organised crime that lies behind it. To be frank, our toleration is not overt, and it is not the case that we turn a blind eye.

In recent years, and certainly in the past five years, there has been, from my experience of working in the Leith area of Edinburgh, a move away from the traditional profile of street-based prostitution towards off-street prostitution and—probably uniquely in Edinburgh, through the approach of the City of Edinburgh Council and others—towards the use of off-street licensed premises.

We do not tolerate off-street prostitution as such, because there are significant issues in relation to knowledge gaps in our information and intelligence. Our general assessment is that there is likely to be organised crime behind off-street prostitution, and that a lot of the women who work in off-street premises may well be there under some form of duress. We seek to identify those premises and to find out more about what is going on, but toleration is not a national police policy.

Nigel Don: I was going to ask you about the national context. I am conscious that the issue probably affects big cities more than it does other places; can you comment in any detail on the situation in the other big cities in Scotland?

Assistant Chief Constable Livingstone: The links between prostitution and vulnerable individuals, organised crime, community concern and antisocial behaviour are probably more complex than they are in relation to any other issue.

As we understand the problem—there are gaps in our understanding—the profile of prostitution is different throughout Scotland. In Edinburgh, there are a number of licensed premises, whereas in Aberdeen it appears that there is more of an issue with organised street prostitution. In the west of Scotland—I am speaking in general terms—the profile appears to involve more organised off-street prostitution.

Those different areas of prostitution all have a different profile and demand different levels of response. Our view is that no single approach will be effective: each area needs a tailored approach, and enforcement and support need to be undertaken on an interagency and multi-agency basis.
I have referred to three significant city areas, but our view—again with the caveat that there are gaps in our understanding—is that prostitution permeates beyond the main city areas into some of the other urban areas in Scotland.

Nigel Don: Would Mr Lewis like to comment on the extent to which indoor prostitution is tolerated in Scotland?

10:15

George Lewis (SCOT-PEP): We can really speak only about the Edinburgh experience. Our understanding is that a pragmatic approach exists in Edinburgh, which is supported in part by the police, the local council and service providers such as ourselves, although I take on board what Iain Livingstone said about overall police policy.

In our view, the pragmatic approach works well on a number of levels, particularly with regard to sexual health, HIV and hepatitis C transmission, and the public nuisance issue. Saunas conform to their responsibilities in order to keep their licenses: there have, for example, been cases over the years in which saunas have stepped out of line by employing underage girls and they have, quite rightly, been jumped on from a great height. The majority of saunas toe the line, as it were, which has benefits in a lot of different areas.

It is a small point, but a sauna will pay its rates and taxes just to keep on the right side of the law. We believe that the pragmatic approach has worked well in Edinburgh, but I cannot comment about the situation in the rest of Scotland.

Nigel Don: Perhaps Ms Hamilton can comment on another part of Scotland.

Ann Hamilton (Glasgow Community and Safety Services): We have seen a change in policing by Strathclyde Police, which has stepped up its action on residential and sauna and massage-parlour brothels. We have been involved in supporting victims from a number of operations during the past few months. I think that there is now a recognition of the harm that is done to women who are involved in indoor and street prostitution, and we feel that indoor prostitution has not received the type of attention and research that it requires.

Our researchers recently interviewed a number of women who are involved in indoor and street prostitution, and it is evident that in both the harm—in terms of the stigma and shame that women feel, and the isolation and mental health problems that occur—is the same. We also know that there are, as my colleague Assistant Chief Constable Livingstone said, links with organised crime and trafficking.

We know from women’s accounts that they are moved around Scotland and to Ireland and England on a regular basis. Indoor prostitution is part of an organised network rather than involving individual women who are prostituting from premises.

I think that we have become much more aware of the various issues, such as the links with organised crime and the harm that has been done to women. In fact, I have brought the committee a little gift—today’s Scottish Daily Sport—that illustrates the amount of advertising of Scottish and especially foreign women all over Scotland, and which shows that these women are using the same mobile phones and are being moved around. I thought that it might interest the committee.

The Convener: Perhaps you could leave that with us.

Nigel Don: Other members will explore the question whether the law should be changed, but do any of you feel that certain areas of the law are not being used? I appreciate that Mr Livingstone might not want to comment on that, but do the other witnesses feel that a blind eye is being turned to certain legal measures or that certain measures are not being used or are felt to be impracticable?

Assistant Chief Constable Livingstone: I would like to respond to that question. The Law Society of Scotland and others who have submitted evidence to the committee have suggested that there have been no convictions under the Prostitution in Public Places (Scotland) Act 2007. I was curious about that, because I know for a fact that more than 200 people in the Lothian and Borders area have been charged under the so-called kerb-crawling legislation. When I looked into the matter, I found that, although not all the cases had been prosecuted, a number of them had been disposed of by fiscals under the various summary justice reforms, such as fixed-penalty fines, that MSPs have sponsored. I have not been able to clarify the validity of the claim that has been made by various interested parties that there have been no convictions under the 2007 act—and, indeed, would not dispute the point—but I can say that the police have robustly enforced the legislation, even though the Crown has elected to dispose of such matters by fiscal fine.

Bill Butler (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab): Good morning, colleagues. Do the police need more powers to deal effectively with prostitution?

Assistant Chief Constable Livingstone: We probably do not. Instead, we need more information, intelligence and awareness of where prostitution takes place, the nature of that prostitution, who is involved in it, whether the women are vulnerable and so on. Ann Hamilton is right to say that there must be robust enforcement against organised and unlicensed off-street premises, although I add that enforcement can take place only against things that we know about. We are concerned about the possibility of driving prostitution further off-street into areas where it is harder to identify vulnerable women and enforcement opportunities. As ever, we need to strike the optimum balance, but I am not sitting before the committee this morning seeking additional powers.

Bill Butler: You are clearly saying that the present powers are sufficient.

Assistant Chief Constable Livingstone: I think that there are sufficient common-law and statutory powers, although I have qualified support for a number of the proposals in some of the amendments because they would allow us to get a clearer picture of what prostitution is. However, when we think about what should be done about prostitution, we should bear in mind its profile: it is not a single entity and does not manifest itself in any single way. It can be very complex and multilayered with regard to whether it occurs on-street or off-street and in the different approaches that are taken across the country. From a policing perspective, I find it quite difficult to speak on a national basis because there is certainly a lot of robust debate in the police service about how the issue should be taken forward.

Bill Butler: I hear you loud and clear. Other colleagues will explore with you your interesting statement that you “have qualified support for” some “of the proposals” that are before the Parliament.

However, I will stick with my general question and ask Ms Hamilton to comment on whether more powers are needed to deal effectively with prostitution.

Ann Hamilton: We feel that there is a need for additional powers, specifically to address aspects such as advertising and facilitation, and we very much welcome the power in the bill to close premises. We are also seeking a sea change in the general acceptance of prostitution. At the moment, it does not matter what the police find when they go into a licensed or unlicensed brothel; the fact is that the men who buy sex are not subjected to any police action and are often not used as witnesses. We definitely need to step up the powers that are required to control and reduce the level of prostitution in Scotland.

Bill Butler: That was very clear. Do you wish to comment, Mr Lewis?

George Lewis: Yes. We believe that police already have the powers to combat what we see as the important issues: trafficking, actual assault and breaches of the peace.

I echo Mr Livingstone’s point that increased legislation will simply drive much of the industry underground, to the fringes or whatever phrase you might wish to use. With the introduction of the kerb-crawling legislation and the loss of the tolerance zone in Edinburgh, we as service providers have found it more difficult to access and provide health and support services to women. Such moves certainly alienate women. I am not saying that this has actually happened—we simply do not know—but those women might, as a result, be driven to the fringes and into the organised crime to which Mr Livingstone referred and begin to see everyone, including service providers such as our organisation, as the establishment and therefore as people to be avoided.

Bill Butler: So, in your view the present police powers are sufficient.

George Lewis: Yes. They are sufficient to deal with what we see as the important issues.

Bill Butler: That is very clear.
The Convener: At this point, I ask Robert Brown to raise the issue of trafficking.

Robert Brown (Glasgow) (LD): Can I first ask a supplementary on another point?

The Convener: Yes.

Robert Brown: On the effects of the kerb-crawling legislation, SCOT-PEP’s written evidence refers to an increase in the number of attacks that were reported to the police from 2006 to 2008, after which the organisation has been unable to take statistics. Do the other witnesses wish to make any comment on that? After all, sometimes it is the unintended consequences that have to be dealt with in these matters. I wonder whether Mr Livingstone knows anything about the effects of the legislation with regard to reports to the police.

Assistant Chief Constable Livingstone: I do, but I should qualify my comments by saying that my comments will be a mix of evidence from specific cases and anecdotal observations that I made in preparation for my attendance this morning. Speaking, perhaps, with my Lothian and Borders Police hat on, I point out that, when we had the tolerance zone in the Leith area, the women who worked there knew and would engage with the individuals who would pass through. The police were also present in cars.

Anecdotally, from two or three pretty serious cases—although I would never draw a general conclusion from them—instead of a woman carrying out a risk assessment by thinking, “Who is this individual and have I met him before?” the initial contact is minimal because the individual in the car and the woman are anxious about enforcement of the legislation. So, anecdotally—it is no more than that—from two or three horrendous assaults on women who were picked up in the Leith area, it seems that women are jumping in the car quicker because of the legislation, whereas previously there might have been more engagement and a risk assessment might have been carried out.

10:30

Robert Brown: At a statistical level, can the police confirm or deny—either today or in follow-up evidence if necessary—the general suggestion that there has been an increase in attacks on women since the anti-kerb-crawling legislation came in?

Assistant Chief Constable Livingstone: I cannot give a definitive view now. I could go and find out the statistics, but I would always come back to the point—on which I think we all agree—that we have never known the true nature of attacks on prostitutes. We do not know enough about prostitution. We do not know enough about who is involved and what happens to the women. That is a critical issue that all of us in society need to deal with. I support Ann Hamilton’s point that we need to make it a priority. I could find the figures, but I would not have great faith that they represent the reality.

The Convener: I accept that the information comes with a health warning and a caveat, but it would be useful if you could let us have the statistics in writing reasonably quickly.

Assistant Chief Constable Livingstone: I can certainly do that and perhaps give some context, if that would help.

The Convener: We would be obliged.

Robert Brown: Ann Hamilton was going to say something on the issue.

Ann Hamilton: We are not aware of a rise in the number of attacks. However, we know that prostitution is a dangerous business. In Ipswich, a number of women went with a known punter—somebody whom they trusted—and he murdered them. The idea of a risk assessment can be difficult when we are talking about something that is intrinsically dangerous.

Last week, 80 women who are involved in street prostitution came into our service. In Glasgow and Edinburgh, women have been moving out of some of the traditional areas and it is undoubtedly a challenge for services to engage with those women. We are beginning to do much more outreach work to make contact with women. It is a responsibility of services to change the way in which they provide the service, depending on the nature of prostitution at the time.

Robert Brown: The main issue that I want to raise is trafficking. I am sorry that I diverted us slightly, but that other issue is important. As far as I am aware, there have still been no prosecutions in Scotland for trafficking, despite the suggestion that, in Glasgow, the extent of the problem is proportionately similar to, if not greater than, that in London. From contact that I have had with TARA—the trafficking awareness-raising alliance—I know that Ann Hamilton’s service has dealt with quite a number of people who have been trafficked. You mentioned trafficking within the United Kingdom as well as into the UK. What is your knowledge of the extent of trafficking, either within the UK or into the UK, based on your experience of providing support services?

Ann Hamilton: This is one of those issues on which it is difficult to give numbers. However, we had 50 referrals in 2009 and staff are currently working with 31 women. Many of those women came through the national referral mechanism that the UK Government has established as part of the obligations under the European convention on trafficking. We certainly support women who have been trafficked.

We also run a service twice a week for women who are involved in indoor prostitution. We currently have about 180 women registered for that and about 50 per cent of them are foreign women. I cannot say that all the foreign women have been trafficked, just as I cannot say that the Glasgow or Scottish women have not been trafficked. However, we know that women are being moved around and sexually exploited, so all the indications of trafficking are there. The police have stepped up their activity in relation to premises and we hope that charges will be placed, although they might not be charges of trafficking, which seem particularly difficult to pursue. Charges have been brought of running brothels, living off immoral earnings and similar offences.

Robert Brown: Is it a fair observation that trafficking is much more difficult to track down as it involves indoor premises stuff that is perhaps a bit more individual or isolated?

Ann Hamilton: It is undoubtedly difficult to track down, because it is part of a criminal organisation. Just as drug dealing, money laundering and so on are challenges for the police, so are prostitution and trafficking. Punters need to find the women. They do not ask specifically for trafficked women; they ask for Thai, black or eastern European women. There is a market in bringing in women to provide fresh faces. There is a great market in moving women from Glasgow to Edinburgh and from Edinburgh to Aberdeen. That is the nature of the industry.

Robert Brown: I ask for a comment from the police perspective. Ann Hamilton is from the service or support side, but the prosecution aspect is obviously proving much more difficult. What is the police assessment of the extent of the trafficking problem within the UK and into the UK?

Assistant Chief Constable Livingstone: The problem is growing, but I make no apology for saying again that there is a great dearth of knowledge and intelligence on the issue. We welcome the helpful work that Baroness Kennedy has kicked off on trafficking. Ann Hamilton is entirely right about the issues to do with organised crime. People move around the UK. Traditionally, Aberdeen has had close links with the west midlands; there are links between Edinburgh and Glasgow; and Glasgow has had links with the north-west. That is where some of the crime groups have had associations.

Trafficking is undoubtedly an issue, but the majority of women whom we see involved in prostitution are, if you like, indigenous Scottish women who are vulnerable and have multiple drug use problems as well as significant social and other factors that influence their lives. Trafficking is an issue, because it is linked to the involvement of organised crime, but the vast majority of vulnerable women whom we see involved in prostitution are local women who often have an array of needs and problems that need assistance.

Robert Brown: Would the criminalisation of paying for sex help or hinder the ability to get stuck into the trafficking problems?

Assistant Chief Constable Livingstone: That is a very good question that goes to the essence of some of the proposed amendments to the bill. We have fears about the potential to prosecute. Ann Hamilton talked about some of the complexities of the trafficking legislation. There are issues to do with getting corroborative evidence of some of the key elements, such as that sex took place, that payment took place and how the payment was made. There are also issues to do with whether the women are unwilling witnesses and whether we would revictimise them by enforcing the proposed legislation. That is our fundamental reservation, although it is a reservation rather than an objection, if that is not too woolly.

We are not sure how the proposed measures would work in practice, or how they would be enforced. Would they cause further harm, and would it be too difficult for us to report the matter to the Crown? Would the Crown be in a position to take the case? If not, would we end up with a piece of legislation on the statute book that was not enforced or utilised, which would undermine our whole approach?

There is consensus and clarity that, although the problem is not an easy one to tackle, we need to commit to doing that, as a lot of vulnerable people are involved and a lot of organised, serious villains are behind it. How do we go about tackling it collectively? We have reservations about whether criminalising the purchase of sex does that, and about how the measures would play out in practice.

Robert Brown: I am conscious of the time, but I would be interested to hear the views of other panel members.

George Lewis: SCOT-PEP was instrumental in setting up protocols in Edinburgh, with an early-warnings reporting system for trafficked people—not just women. We worked closely with the police in doing that. Therefore, we are partly seen as the establishment, and we do not necessarily know the extent of the trafficking problem.

We have had some experience of dealing with suspected trafficking. We have good relations with some sauna owners in that regard. Cases have been minimal—at worst, they have involved passport violations and people being sent home.
As Mr Livingstone has pointed out, the complexities of the problem are such that it needs more than just three people sitting here talking for a limited time in order to deal with it.

 Trafficking is already illegal. I cannot see that putting another layer of legislation on top will do anything to help trafficked people. It will certainly not help anyone here to identify those people. It might make the situation worse. A trafficker is a trafficker. They are already breaking the law. They will think, “Another law will not make any difference to what I do.”

 Robert Brown: Ms Hamilton, you are a proponent of the changes to the law that are being suggested, yet you must accept that there is a gap between the number of people you identify and the number of people that the police can prosecute. What are your thoughts on that?

 Ann Hamilton: First, we want something that challenges the acceptability of prostitution. At the moment, buying sex is viewed as something that men do, to which there is an entitlement, and which causes no harm. It is an individual transaction. We want there to be a clear message that that is not the case, and that buying sex has an impact: it supports organised crime and brings harm to women and their families. The proposed change sends out a clear message about the kind of Scotland that we want.

 Secondly, our biggest problem with identifying trafficking victims is the fact that prostitution is normal. When the police go into premises, women will immediately say—as they have been warned to do—that they want to do it, that they are there freely and that they send money home.

 One woman whom we are supporting said that, when she approached us, she felt able to tell her story and talk through the harm that she had experienced in being trafficked all round the world. She said that she never knew that what she had been going through was illegal and that somebody might help her, so she never said anything. The men who bought sex could see when they came in that she did not want to do it, yet they queued up, paid their money and left. There were policemen in and out of the premises who never asked her anything or said anything to her.

 Although the situation is changing in Scotland and the police have been great partners in talking to the trafficked women they find in brothels about their experience, we are still not at a point where most women will tell their story when police go in to raid or visit premises. It takes quite a bit of time for women to talk through what they have experienced and to seek help. The more we disrupt the sex industry, the better it is for the women who are harmed.

 10:45

 Robert Brown: As trafficking is already illegal, will the proposed new legislation make any difference?

 Ann Hamilton: The buying of sex is not illegal, and there are some licensed premises where the buying of sex appears to be legal and regulated. That is not the case in Glasgow, but it is in some parts of the country. The fact that it is in Edinburgh has an impact on women in Glasgow. Women in Glasgow tell staff for whom I am responsible that they do not like going through to Edinburgh, because there are more rules and regulations there, and more harmful practices. That is anecdotal, but it is what women are telling those who work in the relevant services.

 The Convener: I am anxious to move on. Stewart Maxwell has a point to raise.

 Stewart Maxwell (West of Scotland) (SNP): We have spoken about trafficking and the involvement of organised crime in prostitution. That is not denied by anybody. As a number of people have said, prostitution is a complex, multifaceted, multilayered issue. I presume that you are not suggesting that all women or men who are working in the sex industry are the victims of organised crime or trafficking. There might well be individuals who work on their own, and not in licensed premises, brothels or saunas. My question refers back to Nigel Don’s earlier question. What difficulties do individuals working in those circumstances cause the police? Do other panel members feel that it is right, or even enforceable, to criminalise such activity between consenting adults behind closed doors in cases where the women or men involved are working on their own?

 Assistant Chief Constable Livingstone: There are indeed licensed saunas in Edinburgh, which is to do with the City of Edinburgh Council’s partnership approach. There is a history of such an approach in the east, including an emphasis on harm reduction. Rightly or wrongly, it is an historical fact. We recently visited all licensed premises—and there are a number of gay saunas in Edinburgh—with a view to engaging with people working in those establishments. They were not enforcement visits, but welfare visits.

 We spoke to a number of people, and we were told by the majority—bearing in mind Ann Hamilton’s point about what they say to us and what might actually be going on—that they were economic migrants. If they were not United Kingdom nationals, they said that they were over in the UK, Scotland and Edinburgh because they needed to make money. They did not wish any assistance or referrals from us, and they felt that they were entirely in charge of their own destiny.
That covers the policing element. However, it is our perception or feeling that there will be some element of coercion for anybody working in that environment, even if it is economic coercion.

Stewart Maxwell: I accept that. However, I was specifically asking about people who are not working in such premises, but who are working on their own. We have received written evidence from a number of individuals who say that they work by themselves, using a receptionist or maid, to use the usual expression. They feel that the proposed new section headed “Facilitating engagement in paid-for sexual activity” would result in the individual receptionist or maid, who is part of the protection, being criminalised, which would make the work more dangerous for those individuals, and so they object most strongly. What would the impact of the proposed legislation be on individuals in that situation?

Assistant Chief Constable Livingstone: We rarely come upon such individuals, unless a specific complaint is made. I return to my earlier observation that we are discussing an issue where there are as many gaps in our knowledge as areas of awareness. There is a lot of anecdotal experience, and we have had a lot of personal experience in various ways and in different roles, but the points that you have made about the impact on the sole traders that you describe underline some of the reservations that have been expressed about criminalising the purchase of sex. Establishing it would be difficult and might revictimise others but, in policing terms, we rarely come upon the sole traders that you describe.

Ann Hamilton: Similarly, we do not tend to come into contact with individual women who have made a choice to be involved in prostitution. The women whom we engage with and the men with whom the open road project engages in Glasgow tend to work in flats where there are two or three people—it could be only one but, in that case, it is being facilitated by somebody.

Obviously, there has been a lot of chat on punternet, which is one of the websites that provide an opportunity for men to review women and talk about their experience in prostitution. You might be interested to hear that they have been encouraging as many individual women as possible to write in and respond to the committee on the matters that are being considered. We do not tend to come into contact with individual women who say that they have made a choice. I doubt very much, given police resources, that that would be a priority.

Stewart Maxwell: Absolutely but, as I understand it, the amendments would also criminalise that behaviour.

Ann Hamilton: Yes. Rightly, I think, because we are talking about the buying and selling of people and attitudes generally—

Stewart Maxwell: They are working by themselves. That is the crucial difference.

Ann Hamilton: Yes, that is right, but the issue is also to do with gender inequality and why women end up selling sex because of economic necessity or for other reasons. We do not know enough about those women, but there must be a general strategic approach to the issue, which involves tackling demand and tackling the general attitude that prostitution is inevitable and acceptable.

George Lewis: Unlike my two colleagues on the panel, we come into contact with many of those women and men. As you rightly say, there are a lot of submissions to the committee from women who work on their own. Some of them are extremely articulate and others are less so, but there is an underlying theme that they do what they do out of choice and with consent. There is anger and frustration that the proposed amendments take away that choice and that consent. You will have read the submissions yourselves. You have had 90-odd submissions from all shades of opinion but, for me, those from the women who are working in the industry are perhaps the most valid when it comes to how the proposals will affect lives.

The Convener: I now ask James Kelly to ask a question on the amendments, which might provide the opportunity, if they so wish, for Margo MacDonald and Trish Godman to ask any questions that they feel are relevant.

James Kelly (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab): This has been a wide-ranging discussion, some of which has focused on current experiences and the way in which the law operates now. I am interested, first, in Mr Livingstone’s views on what the four amendments that are before us would mean for the policing of prostitution, particularly indoor prostitution.

Assistant Chief Constable Livingstone: I expressed my reservation about the enforceability of the proposed legislation on paid-for sexual activity. I do not disagree with what Ann Hamilton says about sending a clear message nationally about the dangers of prostitution. Our reservation is about whether proposed new section 11A would assist with that or take away from it. Establishing that the main parts of sexual activity had taken place and evidencing payment would give investigative challenges. If required, those challenges would be met, but the Crown would have a view on the sufficiency of evidence required to establish that. Our main reservation is about how the proposal would play out in practice, regardless of the debate about its utility or the potential human rights conflicts that rest behind it.

Do you want me to take the proposals in the amendments one by one?

James Kelly: Yes, that would be helpful.

Assistant Chief Constable Livingstone: In principle, we support proposed new section 11B, which deals with advertising. We take Ann Hamilton’s point about its impact. We think that the proposals in amendment 8 are quite narrowly worded—that is just an observation. We know from colleagues in the Republic of Ireland who have introduced such an offence that it has had an impact. We would again qualify our support by saying that there is always the danger that the more enforcement and overt legislation you have, the further you drive the issue away. I still have anxiety about legislating on a social problem and a social phenomenon when we do not have a clear understanding of prostitution and the scale and extent of the problem—as the lead on behalf of the police service in Scotland, I certainly do not feel confident that we do. However, I think that we would support the principle behind new section 11B, which Ann Hamilton has graphically evidenced with the papers that she has provided this morning.

Our reservations about proposed new section 11C, on facilitation, are similar to those that we have about section 11A in respect of establishing that sexual activity took place, that payment was made and that it was knowingly facilitated. We again feel that prostitution is, in itself, already an offence in a public place and that sufficient legislation is in place.

In respect of amendment 8B, on coercion, we again feel that any level of sexual coercion is criminalised. Under section 4 of the Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009, which will, hopefully, be given force at the end of the year, any level of sexual coercion—whether for payment or otherwise—is criminal. We feel that that is sufficient to deal with that mischief and that amendment 8B, by narrowing the issue down to payment, puts another burden on the prosecution whereas, if coercion can be established, whether it is for payment or otherwise, it is criminal. The payment may or may not aggravate or mitigate the offence, depending on the circumstances of the crime, but sexual coercion is already legislated for under the 2009 act.

James Kelly: Thanks for your comprehensive comments. Does Ms Hamilton or Mr Lewis have comments on the amendments?

Ann Hamilton: I suppose that we see this as presenting challenges to the police, but no more so than lots of other areas of criminal activity. When it comes to domestic abuse, for example, the police have to consider how to get corroboration and how to evidence that something that happened in a domestic or private setting is a crime.

When a brothel-keeper is charged, it appears that it is currently possible to prove that money passed over into other hands, that sex was being paid for and that sexual activity took place. Those are all matters for which evidence is provided in court now; the only addition would be that the person who was paying and passed over the money would also be liable.

In respect of advertising for paid sex, it is clear that, if people were not able to advertise in the newspaper, they would not stop but would move on to the internet, which is currently used very extensively, but there are means of addressing that. We do so in relation to child pornography and a number of other crimes. Because something might be difficult is not a reason for not doing it. It is an area in which the police would be able to develop more investigative tools, over a period.

The amendment on facilitating would make another offence. At the moment, someone can be charged with living off immoral earnings and brothel-keeping; the new offence would be similar and we think that it would assist in the disruption of the industry.

The amendment on coercion is probably the most difficult to evidence because women quite often say that they were not coerced, and it might be difficult to prove that they were. Coercion can be very subtle.

11:00

George Lewis: My colleagues here have referred to the sheer complexity of the subject, and there is an underlying perception in the submissions, certainly from the academic and legal point of view, that the amendments have been tacked on to something that is much bigger. Although we are certainly not accusing anyone of trying to force things through without wider debate, the complexity is such that all the amendments should be rejected in full in favour of much wider consultation and debate. In the previous session of Parliament, we had the expert working group on prostitution, which I think took nine months just to debate the outdoor industry. The indoor industry is much more complex, and the consultation period has been short. We have had a month and, although the three of us sitting here have various opinions, we are certainly not representative of the diversity of opinion. The subject needs a lot more consultation than it has had so far.

Cathie Craigie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (Lab): Mr Livingstone, I think you said that you have reservations about the enforceability of the amendments. I am confident that our law enforcement officers in Scotland will enforce any laws the Parliament passes. The submission from Glasgow Community and Safety Services says:

“Although the very nature of the sex industry makes it covert, prostitution can never truly exist underground as if the punters are able to find the women selling sex, then so can the Police”.

Do you accept that statement?

Assistant Chief Constable Livingstone: I have no doubts or reservations about our ability to enforce the law. My reservations are about the ability to have sufficient evidence to allow a conviction to take place. If the law is there, we will seek to enforce it as best we can. If Parliament has legislated, that law will be enforced. My reservations and those of my colleagues are about the difficulty of evidencing brothel keeping. There are the wider circumstances of financial gain by an individual but there are difficulties with individual transactions—the instance that Mr Maxwell put to us. We might end up taking criminal sanctions against individuals who really did not want the authorities, such as the police, to come near them.

The police will enforce the legislation that Parliament passes; our comment was a practical one—that establishing sufficient evidence to get a conviction would be challenging. The comment about punters finding prostitutes is a fair point. That is what we do—we utilise the advertisements and we increasingly utilise the online threat. As we know from our experiences relating to child abuse offences, the traditional grooming mechanisms and means of contact by the paedophile have changed. Likewise, in the online world, the traditional contact mechanisms have changed, which provides added complexity. I have no difficulty saying that if the law is there the police will take steps to enforce it; I am just saying that we have some reservations, before the law is passed, about how it might play out in practice.

Cathie Craigie: You mentioned that the proposed legislation could drive the problem further underground. Will you say a bit more about that?

Assistant Chief Constable Livingstone: One thing that there has been a consensus on is that we do not know the full extent of off-street prostitution. The adverts may point us in its direction to some extent. There are women working with George Lewis and Ann Hamilton who we have come upon, prosecuted and referred to support means. We deal with what we see but, as we said about trafficking, when it comes to what is happening in the far corners, people are not going to go near any officialdom. Therefore, the more enforcement legislation we have, the more potential there is for a problem that is already proportionately hidden to become more hidden.

That is all. It is just a concern that people who we should be looking to assist, give advice to, rescue and provide health care and diversion opportunities to, might be harder to reach because of the enforcement mechanism. Make no mistake: if the law is passed, the police will enforce the law.

The Convener: I invite Trish Godman, who is one of the proposers of the amendments, to ask any appropriate question.

Trish Godman (West Renfrewshire) (Lab): I want to make two quick comments and ask Iain Livingstone a question. George Lewis, you said that you are anxious about whether there is sufficient evidence for the amendments. That smacks of the domestic violence issue—Ann Hamilton mentioned it too; there is a bit of déjà vu here. I take your point, but we would perhaps not be discussing anything at all if we had not lodged the amendments—and the number of people who have responded to the amendments shows that someone wants to do something about the issue.

Iain Livingstone, you said that there is nothing here on trafficking and arrests, as there is in England. I spent a couple of days with the Metropolitan Police exploring that very issue. Is it only because we need corroboration here? What other difficulty would you have—if there is another one—doing the same kind of things as are being done in England?

Assistant Chief Constable Livingstone: People trafficking is linked to prostitution, but it stands alone—as we know, people are trafficked for reasons other than prostitution. Trafficking is more prevalent in the south-east of England because of the points of entry, the extent of London and the international links there. Our understanding—which is still partial—is that people are more likely to be trafficked into the south-east first and then moved north. However, as Ann Hamilton suggested, although one may define a person as being a trafficked individual, they may define themselves as an economic migrant. It is hard to establish where the distinction falls.

I accept that trafficking is an area on which we need to do more work. Gordon Meldrum, Johnny Gwynne, other colleagues and I, who lead in the crime arena in Scotland, know that it is an area in which our information and intelligence is lacking and in which we need to be more coherent. We need to consider what is happening south of the border and whether it is applicable where we are. We are addressing the issue. The Scottish Crime and Drug Enforcement Agency has the lead for it because we have determined that it is primarily a manifestation of organised crime. It does not matter to organised criminals whether the commodity is drugs, cigarettes or people. That is... why we are using the organised crime mechanism to address it.

I agree about the extent to which we have progressed with domestic abuse. We will discuss stalking and harassment, which are linked to it. The distinction that I would draw between prostitution and domestic abuse is that there is not the same consensus on the two issues. There is clarity about the social harm that domestic abuse does, its nasty, malicious nature and its impact on children and society. We have already heard that prostitution is far more complex. Our view is that vulnerable people are involved in prostitution and that they are victims. There are analogies with domestic abuse, but I do not think that we can say that the progress that we have made in services and in society on domestic abuse is identical to what we can do on prostitution—there is not a straight lift from one to the other.

Trish Godman: I was not suggesting that the two issues are the same; I was just saying that there is a bit of déjà vu about this. The thing that worries me is the corroboration issue. Perhaps this is a dumb question, but I am an MSP, so there are no surprises there. We need to have corroboration here, but you do not need to have it in England. Will that stop you?

Assistant Chief Constable Livingstone: My personal opinion is that corroboration is not the difficulty. Corroboration is a fundamental part of Scots law and it is why, although we have had significant cases, we have not had great miscarriages of justice. Corroboration can be sought from a number of sources. We are more sophisticated at getting corroboration—it is no longer about getting two individuals who are saying the same thing. I do not think that the need for corroboration is a threat to any police enforcement activity; it is a necessary discipline and a fundamental part of Scots law that we should protect.

Margo MacDonald (Lothians) (Ind): The evidence that we have heard underlines what George Lewis said: this is not something that should have been tacked on to a bill that has an entirely different objective to the specific objectives that everyone who is interested in prostitution would want to achieve. For that reason, I say on the record that if anybody wants to reconvene the second part of the committee that was set up under Jack McConnell’s Government to look at indoor sex, I would be willing to serve again, because the issue just fell through the cracks and the police were left with absolutely unsatisfactory legislation.

However, let us start. Do the witnesses think that it is possible for the amendments to cover the individual who is working herself to pay off the big Christmas bill, lap dancers and potentially trafficked people or economic migrants? Is it possible to take a catch-all approach to that? Ann Hamilton said that we need to take a general, strategic approach, but I do not think that the amendments represent that. Perhaps you disagree.

George Lewis: The short answer is no, because the three situations that you mentioned are so different. The experience in each city in Scotland is different, too. The catch-all approach looks like a blunt instrument and it will not address the real issues of trafficking and violence. I honestly cannot see that it will deal with the real nasties, particularly given the experience of the loss of tolerance zones and the kerb-crawling legislation.

Margo MacDonald: I think that Iain Livingstone suggested that.

Forty-four police forces took part in operation pentameter, which tried to determine the scope of people being trafficked for prostitution. How many of the Scottish forces took part?

Assistant Chief Constable Livingstone: All the forces and the agency were involved. The operation led to no convictions in Scotland.

11:15

Margo MacDonald: Do you agree that it is a bit previous to say that we know that there is trafficking and that women are being coerced and moved about, given that the operation did not result in one conviction?

Assistant Chief Constable Livingstone: That is a fair challenge. I rely on items of intelligence, the experience of voluntary groups such as Barnardo’s and the work that Ann Hamilton has been doing. Our professional opinion is that trafficking is a growing potential threat. A dedicated resource within the SCDEA is looking specifically at trafficking. A number of individuals are now working on that in the new SCDEA premises at Livingston, which is linked to the United Kingdom human trafficking centre at Sheffield. Observations were made about our linking into the UK. Scotland is seeking to do that, but the bottom line is that we have yet to convict anybody of that offence.

Margo MacDonald: Do you agree that it would be safer just now for your strategic approach to be preventive, rather than curative, because there is no proof?

Assistant Chief Constable Livingstone: Our approach should always be preventive. It is a cliché, but prevention is better than cure. However, one does not preclude the other. There has to be robust enforcement but, at the same time, there has to be wider work around interventions. A lot of the interventions might have nothing to do with legislation on prostitution—they might be to do with getting access to assistance for drug abuse or child care. It is about addressing all the other social factors that underpin the problem.

We would certainly welcome having a longer look at this issue, as an imperative. As Ann Hamilton said, the issue now has public profile. It was difficult to get a coherent police approach nationally—it is difficult for me to sit here and talk on behalf of all the forces and the agency. There is value in our committing to having a longer look at the problem, its various layers and complexities and interdependencies and deciding what we need to do. Once we have done that, we have to consider whether we need legislation to allow us to do the things that we agree we need to take forward.

Margo MacDonald: I am absolutely delighted to hear you say that, because it seems much more logical.

Can I ask Ann Hamilton about the number of complaints the police have had from people saying that a brothel is operating up their close?

The Convener: Would she be in a position to answer?

Margo MacDonald: I should hope so; she is the officer for that in the council.

Ann Hamilton: I am not working for the police.

We have had a number of complaints about specific premises. We are taking a much more co-ordinated approach to gathering complaints. For a long time people who had a brothel next door to them felt that there was no point complaining about it because very seldom did anything happen. One of the things we are challenging is the acceptability of a brothel either in the close next door or in the street. A number of police operations are now happening on specific premises.

Margo MacDonald: Are the numbers up or down compared with two years ago?

Ann Hamilton: I cannot tell you that because we do not collect that information—the police would do that.

Margo MacDonald: How, then, would you know whether there are more or fewer prostitutes working in Glasgow or whether they are foreign women or home-grown women? How would you know if you do not collect figures?

Ann Hamilton: We provide a service for any woman who is involved in indoor prostitution. About 180 women are registered with that service at the moment. About 50 per cent of them are foreign women. I cannot tell you whether that is a tenth or a quarter of the women involved in prostitution. A significant number of women are involved in prostitution throughout Glasgow and Scotland; some are home-grown and some are foreign. It is very difficult to tell how many women are involved, but the problem certainly appears to be increasing because there is more advertising, whether on the internet, in magazines or in newspapers.

Iain Livingstone referred to the need for a preventive approach. We have had a preventive approach in Glasgow—we have arranged child care and looked at providing drug packages—but we know that unless we tackle the demand for prostitution there will always be new women coming in, who will be harmed. Simply carrying on providing harm-reduction and early-intervention services—which we are committed to providing—will never tackle the problem; we need to make a fundamental change in the way that we view the nature of prostitution.

It is estimated that about one in 10 men buys sex. The Women’s Support Project study on prostitution in the central belt of Scotland that was published about a year and a half ago showed that 25 per cent of those men had serious regrets about buying sex. Part of the reason they bought sex was peer pressure, which relates to acceptability. That is what we want to address to reduce the number of men who buy sex from women in prostitution.

The Convener: I think that Margo MacDonald now has her answer.

Margo MacDonald: With all due respect, convener, that is not the purpose of the amendments. If the aim is to bring about a cultural change, why seek to do it by criminalising those who may be the victims of the cultural attitude and habit that is to be changed?

The Convener: I point out that this is not a debate but an evidence session.

Margo MacDonald: I was asking a question.

The Convener: Would the witness care to comment briefly on that question?

Ann Hamilton: The first proposed offence is about buying sex, which is about tackling the demand for sex. That is saying that prostitution is not a harmless activity, but has an impact. Such activity may be tied into organised crime, whereby people profit from the misery of the men and women who are involved in prostitution. That is not to deny that some—a tiny number, I believe—women and men may not be harmed by their involvement in prostitution. However, we need to look at attitudinal change.

The Convener: Thank you for that.
The next question will be from Angela Constance. As is inevitable in such evidence sessions, the further we go, the greater the danger of repetition. I ask that, when witnesses have already answered part of the question, they simply refer to their earlier answer.

Angela Constance (Livingston) (SNP): At various points this morning, all members of the panel have acknowledged that prostitution is complex, hidden, and, of course, dangerous. Therefore, first and foremost, I am interested in finding out what specific impact the offences that are proposed in the various amendments that we are considering this morning would have on women who work as prostitutes. Would the proposed offences help or hinder work to keep such women safe, whether by preventing offences from being committed against them or by promoting good health? Would the amendments do anything to drive the level of prostitution up or down?

The Convener: Perhaps Ann Hamilton can open on that question.

Ann Hamilton: We think that the proposals would disrupt the lives of the women and of the men who buy sex, but we do not think that that should be the central consideration.

After the murders that took place in Ipswich, efforts were made to drive kerb-crawlers off the streets. That meant that women could not make any income from prostitution. Support services then supported those women out of prostitution. Ipswich now does not have kerb-crawling or street prostitution. That is not to say that there has not been some displacement, but those actions have had a very positive impact on reducing the number of men buying sex and the number of women involved in prostitution as well as the public harm that is caused by street prostitution—

Angela Constance: My question was specifically about the impact on women who work as prostitutes. Would the proposals help them, or not?

Ann Hamilton: I think that the same thing would happen here. When police operations in Glasgow have disrupted brothels, women have come to the support services to ask for support to exit prostitution. Although the proposals might be disruptive and make things difficult for women, we see them as a way of engaging better with women and supporting them to exit prostitution. I do not know whether that answers your question. The women will not say, "Well, that is fine, I will go and do something else." They will need support. We feel that support can be provided.

Another thing that has not been said today is that the Scottish Government has a policy on prostitution, which is that it sees prostitution as violence against women and as intrinsically harmful. That is really the framework within which we think the amendments could start to address the issue to take forward that policy position.

The Convener: Does Mr Lewis want to respond as well?

George Lewis: I was not aware that the Scottish Government’s position is that prostitution is violence against women—

Margo MacDonald: It cannot be such, because that would be gender specific.

George Lewis: We tend not to get involved in the ideological debate, but I felt that I should pick up on that point.

The question was whether the proposals would help or hinder women who are involved in prostitution. I think that I have already mentioned the loss of the access to services. Therefore, taking up the convener’s point, I refer you to my previous answer.

It is certainly the case that we have not seen any reduction since the introduction of the kerb-crawling legislation and the loss of the tolerance zone, but we have seen a reduction in the sense of co-operation that previously existed, particularly between street women and the police. I would point the committee in the direction of the Liverpool experience, where a much more cohesive sense of co-operation between street women and the police has led to more attacks being reported and convictions being achieved. In particular, the figures relating to rape there are something like six times the national average. For me, the reduction in the sense of co-operation has been the biggest effect of the legislation that has been brought in over the past few years. We believe that further legislation would just lead to that emerging pattern continuing. In our view, the proposed offences would be a hindrance.

The Convener: Bearing in mind that the issue is slightly political, I leave it entirely up to Mr Livingstone whether he will answer the question.

Angela Constance: My question was certainly not political.

Assistant Chief Constable Livingstone: I think that the question gets to the hub of the debate. My answer is that we do not know. The proposed legislation might cause more harm or it might cause less harm. Until we have had an assessment of what its likely implications are, there might be dangers in going forward with it. The police’s position is that we are not sure what the impact would be. That is a straightforward answer, although it might not be a clear one.

The Convener: I think that Mr Livingstone would make a superb politician.
Assistant Chief Constable Livingstone: No offence taken.

Angela Constance: It still was not a political question.

The Convener: I think that we have advanced fairly far. Do committee members have any other questions that they wish to ask at this point?

Cathie Craigie: I would like to seek clarification from George Lewis on the level of violence and harassment. He tells us in his submission that, from his organisation’s discussions with the women involved, violence seems to be taken as normal. He states in page 3 of his submission:

“From discussions with women, we are aware that levels of violence and harassment continue to grow, but that women are still not reporting to police as they see the violence as ‘normal’ and do not see the benefit of reporting crimes.”

Is violence taken as normal?

11:30

George Lewis: I think that that is a result of the growing alienation there has been over the past few years, with the loss of the tolerance zone and the kerb-crawling legislation. Women are feeling alienated from the establishment and there has been even more of a loss of self-respect and self-esteem. It is almost a case of, “Why should we bother; the establishment has given up on us, so what’s the point in reporting things? Nothing will get done.” The continuing pattern of alienation has probably led to that feeling. There is certainly not that feeling right across the industry—many women will still take time to report violence and appear in court, if need be—but the increased regulation has caused a pattern of isolation and alienation. Does that answer your question?

Cathie Craigie: Are you referring solely to women who work on the streets?

George Lewis: Yes, because that is where regulation has kicked in over the past few years. Obviously, the kerb-crawling legislation and the loss of the tolerance zone have particularly affected the street women.

Cathie Craigie: Earlier, you said that we should consider the evidence from people who work in the sex industry. I have considered that evidence. We have statements from people who have worked in the sex industry, and they have been scathing. They have talked about people who make money from them simply not entertaining the truth. If the truth is that there is abuse and that people still have to suffer violence and take it as part of the job, I find it difficult to reconcile that with your evidence in the second section of your submission, in which you say that we should see the licensing of indoor establishments as having a “consequent positive effect on public health. Additionally, it has brought income to local councils in terms of Rates, and the Treasury in terms of V.A.T. and direct taxes.”

Surely local authorities and the Government should not sit back and accept that while women are saying that they accept that violence is a normal part of their job.

George Lewis: You are highlighting a complex experience. What I have said about violence is about violence that has been experienced by the street women. Such violence is not so prevalent in the sauna sector of the industry and it is certainly not so prevalent in the escort part of the industry. There are three, diverse, kinds of experience that highlight what I have already said about the complexity of the issue. For that reason, the violence aspect should not be considered in isolation as being representative of what happens in the whole industry, if that is what you are doing.

Cathie Craigie: I am not doing that; I am saying that we should not say, “Don’t touch that,” and leave people who work in the industry having to accept violence as a normal part of their life. From the figures that you have quoted, violence seems to be increasing.

George Lewis: I am not saying that that should happen.

Cathie Craigie: No—I am sorry—I know you did not say that, but we politicians should not sit back and accept it.

George Lewis: I am saying that the figures show that increased regulation has led to an increase in violence and the sense of isolation in the sector.

Ann Hamilton: That is not our experience. There has certainly been some dispersal, and services have experienced challenges maintaining good contact with women, but the street liaison team, which is part of the police, continues to work on engaging with women and men who are involved in prostitution. Women still report violence, but I am not aware of an increase in violence and attacks. It is certainly not the case that women who are involved in saunas and indoor activities do not experience violence and rapes. They do; sadly, that is part of the nature of the activity.

George Lewis: Do not the different experiences at each end of the M8 underline the complexity of the matter? Ann Hamilton’s experience is completely different from ours. It is obvious that we will not agree ideologically, but our completely different experiences underline what I have said right from the beginning: the complexity of the matter is such that much wider debate and information gathering are needed.
The Convener: We are entering into the realms of debate. I would like members to confine themselves to asking questions.

Stewart Maxwell: I will be as quick as I can. I want to ask about definitions. First, how does the panel define “sexual activity”? Sexual activity can range from something that we would all clearly recognise—I will not go into detail—but does the use of telephone sex lines represent sexual activity? Does lap-dancing that does not involve physical contact between two individuals represent sexual activity? When we considered a previous bill, we heard about sexual activity that involves submission, domination and all sorts of other things but no actual sex, if I can put it that way.

Margo MacDonald: Arousal.

The Convener: Let Stewart Maxwell finish, please.

Stewart Maxwell: There are complications. What is meant by “sexual activity”?

Secondly, I want to ask about the definitions of “paid for” and “payment”: What do they mean? Does a payment mean a cash payment or a payment in some other form? Has there been a payment if a person has paid an electricity or council tax bill, or if goods or services have been provided, or if jewellery has been bought?

Assistant Chief Constable Livingstone: Your question articulates our concern about the lack of definitions. What does the term “paid for” mean? Does it refer to payments in kind or cash-only payments? What does the term “sexual activity” mean? How would that be established on a bilateral basis? Would medical evidence be required if a woman was unwilling to give evidence, albeit that the circumstances pointed to a man having purchased sexual activity? Questions about what such activity is, how it is proven and what is meant by the word “payment” underline our concerns about the lack of definitions relating to the amendments.

Ann Hamilton: Sexual activities are those that are associated with brothels. They include masturbation, intercourse and other things that people currently pay for in brothels.

Stewart Maxwell: So anything that is paid for in a brothel would be defined as a sexual activity?

Ann Hamilton: Well, no. Sexual activities are activities that are normally provided by brothels and saunas and on the street, and they include masturbation, sexual intercourse and anal intercourse. People are fairly clear about the kinds of activities that we are talking about. Some brothels will give a list of what the activities are and prices beside them. We are not looking at kissing and lap-dancing, but the kinds of activities that are now paid for in brothels nearby.

It is obvious that most activities that happen in traditional brothels and saunas are paid for by cash or credit card. We have some women and men who trade sex for drugs, rent, heating and clothing. That would be much more difficult to pursue, but it may be worth covering that in the bill as it is still about exploitation and harm being caused to people.

George Lewis: The fact that you had to ask the question highlights the confusion that the police and the justice system would face when trying to enforce the legislation. It also highlights the fact that the law is already a bit of a mishmash and there might be more confusion. I cannot answer the question, “What constitutes sexual activity?”—it is all things to all people.

Robert Brown: I was struck by what Assistant Chief Constable Livingstone said about his uncertainty about the effects of the proposed legislation. Against the background of the non-convening of the second stage of the task force inquiry into indoor sex, does the panel think that, given the complexities, the proposed legislation would benefit from an in-depth, properly studied inquiry into all its implications?

Assistant Chief Constable Livingstone: Yes, that would be a prudent and helpful approach.

Robert Brown: Do we know why the expert group was not reconvened? Does anybody have any knowledge of that?

Margo MacDonald: Yes.

Robert Brown: Mr Lewis?

George Lewis: Do you have a better handle on it Margo?

Margo MacDonald: I was on the group. An urgent investigation into outdoor work was planned because of the ending of the policy set-up in Edinburgh. It was to be followed by further investigation of indoor work. The intelligence gathering had just started. Everybody knew that it was going to be difficult and complex, but it was allowed to fall through the cracks because, regrettably, our colleagues did not think that it was worth putting that much effort into it.

Robert Brown: Ms Hamilton, do you accept the suggestion that in-depth consideration by a reconvened task force or something similar would add a considerable degree of light and allow us to settle the significant, almost theological, difference of view that has emerged between panel members this morning and in evidence? More specifically, would that allow us to get a handle on the implications of the amendments for harm reduction or otherwise?

Ann Hamilton: Many of us have been looking at the issue over a number of years. The expert group’s report was not accepted by the Government and many of its recommendations were not acted on. The Prostitution (Public Places) (Scotland) Act 2007 took a very different approach from that which was recommended by the expert group and sought to criminalise the buying of sex in public places. We always felt that it was a flaw to consider street prostitution in isolation from commercial sexual exploitation in general, which would include both indoor and outdoor prostitution and trafficking. We have not had a group looking into the issue at a Scotland level, but we have lots of evidence of the nature of it, the harm that is caused by it and what has worked in other jurisdictions.

Robert Brown: With respect, from the point of view of laypeople and legislators such as us, there does not appear to be any consensus on this stuff. I would like to have a good deal more information about what people throughout Scotland in different situations think about all of it before we legislate on it. Do you not think that there would be some advantage in having a further study? Is there not even more need for that given what you have said about the lack of a link between the exploitative aspects and the outdoor sex trade?

Ann Hamilton: I would not oppose further consideration.

The Convener: I will allow Margo MacDonald back in. Briefly.

Margo MacDonald: I have said all that I wanted to say. If it is possible, I would like the committee to advise the Government to look at the whole problem in a different way. I have lodged amendments to the bill, but only to show that there are alternatives to the amendments that have been lodged by Trish Godman. I do not think that the bill gets anywhere near tackling the issue.

The Convener: You will appreciate the difficulty that we have in that the amendments before us must be disposed of in one way or the other.

11:45

Trish Godman: As the former convener of the Local Government Committee, which took evidence on tolerance zones, I point out that the violence does not take place in the tolerance zones. The business with the punter is done outside the tolerance zones, as members will know. We did what we did because of the kind of things that Ann Hamilton has spoken about. The police knew where the women were and there was contact with them in the tolerance zones—you are absolutely right about that. However, if the services adapt to the changes, the women can be helped. We have evidence of that in Glasgow and in other places. The violence does not take place inside tolerance zones; if it takes place, it takes place outside the tolerance zones. The committee was charged with looking into that and how services could pick up the women and work with them.

The Convener: Do you want to respond to that, Mr Lewis?

George Lewis: The beauty of the tolerance zone was the spirit of co-operation that existed there. Women were more likely to work in the tolerance zone and, if there were incidences of violence, they were more likely to report it to the police because of that spirit of co-operation. I do not have any figures with me, but there was probably more direct reporting of attacks to the police by the street women at the time because of that spirit. I do not disagree with the assertion that the violence took place away from the tolerance zone, but the fact that the zone existed made it much more likely that attacks would be reported.

The Convener: Ms Hamilton, gentlemen, I thank you very much for your attendance this morning. It has been an exceptionally useful evidence session. I will suspend the meeting briefly to enable a change of witnesses.

11:47

Meeting suspended.

11:52

On resuming—

The Convener: The committee will now deal with the issue of stalking. Amendment 402, which was lodged by Rhoda Grant, whom I welcome to the committee, provides for a new offence of stalking. Amendment 378, which was lodged by the Scottish Government, provides for a new offence involving threatening, alarming or distressing behaviour. The two amendments are grouped with amendments 399, 400 and 401, also lodged by Rhoda Grant. I welcome our second panel of witnesses: Ann Moulds, the campaign founder of Action Scotland Against Stalking; Frida Petersson, senior research and policy officer at Victim Support Scotland; and Assistant Chief Constable Iain Livingstone of Lothian and Borders Police and Detective Chief Inspector Peter McPike of Strathclyde Police, both of whom are representing the Association of Chief Police Officers in Scotland. I thank Ms Moulds, in particular, for her attendance this morning. She will be relieved to know that the evidence session will not be nearly as long as the previous one. We have around four questions to ask, after which I will ask whether you have anything further to say. Thank you very much for coming here this morning—it is greatly appreciated.

Cathie Craigie: Good morning. Let us get straight to the main point. Do we need a specific offence of stalking, so that such behaviour is clearly labelled, or is it best to have a more general offence, to avoid potential difficulties in prosecuting cases in which behaviour was clearly threatening?

The Convener: I ask the police to give us their response first.

Assistant Chief Constable Livingstone: We think that we need a specific offence. People understand what it says, and it criminalises insidious, threatening behaviour. We strongly support the proposal for a specific offence of stalking. You also asked about the difficulty of using either of the proposed offences to deal with instances of stalking.

The Convener: Do you see any practical difficulties with using either of the proposed offences to deal with instances of stalking?

Assistant Chief Constable Livingstone: DCI McPike has led a lot of work on exactly that type of case in the domestic violence task force in Glasgow and Strathclyde. He might be able to offer something.

The Convener: Before DCI McPike answers, I remind people that all mobile phones should be switched off to prevent proceedings from being interrupted.

Detective Chief Inspector Peter McPike (Association of Chief Police Officers in Scotland): We take the view that amendments 402 and 378 deal with different types of behaviour. We support the first amendment, which seeks to make stalking an offence, because it is clear. It would focus the attention of law enforcement agencies and make clear the practicalities of investigating stalking-type offences. It is difficult for us to do that at the moment because there is no crime of stalking, so we do not record stalking crimes as such and it is difficult to gauge the extent of the problem. Often, individual types of behaviour might not be criminal. For example, the mere presence of someone in a street at a given time of the day might not appear to be criminal, so the proposed stalking offence would help.

Amendment 378 proposes a statutory breach of the peace, as Mr Livingstone referred to it. Certainly, I know from investigating domestic abuse-related crimes that it is possible, for example, to have two people living in a dwelling-house where there is no chance of any other person overhearing the conduct or behaviour that goes on in the dwelling-house or between the two people and one individual is being subjected to pretty appalling verbal abuse, but that set of circumstances is not a crime in Scots law because, as the recent High Court decision in the Harris v Jessop, from which the High Court retreated to some extent. However, on the basis of the Harris judgment, there has to be a public element, which would seem to be a justification for doing something to tighten up the law, would it not?

The Convener: The law on breach of the peace is varied. The original case, way back, was Logan v Jessop, from which the High Court retreated to a very extent. However, on the basis of the Harris judgment, there has to be a public element, which would seem to be a justification for doing something to tighten up the law, would it not?

Detective Chief Inspector McPike: That is true. That would be of significant help to us in our investigations, particularly of domestic abuse-related incidents, which is where most of the circumstances that I referred to would arise.

Nigel Don: If a conversation got that heated, would that constitute assault? I know that that is a technical question, but I am interested in whether there is a hole in the law there.

Assistant Chief Constable Livingstone: Assault is a crime of common law. It constitutes a physical attack on the person by another. It does not need to be a contact, but verbal abuse alone would not constitute an assault.

Nigel Don: So there really is a hole in the law with regard to a situation in which two people are at home, shouting at each other, and one of them genuinely gets alarmed.

Assistant Chief Constable Livingstone: Absolutely. As Peter McPike said, in the case of someone in an isolated, remote farm cottage, there is no public element, as the nearest neighbours are miles away. Clearly, there is a need for some form of intervention because of the level of abuse or harassment, but at the moment that course of conduct is not open to us. The two amendments identify gaps in the law of Scotland as it stands.

The Convener: Verbal comments would not constitute a sufficiency for action at the moment. Is that the case?

Assistant Chief Constable Livingstone: That is correct.

Robert Brown: I want to talk about some of the proposed defences to an offence of stalking, which are fairly limited, in particular about a protest situation or picket line, of which we have seen some evidence in recent days. Such activities might be covered by proposed subsection (5)(c), under which it is a defence for a person to show that a course of action was, in the particular circumstances, reasonable.

However, if there is to be a general offence of stalking, does that part of the bill need to be strengthened to cover legitimate public protest activities?

Assistant Chief Constable Livingstone: I would have concerns about doing that. I appreciate that the test in proposed subsection (5)(c) is subjective, but given that the impact of the course of action and its cause are both essential elements of the proposed new offence, I think that the wording is sufficient in stating that the person who is charged must demonstrate that their course of conduct was reasonable. I do not think that it has to be more specific.

Robert Brown: Is there a risk that people’s right of public protest will be weakened? That is not an unimportant issue. Public protest is obviously different from what most people would describe as a stalking offence, but is there a need to state specifically that while such situations might constitute a breach of the peace or whatever, they are not the same as stalking?

Assistant Chief Constable Livingstone: In the protest scenario, are you thinking of a constituent or a complainer who felt that their complaint had not been addressed and was constantly engaged in a certain course of conduct against an individual?

Robert Brown: Proposed subsection (6)(e) says that “conduct” includes “entering or loitering in the vicinity of ... the place of work or business of ... any other person” or “any place frequented by ... any other person”.

That seems to me to cover a picketing situation or, I suppose, a situation in which someone demonstrates in a particular place about a particular thing—I know that that might touch on some contentious issues but I think that you follow the point that I am trying to make. There is a generality about the proposed provisions that is a bit tricky, as they seem to include conduct that is undertaken with non-stalking purposes in mind, if I can put it in that way.

Assistant Chief Constable Livingstone: Proposed subsection (3) in amendment 402 requires that the person engages in the course of conduct “with the intention of causing ... harm ... or ... arousing ... apprehension” and proposed subsection (4) requires that they know “that engaging in the course of conduct would be likely to cause such harm”.

My take on the matter is that if the other elements are satisfied and harm has been caused by someone who had the guilty intent to cause that harm, the conduct may legitimately be considered an offence. In my interpretation, amendment 402 already provides a sufficient defence in cases in which the conduct was reasonable because the person was making a protest.

Robert Brown: Do the other witnesses have a view on that? You can see the point that I am trying to get at. An area of behaviour that is not really stalking could be caught by the legislation if it is too vaguely drawn.

Ann Moulds: It is important to note that proposed subsection (3) in amendment 402, on the intention behind the course of conduct, would have to apply as well. With stalking, there is a mode, a motive and a perspective. Somebody might harass another person because they are not happy with them or whatever, but that is slightly different from the intimate relationship that a stalker has with his victim. There is an emotional relationship between two people, and it is an unequal relationship. One of the written submissions gives an excellent comment on that. It states:

“Badcock (2005) notes that the term ‘continues to be apt in its image of a hunter pursuing prey in a sustained but unequal relationship’.”

That is slightly different from just harassment.

Robert Brown: So we need to capture that effectively in the legislation.

Ann Moulds: Yes.

Robert Brown: We heard that the Government lodged amendment 378, on threatening behaviour, primarily to deal with a perceived gap in the law following a recent court decision. However, it appears to contain a restated breach of the peace charge in statutory form. I ask Mr Livingstone in particular—I apologise to him for the fact that he is getting all the difficult questions today—whether he has any concerns about the breadth of the provision. It is one thing to fill a relatively narrow gap in the definition of breach of the peace because of a court decision, but it is another to create a new offence that is wider than breach of the peace but encompasses the sort of things that would usually be charged under breach of the peace at present.

Assistant Chief Constable Livingstone: Again, I do not disagree with your analysis. That is how I read it. My understanding is that the provision was deliberately drafted with such breadth because it was felt that that was appropriate to capture some of the difficult scenarios that we discussed earlier. You will know better than I do the difficulty with prosecuting such cases. Breach of the peace has always been a broad offence in common law. The appeal court judgment legitimately narrowed it, which provided clear guidance for members of the public, police and prosecutors, but in our view that left some victims vulnerable because of the requirement for a public element.

I accept your analysis that the proposed new offence is broadly drawn, but we argue that it is appropriate because it will enable us to support victims who are currently unsupported by the law.

Robert Brown: I suppose what I was getting at is whether it would have been possible to deal with the gap in the law by tweaking the breach of the peace offence. As you rightly say, it has been a useful offence, but its breadth has made it subject to criticism. Conceptually, there is not a huge gap in the law, although there are some people who need to be brought within the definition. Would an amendment to the definition of breach of the peace not do the trick? Do we simply need to tweak the definition to reflect the appeal court judgment?

Assistant Chief Constable Livingstone: Potentially. This is the first time that I have ever seen breach of the peace codified, and it is a codification of my understanding of breach of the peace, subject to the restatement of the public place element in the Harris judgment. I believe that amendment 378 restates the breadth of the offence in statute and is properly drafted—or its intention is right. I defer to the people who draft legislation on whether it is properly drafted. However, our opinion is that the amendment addresses the gap in the law that allows some offenders to go free and some victims’ issues not to be addressed.

The Convener: Can you not provide some reassurance to Mr Brown on his earlier points about a demonstration? There might be similarities in the mens rea under the amendments and under the standing common law on breach of the peace, but the practicalities are surely that in the circumstances that Mr Brown envisages, the offence would be charged as a common-law breach of the peace.

Assistant Chief Constable Livingstone: Yes. In practice, that is exactly what would happen. On the mischief of the offence that we would look for, stalking does exactly what it says on the tin. That is why we would welcome a specific offence of stalking—people would know what it means and what the law is there to do.

James Kelly: I want to ask Ms Moulds and Ms Petersson specifically about amendment 402, which is quite a wide-ranging amendment. Do you feel that it addresses your concerns about stalking or does the specific amendment in the name of Rhoda Grant need to progress really to address your issues?

Frida Petersson: Victim Support Scotland is happy with Rhoda Grant’s proposal, which specifies types of conduct that could be covered but leaves it open to add new types of conduct, as new technology develops and so on. In our written response, we have made a few comments on specific additions, such as publishing statements, to ensure that things like Facebook and Bebo are included. In general, we are quite pleased with Rhoda Grant’s proposal, which also looks at the reaction of the victim, which is vital to ensure that we cover what we talked about before. Many of the actions that will constitute the offence of stalking will not necessarily be criminal in themselves. It is important to balance that with the reaction of the victim. We are happy that all those elements seem to be part of the amendment.
James Kelly: What about amendment 402? What are your views on that?

Frida Petersson: Is that not Rhoda Grant’s amendment?

James Kelly: No, that is the amendment in the name of Kenny MacAskill—the more wide-ranging amendment.

The Convener: That is amendment 378.

James Kelly: I apologise.

The Convener: When there are 600 amendments to a bill, Mr Kelly’s confusion can be understood.

Frida Petersson: That is not a problem.

As we have said before, we have looked at this wide-ranging offence. We have had discussions back and forth about it. It involves reckless behaviour as well as intentional behaviour. Having discussed with colleagues in other organisations the practicalities of the Harris judgment, we are content with the phrasing, which will ensure that it targets specifically breach of the peace situations that currently do not have a public element.

James Kelly: Would you say that there is a case for progressing both amendments?

Frida Petersson: Yes. We would support both of them next to each other. We see that they would cover different offences.

James Kelly: Ms Moulds?

Ann Moulds: Yes, I think that they are both excellent amendments. There is a different focus in each one. Rhoda Grant’s amendment focuses specifically on stalking. It deals with the crime—it names the crime, as we said before. It is focused, but it has a wide scope and a broad application, so the list is non-exhaustive. The advantage to going for a more listed method or having more categories of behaviour is that it helps those on the front line recognise what types of behaviour might constitute the course of conduct.

Normally, stalking is a constellation of acts. Stalkers employ all different types of things, and if there are five things that a stalker should not do, he or she will find a sixth thing. Amendment 402 allows for that—it is flexible and open enough without being so open that something could fall through the net. Everything should be captured quite well within the framework. The Government’s amendment 378 is excellent. It differentiates between what is a breach of the peace and what is a specific stalking crime. Both amendments have their place in the bill.

12:15

The Convener: I ask Rhoda Grant whether she has any questions, as we are discussing her amendment.

Rhoda Grant (Highlands and Islands) (Lab): I have just one question, as most aspects of the amendment have been covered. I ask Ann Moulds what difference it would have made to her had there been a statutory crime of stalking when she was being stalked.

Ann Moulds: I have tested my case under both amendments and without a doubt it would have fallen through the net under the Government’s amendment, as it would not have been recognised. The course of conduct was not recognised. It was not just the police who did not recognise it at the time; even in the early stages, the prosecution service did not recognise it. You could argue that that is a training issue, and I would agree with that; however, the fact is that the course of conduct was not recognised. There was no legal definition that was not too broad and loose—it was like a wild card sitting in there because of the type of stalking that I experienced. However, it would fit well under amendment 402, which is more prescriptive. Amendment 402 proposes a good framework into which the behaviours could have been placed quite well, and I could see it being translated down to front-line response a lot more easily.

Stewart Maxwell: Proposed subsection (6) of amendment 402 is prefaced by the phrase

“conduct’ includes (but is not limited to)”.

Are you happy with the non-exhaustive list that follows, or is there a risk, as with all legislation, that including a list—even a non-exhaustive one—in the bill could lead to people trying to find a way around it and does not address the fact that things change and that behaviour might arise that was not anticipated? There appears to be no easy way of amending the list through subordinate legislation. Might an additional amendment that allowed the list to be amended by subordinate legislation in the future be of some value? I am not asking Rhoda Grant; I am asking the panel. Lists can create difficulties if there is no possibility of changing them.

Assistant Chief Constable Livingstone: I recognise that legitimate concern. The fact that stalking is not defined in exclusive terms—the amendment states that suggests that the listed behaviours are merely examples from 2010. However, there may be a potential danger. If the fact that the definition is not limited to the listed behaviours were expressed more overtly in the bill, that might deal with your concern. You are absolutely right that every time that there is a new means of committing an offence or of getting round it, human behaviour is guaranteed to find it. It is important that we do not define too narrowly the conduct that we mean. I hope that the qualification that the offence is not limited to that list of behaviours addresses that.

“conduct’ includes (but is not limited to)”—

Stewart Maxwell: Ms Moulds, do you have a view on that?

Ann Moulds: The matter was thought about and well discussed in looking at the different forms of legislation. When anti-stalking legislation began to be introduced in America, the problem was that the definition was too open and broad. That was the start of a learning curve. The definition had to be narrowed a bit and made more focused.

I take on board your point about whether it is better to have a list of behaviours or whether stalking is better defined as a course of conduct without the list. The list must not be exhaustive; it should be possible to add to it. Proposed subsection (6)(i) covers someone “acting in any other way that a reasonable person would expect would arouse apprehension or fear”, which is an open statement that should cover other behaviours. It is slightly more open to interpretation, but some flexibility is needed in the provisions.

Stewart Maxwell: So you think that there is enough flexibility in the amendment as it stands to cover any changes.

Ann Moulds: Yes. It is more important that the police are better at responding, as the provisions must be put into practice.

Detective Chief Inspector McPike: I agree with Ann Moulds that proposed subsection (6)(i), which refers to “acting in any other way that a reasonable person would expect would arouse apprehension or fear in” another, is a good catch-all provision.

The Convener: At the beginning of the session, I told Ann Moulds that if she wanted to make any concluding remarks, we would be interested in hearing them. We received full initial written correspondence from her, which all of us have read carefully, as she can see. She can also see that members have a degree of sympathy for the proposal.

Ann Moulds: I am comfortable with what has been discussed and with the questions that have been asked.

The Convener: I thank all of the witnesses for their attendance this morning.
weapon should go to prison. The figures indicate that 3,529 individuals were convicted of that offence in 2008-09. Does ACPOS have concerns about the vast majority of those offenders going to prison?

Chief Constable Strang: Our position is that we need to tackle knife crime and that it is much better to invest in preventive measures such as robust policing, searching people, education and using metal detectors at night clubs. At the point of sentencing—six months after the offence—it is too late to have a real impact. All the evidence shows that the deterrent effect of mandatory imprisonment is marginal. Early police involvement and a prevention strategy that includes pre-emptive searches and tackling knife and gang culture have much greater deterrent impact.

12:30

John Muir: You can make anything that you want from the statistics that have been cited. Everyone in government knows that you can make what comes up sound different by altering it to suit you. We have heard that 30 per cent of people in the knife crime business have been drinking; they are part of a booze and knife culture. Does the fact that the other 70 per cent were not drinking mean that it is okay? You can fix the figures to make things look how you want them to look.

I am pleased to say that, in our region of Inverclyde, we have pioneered many initiatives over the past two years. Last Saturday, all the effort that has been put in produced results: for the first time in nine years, we have a lower level of knife crime. That is an accolade for our local constabulary and for the petitions that we have run with the Greenock Telegraph, which has backed us to the hilt and run a sticker campaign on cars, vans and elsewhere.

We have a superintendent and a chief inspector who are really switched on. We work in conjunction with Inverclyde Council and with the police and go to these places. All those things are factors.

Of course, statistics mean a lot. I look at the national figures and we hear about all the big things that are jumping up and down. I can bring out figures that have been reported, in various newspapers, on the league of knife shame, as they call it. There is fury because, from 1999 to 2008-09, knife crime has increased by 67 per cent. Somebody has these figures and is able to put them into the newspaper. I am not a politician and I do not know where all these figures come from, but I have to accept that, if they are written up, there must be some substance in what has been said.

I can tell you honestly about what we have achieved through direct involvement in Inverclyde, because I have been involved in it. As Chief Constable Strang said, object policing, targeting certain things, is good and it is working in our area, but we are looking for sentencing to be more severe and to ensure that someone who has committed a knife crime is dealt with appropriately. Risk management is okay if it works, but risk management did not work for my son. The person who murdered my son had a record as long as your arm but, because of the local authority, the court, the police and the welfare people, my son died. He was stabbed eight times. That was very frustrating for us. Risk management had gone straight out the window, because the man who murdered my son in July 2007 had disfigured a man with a knife in December 2006 and disfigured a man with a bottle in March 2007. In between, there were incidents when he was caught for carrying knives, for threatening behaviour and for other things, yet he was let out. That was risk management gone mad. How many figures can we come up with on that? That is another set of figures that we should be looking at—cases in which it has not been properly adjusted.

We as a family feel very sore about the issue. We lost a son who we consider to be very good. Everybody tells us that he is one of life’s good guys, but we are suffering for it. No one ever comes back and says to us, “What would you like to see happen in prison?” I would like prison to be reinvented as a place of punishment, because all we hear coming from parliamentary debates and papers is that they are going back in there for rehabilitation. Damn the rehabilitation—what about the punishment part of a sentence? Everyone just sits and nods, but who is going to do it? I cannot do it; I can bring it to your attention and hope that you will do it. I am sorry if I deviated from the issue of statistics, but that is where we are coming from and that is why we are pushing quite hard in the hope that the judiciary, the police, the public—I have missed out somebody.

The Convener: We are considering the bill, so I think that we perhaps have a wee bit of a role to play.

John Muir: Yes. I would like to take any questions as we go along on how it affects the family, how it affects your life and how it affects what you try to do. I am in favour of direct intervention on a week-to-week basis to try to get things done. We have proved in Inverclyde that it is a going thing. To have the lowest figures in nine years after less than two years of petitioning and going round is a credit to the police force down there—they have got so many things going. I support the long-term action, but this is where we fall out with the police and others: what about the here and now? It is good to say that, in five or 10 years’ time, we will have less knife crime in Scotland, but there have been, on average, 55 knife murders a year over the past decade. It is quite incredible that it was the choice of weapon in 55 murders. People say that they carry a knife for protection. That is rubbish—we have proved that. In every 100 knife cases, whether a stabbing, a slashing or a fatality is involved, 90 of the people who are injured are not carrying a weapon. That is quite a dramatic figure. Ten people in every 100 such cases carry a knife for their protection.

The simple reason why we want mandatory custodial sentences for knife crimes is that, if a person is prepared to put a knife in their pocket on the way out of the door before they go for a drink, or even if they are not going for a drink, they are a knife user. There is intent, so they must be sorted out.

I am sorry to take up so much time.

The Convener: You may have anticipated some questions that would have been forthcoming. Is Angela Constance satisfied with her answer?

Angela Constance: Yes, just for now.

Bill Butler: Good afternoon, gentlemen. I would like to direct some questions at Mr Strang first; I will then turn to Mr Muir. As you know, Mr Strang, amendment 10 seeks to establish a custodial sentence of at least six months as the norm for any adult who has been convicted of carrying a knife in a public place. Amendment 10A seeks to establish a custodial sentence of at least two years as the norm. Do you think that such changes to the law would have a positive deterrent effect?

Chief Constable Strang: I think that the effect of increased sentences on deterrence is marginal.

Bill Butler: What is your evidence for that? I know that you said in an answer to Angela Constance.

Chief Constable Strang: I have with me an article on mandatory sentencing by Declan Roche of the Australian Institute of Criminology.

Bill Butler: Is that your only piece of evidence?

Chief Constable Strang: No. From what I have read by criminologists, there is not a strong correlation between mandatory sentences and reductions in crime.

Bill Butler: What is the criminologists’ evidence for their assertion? I am worried. If there is evidence, that is fine: let us have it. However, do you agree that mere assertion is not enough?

Chief Constable Strang: There are much higher levels of mandatory sentencing and higher levels of imprisonment in the United States of America. We have mandatory sentences for murder in this country, but that has clearly not reduced the number of murders to zero. We know that people will still commit offences. The prospect of detection is much more of a deterrent than the length of sentences that people are given in court.

Bill Butler: Is the number of homicides not decreasing? You referred to murders.

Chief Constable Strang: I am saying that mandatory life imprisonment for murder does not stop people committing murder.

Bill Butler: The members who have lodged the amendments can speak for themselves, but I do not think that any of them would say that the amendments are cure-alls or panaceas. Is it not at least arguable that, if Parliament agreed to such changes and they were implemented, they would go some way to deterring illegitimate knife carrying?

Chief Constable Strang: I accept that that is a possibility, but the costs and the impact on individuals’ lives of an automatic sentence of imprisonment must be considered. I would argue that sentences of imprisonment also do harm in the long run. That was also the conclusion of the Scottish Prisons Commission.

Bill Butler: What about the harm to victims? What are the costs to them?

Chief Constable Strang: Of course our primary concern is the victims. We want to make Scotland a safer place by reducing crime. As I argued earlier, we make the greatest impact on reducing crime by taking a broad approach that includes prevention, early intervention, police searches using metal detectors and an attempt to change the culture among young people so that they do not go out carrying a knife, which is hugely important.

My only point is that the introduction of a mandatory two-year term of imprisonment would not have the impact that we want. The discretion ought to remain with the judge.

Bill Butler: If I remember correctly, the amendments provide that the discretion would still ultimately remain with the judge. No one would disagree that we should not take a one-club approach; there is no doubt that any approach should include preventive measures.

However, do you think that people who listen to this evidence session might be at least a bit disappointed that you seem to think that the two amendments that have been lodged on mandatory minimum sentences would have only a marginal impact? What do you say to the 30,000 Scots who have signed a petition that calls for the implementation of mandatory minimum sentences?
Chief Constable Strang: We hear real concern about people carrying and using knives, and we are determined to tackle the issue. In Scotland, the number of knife crime offences has fallen over the past two or three years, which is evidence of the effectiveness of what we are doing without the notion of a mandatory sentence.

As you will know, the options that are available to the court were increased four years ago, so it is possible for courts to impose a sentence of four years for carrying a knife. That sends out a message about how seriously we take the issue, but it is quite different from removing the discretion and making it mandatory that people should be sentenced to imprisonment.

Bill Butler: Thank you, Mr Strang—although I emphasise again that, from my recollection, neither of the two amendments that will come before the committee and, ultimately, the Parliament, removes the discretion.

Mr Muir, you responded to my colleague Angela Constance’s question by giving the very personal reasons why you support the amendments that the committee will discuss in the weeks to come, and we have listened carefully to those. I will ask you a slightly different—although obviously related—question.

What reaction have you had from members of the public when you were gathering support for the knife crime petition? Were they content with the law as it stands, as detailed by the chief constable, or did they want something more to be done? What was your impression in that regard?

John Muir: We clearly stated at the top of our petition sheets, and on our website when it was running, that we were seeking mandatory custodial sentences along the line, so people were signing for that.

If you meet the public face to face and ask them, “Are you happy with the way things are being handled on the street?” they will turn round and tell you that they are not happy. I have tried many times to say that to Parliament. That is the public’s view now and, unless the issue is addressed properly, there is no doubt that it will become an election issue.

People are now thinking about the current rules and regulations, especially given the comments that are made by those who should know better—for example, that prison is a “skoosh”—which stick in people’s minds. People do not want to know about statistics; they just want to know that things will happen to make things better.

My position is along the lines of the statement that I made to the knife crime summit in January 2009. I said then:

“Today must be the pivotal point in the fight against violent crime and, in particular, against knife and weapons crime. Any and all honest men would recognise that there has been very nearly criminal institutional failure and neglect on the part of the authorities in which the protection of the Scottish nation is vested. That failure is borne out by the frequency of incidences of knife crime and by the disgraceful statistics that shame Scotland. I remind this learned assembly that those statistics relate to real people and are not an academic board game.

Each and every one of the statistics represents ... a person whose life has been taken or shattered along with the lives of their family and friends.”

Knife crime does not need to involve murder for it to have an effect on people throughout the rest of their lives, even if they did not die. Younger people who have been slashed cannot get a job because they have a face like a hot cross bun. That does not give them any solace when they are trying to get work. No, what is in place just now is not up to the job. Changes need to be made.

12:45

Bill Butler: That is very clear, Mr Muir. Thank you, gentlemen.

Stewart Maxwell: I want to follow up on a couple of points that Bill Butler raised with Chief Constable Strang. Bill Butler asked what evidence exists to prove what he called an assertion that Chief Constable Strang had made. Are there any studies or evidence from around the world that show that mandatory sentences reduce crime? I am not aware of any such evidence.

Chief Constable Strang: No, I am not aware of any studies that show that mandatory sentences reduce crime.

Stewart Maxwell: Are you aware of any evidence or studies that show that mandatory sentences have little or no impact on reducing crime?

Chief Constable Strang: The piece of evidence to which I referred earlier states that mandatory sentences have very little impact on reducing crime.

Stewart Maxwell: On the practical implications of such a policy, is it your understanding that, in the United States, where mandatory sentences have been in vogue for some years, many parts of the penal establishment and others—including, even, many on the right—are now backing away from that policy because of its failure?

Chief Constable Strang: I do not know whether people are backing away from it, but the United States certainly has much higher rates of imprisonment—more than four times higher than the rate in Scotland—and higher levels of crime. There does not seem to be a correlation between imprisoning more people for longer and reducing crime.

Stewart Maxwell: Mr Butler also asked about the impact on victims. From the tenor of Mr Butler’s questions, I presume that he believes that all victims throughout Scotland would support the amendments. If that is the case, can you explain why Victim Support Scotland does not support the introduction of mandatory sentences for knife crime?

Chief Constable Strang: That question would need to be put to Victim Support Scotland. However, I think that there is almost a sense that it is misleading potential victims to try to persuade people that introducing mandatory sentences or increasing sentence tariffs will somehow have a big impact. Sadly, we know that there will be victims of crime. The court needs to take into account the facts of the case and the circumstances of the individual in sentencing in an appropriate way. I know that Victim Support Scotland is thoughtful in its approach and would not welcome a blanket mandatory sentence.

James Kelly: My first couple of questions are directed to Mr Strang. He will be very aware of the experience in Lothian and Borders, where the number of people who have been caught and convicted for being in possession of a knife has increased by 21 per cent. Homicides involving an attack by a knife or sharp object comprise 71 per cent of all such incidents in Lothian and Borders. However, as Mr Muir said, the issue is not about just statistics but about the human side of the story. For example, there was a serious knife attack in Edinburgh on Sunday night, when a man opened his door and was attacked.

In the face of those statistics and of incidents such as the one on Sunday night, do you accept the logic that, if people going out on a Friday or Saturday night know that being caught in possession of a knife will likely mean jail, fewer people will carry knives as a result, so there will be fewer knife incidents and a resultant decline in the number of murders, thereby saving lives?

Chief Constable Strang: I said that the incidence of knife crime in Lothian and Borders has reduced in the past two or three years. That partly reflects police activity such as more proactive searches. As for the murder rate, half the homicides in which a knife is used do not involve someone taking a knife outside but take place in a domestic situation, in which a knife is the most readily available weapon.

If someone goes out with a knife and has the malicious intent to use it, they face a severe prison sentence at the moment. It is self-evident that that does not stop people carrying knives. People’s motivations are different—some carry a knife through fear, for protection or because of group pressure. People who carry and use knives already receive custodial sentences, so I do not accept your premise that making a mandatory prison sentence would stop people carrying knives, because it does not do so at the moment.

James Kelly: Do you not think that your attitude is complacent, particularly given the human situations that have, unfortunately, occurred throughout Scotland, where 58 per cent of murders result from knife attacks?

Chief Constable Strang: No. I have said clearly that we are absolutely not complacent. We want effective measures that reduce the number of people who carry and use knives. We want our criminal justice system to reduce offending effectively in the long term.

We know that sending people to prison is the punishment with the least positive outcomes—people who are sentenced to prison lose their jobs and are more likely to reoffend on release. I am much more in favour of targeted sentencing that is appropriate for an individual and a case. We are far from complacent—we want to make Scotland safer and to arrest those who commit offences. We will do that and we will continue to reassure the public.

James Kelly: You have mentioned costs. The Sunday Times reported recently that the cost to the national health service of treating 1,170 victims of knife attacks was £500 million. Do you accept the logic that a tougher sentencing policy will reduce the number of knife attack victims whom the NHS must treat, which will therefore reduce those costs and save the service money?

Chief Constable Strang: I agree that we want to reduce those wasted costs. Much more important is the cost and impact of the damage and harm that are done to individuals and families. However, as I said, I do not accept your link between mandatory sentences and a reduced cost to the NHS. We need much more effective and earlier intervention rather than compulsory imprisonment at the end of a court case.

James Kelly: Mr Muir, what is your view of people such as Mr Strang, who support the status quo in sentencing policy? Does that address the concerns of campaigners such as you?

John Muir: We are trying to redress the whole situation in one swoop, to get something done. In Inverclyde, the local newspaper—the Greenock Telegraph—has backed our campaign for the past two years. It has stood up and said, “We want things done.” As a result of that, Sheriff John Herald said that anyone who was found to be in possession of a knife and who came to his court would be held over in jail until trial. That has applied for the past 15 months and is obviously... having an effect. After the lowest reported knife crime stats, we can turn round and say that it is nine years since the position has been as good as it is. We must look at that and say, "Yes—we're doing the right thing." We are not considering the opposite.

No one seems to be taking up the point that prison has to be disinvnted or reinvented—whatever way you want to look at it. It is a place of punishment, not somewhere to put somebody conveniently out of the road. There must be terms before offenders go to prison. If the prison service gives them a course to follow and they muck about or jump about and do not do it, instead of having time taken off their sentences, time should be added on, otherwise they are not being challenged for the crimes that they commit.

That must happen. It is another stage to which we must move forward; it is all progression. We will eventually take the right decision on mandatory sentences. It is all right saying that the prisons are overcrowded but they are overcrowded for only a little while, because the sentence can soon be adjusted to get the offenders out—they are given tags. I read in the paper last week that a chap who was convicted of culpable homicide had received an eight-year sentence, had done two years in the mainstream prison and was being considered for open prison. What message and assurance does that give the public?

I meet the rank and file of the police who—contrary to what Chief Constable Strang says—tell me, "Keep it going, John. We've got to keep these rascals and thugs off the street. We find it hard. We get them in and before we can even get our squad car back to the garage, they are waving to us in taxis." That is where the weaknesses are coming in. It is not being applied and nailed to the floor. If people commit crimes and break the law, they should be punished, not told before they go to prison that they will be rehabilitated. There should be a punishment part of the sentence before they get anything easier.

Angela Constance: I ask both gentlemen whether we can address knife crime in isolation from Scotland's battle with the booze.

Chief Constable Strang: Absolutely not.

I will correct one implication of Mr Kelly's last question. He said that I supported the status quo on sentencing but, as you know, I do not. ACPOS argues strongly for effective community sentencing and fully supports the proposals in the bill to make alternatives to prison much more effective.

Alcohol and drug abuse are undoubtedly underlying factors in many of the offences with which we deal, whether carrying knives, assaults or crimes of dishonesty. It is not the case that dealing with one aspect alone will transform someone's life. We often find that alcohol and substance misuse play a part in assaults and knife carrying. I accept entirely that we need to tackle the broader, underlying factors as well as the single offence.

John Muir: We can differentiate between the booze and the knife culture. Generally, we find that someone who has been out earlier in the night having drink might pick up a knife and have it in their possession or that knife crime is committed by a guy who goes out reasonably cold headed and has the knife for a purpose. We have always said that if somebody carries a knife, he is a user. There is no doubt about that, because we have proved time and again that there is no need to carry one.

This has been spoken about for a long time—years and years. In case anyone missed it, I will read you something that I put in my submission:

"It is depressing nowadays to take up one's paper and read the daily catalogue of assaults and murders with knives, razors and other lethal weapons. Indeed slashings and stabbings are becoming so common that they appear to be accepted as part of our modern youth's recreation."

That came from the Evening Times letters page on 14 March 1930. Do you not think that we should be changing things? That quotation tells us enough about Scotland: we have had the problem for 80 years and we are not moving fast enough.

13:00

Angela Constance: Are there any other aspects of the criminal justice system where we might be able to do better than consider only mandatory sentences? For example, when Mr Muir spoke of what happened to him and his son, he mentioned that it had come about because a violent recidivist had been released on bail, and perhaps we should focus on such matters.

I also listened with interest to Mr Muir's comments about improvements in the Inverclyde area, and I wonder whether we can do more to ensure that people throughout Scotland follow that kind of good practice.

John Muir: I can speak only about what happens in Inverclyde and what happened to our family. There is no doubt about it; what happened to us was a tragedy that we feel greatly. However, my son did not die in a ghetto or a bad area; as the police said, he was in the wrong place at the wrong time and got picked on. Unfortunately, the guy who did it was also in the wrong place at the wrong time—he should have been in jail.

Risk management is part of the judiciary's role, and it decides whether a particular guy can be released as long as he wears an electronic tag. I am quite sure that there are statistics for the number of burglaries, incidents of knife crime and other offences that have been committed by people with electronic tags, but I want to focus on knife crime. Booze and knife crime go together. Greenock had a terrible reputation for such crime; at one stage, you were three and a half times more likely to be stabbed in Greenock than anywhere else in Scotland. However, the effort over 18 months to reduce this kind of crime has resulted in the best figures for nine years, and I believe that the same approach can work with many people.

Inverclyde Council and Strathclyde Police have been absolutely immense in all of this. These particular exercises, which are carried out every three or four months, are not cheap; it costs £11,000 a night to put the police in position and everything else. In case people do not know what happens on those nights, I should say that the police take their police vans into areas where there has been violence, drunkenness or whatever, pick up the people involved and bring them down, say, to James Watt College, among other places. Those who have been picked up because they are part of a drinking culture are processed; as for those who have committed a crime—for example, those carrying drugs or knives or underage drinkers—before they can go home their parents are called and they have to see three different people. A senior police officer explains to the family what might have happened, especially to girls, if they had been left lying in the street and makes it clear that boys in the wrong company can end up being knifed or stabbed. Someone from the council then explains to the younger ones about antisocial behaviour orders, how hard they can affect families and the fact that for someone who gets an ASBO at a certain address their right of tenancy after six months goes out the window. They do not know these things, and they come as a shock to the parents. Then I tell the people how a family feels to lose someone and ask them whether they want to be in the same position. That approach is working.

However, the big thing is that we have had as many as 30 organisations offering options including badminton, tennis, football, tae kwon do, boxing and music. People always say that nothing can be done; the fact is that plenty can be done, and we are showing them what we have been able to do. As I say, the approach is working and I think that communities and councils can do a lot in conjunction with the police force.

Chief Constable Strang: I commend those comments about the proactive work with the community in Greenock. Indeed, such an approach is being taken throughout Scotland. For example, operation floorwalk in West Lothian was similarly aimed at engaging with young people who were at risk of offending, particularly as a result of alcohol. Instead of trying to do something after people have offended, we need to take a preventive approach in the first place and put more effort into those kinds of early intervention and upstream measures.

Angela Constance: The letter that Mr Muir read out from the Glasgow Evening Times mentioned “lethal weapons”. Richard Baker’s amendment 10 talks about “having in a public place an article with a blade or point”.

I wonder whether there is a risk of displacement and whether, instead of carrying knives or things with a blade or point, people might go on to carry other types of offensive weapon that could have the same catastrophic consequences.

Chief Constable Strang: The blade or the pointed article reflects the Criminal Law (Consolidation) (Scotland) Act 1995 in which the amendment seeks to make a replacement. I do not think that people will be as calculating as that. If someone puts a knife in their back pocket, I do not think that they think about the sentence that they might get if they are caught and have to appear in court in six months.

Angela Constance: What would deter you or me will not always deter a feckless, irresponsible individual.

Cathie Craigie: This question is specifically for you, Mr Strang. You said today that you support prevention efforts and you mentioned something that happened in the Lothian police force area. Mr Muir spoke about the good work that has gone on in Greenock and how it has reduced the level of offences there in the past year. If work is going on in the Lothian area, why are we seeing a rise in the level of knife crime there?

Chief Constable Strang: I will say two things. One is that right across all eight forces in Scotland we are tackling violence. The violence reduction unit headed by Chief Superintendent John Carnochan provides support to campaigns throughout Scotland in all our cities and rural areas. The other is that the number of recorded knife crime incidents has fallen in the Lothian and Borders police area over the past three years; it has not increased.

Cathie Craigie: But not in the past year according to the information in front of me.

Chief Constable Strang: I think that you might be talking about conviction rates in court, which are different from recorded offences. I have here the figures for the past three years in Lothian and Borders: in 2006-07, there were 984 incidents with offensive weapons; in 2007-08, it was 797; and in 2008-09, it was 784.
The Convener: Due to the lateness of the hour, I propose that we do not go into any great depth about what is happening in Lothian and Borders, but perhaps it would be helpful if the chief constable could write to us with the figures.

Chief Constable Strang: Certainly.

Cathie Craigie: Then we can confirm the numbers, because I stand by the figures that I have.

According to Mr Muir’s evidence, the focus of the work being carried out in the Greenock area is on young people, which I applaud because a lot of behaviours can be learned from older people. The statistical bulletin published in March 2010 on the criminal proceedings in Scottish courts in 2008-09 tells us that 67 per cent of people who were convicted for using an offensive weapon were over 21. Therefore, it is clear that there is a group of people that some of those preventive measures will not touch. Earlier today, Mr Strang, you said in your evidence that people who carry a knife at present can expect to go to jail, but in fact that is not the case, according to figures that we have from the published statistical bulletin. Would the deterrent of the possibility of going to jail help to reduce that percentage?

Chief Constable Strang: The 67 per cent of people who were over 21 were people who were convicted in court. They were people in relation to whom we had taken preventive action, by arresting them because they were carrying a weapon.

It is clear that people are sent to prison for carrying knives. My point was that someone who goes out with a knife in their pocket is not thinking that they will be caught. They are not thinking, “I have only a 30 per cent chance of going to prison. If the case comes before the sheriff there is a 70 per cent chance that I will get only a community sentence, probation or a fine.” That is not how people who carry knives think. They assume that they will not get caught. I do not accept the premise that to make the final court disposal a mandatory prison sentence will stop people taking a weapon.

Cathie Craigie: Why then do we not see lots of people going about with guns in their pockets?

Chief Constable Strang: The culture around—and availability of—guns is very different from the culture around knives. The purpose of imprisonment is primarily punishment for the offence and protection of the public. There is some deterrent effect, but the evidence is that that is weak. There are all sorts of reasons to do with the availability of firearms, and other social reasons, why people do not carry guns.

Robert Brown: I thank Mr Muir for hosting my visit to Inverclyde to learn about the initiative. As I understand it, the essence of the initiative is early intervention. There is a restorative element, whereby people are brought face to face with people like you, who have experienced tragic knife crime in their families. Young people are given positive alternatives through various opportunities, and their parents are brought into the picture. All that, which has nothing to do with mandatory sentences, has had a significant effect on knife crime rates in Inverclyde. I do not know whether we have the statistics, but there is anecdotal evidence that knife crime has gone down by about a third—is that correct?

John Muir: Yes.

Robert Brown: Does that not establish that whatever we think about other matters, early intervention techniques have an effect on that catchment of people? I pay tribute to John Muir for his impressive work in that regard.
“People kill people, not knives”.

Although that is a fair point, at the time I said that equally people not carrying knives are less likely to kill people. For us as victims, what he said was a total snub. Who did he think he was talking to? Some wee boy from the side of the street? I am an elderly gentleman—an elderly man—who is trying to put a point across to Parliament and someone was talking down to me. I did not like it; I resented it.

While I am here I should say to Robert Brown that I brought to the summit Kelly McGee, whose brother was stabbed to death in Lochwinnoch. I have a list in my diary of the people I introduced her to on the day. Reading from the top down, they included Bill Aitken and Miss Goldie. Nigel Don also saw the girl that day. Robert, you were waiting to be interviewed; you did not make time to be introduced to her. That was a snub to the family. I can assure you that the girl went home in tears; she was really upset. How can I come to a meeting such as this knowing that some of the people who take the decisions do not support us? Kelly McGee was not just an ordinary voter; she was a victim. Her brother had been stabbed to death. He had received the Queen’s commendation for bravery medal for his bravery in Iraq and he died on his own doorstep.

We are talking about self-accountability. These people do not care; they just do it. There is only one place for them and that is behind bars. If I am driving past Barlinnie, I do not for one minute think to myself that the people inside there are paying a debt to society. Damn that. I am pleased that they are in there. While they are locked up in there, they cannot do any harm to my family.

The Convener: In defence of Robert Brown. I am certain that he would not have done that through any lack of courtesy. He is one of the most courteous of members.

Robert Brown: Thank you, convener. That is useful on that one.

I refer you to the paper that you helpfully gave us, Mr Muir, in which you analyse your reasons for looking at issues such as punishment across the criminal justice system. I am clear about your view on punishment, which you have articulated this morning. I also understand your view on paying a debt to society. If someone goes to prison, they have to come out at some point—after three months, six months or two years. The central question is: do they come out of prison more or less likely to carry knives and commit crimes? When I visited Polmont young offenders institution, I was told that 91 per cent of the young offenders had been there before. Polmont is a facility for those under 21, but going there appears not to be an obvious deterrent. I think that there are similar statistics for those given prison sentences. Prison seems not to have a deterrent effect. Do we not have to deal with the underlying causes of why people commit crimes?

John Muir: Where do those differentials get us? Let us take general conditions for prisoners—

Robert Brown: Some of them are inside for a long time.

John Muir: That is fine. Get them in for a long time if they have done a big crime.

Prisoners have Sky television, warm cells, showers and three meals a day. If they do not like the meals they get, they have them brought in from the outside. There is no deterrent in that. They go back into prison readily; it is like a club. They say, “I’m going back in to see my mates who’re in for a wee bit longer than me. They’ll give me an update on what’s going on.”

At times, I feel that I am letting myself down when I come along and complain about things. I have said this many times: go to the sharp end of the boat. Go to the areas where life is difficult and where things are poor and bad. People in those areas do not live the life that you or I live. I live in an area where I am not faced by violent crime every hour of the day, but people near to where I live face that.

Again, this goes back to self-accountability and the lack of proper prison sentences. The big thing that jumps up when people go into prison is that they then have these wonderful civil liberties—civil rights to claim for sundries so as not to upset their cozy lifestyles. I have to ask the question time and again: what about my son? He was 34 years of age when he died, and he will be 34 years of age when I die. That is what you have to look at. He had nothing out of life up to that age. He was a fine boy.

The victims are us—the family, carrying on in the aftermath. We see people coming out of prison, giving us the finger, snubbing us just because of who and what we are, and saying, “We beat the system again.” The present system does not have enough guts.

The Convener: Right, I think that we have now reached the point of repetition. On the strict understanding that their questions be without significant preamble, we will have final brief questions first from Trish Godman and then from Richard Baker.

Trish Godman: I represent part of Inverclyde—Paul McGee was a constituent of mine. I want clarification from you, Mr Strang. You opened by saying that cost and prison space would be a problem, and then you said that mandatory sentencing would be a problem, too. Which do you think is the bigger problem in terms of your objections to the amendments?

You have also said, “We need to do” lots of times—I have written it down. You have good examples in Inverclyde and Lothian, so why are you not doing it? If you are not doing it just now, do you have the intention to move the good practice that Angela Constance spoke about across the city? However, I am more concerned about your opening statement that says that it will cost a lot, there is not the prison space and you do not believe in mandatory sentencing. Which of those things is the reason why you do not support the amendments?

The Convener: Short, crisp answer, Mr Strang.

Chief Constable Strang: On mandatory sentencing, I think that the discretion should be with the sheriff or judge who is sentencing. They know the facts of the case and can take into account the individual’s circumstance and sentence accordingly. However much it cost or however many prison spaces we had, I would still say that a mandatory prison sentence is not the right way forward.

The Convener: I ask Richard Baker to follow the excellent example set by Trish Godman.

Richard Baker (North East Scotland) (Lab): I am not sure whether I can match that, but I have two brief questions.

Mr Strang, my amendment is based on the current laws for mandatory sentences for firearms offences. I presume that you are not suggesting that the current laws on firearms are faulty, so can you understand why some of us are perplexed that we have that sentencing regime in place for firearms, offences of which are falling, but not for knives? Last year, 57 people were stabbed to death, while only two people were killed with firearms. Can you see why your logic escapes us?

Chief Constable Strang: No, because I do not think that there is a logic that says that if we introduced mandatory sentences for knife crime, they would have the impact that you hope for.

Richard Baker: Even though, with that sentencing regime in place, firearms offences are falling.

Chief Constable Strang: I do not have the figures for firearms offences with me but, as I said earlier, the culture and circumstances of people carrying firearms are very different. The availability of firearms is in stark contrast to the availability of knives: every kitchen has a string of knives in it.

Richard Baker: I understand that we are short of time and that we will have an opportunity to return to the subject, so this is my final question.

The figures that we have show that there was an increase—admittedly a small one—between 2007-08 and 2008-09 in offences of handling an offensive weapon in Lothian and Borders. The interventions in your police force area that you have mentioned and those in Greenock that John Muir has referred to are to be commended, but why should they preclude a change in the sentencing regime? We could have a new sentencing regime that would have the effect that we want, send out a clear message—“Carry a knife, go to jail”—and, at the same time, have those interventions, too. Surely they can work side by side.

Chief Constable Strang: From a logical and technical point of view, they could. However, I am arguing against a mandatory sentence that is applicable to absolutely everyone, whether they are a 16-year-old who is fearful or a 30-year-old who has gone out with criminal intent and carrying a knife. I think that there needs to be a distinction.

I stressed preventive and proactive policing—working with communities, youth clubs and schools—because that is the way to make a real difference, rather than sending people to prison, which we know has negative outcomes for them. I accept entirely that it protects the public while those people are in prison because they are not committing offences on the street, but we must remember the long-term impact. The point of “Scotland’s Choice”, the report of the Scottish Prisons Commission, was that we have a choice to make: either we continue to lock up people, with the negative outcomes that that has, or we have a fresh approach to community sentences.

The Convener: Thank you very much—

John Muir: I just want to make one small point. One reason why we have had a lot of success in Inverclyde is the Scottish Parliament. That should not be forgotten. We have received proceeds of crime money, which has been a big bonus, and I want the MSPs here to know that we appreciate that very much.

The Convener: Thank you for those generous words, and thank you for your evidence this morning. That concludes our evidence session.

13:25

Meeting continued in private until 13:36.
3rd Marshalled List of Amendments for Stage 2

The Bill will be considered in the following order—

Sections 1 to 3  Schedule 1
Sections 4 to 18  Schedule 2
Sections 19 to 66  Schedule 3
Sections 67 to 139  Schedule 4
Sections 140 to 145  Schedule 5
Sections 146 to 148  Long Title

Amendments marked * are new (including manuscript amendments) or have been altered.

Section 15

Rhoda Grant

In section 15, page 29, line 29, after <subsection (1)> insert—

<(  ) at the beginning insert “Subject to subsection (1A),”, and
   (  )>

Rhoda Grant

In section 15, page 29, line 29, at end insert—

<(  ) after subsection (1) insert—
   “(1A) The prosecutor must, where a person (“A”) is convicted of the offence of stalking a person (“B”), apply to the court to make a non-harassment order against A requiring A to refrain from such conduct in relation to—
   (a) B, or
   (b) any other person in relation to whom the course of conduct engaged in by A, and which constituted the offence, related, as may be specified in the order for such period (which includes an indeterminate period) as may be so specified, in addition to any other disposal which may be made in relation to the offence.”,>

Rhoda Grant

In section 15, page 29, line 30, after <subsection (2)> insert—

<(  ) after “subsection (1)” insert “or (1A)”, and
   (  )>
In section 15, page 29, line 30, leave out “harassment (or further harassment)” and insert “misconduct (or further misconduct)”

In section 15, page 30, line 18, leave out “harassment” and “conduct” are and insert “conduct is”

In section 15, page 30, line 20, at end insert “whether on one or more than one occasion”

Section 17

In section 17, page 30, line 32, leave out <6> and insert <3>

In section 17, page 31, line 2, leave out <6> and insert <3>

In section 17, page 31, line 7, at end insert—

<(4) The Scottish Ministers may not bring subsection (1), (2) or (3) into force until they have—

(a) prepared a report setting out—

(i) the reduction in the number of sentences of imprisonment or detention imposed annually that is expected as a result of bringing those subsections into force,

(ii) the increase in the number of community payback orders imposed annually that is expected as a result of bringing those subsections into force (by comparison with the number of such orders imposed annually that would be expected if those subsections were not brought into force),

(iii) the estimated annual cost implications of the changes referred to in sub-paragraphs (i) and (ii),

(iv) the additional funding, if any, that Ministers will provide to community justice authorities or local authorities to ensure that they have the capacity to support the requirements expected to be imposed by any additional community payback orders identified under sub-paragraph (ii).

(b) laid that report before the Scottish Parliament; and

(c) taken into account any views expressed on it by any committee of the Parliament the remit of which includes the criminal justice system.>
1 Leave out section 17

After section 17

Robert Brown

102 After section 17, insert—

<Report on operation of sections 14 and 17

(1) The Scottish Ministers must, no later than 5 years after sections 14 and 17 come fully into force, lay before the Scottish Parliament and publish a report on the operation of those sections.

(2) The report under subsection (1) must, in particular, include an assessment of whether and to what extent those sections, individually or collectively, have—

(a) reduced offending,

(b) increased public safety.>

After section 20

Bill Wilson

103 After section 20, insert—

<Pre-sentencing reports about organisations

After section 203 of the 1995 Act (reports), insert—

“203A Reports about organisations

(1) This section applies where an organisation is convicted of an offence.

(2) Before dealing with the organisation in respect of the offence, the court may obtain a report into the organisation’s financial affairs and structural arrangements.

(3) The report is to be prepared by a person appointed by the court.

(4) The person appointed to prepare the report is referred to in this section as the “reporter”.

(5) The court may issue directions to the reporter about—

(a) the information to be contained in the report,

(b) the particular matters to be covered by the report,

(c) the time by which the report is to be submitted to the court.

(6) The court may order the organisation to give the reporter and any person acting on the reporter’s behalf—

(a) access at all reasonable times to the organisation’s books, documents and other records,

(b) such information or explanation as the reporter thinks necessary.
The reporter’s costs in preparing the report are to be paid by the clerk of court, but the court may order the organisation to reimburse to the clerk all or a part of those costs.

An order under subsection (7) may be enforced by civil diligence as if it were a fine.

On submission of the report to the court, the clerk of court must provide a copy of the report to—

(a) the organisation,
(b) the organisation’s solicitor (if any), and
(c) the prosecutor.

The court must have regard to the report in deciding how to deal with the organisation in respect of the offence.

If the court decides to impose a fine, the court must, in determining the amount of the fine, have regard to—

(a) the report, and
(b) if the court makes an order under subsection (7), the amount of costs that the organisation is required to reimburse under the order.

Where the court—

(a) makes an order under subsection (7), and
(b) imposes a fine on the organisation,

any payment by the organisation is first to be applied in satisfaction of the order under subsection (7).

Where the court also makes a compensation order in respect of the offence, any payment by the organisation is first to be applied in satisfaction of the compensation order before being applied in accordance with subsection (12).”.

Section 24

Robert Brown
Supported by: Bill Aitken

104 Leave out section 24

After section 24

Kenny MacAskill

105 After section 24, insert—

Mutual recognition of judgments and probation decisions

(1) The Scottish Ministers may by order make provision for the purposes of and in connection with implementing any obligations of the United Kingdom created by or arising under the Framework Decision (so far as they have effect in or as regards Scotland).
(2) The provision may, in particular, confer functions—
(a) on the Scottish Ministers,
(b) on other persons.
(3) An order under subsection (1) may modify any enactment.
(4) In this section, the “Framework Decision” means Council Framework Decision 2008/947/JHA of 27 November 2008 on the application of the principle of mutual recognition to judgments and probation decisions with a view to the supervision of probation measures and alternative sanctions.

Richard Baker
10 After section 24, insert—

<Minimum sentence for having in a public place an article with a blade or point
(1) In section 49 of the Criminal Law (Consolidation) (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.39) (offence of having in a public place an article with a blade or point), after subsection (5) insert—

“(5A) Subsection (5B) applies where—

(a) a person is convicted of an offence under subsection (1),
(b) the offence was committed after the commencement of this subsection, and
(c) when the offence was committed, the person was aged 16 or over.

(5B) Where this subsection applies, the court must impose a sentence of imprisonment of at least 6 months (with or without a fine) unless the court is of the opinion that there are exceptional circumstances relating to the offence or to the offender which justify not doing so.”.

(2) In section 207(3A) of the 1995 Act (detention of young offenders: minimum sentences), after paragraph (a) insert—

“(aa) section 49(5B) of the Criminal Law (Consolidation) (Scotland) Act 1995 (minimum sentence for having in a public place an article with a blade or point);”.

Bill Aitken
10A As an amendment to amendment 10, line 11, leave out from <6> to end of line 13 and insert <2 years (with or without a fine) unless the court is satisfied, having regard to all the circumstances, that there are grounds for mitigating the normal consequences of the conviction and thinks fit to order the offender to be imprisoned for a shorter period or not to order the offender to be imprisoned>.

Section 25

Kenny MacAskill
344 In section 25, page 38, line 34, at end insert—

<( ) Without limiting the generality of subsection (1), a person agrees to become involved in serious organised crime if the person—>
(a) agrees to do something (whether or not the doing of that thing would itself constitute an offence), and
(b) knows or suspects, or ought reasonably to have known or suspected, that the doing of that thing will enable or further the commission of serious organised crime.

Robert Brown
345 In section 25, page 38, line 36, leave out <involving> and insert—
(a) that would reasonably be regarded as being both serious and organised, and
(b) that involves>

Kenny MacAskill
346 In section 25, page 39, line 2, leave out <securing> and insert <obtaining>

Kenny MacAskill
347 In section 25, page 39, line 4, leave out <serious>

Robert Brown
348 In section 25, page 39, line 4, leave out <serious violence> and insert <violence or intimidation>

Kenny MacAskill
349 In section 25, page 39, line 4, after <committed> insert <or a threat made>

Kenny MacAskill
350 In section 25, page 39, line 4, leave out <securing> and insert <obtaining>

Kenny MacAskill
351 In section 25, page 39, line 5, at end insert <, and “material benefit” means a right or interest of any description in any property, whether heritable or moveable and whether corporeal or incorporeal.>

Section 26

Robert Brown
352 In section 26, page 39, line 21, leave out subsection (4)

Section 27

Robert Brown
353 In section 27, page 39, line 35, leave out  and insert <an offence under section 25(1)>
Kenny MacAskill
354 In section 27, page 40, line 9, leave out subsection (4)

Robert Brown
355 In section 27, page 40, line 14, leave out  and insert <an offence under section 25(1)>

Kenny MacAskill
356 In section 27, page 40, line 17, leave out subsection (6)

Section 28

Robert Brown
357 In section 28, page 40, line 28, after <suspects> insert <with good reason>

Bill Aitken
Supported by: Robert Brown
106 In section 28, page 40, line 36, at end insert—

<(  ) In the case of knowledge or suspicion originating from information obtained by the person in the course of the person’s trade, profession, business or employment, this section applies only where the person’s experience or seniority in that trade, profession, business or employment makes it reasonable to assume that the person should be aware of any offence of the sort mentioned in subsection (1) that the other person has or may have committed.>

Kenny MacAskill
358 In section 28, page 40, line 39, leave out <derived> and insert <obtained>

Robert Brown
359 In section 28, page 41, line 1, after <constable> insert <or other specified public official>

Robert Brown
360 In section 28, page 41, line 20, at end insert—

<(  ) In subsection (3), “specified public official” means a person holding a public office specified in an order made by the Scottish Ministers.>

After section 28

Kenny MacAskill
107 After section 28, insert—
Genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes: UK residents

(1) The International Criminal Court (Scotland) Act 2001 (asp 13) is amended as follows.

(2) After section 8, insert—

"8A Meaning of “United Kingdom national” and “United Kingdom resident”

(1) In this Part—

“United Kingdom national” means—

(a) a British citizen, a British Overseas Territories citizen, a British National (Overseas) or a British Overseas citizen,

(b) a person who under the British Nationality Act 1981 (c.61) is a British subject, or

(c) a British protected person within the meaning of that Act,

“United Kingdom resident” means a person who is resident in the United Kingdom.

(2) To the extent that it would not otherwise be the case, the following individuals are to be treated for the purposes of this Part as being resident in the United Kingdom—

(a) an individual who has indefinite leave to remain in the United Kingdom,

(b) any other individual who has made an application for such leave (whether or not it has been determined) and who is in the United Kingdom,

(c) an individual who has leave to enter or remain in the United Kingdom for the purposes of work or study and who is in the United Kingdom,

(d) an individual who has made an asylum claim, or a human rights claim, which has been granted,

(e) any other individual who has made an asylum claim or a human rights claim (whether or not the claim has been determined) and who is in the United Kingdom,

(f) an individual named in an application for indefinite leave to remain, an asylum claim or a human rights claim as a dependant of the individual making the application or claim if—

   (i) the application or claim has been granted, or

   (ii) the named individual is in the United Kingdom (whether or not the application or claim has been determined),

(g) an individual who would be liable to removal or deportation from the United Kingdom but cannot be removed or deported because of section 6 of the Human Rights Act 1998 (c.42) or for practical reasons,

(h) an individual—

   (i) against whom a decision to make a deportation order under section 5(1) of the Immigration Act 1971 (c.77) by virtue of section 3(5)(a) of that Act (deportation conducive to the public good) has been made,
(ii) who has appealed against the decision to make the order (whether or not the appeal has been determined), and

(iii) who is in the United Kingdom,

(i) an individual who is an illegal entrant within the meaning of section 33(1) of the Immigration Act 1971 or who is liable to removal under section 10 of the Immigration and Asylum Act 1999 (c.33),

(j) an individual who is detained in lawful custody in the United Kingdom.

(3) When determining for the purposes of this Part whether any other individual is resident in the United Kingdom regard is to be had to all relevant considerations including—

(a) the periods during which the individual is, has been or intends to be in the United Kingdom,

(b) the purposes for which the individual is, has been or intends to be in the United Kingdom,

(c) whether the individual has family or other connections to the United Kingdom and the nature of those connections, and

(d) whether the individual has an interest in residential property located in the United Kingdom.

(4) In this section—

“asylum claim” means—

(a) a claim that it would be contrary to the United Kingdom’s obligations under the Refugee Convention for the claimant to be removed from, or required to leave, the United Kingdom,

(b) a claim that the claimant would face a real risk of serious harm if removed from the United Kingdom,

“Convention rights” means the rights identified as Convention rights by section 1 of the Human Rights Act 1998,

“detained in lawful custody” means—

(a) detained in pursuance of a sentence of imprisonment or detention, a sentence of custody for life or a detention and training order,

(b) remanded in or committed to custody by an order of a court,

(c) detained pursuant to an order under section 2 of the Colonial Prisoners Removal Act 1884 (c.31) or a warrant under section 1 or 4A of the Repatriation of Prisoners Act 1984 (c.47),

(d) detained under Part 3 of the Mental Health Act 1983 (c.20) or by virtue of an order under section 5 of the Criminal Procedure (Insanity) Act 1964 (c.84) or section 6 or 14 of the Criminal Appeal Act 1968 (c.19) (hospital orders etc.), detained by virtue of an order under Part 6 of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.46) (other than an order under section 60C) or a hospital direction under section 59A of that Act, and includes detention by virtue of the special restrictions set out in Part 10 of the Mental Health (Care and Treatment) (Scotland) Act 2003 (asp 13) to which a person is subject by virtue of an order under section 59 of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995,

(f) detained under Part 3 of the Mental Health (Northern Ireland) Order 1986 (SI 1986/595) or by virtue of an order under section 11 or 13(5A) of the Criminal Appeal (Northern Ireland) Act 1980 (c. 47),

“human rights claim” means a claim that to remove the claimant from, or to require the claimant to leave, the United Kingdom would be unlawful under section 6 of the Human Rights Act 1998 (public authority not to act contrary to Convention) as being incompatible with the person’s Convention rights,

“the Refugee Convention” means the Convention relating to the Status of Refugees done at Geneva on 28 July 1951 and the Protocol to the Convention,

“serious harm” has the meaning given by article 15 of Council Directive 2004/83/EC on minimum standards for the qualification and status of third country nationals or stateless persons as refugees or as persons who otherwise need international protection and the content of the protection granted.

(5) In this section, a reference to having leave to enter or remain in the United Kingdom is to be construed in accordance with the Immigration Act 1971.

(6) This section applies in relation to any offence under this Part (whether committed before or after the coming into force of this section).”.

(3) In section 28(1) (interpretation), the definitions of “United Kingdom national” and “United Kingdom resident” are repealed.

Kenny MacAskill

108 After section 28, insert—

<Genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes: retrospective application

After section 9 of the International Criminal Court (Scotland) Act 2001 (asp 13) insert—

“9A Retrospective application of certain offences

(1) Section 1 of this Act applies to acts committed on or after 1 January 1991.

(2) But that section does not apply to an act committed before 17 December 2001 which constitutes a crime against humanity or a war crime within article 8.2(b) or (e) unless, at the time the act was committed, it amounted in the circumstances to a criminal offence under international law.

(3) Section 2 of this Act applies to conduct engaged in on or after 1 January 1991.
(4) The references in subsections (1), (3) and (5) of that section to an offence include an act or conduct that would not constitute an offence but for this section.

(5) Any enactment or rule of law relating to an offence ancillary to a relevant offence applies—
   (a) to conduct engaged in on or after 1 January 1991, and
   (b) even if the act or conduct constituting the relevant offence would not constitute such an offence but for this section.

(6) But section 2 of this Act, and any enactment or rule of law relating to an offence ancillary to a relevant offence, do not apply to—
   (a) conduct engaged in before 17 December 2001, or
   (b) conduct engaged in on or after that date which was ancillary to an act or conduct that—
      (i) was committed or engaged in before that date, and
      (ii) would not constitute a relevant offence but for this section, unless, at the time the conduct was engaged in, it amounted in the circumstances to a criminal offence under international law.

(7) Section 5 of this Act, so far as it has effect in relation to relevant offences, applies—
   (a) to failures to exercise control of the kind mentioned in subsection (2) or (3) of that section which occurred on or after 1 January 1991, and
   (b) even if the act or conduct constituting the relevant offence would not constitute an offence but for this section.

(8) But section 5 of this Act, so far as it has effect in relation to relevant offences, does not apply to a failure to exercise control of the kind mentioned in subsection (2) or (3) of that section which occurred before 17 December 2001 unless, at the time it occurred, it amounted in the circumstances to a criminal offence under international law.

(9) In this section, “relevant offence” means an offence under section 1 or 2 of this Act or an offence ancillary to such an offence.

9B Provision supplemental to section 9A: modification of penalties

(1) This section applies in relation to—
   (a) an offence under section 1 of this Act on account of an act committed before 17 December 2001 constituting genocide, if at the time the act was committed it also amounted to an offence under section 1 of the Genocide Act 1969,
   (b) an offence under section 1 of this Act on account of an act committed before 1 September 2001 constituting a war crime, if at the time the act was committed it also amounted to an offence under section 1 of the Geneva Conventions Act 1957 (c.52) (grave breaches of the Conventions),
   (c) an offence ancillary to an offence within paragraph (a) or (b) above.
(2) Section 3(5) of this Act has effect in relation to such an offence as if for “30 years” there were substituted “14 years”.>

After section 31

Kenny MacAskill

After section 31, insert—

<Offensive weapons etc.

Offensive weapons etc.

(1) The Criminal Law (Consolidation) (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.39) is amended as follows.

(2) In section 47 (prohibition of the carrying of offensive weapons)—

(a) in subsection (1), the words from “without” to “him,” are repealed,

(b) after subsection (1), insert—

“(1A) It is a defence for a person charged with an offence under subsection (1) to show that the person had a reasonable excuse or lawful authority for having the weapon with the person in the public place.”, and

(c) for subsection (4), substitute—

“(4) In this section—

“offensive weapon” means any article—

(a) made or adapted for use for causing injury to a person, or

(b) intended, by the person having the article, for use for causing injury to a person by—

(i) the person having it, or

(ii) some other person,

“public place” means any place other than—

(a) domestic premises,

(b) school premises (within the meaning of section 49A(6)),

(c) a prison (within the meaning of section 49C(7)),

“domestic premises” means premises occupied as a private dwelling (including any stair, passage, garden, yard, garage, outhouse or other appurtenance of such premises which is not used in common by the occupants of more than one such dwelling).”.

(3) In section 49 (offence of having in public place article with blade or point)—

(a) in subsection (4), for the words “prove that he had good reason” substitute “show that the person had a reasonable excuse”,

(b) in subsection (5), for “prove” substitute “show”, and

(c) for subsection (7), substitute—

“(7) In this section, “public place” has the same meaning as in section 47(4).”.

(4) In section 49A (offence of having article with blade or point (or offensive weapon) on school premises)—
(a) in subsection (3), for the words “prove that he had good reason” substitute “show that the person had a reasonable excuse”, and
(b) in subsection (4), for “prove” substitute “show”.

(5) In section 49C(2) (offence of having offensive weapon etc. in prison), for the words “prove that he had good reason” substitute “show that the person had a reasonable excuse”.

(6) In section 50(4) (extension of constable’s power to stop, search and arrest without warrant), for “3” substitute “4”.

Johann Lamont

11 After section 31, insert—

<Offence of having article with blade or point (or offensive weapon) on workplace premises

(1) The Criminal Law (Consolidation) (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.39) is amended as follows.
(2) After section 49A, insert—

“49AA Offence of having article with blade or point (or offensive weapon) on workplace premises

(1) Any person who has an article to which section 49 of this Act applies with him on workplace premises is guilty of an offence.
(2) Any person who has an offensive weapon within the meaning of section 47 of this Act with him on workplace premises is guilty of an offence.
(3) It is a defence for a person charged with an offence under subsection (1) or (2) above to prove that he had good reason or lawful authority for having the article or weapon with him on the premises in question.
(4) Without prejudice to the generality of subsection (3) above, it is a defence for a person charged with an offence under subsection (1) or (2) above to prove that he had the article or weapon in question with him—

(a) for use at work (whether on the premises in question or otherwise),
(b) for religious reasons, or
(c) as part of any national costume.
(5) A person guilty of an offence—

(a) under subsection (1) above is liable—

(i) on summary conviction to imprisonment for a term not exceeding twelve months, or a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum, or both;
(ii) on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding four years, or a fine, or both;
(b) under subsection (2) above is liable—

(i) on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months, or a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum, or both;
(ii) on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding four years, or a fine, or both.

(6) In this section and section 49B of this Act, “workplace premises” means any premises (other than school premises) used for the purposes of an undertaking carried on by an employer and made available to any employee of the employer as a place of work; and includes—

(a) any part of those premises to which such an employee has access while at work;

(b) any premises (other than a public road or other public place within the meaning of section 49 of this Act)—

(i) which are a means of access to or egress from the place of work; or

(ii) where facilities are provided for use in connection with the place of work.”.

(3) In section 49B(1)—

(a) after “school premises” insert “or workplace premises”;

(b) after “49A” insert “or 49AA”.

(4) In section 50(3), for “or section 49A(1) or (2)” substitute “, 49A(1) or (2) or 49AA(1) or (2)”.

Rhoda Grant

402 After section 31, insert—

<Stalking

Offence of stalking

(1) A person (“A”) commits an offence, to be known as the offence of stalking, where A stalks another person (“B”).

(2) For the purposes of subsection (1), A stalks B where—

(a) A engages in a course of conduct,

(b) subsection (3) or (4) applies, and

(c) A’s course of conduct causes B to suffer—

(i) physical or psychological harm, or

(ii) apprehension or fear for B’s own safety or for the safety of any other person.

(3) This subsection applies where A engages in the course of conduct with the intention of causing such harm to B or of arousing such apprehension or fear in B.

(4) This subsection applies where A knows, or ought in all the circumstances to have known, that engaging in the course of conduct would be likely to cause such harm or arouse such apprehension or fear.

(5) It is a defence for a person charged with an offence under this section to show that the course of action—

(a) was authorised by virtue of any enactment or rule of law,
(b) was engaged in for the purpose of preventing or detecting crime, or
(c) was, in the particular circumstances, reasonable.

(6) In this section—

“conduct” includes (but is not limited to)—

(a) following B or any other person,
(b) contacting B or any other person by post, telephone, email, text message or any other method,
(c) publishing any statement or other material—
   (i) relating or purporting to relate to B or to any other person,
   (ii) purporting to originate from B or from any other person,
(d) tracing the use by B or by any other person of the internet, email or any other form of electronic communication,
(e) entering or loitering in the vicinity of—
   (i) the place of residence of B or of any other person,
   (ii) the place of work or business of B or of any other person,
   (iii) any place frequented by B or of any other person,
(f) interfering with any property in the possession of B or of any other person,
(g) giving offensive material to B or to any other person or leaving such material where it may be found by, given to or brought to the attention of B or any other person,
(h) keeping B or any other person under surveillance,
(i) acting in any other way that a reasonable person would expect would arouse apprehension or fear in B for B’s own safety or for the safety of any other person, and

“course of conduct” involves conduct on at least two occasions.

(7) A person convicted of the offence of stalking is liable—

(a) on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 5 years or to a fine or to both,
(b) on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 6 months or to a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum or to both.>

Robert Brown

402A As an amendment to amendment 402, line 21, after <crime,> insert—

<(( ) was engaged in as part of lawful and reasonable public protest or industrial action,)>

Section 34

Kenny MacAskill

361 In section 34, page 49, line 4, leave out <(and any sounds accompanying it)>
In section 34, page 49, line 5, leave out <(and any sounds accompanying them)>.

In section 34, page 49, line 7, at end insert—

<and reference may also be had to any sounds accompanying the image or the series of images.>

In section 34, page 49, line 31, after <images> insert—

<(i) any sounds accompanying the series of images,
(ii)>

In section 34, page 50, line 4, leave out from <“excluded” to <work> and insert <image is an “excluded image” if it is all or part of a classified work, and is so excluded from the time that an application for a classification certificate is received by the designated authority>.

In section 34, page 49, line 31, after <images> insert—

<(i) any sounds accompanying the series of images,
(ii)>

In section 34, page 50, line 18, after <images> insert—

<(i) any sounds accompanying the series of images,
(ii)>

In section 34, page 50, line 19, leave out <and section 51C>

In section 34, page 50, line 27, leave out <“extreme pornographic image” are> and insert <is>

In section 34, page 51, line 23, at end insert—

<( ) In this section “image” and “extreme pornographic image” are to be construed in accordance with section 51A.”.>

In Schedule 3 to the Sexual Offences Act 2003 (c.42) (sexual offences for the purposes of Part 2 of that Act), after paragraph 44 insert—

“44A An offence under section 51A of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 (c.45) (possession of extreme pornography) if—
(a) the offender—
   (i) was 18 or over, and
   (ii) is or has been sentenced in respect of the offence to imprisonment for a term of more than 12 months, and
(b) in imposing sentence, the court determines that it is appropriate that Part 2 of this Act should apply in relation to the offender.”.

After section 34

Kenny MacAskill

110 After section 34, insert—

Voyeurism: additional forms of conduct

(1) The Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009 (asp 9) is amended as follows.

(2) In section 9 (voyeurism)—
   (a) after subsection (4), insert—

   “(4A) The fourth thing is that A—
       (a) without another person (“B”) consenting, and
       (b) without any reasonable belief that B consents,

   operates equipment beneath B’s clothing with the intention of enabling A or another person (“C”), for a purpose mentioned in subsection (7), to observe B’s genitals or buttocks (whether exposed or covered with underwear) or the underwear covering B’s genitals or buttocks, in circumstances where the genitals, buttocks or underwear would not otherwise be visible.

(4B) The fifth thing is that A—
       (a) without another person (“B”) consenting, and
       (b) without any reasonable belief that B consents,

   records an image beneath B’s clothing of B’s genitals or buttocks (whether exposed or covered with underwear) or the underwear covering B’s genitals or buttocks, in circumstances where the genitals, buttocks or underwear would not otherwise be visible, with the intention that A or another person (“C”), for a purpose mentioned in subsection (7), will look at the image.”,

   (b) in subsection (5)—

   (i) for “fourth” substitute “sixth”, and
   (ii) for paragraph (b), substitute—

 “(b) constructs or adapts a structure or part of a structure,

   with the intention of enabling A or another person to do an act referred to in subsection (2), (3), (4), (4A) or (4B),”.

   (c) in subsection (7), for “and (4)” substitute “, (4), (4A) and (4B)”.

(3) In section 10(2) (interpretation of section 9), after “section 9(3)” insert “and (4A)”.

(4) In section 26 (voyeurism towards a young child)—
(a) after subsection (4), insert—

“(4A) The fourth thing is that A operates equipment beneath B’s clothing with the intention of enabling A or another person (“C”), for a purpose mentioned in subsection (7), to observe—

(a) B’s genitals or buttocks (whether exposed or covered with underwear), or

(b) the underwear covering B’s genitals or buttocks,

in circumstances where the genitals, buttocks or underwear would not otherwise be visible.

(4B) The fifth thing is that A records an image beneath B’s clothing of—

(a) B’s genitals or buttocks (whether exposed or covered with underwear), or

(b) the underwear covering B’s genitals or buttocks,

in circumstances where the genitals, buttocks or underwear would not otherwise be visible, with the intention that A or another person (“C”), for a purpose mentioned in subsection (7), will look at the image.”,

(b) in subsection (5)—

(i) for “fourth” substitute “sixth”, and

(ii) for paragraph (b), substitute—

“(b) constructs or adapts a structure or part of a structure, with the intention of enabling A or another person to do an act referred to in subsection (2), (3), (4), (4A) or (4B).”,

c) in subsection (7), for “and (4)” substitute “, (4), (4A) and (4B)”, and
d) in subsection (8)—

(i) after “section 9(3)” insert “, (4A)”, and

(ii) after “subsections (3)” insert “, (4A)”.

(5) In section 36 (voyeurism towards an older child)—

(a) after subsection (4), insert—

“(4A) The fourth thing is that A operates equipment beneath B’s clothing with the intention of enabling A or another person (“C”), for a purpose mentioned in subsection (7), to observe—

(a) B’s genitals or buttocks (whether exposed or covered with underwear), or

(b) the underwear covering B’s genitals or buttocks,

in circumstances where the genitals, buttocks or underwear would not otherwise be visible.

(4B) The fifth thing is that A records an image beneath B’s clothing of—

(a) B’s genitals or buttocks (whether exposed or covered with underwear), or

(b) the underwear covering B’s genitals or buttocks,
in circumstances where the genitals, buttocks or underwear would not otherwise be visible, with the intention that A or another person (“C”), for a purpose mentioned in subsection (7), will look at the image.”,

(b) in subsection (5)—
   (i) for “fourth” substitute “sixth”, and
   (ii) for paragraph (b), substitute—
       “(b) constructs or adapts a structure or part of a structure, with the intention of enabling A or another person to do an act referred to in subsection (2), (3), (4), (4A) or (4B).”,

(c) in subsection (7), for “and (4)” substitute “, (4), (4A) and (4B)”, and

(d) in subsection (8)—
   (i) after “section 9(3)” insert “, (4A)”, and
   (ii) after “subsections (3)” insert “, (4A)”.

Kenny MacAskill

111 After section 34, insert—

<Sexual offences: defences in relation to offences against older children

In section 39 of the Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009 (asp 9) (defences in relation to offences against older children), in subsection (4)(c), after “section 30(2)(d)” insert “or (e)”.

Kenny MacAskill

370 After section 34, insert—

<Penalties for offences of brothel-keeping and living on the earnings of prostitution

(1) The Criminal Law (Consolidation) (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.39) is amended as follows.

(2) In section 11 (trading in prostitution and brothel-keeping)—
   (a) in subsection (1), for the words from “liable” to the end substitute “guilty of an offence and liable to the penalties set out in subsection (1A)”,
   (b) after that subsection insert—
       “(1A) A person—
       (a) guilty of the offence set out in subsection (1)(a) is liable—
           (i) on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding seven years, to a fine, or to both,
           (ii) on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 12 months, to a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum, or to both,
       (b) guilty of the offence set out in subsection (1)(b) is liable—
           (i) on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years,
(ii) on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 12 months.

(c) in subsection (4), for “subsection (1)” substitute “subsection (1A)(a)”, and

(d) for subsection (6) substitute—

“(6) A person guilty of an offence under subsection (5) is liable—

(a) on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding seven years, to a fine, or to both,

(b) on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 12 months, to a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum, or to both.”.

(3) In section 13(9) (living on earnings of another from male prostitution), for paragraphs (a) and (b) substitute—

“(a) on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding seven years, to a fine, or to both,

(b) on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 12 months, to a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum, or to both.”.

Trish Godman

8 After section 34, insert—

<Offences of engaging in, advertising and facilitating paid-for sexual activities

(1) The Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009 (asp 9) is amended as follows.

(2) After section 11 insert—

“Engaging in, advertising and facilitating paid-for sexual activities

11A Engaging in a paid-for sexual activity

(1) A person (“A”) commits an offence, to be known as the offence of engaging in a paid-for sexual activity, if A knowingly engages in a paid-for sexual activity with another person (“B”).

(2) A sexual activity is paid for where B engages in that activity in exchange for payment.

(3) For the purposes of subsection (2), it is immaterial whether the payment is made—

(a) by A or by another person, or

(b) to B or to another person on B’s behalf.

11B Advertising paid-for sexual activities

A person commits an offence, to be known as the offence of advertising paid-for sexual activities, if that person knowingly advertises, by any means, the availability of sexual activities that can be engaged in for payment.

11C Facilitating engagement in a paid-for sexual activity

(1) A person (“A”) commits an offence, to be known as the offence of facilitating engagement in a paid-for sexual activity, if A knowingly facilitates the engagement of another person (“B”) in a paid-for sexual activity with another person (“C”).

20
(2) A sexual activity is paid for where C engages in that activity in exchange for payment.

(3) For the purposes of subsection (2), it is immaterial whether the payment is made—
   (a) by A, by B or by another person, or
   (b) to C or to another person on C’s behalf.

(4) For the purposes of subsection (1), facilitating the engagement by B in a paid-for sexual activity includes (but is not limited to)—
   (a) arranging B’s engagement in the activity,
   (b) making payment to C or to another person on C’s behalf,
   (c) making available premises in which the activity takes place, or
   (d) transporting B, or arranging transport for B, to where the activity takes place.

11D Arrest for offences under sections 11A to 11C

(1) Where a constable reasonably believes that a person is committing or has committed an offence under section 11A, 11B or 11C, the constable may arrest the person without warrant.

(2) Subsection (1) is without prejudice to any power of arrest conferred by law apart from that subsection.”.

(3) In the table in schedule 2 insert at the appropriate place—

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Activity</th>
<th>Section</th>
<th>Fine Description</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>“Engaging in a paid-for sexual activity”</td>
<td>Section 11A</td>
<td>A fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Advertising paid-for sexual activities</td>
<td>Section 11B</td>
<td>A fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Facilitating engagement in a paid-for sexual activity</td>
<td>Section 11C</td>
<td>A fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Margo MacDonald

8A As an amendment to amendment 8, line 15, at end insert—

<11AA Causing alarm etc. by engaging in a paid-for sexual activity

In the circumstances described in section 11A(1), A and B commit an offence, to be known as the offence of causing alarm etc. by engaging in a paid-for sexual activity, if their engaging in the activity that constitutes the offence under that section causes alarm to another person (“C”), endangers C or creates a nuisance for C.>
Margo MacDonald

8B As an amendment to amendment 8, line 15, at end insert—

<11AB Profiting from coerced paid-for sexual activities

A person commits an offence, to be known as the offence of profiting from coerced paid-for sexual activities, if that person knowingly secures a direct benefit (whether financial or otherwise) from a paid-for sexual activity involving a person whose engagement in that activity has been secured as a result of coercion.>

Margo MacDonald

8C As an amendment to amendment 8, line 40, after <11A,> insert <11AA, 11AB>

Margo MacDonald

8D As an amendment to amendment 8, line 48, at end insert—

| “Causing alarm etc. by engaging in a paid-for sexual activity” | Section 11AA | A fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale |
| Profiting from coerced paid-for sexual activities | Section 11AB | A fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale |

Nigel Don

461 After section 34, insert—

<Offence of paying for sexual services of a prostitute subjected to force etc.

(1) The Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009 (asp 9) is amended as follows.

(2) After section 11 insert—

“Paying for sexual services of a prostitute subjected to force etc.

11E Paying for sexual services of a prostitute subjected to force etc.

(1) A person (“A”) commits an offence, to be known as the offence of paying for sexual services of a coerced prostitute, if—

(a) A makes or promises payment for the sexual services of a prostitute (“B”),

(b) a third person (“C”) has engaged in exploitative conduct of a kind likely to induce or encourage B to provide the sexual services for which A has made or promised payment, and

(c) C engaged in that conduct for or in the expectation of gain for C or another person (apart from A or B).

(2) The following are irrelevant—
(a) where in the world the sexual services are to be provided and whether those services are provided,
(b) whether A is, or ought to be, aware that C has engaged in exploitative conduct.

(3) C engages in exploitative conduct if—
(a) C uses force, threats (whether or not relating to violence) or any other form of coercion, or
(b) C practises any form of deception.”.

(3) In the table in schedule 2 insert at the appropriate place—

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>“Paying for sexual services of a coerced prostitute”</th>
<th>Section 11E</th>
<th>A fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale</th>
</tr>
</thead>
</table>

Section 35

Kenny MacAskill

371 In section 35, page 51, line 30, at end insert—

<( ) after subsection (1) insert—

“(1A) A person to whom subsection (6) applies commits an offence if the person arranges or facilitates—

(a) the arrival in or the entry into a country (other than the United Kingdom), or travel there (whether or not following such arrival or entry) by, an individual and—

(i) intends to exercise control over prostitution by the individual or to involve the individual in the making or production of obscene or indecent material; or

(ii) believes that another person is likely to exercise such control or so to involve the individual, there or elsewhere; or

(b) the departure from a country (other than the United Kingdom) of an individual and—

(i) intends to exercise such control or so to involve the individual; or

(ii) believes that another person is likely to exercise such control or so to involve the individual, outwith the country.”.>
Kenny MacAskill

373 In section 35, page 51, line 32, leave out <Subsection (1) applies> and insert <Subsections (1) and (1A) apply>

Kenny MacAskill

374 In section 35, page 51, line 34, leave out <proceeded against, indicted> and insert <prosecuted>

Kenny MacAskill

375 In section 35, page 51, line 40, after <on> insert <the>

Kenny MacAskill

376 In section 35, page 52, leave out line 1 and insert—

<(  ) in subsection (6)—

(i) the word “and” immediately following paragraph (e) is repealed, and

(ii) after paragraph (f) insert—

“(g) a person who at the time of the offence was habitually resident in Scotland, and

(h) a body incorporated under the law of a part of the United Kingdom.”.

Kenny MacAskill

377 In section 35, page 52, line 2, leave out subsection (2) and insert—

<(  ) In section 4 of the Asylum and Immigration (Treatment of Claimants, etc.) Act 2004 (c.19) (trafficking people for exploitation)—

(a) in subsection (1), after “arrival in” insert “or the entry into”,

(b) in subsection (2), the words from “in” where it first occurs to “committed” are repealed,

(c) after subsection (3) insert—

“(3A) A person to whom section 5(2) applies commits an offence if—

(a) in relation to an individual (the “passenger”), he arranges or facilitates—

(i) the arrival in or the entry into a country other than the United Kingdom of the passenger,

(ii) travel by the passenger within a country other than the United Kingdom,

(iii) the departure of the passenger from a country other than the United Kingdom, and

(b) he—

(i) intends to exploit the passenger, or

(ii) believes that another person is likely to exploit the passenger,

(wherever the exploitation is to occur).”.

24
(d) in subsection (4)—
  (i) in paragraph (b), the words from “as a result” to “Act 2004,” become sub-paragraph (i),
  (ii) immediately following that sub-paragraph insert “or—
      (ii) which, were it done in Scotland, would constitute an offence mentioned in sub-paragraph (i),”,
  (iii) after paragraph (b) insert—
      “(ba) he is encouraged, required or expected to do anything in connection with the removal of any part of a human body—
      (i) as a result of which he or another person would commit an offence under the law of Scotland (other than an offence mentioned in paragraph (b)(i)), or
      (ii) which, were it done in Scotland, would constitute such an offence,”, and
  (iv) for paragraph (d) substitute—
      “(d) another person uses or attempts to use him for any purpose within sub-paragraph (i), (ii) or (iii) of paragraph (c), having chosen him for that purpose on the grounds that—
      (i) he is mentally or physically ill or disabled, he is young, or he has a family relationship with a person, and
      (ii) a person without the illness, disability, youth or family relationship would be likely to refuse to be used for that purpose.”.

( ) In section 5 of that Act—
  (a) in subsection (1), for the words from “(3)” to the end substitute “(3A) of section 4
      apply to anything done in or outwith the United Kingdom.”,
  (b) in subsection (2)—
      (i) the word “and” immediately following paragraph (e) is repealed, and
      (ii) after paragraph (f) insert—
      “(g) a person who at the time of the offence was habitually resident in Scotland, and
      (h) a body incorporated under the law of a part of the United Kingdom.”,
  (c) after subsection (2) insert—
      “(2A) A person may be prosecuted, tried and punished for any offence to which section 4 applies—
      (a) in any sheriff court district in which the person is apprehended or is in custody, or
      (b) in such sheriff court district as the Lord Advocate may determine, as if the offence had been committed in that district (and the offence is, for all purposes incidental to or consequential on the trial or punishment, to be deemed to have been committed in that district).
(2B) In subsection (2A), “sheriff court district” is to be construed in accordance with section 307(1) of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.46) (interpretation).”

After section 35

Kenny MacAskill

112 After section 35, insert—

<Slavery, servitude and forced or compulsory labour>

(1) A person (“A”) commits an offence if—

(a) A holds another person in slavery or servitude and the circumstances are such that A knows or ought to know that the person is so held, or

(b) A requires another person to perform forced or compulsory labour and the circumstances are such that A knows or ought to know that the person is being required to perform such labour.

(2) In subsection (1) the references to holding a person in slavery or servitude or requiring a person to perform forced or compulsory labour are to be construed in accordance with Article 4 of the Human Rights Convention (which prohibits a person from being held in slavery or servitude or being required to perform forced or compulsory labour).

(3) A person guilty of an offence under this section is liable—

(a) on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 14 years, or to a fine, or to both,

(b) on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 12 months, or to a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum, or to both.

(4) In this section “Human Rights Convention” means the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms agreed by the Council of Europe at Rome on 4 November 1950.>

After section 36

Kenny MacAskill

113 After section 36, insert—

<Articles for use in fraud>

(1) A person (“A”) commits an offence if A has in A’s possession or under A’s control an article for use in, or in connection with, the commission of fraud.

(2) A person guilty of an offence under subsection (1) is liable—

(a) on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 12 months or to a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum, or to both,

(b) on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 5 years or to a fine, or to both.

(3) A person commits an offence if the person makes, adapts, supplies or offers to supply an article—
(a) knowing that the article is designed or adapted for use in, or in connection with, the commission of fraud, or
(b) intending the article to be used in, or in connection with, the commission of fraud.

(4) A person guilty of an offence under subsection (3) is liable—
(a) on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 12 months or to a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum, or to both,
(b) on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 10 years or to a fine, or to both.

(5) In this section, “article” includes a program or data held in electronic form.

After section 37

Kenny MacAskill

114 After section 37, insert—

<Abolition of offences of sedition and leasing-making

Abolition of offences of sedition and leasing-making
The following offences under the common law of Scotland are abolished—
(a) the offence of sedition,
(b) the offence of leasing-making.>

Kenny MacAskill

378 After section 37, insert—

<Threatening, alarming or distressing behaviour

Threatening, alarming or distressing behaviour
(1) A person (“A”) commits an offence if—
(a) A behaves in such a manner that a reasonable person would be likely to—
   (i) fear for the safety of any person on account of the behaviour, or
   (ii) be alarmed or distressed by the behaviour, and
(b) the condition in subsection (2) is satisfied.
(2) That condition is that A—
(a) intends by the behaviour to cause fear, alarm or distress, or
(b) is reckless as to whether the behaviour would cause fear, alarm or distress.
(3) It does not matter—
(a) whether A’s behaviour is directed at anyone in particular,
(b) if it is directed at a particular person, whether that person is aware of the behaviour, or
(c) whether A’s behaviour—
   (i) actually causes anyone fear, alarm or distress, or
(ii) takes place in public or private.

(4) Subsection (1) applies to—

(a) behaviour of any kind including, in particular, things said or otherwise communicated as well as things done,

(b) behaviour consisting of—

(i) a single act, or

(ii) a course of conduct.

(5) The reference in subsection (1)(a)(i) to fear for a person’s safety is to fear that the person’s life could be endangered or that the person’s physical or psychological well-being could be harmed.

(6) A person guilty of an offence under subsection (1) is liable—

(a) on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 5 years, or to a fine, or to both, or

(b) on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 12 months, or to a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum, or to both.

Bill Aitken

115 After section 37, insert—

<PART

DOUBLE JEOPARDY

Rule against double jeopardy

(1) It is not competent to charge a person who, whether on indictment or complaint (the “original” indictment or complaint), has been convicted or acquitted of an offence—

(a) with an offence of which it would have been competent to convict the person on the original indictment or complaint, or

(b) with an offence which—

(i) arises out of the same, or largely the same, acts or omissions as gave rise to the original indictment or complaint, and

(ii) is an aggravated way of committing the offence of which the person was convicted or acquitted.

(2) Whether the conviction or acquittal was before or after the coming into force of this section is, for the purposes of the section, immaterial.

(3) Subsection (1) is subject to sections (Tainted acquittals), (Admission subsequent to acquittal) and (New evidence) and is without prejudice to sections 118(1)(c) (disposal of appeals), 119 (provision where High Court authorises new prosecution), 183(1)(d) (stated case: disposal of appeal) and 185 (authorisation of new prosecution) of the 1995 Act.

(4) In this Part, reference to a person being convicted of an offence is—

(a) to the person being found guilty of the offence, or

(b) to the prosecutor accepting the person’s plea of guilty to the offence, in either case whether or not sentence is passed.>
after section 37, insert—

Plea in bar of trial

(1) A person charged with an offence—
- whether on indictment or complaint, but
- other than by virtue of a section mentioned in section (Rule against double jeopardy),(3), may aver, as a plea in bar of trial, that the offence arises out of the same, or largely the same, acts or omissions as have already given rise to the person being tried for, and convicted or acquitted of, an offence (the “original offence”).

(2) Whether the conviction or acquittal was before or after the coming into force of this section is, for the purposes of the section, immaterial.

(3) If the court is satisfied, on a balance of probabilities, as to the truth of the person’s averment, the plea is to be sustained unless the prosecutor persuades the court that there is some special reason why the case should proceed to trial (as for example, but without prejudice to the generality of this subsection, where trials were separated on the application of, or with the consent of, the person).

(4) Subsections (1) to (3) apply irrespective of where the person was tried; but this subsection is subject to subsection (5).

(5) Where the person was tried outwith the United Kingdom the court may disregard a conviction or acquittal if—
- it determines that it is in the interests of justice to do so, and
- to permit the case to proceed to trial would not be inconsistent with the obligations of the United Kingdom under Article 54 of the Schengen Convention (that is to say, of the Convention of 19th June 1990 implementing the Schengen Agreement of 14th June 1985).

(6) In making a determination in pursuance of subsection (5)(a), the court is in particular to have regard to—
- whether the purpose of bringing the person to trial in the foreign country appears to have been to assist the person to evade justice,
- whether the proceedings in the foreign country appear to have been conducted—
  - independently and impartially, and
  - in a manner consistent with dealing justly with the person,
- whether such sentence (or other disposal) as might be imposed in the foreign country for an offence of the kind for which the person has been acquitted or convicted is commensurate with any that might be imposed for an offence of that kind in Scotland, and
- the extent to which the acts or omissions can be considered to have occurred in, respectively—
  - Scotland,
  - the foreign country.
Eventual death of injured person

(1) This section applies where—
   (a) a person (“A”) sustains physical injuries,
   (b) another person (“B”) is, whether on indictment or complaint, acquitted or convicted of an offence (“offence Y”) which comprises the infliction of the injuries, and
   (c) after the acquittal or conviction A dies, ostensibly from the injuries.

(2) Whether the conviction or acquittal was before or after the coming into force of this section is, for the purposes of the section, immaterial.

(3) If B was acquitted of offence Y (and was not then convicted of a different offence, “offence Z”, which comprised the infliction of the injuries) it is not competent to charge B with—
   (a) the murder of A,
   (b) culpable homicide as respects A, or
   (c) any other offence comprising causing A’s death.

(4) If B was convicted of offence Y (or of offence Z), then—
   (a) for the purposes of sections (Rule against double jeopardy) and (Plea in bar of trial) the offences mentioned in paragraphs (a) to (c) of subsection (3) are not to be treated as offences arising out of the same, or largely the same, acts or omissions as the offence of which B was convicted, but
   (b) on B being acquitted or convicted of any of the offences mentioned in those paragraphs, the court may, on the motion of B and after hearing the parties on that motion, quash B’s conviction of offence Y (or offence Z) where satisfied that it is appropriate to do so.

(5) A party may appeal to the High Court against the granting or refusing of a motion under subsection (4)(b).

Tainted acquittals

(1) A person who, whether on indictment or complaint (the “original” indictment or complaint), has been acquitted of an offence (the “original offence”) may, provided that the conditions mentioned in subsection (3) are satisfied, be charged with, and prosecuted anew for—
   (a) the original offence, or
   (b) an offence arising out of the same, or largely the same, acts or omissions as gave rise to the original offence.

(2) Whether the acquittal was before or after the coming into force of this section is, for the purposes of the section, immaterial.

(3) The conditions are—
(a) either—

(i) that the acquitted person or some other person has (or the acquitted person and some other person have) been convicted of an offence against the course of justice, being an offence in connection with proceedings on the original indictment or complaint, or

(ii) that on the application of the Lord Advocate the High Court has concluded on a balance of probabilities that the acquitted person or some other person has (or the acquitted person and some other person have) committed such an offence against the course of justice, and

(b) that on the application of the Lord Advocate the High Court has—

(i) set aside the acquittal, and

(ii) granted authority to bring, by virtue of this section, a new prosecution.

(4) On making an application under subsection (3), the Lord Advocate is to send a copy of that application to the acquitted person.

(5) The acquitted person is entitled to appear or to be represented at any hearing of the application.

(6) For the purpose of—

(a) hearing and coming to a conclusion on any application under subsection (3)(a)(ii), or

(b) hearing and determining any application under subsection (3)(b),

three of the Lords Commissioners of Justiciary are a quorum of the Court (the application being determined by majority vote of those sitting).

(7) The decision of the Court on the application is final.

(8) Subsection (7) is without prejudice to any power of those sitting to remit the application to a differently constituted sitting of the Court (as for example to the whole Court sitting together).

(9) The Court may appoint counsel to act as amicus curiae at the hearing in question.

(10) Subsections (11) and (12) apply in a case where (or as the case may be where the Court, in coming to a conclusion under subsection (3)(a)(ii), is satisfied on a balance of probabilities that) the offence against the course of justice consisted of or included interference with a juror or with the trial judge.

(11) An acquittal is to be set aside under subsection (3)(b)(i) if the Court is unable to conclude that the interference had no effect on the outcome of the proceedings on the original indictment or complaint.

(12) But it is not to be so set aside if in the course of the trial, the interference (being interference with a juror and not with the trial judge) became known to the trial judge, who then allowed the trial to proceed to its conclusion.

(13) Subsection (14) applies in a case other than is mentioned in subsection (10).

(14) An acquittal is not to be set aside under subsection (3)(b)(i) unless the Court is satisfied on a balance of probabilities—

(a) that the offence led—

(i) to the withholding of evidence which, had it been given, would have been, or
(ii) to the giving of false evidence which was, evidence capable of being regarded as credible and reliable by a reasonable jury, and

(b) that the withholding, or as the case may be the giving, of the evidence was likely to have had a material effect on the outcome of the proceedings on the original indictment or complaint.

(15) And an acquittal is not to be set aside under subsection (3)(b)(i), whether by virtue of subsections (10) to (12) or by virtue of subsections (13) and (14), if the court considers that setting it aside would be contrary to the interests of justice.

(16) In this section, the expression “offence against the course of justice”—

(a) means an offence of perverting, or of attempting to pervert, the course of justice (by whatever means and however the offence is described), and

(b) without prejudice to the generality of paragraph (a), includes—

(i) an offence under section 45(1) of the Criminal Law (Consolidation) (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.39) (aiding, abetting, counselling, procuring or suborning the commission of an offence under section 44 of that Act),

(ii) the crime of subornation of perjury, and

(iii) the crime of bribery.

(17) But the expression does not include—

(a) the crime of perjury, or

(b) an offence under section 44(1) of that Act (statement on oath which is false or which the person making it does not believe to be true).

Bill Aitken

After section 37, insert—

<Further provision as regards prosecution by virtue of section (Tainted acquittals)

(1) A prosecution may be brought by virtue of section (Tainted acquittals) notwithstanding that any time limit for the commencement of such proceedings has elapsed.

(2) In proceedings in a prosecution brought by virtue of section (Tainted acquittals) it is competent for either party to lead evidence which it was competent for that party to lead in the earlier proceedings.

(3) But the indictment or complaint in the prosecution is to identify any matters as respects which the prosecutor intends to lead evidence by virtue of subsection (2) (being matters as respects which it would not have been competent to lead evidence but for that subsection).

(4) On granting authority under section (Tainted acquittals)(3)(b)(ii) to bring a new prosecution, the High Court may, after giving the parties an opportunity of being heard, order the detention of the accused person in custody or admit that person to bail.

(5) In—

(a) solemn proceedings, section 65(4)(aa) and (b) and (4A) to (9), and

(b) summary proceedings, section 147,
of the 1995 Act (prevention of delay in trials) applies to an accused person who is detained under subsection (4) as it applies to an accused person detained by virtue of being committed until liberated in due course of law.>

Bill Aitken

120 After section 37, insert—

<Admission subsequent to acquittal

(1) A person who, whether on indictment or complaint (the “original” indictment or complaint), has been acquitted of an offence but subsequently admits to committing it may, provided that the condition mentioned in subsection (3) is satisfied, be charged with, and prosecuted anew for, the offence.

(2) Whether the acquittal was before or after the coming into force of this section is, for the purposes of the section, immaterial.

(3) The condition is that on the application of the Lord Advocate the High Court has—

(a) set aside the acquittal, and

(b) granted authority to bring, by virtue of this section, a new prosecution.

(4) On making an application under subsection (3), the Lord Advocate is to send a copy of that application to the acquitted person.

(5) The acquitted person is entitled to appear or to be represented at any hearing of the application.

(6) For the purpose of hearing and determining the application, three of the Lords Commissioners of Justiciary are a quorum of the Court (the application being determined by majority vote of those sitting).

(7) An acquittal is not to be set aside under subsection (3)(a) unless the Court is satisfied—

(a) on a balance of probabilities, that subsequent to the acquittal the person credibly admitted having committed the offence, and

(b) that evidence is available sufficient to corroborate the admission.

(8) Even if the Court is satisfied as is mentioned in subsection (7), it is not to set aside the acquittal if it considers that to do so would be contrary to the interests of justice.>

Robert Brown

120A As an amendment to amendment 120, line 15, at end insert—

<( ) Before hearing an application under subsection (3), the Court is to order that no publicity be given to the application, or to any document prepared in connection with the application, until—

(a) the application is refused,

(b) a final decision has been made not to bring, or to discontinue, a new prosecution,
or

(c) the new trial is concluded.>

Bill Aitken

121 After section 37, insert—
<Further provision as regards prosecution by virtue of section (Admission subsequent to acquittal)

(1) No sentence may be passed on conviction in a new prosecution brought by virtue of section (Admission subsequent to acquittal) which could not have been passed under the proceedings on the original indictment or complaint (“the earlier proceedings”).

(2) A new prosecution may be brought by virtue of section (Admission subsequent to acquittal) notwithstanding that any time limit, other than the time limit mentioned in subsection (3), for the commencement of such proceedings has elapsed.

(3) Proceedings in a new prosecution brought by virtue of section (Admission subsequent to acquittal) are to be commenced within 2 months after the date on which authority to bring the prosecution was granted.

(4) In proceedings in a new prosecution brought by virtue of section (Admission subsequent to acquittal) it is competent for either party to lead evidence which it was competent for that party to lead in the earlier proceedings.

(5) But the indictment or complaint in the new prosecution is to identify any matters as respects which the prosecutor intends to lead evidence by virtue of subsection (4) (being matters as respects which it would not have been competent to lead evidence but for that subsection).

(6) For the purposes of subsection (3), proceedings are deemed commenced—

(a) in a case where a warrant to apprehend the accused is granted—

(i) on the date on which the warrant is executed, or

(ii) if it is executed without unreasonable delay, on the date on which it is granted, and

(b) in any other case, on the date on which the accused is cited.

(7) Where the 2 months mentioned in subsection (3) elapse and no new prosecution has been brought under this section, the order under section (Admission subsequent to acquittal)(3)(a) setting aside the acquittal has the effect, for all purposes, of an acquittal.

(8) On granting authority under section (Admission subsequent to acquittal)(3)(b) to bring a new prosecution, the High Court may, after giving the parties an opportunity of being heard, order the detention of the accused person in custody or admit that person to bail.

(9) In—

(a) solemn proceedings, section 65(4)(aa) and (b) and (4A) to (9), and

(b) summary proceedings, section 147,

of the 1995 Act (prevention of delay in trials) applies to an accused person who is detained under subsection (8) as it applies to an accused person detained by virtue of being committed until liberated in due course of law.

(10) It is immaterial, for the purposes of this section, whether the acquittal was before or after the coming into force of the section.>

Bill Aitken

122 After section 37, insert—
<New evidence

(1) A person who has been acquitted, after the coming into force of this section (or on the day on which it comes into force), of an offence may—

(a) if there is new evidence that the person committed the offence, and

(b) the conditions mentioned in subsection (2) are satisfied,

be charged with, and prosecuted for, the offence anew.

(2) The conditions are—

(a) that the person’s acquittal was of an offence mentioned in subsection (9), and

(b) that on the application of the Lord Advocate the High Court has—

(i) set aside the acquittal, and

(ii) granted authority to bring, by virtue of this section, a new prosecution.

(3) The setting aside of the acquittal and the granting of such authority may, under subsection (2)(b), be applied for on one occasion only.

(4) On making an application under that subsection, the Lord Advocate is to send a copy of the application to the acquitted person.

(5) The acquitted person is entitled to appear or to be represented at any hearing of the application.

(6) For the purpose of hearing and determining the application under subsection (2)(b),
three of the Lords Commissioners of Justiciary are a quorum of the Court (the application being determined by majority vote of those sitting).

(7) An acquittal is not to be set aside under subsection (2)(b)(i) unless the Court is satisfied that—

(a) the case against the accused is strengthened substantially by the new evidence,

(b) the new evidence is evidence which was not available, and could not with the exercise of reasonable diligence have been made available, at the trial in respect of the original offence, and

(c) on the new evidence and the evidence which was led at that trial it is highly likely that a reasonable jury properly instructed would have convicted the person of the offence.

(8) Even if the Court is satisfied as is mentioned in subsection (7), it is not to set aside the acquittal if it considers that to do so would be contrary to the interests of justice.

(9) The offences are—

(a) murder,

(b) at common law, rape, and

(c) an offence under either section 1 (rape) or section 18 (rape of a young child) of the Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009 (asp 9).

(10) The Scottish Ministers may by order amend subsection (9) so as to add further offences to those for the time being mentioned in that subsection.

(11) But subsection (1) does not apply as respects a person’s acquittal of an offence so added if the date of acquittal is earlier than that on which the addition is effected.>
<Further provision as regards prosecution by virtue of section (New evidence)>

(1) No sentence may be passed on conviction in a new prosecution brought by virtue of section (New evidence) which could not have been passed under the indictment on the trial of which the person was acquitted of the offence in question.

(2) A new prosecution may be brought by virtue of section (New evidence) notwithstanding that any time limit for the commencement of such proceedings, other than the time limit mentioned in subsection (3), has elapsed.

(3) Proceedings in a new prosecution brought by virtue of section (New evidence) are to be commenced within 2 months after the date on which authority to bring the prosecution was granted.

(4) In proceedings in a new prosecution brought by virtue of section (New evidence) it is competent for either party to lead evidence which it was competent for that party to lead in the earlier proceedings.

(5) But the indictment in the new prosecution is to identify any matters as respects which the prosecutor intends to lead evidence by virtue of subsection (4) (being matters as respects which it would not have been competent to lead evidence but for that subsection).

(6) For the purposes of subsection (3), proceedings are deemed commenced—

(a) in a case where a warrant to apprehend the accused is granted—

(i) on the date on which the warrant is executed, or

(ii) if it is executed without unreasonable delay, on the date on which it is granted, and

(b) in any other case, on the date on which the accused is cited.

(7) Where the 2 months mentioned in subsection (3) elapse and no new prosecution has been brought under this section, the order under section (New evidence)(2)(b)(i) setting aside the acquittal has the effect, for all purposes, of an acquittal.

(8) On granting authority under section (New evidence)(2)(b)(ii) to bring a new prosecution, the High Court is, after giving the parties an opportunity of being heard, to order the detention of the accused person in custody or to admit that person to bail.

(9) Subsections (4)(aa) and (b) and (4A) to (9) of section 65 of the 1995 Act (prevention of delay in trials) apply to an accused person who is detained under subsection (8) as they apply to an accused person detained by virtue of being committed until liberated in due course of law.>

<Nullity of proceedings on previous indictment or complaint>

(1) Subsection (3) applies where—

(a) a person has, whether on indictment or complaint—

(i) been charged with, and
(ii) acquitted or convicted of, an offence, and

(b) the conditions mentioned in subsection (4) are satisfied.

(2) Whether the conviction or acquittal was before or after the coming into force of this section is, for the purposes of the section, immaterial.

(3) The person may be charged with, and prosecuted anew for, the offence.

(4) The conditions are that, on the application of the prosecutor and after hearing the parties, the High Court is satisfied—

(a) that the proceedings on the indictment or complaint were a nullity, and

(b) that it would not be contrary to the interests of justice to proceed as mentioned in subsection (3).

Bill Aitken

125 After section 37, insert—

Amendment of Schedule 1 to the Contempt of Court Act 1981

(1) Schedule 1 to the Contempt of Court Act 1981 (c.49) (times when proceedings are active for the purposes of section 2 of that Act) is amended as follows.

(2) After paragraph 1 (the expressions “criminal proceedings” and “appellate proceedings”), there is inserted—

“1A Proceedings under sections (Plea in bar of trial) to (Nullity of proceedings on previous indictment or complaint) of the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Act 2010 (asp 00) are criminal proceedings (and are not appellate proceedings) for the purposes of this Schedule.”.

(3) In paragraph 4 (initial steps of criminal proceedings), at the end there is added—

“(f) the making of an application under section (Tainted acquittals)(3)(a)(ii) or (b) (tainted acquittals), (Admission subsequent to acquittal)(3) (admission subsequent to acquittal) or (New evidence)(2)(b) (new evidence) of the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Act 2010 (asp 00).”.

(4) In paragraph 5 (conclusion of criminal proceedings), at the end there is added—

“(d) where the initial steps of the proceedings are as mentioned in paragraph 4(f)—

(i) by refusal of the application,

(ii) if the application is granted and within 2 months thereafter a new prosecution is brought, by acquittal, or as the case may be by sentence, in the new prosecution.”.

(5) In paragraph 7 (discontinuance of proceedings), at the end there is added—

“(d) where the initial steps of the proceedings are as mentioned in paragraph 4(f) and the application is granted, if no new prosecution is brought within 2 months thereafter.”.

Robert Brown

544 After section 37, insert—
Breach of the peace: modification of common law offence

A person’s behaviour may constitute a breach of the peace—
(a) whether or not it is directed at anyone in particular, and
(b) whether it takes place in public or private,
and to the extent that any rule of law is to the contrary, it ceases to have effect.

Section 38

Robert Brown

379 In section 38, page 53, line 15, leave out subsection (2) and insert—

<(2) In section 41 (age of criminal responsibility), for “eight” substitute “12”.

Bill Aitken

126 In section 38, page 53, line 17, after <not> insert <normally>

Bill Aitken

127 In section 38, page 53, line 18, after <not> insert <normally>

Richard Baker

389 In section 38, page 53, line 26, at end insert—

<(5) The Scottish Ministers must, as soon as possible after the end of each of the reporting years, lay before the Scottish Parliament and publish a report on the disposal of cases (“relevant cases”) involving children who, but for section 41A of the 1995 Act (as inserted by subsection (2)), could have been prosecuted.

(6) For the purposes of subsection (5), the “reporting years” are—

(a) the period of 12 months beginning with the day on which this section comes into force, and

(b) the periods of 12 months beginning with the first and second anniversaries of that day.

(7) A report under subsection (5) must, in particular—

(a) specify the number of relevant cases disposed of during the reporting year,

(b) set out how those cases were disposed of, the costs and other resources involved in those disposals, and what (if any) alternative disposals were considered, and

(c) state what (if any) consideration the Scottish Ministers have given during the year covered by the report to the merits of altering the range of disposals available in such cases.>
Section 39

Kenny MacAskill
128 In section 39, page 53, line 32, after <offence> insert <committed by the partnership>

Kenny MacAskill
129 In section 39, page 54, line 9, at end insert—
<( ) In subsection (1), the references to a partner of a partnership include references to a person purporting to act as a partner of the partnership.>

Section 40

Kenny MacAskill
130 In section 40, page 54, line 23, leave out <all reasonable hours> and insert

Bill Aitken
Supported by: Robert Brown
131 Leave out section 40

After section 40

Margaret Curran
403 After section 40, insert—

<Parole: victims’ representation>

Victims’ representation at Parole Board hearings
(1) Section 17 of the Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 2003 (asp 7) is amended as follows.
(2) After subsection (1), insert—
“(1A) Representations under subsection (1) may include a request by the victim to be heard (either in person or through a representative) at the relevant hearing of the Parole Board for Scotland.

(1B) In this section, the “relevant hearing” of the Board is the hearing at which the Board is to consider the convicted person’s case in order to decide whether to recommend, or direct, that person’s release on licence.”.
(3) In subsection (3), for “Parole Board for Scotland” substitute “Board”.
(4) After subsection (5), insert—
“(5A) Where representations are made under subsection (1) which include a request to be heard at the relevant hearing, the Board must—

(a) give the victim reasonable notice in writing of when and where the hearing is to take place and invite the victim to—

(i) attend the hearing, with or without an accompanying person, in order to be heard in person; or
(ii) send a representative to the hearing to be heard on the victim’s behalf;

(b) in so doing, give the victim appropriate information about the hearing and how it is likely to be conducted including, in particular—

(i) information about any parts of the hearing from which the victim and any accompanying person are, or the victim’s representative is, to be excluded, and

(ii) any limits on their participation during the other parts of the hearing;

(c) at the hearing, afford the victim (or the victim’s representative) a reasonable opportunity to be heard.

(5B) A victim’s representative may only be a member of the victim’s immediate family or a friend of the victim.

(5C) In reaching its decision at or after the hearing, the Board must take account of—

(a) any written representations made under subsection (1); and

(b) anything said by the victim (or the victim’s representative) at the hearing.”.

Section 41

Kenny MacAskill

518 In section 41, page 55, line 22, at end insert—

<(4A) The reference in subsection (4)(c) to any previous conviction of an offence under subsection (1)(b) includes any previous conviction by a court in England and Wales, Northern Ireland or a member State of the European Union other than the United Kingdom of an offence that is equivalent to an offence under subsection (1)(b).

(4B) The references in subsection (4)(d) to subsection (4) are to be read, in relation to a previous conviction by a court referred to in subsection (4A), as references to any provision that is equivalent to subsection (4).

(4C) Any issue of equivalence arising in pursuance of subsection (4A) or (4B) is for the court to determine.>

After section 41

Kenny MacAskill

420 After section 41, insert—
Grant of warrants

Grant of warrants for execution by constables and police members of SCDEA

(1) A sheriff or justice of the peace does not lack power or jurisdiction to grant a warrant for execution by a person mentioned in subsection (2) solely because the person is not a constable of a police force for a police area lying wholly or partly in the sheriff’s or justice’s sheriffdom.

(2) The persons referred to in subsection (1) are—

(a) a constable,

(b) a police member of the Scottish Crime and Drug Enforcement Agency.

After section 43

Kenny MacAskill

132 After section 43, insert—

<Bail conditions: remote monitoring requirements>

Sections 24A to 24E of the 1995 Act (bail conditions: remote monitoring) are repealed.

Section 44

Kenny MacAskill

421 In section 44, page 58, line 5, at end insert—

<( ) The title of section 287 becomes “Demission from office of Lord Advocate and Solicitor General for Scotland”.

Kenny MacAskill

422 In section 44, page 58, line 6, leave out from <subsection> to <Advocate)> and insert <that section>

Kenny MacAskill

423 In section 44, page 58, line 11, at end insert <and

( ) after “successor” insert “or the Solicitor General”.

Kenny MacAskill

424 In section 44, page 58, leave out line 13 and insert—

<( ) for “in name of” substitute “at the instance of Her Majesty’s Advocate or”,

and>

Kenny MacAskill

425 In section 44, page 58, line 17, at end insert—
All indictments which have been raised at the instance of the Solicitor General shall remain effective notwithstanding the holder of the office of Solicitor General subsequently having died or demitted office and may be taken up and proceeded with by his successor or the Lord Advocate.

Kenny MacAskill

In section 44, page 58, line 19, leave out from <as> to end of line 20

In section 44, page 58, line 24, at end insert—

After section 46

After section 46, insert—

Dockets and charges in sex cases

After section 288B of the 1995 Act insert—

Dockets for charges of sexual offences

(1) An indictment or a complaint may include a docket which specifies any act or omission that is connected with a sexual offence charged in the indictment or complaint.

(2) Here, an act or omission is connected with such an offence charged if it—

(a) is specifiable by way of reference to a sexual offence, and

(b) relates to—

(i) the same event as the offence charged, or

(ii) a series of events of which that offence is also part.

(3) The docket is to be in the form of a note apart from the offence charged.

(4) It does not matter whether the act or omission, if it were instead charged as an offence, could not competently be dealt with by the court (including as particularly constituted) in which the indictment or complaint is proceeding.

(5) Where under subsection (1) a docket is included in an indictment or a complaint, it is to be presumed that—

(a) the accused person has been given fair notice of the prosecutor’s intention to lead evidence of the act or omission specified in the docket, and

(b) evidence of the act or omission is admissible as relevant.

(6) The references in this section to a sexual offence are to—

(a) an offence under the Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009,
(b) any other offence involving a significant sexual element.

288BB Mixed charges for sexual offences
(1) An indictment or a complaint may include a charge that is framed as mentioned in subsection (2) or (3) (or both).
(2) That is, framed so as to comprise (in a combined form) the specification of more than one sexual offence.
(3) That is, framed so as to—
   (a) specify, in addition to a sexual offence, any other act or omission, and
   (b) do so in any manner except by way of reference to a statutory offence.
(4) Where a charge in an indictment or a complaint is framed as mentioned in subsection (2) or (3) (or both), the charge is to be regarded as being a single yet cumulative charge.
(5) The references in this section to a sexual offence are to an offence under the Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009.”.

Section 47

Robert Brown
541 In section 47, page 61, line 2, at end insert—
(A1) Section 44 of the 1995 Act (detention of children) is amended in accordance with subsections (B1) and (C1).
   (B1) In subsection (1), after “child” insert “aged 16 years or over”.
   (C1) In subsection (2), the words from “(other than” to “this Act)” are repealed.

After section 51

Kenny MacAskill
429 After section 51, insert—

<Personal conduct of case by accused

Prohibition of personal conduct of case by accused in certain proceedings
(1) The 1995 Act is amended as follows.
(2) In section 288C (prohibition of personal conduct of defence in cases of certain sexual offences)—
   (a) for subsection (1) substitute—
   “(1) An accused charged with a sexual offence to which this section applies is prohibited from conducting his case in person at, or for the purposes of, any relevant hearing in the course of proceedings (other than proceedings in a JP court) in respect of the offence.
(1A) In subsection (1), “relevant hearing” means a hearing at, or for the purposes of, which a witness is to give evidence.”; and

(b) subsection (8) is repealed.

(3) In section 288D (appointment of solicitor by court in cases to which section 288C applies)—

(a) in subsection (1), after “proceedings” insert “(other than proceedings in a JP court),”;

(b) in subsection (2)(a), for sub-paragraphs (i) and (ii) substitute—

“(i) the conduct of his case at, or for the purposes of, any relevant hearing (within the meaning of section 288C(1A)) in the proceedings; or”, and

(c) in subsection (6), for the words from “of the accused’s defence” to the end substitute “referred to in subsection (2)(a) above.”.

(4) In section 288E (prohibition of personal conduct of defence in certain cases involving child witness under the age of 12)—

(a) subsection (1) is repealed,

(b) in subsection (2)(b), for “the trial” substitute “any hearing in the course of the proceedings”,

(c) after subsection (2) insert—

“(2A) The accused is prohibited from conducting his case in person at, or for the purposes of, any hearing at, or for the purposes of, which the child witness is to give evidence.”;

(d) in subsection (4), at the end insert “and as if references to a relevant hearing were references to a hearing referred to in subsection (2A) above”;

(e) in subsection (6)—

(i) for paragraphs (za) and (a) substitute—

“(a) that his case at, or for the purposes of, any hearing in the course of the proceedings at, or for the purposes of, which the child witness is to give evidence may be conducted only by a lawyer,”, and

(ii) in paragraph (c), for the words from “preliminary” to “trial” substitute “hearing”, and

(f) subsection (8) is repealed.

(5) In section 288F (power to prohibit personal conduct of defence in other cases involving vulnerable witnesses)—

(a) in subsection (1), for “the trial” substitute “any hearing in the course of the proceedings”,

(b) in subsection (2), for the words from “defence” to the end substitute “case in person at any hearing at, or for the purposes of, which the vulnerable witness is to give evidence.”,

(c) in subsection (3)(a), for “trial” substitute “hearing”,

(d) in subsection (4), for the words from “after” to the end substitute “in relation to a hearing after, as well as before, the hearing has commenced.”,
(e) subsection (4A) is repealed,

(f) in subsection (5), at the end insert “and as if references to a relevant hearing were references to any hearing in respect of which an order is made under this section”, and

(g) subsection (6) is repealed.

Section 52

Kenny MacAskill

519 In section 52, page 64, line 11, at end insert—

<\(\) A reference in this section to a conviction which occurred on or after the date of offence O is a reference to such a conviction by a court in any part of the United Kingdom or in any other member State of the European Union.”.>

Kenny MacAskill

520 In section 52, page 64, line 36, at end insert—

<\(\) A reference in this section to a conviction which occurred on or after the date of offence O is a reference to such a conviction by a court in any part of the United Kingdom or in any other member State of the European Union.”.>

After section 52

Kenny MacAskill

521 After section 52, insert—

<\textbf{Convictions by courts in other EU member States}\n
(1) Schedule \textit{(Convictions by courts in other EU member States)} makes modifications of the 1995 Act and other enactments for the purposes of and in connection with implementing obligations of the United Kingdom created by or arising under the Framework Decision (so far as they have effect in or as regards Scotland).

(2) The Scottish Ministers may by order make further provision for the purposes of and in connection with implementing those obligations.

(3) The provision may, in particular, confer functions—

(a) on the Scottish Ministers,

(b) on other persons.

(4) An order under subsection (2) may modify any enactment.

(5) In this section, the “Framework Decision” means Council Framework Decision 2008/675/JHA of 24 July 2008 on taking account of convictions in the Member States of the European Union in the course of new criminal proceedings.”>
After schedule 2

Kenny MacAskill

After schedule 2, insert—

<SCHEDULE
(introduced by section (Convictions by courts in other EU member States)(1))

CONVICTIONS BY COURTS IN OTHER EU MEMBER STATES: MODIFICATIONS OF ENACTMENTS

PART 1

THE 1995 ACT

The 1995 Act

1 The 1995 Act is amended as follows.

2 In section 23C(2)(d)(i) (previous convictions to be taken into consideration in determining bail), for “outwith Scotland” substitute “by courts outside the European Union”.

3 In section 27 (breach of bail conditions: offences), after subsection (3) insert—

“(3A) The reference in subsection (3)(b) to any previous conviction of an offence under subsection (1)(b) includes any previous conviction by a court in England and Wales, Northern Ireland or a member State of the European Union other than the United Kingdom of an offence that is equivalent to an offence under subsection (1)(b).

(3B) The references in subsection (3)(c) to subsection (3) are to be read, in relation to a previous conviction by a court referred to in subsection (3A), as references to any provision that is equivalent to subsection (3).

(3C) Any issue of equivalence arising in pursuance of subsection (3A) or (3B) is for the court to determine.”.

4 In section 202(2) (deferred sentence), for “Great Britain” substitute “the United Kingdom or in another member State of the European Union”.

5 In section 204 (restrictions on passing sentence of imprisonment or detention)—

(a) in each of subsections (1) and (2), after “United Kingdom” insert “or in another member State of the European Union”,

(b) after subsection (4) insert—

“(4A) The court shall, for the purpose of determining whether a person has been previously sentenced to imprisonment or detention by a court in a member State of the European Union other than the United Kingdom—

(a) disregard any previous sentence of imprisonment which, being the equivalent of a suspended sentence, has not taken effect;

(b) construe detention as meaning an equivalent sentence to any of those mentioned in subsection (4)(b).

(4B) Any issue of equivalence arising in pursuance of subsection (4A) is for the court to determine.”.

6 In section 205B (minimum sentence for third conviction of certain offences relating to drug trafficking)—
(a) in subsection (1)(b), for “been convicted in any part of the United Kingdom of two other class A drug trafficking offences” substitute “two previous convictions for relevant offences”,

(b) after subsection (1) insert—

“(1A) In subsection (1), “relevant offence” means—

(a) in relation to a conviction by a court in any part of the United Kingdom, a class A drug trafficking offence;

(b) in relation to a conviction by a court in a member State of the European Union other than the United Kingdom, an offence that is equivalent to a class A drug trafficking offence.

(1B) Any issue of equivalence arising in pursuance of subsection (1A)(b) is for the court to determine.”.

7 In section 275A (disclosure of accused’s previous convictions where court allows questioning or evidence under section 275)—

(a) in subsection (10)—

(i) the word “or” immediately following paragraph (a) is repealed,

(ii) after paragraph (a) insert—

“(aa) a conviction by a court in England and Wales, Northern Ireland or a member State of the European Union other than the United Kingdom of an offence that is equivalent to one to which section 288C of this Act applies by virtue of subsection (2) thereof; or”;

(b) after subsection (10) insert—

“(10A) Any issue of equivalence arising in pursuance of subsection (10)(aa) is for the court to determine.”.

8 In section 307 (interpretation)—

(a) in subsection (1), insert the following definition at the appropriate place—

“‘conviction’, in relation to a previous conviction by a court outside Scotland, means a final decision of a criminal court establishing guilt of a criminal offence;”, and

(b) for subsection (5) substitute—

“(5) Except where the context requires otherwise—

(a) any reference in this Act to a previous conviction is to be construed as a reference to a previous conviction by a court in any part of the United Kingdom or in any other member State of the European Union;

(b) any reference in this Act to a previous sentence is to be construed as a reference to a previous sentence passed by any such court;

(c) any reference to a previous conviction of a particular offence is to be construed, in relation to a previous conviction by a court outside Scotland, as a reference to a previous conviction of an equivalent offence; and

(d) any reference to a previous sentence of a particular kind is to be construed, in relation to a previous sentence passed by a court outside Scotland, as a reference to a previous sentence of an equivalent kind.”.
PART 2
OTHER ENACTMENTS

The Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 (c.45)
9  In section 58 of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982, after subsection (4) insert—

“(4A) In subsection (4), the reference to a conviction for theft includes a reference to a conviction by a court in England and Wales, Northern Ireland or a member State of the European Union other than the United Kingdom of an offence that is equivalent to theft.

(4B) Any issue of equivalence arising in pursuance of subsection (4A) is for the court to determine.”.

The Prisoners and Criminal Proceedings (Scotland) Act 1993 (c.9)
10  In section 27(1) of the Prisoners and Criminal Proceedings (Scotland) Act 1993
(interpretation of Part 1), insert at the appropriate place—

““previous conviction” means a previous conviction by a court in any part of the United Kingdom or in any other member State of the European Union;”.

The Criminal Law (Consolidation) (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.39)
11 (1) Section 9 of the Criminal Law (Consolidation) (Scotland) Act 1995 (permitting girl to use premises for intercourse) is amended as follows.

(2) In subsection (2A)—
(a) the word “or” immediately following paragraph (a) is repealed, and
(b) after paragraph (a) insert—

“(aa) that person has a previous conviction for a relevant foreign offence committed against a person under the age of 16; or”.

(3) In subsection (3)—
(a) the word “and” immediately following paragraph (a) is repealed, and
(b) after paragraph (a) insert—

“(aa) “a previous conviction for a relevant foreign offence” has the same meaning as in section 39(5)(aa) of that Act; and”.

The Custodial Sentences and Weapons (Scotland) Act 2007 (asp 17)
12  In section 4(1) of the Custodial Sentences and Weapons (Scotland) Act 2007 (basic definitions for purposes of Part 2), insert at the appropriate place—

““previous conviction” means a previous conviction by a court in any part of the United Kingdom or in any other member State of the European Union,.”.
The Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009 (asp 9)

13 (1) Section 39 of the Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009 (defences in relation to offences against older children) is amended as follows.

(2) In subsection (2)—
   (a) in paragraph (a)—
      (i) the word “or” immediately following sub-paragraph (i) is repealed, and
      (ii) after sub-paragraph (i) insert—
         “(ia) if A has a previous conviction for a relevant foreign offence committed against a person under the age of 16, or”,
   (b) in paragraph (b)—
      (i) the word “or” immediately following sub-paragraph (i) is repealed, and
      (ii) after sub-paragraph (i) insert—
         “(ia) if B has a previous conviction for a relevant foreign offence committed against a person under the age of 16, or”.

(3) In subsection (5), after paragraph (a) insert—
   “(aa) “a previous conviction for a relevant foreign offence” means a previous conviction by a court in a member State of the European Union other than the United Kingdom for an offence that is equivalent to one listed in paragraph 1, 4, 7, 10, 13 (so far as applying to an offence listed in paragraph 1, 4, 7 or 10) or 14 of schedule 1,”

(4) After subsection (5) insert—
   “(5A) Any issue of equivalence arising in pursuance of subsection (5)(aa) is for the court to determine.
   (5B) For that purpose, an offence may be equivalent to one listed in paragraph 1, 4, 7, 10, 13 (so far as applying to an offence listed in paragraph 1, 4, 7 or 10) or 14 of schedule 1 even though, under the law of the member State (or part of the member State) in question, it is an offence—
      (a) regardless of the age of the victim, or
      (b) only if committed against a person under an age other than 16 years.”.

Section 54

Kenny MacAskill

462 In section 54, page 65, line 30, leave out <the close of the whole of the evidence> and insert <one or other (but not both) of the appropriate events>

Kenny MacAskill

463 In section 54, page 65, leave out lines 39 and 40 and insert—

   <( ) For the purposes of subsection (1), “the appropriate events” are—
      (a) the close of the whole of the evidence,
Kenny MacAskill

464 In section 54, page 66, line 15, leave out <the prosecutor to amend the indictment> and insert <that the indictment be amended>

Kenny MacAskill

465 In section 54, page 66, line 22, after first <of> insert <the judge or>

Kenny MacAskill

466 In section 54, page 66, line 29, leave out <the prosecutor to amend the indictment> and insert <that the indictment be amended>

Kenny MacAskill

467 In section 54, page 66, line 37, after first <of> insert <the judge or>

Kenny MacAskill

468 In section 54, page 66, line 37, at end insert—

<97D No acquittal on “no reasonable jury” grounds

(1) A judge has no power to direct the jury to return a not guilty verdict on any charge on the ground that no reasonable jury, properly directed on the evidence, could convict on the charge.

(2) Accordingly, no submission based on that ground or any ground of like effect is to be allowed.>

Section 55

Kenny MacAskill

469 In section 55, page 67, line 4, at end insert—

<(1A) If, immediately after an acquittal under section 97 or 97B(2)(a), the prosecutor moves for the trial diet to be adjourned for no more than 2 days in order to consider whether to appeal against the acquittal under subsection (1), the court of first instance must grant the motion unless the court considers that there are no arguable grounds of appeal.

(1B) If, immediately after the giving of a direction under section 97B(2)(b) or 97C(2), the prosecutor moves for the trial diet to be adjourned for no more than 2 days in order to consider whether to appeal against the direction under subsection (1), the court of first instance must grant the motion unless the court considers that it would not be in the interests of justice to do so.

(1C) In considering whether it would be in the interests of justice to grant a motion for adjournment under subsection (1B), the court must have regard, amongst other things, to—>
(a) whether, if an appeal were to be made and to be successful, continuing with the diet would have any impact on any subsequent or continued prosecution,
(b) whether there are any arguable grounds of appeal.

(1D) An appeal may not be brought under subsection (1) unless the prosecutor intimates intention to appeal—
(a) immediately after the acquittal or, as the case may be, the giving of the direction,
(b) if a motion to adjourn the trial diet under subsection (1A) or (1B) is granted, immediately upon resumption of the diet, or
(c) if such a motion is refused, immediately after the refusal.

(1E) Subsection (2) applies if—
(a) the prosecutor intimates an intention to appeal under subsection (1)(a), or
(b) the trial diet is adjourned under subsection (1A).

Kenny MacAskill
470 In section 55, page 67, line 5, leave out from beginning to <Court> and insert <Where this subsection applies, the court of first instance must suspend the effect of the acquittal and>

Kenny MacAskill
471 In section 55, page 67, line 10, leave out <exceptionally and>

Kenny MacAskill
472 In section 55, page 67, line 11, at end insert—
<( ) The court may, under subsection (2)(b), order the detention of the person in custody only if the court considers that there are arguable grounds of appeal.>

Kenny MacAskill
473 In section 55, page 67, leave out lines 25 to 33

Kenny MacAskill
474 In section 55, page 68, line 5, leave out <an appeal is brought> and insert <the prosecutor intimates intention to appeal>

Kenny MacAskill
475 In section 55, page 68, line 28, leave out <or 107B>

Kenny MacAskill
476 In section 55, page 69, line 13, at end insert—
<( ) However, if the prosecutor moves for the diet to be deserted pro loco et tempore in relation to such other offence, the court must grant the motion.>
Section 57

Kenny MacAskill

477 In section 57, page 69, line 26, leave out <within 7 days after an appeal is brought under section 107A(1)> and insert <where the prosecutor intimates intention to appeal under section 107A(1), within 7 days after the acquittal or direction appealed against>.

Section 58

Kenny MacAskill

478 In section 58, page 71, line 4, leave out from <18(7A)> to end of line 5 and insert <18 (prints, samples etc. in criminal investigations)—

( ) in subsection (3), for “section 18A” substitute “sections 18A to 18C”,

( ) in subsection (7A), for “sections 19 to 20” substitute “, subject to the modification in subsection (7AA), sections 18A to 19C”, and

( ) after subsection (7A) insert—

“(7AA) The modification is that for the purposes of section 19C as it applies in relation to relevant physical data taken from or provided by a person outwith Scotland, subsection (7A) is to be read as if in paragraph (d) the words from “created” to the end were omitted.”.>

James Kelly

404 In section 58, page 71, line 4, leave out from <18(7A)> to <Act),> in line 5 and insert <18 (prints, samples etc. in criminal investigations)—

( ) in subsection (3), the words “or on the conclusion of such proceedings otherwise than with a conviction or an order under section 246(3) of this Act” are repealed, and

( ) in subsection (7A),>

James Kelly

405 In section 58, page 71, leave out line 6 and insert—

<( ) The title of section 18A becomes “Retention of samples, etc.: persons prosecuted but not convicted etc.”, and in that section>

Kenny MacAskill

479 In section 58, page 71, leave out lines 7 to 10 and insert—

<( ) for subsection (1) substitute—

“(1) This section applies to—

(a) relevant physical data taken or provided under section 18(2), and

(b) any sample, or any information derived from a sample, taken under section 18(6) or (6A), where the condition in subsection (2) is satisfied.”.>
James Kelly

406 In section 58, page 71, line 11, after <(2)> insert—

<(  ) the words “in respect of a relevant sexual offence or a relevant violent offence” are repealed, and

( )>

Kenny MacAskill

480 In section 58, page 71, line 13, leave out from <after> to <data,“> and insert <for “sample or information” substitute “relevant physical data, sample or information derived from a sample”>

James Kelly

407 In section 58, page 71, line 13, at end insert—

<(  ) in subsection (4)(a), for “3” substitute “6”>

Kenny MacAskill

481 In section 58, page 71, line 14, leave out from beginning to <data,”> in line 15 and insert—

<(  ) after subsection (8) insert—

“(8A) If the sheriff principal allows an appeal against the refusal of an application under subsection (5), the sheriff principal may make an order amending, or further amending, the destruction date.

(8B) An order under subsection (8A) must not specify a destruction date more than 2 years later than the previous destruction date.”,

(  ) in subsection (10), for “sample or information” substitute “relevant physical data, sample or information derived from a sample”>

Kenny MacAskill

482 In section 58, page 71, line 18, at end insert <and

(  ) in the definition of “relevant sexual offence” and “relevant violent offence”, after “have” insert “, subject to the modification in subsection (12),”;

(  ) after subsection (11) insert—

“(12) The modification is that the definition of “relevant sexual offence” in section
19A(6) is to be read as if for paragraph (g) there were substituted—

“(g) public indecency if it is apparent from the offence as charged in the indictment or complaint that there was a sexual aspect to the behaviour of the person charged;”.”>

James Kelly

408 In section 58, page 71, line 18, at end insert <, and

(  ) the definition of “relevant sexual offence” and “relevant violent offence” is repealed.>
418* After section 58, insert—

<Retention of samples etc. where offer under sections 302 to 303ZA accepted

After section 18A of the 1995 Act insert—

“18AA Retention of samples etc. where offer under sections 302 to 303ZA accepted

(1) This section applies to—

(a) relevant physical data taken from or provided by a person under section 18(2), and

(b) any sample, or any information derived from a sample, taken from a person under section 18(6) or (6A),

where the conditions in subsection (2) are satisfied.

(2) The conditions are—

(a) the relevant physical data or sample was taken from or provided by the person while the person was under arrest or being detained in connection with the offence or offences in relation to which a relevant offer is issued to the person, and

(b) the person—

(i) accepts a relevant offer, or

(ii) in the case of a relevant offer other than one of the type mentioned in paragraph (d) of subsection (3), is deemed to accept a relevant offer.

(3) In this section “relevant offer” means—

(a) a conditional offer under section 302,

(b) a compensation offer under section 302A,

(c) a combined offer under section 302B, or

(d) a work offer under section 303ZA.

(4) Subject to subsections (6) and (7) and section 18AB(9) and (10), the relevant physical data, sample or information derived from a sample must be destroyed no later than the destruction date.

(5) In subsection (4), “destruction date” means—

(a) in relation to a relevant offer that relates only to—

(i) a relevant sexual offence,

(ii) a relevant violent offence, or

(iii) both a relevant sexual offence and a relevant violent offence,

the date of expiry of the period of 3 years beginning with the date on which the relevant offer is issued or such later date as an order under section 18AB(2) or (6) may specify,
(b) in relation to a relevant offer that relates to—
   (i) an offence or offences falling within paragraph (a), and
   (ii) any other offence,

the date of expiry of the period of 3 years beginning with the date on which the relevant offer is issued or such later date as an order under section 18AB(2) or (6) may specify,

(c) in relation to a relevant offer that does not relate to an offence falling within paragraph (a), the date of expiry of the period of 2 years beginning with the date on which the relevant offer is issued.

(6) If a relevant offer is recalled by virtue of section 302C(5) or a decision to uphold it is quashed under section 302C(7)(a), all record of the relevant physical data, sample and information derived from a sample must be destroyed as soon as possible after—

(a) the prosecutor decides not to issue a further relevant offer to the person,

(b) the prosecutor decides not to institute criminal proceedings against the person, or

(c) the prosecutor institutes criminal proceedings against the person and those proceedings conclude otherwise than with a conviction or an order under section 246(3).

(7) If a relevant offer is set aside by virtue of section 303ZB, all record of the relevant physical data, sample and information derived from a sample must be destroyed as soon as possible after the setting aside.

(8) In this section, “relevant sexual offence” and “relevant violent offence” have, subject to the modification in subsection (9), the same meanings as in section 19A(6) and include any attempt, conspiracy or incitement to commit such an offence.

(9) The modification is that the definition of “relevant sexual offence” in section 19A(6) is to be read as if for paragraph (g) there were substituted—

“(g) public indecency if it is apparent from the relevant offer (as defined in section 18AA(3)) relating to the offence that there was a sexual aspect to the behaviour of the person to whom the relevant offer is issued;”.

18AB Section 18AA: extension of retention period where relevant offer relates to certain sexual or violent offences

(1) This section applies where the destruction date for relevant physical data, a sample or information derived from a sample falls within section 18AA(5)(a) or (b).

(2) On a summary application made by the relevant chief constable within the period of 3 months before the destruction date, the sheriff may, if satisfied that there are reasonable grounds for doing so, make an order amending, or further amending, the destruction date.

(3) An application under subsection (2) may be made to any sheriff—

(a) in whose sheriffdom the appropriate person resides,

(b) in whose sheriffdom that person is believed by the applicant to be, or
(c) to whose sheriffdom the person is believed by the applicant to be intending to come.

(4) An order under subsection (2) must not specify a destruction date more than 2 years later than the previous destruction date.

(5) The decision of the sheriff on an application under subsection (2) may be appealed to the sheriff principal within 21 days of the decision.

(6) If the sheriff principal allows an appeal against the refusal of an application under subsection (2), the sheriff principal may make an order amending, or further amending, the destruction date.

(7) An order under subsection (6) must not specify a destruction date more than 2 years later than the previous destruction date.

(8) The sheriff principal’s decision on an appeal under subsection (5) is final.

(9) Section 18AA(4) does not apply where—

(a) an application under subsection (2) has been made but has not been determined,

(b) the period within which an appeal may be brought under subsection (5) against a decision to refuse an application has not elapsed, or

(c) such an appeal has been brought but has not been withdrawn or finally determined.

(10) Where—

(a) the period within which an appeal referred to in subsection (9)(b) may be brought has elapsed without such an appeal being brought,

(b) such an appeal is brought and is withdrawn or finally determined against the appellant, or

(c) an appeal brought under subsection (5) against a decision to grant an application is determined in favour of the appellant,

the relevant physical data, sample or information derived from a sample must be destroyed as soon as possible after the period has elapsed, or, as the case may be, the appeal is withdrawn or determined.

(11) In this section—

“appropriate person” means the person from whom the relevant physical data was taken or by whom it was provided or from whom the sample was taken,

“destruction date” has the meaning given by section 18AA(5),

“the relevant chief constable” has the same meaning as in subsection (11) of section 18A, with the modification that references to the person referred to in subsection (2) of that section are references to the appropriate person.”.

Stewart Maxwell

419 After section 58, insert—
Retention of samples etc. taken or provided in connection with certain fixed penalty offences

After section 18A of the 1995 Act insert—

“18AC Retention of samples etc. taken or provided in connection with certain fixed penalty offences

(1) This section applies to—

(a) relevant physical data taken from or provided by a person under section 18(2), and

(b) any sample, or any information derived from a sample, taken from a person under section 18(6) or (6A),

where the conditions in subsection (2) are satisfied.

(2) The conditions are—

(a) the person was arrested or detained in connection with a fixed penalty offence,

(b) the relevant physical data or sample was taken from or provided by the person while the person was under arrest or being detained in connection with that offence,

(c) after the relevant physical data or sample was taken from or provided by the person, a constable gave the person under section 129(1) of the 2004 Act—

(i) a fixed penalty notice in respect of that offence (the “main FPN”), or

(ii) the main FPN and one or more other fixed penalty notices in respect of fixed penalty offences arising out of the same circumstances as the offence to which the main FPN relates, and

(d) the person, in relation to the main FPN and any other fixed penalty notice of the type mentioned in paragraph (c)(ii)—

(i) pays the fixed penalty, or

(ii) pays any sum that the person is liable to pay by virtue of section 131(5) of the 2004 Act.

(3) Subject to subsections (4) and (5), the relevant physical data, sample or information derived from a sample must be destroyed before the end of the period of 2 years beginning with—

(a) where subsection (2)(c)(i) applies, the day on which the main FPN is given to the person,

(b) where subsection (2)(c)(ii) applies and—

(i) the main FPN and any other fixed penalty notice are given to the person on the same day, that day,

(ii) the main FPN and any other fixed penalty notice are given to the person on different days, the later day.

(4) Where—

(a) subsection (2)(c)(i) applies, and
(b) the main FPN is revoked under section 133(1) of the 2004 Act, the relevant physical data, sample or information derived from a sample must be destroyed as soon as possible after the revocation.

(5) Where—

(a) subsection (2)(c)(ii) applies, and

(b) the main FPN and any other fixed penalty notices are revoked under section 133(1) of the 2004 Act, the relevant physical data, sample or information derived from a sample must be destroyed as soon as possible after the revocations.

(6) In this section—

“the 2004 Act” means the Antisocial Behaviour etc. (Scotland) Act 2004 (asp 8),

“fixed penalty notice” has the meaning given by section 129(2) of the 2004 Act,

“fixed penalty offence” has the meaning given by section 128(1) of the 2004 Act.”.

Section 59

James Kelly

409 In section 59, page 72, line 19, leave out from <such> to second <offence> and insert—

<(  ) an offence of assault, categorised by the Principal Reporter as grave, or (  ) such—

(i) other relevant violent offence, or
(ii) relevant sexual offence,>

James Kelly

410 In section 59, page 72, leave out lines 21 to 36

Robert Brown

380 In section 59, page 72, leave out lines 21 and 22, and insert—

<(7) Where this section applies, the sheriff may, on summary application by the relevant chief constable, make an order that, subject to section 18C(6) and (7), the relevant physical data, sample or the information must be destroyed no later than the destruction date.

(7A) The sheriff may only make the order referred to in subsection (7) if satisfied that the child continues to pose a risk to public safety and that retention of the relevant physical data, sample or information until the destruction date is justified by that risk.>

Kenny MacAskill

483 In section 59, page 72, line 21, leave out <18C(5) and (6)> and insert <18C(6) and (7)>
Kenny MacAskill

In section 59, page 72, line 21, leave out <the information> and insert <information derived from a sample>.

Robert Brown

In section 59, page 72, leave out lines 25 to 36 and insert <the date on which the relevant offence mentioned in subsection (3), (4) or, as the case may be, (5) was committed; or

(b) such later date as an order under section 18C(1) may specify.>

( ) For the purposes of subsection (8)(a)—

(a) if two or more relevant offences were committed on different dates, it is the most recent of those offences that is to be taken as the offence constituting the ground of referral; and

(b) if a relevant offence was committed on more than one date, the date on which the offence was committed is to be taken as the most recent of those dates.>

Robert Brown

In section 59, page 72, line 40, at end insert—

<“relevant chief constable” has the same meaning as in section 18A(11), with the modification that references to the person referred to in subsection (2) of that section are references to the child referred to in subsection (1);>.

Kenny MacAskill

In section 59, page 73, line 1, after <have> insert <, subject to the modification in subsection (11),>.

Kenny MacAskill

In section 59, page 73, line 3, at end insert—

<(11) The modification is that the definition of “relevant sexual offence” in section 19A(6) is to be read as if for paragraph (g) there were substituted—

“(g) public indecency if it is apparent from the ground of referral relating to the offence that there was a sexual aspect to the behaviour of the child.”.>

James Kelly

In section 59, page 73, leave out lines 4 to 40.

Robert Brown

In section 59, page 73, line 7, leave out from <there> to end of line 8 and insert <at least one ground for doing so, specified by virtue of subsection (1A), is established, make an order amending (or further amending) the destruction date.>

(1A) The Scottish Ministers must, by regulations made by statutory instrument, specify the grounds on which an order under subsection (1) may be made.
(1B) Before making regulations under subsection (1A), the Scottish Ministers must consult such persons as they consider appropriate.

(1C) A statutory instrument containing regulations under subsection (1A) is subject to annulment in pursuance of a resolution of the Scottish Parliament.>

Kenny MacAskill

487 In section 59, page 73, line 17, at end insert—

<(4A) If the sheriff principal allows an appeal against the refusal of an application under subsection (1), the sheriff principal may make an order amending, or further amending, the destruction date.

(4B) An order under subsection (4A) must not specify a destruction date more than 2 years later than the previous destruction date.>

Kenny MacAskill

488 In section 59, page 73, line 23, leave out <expired> and insert <elapsed>

Kenny MacAskill

489 In section 59, page 73, line 28, leave out <expired> and insert <elapsed>

Kenny MacAskill

490 In section 59, page 73, line 33, after <information> insert <derived from a sample>

Kenny MacAskill

491 In section 59, page 73, line 34, leave out from <practicable> to end of line and insert <possible after the period has elapsed or, as the case may be, the appeal is withdrawn or determined.>

Kenny MacAskill

492 In section 59, page 73, line 37, leave out <section 18A(11)> and insert <subsection (11) of section 18A>

Robert Brown

382 In section 59, page 73, line 37, leave out from <18A(11)> to end of line 40 and insert <18B(10)>

Kenny MacAskill

493 In section 59, page 74, line 1, leave out subsection (2)

James Kelly

412 In section 59, page 74, line 2, leave out from <after> to end of line and insert <at beginning insert “Except where section 18B applies and”>
After section 59

Kenny MacAskill

494 After section 59, insert—

<Extension of section 19A of 1995 Act>

In section 19A(6) of the 1995 Act (definitions of certain expressions for purposes of section 19A)—

(a) in the definition of “relevant sexual offence”, for paragraph (g) substitute—

“(g) public indecency if the court, in imposing sentence or otherwise disposing of the case, determined for the purposes of paragraph 60 of Schedule 3 to the Sexual Offences Act 2003 (c.42) that there was a significant sexual aspect to the offender’s behaviour in committing the offence; “”, and

(b) in paragraph (h) of the definition of “relevant violent offence”, after subparagraph (iv), insert—

“(v) section 47(1) (possession of offensive weapon in public place), 49(1) (possession of article with blade or point in public place), 49A(1) or (2) (possession of article with blade or point or offensive weapon on school premises) or 49C(1) (possession of offensive weapon or article with blade or point in prison) of the Criminal Law (Consolidation) (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.39);”.

Section 60

Kenny MacAskill

495 In section 60, page 74, line 6, leave out <This section> and insert <Subsection (2)>

Kenny MacAskill

496 In section 60, page 74, line 7, leave out <, or any information derived from relevant physical data,>

Kenny MacAskill

497 In section 60, page 74, line 12, leave out <, a sample or an impression> and insert <or a sample>

Kenny MacAskill

498 In section 60, page 74, line 17, leave out <relevant physical data or a sample or impression> and insert

Kenny MacAskill

499 In section 60, page 74, line 18, at end insert <and

( ) relevant physical data, a sample or information derived from a sample taken from, or provided by, a person outwith Scotland which is given by any person to—
(i) a police force,
(ii) the Scottish Police Services Authority, or
(iii) a person acting on behalf of a police force.

Kenny MacAskill

500 In section 60, page 74, line 19, leave out <, impression or information> and insert <or information derived from a sample>

Kenny MacAskill

501 In section 60, page 74, line 23, leave out <, sample or impression> and insert <or sample>

Kenny MacAskill

502 In section 60, page 74, line 23, at end insert—

<(2A) Subsections (2B) and (2C) apply to relevant physical data, a sample or information derived from a sample falling within any of paragraphs (a) to (d) of subsection (1) (“relevant material”).

(2B) If the relevant material is held by a police force, the Scottish Police Services Authority or a person acting on behalf of a police force, the police force or, as the case may be, the Authority or person may give the relevant material to another person for use by that person in accordance with subsection (2).

(2C) A police force, the Scottish Police Services Authority or a person acting on behalf of a police force may, in using the relevant material in accordance with subsection (2), check it against other relevant physical data, samples and information derived from samples received from another person.>

Kenny MacAskill

503 In section 60, page 74, line 33, leave out <the United Kingdom> and insert <Scotland>

Kenny MacAskill

504 In section 60, page 74, line 35, leave out <the United Kingdom> and insert <Scotland>

Kenny MacAskill

505 In section 60, page 74, line 38, leave out from <, impressions> to end of line 39 and insert <or information derived from a sample>

Kenny MacAskill

506 In section 60, page 75, leave out line 2

Kenny MacAskill

507 In section 60, page 75, leave out line 5
Kenny MacAskill

508 In section 60, page 75, line 7, leave out <, impression or relevant physical data>

Kenny MacAskill

509 In section 60, page 75, line 12, leave out <, impression>

Kenny MacAskill

510 In section 60, page 75, line 14, leave out from beginning to <impression”> in line 25 and insert <, after “information” insert “derived from a sample”,

( ) in subsection (5)(b), the words “with all information derived from them” are repealed,

( ) in subsection (6)(a), for “it or them” substitute “the sample”,

( ) in subsection (7)(a), the words “or relevant physical data”, in the second place where they occur, are repealed,

Section 61

Kenny MacAskill

133 In section 61, page 76, line 6, after <reasons> insert <for making the reference>

Kenny MacAskill

134 In section 61, page 76, line 9, leave out from <additional> to end of line 10 and insert <the appellant to found the appeal on additional grounds>

Kenny MacAskill

135 In section 61, page 76, line 19, leave out <additional grounds to be raised> and insert <the appeal to be founded on additional grounds>

Before section 62

Kenny MacAskill

430 Before section 62, insert—

<Admissibility of prior statements of witnesses: abolition of competence test>

(1) This section applies in relation to a prior statement made by a witness before the commencement of section 24 of the Vulnerable Witnesses (Scotland) Act 2004 (asp 3) ("the 2004 Act") (which abolishes the competence test for witnesses in criminal and civil proceedings).

(2) For the purpose of the application of subsection (2)(c) of section 260 of the 1995 Act (admissibility of prior statement depends on competence of the witness at the time of the statement) in relation to the statement, section 24 of the 2004 Act is taken to have been in force at the time the statement was made.

(3) In this section, “prior statement” has the meaning it has in section 260 of the 1995 Act.>
Section 62

Robert Brown

In section 62, page 77, line 1, after <may> insert <, if satisfied that there is good reason to do so,>

After section 64

Kenny MacAskill

After section 64, insert—

<Child witnesses in proceedings for people trafficking offences>

In section 271 of the 1995 Act (vulnerable witnesses: main definitions)—

(a) in subsection (1)(a), for “age of 16” substitute “relevant age”, and
(b) after subsection (1), insert—

“(1A) In subsection (1)(a), “the relevant age” means—

(a) in the case of a person who is giving or is to give evidence in proceedings for an offence under section 22 of the Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 2003 (asp 7) (trafficking in prostitution etc.) or section 4 of the Asylum and Immigration (Treatment of Claimants, etc.) Act 2004 (c.19) (trafficking people for exploitation), the age of 18, and
(b) in any other case, the age of 16.”.>

Section 66

Kenny MacAskill

In section 66, page 80, line 13, leave out from <other> to end of line 16 and insert <the jury>

Kenny MacAskill

In section 66, page 80, line 18, leave out <any persons within paragraph (a)(i) to (iii)> and insert <the judge or the jury>

Kenny MacAskill

In section 66, page 81, line 6, leave out <material> and insert <information>

Kenny MacAskill

In section 66, page 81, line 8, leave out <may> and insert <must>

Kenny MacAskill

In section 66, page 81, line 12, leave out <material”> and insert <information”>

Kenny MacAskill

In section 66, page 82, line 16, leave out <the weight of>
Kenny MacAskill
437 In section 66, page 82, line 18, leave out <the sole or decisive evidence> and insert <material in>

Kenny MacAskill
438 In section 66, page 82, line 36, leave out <warning> and insert <direction>

Kenny MacAskill
439 In section 66, page 83, leave out lines 33 to 36

Schedule 3

Kenny MacAskill
440 In schedule 3, page 148, line 28, leave out <treat the conviction as unsafe> and insert <quash the conviction>

Kenny MacAskill
441 In schedule 3, page 148, line 31, leave out <treat the conviction as unsafe> and insert <quash the conviction>

After section 67

Kenny MacAskill
442 After section 67, insert—

<European evidence warrants>

(1) The Scottish Ministers may by order make provision for the purposes of and in connection with implementing any obligations of the United Kingdom created by or arising under the Framework Decision (so far as they have effect in or as regards Scotland).

(2) The provision may, in particular, confer functions—

(a) on the Scottish Ministers,
(b) on the Lord Advocate,
(c) on other persons.

(3) An order under subsection (1) may modify any enactment.

(4) An order under subsection (1) may contain provision creating offences and a person who commits such an offence is liable to such penalties, not exceeding those mentioned in subsection (5), as are provided for in the order.

(5) Those penalties are—

(a) on conviction on indictment, imprisonment for a period not exceeding 2 years, or a fine, or both,
(b) on summary conviction, imprisonment for a period not exceeding 12 months, or a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum, or both.

Before section 68

Kenny MacAskill

443 Before section 68, insert—

<Lists of jurors>

(1) The 1995 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In section 84 (juries: returns of jurors and preparation of lists)—

(a) in subsection (3), for “list” substitute “lists”,

(b) for subsection (4) substitute—

“(4) For the purpose of a trial in the sheriff court, the sheriff principal must furnish the clerk of court with a list of names, containing the number of persons required, from lists of potential jurors of—

(a) the sheriff court district in which the trial is to be held (the “local district”), and

(b) if the sheriff principal considers it appropriate, any other sheriff court district or districts in the sheriffdom in which the trial is to be held (“other districts”).

(4A) Where the sheriff principal furnishes a list containing names of potential jurors of other districts, the sheriff principal may determine the proportion as between the local district and the other districts in which jurors are to be summoned.”,

(c) in subsection (5), for “list”, in both places where it occurs, substitute “lists”, and

(d) subsection (7) is repealed.

(3) In section 85(4) (juries: citation and attendance of jurors)—

(a) for the words from the beginning to “shall”, in the first place where it occurs, substitute “The sheriff clerk of—

(a) the sheriffdom in which the High Court is to sit, or

(b) the sheriff court district in which a trial in the sheriff court is to be held, shall”, and

(b) the word “such”, in the first place where it occurs, is repealed.

Section 68

David McLetchie

415 In section 68, page 86, line 14, leave out from <for> to <relevant”> and insert <at beginning insert “subject to subsection (1A),”>
In section 68, page 86, leave out lines 17 to 19 and insert—

“(1A) In relation to criminal proceedings, a person is qualified and liable to serve as a juror despite being over 65 years of age.”

After section 68

The Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) (Scotland) Act 1980 is amended as follows.

(2) In section 1 (qualification of jurors)—

(a) in subsection (1), after “below” insert “and to section 1A”,

(b) in subsection (2), after “service” in the second place where it occurs insert “in relation to civil proceedings”,

(c) in subsection (3), after “service” in the first place where it occurs insert “in relation to civil proceedings”,

(d) in subsection (5), after “above” insert “or under section 1A”, and

(e) in subsection (6), after paragraph (a) insert—

“(aa) section 1A;”.

(3) After section 1 insert—

“Excusal of jurors in relation to criminal proceedings

(1) A person who is qualified under section 1(1) but is among the persons listed in Part III of Schedule 1 to this Act (being persons excusable as of right from jury service) is to be excused from jury service in relation to criminal proceedings on any occasion where the person—

(a) has been required to provide information under section 3(2) of the Jurors (Scotland) Act 1825; and

(b) gives written notice to the sheriff principal that the person wishes to be excused, before the end of the period of 7 days beginning with the day on which the person receives the requirement.

(2) A person who is qualified under section 1(1) but is among the persons listed in Group C of Part III of Schedule 1 to this Act is to be excused from jury service in relation to criminal proceedings on any occasion where—

(a) the person has been required to provide information under section 3(2) of the Jurors (Scotland) Act 1825; and

(b) the person’s commanding officer certifies to the sheriff principal that it would be prejudicial to the efficiency of the force of which the person is a member were the person required to be absent from duty.”.
(4) In section 3(1)(a) (offences in connection with jury service), after “been” insert “required to provide information under section 3(2) of the Jurors (Scotland) Act 1825 or”.

Section 69

David McLetchie

417 In section 69, page 86, line 30, at end insert <and ( ) persons who have attained the age of 71;>

Section 70

Kenny MacAskill

136 In section 70, page 89, line 34, leave out <and Wales>

Kenny MacAskill

137 In section 70, page 90, line 21, leave out from <body> to end of line 23 and insert <health and social care body mentioned in paragraphs (a) to (e) of section 1(5) of the Health and Social Care (Reform) Act (Northern Ireland) 2009 (c.1).>

Section 72

Kenny MacAskill

138 In section 72, page 94, line 29, leave out <Law> and insert <Justice>

Trish Godman

9 In section 72, page 94, line 39, at end insert <, other than an offence under section 11A (engaging in a paid-for sexual activity) or 11B (advertising paid-for sexual activities)>

Margo MacDonald

9A As an amendment to amendment 9, line 2, after <activity)> insert <, 11AA (causing alarm etc. by engaging in a paid-for sexual activity)>

Kenny MacAskill

139 In section 72, page 94, line 41, leave out <27> and insert <37>

Kenny MacAskill

140 In section 72, page 94, line 42, leave out <penetrative>

Kenny MacAskill

141 In section 72, page 95, line 1, leave out <31> and insert <42>
In section 72, page 95, line 2, leave out <35> and insert <46>

In section 72, page 95, line 3, at end insert—

<( ) an offence under section (Slavery, servitude and forced or compulsory labour) (slavery, servitude and forced or compulsory labour) of the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Act 2010 (asp 00).>

In section 72, page 95, line 14, leave out <42> and insert <54>

Section 74

In section 74, page 96, line 23, after <station> insert <in Scotland>

In section 74, page 97, line 5, leave out from  to end of line and insert—

<(a) a requirement under section 117A(2) (surrender of passports: England and Wales and Northern Ireland), or
(b) a requirement under section 117B(2) (surrender of passports: Scotland).”>.

In section 74, page 97, line 5, at end insert—

<(1C) A person may be prosecuted, tried and punished for any offence under subsection (1B)—
(a) in any sheriff court district in which the person is apprehended or is in custody, or
(b) in such sheriff court district as the Lord Advocate may determine, as if the offence had been committed in that district (and the offence is, for all purposes incidental to or consequential on the trial or punishment, to be deemed to have been committed in that district).”>

After section 74

After section 74, insert—
Sex offender notification requirements

(1) The Sexual Offences Act 2003 (c.42) is amended as follows.

(2) In section 85 (notification requirements: periodic notification)—
   (a) in subsection (1), for “period of one year” substitute “applicable period”,
   (b) in subsection (3), for “period referred to in subsection (1)” substitute “applicable period”, and
   (c) after subsection (4) insert—

   “(5) In this section, the “applicable period” means—

   (a) in any case where subsection (6) applies to the relevant offender, such period not exceeding one year as the Scottish Ministers may prescribe in regulations, and
   (b) in any other case, the period of one year.

   (6) This subsection applies to the relevant offender if the last home address notified by the offender under section 83(1) or 84(1) or subsection (1) was the address or location of such a place as is mentioned in section 83(7)(b).”.

(3) In section 86 (notification requirements: travel outside the United Kingdom), subsection (4) is repealed.

(4) In section 87 (method of notification and related matters), subsection (6) is repealed.

(5) In section 96 (information about release or transfer), subsection (4) is repealed.

(6) In section 138 (orders and regulations)—
   (a) in subsection (2), after “84,” insert “85,”, and
   (b) after subsection (3) insert—

   “(4) Orders or regulations made by the Scottish Ministers under this Act may—

   (a) make different provision for different purposes,
   (b) include supplementary, incidental, consequential, transitional, transitory or saving provisions.”.

After section 75

Kenny MacAskill

146 After section 75, insert—

<Risk of sexual harm orders: spent convictions

In section 7 of the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974 (c.53) (limitations on rehabilitation under the Act), in subsection (2), after paragraph (bb) insert—

“(bc) in any proceedings on an application under section 2, 4 or 5 of the Protection of Children and Prevention of Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2005 (asp 9) or in any appeal under section 6 of that Act;”.

70
Section 77

Kenny MacAskill

523 In section 77, page 98, leave out lines 5 to 10

Kenny MacAskill

524 In section 77, page 98, line 14, leave out from <(including) to <operation)> in line 15

Kenny MacAskill

525 In section 77, page 98, line 22, at end insert—

<( ) After that section insert—

“10A Authorisation of surveillance: joint surveillance operations
In the case of a joint surveillance operation, where authorisation is sought for the carrying out of any form of conduct to which this Act applies, authorisation may be granted by any one of the persons having power to grant authorisation for the carrying out of that conduct.”:>

Kenny MacAskill

526 In section 77, page 98, line 27, at end insert—

<( ) In section 14 (approval required for authorisations to take effect)—
(a) in subsection (5)(b), after “General” insert “or the Deputy Director General”, and
(b) subsection (7) is repealed.>

Kenny MacAskill

527 In section 77, page 98, line 27, at end insert—

<( ) In section 16 (appeals against decisions by Surveillance Commissioners), in subsection (1), after “General” insert “or the Deputy Director General”.>

Kenny MacAskill

528 In section 77, page 98, line 30, leave out from <, where> to <surveillance,> in line 31

Section 78

Kenny MacAskill

529 In section 78, page 98, line 39, leave out <(3)> and insert <(3A)>

Kenny MacAskill

530 In section 78, page 99, line 1, leave out <(3A)> and insert <(3AA)>

Kenny MacAskill

531 In section 78, page 99, line 8, leave out <or>
In section 78, page 99, line 18, leave out \<(3A)\> and insert \<(3AA)\>

In section 78, page 99, line 23, at end insert—

\<(\ ) in paragraph (cc) of subsection (6), after “General” insert “, or Deputy Director General,”.\>

In section 78, page 99, line 26, leave out \<(5)(a)\> and insert \<(5)\>

In section 78, page 99, line 26, leave out \<“where”\> and insert \<“Where”\>

In section 78, page 99, line 29, after \<operation,\> insert \<the person referred to in subsection (2)(h) is\>.

In section 79, page 99, line 39, at end insert—

\<(\ ) In section 113B (enhanced criminal record certificates), in subsection (3), for the words from “, or” immediately following paragraph (a) to the end of paragraph (b), substitute “(or states that there is no such matter or information), and (b) if the applicant is subject to notification requirements under Part 2 of the Sexual Offences Act 2003 (c.42), states that fact.”.\>

In section 79, page 100, line 1, leave out \<section 113B\> and insert \<that section\>

After section 79

After section 79, insert—

\<Rehabilitation of offenders\>

Spent alternatives to prosecution: Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974

(1) The Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974 (c.53) is amended as follows.

(2) After section 8A (protection afforded to spent cautions), insert—

“8B Protection afforded to spent alternatives to prosecution: Scotland
(1) For the purposes of this Act, a person has been given an alternative to prosecution in respect of an offence if the person (whether before or after the commencement of this section)—

(a) has been given a warning in respect of the offence by—

(i) a constable in Scotland, or

(ii) a procurator fiscal,

(b) has accepted, or is deemed to have accepted—

(i) a conditional offer issued in respect of the offence under section 302 of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.46), or

(ii) a compensation offer issued in respect of the offence under section 302A of that Act,

(c) has had a work order made against the person in respect of the offence under section 303ZA of that Act,

(d) has been given a fixed penalty notice in respect of the offence under section 129 of the Antisocial Behaviour etc. (Scotland) Act 2004 (asp 8),

(e) has accepted an offer made by a procurator fiscal in respect of the offence to undertake an activity or treatment or to receive services or do any other thing as an alternative to prosecution, or

(f) in respect of an offence under the law of a country or territory outside Scotland, has been given, or has accepted or is deemed to have accepted, anything corresponding to a warning, offer, order or notice falling within paragraphs (a) to (e) under the law of that country or territory.

(2) In this Act, references to an “alternative to prosecution” are to be read in accordance with subsection (1).

(3) Schedule 3 to this Act (protection for spent alternatives to prosecution: Scotland) has effect.

(3) After section 9A (unauthorised disclosure of spent cautions), insert—

“9B Unauthorised disclosure of spent alternatives to prosecution: Scotland

(1) In this section—

(a) “official record” means a record that—

(i) contains information about persons given an alternative to prosecution in respect of an offence, and

(ii) is kept for the purposes of its functions by a court, police force, Government department, part of the Scottish Administration or other local or public authority in Scotland,

(b) “relevant information” means information imputing that a named or otherwise identifiable living person has committed, been charged with, prosecuted for or given an alternative to prosecution in respect of an offence which is the subject of an alternative to prosecution which has become spent,

(c) “subject of the information”, in relation to relevant information, means the named or otherwise identifiable living person to whom the information relates.
Subsection (3) applies to a person who, in the course of the person’s official duties (anywhere in the United Kingdom), has or has had custody of or access to an official record or the information contained in an official record.

The person commits an offence if the person—

(a) obtains relevant information in the course of the person’s official duties,
(b) knows or has reasonable cause to suspect that the information is relevant information, and
(c) discloses the information to another person otherwise than in the course of the person’s official duties.

Subsection (3) is subject to the terms of an order under subsection (6).

In proceedings for an offence under subsection (3), it is a defence for the accused to show that the disclosure was made—

(a) to the subject of the information or to a person whom the accused reasonably believed to be the subject of the information, or
(b) to another person at the express request of the subject of the information or of a person whom the accused reasonably believed to be the subject of the information.

The Scottish Ministers may by order provide for the disclosure of relevant information derived from an official record to be excepted from the provisions of subsection (3) in cases or classes of cases specified in the order.

A person guilty of an offence under subsection (3) is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding level 4 on the standard scale.

A person commits an offence if the person obtains relevant information from an official record by means of fraud, dishonesty or bribery.

A person guilty of an offence under subsection (8) is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding level 5 on the standard scale, or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 6 months, or to both.”.

After Schedule 2 (protection for spent convictions) insert—

“SCHEDULE 3

PROTECTION FOR SPENT ALTERNATIVES TO PROSECUTION: SCOTLAND

Preliminary

1 (1) For the purposes of this Act, an alternative to prosecution given to any person (whether before or after the commencement of this Schedule) becomes spent—

(a) in the case of—

(i) a warning referred to in paragraph (a) of subsection (1) of section 8B, or

(ii) a fixed penalty notice referred to in paragraph (d) of that subsection,

at the time the warning or notice is given,

(b) in any other case, at the end of the relevant period.

The relevant period in relation to an alternative to prosecution is the period of 3 months beginning on the day on which the alternative to prosecution is given.
(3) Sub-paragraph (1)(a) is subject to sub-paragraph (5).
(4) Sub-paragraph (2) is subject to sub-paragraph (6).
(5) If a person who is given a fixed penalty notice referred to in section 8B(1)(d) in respect of an offence is subsequently prosecuted and convicted of the offence, the notice—
   (a) becomes spent at the end of the rehabilitation period for the offence, and
   (b) is to be treated as not having become spent in relation to any period before the end of that rehabilitation period.
(6) If a person who is given an alternative to prosecution (other than one to which sub-paragraph (1)(a) applies) in respect of an offence is subsequently prosecuted and convicted of the offence—
   (a) the relevant period in relation to the alternative to prosecution ends at the same time as the rehabilitation period for the offence ends, and
   (b) if the conviction occurs after the end of the period referred to sub-paragraph (2), the alternative to prosecution is to be treated as not having become spent in relation to any period before the end of the rehabilitation period for the offence.

2 (1) In this Schedule, “ancillary circumstances”, in relation to an alternative to prosecution, means any circumstances of the following—
   (a) the offence in respect of which the alternative to prosecution is given or the conduct constituting the offence,
   (b) any process preliminary to the alternative to prosecution being given (including consideration by any person of how to deal with the offence and the procedure for giving the alternative to prosecution),
   (c) any proceedings for the offence which took place before the alternative to prosecution was given (including anything that happens after that time for the purpose of bringing the proceedings to an end),
   (d) any judicial review proceedings relating to the alternative to prosecution,
   (e) in the case of an offer referred to in paragraph (e) of subsection (1) of section 8B, anything done or undergone in pursuance of the terms of the offer.

(2) Where an alternative to prosecution is given in respect of two or more offences, references in sub-paragraph (1) to the offence in respect of which the alternative to prosecution is given includes a reference to each of the offences.
(3) In this Schedule, “proceedings before a judicial authority” has the same meaning as in section 4.

Protection for spent alternatives to prosecution and ancillary circumstances

3 (1) A person who is given an alternative to prosecution in respect of an offence is, from the time the alternative to prosecution becomes spent, to be treated for all purposes in law as a person who has not committed, been charged with or prosecuted for, or been given an alternative to prosecution in respect of, the offence.

(2) Despite any enactment or rule of law to the contrary—
(a) where an alternative to prosecution given to a person in respect of an offence has become spent, evidence is not admissible in any proceedings before a judicial authority exercising its jurisdiction or functions in Scotland to prove that the person has committed, been charged with or prosecuted for, or been given an alternative to prosecution in respect of, the offence,

(b) a person must not, in any such proceedings, be asked any question relating to the person’s past which cannot be answered without acknowledging or referring to an alternative to prosecution that has become spent or any ancillary circumstances, and

(c) if a person is asked such a question in any such proceedings, the person is not required to answer it.

(3) Sub-paragraphs (1) and (2) do not apply in relation to any proceedings—

(a) for the offence in respect of which the alternative to prosecution was given, and

(b) which are not part of the ancillary circumstances.

4 (1) This paragraph applies where a person (“A”) is asked a question, otherwise than in proceedings before a judicial authority, seeking information about—

(a) A’s or another person’s previous conduct or circumstances,

(b) offences previously committed by A or the other person, or

(c) alternatives to prosecution previously given to A or the other person.

(2) The question is to be treated as not relating to alternatives to prosecution that have become spent or to any ancillary circumstances and may be answered accordingly.

(3) A is not to be subjected to any liability or otherwise prejudiced in law because of a failure to acknowledge or disclose an alternative to prosecution that has become spent or any ancillary circumstances in answering the question.

5 (1) An obligation imposed on a person (“A”) by a rule of law or by the provisions of an agreement or arrangement to disclose any matter to another person does not extend to requiring A to disclose an alternative to prosecution (whether one given to A or another person) that has become spent or any ancillary circumstances.

(2) An alternative to prosecution that has become spent or any ancillary circumstances, or any failure to disclose an alternative to prosecution that has become spent or any ancillary circumstances, is not a ground for dismissing or excluding a person from any office, profession, occupation or employment, or for prejudicing the person in any way in any occupation or employment.

6 The Scottish Ministers may by order—

(a) exclude or modify the application of any of paragraphs (a) to (c) of paragraph 3(2) in relation to questions put in such circumstances as may be specified in the order,

(b) provide for exceptions from any of the provisions of paragraphs 4 and 5 in such cases or classes of case, or in relation to alternatives to prosecution of such descriptions, as may be specified in the order.

7 Paragraphs 3 to 5 do not affect—
(a) the operation of an alternative to prosecution, or
(b) the operation of an enactment by virtue of which, because of an alternative to prosecution, a person is subject to a disqualification, disability, prohibition or other restriction or effect for a period extending beyond the time at which the alternative to prosecution becomes spent.

8 (1) Section 7(2), (3) and (4) apply for the purpose of this Schedule as follows.

(2) Subsection (2), apart from paragraphs (b) and (d), applies to the determination of any issue, and the admission or requirement of evidence, relating to alternatives to prosecution previously given to a person and to ancillary circumstances as it applies to matters relating to a person’s previous convictions and circumstances ancillary thereto.

(3) Subsection (3) applies to evidence of alternatives to prosecution previously given to a person and ancillary circumstances as it applies to evidence of a person’s previous convictions and the circumstances ancillary thereto.

(4) For that purpose, subsection (3) has effect as if—
   (a) a reference to subsection (2) or (4) of section 7 were a reference to that subsection as applied by this paragraph, and
   (b) the words “or proceedings to which section 8 below applies” were omitted.

(5) Subsection (4) applies for the purpose of excluding the application of paragraph 3.

(6) For that purpose, subsection (4) has effect as if the words “(other than proceedings to which section 8 below applies)” were omitted.

(7) References in the provisions applied by this paragraph to section 4(1) are to be read as references to paragraph 3.”

Kenny MacAskill

448 After section 79, insert—

<Medical services in prisons

Medical services in prisons

(1) For section 3A of the Prisons (Scotland) Act 1989 (c.45) (medical services in prisons) substitute—

“3A Medical officers for prisons

(1) The Scottish Ministers must designate one or more medical officers for each prison.

(2) A person may be designated as a medical officer for a prison only if the person is a registered medical practitioner performing primary medical services for prisoners at the prison under the National Health Service (Scotland) Act 1978 (c.29).

(3) A medical officer has the functions that are conferred on a medical officer for a prison by or under this Act or any other enactment.

(4) A medical officer is not an officer of the prison for the purposes of this Act.
(5) Rules under section 39 of this Act may provide for the governor of a prison to authorise the carrying out by officers of the prison of a search of any person who is in, or is seeking to enter, the prison for the purpose of providing medical services for any prisoner at the prison.

(6) Nothing in rules made by virtue of subsection (5) allows the governor to authorise an officer of a prison to require a person to remove any of the person’s clothing other than an outer coat, jacket, headgear, gloves and footwear.”.

(2) In section 41D of that Act (unlawful disclosure of information by medical officers), for subsection (1) substitute—

“(1) This section applies to—

(a) a medical officer for a prison, and

(b) any person acting under the supervision of such a medical officer.”.

(3) In section 107 of the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 (c.33) (officers of contracted out prisons), for subsections (6) to (8) substitute—

“(6) The director must designate one or more medical officers for the prison.

(7) A person may be designated as a medical officer for the prison only if the person is a registered medical practitioner performing primary medical services for prisoners at the prison under the National Health Service (Scotland) Act 1978 (c.29).”.

(4) In section 110 of that Act (consequential modifications of the 1989 Act etc.)—

(a) in each of subsections (3) and (4), for “3A(6)” substitute “3A(5) and (6)”;

(b) subsection (4A) is repealed, and

(c) in subsection (6), for “3A(1) to (5) (medical services)” substitute “3A(1) and (2) (medical officers)”.

(5) In section 111(3) of that Act (intervention by the Scottish Ministers), in paragraph (c), after “prison” insert “and the medical officer or officers for the prison”.

Section 80

Angela Constance

413 In section 80, page 100, line 29, after <victims> insert <(including children and young people)>

Section 89

Bill Aitken

147 In section 89, page 106, line 37, leave out <review all the> and insert <disclose to the accused all>

Bill Aitken

148 In section 89, page 106, line 38, leave out from <and> to end of line 14 on page 107
Bill Aitken
149 In section 89, page 107, line 15, leave out <(5)> and insert <(2)>

Section 90

Bill Aitken
150 In section 90, page 107, line 19, leave out <(5) or (6)> and insert <(2)>

Bill Aitken
151 In section 90, page 107, leave out lines 24 to 26 and insert <and
(b) disclose to the accused any such information not already disclosed under section 89(2).>

Bill Aitken
152 In section 90, page 107, line 28, leave out <(5) or (6)> and insert <(2)>

Section 91

Bill Aitken
153 In section 91, page 108, line 5, leave out <89(5) or 90(2)> and insert <89(2) or 90(2)(b)>

Section 92

Bill Aitken
154 In section 92, page 108, line 10, leave out <89(5), 90(2)(c), 94(1)(c) or 95(3)(c)> and insert <89(2) or 90(2)(b)>

Section 93

Bill Aitken
155 In section 93, page 108, line 20, leave out <(5)> and insert <(2)>

Section 94

Bill Aitken
Supported by: Robert Brown

156 Leave out section 94
Section 95

Bill Aitken
Supported by: Robert Brown

Leave out section 95

Section 96

Bill Aitken

In section 96, page 110, line 28, leave out <89(5), 90(2)(c), 94(1)(c) or 95(3)(c)> and insert <89(2) or 90(2)(b)>

Section 97

Bill Aitken

In section 97, page 110, line 36, leave out <89(5), 90(2)(c), 94(1)(c) or 95(3)(c)> and insert <89(2) or 90(2)(b)>

Section 98

Bill Aitken

In section 98, page 111, line 5, leave out <89(5), 90(2)(c), 94(1)(c) or 95(3)(c)> and insert <89(2) or 90(2)(b)>

Section 100

Bill Aitken

In section 100, page 111, line 36, leave out <89(5), 90(2)(c), 94(1)(c) or 95(3)(c)> and insert <89(2) or 90(2)(b)>

Section 102

Bill Aitken

In section 102, page 112, line 26, leave out from <89(5)> to <information> in line 28 and insert <89(2) or 90(2)(b) the prosecutor is required to disclose an item of information to an accused>

Bill Aitken

In section 102, page 113, line 5, leave out from <89(5)> to end of line 6 and insert <89(2) or, as the case may be, 90(2)(b)>
Section 106

Bill Aitken

164 In section 106, page 115, line 14, leave out <89(5), 90(2)(c), 94(1)(c) or 95(3)(c)> and insert <89(2) or 90(2)(b)>

Section 111

Bill Aitken

165 In section 111, page 117, line 6, leave out <89(5), 90(2)(c), 94(1)(c) or 95(3)(c)> and insert <89(2) or 90(2)(b)>

Section 116

Bill Aitken

166 In section 116, page 119, line 24, leave out from <89(5)> to end of line 27 and insert <89(2), (b) section 90(1) and (2), (c) section 93(2) (where it first occurs),>

Section 117

Angela Constance

24 In section 117, page 120, line 10, at end insert <, or (b) to determine or control that conduct despite being able to appreciate the nature or wrongfulness of it.>

Kenny MacAskill

167 In section 117, page 120, line 31, leave out <it> and insert <such abnormality>

Section 121

Kenny MacAskill

168 In section 121, page 123, leave out lines 2 and 3 and insert—<3A> No order may be made under subsection (1) unless a draft of the statutory instrument containing the order has been laid before and approved by resolution of the Scottish Parliament.>

Section 122

Kenny MacAskill

169 In section 122, page 125, line 1, leave out from <5,> to <29> in line 2 and insert <5 and 11>
Section 123

Robert Brown

385 Leave out section 123

After section 124

Kenny MacAskill

170 After section 124, insert—

<Licensing of street trading: food hygiene certificates>

(1) Section 39 of the 1982 Act (street traders’ licences) is amended as follows.

(2) In subsection (4), for the words from “the requirements” to the end substitute “such requirements as the Scottish Ministers may by order made by statutory instrument specify”.

(3) After subsection (4), insert—

“(5) An order under subsection (4) may specify requirements by reference to provision contained in another enactment.

(6) A statutory instrument containing an order made under subsection (4) is subject to annulment in pursuance of a resolution of the Scottish Parliament.”.

Section 125

Kenny MacAskill

171 In section 125, page 128, line 24, at beginning insert <In>

Kenny MacAskill

172 In section 125, page 128, line 24, leave out from <is> to <In> in line 26 and insert <, in>

Cathie Craigie

2 In section 125, page 128, line 25, leave out subsection (2)

Cathie Craigie

3 In section 125, page 128, line 26, leave out subsection (3)

Cathie Craigie

Supported by: Robert Brown

4 Leave out section 125
After section 127

Sandra White

516 After section 127, insert—

<Control of lap dancing and other adult entertainment venues

(1) The 1982 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In section 41(2) (definition of place of public entertainment), after paragraph (aa) insert—

“(ab) adult entertainment venues (as defined in section 45A) in relation to which Schedule 2 (as modified for the purposes of that section) have effect, while being used as such;”

(3) The title of Part 3 becomes “Control of sex shops and adult entertainment venues”.

(4) After section 45 insert—

“45A Control of lap dancing and other adult entertainment venues

(1) A local authority may resolve that Schedule 2, as modified for the purposes of this section, is to have effect in their area in relation to adult entertainment venues; and, if they do so resolve, that Schedule (as so modified) has effect from the day specified in the resolution.

(2) The day referred to in subsection (1) must not be before the expiry of the period of one month beginning with the day on which the resolution is passed.

(3) A local authority must, not later than 28 days before the day referred to in subsection (1), publish notice that they have passed a resolution under this section in a newspaper circulating in their area.

(4) The notice is to state the general effect of Schedule 2, as modified for the purposes of this section.

(5) For the purposes of this section, Schedule 2 is modified as follows—

(a) in paragraph 1, sub-paragraphs (b)(ii) (and the word “or” immediately preceding it) and (c) are omitted;

(b) for paragraph 2 substitute—

“2 In this Schedule, “adult entertainment venue” has the same meaning as in section 45A.”;

(c) in paragraph 9—

(i) after sub-paragraph (5)(c) insert—

“(ca) where it is intended to sell alcohol in the adult entertainment venue, an application for the grant, renewal or transfer of a premises licence under Part 3 of the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 (asp 16) relating to that venue has been refused;”; and

(ii) after sub-paragraph (6) insert—

“(6A) A local authority may refuse an application for the grant or renewal of a licence despite the fact that a premises licence under Part 3 of the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 (asp 16) is in effect in relation to the adult entertainment venue.”;
(d) in paragraph 25, for “section 45” in each place where those words occur, substitute “section 45A”; and

(e) for “sex shop”, in each place where those words occur, substitute “adult entertainment venue”.

(6) In this section, “adult entertainment venue” means any premises, vehicle, vessel or stall used for a business which consists to a significant degree of providing relevant entertainment before a live audience; and, for the purposes of that definition—

“audience” includes an audience of one;

“display of nudity” means—

(a) in the case of a woman, exposure of her breasts, nipples, pubic area, genitals or anus;

(b) in the case of a man, exposure of his pubic area, genitals or anus;

“relevant entertainment” means—

(a) any live performance; or

(b) any live display of nudity,

which is of such a nature that, ignoring financial gain, it must reasonably be assumed to be provided solely or principally for the purpose of sexually stimulating any member of the audience (whether by verbal or other means).”.

Section 128

Kenny MacAskill

173 In section 128, page 129, line 25, at end insert—

( ) in paragraph 2(3)(b), after “application” insert “(other than the date and place of birth of any person)”;

( ) in paragraph 2(8)(a), after “application” insert “(other than the date and place of birth of any person)”.

Section 129

Kenny MacAskill

174 Leave out section 129

After section 130

Bill Aitken

460 After section 130, insert—

Premises licence applications: crime prevention objective

In section 23(5) of the 2005 Act (grounds for refusal of premises licence application), after paragraph (b), insert—
“(ba) that the appropriate chief constable has made a recommendation under section 21(5) that the application be refused.”.

After section 131

Kenny MacAskill

175 After section 131, insert—

<Reviews of premises licences: notification of determinations

(1) The 2005 Act is amended as follows.

(2) After section 39 (Licensing Board’s powers on review), insert—

“39A Notification of determinations

(1) Where a Licensing Board, at a review hearing—

(a) decides to take one of the steps mentioned in section 39(2), or

(b) decides not to take one of those steps,

the Board must give notice of the decision to each of the persons mentioned in subsection (2).

(2) The persons referred to in subsection (1) are—

(a) the holder of the premises licence, and

(b) where the decision is taken in connection with a premises licence review application, the applicant.

(3) Where subsection (1)(a) applies, the holder of the premises licence may, by notice to the clerk of the Board, require the Board to give a statement of reasons for the decision.

(4) Where—

(a) subsection (1)(a) or (b) applies, and

(b) the decision is taken in connection with a premises licence review application,

the applicant may, by notice to the clerk of the Board, require the Board to give a statement of reasons for the decision.

(5) Where the clerk of a Board receives a notice under subsection (3) or (4), the Board must issue a statement of the reasons for the decision to—

(a) the person giving the notice, and

(b) any other person to whom the Board gave notice under subsection (1).

(6) A statement of reasons under subsection (5) must be issued—

(a) by such time, and

(b) in such form and manner,

as may be prescribed.”.>
After section 132

Kenny MacAskill

176 After section 132, insert—

<Premises licence applications: food hygiene certificates

(1) Section 50 of the 2005 Act (certificates as to planning, building standards and food hygiene) is amended as follows.

(2) In subsection (7), for the words from “the requirements” to the end substitute “such requirements as the Scottish Ministers may, by order, specify.”.

(3) After subsection (7), insert—

“(7A) An order under subsection (7) may specify requirements by reference to provision contained in another enactment.”.

(4) In subsection (8)(c), for “the 1990 Act” substitute “section 5 of the Food Safety Act 1990 (c.16)”.

George Foulkes

542 After section 132, insert—

<Premises licence applications: disability compliance statements

In section 20 of the 2005 Act (application for premises licence), after subsection (4)(f), insert—

“(fa) a statement of compliance with Part 3 of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995, including information as to where reasonable adjustments have been or will be made to remove barriers to access for disabled people.”.

Robert Brown

543 After section 132, insert—

<Provisional premises licences

(1) Section 45 (provisional premises licence) of the 2005 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In subsection (6), for “2 years” substitute “5 years”.

(3) In subsection (8), paragraph (b) and the word “and” immediately preceding it are repealed.

(4) In subsection (10), for paragraphs (a) and (b) substitute—

“(a) for subsection (2) there were substituted—

“(2) An application under subsection (1) must be accompanied by—

(a) a plan sufficient to identify the site of the subject premises and give a general indication of their size,

(b) a document giving a general indication of—

(i) the anticipated capacity of the premises,

(ii) the hours during which it is proposed to serve alcohol on the premises,
(iii) the extent to which it is proposed to allow children or young persons entry to the premises, and

(c) the certificate required by section 50(2),”, and

(b) subsections (4) and (5) were omitted.”.

(5) After subsection (10) insert—

“(10A) Sections 21 to 32 have effect in relation to any provisional premises licence application and to any provisional premises licence as if references to—

(a) the operating plan were read as references to the document required under section 20(2)(b) (as substituted by subsection (10)(a)), and

(b) the layout plan were read as references to the plan required under section 20(2)(a) (as so substituted).”.

Section 134

Kenny MacAskill

539 In section 134, page 134, line 17, leave out from <after> to end of line 22 and insert <in sub-paragraph (4), after “Board” in the second place where it appears insert “or to a member of staff provided under paragraph 8(1)(b)”>

After section 134

Kenny MacAskill

449 After section 134, insert—

<Extended hours applications: notification period

(1) Section 69 of the 2005 Act (notification of extended hours application) is amended as follows.

(2) After subsection (3), add—

“(4) Subsections (5) and (6) apply where the Licensing Board is satisfied that the application requires to be dealt with quickly.

(5) Subsections (2) and (3) have effect in relation to the application as if the references to the period of 10 days were references to such shorter period of not less than 24 hours as the Board may determine.

(6) Subsection (3) has effect in relation to the application as if for the word “must” there were substituted “may”.>.

Section 136

Kenny MacAskill

177 In section 136, page 135, line 3, at end insert—

<“(ba) the notice does not include a recommendation under section 73(4),>
In section 136, page 135, leave out lines 22 to 27 and insert—

(a) hold a hearing for the purposes of considering and determining the application, and

(b) after having regard to the circumstances in which the personal licence previously held expired or, as the case may be, was surrendered—

(i) refuse the application, or

(ii) grant the application.”.

After section 137

After section 137, insert—

<Appeals

In section 131(2) of the 2005 Act (appeals), the words “by way of stated case, at the instance of the appellant,” are repealed.>

Schedule 4

In schedule 4, page 149, line 11, leave out <22(2) or>

In schedule 4, page 150, leave out lines 18 to 21

Leave out section 140

Leave out section 142

In section 143, page 138, line 32, at end insert—

<( ) an order under section (Mutual recognition of judgments and probation decisions)(1),>
Kenny MacAskill
540 In section 143, page 138, line 32, at end insert—

<(  ) an order under section (Convictions by courts in other EU member States)(2),>

Kenny MacAskill
450 In section 143, page 138, line 32, at end insert—

<(  ) an order under section (European evidence warrants)(1),>

Bill Aitken
185 In section 143, page 138, line 32, at end insert—

<(  ) an order under section (New evidence)(10),>

Kenny MacAskill
186 In section 143, page 138, leave out line 33

Kenny MacAskill
187 In section 143, page 138, line 33, at end insert—

<(  ) an order under section 146(1) containing provisions which modify any enactment (including this Act), or>

Kenny MacAskill
188 In section 143, page 138, line 34, leave out <146(1) or>

Robert Brown
392 In section 143, page 138, line 35, at end insert <or

(  ) an order under section 148(1) bringing into force section 17(1), (2) or (3),>

Robert Brown
549 In section 143, page 138, line 35, at end insert <or

(  ) an order under section 148(1) bringing into force section 38(1), (2), (3) or (4),>

Schedule 5

Kenny MacAskill
189 In schedule 5, page 151, line 35, at end insert—

<The Libel Act 1792 (c.60)

The Libel Act 1792 is repealed.

The Criminal Libel Act 1819 (c.8)

The Criminal Libel Act 1819 is repealed.

89
The Defamation Act 1952 (c.66)
In the Defamation Act 1952, section 17(2) is repealed.

Kenny MacAskill
451 In schedule 5, page 152, line 10, at end insert—
<The Law Officers Act 1944 (c.25)
In section 2(3) of the Law Officers Act 1944 (Lord Advocate and Solicitor General for Scotland), for the words from “three” to the end substitute “287 of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.46)”.
>

Kenny MacAskill
452 In schedule 5, page 152, line 12, leave out from <In> to <1974> and insert—
<(
) The Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974 is amended as follows.
 ( ) In section 1>

Kenny MacAskill
453 In schedule 5, page 152, line 15, at end insert—
<(
) In section 6(6)(bb) (convictions in service disciplinary proceedings), for “the Schedule” substitute “Schedule 1”.
 ( ) The Schedule (service disciplinary proceedings) is renumbered as Schedule 1.>

Kenny MacAskill
190 In schedule 5, page 152, line 24, at end insert—
<The Incest and Related Offences (Scotland) Act 1986 (c.36)
The Incest and Related Offences (Scotland) Act 1986 is repealed.>

Kenny MacAskill
191 In schedule 5, page 153, line 3, after <89> insert <, 111>

Kenny MacAskill
192 In schedule 5, page 153, line 3, at end insert—
<The Trade Union and Labour Relations (Consolidation) Act 1992 (c.52)
In section 243(4)(b) of the Trade Union and Labour Relations (Consolidation) Act 1992 (restriction of offence of conspiracy: Scotland), the words “or sedition” are repealed.>

Kenny MacAskill
193 In schedule 5, page 153, line 12, at end insert—
<The Criminal Procedure (Consequential Provisions) (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.40)
In Schedule 4 to the Criminal Procedure (Consequential Provisions) (Scotland) Act 1995 (minor and consequential amendments), in paragraph 44, sub-paragraph (2) is repealed.

Kenny MacAskill

386 In schedule 5, page 153, line 35, at end insert—

<In section 11 (certain offences committed outside Scotland)—

(a) in subsection (3), for “proceeded against, indicted” substitute “prosecuted”,
(b) in subsection (4), for “dealt with, indicted” substitute “prosecuted”.>

Kenny MacAskill

454 In schedule 5, page 153, line 35, at end insert—

<In section 17A (right of person accused of sexual offence to be told about restriction on conduct of defence: arrest), in subsection (1)—

(a) for paragraphs (za) and (a) substitute—

“(a) that his case at, or for the purposes of, any relevant hearing (within the meaning of section 288C(1A)) in the course of the proceedings may be conducted only by a lawyer,”, and
(b) in paragraph (c), for the words from “preliminary” to “trial” substitute “hearing”.

Kenny MacAskill

512 In schedule 5, page 153, line 35, at end insert—

<In section 18(8)(c) (power to take prints etc. under authority of a warrant unaffected by section), for “prints, impressions” substitute “relevant physical data”.

In section 19(1)(b) (samples etc. taken from person convicted of offence), the words “impression or”, in both places where they occur, are repealed.>

Kenny MacAskill

513 In schedule 5, page 154, line 4, at end insert—

<Section 20 (use of prints, samples etc.) is repealed.>

Kenny MacAskill

455 In schedule 5, page 154, line 5, at end insert—

<In section 35 (judicial examination), in subsection (4A)—

(a) for paragraphs (za) and (a) substitute—

“(a) that his case at, or for the purposes of, any relevant hearing (within the meaning of section 288C(1A)) in the course of the proceedings may be conducted only by a lawyer,”, and
(b) in paragraph (c), for the words from “preliminary” to “trial” substitute “hearing”.

91
Kenny MacAskill

514 In schedule 5, page 154, line 5, at end insert—

<In section 23A (bail and liberation where person already in custody)—

(a) in each of subsections (1) and (4), for “23 or 65(8C)” substitute “23, 65(8C) or 107A(2)(b)”, and

(b) in subsection (3), for “22A(3) or 23(7)” substitute “22A(3), 23(7) or 107A(2)(b)”.

Kenny MacAskill

456 In schedule 5, page 154, line 42, at end insert—

<In section 66 (service and lodging of indictment etc.), in subsection (6A)(a)—

(a) for sub-paragraphs (zi) and (i) substitute—

“(i) that his case at, or for the purposes of, any relevant hearing (within the meaning of section 288C(1A)) in the course of the proceedings (including at any commissioner proceedings) may be conducted only by a lawyer,”; and

(b) in sub-paragraph (iii), for the words from “preliminary” to “trial” substitute “hearing”.

In section 71 (first diet)—

(a) in subsection (A1), for the words “his defence at the trial” substitute “the conduct of his case at any relevant hearing in the course of the proceedings”;

(b) in subsection (B1)(c), for the words “before the trial diet” substitute “in relation to any hearing in the course of the proceedings”;

(c) in subsection (1A)(a), for “the trial” substitute “any hearing in the course of the proceedings”;

(d) in subsection (1B)(a), for “the trial” substitute “any hearing in the course of the proceedings”;

(e) in subsection (5A)(b), for the words “his defence at the trial” substitute “the conduct of his case at any relevant hearing in the course of the proceedings”; and

(f) after subsection (7), insert—

“(7A) In subsections (A1) and (5A)(b), “relevant hearing” means—

(a) in relation to proceedings mentioned in paragraph (a) of subsection (B1), any hearing at, or for the purposes of, which a witness is to give evidence,

(b) in relation to proceedings mentioned in paragraph (b) of that subsection, a hearing referred to in section 288E(2A),

(c) in relation to proceedings mentioned in paragraph (c) of that subsection, a hearing in respect of which an order is made under section 288F.”.>

Kenny MacAskill

457 In schedule 5, page 155, line 3, at end insert—
In section 79 (preliminary pleas and preliminary issues), in subsection (2)(b)(ii), after “under section” insert “22ZB(3)(b),”.

Kenny MacAskill

In schedule 5, page 155, line 23, at end insert—

In section 140 (citation), in subsection (2A)—

(a) for paragraph (a) substitute—

“(a) that his case at, or for the purposes of, any relevant hearing (within the meaning of section 288C(1A)) in the course of the proceedings (including at any commissioner proceedings) may be conducted only by a lawyer,”, and

(b) in paragraph (c), for the words “his defence at the trial” substitute “the conduct of his case at, or for the purposes of, the hearing”.

In section 144 (procedure at first diet), in subsection (3A)—

(a) for paragraph (a) substitute—

“(a) that his case at, or for the purposes of, any relevant hearing (within the meaning of section 288C(1A)) in the course of the proceedings may be conducted only by a lawyer,”, and

(b) in paragraph (c), for the words “his defence at the trial” substitute “the conduct of his case at, or for the purposes of, the hearing”.

In section 146 (plea of not guilty), in subsection (3A)—

(a) for paragraph (a) substitute—

“(a) that his case at, or for the purposes of, any relevant hearing (within the meaning of section 288C(1A)) in the course of the proceedings may be conducted only by a lawyer,”, and

(b) in paragraph (c), for the words “his defence at the trial” substitute “the conduct of his case at, or for the purposes of, the hearing”.

Kenny MacAskill

In schedule 5, page 155, line 31, leave out paragraphs 35 to 39

Kenny MacAskill

In schedule 5, page 157, line 8, at end insert—

<The Offensive Weapons Act 1996 (c.26)

In the Offensive Weapons Act 1996, section 5 is repealed.>

Kenny MacAskill

In schedule 5, page 157, line 8, at end insert—

<The Defamation Act 1996 (c.31)

In the Defamation Act 1996, section 20(2) is repealed.>
In schedule 5, page 157, line 10, leave out paragraph 44 and insert—

<(1) The Crime and Punishment (Scotland) Act 1997 is amended as follows.
(2) In section 9 (power to specify hospital unit), in subsection (1)(a), for “insane” substitute “found not criminally responsible or unfit for trial”.
(3) In section 13 (increase in sentences available to sheriff and district courts), subsection (2) is repealed.
(4) In section 56 (powers of the court on remand or committal of children and young persons), subsection (3) is repealed.>>

In schedule 5, page 157, line 28, at end insert—

<The Legal Deposit Libraries Act 2003 (c.28)
Section 10 of the Legal Deposit Libraries Act 2003 (exemption from liability: activities in relation to publications) is amended as follows—

(a) in subsection (1), the words “, or subject to any criminal liability,” are repealed,
(b) in subsection (2)(a), the words “in the case of liability in damages” are repealed,
(c) in subsection (3), the words “, or subject to any criminal liability,” are repealed,
(d) in subsection (4)(a), the words “in the case of liability in damages” are repealed,
(e) in subsection (6)(a), the words “, or subject to any criminal liability,” are repealed, and
(f) in subsection (8), the words “and criminal liability” are repealed.>>

In schedule 5, page 157, line 36, at end insert—

<The Criminal Procedure (Amendment) (Scotland) Act 2004 (asp 5)
In the Criminal Procedure (Amendment) (Scotland) Act 2004 the following provisions are repealed—

(a) in section 4 (prohibition on accused conducting case in person in certain cases), subsection (4),
(b) section 17 (bail conditions: remote monitoring of restrictions on movements), and
(c) in the schedule (further modifications of the 1995 Act), paragraph 55.>>

In schedule 5, page 158, line 36, at end insert <and

(ii) sub-paragraph (b) is repealed.>

In schedule 5, page 159, line 12, at end insert—

<The Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009 (asp 9)
In section 55(7) of the Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009 (offences committed outside the United Kingdom), for “proceeded against, indicted” substitute “prosecuted”.

Kenny MacAskill

198  In schedule 5, page 159, line 14, leave out <134> and insert <156>

Section 148

Robert Brown

393  In section 148, page 139, line 19, after <sections> insert <17(4) and>
Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill

3rd Groupings of Amendments for Stage 2

This document provides procedural information which will assist in preparing for and following proceedings on the above Bill. The information provided is as follows:

- the list of groupings (that is, the order in which amendments will be debated). Any procedural points relevant to each group are noted;
- a list of any amendments already debated;
- the text of amendments to be debated on the third day of Stage 2 consideration, set out in the order in which they will be debated. THIS LIST DOES NOT REPLACE THE MARSHALLED LIST, WHICH SETS OUT THE AMENDMENTS IN THE ORDER IN WHICH THEY WILL BE DISPOSED OF.

Groupings of amendments

Offence of stalking, offence of threatening, alarming or distressing behaviour
399, 400, 401, 402, 402A, 378, 544

Non-harassment orders – course of conduct
5, 6, 7

Presumption against short periods of imprisonment or detention
100, 101, 388, 1, 392, 393

Report on operation of sections 14 and 17
102

Pre-sentencing reports about organisations
103

Voluntary intoxication by alcohol – effect in sentencing
104

Mutual recognition of judgments and probation decisions
105, 184

Minimum sentence for having in a public place an article with a blade or point
10, 10A

Involvement in serious organised crime
344, 345, 346, 347, 348, 349, 350, 351, 358

Notes on amendments in this group
Amendment 347 pre-empts amendment 348
Offences aggravated by connection with serious organised crime (corroboration)
352

Directing serious organised crime
353, 354, 355, 356

Failure to report serious organised crime
357, 106, 359, 360

Genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes
107, 108

Clarification of existing offence prohibiting the carrying of offensive weapons
109, 11, 515

Extreme pornography – sounds accompanying images
361, 362, 363, 364, 366

Extreme pornography – excluded images
365, 367, 368, 369

Extreme pornography – sex offender notification
517

Voyeurism – additional forms of conduct
110

Sexual offences – defences in relation to offences against older children 111

Penalties for offences of brothel-keeping and living on the earnings of prostitution
370

Engaging in, advertising and facilitating paid-for sexual activities
8, 8A, 8B, 8C, 8D, 461, 9, 9A

People trafficking (and consequential provision)
371, 372, 373, 374, 375, 376, 377, 386, 387

Slavery, servitude and forced or compulsory labour
112, 143

Articles for use in fraud
113

Abolition of offences of sedition and leasing-making
114, 189, 192, 194, 196

Double jeopardy (Scottish Law Commission report)
115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 120A, 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 185
Children – age of criminal responsibility and minimum age of prosecution
379, 126, 127, 389, 549

Notes on amendments in this group
Amendment 379 pre-empts amendments 126 and 127

Offences – liability of partners
128, 129

Witness statements
130, 131

Victims’ representation at Parole Board hearings
403

Convictions in other UK or EU jurisdictions
518, 519, 520, 521, 522, 540

Power of sheriff or JP to grant warrants to police based outside sheriffdom 420

Bail conditions – remote monitoring requirements
132, 197

Prosecution on indictment – Scottish Law Officers
421, 422, 423, 424, 425, 426, 427, 451

Dockets and charges in sex cases
428

Remand and committal of children and young persons 541

Prohibition of personal conduct of case by accused 429, 454, 455, 456, 458, 459

Crown appeals
462, 463, 464, 465, 466, 467, 468, 469, 470, 471, 472, 473, 474, 475, 476, 477, 514

Retention of samples etc. – adults
478, 404, 405, 479, 406, 480, 407, 481, 408, 482, 408, 494, 499, 502, 503, 504, 512, 513

Notes on amendments in this group
Amendment 478 pre-empts amendment 404

Retention of samples etc. – alternatives to prosecution
418, 419

Retention of samples etc. – children referred to children’s hearings
409, 410, 380, 483, 484, 545, 381, 485, 486, 411, 546, 487, 488, 489, 490, 491, 492, 382, 493, 412
Notes on amendments in this group
Amendment 410 pre-empts amendments 380, 483, 484 and 545
Amendment 380 pre-empts amendments 483 and 484
Amendment 411 pre-empts amendments 546, 487, 488, 489, 490, 491, 492 and 382
Amendment 492 pre-empts amendment 382
Amendment 493 pre-empts amendment 412

Use of samples etc.
495, 496, 497, 498, 500, 501, 505, 506, 507, 508, 509, 510

Scottish Criminal Cases Review Commission – grounds for appeal
133, 134, 135

Prior statements by witnesses – abolition of competence test
430

Witness statements – use during trial
383

Child witnesses in proceedings for people trafficking offences
384

Witness anonymity orders
431, 432, 433, 434, 435, 436, 437, 438, 439, 440, 441

European evidence warrants
442, 450

Jurors in criminal trials
443, 415, 416, 511, 417

Data matching for detection of fraud etc.
136, 137

Closure of premises associated with human exploitation etc. (minor corrections etc.)
138, 139, 140, 141, 142, 144, 198

Foreign travel orders – surrender of passports
444, 445, 446

Sex offender notification requirements
145

Risk of sexual harm orders – spent convictions
146

Police and SCDEA – authorisation of surveillance
523, 524, 525, 526, 527, 528
Police and SCDEA – authorisation of interference with property
529, 530, 531, 532, 533, 534, 535, 536

Enhanced criminal record certificates: disclosure of sex offender notification requirements
537, 538

Rehabilitation of offenders – spent alternatives to prosecution
447, 452, 453

Medical services in prisons
448

Assistance for victim support
413

Prosecutor’s duty to disclose information
147, 148, 149, 150, 151, 152, 153, 154, 155, 156, 157, 158, 159, 160, 161, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166

Mental disorder and unfitness for trial
24, 167, 195

Conditions to which licences under the 1982 Act are to be subject 168

Licensing – powers of entry etc. (definition of “authorised civilian employee”) 169

Licensing of metal dealers
385

Licensing of street trading – food hygiene certificates
170

Licensing of market operators
171, 172, 2, 3, 4
   Notes on amendments in this group
   Amendment 172 pre-empts amendments 2 and 3

Control of lap dancing and other adult entertainment venues
516

Applications for licences
173

Provisions to be considered as part of the Alcohol (Scotland) Bill
174, 182, 186

Premises licence applications
460, 176, 542, 180
Reviews of premises licences – notification of determinations
175

Provisional premises licences
543

Occasional licences
539

Extended hours applications – notification period
449

Personal licence applications
177, 178, 181

Appeals against decisions of licensing board
179

Corruption in public bodies
183

Orders and regulations – circumstances in which affirmative procedure required 187, 188

Incest and related offences
190

Criminal law – revision
191, 193

Breach of undertakings – consequential modification
457

Amendments already debated

Community payback orders – consequential modifications
With 342 – 414
Present:

Bill Aitken (Convener)          Robert Brown
Bill Butler (Deputy Convener)  Angela Constance
Cathie Craigie                  Nigel Don
James Kelly                    Stewart Maxwell

Also present: Richard Baker, Trish Godman, Rhoda Grant, Johann Lamont and Bill Wilson.

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill: The Committee considered whether to take evidence at Stage 2 on amendment 516 lodged by Sandra White. It agreed to issue a call for written evidence, but not to take oral evidence on the amendment.

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill: The Committee considered the Bill at Stage 2 (Day 3).

The following amendments were agreed to (without division): 103, 105, 344, 346, 347, 349, 350 and 351.

The following amendments were agreed to (by division):

1 (For 4, Against 4, Abstentions 0; amendment agreed to on casting vote)
104 (For 5, Against 3, Abstentions 0)
10 (For 4, Against 4, Abstentions 0; amendment agreed to on casting vote).

The following amendments were disagreed to (by division):

100 (For 1, Against 7, Abstentions 0)
388 (For 1, Against 7, Abstentions 0)
102 (For 2, Against 3, Abstentions 3)
10A (For 1, Against 4, Abstentions 3)
352 (For 2, Against 6, Abstentions 0).

The following amendments were moved and, with the agreement of the Committee, withdrawn: 399 and 5.

Amendment 348 was pre-empted.

The following amendments were not moved: 400, 401, 6, 7, 101 and 345.
Sections 15, 16, and 18, schedule 2, sections 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, and 26 were agreed to without amendment.

Section 25 was agreed to as amended.

The Committee ended consideration of the Bill for the day, section 26 having been agreed to.
Scottish Parliament
Justice Committee
Tuesday 13 April 2010

[The Convener opened the meeting at 10:05]

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill

The Convener (Bill Aitken): Good morning, ladies and gentlemen. Let us get the meeting under way. The entire committee is present—there are no apologies. I remind everyone to switch off mobile phones to avoid any interruption to proceedings.

This morning, our principal business is stage 2 consideration of the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill. However, we have to deal with the preliminary matter whether to take evidence on amendment 516, in the name of Sandra White, on the licensing of lap dancing clubs and other adult entertainment venues. Paper J/S3/10/2/1, prepared by the clerk, explains the available options.

I am in the committee’s hands.

Stewart Maxwell (West of Scotland) (SNP): I think that this issue is slightly different from the other stage 2 amendment issues on which we decided to take oral evidence. Up until that point, we had taken zero evidence on those matters. As the Official Report and our stage 1 report show, we examined the area in question to some extent at stage 1; I am quite happy to receive further written evidence, but I do not think that we should delay stage 2 even further to take oral evidence.

The Convener: That is my own preferred option. Do members agree?

Members indicated agreement.

The Convener: In that case, we will seek written evidence, which will be provided within an appropriate timescale. The clerk will organise things.

Stewart Maxwell (West of Scotland) (SNP): I think that this issue is slightly different from the other stage 2 amendment issues on which we decided to take oral evidence. Up until that point, we had taken zero evidence on those matters. As the Official Report and our stage 1 report show, we examined the area in question to some extent at stage 1; I am quite happy to receive further written evidence, but I do not think that we should delay stage 2 even further to take oral evidence.

The Convener: That is my own preferred option. Do members agree?

Members indicated agreement.

The Convener: In that case, we will seek written evidence, which will be provided within an appropriate timescale. The clerk will organise things.

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill: Stage 2

10:07

The Convener: Item 2 is day 3 of stage 2 proceedings on the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill. The committee will not proceed beyond the end of part 3 today; indeed, it is highly likely that we will get only as far as the end of part 2, which—perhaps unfortunately—contains a concentration of complex and controversial items.

I welcome to the meeting the Cabinet Secretary for Justice, Kenny MacAskill, who will be joined by officials various. Indeed, I understand that his team will change over the course of the morning as we come to deal with different matters. I also welcome to the table non-committee members Bill Wilson, Rhoda Grant and Richard Baker. It is highly probable that other members will join us when items of particular interest come up. Members should have their copy of the bill, the third marshalled list and the third grouping of amendments for consideration.

Section 15—Non-harassment orders

The Convener: Amendment 399, in the name of Rhoda Grant, is grouped with amendments 400 to 402, 402A, 378 and 544.

Rhoda Grant (Highlands and Islands) (Lab): First, I pay tribute to Ann Moulds, her group Action Scotland Against Stalking and their vigorous campaign to highlight the problem of stalking in Scotland, which convinced me that I should lodge amendments 399 to 402.

The term “stalking” is used generally to describe repeated and unwelcome conduct that a person finds alarming or threatening. Due to the wide range of such behaviour, it is difficult to define stalking. Some of the behaviour may be perfectly innocent, such as making a telephone call or standing in the street, but becomes threatening and alarming due to the context of the relationship between the stalker and the victim. Therefore, stalking is a context-dependent crime the unacceptability of which depends on the context in which it occurs. Previously, such crimes were prosecuted as breaches of the peace. However, following the ruling in the case of Harris v HM Advocate in 2009, that approach may no longer be possible. That ruling said that there must be some public element to the behaviour if it is to constitute a breach of the peace. Amendments have been lodged by the Government and by Robert Brown that seek to close that loophole. Those important amendments deal with abusive crimes, and I urge the committee to give them due consideration; nevertheless, they do not address stalking, which was not adequately covered by breach of the peace.

Amendment 402 is required if we are to make stalking a crime, as the amendment names a new offence of stalking. Action Scotland Against Stalking has made it clear that the approach that was taken in the Protection from Harassment Act 1997 in England and Wales, which does not name the crime of stalking, has kept stalking hidden in the same way as breach of the peace has been in Scotland. There are many misunderstandings around stalking concerning what it is, its prevalence and the devastating consequences that it can have. That is partly because the actions involved in stalking cases are not, in themselves, criminal offences; it is the combination of those actions that causes fear and distress. By calling that behaviour stalking, we recognise it and mark it as unacceptable. In proposed subsection (6) of the new section that amendment 402 would insert, we define the kinds of behaviour that would constitute such conduct, although the list is not exhaustive. It is important that the list is not restrictive, as stalking behaviour can be extremely subtle and not easily recognised as stalking. However, listing examples of stalking behaviour makes it easier for people to recognise the actions that will be considered to constitute stalking.

Amendments 399 to 401 follow on from the introduction of a new offence of stalking and relate to section 234A of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995. Because many stalkers repeatedly harass their victims, sometimes over a period of years, it would be appropriate for a non-harassment order to be applied for in all cases following a conviction. My amendments would require a procurator fiscal to do that. That would remove the discretion of the prosecutor but it would not remove the discretion of the court, which would still be able to decline an application if it were not convinced that an order would be appropriate.

I do not think that Robert Brown’s amendment 402A is required. However, as it takes nothing away from amendment 402 I would not oppose it.

I move amendment 399.

The Cabinet Secretary for Justice (Kenny MacAskill): Amendment 402 is intended to create a statutory offence of stalking. It would make it an offence for a person to engage in a course of conduct with the intention of causing physical or psychological harm to another person or of causing that person to fear for their own safety or for the safety of any other person. An offence would also be committed if the accused engaged in a course of conduct and knew, or ought in all the circumstances to have known, that the conduct would be likely to cause such harm or arouse such apprehension or fear, regardless of whether that was the accused’s purpose.

We are aware that, in the light of the outcome of recent court cases, there has been concern that the common-law offence of breach of the peace, which—as Rhoda Grant correctly said—has previously been used to prosecute behaviour constituting stalking, may not be sufficient. In the case of Harris v HM Advocate, the appeal court concluded that some public element is essential for a breach of the peace to be committed and that the public element will not always be present in stalking cases. To address that, the Government has lodged amendment 378, which creates a new statutory offence of engaging in threatening, alarming or distressing behaviour. The offence will criminalise conduct that, either recklessly or by intention, is likely to cause a reasonable person alarm, distress or fear for their personal safety or for the personal safety of another person. That would include the sort of behaviour that is covered by amendment 402.

The need to create such an offence has arisen as a result of the appeal court’s opinion in Harris v HM Advocate, which concluded that some public element is essential for the offence of breach of the peace to be committed. The court’s decision does not affect the majority of cases of breach of the peace, in which the offence takes place in a public place—for example, in a street or in a pub. However, there is real concern that the decision has been making it more difficult to prosecute criminal behaviour arising from domestic disputes and other circumstances, such as stalking cases, in which there is not necessarily a public element. In the past, such behaviour could have been successfully prosecuted as breach of the peace, but that may no longer be the case.

10:15

Amendment 378 creates a new offence that criminalises conduct that, either recklessly or by intention, is likely to cause a reasonable person alarm or distress or create fear for their personal safety or that of another person. There is no requirement for a public element so the problem that arose in the Harris case should not arise again. The conduct could take place in the presence of the perpetrator and the victim only, or indeed without their being together, in the case of written threats, phone calls and so on. That is particularly relevant where threats are sent by text or e-mail—a relatively recent problem about which we have all heard.

Stalking can include a range of alarming, distressing and frightening behaviours, such as repeatedly following or spying on a victim or otherwise watching them; the repeated sending of unwanted threatening correspondence; and the making of repeated nuisance phone calls or the sending of repeated nuisance texts or e-mails. When a person engages in such activity and the circumstances are such that their behaviour would cause a reasonable person alarm or distress or create fear for the safety of any person, that will constitute the offence of engaging in threatening, alarming or distressing behaviour.

Although we support what amendment 402 seeks to achieve, we do not believe that it goes far enough. The offence in amendment 402 requires “a course of conduct”, whereas we suggest that it is important that, in appropriate cases, it is possible to prosecute an individual who engages in such unacceptable behaviour once. It does not address the problem that arises from the Harris case, which means that it might no longer be possible to prosecute unacceptable behaviour that is committed in a domestic setting and which would have been prosecuted as a breach of the peace if it had been committed in public. It would also be necessary to prove that the behaviour caused harm to, or created fear for the safety of, the victim or someone else. We suggest that such behaviour is unacceptable and that it should therefore be treated as criminal regardless of whether the victim actually suffers harm or fear. It should be enough that that was the intention. Those issues are addressed in the Government’s amendment 378, which also covers the behaviour that is caught by amendment 402. I therefore hope that the committee will support the Government’s amendment 378 in preference to amendment 402.

We understand that some of those who have given evidence expressed support for both amendment 378 and amendment 402. However, as we have explained, amendment 402, on stalking, covers a narrower range of conduct than is covered by amendment 378. The Crown Office has expressed concern that there would be a disadvantage in having a narrowly defined offence alongside an offence with a wider definition. Because of the many circumstances that present themselves in criminal conduct, the prosecutor would, in the event of a choice, often be bound to prefer the offence with a wider definition to ensure that all the conduct was captured in the charge. We understand the desire of many committee members to see both amendments go through and we are happy to seek to consider whether we can incorporate the particular matters that Rhoda Grant’s amendment 402 seeks to cover into an expanded Government amendment in due course.

We understand that amendment 402A seeks to ensure that Rhoda Grant’s amendment 402 does not inadvertently criminalise legitimate public protest or industrial action. However, the Government’s view is that, even if amendment 402 was accepted, amendment 402A would be unnecessary. For an offence of stalking to be committed, it is required that the accused acted with the intention of causing physical or psychological harm or knew, or ought to have known, that their conduct was likely to cause such harm or arouse fear or apprehension. Legitimate public protest and industrial action should not cause people physical or psychological harm and should not cause people to fear for their personal safety.

In addition, amendment 402 provides a defence to a charge of stalking where the conduct is, in the particular circumstances, reasonable. It would be for the courts to decide, but it could certainly be argued that, depending on the circumstances, legitimate public protest or industrial action would be covered by the defence that it amounted to reasonable conduct. As such, amendment 402A is unnecessary and I invite Robert Brown to not move it.

The purpose of Robert Brown’s amendment 544 is to modify the common-law offence of breach of the peace to ensure that it covers behaviour that takes place in private. As I noted, the need for action on breach of the peace arose as a result of the appeal court’s opinion in Harris v HMA, which concluded that some public element is essential for the offence of breach of the peace to have been committed. We appreciate that there is concern that the appeal court judgment makes it difficult for the criminal law to intervene in domestic disputes and other circumstances in which breach of the peace has traditionally been used to prosecute, such as stalking cases, when there is not necessarily a public element. That is why we lodged amendment 378, which creates a new offence that criminalises conduct that, either recklessly or by intention, is likely to cause a reasonable person alarm or distress or cause them to fear for their personal safety or that of another person. There would be no requirement for a public element. The conduct could take place in the presence of the perpetrator and the victim only, or without them having to be together at the same time, in the case of written threats, texts, phone calls and so on, which I mentioned.

The appeal court judgment, which concluded that a public element was necessary in cases of breach of the peace, overturned a 1959 judgment in the case of Young v Heatly, in which the appeal court recognised that although a public element was usually required in cases of breach of the peace, there was a class of special cases in which the offence constituted a breach of the peace, even though it occurred in private. It may have been Robert Brown’s intention to restore the outcome of the 1959 judgment, but amendment 544 goes a great deal further in providing that any behaviour that constitutes a breach of the peace in public may also do so in private.
The advantage of Government amendment 378 over Robert Brown’s amendment 544 is that it recognises that behaviour in public and behaviour in private may be judged differently. For example, a member of the public who was shouting and swearing in the street would normally be judged differently from a member of the public who was shouting and swearing at a television. Government amendment 378 provides for incidents such as domestic abuse or stalking to be tackled, but it does not seek potentially to criminalise behaviour in private simply because the same behaviour in public might well constitute a breach of the peace. Therefore, we are unable to support amendment 544.

I understand that amendments 399 to 401 are intended to amend the provisions in section 234A of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 on non-harassment orders to require the prosecutor to apply to the court for a non-harassment order to be granted in respect of a person who has been convicted of stalking. I agree that in many cases it would be appropriate to make a non-harassment order in respect of a person who has been convicted of behaviour that constituted stalking, and the provisions in the bill that amend section 234A of the 1995 act will make it easier for the prosecutor to apply to the courts for an order.

However, the Government does not believe that there should be an automatic requirement for the prosecutor to apply for a non-harassment order in respect of any person who has been convicted of stalking. Non-harassment orders are intended to deal with people who are considered to pose a risk of future offending. Many people who are convicted of stalking behaviour may pose a risk of future offending against their victim, but others may not. The offender may have moved away from where the victim lives or may have been sentenced to a long term of imprisonment, in which case an NHO may not be necessary. Clearly, whether an NHO is necessary will depend on the facts and circumstances of each individual case. It should be for prosecutors to decide on a case-by-case basis whether it is appropriate to apply to the court for a non-harassment order to be granted.

We support amendment 378 and resist all other amendments in the group, on the understanding that we take on board the committee’s desire to see some correlation between the two offences that we are discussing.

Robert Brown (Glasgow) (LD): In this group, amendments 402A and 544 are in my name. As Rhoda Grant and the cabinet secretary have indicated, the group raises a number of overlapping issues.

I agree with the cabinet secretary’s comments on amendment 400—I think it might be a case of overkill. Under the criminal law in Scotland, the Crown has traditionally acted in the public interest as master of the instance. In other words, it is up to the prosecutor when to bring charges and on what basis, when to continue with or abandon a prosecution and when to ask for specific orders. It may well be that a non-harassment order is appropriate in many cases in which there is a stalking conviction, but circumstances vary and the discretion should remain with the Crown.

Amendment 402 seeks to introduce the specific offence of stalking. There has been quite a bit of debate about that, but the case for the new offence has been well put. Stalking is a crime that, in essence, is different from breach of the peace because it involves the repeated, deliberate targeting of a particular victim and is often made up of a series of actions that, in normal circumstances, may themselves be unexceptional.

However, it is vital that the definition is got right because an offence that is too widely or imprecisely stated will produce injustice. I hope that the cabinet secretary’s officials—who I accept are not in favour of amendment 402—have pored over it carefully to ensure that it does what it says on the tin. I continue to hold the view that the definition must be looked at extremely closely, as it may be too wide. More particularly, the defences in subsection (5) of the proposed new section that amendment 402 seeks to insert are likely to produce considerable trouble.

I am not sure that I am altogether persuaded by the cabinet secretary’s point about a single action as opposed to a course of conduct. By its nature, stalking seems to be a course of conduct. I readily accept that, in any event, significant instances of a one-off nature would continue to be dealt with under breach of the peace, so I do not think that that is a problem. I am keen to hear the cabinet secretary’s views on the matter, as it is important to get it right.

I do not think that the reasons behind amendment 402 arise out of the Harris case per se, although that adds another dimension.

The defences that are set out in the proposed new subsection (5) that amendment 402 would introduce are modelled on the phraseology of the Protection from Harassment Act 1997. However, the 1997 act is not quite the same as the legislation that we are discussing today, as it basically establishes a procedure for providing orders, rather than establishing a criminal action and the immediate offset—a crime is committed under the 1997 act only on breach of a non-harassment order. For example, proposed subsection (5)(a) suggests that a course of action would be legal if it were “authorised by ... any rule of law”.
If my memory serves me correctly, various enactments make it legal to walk upon the public highway. Is it possible that walking up and down outside someone’s house, even with malicious intent, could be authorised in that sense, thereby providing a loophole to a stalker? I remind members that the rule of construction is that penal statutes are, rightly, construed strictly against the Crown.

Further, the catch-all defence in proposed subsection (5)(c) suggests that a course of action would be legal if it “was, in the particular circumstances, reasonable”.

I should say that that is phrased differently from the way in which the cabinet secretary’s amendment 378 is phrased. The difference between the use of the word “reasonable” in the two amendments does not amount to a difference of approach. However, some questions remain around the issue of reasonableness. To whom should the course of action seem reasonable—the accused or the man on the number 18 bus, for example? Reasonable by what criteria?

I continue to have a concern about the effect of the proposals on legitimate public protest and lawful industrial action. Students of trade union history will know that early restrictions on what we would now regard as legitimate trade union protest arose from judicial extension of contract and property law into the criminal sphere. Subsection (6)(e) of the proposed section that amendment 402 would introduce defines “conduct” as including “entering or loitering in the vicinity of ... the place of work or business ... or of any other person”, which very much touches on the area of industrial action. Are we entirely sure that such legitimate conduct is authorised by existing trade union law, as opposed to simply not being forbidden by it? I suggest that there is a subtle difference there. I do not pretend to be an expert on trade union law, but I hope that the issues that I have raised will be closely considered by the cabinet secretary’s officials.

Further to the issue of public protest, what about football fans who are distressed at their club’s performance and want to demonstrate at the football ground? We have seen examples of that in the recent past.

“Conduct” also includes the sending of letters, emails and texts. What about whistleblowers or people who go a bit over the top in castigating their MSPs or—perhaps more likely—their MPs for their sins? Would that behaviour be criminalised? Some of us might think that that would be a good idea, but I am not sure that most of us would.

People have various and heated views about Orange order parades, Irish republican parades, demonstrations about middle east issues and so on. Some such marches can arouse apprehension and fear in the minds of onlookers—some are intended to do exactly that through a demonstration of strength. However, that does not necessarily make them illegal. The right to freedom of expression gives people a certain latitude, providing that they keep within the law. Are we not at risk of narrowing that latitude too much and unreasonably getting involved in people’s motives and intentions when they engage in legitimate public protest?

It is against that background that I lodged amendment 402A to ensure that the law of unintended consequences does not throw its arm over lawful and reasonable public protest or industrial action. I think that we are dealing with a significant point. Others have expressed the view that the proposals do not change the existing defence but I think that they do.

The Government’s amendment 378 is designed to deal with a perceived anomaly in the definition of breach of the peace, following the recent decision of the appeal court in Harris v HMA. Effectively, the amendment provides a statutory basis for breach of the peace, which I think is the wrong direction to go in. Breach of the peace is an ancient and useful measure. Its flexibility will be damaged if it is put on a statutory basis. I also note that there has been little consultation on the proposal. It would be preferable to deal with the consequences of the appeal court’s decision by amending the law in a much more minor way so that it reverts to what the situation was thought to be before. Kenny MacAskill mentioned the Young Heatly case, which I recall from my student days and which set the right tone. If I recall correctly, it was something to do with a headmaster making inappropriate suggestions to a pupil and the pupil not being upset but the public possibly being outraged.

My amendment 544 attempts to do what I have suggested by saying that “A person’s behaviour may constitute a breach of the peace”.

The amendment is intended to restore flexibility to the courts. I readily accept that I may not have got the phraseology right, but the amendment is a reasonable stab at it, and it echoes the Government’s amendment. The distinctions that the cabinet secretary made do not stand up. If we get things slightly wrong, it is easier to correct them at stage 3 than to fiddle about with a significant and complicated amendment such as amendment 378, which tries to start from scratch and put the whole issue on a statutory basis. The committee has been concerned about doing that in other areas and about any unintended consequences. Against that background, I stand by my position on the amendments.

10:30

Stewart Maxwell: I entirely agree with Robert Brown's comments on amendment 400 and the role of the Crown Office, so I will not repeat his arguments.

In relation to amendment 402, on the offence of stalking, the cabinet secretary and others are correct that there was a great deal of sympathy for the position that was laid out by witnesses, especially Ann Moulds. The issue is not whether we agree with the intention but whether the amendments, or some combination of them, achieve what they set out to achieve. There is some doubt about that. I do not know whether Rhoda Grant would agree, but the best course of action might be for her not to move amendment 402, and for us to have further discussions on amendment 402 and the other amendments, with a view to re-engaging at stage 3. There is an opportunity between stages 2 and 3 for us to try to incorporate Rhoda Grant's specific points—with which I have a great deal of sympathy—into the wider amendment 378. At the moment, there is some confusion and doubt about how the amendments would operate, whether together or independently. My preference at this stage would be for Rhoda Grant not to move amendment 402 and for the committee to revisit the issue at stage 3, perhaps after further discussions with the cabinet secretary and officials. Although a valid point is being made here, at this stage I am not entirely convinced about which route would provide the correct detail that should be inserted into the bill in order to deal with the problem that the amendments seek to address.

Robert Brown's amendment 402A is unnecessary. I do not agree with his comments on subsection 6(e) of the new section that amendment 402 would introduce, in relation to place of work or business. I am not sure that I follow his logic about why that would be a threat to legitimate trade union activity.

In relation to amendment 544, I have some sympathy with Robert Brown's argument about the flexibility that breach of the peace gives, as opposed to laying everything out in statute. We are perhaps at a difficult point. If we leave things as they are there is clearly a problem. I am not sure that amendment 544 will achieve what it sets out to achieve, which is to return to a position of flexibility. There is some doubt about that, which is why I am minded to support the statutory route. While I agree in principle with what Robert Brown is saying, I do not think that he will achieve his aims with amendment 544.

James Kelly (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab): I support Rhoda Grant's amendments. She has put her case well and I pay tribute to her for the amount of work that she has done to get the amendments to this stage. It is clear from evidence to the committee that stalking causes a lot of distress throughout Scotland, and she is correct to try to bring a specific offence of stalking into statute. The effect would be to protect a greater number of people in communities throughout Scotland. From that point of view, amendment 402 is positive.

In relation to Robert Brown's amendment 402A, I am not totally convinced by the points that he made about the rights of trade unionists. I am not convinced that the amendment would add anything to Rhoda Grant's amendment 402.

I note the intent of amendment 378, which is more wide ranging than Rhoda Grant's amendment 402 and which would address many concerns about threatening and aggressive behaviour. Amendment 378 is well intentioned and would deal with specific crimes such as domestic abuse. However, members have had representations from several organisations raising concerns about the way in which the amendment has been drafted and its wide-ranging nature. It would be wise to reflect on those submissions and consider whether the amendment could be redrafted for stage 3.

Stage 3 would also be an appropriate time at which to take on board Robert Brown's comments about his amendment 544. Two different avenues are available to us in trying to achieve the same thing. Further discussion might produce a more tightly worded amendment that has broader support.

Nigel Don (North East Scotland) (SNP): I will briefly address amendment 378. As James Kelly noted, we have received several submissions on the issue. I do not buy them lock, stock and barrel, but there are important points in them. First, nowhere does the proposed new section describe the mischief that it seeks to address. That makes it wide ranging, so the court would be looking for any behaviour that happened to fit within the words. I wonder whether that is appropriate. Perhaps the provision should be drafted to address stalking specifically, if that is the intention, and any other issues that it is intended to address specifically. Obviously, that cannot be done now—it would be a stage 3 addition. I am slightly concerned that amendment 378 is too wide ranging and that the court and the Crown would get no inkling as to where the limits were intended to be.

Secondly, and perhaps more importantly, amendment 378 might make it difficult to say uncomfortable things in public. We as MSPs will appreciate this point. I go back to my days as a councillor, when I once had to address a public meeting on a local housing issue. The folk in the area did not particularly want to hear what I had to say to them, but I could make the points perfectly reasonably and the perfectly reasonable people in the room could hear them reasonably—they did not like what they heard, but they did not take offence. However, if a perfectly reasonable person in that meeting had been sitting next to somebody who was plainly agitated and had already made it clear that they were not happy with what was going to be said, it would perhaps have been reckless of me to say something, because that would have put the perfectly reasonable person in fear that the unreasonable person sitting next to them would react in a way that would be violent, aggressive or a breach of the peace.

By my reading, and that of others, that situation seems to be caught by the amendment. We would therefore find ourselves drifting in a situation in which the aggressive complainer could hold a public event to ransom. The fact that somebody might get cross about something could prevent people from saying things that were perfectly reasonable for anybody else to hear. I am deliberately pushing the situation to the limit to make the point that amendment 378 might be a little too wide ranging and might have unintended consequences. Am I happy that the Crown, the police and the courts can sort out such matters? Yes, but I am conscious that we are considering creating law whose boundaries would not be defined in the bill, and I think that the police, the Crown and the courts could do with a little more guidance on what we are trying to achieve.

The Convener: The series of amendments that Rhoda Grant, the Government and Robert Brown have lodged seeks to build on the protection that is given—largely to women—under the 1995 act. The case for all the amendments is arguable and they have merit.

As members know, my preference for all law is simplicity. To my mind, the catch-all offence of breach of the peace covers such offences. However, like other members, I have been persuaded by the evidence that we have heard that a change in the law is needed.

If we work from the premise that we should do something, it is clear that we must consider what is the best approach. First, we have amendments from Rhoda Grant on non-harassment orders, which would strengthen section 234A of the 1995 act. Amendments 400, 401 and 399 have considerable merit, but I am not persuaded that they are needed, given what the cabinet secretary said. In many cases, it will be entirely appropriate to apply for and make a non-harassment order, but I see dangers in having a blanket requirement to do so.

I turn to the offence of stalking. Having agreed that we should do something, we need to examine Rhoda Grant’s amendment as opposed to the Government’s amendment, although I acknowledge that the amendments are not mutually exclusive. I revert again to my wish for simplicity. There are dangers, so we should keep matters as simple as possible—I have a track record on that.

Amendment 378, which the Government lodged, presents possible dangers about which I have serious concerns and on which I will require reassurance at some stage. Subsection (1) of the new section defines the crime by how a reasonable person would interpret the behaviour that is complained of. I have no difficulty with that concept, which is much used in Scottish civil and criminal law. However, subsection (2) is a little less firm than I would prefer. It should require the conditions in both paragraphs (a) and (b), as opposed to either the condition in paragraph (a) or the one in paragraph (b), to be met. That would be a reasonable requirement.

My principal concerns are with subsection (3), which renders an accused person guilty of an offence when no alarm is caused and when nobody is even aware of the accused person’s conduct. I appreciate the difficulties that the present law causes, but what is proposed is not the way forward. I have not been persuaded that the wording in subsection (3) is apposite. I have every confidence in our police and prosecutors, but to legislate in respect of acts in private that do not cause fear, alarm or distress is a little idiosyncratic. I know that amendment 378 is well intended, but I am a little concerned that its terms could cause difficulty.

It is ironic that Rhoda Grant’s amendment 402 falls into the trap of seeking to define the conduct. In normal circumstances, that is a little bit dangerous. By their nature, such definitions cannot be exhaustive and we could leave ourselves open to challenge. I would be particularly grateful if, in summing up, Rhoda Grant gave the source of that wording. I am minded to support the amendment, but I seek that reassurance.

Robert Brown’s amendment 402A is well thought out and was extremely well argued. A thin balance is involved and he has properly identified potential dangers. However, on balance, I am not persuaded, although I recognise the validity of the argument.

The matter is complex and important and the debate has been good.
Rhoda Grant: I have listened carefully to what committee members and the cabinet secretary have said. On reflection, given the concerns about amendments 399, 400 and 401, I seek leave to withdraw amendment 399 and will not move amendments 400 and 401. I will reflect further on those issues and will perhaps bring back the amendments at stage 3, but I understand that there are genuine concerns around them.

Several concerns were raised about substantive amendment 402. Robert Brown mentioned the proposed defences, which I think are quite robust; it would be for the court to decide whether a behaviour is reasonable. Stalking is by its nature made up of behaviours that are not in themselves illegal and indeed can be quite innocent. A defence of reasonableness would need to be left in for the courts to consider.

The cabinet secretary made clear his view that my amendment and his amendment are the same, but I am equally clear that they are not. They are quite different. It will be difficult for the cabinet secretary to rectify the problems that arise from the Harris v HMA case if he does not deal precisely with stalking. The nature of stalking means that we need a very clear law that makes it an offence.

Bill Aitken mentioned the definition of stalking. Amendment 402 makes clear that the list of behaviours is not exhaustive. If we included an exhaustive list, a stalker would immediately find a way round it. In their evidence to the committee, the police discussed the benefits of having a list of behaviours. Such a list would enable them to identify more easily the type of behaviour that makes up stalking, to begin a prosecution and to help witnesses much earlier.

It is therefore right to have a definition, as is the case in Australia and America. We have heard examples of how the law works better in those places than it does in England and Wales. The list is not exhaustive but merely gives examples of that type of behaviour.

Given that the amendments are so different, I intend to press amendment 402, because it is important. If the Government has concerns about any aspect, it could make small amendments at stage 3, but we need a crime of stalking. The committee needs to send out a clear signal that such behaviour is totally unacceptable, and I ask it to support amendment 402.

The Convener: I should have given the cabinet secretary another bite at the cherry. Do you have anything to say?

Kenny MacAskill: I have listened to the committee’s comments, and I think that Stewart Maxwell’s suggestion is appropriate. We understand the committee’s desire to address the situation, and it appears that there are two matters to be dealt with. The Harris v HMA case requires to be addressed; I say to Robert Brown that, in the view of the Crown and of many legal practitioners, the offence of breach of the peace will remain and the common law will still be in place. Indeed, there may be further High Court matters that relate to the issue.

Rhoda Grant and the various campaigners are right to raise the issue of stalking. The Crown has offered good views on why one law is preferable to two, and we have to work out the concerns that the convener and others have raised. I am happy not to move amendment 378, to discuss those matters with Rhoda Grant and to come back at stage 3 with an amendment to address them. For clarity’s sake, so that the law is understandable to all, it should be possible to corral the two issues together in one or two subsections.

I am happy to work with the Crown, which is not represented at today’s meeting but which has a vested interest, and with Rhoda Grant, to find out whether we can reach a compromise. The general will of the committee is that we address the loophole created by the Harris v HMA case and that the bill should specifically mention stalking. The Government believes that less law is better, so it would probably be better to have one amendment rather than two.

The Convener: That is a constructive contribution.

Amendment 399, by agreement, withdrawn.

Amendments 400 and 401 not moved.

The Convener: Amendment 5, in the name of Rhoda Grant, is grouped with amendments 6 and 7.

Rhoda Grant: A non-harassment order is an order that gives a victim protection from further abuse. The order comes with powers of arrest, and breach of the order is a criminal offence. The purpose of amendments 5 to 7 is to place it beyond doubt that evidence of a course of conduct is not required before a criminal court can grant a non-harassment order. For a course of conduct to be shown, there must be a conviction, which requires there to have been conduct on at least two occasions that has caused harassment. Currently, a procurator fiscal can apply for a non-harassment order where the accused has been convicted of an offence or offences involving a course of conduct of harassment. However, normally the prosecution focuses on one incident of criminal behaviour, which means that it is unlikely that the conviction will amount to a course of conduct.
In the case of domestic violence, getting evidence of one incident is difficult, because the behaviour tends to occur away from witnesses and is difficult to corroborate. Victims may also try to hide their abuse, as they feel shame and a degree of responsibility for what has happened to them. For that reason, victims seldom make complaints. However, when a victim provides the authorities with proof of their abuse, it is important that protection from future abuse is provided.

The bill seeks to address the issue by proposing that previous convictions may be taken into account to prove the course of conduct that is needed to secure a non-harassment order. The policy memorandum states that the Government’s aim is that evidence of a course of a conduct should not be required. However, I fear that that is not made clear in the bill and that a victim may still have to wait until their abuser has been successfully convicted of more than one offence before the prosecutor can seek a protection order on their behalf.

As the purpose of a non-harassment order is to protect a victim against future abuse, one incident should be sufficient for us to consider whether there is a risk of future harm. A victim should not be abused twice before the state steps in to protect them. My amendments make it clear that a non-harassment order should be granted after one conviction for a single offence.

I move amendment 5.

Kenny MacAskill: We fully understand Rhoda Grant’s sentiments. However, section 15 already provides that a non-harassment order may be made after a conviction for a single offence. Ms Grant’s amendments do not alter the overall effect of the section in any way, so we ask her to withdraw or not move them on the basis that they are not necessary.

The Convener: Amendment 5 is entirely meritorious, but I question its necessity, given the other provisions in the bill.

Rhoda Grant: I seek leave to withdraw amendment 5, as the cabinet secretary has given the reassurance that I sought. He has indicated that evidence of a course of conduct is not required before a non-harassment order may be granted. It is important to have that on the record and to remove any doubt, as the bill is not totally clear on the matter. I am grateful to the cabinet secretary for the reassurance that he has given.

Amendment 5, by agreement, withdrawn.

Amendments 6 and 7 not moved.

Section 15 agreed to.

Section 16 agreed to.
I turn to the practicalities of the Government’s proposals. It is an absolute requirement that the reduction in short-term sentences has public confidence. That means that an increased number of timely and effective community sentences must be available, along with the add-on of action on unemployability, addiction and various other problems, which the bill rightly emphasises and which we have supported in previous sections.

My amendment 100 and its consequential amendment 101 would reduce the period in the presumption against short-term sentences from six months to three months. That is for two reasons. The first is that although any period is arbitrary, the spread of crimes that receive sentences of under three months looks pretty much like the spread of crimes that receive other, non-custodial disposals and the spread of crimes that receive three-to-six-month sentences tend to look rather more like the spread of crimes that receive longer sentences. There has been a certain amount of comment about the sort of people who would be affected by the arrangements.

The second reason is that the reduction to three months would make the whole system more manageable and affordable by reducing the number of cases involved. Given the financial pressures and the need to bed in the new arrangements successfully, such a change would be helpful.

Amendment 388 is intended to make central the numbers affected and the linked funding. Public confidence in the system is vital. The Government must demonstrate publicly and specifically, before bringing section 17 into effect, that it has a clear handle on the numbers, that the additional cases requiring community service orders will be funded and that community justice authorities have the capacity to deliver the goods.

I am grateful to the Government for the additional funding that it has provided to improve existing community orders. That funding is manifestly having an effect, but we know that the quality of orders is patchy across the country. We know, too, that reoffending rates will be lower with the most effective interventions and that the additional orders consequential on section 17 will need yet more funding in what we know are stringent financial times. The Government should be clear that the improvement funding cannot be double counted to pay for the increased number of community sentences, too.

Amendments 392 and 393 are consequential on amendment 388.

It follows that I urge the committee to reject Richard Baker’s amendment 1, both for the obvious reason that I think that it is wrong in principle and flies in the face of common sense, and because it is clear that it is likely that there will be a parliamentary majority for some form of amended section 17. Among other things it is the committee’s job to reflect that reality to ensure that section 17 passes into law in the most effective fashion and after the most detailed of scrutiny.

I move amendment 100.

11:00
Richard Baker (North East Scotland) (Lab):

The proposal for a legislative presumption against custodial sentences of six months and under has been a focus for debate. My amendment 1 seeks to give effect to the conclusion in the committee’s report that the proposal should not proceed. I am grateful for the convener’s support for my amendment; he has previously highlighted some of the key concerns about this ill-judged proposal.

I am confident that our judiciary already seeks to use imprisonment as a last resort and only in cases in which the offence has been serious. For more minor offences, such as fine defaulting, we have already seen great reductions in the number of offenders receiving custodial sentences. The presumption will create an unnecessary bureaucracy by having courts provide reasons for imposing sentences of six months or under, which will delay court processes, but it is not just about that. The policy drive that was first outlined in the Scottish National Party’s 2007 manifesto was clear that in all but the most exceptional circumstances such custodial sentences would no longer apply.

Ministers have made it clear that the proposal is an arbitrary measure to reduce the prison population and to make savings on that basis, but the cabinet secretary’s officials made it clear to the Finance Committee that the proposal would not produce savings in the prison estate because the infrastructure would need to be maintained. The crucial issue is that the interests of justice must be paramount; therefore, sentences should be based on what is just and appropriate, not simply on prison capacity. To do otherwise is not to serve the victims of crime.

The presumption applies not only to minor but to serious offences. It would apply to 40 per cent of those convicted of indecent assault, to 88 per cent of those convicted of crimes of dishonesty and, particularly seriously in our view, to two thirds of those convicted of knife carrying. In its evidence, Scottish Women’s Aid highlighted that the presumption could “have a negative impact on women, children and young people experiencing domestic abuse.”

When I quizzed the First Minister on the matter, he said that serious crimes should receive longer sentences, but that is to seriously misrepresent the presumption. There is no proposal that such offenders should receive longer sentences; there is a proposal only that there should be a presumption against their serving any custodial sentence. That is what the Government’s plans arbitrarily to reduce the prison population are all about.

The argument is made that those who go to jail are more likely to reoffend—Robert Brown made that argument again today—but the unfortunate reality is that by the time that an offender receives a custodial sentence they will normally have received numerous different disposals for other offences. They are, by definition, a repeat offender by the time that they go into prison. Even those who agree with the presumption point out that it must be accompanied by increased investment in more effective community sentences. Instead we have seen cuts in funding to those organisations with expertise in addressing reoffending, the Scottish Government has vetoed the establishment of the community court in Glasgow, and we believe that there is a funding gap of tens of millions of pounds in the Government’s plans, which will demand thousands of additional community sentences.

Despite Robert Brown’s support for the Scottish Government’s general approach, his amendment 388 and related amendments, and his amendment 102 in the next group, highlight the awareness that the extra investment in robust community sentences that is needed to give any logic to the proposal is simply not there. Indeed, it is from information revealed to Robert Brown that we know that only a fraction of community sentences start within the target period of seven days. We also know that, under the current Government, a third of community sentences are being breached. I simply do not recognise the improvement to which Robert Brown referred. The paucity of robust alternatives to custodial sentences under the current Government means that the proposal is not only nonsensical, but detrimental to community safety and certainly to the justice system. The same principles apply to Robert Brown’s proposal to change the presumption to one against custodial sentences of three months and under. For example, it would cover 28 per cent of those convicted of indecent assault, over half of those convicted of crimes of dishonesty, and a third of those convicted of knife carrying. We will oppose amendments 100 and 101 and, on the basis that we seek to remove section 17, we will oppose Robert Brown’s amendment 102 in the next group.

Angela Constance (Livingston) (SNP): I cannot support the detail of Robert Brown’s amendments 100 and 101, but I support in principle his logic in eloquently arguing against short-term sentences. I say with respect that amendments 100 and 101 are somewhat too cautious, although they are preferable to the status quo.

The presumption against short periods of imprisonment or detention is bold and radical, and the matter has provoked considerable debate, but we need to grasp the nettle. Of course, the Government and members of the committee are clear that those who have committed crimes against people should be imprisoned, arguably for much longer than six months, but politicians have a responsibility to show leadership in the debate, which must be progressed in a rational and calm manner, rather than by blatant tabloid politicking. We will make our communities safer only when we have the courage and conviction to implement what actually works.

Members are entitled to focus on finances, but my experience of individuals and organisations working in the field to implement community sentencing is that they say that there has been much improvement in delivery times. I do not think that, on the cabinet secretary’s watch, people have waited nine months to have community sentences implemented. Finances are important, and the cabinet secretary will no doubt have something to say about them, but organisations that represent the social work profession seem to be up for the change. I have not heard any substantial organisation that works in the field arguing against the presumption against six-month sentences on the basis that we cannot aspire to deliver something better in terms of community sentencing.

I stress the importance of leadership and having courage. If we want to make communities safer, we must focus first and foremost on what actually works to deliver that.

James Kelly: I support amendment 1 and oppose amendments 100, 101 and 388.

One of the arguments that is used by those who argue for a presumption against short-term sentences relates to the level of reoffending by people who have left prison. I acknowledge that that is an issue that needs to be addressed and that we cannot run away from it, but I do not accept the argument that someone who has reoffended should not be sent to jail, but should be given a community sentence instead. I still think that prison is an adequate punishment in appropriate circumstances. There is a public safety issue. Individuals who have committed indecent assault or domestic abuse crimes or have carried a knife are a threat to the public, and there is a strong case for sending them to prison as opposed to giving them community sentences.

The challenge for the Government and for all political parties is to consider how we can make prison work better. We need to consider organisations such as the Wise Group, which has done much effective work through life coaches to try to ensure that people who leave prison go into more stable situations and do not reoffend.

There are serious questions to do with the funding of community payback orders. I support the principle of community sentences, which have an appropriate role to play, but the policy of a presumption against short-term sentences will result in an increase in community sentences and the financial memorandum is a little unclear about the extent to which that will happen. I asked officials about that when they gave evidence to the Finance Committee, but they did not seem to have a grasp of the details. Discussions that have taken place since then have not convinced me that officials have an appropriate handle on the issue. The increase in community sentences that would result from the bill could result in increased costs of up to £20 million per year over a three-year period. There is potentially a £60 million black hole.

In all, there is an issue about the policy of a presumption against short-term sentences, and community sentences are not funded appropriately. I support amendment 1 and oppose the other amendments in the group.

Kenny MacAskil: The presumption against custodial sentences of six months or less has been the subject of some debate and attacks by parts of the Opposition. We do not doubt that members’ motivation, like that of the Scottish Government, is to make our communities safer, but members have not been clear about why they oppose our proposals and what they would do instead.

Our approach is plain. We will make Scotland safer by making low-level criminals face up to the challenge of turning round their behaviour and repaying their communities for the damage that they have done. That is better than the alternative of a short custodial sentence, for reasons that the Justice Committee set out clearly in its stage 1 report. Custodial sentences of six months or less do not work and do not stop offending behaviour. The figures show that three quarters of people who are released from short sentences go on to reoffend within two years of getting out, whereas, in contrast, three out of five people who are sentenced to community punishment do not go on to reoffend over the same period.

There will be some cases in which a court decides that a short custodial sentence is the only appropriate option. If we were proposing to prevent courts from imposing such sentences in those cases, the Opposition’s criticism might be right, but we are not making such a proposal. Courts will still be able to use their discretion, and there will be no statutory bar. The sentence will remain a matter for the presiding sheriff.

Our policy is exactly in line with the unanimous view of the Justice Committee. Short sentences will not make Scotland safer, but in some cases they cannot be avoided. The bill reflects that unanimous view by presuming against use of short sentences but allowing for their use when that is needed. That is why our proposal is the right proposal and the right way to make Scotland safer.

Amendments 100 and 101, in the name of Robert Brown, support the principle of a presumption against short custodial sentences. Indeed, the “Pocket Guide to Scottish Liberal Democrat Policies”, which was published last month, acknowledges:

“there is clear evidence that very short prison sentences simply reinforce offending behaviour.”

The document goes on to say that the Liberal Democrats in Scotland will “end the ‘revolving door’ prison system by replacing very short sentences, which are ineffective and expensive, with tough community penalties where offenders can pay back the communities they have harmed.”

The main area on which we appear to differ is the period to be specified in that presumption—although we would not know that from the Scottish Liberal Democrats’ policy guide, in which no cut-off point is specified. Robert Brown’s amendments would set the cut-off point at three months, but we remain unconvinced of the wisdom of such an approach. The offences for which prisoners receive a sentence of three months or less are not significantly different from the offences that receive sentences of six months or less. Most sentences of six months or less are given for a small group of offences, of which the most common are shoplifting, breach of the peace, breaches of bail or social work orders, common assault and handling of an offensive weapon. Those are also the most common crimes in the list of offences that receive a sentence of three months or less.

11:15

We believe that we can achieve more if we have the courage of our convictions now to create a presumption against sentences of six months or less. The backstop will be the same, irrespective of which option we choose, because judicial discretion will remain intact. Sentencers will still be able to impose a custodial sentence, in either scenario, if they consider that the circumstances of the case leave them no alternative.

If we are to make a difference, we must seize the opportunity before us. We will make Scotland safer by making low-level criminals face up to what they have done, change their offending behaviour and pay back to their communities for the harm that they have inflicted. That makes far more sense than the alternative of a short custodial sentence, for reasons that the committee set out clearly in its stage 1 report. Custodial sentences of six months or less do not work and do not stop offending behaviour. The evidence does not suggest that changing to a presumption against sentences of three months or less would make the provision any more effective or have any better impact on reoffending.

We do not accept that there is anything to be achieved by delaying the commencement of section 17, as proposed by amendment 388. That amendment seeks to provide that the presumption may not be brought into effect until the Scottish ministers lay before the Parliament a report setting out the expected impact of the presumption in terms of the reduction in the number of prison sentences, the increase in the number of community payback orders, the increase in the costs for local authorities and the additional funding that will be provided to meet the expected pressures on local authorities.

The financial memorandum already sets out in some detail our costings for a range of increases in the number of community payback orders. We have already said that, in 2010-11, £6 million more will be provided to support improved service delivery of community penalties and to resource the initial increase in community payback orders. We have said that that will be baselined, which will ensure that at least current funding levels for community penalties will be the top priority when decisions are taken for 2011-12. We have said that we will monitor increases in uptake very closely and work with local authorities to assess the need for additional funding. In the absence of clarity about the likely total Scottish budget from 2011-12 onwards, it would be difficult to do more. I urge members to resist amendment 388.

Amendments 392 and 393 would ensure that the Scottish ministers could not commence section 17 using the normal procedure but would need to lay an affirmative order on which the Parliament would be required to vote. If the Parliament agrees to section 17, what would be the point of requiring another vote at the point of commencement? We urge the committee to resist amendments 392 and 393.

I ask the member to withdraw amendment 100.

The Convener: I call Robert Brown to wind up the debate and to press or withdraw amendment 100.

Robert Brown: I am bound to say that there has not exactly been a meeting of minds in the debate. I am somewhat disappointed by the cabinet secretary’s response to what were intended to be helpful amendments, around which I think that the Parliament could to some degree coalesce. The debate has perhaps had some of the overtones of debates once seen on abortion, in which there were no doubt good views on either side that never seemed to meet in the middle.

This is an important debate—no one around the table disputes that—and it is important that we get it right, given the need for public confidence in the system that I emphasised earlier. Against that background, it is particularly disappointing that, although the cabinet secretary talked about baselining existing funding to improve the current system, he did not deal with the resourcing of the increased number of community sentence orders, on which the whole of section 17 is postulated. That is a central point on which the SNP Government needs to engage more than it has done so far.

I found it interesting that the cabinet secretary endeavoured to cast doubt on the Liberal Democrat position on the issue, but there has never been any doubt about our position. We support a reduction in the use of short-term sentences, and we have always said that three months is the appropriate period. One good reason why that is a good idea in the context of this debate is that such a policy would, broadly speaking, halve the number of additional community sentences that would be required. Whether or not three months was a lead-in to a longer period or an end position in its own right, the same argument prevails.

On the other side of the argument, Labour members have made very little attempt to engage with the key debate. What works? Does prison work or does it not? If prison works, in what way does it work? No speaker today has demonstrated that prison does the trick other than in the limited terms that I conceded at the outset: removing malefactors from the community for a few weeks, a couple of months or whatever gives people an element of relief.

There is also a degree of contradiction in the argument. On the one hand, there are many platitudes about how community service orders are a good thing that we all support. On the other hand, there is no commitment to say, “Okay, if that is the case, what are the mechanisms that would bring about a greater use of community service orders in an effective fashion without risk to the public, about which people are concerned?” My amendments in the group were designed to deal with that. Angela Constance made the good point that social workers are up for change in this respect, as are many other professionals.

I concede one point, which is Richard Baker’s point on prison numbers. It is clear from all the evidence that the proposed changes to section 17 will not lead to any significant savings in the prison budget. Given the level of overcrowding, that is certainly the case in the short to medium term. Of course, overcrowding is a major reason behind the McLeish commission’s recommendation to do something about short-term sentences. Overcrowding impacts not only on those on short-term sentences, but on our ability to resource and deal properly with those on longer sentences who represent a much more serious threat to the public.

I readily accept that this is not entirely a black-and-white issue. That said, as a committee, we ought to proceed—as we have done in the past—on the basis of what the research and other professional evidence has shown to work. The reality is: short-term sentences do not work. We should proceed on the principle that the right approach is to do something better—in this case, community sentences—and then to look at the detail of what takes place. I warn the Government that, if the matter is to be taken forward effectively, it must engage with those who are broadly on its side of the argument. It will have to do that if the proposition that it puts to the Parliament is to command the consent of the chamber. I will press amendment 100.

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 100 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Brown, Robert (Glasgow) (LD)

Against
Aitken, Bill (Glasgow) (Con)
Butler, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab)
Constance, Angela (Livingston) (SNP)
Craige, Cathie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (Lab)
Don, Nigel (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Kelly, James (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab)
Maxwell, Stewart (West of Scotland) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 1, Against 7, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 388 disagreed to.

Amendment 1 moved—[Richard Baker].

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 1 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Aitken, Bill (Glasgow) (Con)
Butler, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab)
Craige, Cathie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (Lab)
Kelly, James (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab)

Against
Brown, Robert (Glasgow) (LD)
Constance, Angela (Livingston) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West of Scotland) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 4, Against 4, Abstentions 0.

I use my casting vote in favour of the amendment.

Amendment 1 agreed to.

The Convener: Given the controversial nature of the matter, I will give my reasons for using my casting vote for the amendment. I agree with Robert Brown that the debate is important. Although there was no meeting of minds, the debate was carried out in an appropriate and measured manner.

I support Richard Baker’s amendment 1 and oppose the Government stance on amendment 1 for two reasons. First, the Government does not seem to appreciate the existing presumption against such sentences. Richard Baker referred to that. No judge in Scotland, at whatever level, will impose a prison sentence if there is any possible alternative. Depriving someone of their liberty is a terrible thing to do; it is never done readily or easily. Secondly, as we know, the vast majority of summary cases are disposed of by monetary penalty.

The cases that are likely to be dealt with through custody are fairly serious, for example the drunk driver with four or five convictions who drives while disqualified; the person who has been found guilty of domestic violence, with previous convictions; the person who has been convicted of minor crimes of dishonesty 30 or 40 times; and the small-time drug dealer. To my mind, all those cases deserve appropriate custodial sentences. Although I accept the cabinet secretary’s argument that the provisions as they stand would not preclude that, they seek to inhibit it.

If the community payback orders are to work as we all hope that they will—and we will do everything possible to support them—there will require to be a custodial alternative to persuade the offender that, if he does not mend his ways, custody is likely. The bill’s proposals, prior to amendment 1 being agreed to, removed that deterrent.

After section 17

The Convener: Amendment 102, in the name of Robert Brown, is in a group on its own.

Robert Brown: I will not dwell on the amendment in detail. It provides a useful requirement on the Government to produce a report on how well sections 14 and 17, on community payback orders and—when the provisions are agreed to—short-term sentences, are working.

Five years is a reasonable time over which to gauge how those important changes are working, where they might be deficient and whether they could go further. The public might regard that as useful further reassurance that we have got these reforms right, and such a requirement is a further exercise in accountability.

Cathie Craigie might recall that we did something similar with the changes to the right to buy when we were on the Social Justice Committee, and those measures provided a useful lever for reconsidering the policy and effects at a later stage, after things had developed.

I move amendment 102.

The Convener: I have often felt that the Parliament, under Governments of either persuasion, has been sadly remiss in not revisiting the effects of our legislation. There are merits to Robert Brown’s arguments.

Kenny MacAskill: As Robert Brown said, amendment 102 seeks to introduce a further reporting requirement that, within five years of sections 14 and 17 coming into force, “The Scottish Ministers must ... lay before the Scottish Parliament and publish a report on the operation of those sections.”

Such a report must include an assessment of whether and to what extent those sections, individually or collectively, have—

(a) reduced offending,

(b) increased public safety.

Five years is a long time hence. We think that we should instead focus on getting good-quality performance information on the impact of the community payback order in the short term. In responding to amendment 99, on the community payback order, we offered to write to the committee, setting out our programme of work in that regard. We are happy to undertake to continue to keep the committee abreast of developments. We invite the member to withdraw amendment 102.

Robert Brown: The assurances that the cabinet secretary has given are useful, but they do not offset the need and desire for a report. Therefore, I press the amendment.

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 102 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For

Aitken, Bill (Glasgow) (Con)
Brown, Robert (Glasgow) (LD)

Against

Constance, Angela (Livingston) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West of Scotland) (SNP)

Abstentions

Butler, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab)
Craigie, Cathie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (Lab)
Kelly, James (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 2, Against 3, Abstentions 3.

Amendment 102 disagreed to.

The Convener: The amendment falls, despite my best efforts.

Section 18 agreed to.

Schedule 2 agreed to.

Sections 19 and 20 agreed to.

After section 20

The Convener: Amendment 103, in the name of Bill Wilson, is in a group on its own. I welcome Bill Wilson to the committee.
Bill Wilson (West of Scotland) (SNP): Amendment 103 allows judges to order independent inquiries into an organisation’s finances, following that organisation’s conviction. It also provides a sequence of priority for the payment of money to the court. That sequence is: a compensation order—that is, victims’ compensation; the repayment of the cost of the report, as it is my intention that the convicted company could be charged for the cost of the report; and the payment of any fine.

11:30

I will clarify one thing before I say anything else. At the start of this parliamentary session I lodged a proposal for a member’s bill, which contained one part on equity fines and one part on background reports. I am aware that there is slight confusion about my proposal, which I have split. This amendment is separate from my proposal on equity fines, which is going ahead as part of my member’s bill. When I ran the consultation on my original member’s bill, which included the two parts, I consulted on both what is now the member’s bill and this proposal on background reports. I consulted a wide range of organisations and received responses from academic experts, trade unions, campaigning organisations and the Confederation of British Industry. All the responses that I received either did not mention background reports or expressed unequivocal support for background reports. No organisation expressed any opposition to the idea of background reports.

Moreover, company background inquiry reports were recommended by the Scottish Executive’s expert group on corporate homicide in 2005 and by the English Sentencing Advisory Panel in its consultation paper on corporate manslaughter and corporate homicide. There is also a body of academic work that supports the principle of background reports—for example, “Sentencing the corporate offender: Legal and social Issues” by Croall and Ross, 2002, and “Sentencing and Society: International Perspectives” by N Hutton and C Tata, 2002. There is a solid body of evidence in favour of company background reports.

It strikes me as ridiculous that we rely on convicted companies to provide the reports that will influence the level of fine. That is the equivalent of a judge sternly wagging his finger at a convicted housebreaker and saying in a severe, if not downright angry, tone, “You are a terribly naughty fellow. Now, please tell me how big a fine you can afford to pay.”

I move amendment 103.

The Convener: Thank you for that amusing presentation. Do any other members want to say anything?

Bill Butler (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab): Just that I think that the amendment makes good common sense and is worthy of support. It would prevent the ludicrous, albeit exaggerated, situation that Dr Wilson cited in support of this most necessary and timely reform.

Kenny MacAskill: We are grateful to Dr Bill Wilson for lodging amendment 103 and agree with Bill Butler’s comments. We are aware that there is a public perception that convicted organisations currently have only minimal fines imposed on them, which are not sufficient to act as an effective deterrent. That perception has, understandably, resulted in calls for further legislative changes to be made to ensure that courts are able to impose appropriate sentences.

The difficulty in practice is that, as Bill Wilson pointed out, courts often do not have sufficiently up-to-date information about the state of an organisation’s financial health prior to sentencing. That issue was highlighted by the High Court in 2009, when the Crown appealed the level of a fine in a case that involved the death of a member of the public due to breaches of the Health and Safety at Work Act etc 1974. In its opinion, the High Court made it clear that the information that was provided to the sentencing judge at the original trial and, subsequently, to itself was less than might have been hoped for for sentencing purposes. The expert group on corporate homicide also illustrated the difficulties that courts face in relation to the issue in its 2005 report.

Not only is there a public perception that fines for convicted organisations are not sufficient; the courts and other experts have highlighted the fact that there is an issue that needs to be resolved. We are also pleased that amendment 103 will be, as far as possible, cost neutral to the criminal justice system. We therefore support the amendment.

Amendment 103 agreed to.

Sections 21 to 23 agreed to.

The Convener: As we are approximately halfway through this morning’s proceedings, I propose that we take a short break.

11:34

Meeting suspended.

11:43

On resuming—

The Convener: I welcome to the meeting Trish Godman MSP, who has joined us for a discussion on amendments that we will get to later—I hope.
Section 24—Voluntary intoxication by alcohol: effect in sentencing

The Convener: Amendment 104, in the name of Robert Brown, is in a group on its own.

Robert Brown: Amendment 104, in the name of the Lord Advocate, proposes that section 24 be deleted. In my view, the Government is trying to fiddle about with something that does not need fiddling about with. This provision is highly likely to have unintended consequences or will, at the very least, give enormous scope for legal wrangling over a matter that is already well understood by judges.

I have heard people say that defence lawyers are always claiming that their clients are very sorry but they did what they did under the influence of too much bevvy. In my time, I have been a prosecutor and a defence solicitor and I am pretty clear that, if the aim is to achieve a lesser sentence, such pleas, which are made not least by solicitors struggling to say anything useful about their clients, just will not wash with the magistrate or sheriff. Of course, even though it is not a mitigating factor—the mitigatory element is, I must say, one of the oddities in this whole matter—the fact that something needs to be done about an alcohol problem might well be relevant to the sentence. Certainly such information is vital for community orders or, for that matter, the prison concerned.

As we discussed at stage 1, section 24 might also cause problems with regard, for example, to genuine cases of people getting drunk in the face of bereavement or in other sympathetic circumstances and there is a risk that we might be entangling ourselves in an issue that I really do not think gives courts that much of a problem.

I move amendment 104.

Stewart Maxwell: I oppose amendment 104 on a number of grounds. First, Robert Brown is simply wrong to claim that the defence is not used by solicitors to get their clients off—it is. The amendment sends out entirely the wrong message about the use of alcohol and offences that are committed while under its influence. It is right and proper that we make it crystal clear that such behaviour is unacceptable.

Robert Brown’s second point concerned mitigation when someone is bereaved, has taken alcohol and has subsequently been charged with an offence. The mitigation in such cases relates not to alcohol but to the fact that, due to bereavement, the person is suffering severe stress and upset. The member is wrong in fact when he claims that such circumstances could no longer be used as mitigation. The bill in no way prevents defence lawyers from offering them as mitigation or courts from taking them into account. For that reason, I oppose amendment 104.

Bill Butler: I support amendment 104. Robert Brown has made a good case. The provision that he seeks to remove is unnecessary and superfluous. We do not need it, as everything that is necessary is already in the mix.

The Convener: I have already indicated support for Robert Brown’s amendment 104. Stewart Maxwell is correct to say that the fact that the conduct that has been complained about has been committed while under the influence of drink is brought to the court’s attention in a number of cases, but it is never seen as a relevant plea in mitigation. As Robert Brown suggested, frequently the issue is brought to the court’s attention to guide it—hopefully, from the accused’s point of view—down the road of a probation order, with appropriate conditions relating to alcohol treatment. I cannot conceive of a court accepting as a mitigation the fact that an offence was committed under the influence of drink; in most instances, it would be regarded as an aggravation. That addresses the point that the Government makes. In my view, section 24 is unnecessary.

Kenny MacAskill: I agree entirely with Stewart Maxwell. Amendment 104 seeks to leave out section 24. The provision forms part of our comprehensive framework for action to rebalance Scotland’s relationship with alcohol. We know that alcohol fuels much criminal offending. There is a strong link between alcohol misuse and offending, especially violent offending. In spite of the courts’ understanding, there is evidence that time and time again voluntary intoxication is put before them as a mitigating factor. That happened throughout the 20 years during which I practised law; it has continued to happen during the 11 years since I left the practice of law.

In her evidence to the committee, the Lord Advocate said:

“Day in, day out, notwithstanding the understanding that it does not mitigate, solicitors continue to put it before the courts in mitigation that their client would not have carried out the crime if sober. That is particularly prevalent as an excuse or as a form of mitigation in domestic abuse cases.”—[Official Report, Justice Committee, 9 June 2009; c 2060.]

We do not accept that the provision in the bill would prevent the court from considering the underlying reason for an offender’s intoxication as a mitigating factor—Stewart Maxwell referred to bereavement—although the intoxication itself cannot be a mitigating factor. We also do not accept that the provision implies that the position in respect of other forms of intoxication must be intended to be different. The key issue is the high level of offending that is associated with alcohol.

We invite the member to withdraw amendment 104 and to support the Lord Advocate and those in our courts who, as she said, day in, day out have put before them the excuse that it was the drink that done it. The time has come to rebalance our relationship with alcohol, in the courts as well as outwith them.

Robert Brown: The cabinet secretary has entirely missed the point. As I indicated, solicitors may well present such information to the court, in mitigation or otherwise. The practice is particularly noticeable among more junior solicitors, when they first appear in court on such matters. That is entirely different from saying that the court takes notice of alcohol as a mitigatory factor. I would be extraordinarily surprised if any sheriff or magistrate in Scotland did that.

As the convener and I have indicated, the fact that someone has an alcohol problem or that there is some background of that sort is relevant and needs to be taken into account when consideration is given to what sentence should be imposed, as it might well be important information in that context. I just do not accept the suggestion that section 24 is part of the Government’s broader strategy on alcohol, for which I would just imagine that there is unanimous support among committee members.

Apart from any other considerations, it is an odd proposal to make. The provision in section 24 focuses on drink. Most of us know that drug taking is often put forward as a mitigatory factor, but section 24 does not deal with drugs. Why is drink singled out? One could make the case that drink is just one form of drug. It is an odd provision that does nothing to enhance the professional practice of the courts. It might make a difference to what solicitors put forward in court, but that is not the issue. The issue is what the courts do with such information when it is put forward. Section 24 is misconceived, so I will press amendment 104, which seeks to remove it from the bill.

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 104 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Aitken, Bill (Glasgow) (Con)
Brown, Robert (Glasgow) (LD)
Butler, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab)
Craigie, Cathie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (Lab)
Kelly, James (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab)

Against
Constance, Angela (Livingston) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West of Scotland) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 5, Against 3, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 104 agreed to.

After section 24

The Convener: Amendment 105, in the name of the minister, is grouped with amendment 184.

Kenny MacAskill: Amendment 105 provides that the Scottish ministers may, by affirmative order, make provision for the implementation of the European Union framework decision on the mutual recognition of judgments and probation decisions, including the modification of existing legislation, if required.

The framework decision provides for a person who has been sentenced to a community sentence or a suspended custodial sentence, or who has been released from custody on licence, in another EU member state to request a return to his or her home country and for the conditions that are attached to his or her sentence to be supervised in that country. The aims of the decision are improved rehabilitation and public protection. By taking the proposed enabling power, we will be able to make the necessary changes to Scots law to ensure that we can comply with the framework decision by the deadline of 2011.

Amendment 184 provides that any order that is made on the implementation of the EU framework decision must be made by affirmative order.

I move amendment 105.

Amendment 105 agreed to.

The Convener: Amendment 10, in the name of Richard Baker, is grouped with amendment 10A.

Richard Baker: Along with our concern about the proposal for a presumption against custodial sentences of six months or less, our other key concern has been about the absence from the bill of provision for the action that is required to tackle violent crime, in particular knife crime. We seek to remedy that through amendment 10, which would give effect to the proposal for a system of mandatory minimum sentences for knife carrying.

Scotland still suffers from rates of violent crime that are higher than those anywhere else in the United Kingdom, and knife crime remains at persistently high levels. Research by the Institute for Public Policy Research highlighted that violent crime accounted for 30 per cent of crime in Scotland but only 20 per cent of crime in England and Wales. In 2007-08, 8,989 offences of handling an offensive weapon were recorded by police. In 2008-09, there were only nine fewer such offences. Only 29 per cent of those who were convicted of such offences received a custodial sentence. Of course, if a presumption against custodial sentences of six months or less, or three months or less, continues to be pursued, even fewer of those offenders will receive a custodial sentence. The cabinet secretary referred to the number of such sentences for knife offences when we discussed section 17.

We do not believe that the situation is appropriate. Given the persistently high levels of knife crime, we believe that the sentencing regime for knife carrying must change. That is why I propose a mandatory minimum custodial sentence of six months for knife carrying, except in exceptional circumstances. That would put knife offences on the same footing as firearms offences, which already carry a mandatory minimum sentence of five years’ custody. Far more people in Scotland are killed with knives than with firearms. Last year, knives were responsible for 58 per cent of homicides in Scotland, which is the highest percentage ever recorded.

There has been debate about the cost of our proposal due to its impact on prison places. Robert Brown has said that it would cost £23 million. However, that presumes that the policy would have no deterrent effect, which we do not accept, and it needs to be balanced with other factors including the recent estimate that, last year, injuries resulting from knife crimes cost the national health service in Scotland £500 million. Furthermore, we do not accept the counsel of despair on the impact of prison. The argument is made that rehabilitation cannot take place in custody over that period, but we believe that that notion should be challenged and that greater efforts should be made to engage in rehabilitation in prison. Why should we accept the status quo, if that is what it is?

The other key fallacy in the debate has been the argument that those who carry knives legitimately—for example, for their work—would be targeted by amendment 10. They would not, because the 1995 act already makes exemptions for those who have knives for use at work, for religious reasons or as part of a national costume. We do not seek to change the law in that area.

The committee has received a range of evidence on the proposal. Some were concerned about those who carry knives legitimately—I have addressed that point. Others argued that mandatory services do not work, but the empirical evidence that was put forward to support that view was pretty insubstantial. We have seen reductions in those. The violence reduction unit has emphasised that other methods of reducing knife crime should be employed, particularly the education of young people. I point out that the vast majority of knife crimes are committed by adult offenders, but it is also important to say that we do not regard the proposed change to the sentencing regime as an isolated measure to tackle knife crime. We believe that it is complementary to the other work, which is often very good, that is continuing in communities to reduce knife crime and divert those who are at risk of becoming involved in it.

I turn to the convener’s amendment 10A, with which we have sympathy. Others have accused us of being in a bidding war on the level of sentences, but that is not the case. Our proposal has been for a minimum sentence of six months, and that remains our position today. The convener has made it clear that he does not regard that as adequate and he proposes a minimum of two years. I highlight the fact that our proposal is for a minimum sentence and it would still be open to the court to impose a sentence of up to four years. We believe that the crucial thing is to introduce the principle of a minimum custodial sentence so that those who are convicted of carrying knives can expect to go to jail. I appreciate that the convener has made a different legislative proposal based on a different precedent in the law, and we would be happy to reflect on that before stage 3. We will therefore abstain in any vote on amendment 10A.

We believe that there is a clear difference on the committee between members who have listened to the victims of knife crime and their families who have fought so hard for the proposed change in the law and members who have not. It is crucial that we move to stage 3 with an intact proposal for a mandatory minimum sentence so that, at the very least, the matter can be debated further. To those who question the practicality and cost of the proposal, I simply point to the powerful evidence that the committee heard from John Muir, who eloquently and persistently stated his case and that of other victims. The real question is what the costs will be of not pursuing the change in the law, which is why I move the amendment in my name.

I move amendment 10.

The Convener: I will speak to and move amendment 10A before I open the debate. The matter is divisive, but there will be unanimous agreement that the effects of knife crime are felt by every community in Scotland. It is a matter for profound regret that too many young men, in particular, who go out for a night put a blade in their pocket as readily as they spray on aftershave and deodorant. We all find that deeply depressing.

There is simply no excuse for carrying a knife, and where knives are carried there has to be an assumption that there is an intention and indeed a willingness to use them. Even in what we would have hoped was a more enlightened and civilised age, we can see the effects of knife crime as we walk through the streets of some of our cities, where young men’s faces show the signs of being slashed with a knife or similar weapon. Many, of course, are not seen because they have been stabbed to death, with all the heartbreak and loss of expectations that families feel.

12:00

The wording of the existing law makes it clear that no one can be picked up for carrying a weapon if the weapon can have a conventional and law-abiding use. Richard Baker was correct to underline that fact. In seeking to incorporate my proposed approach into the bill, I have unashamedly plagiarised the Road Traffic Offenders Act 1988, which permits a sentence to find special reasons for not disqualifying a person from driving or endorsing a licence. I have adapted the approach in amendment 10A, which would enable a sheriff or judge to find special reasons for not imposing the two-year jail sentence.

We are not in a bidding war on the matter, but I respectfully suggest to Richard Baker that a sentence of six months, as is proposed in amendment 10, is not likely to be a sufficient deterrent to people who are prepared to carry knives. The fact is that, as the law currently operates, a person who is sentenced to less than six months will spend a maximum of three months in a prison or young offenders institution. I do not think that people regard such a sentence as a sufficient deterrent.

I acknowledge that the approaches that are proposed in amendments 10 and 10A would carry a cost. Nevertheless, we must take on board the cost in human lives and human misery that has been inflicted by people who carry and frequently use knives. I am convinced that a sentence of two years would act as a sufficient deterrent and would lead to a dramatic reduction in knife carrying and consequently to a dramatic reduction in homicides and assaults to severe injury. That is what we should be seeking to achieve.

I move amendment 10A.

Robert Brown: Nobody doubts that knife crime has been and continues to be a curse on Scotland, and has far too often led to tragedy. That is particularly the case in the west of Scotland; in a conversation with police officers in the east I was struck to discover that they do not regard knife crime as anything like the same problem as it is for their colleagues in the west.

There is no single, totemic answer to the problem. However, the way forward is clear. It lies in the work of the violence reduction unit in breaking down territorialism between gangs. It lies in the increasingly effective targeted stop-and-search mission of the police, who are conducting more searches and finding fewer weapons. It lies in the Cardiff model of using information from accident and emergency departments on violent injuries, which are often unreported to the police—the issue is the subject of an amendment in my name, which we will consider. It lies in the work that is done by operation reclaim and the Inverclyde initiative, in which Mr John Muir is so successfully involved, and in the work of organisations such as Includem.

I think that colleagues in Glasgow received the March performance update from Strathclyde Police’s Glasgow central and west division, which covers the city centre. The update indicates that not only has there been a substantial drop in violent crime in the division but the number of cases involving offensive weapons has dropped by 28.4 per cent and the number of incidents involving knives has fallen by 20.2 per cent. Those are significant reductions, which have been achieved by effective policing.

It is through effective policing that the deterrent effect is brought to bear, rather than through sentences and what I regard as highly populist amendments, which seem to have more to do with garnering votes for the Labour and Conservative parties than with a serious attempt to tackle the problem. The proposal for a so-called mandatory prison sentence for carrying a knife is a distraction from the real issue.

It is often the case that a person who is found in possession of a knife will face a prison sentence. People who carry knives should know that they face the real potential of such a sentence. However, we know that many offenders are men of full age, and a man of 25 or 30 who might have previous convictions for violence and undoubtedly knows the score is in a manifestly different position from an immature youth of 16—amendment 10 would apply to offenders aged 16 and over—who is caught up on the margins of a gang and thinks that carrying a knife makes him a hard man. Sheriffs know the difference and sentence accordingly.

Research carried out by the Liberal Democrats has demonstrated that if amendments 10 and 10A were agreed to, 1,345 extra offenders would require to be sent to prison—I accept that the figure might be too precise. It would be necessary to build at least one new Barlinnie prison to house those prisoners, with running costs to the Scottish Prison Service of between £21 million and £84 million, depending on whether both amendments were agreed to—that is to say nothing of the capital costs per annum.

It is fair to say that you cannot entirely predict the effects of any particular measure against a moving background of various other things. However, the issue is not the cost of not passing the amendments, as Richard Baker suggested, but the mechanisms for dealing more effectively with knife crime. I make it clear that if a policy of increased sentences or mandatory sentences stopped people carrying knives, I would be happy to look at it, but the reality is that it does not—

We have recently agreed to set up an advisory sentencing council. It would be a reasonable way forward to have the sentencing council look at the background material on this issue and make sensible, professional and research-based proposals on how to deal with knife crime. I leave the committee with that thought on this highly contentious issue. I urge the committee to reject Richard Baker’s amendment 10 and the convener’s amendment 10A.

Stewart Maxwell: I agree 100 per cent with Robert Brown’s comments on the amendments. I, too, completely oppose amendments 10 and 10A.

I will begin where Robert Brown left off, on deterrence. There is no evidence whatever to support the idea that a mandatory sentence for knife crime, or indeed for any other crime, would act as a deterrent. If it did, we would not have any murders. Look at other jurisdictions—the USA has been mentioned. If mandatory sentences were effective deterrents, the USA would be crime free. The USA has had mandatory sentences for a number of crimes for years, but they have made not one iota of difference.

The committee often prides itself on ensuring that it looks at the evidence that is submitted to it before it comes to a logical and reasoned conclusion. In this case, not one single professional working in the field agrees with either the Labour amendment or the Conservative amendment, because there is no evidence to support their positions.

I will quote what Bill Butler said at stage 1 when he was questioning—cross-questioning might be a better description—Henry McLeish. On evidence, he said:

“Will you outline those sources and back up your assertion that there is sufficient evidence?”—[Official Report, Justice Committee, 19 May 2009; c 1817.]

I ask the same question of the Labour and Conservative members around the table—and Richard Baker in particular, who has moved amendment 10. Will you back up your assertion that there is evidence to support your amendment? Frankly, there is none, and you have so far failed to provide any.

Chief Constable David Strang told this committee that the fear of a prison sentence, irrespective of its length, does not in any way enter into the equation when criminals carry knives, use knives or take part in any other kind of criminal activity. What makes the difference, he said, was the fear of getting caught. That goes back to the point that Robert Brown made about effective policing and early intervention.

Effective policing, early intervention and the fear of getting caught stop people carrying out the offences that we all condemn; the fear of receiving

In their evidence to the committee, Professor Neil Hutton and Professor Fergus McNeill pointed out that there was no evidence to support the view that criminal sentences have a deterrent effect generally and that there was much experience, from America in particular, to demonstrate the lack of any significant impact on criminal behaviour of changes in sanctions. It is interesting that both the Scottish Police Federation and the violence reduction unit oppose mandatory sentences because they are unworkable and ineffective. The Scottish Justices Association and Chief Constable Stephen House of Strathclyde Police have expressed similar views. I suggest to the committee that it is just possible that those guys know something about the issue.

There are other objections to the amendments. Mandatory sentences lead to perverse results. If Richard Baker’s amendment were agreed to, a person convicted of carrying but not brandishing a knife would have to get six months, in the absence of mitigating circumstances. Ten minutes later in the same court, somebody else who had threatened to batter people with a lump of iron or wood that was not bladed or pointed might well get a lesser sentence for what is clearly a more serious crime.

Mandatory sentences move power from the sentencing judge to the prosecutor, who can decide whether and in what form to bring charges. The prosecution decision effectively becomes the sentencing decision, too. Prosecution decisions are inevitably less open and less challengeable than judicial decisions. A study carried out by the United States Sentencing Commission found that the prosecutor circumvented mandatory minima by bringing different charges, to avoid potentially unjust or unworkable consequences. In its experience, charges were filed under the mandatory provisions in only about a quarter of eligible cases. I readily accept that the legal background in the United States is different. Ironically, for the reasons found in that study, the USA is retreating from mandatory sentences.

If amendment 10A were agreed to, all cases would have to be tried by a jury, which would involve considerable expense and delay. I wonder whether that is really a sensible way forward.

Ninety-four per cent of those who are currently in prison for carrying offensive weapons have been in prison before. That is hardly an endorsement of the deterrent effect of prison. Indeed, 60 per cent of them have been sent there for the same blooming offence.

There are other objections to the amendments. Mandatory sentences lead to perverse results. If Richard Baker’s amendment were agreed to, a person convicted of carrying but not brandishing a knife would have to get six months, in the absence of mitigating circumstances. Ten minutes later in the same court, somebody else who had threatened to batter people with a lump of iron or wood that was not bladed or pointed might well get a lesser sentence for what is clearly a more serious crime.

Mandatory sentences move power from the sentencing judge to the prosecutor, who can decide whether and in what form to bring charges. The prosecution decision effectively becomes the sentencing decision, too. Prosecution decisions are inevitably less open and less challengeable than judicial decisions. A study carried out by the United States Sentencing Commission found that the prosecutor circumvented mandatory minima by bringing different charges, to avoid potentially unjust or unworkable consequences. In its experience, charges were filed under the mandatory provisions in only about a quarter of eligible cases. I readily accept that the legal background in the United States is different. Ironically, for the reasons found in that study, the USA is retreating from mandatory sentences.

If amendment 10A were agreed to, all cases would have to be tried by a jury, which would involve considerable expense and delay. I wonder whether that is really a sensible way forward.
one prison sentence as opposed to another prison sentence has no effect whatsoever, as it is not in the minds of any of the people, young or old, who walk out of their house carrying a knife. The amendments will do nothing apart from cause money to be spent that could better be spent on ensuring that the justice system tackles the problem properly.

James Kelly: I support amendment 10. As you said, convener, the effects of knife crime are felt throughout communities in Scotland. It is with that in mind that amendments 10 and 10A have been lodged.

In examining the validity of an amendment, we need to consider the policy effect of its implementation. We heard a lot of evidence that suggests that far too many young men carry knives when they go out on a Friday or Saturday night. Some do it because it is simply seen as something that people do, although evidence suggests that, somewhere down the line, those people will use those knives to detrimental effect.

I submit that it is absolutely logical that if such young men are aware that they will face a jail sentence for carrying a knife, they will be less inclined to carry such instruments, and there will be a reduction in knife incidents throughout Scotland.

I refute Robert Brown’s points about cost. I accept that, initially, there would be an increase in prisoner numbers. However, as the policy took effect it would act as a deterrent, and in the longer term reduce prisoner numbers. Richard Baker made a valid point about the consequences of increasing the number of young men who are incarcerated, as a result of the proposed policy. To my knowledge, the reality is that neither Barlinnie nor any other penal establishment has elastic walls. Robert Brown is not known for his extreme liberal tendencies—irrespective of our emotional desires, singling out one offence involves a false logic. Many hideous offences afflict victims the length and breadth of Scotland.

Notwithstanding that, while the human cost of knife crime is of course severe, we cannot separate discussions about blades from discussions about booze. We will tackle knife crime seriously only when we consider seriously Scotland’s relationship with alcohol.

The length of sentences for knife crime has increased in the past decade, so that blows out of the water any arguments about deterrence. I listened with interest to the evidence session that we held before the recess and I was somewhat struck by the evidence from the police—who are not known for their extreme liberal tendencies—that they take a pragmatic approach. In Mr John Muir’s evidence, I was struck by his level of knowledge about the good preventive work that is taking place in Inverclyde. We would do better by our communities if we strove to roll out the good practice that is being followed there.

I have a former colleague—a friend—who is a social worker at Barlinnie. She always jokes about the perception that Barlinnie has elastic walls. To the best of my knowledge, the reality is that neither Barlinnie nor any other penal establishment has elastic walls. Robert Brown raised a legitimate point about the consequences of increasing the number of young men who are incarcerated, as a result of the proposed policy. To his credit, Mr Kelly has a somewhat anorak fixation on financial memorandums, so I am somewhat surprised that he has not applied that rigour about financial consequences to the proposed policy. The reality is that mandatory sentences would not deter knife crime and that the cost and burden on our penal establishments would increase.

Nigel Don: As usual, I have no wish to repeat what has been said, but I will follow up one point that Robert Brown made towards the end of his comments. Regardless of the offence or the subject that we are talking about, it is entirely clear that, if we remove discretion from the bench, we push it further down the prosecution and investigation chain. It will be obvious to the Crown that some people who carry knives should not carry knives, but that sending them to prison is not the right answer. The Crown will find ways of using whatever discretion it has not to bring those people to court on such charges.

Equally, policemen will recognise a range of offences and will—for good human reasons—find it convenient not to pick up on the carrying of a knife, because doing so would finish up propagating the wrong solution. I say with respect that that is what those who use their professional discretion will do.

Apart from any other questions, we need to address the question whether we want discretion to rest with the police and the Crown—and possibly even those who report the incident—or with the bench. In principle, we want it to be with the bench and we want everything to be properly investigated. We need to leave the discretion with those who give the sentence, so any mandatory sentence should probably be resisted.

Bill Butler: On emotive issues such as this, good sense sometimes goes out the window. As best we can, we need to be rational in our approach, but that is not to say that we will not have different approaches. I do not impugn anyone’s integrity for taking a different view.

I agree that there is a place for preventive work. As Angela Constance said, John Muir himself illustrated that point. Such preventive work and diversionary approaches were rightly initiated by the previous Executive and supported by all parties.

As I recall, an amendment to a previous bill to increase the maximum sentence for carrying a knife from two years to four years was, I think, moved by Stewart Maxwell. That was also right because, where circumstances dictate and in appropriate cases, such condign sentences are obviously correct.

We need to try to strike a balance here. Time and again, it has been said that there is no evidence that mandatory sentences deter. However, we have not as yet tried what is being proposed, so perhaps that is why little evidence is available. It may be that such an approach works only if it is included in a range of approaches that can be applied to different individuals.

I finish by pointing out that, although Nigel Don does not often nod off—though even Homer nods, as we know from the poet—he inadvertently said something that is becoming common coinage, but which is nevertheless incorrect. New subsection 5B that amendment 10, in the name of Richard Baker, would insert into the 1995 act states:

“Where this subsection applies, the court must impose a sentence of imprisonment of at least 6 months (with or without a fine) unless the court is of the opinion that there are exceptional circumstances relating to the offence or to the offender which justify not doing so.”

If I may say so, that does not provide a mandatory sentence. It would still leave discretion, quite rightly, in the hands of the sentencer—

Stewart Maxwell: Is it not mandatory, then?

Bill Butler: I am just reading what amendment 10 says. Given Stewart Maxwell’s point that we should look at the evidence as it is, we should also look at amendments as they are written. It is reasonable to do that. I am simply stating what the amendment says.

I think that amendment 10 provides a presumption of a mandatory minimum, but it would not tie the sentencer’s hands absolutely. It would leave discretion.

This is a difficult and controversial issue on which there are no easy answers. Amendment 10 at least attempts to provide another approach where circumstances dictate that such an approach might have a positive effect. For that reason, I will support amendment 10.

Kenny MacAskill: I say, following Bill Butler’s remarks, that if Labour’s position is now that it is not moving for a mandatory sentence, I am very open to discussing matters with Mr Butler, Mr Baker or whomever. However, Mr Baker may wish to clarify that point.

Clearly, amendments 10 and 10A reflect ongoing public concerns about the booze and blades culture on our streets and, in particular, about the number of young people who choose to carry knives. However, the Government is doing more than ever to tackle knife crime, with tougher sentences and tough police action to take weapons off our streets. That goes hand in hand with ground-breaking initiatives to educate young people about the dangers of knives.

The results of that work are demonstrated in the statistics, which show that recorded crime last year was at its lowest level in nearly 30 years, with violent crime at its lowest level since 1986. Our courts are handing down tougher sentences for carrying knives: the average custodial sentence for knife carriers has increased from 116 days in 2003-04 to 217 days in 2007-08.

Mandatory minimum custodial sentences for knife carriers—a one-size-fits-all approach—are not the solution, and we are not the only ones who make that point: the chief constable of Strathclyde Police, Stephen House, has stated that mandatory minimum sentences are not the answer. The head of the national violence reduction unit, John Carnochan, gave to the committee evidence in which he stated:

“Jail doesn’t work, we need early intervention, restricting access to alcohol and knives.”
We should listen to those who are at the front line in the fight against knife crime.

John Muir and Chief Constable David Strang provided evidence to the committee on 23 March. In spite of their divergent views, a clear message about the importance of education and prevention emerged from that session. We need to pursue a twin approach of education and enforcement, give our courts the discretion to consider the circumstances of each case that comes before them, and give our judges sufficient discretion to sentence individuals, not offences. We believe—Robert Brown referred to this—that it would be more appropriate for the proposed Scottish sentencing council to consider the appropriate disposals for persons who have been found carrying knives or other offensive weapons in public and to produce guidelines on that.

The Government does not support amendments 10 and 10A.

Richard Baker: I agree with the convener’s comments on the aim of the proposal in principle being that those who carry knives as a matter of routine should think again. We want them to think again and to leave their knives at home. Too often, that still does not happen in Scotland.

We do not believe that the cabinet secretary is taking sufficient action. His proposal is that two thirds fewer knife criminals will go to jail, but we think that that sends out the wrong message entirely, which is why we propose mandatory minimum sentences, except in exceptional circumstances, as Bill Butler made clear. Such a framework for firearms offences has existed for some time, but we think it remarkable that we have that framework for firearms offences when fewer people are killed by firearms than by knives in this country.

Mr Butler made it clear that not all judicial discretion would be removed. However, we want to change the situation significantly through our proposal for mandatory minimum sentences. That is clear from amendment 10, as members will appreciate if they have read the amendment properly.

I agree with Robert Brown that no single measure will solve the problems of knife crime; rather, a range of measures will be required, as he and Bill Butler have said. However, we believe that what we have proposed will be a powerful tool. We and the Conservative party have not made the proposal simply as a matter of politics, but because victims of knife crime and their families, whom we have listened to, have put it forward.

It should be pointed out that the figures show that the incidence of knife crime in the east of Scotland is far from insubstantial.

Angela Constance referred to costs and James Kelly made a point about the impact on NHS costs of injuries that result from knife crime.

On the evidence on the impact of mandatory minimum sentences on crime, such sentences are in place for homicide and firearms offences in this country, and we have seen reductions in those offences. Lord Carmont was given credit for helping to reduce knife crime in Glasgow 50 years ago through imposing longer sentences on knife criminals.

It is clear that we are not making enough progress through use of the current measures, however successful some of them have been. We certainly do not wish to detract from those measures or to say that they should not continue, because they should. However, it is also important that we do not dismiss the evidence from John Muir and others. I do not see why the committee should give their evidence lower status than is given to evidence from others. They have carefully considered the issue and have been gravely affected by it, so the committee should listen carefully to what they say.

I take on board the convener’s view on six-month sentences, but I believe that agreement to amendment 10 and the bringing in of a mandatory minimum custodial sentence will move us forward and have an impact on people who might carry knives. I would be happy to debate the detail of the proposal further at stage 3 or in advance of that, although I hope that we adopt the fundamental principle of mandatory minimum sentences today, and that that will be the context of future debates.

12:30

The Convener: A number of points with which I agree in some measure have been made in opposition to amendments 10 and 10A. There must be a comprehensive package to combat knife crime—Robert Brown, Angela Constance and Nigel Don raised that issue. There is merit in the arguments and I accept them. However, I part company with the members on a number of issues. Robert Brown described a situation in which someone could be charged with brandishing a piece of wood or a similar object that might present a more immediate threat than would possession of a knife. I do not accept that, because the statistics demonstrate the fatal consequences of carrying knives—consequences than can be much more severe than in cases of makeshift would-be weapons.

The firearms legislation, which has been in force for a number of years and has been accepted without demur, makes an automatic five-year sentence apposite and applicable in cases in... which an individual is in possession of a firearm. That is a much more draconian approach than that which is being recommended by me and Richard Baker. There does not appear to have been any reaction against that. We must also bear in mind that even these days, when there is an unacceptable level of use of firearms, the number of incidents of the use of firearms in homicides pales into insignificance compared with the number of cases involving knives.

The aspect of my amendment 10A that I would especially like to stress is the provision for special reasons, which would enable the sentencer to take into consideration the special circumstances that are apposite to the offence and to the accused person. The offence is self-evident. There can frequently be perfectly appropriate defences for carrying a knife, the obvious ones being for tradesmen and butchers. Such a defence is a reasonable excuse, and such a case should not be prosecuted. Were it prosecuted, it is a defence that would almost invariably succeed. However, what cannot be allowed to continue is the carrying of knives on social occasions, or people hanging about with their chums, as kids do, carrying knives. That frequently results in tragedy. It is on that basis that I press amendment 10A.

The question is that amendment 10A be agreed to. Are we all agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Aitken, Bill (Glasgow) (Con)

Against
Brown, Robert (Glasgow) (LD)
Constance, Angela (Livingston) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West of Scotland) (SNP)

Abstentions
Butler, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab)
Craige, Cathie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (Lab)
Kelly, James (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 1, Against 4, Abstentions 3.

Amendment 10A disagreed to.

The Convener: The question is that amendment 10 be agreed to. Are we all agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Aitken, Bill (Glasgow) (Con)
Butler, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab)
Craige, Cathie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (Lab)
Kelly, James (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab)

Against
Brown, Robert (Glasgow) (LD)
Constance, Angela (Livingston) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West of Scotland) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 4, Against 4, Abstentions 0.

For the reasons that I have outlined—the deterrent effect of a custodial sentence and the fact that levels of knife crime are unacceptably high—I use my casting vote in favour of the amendment.

Amendment 10 agreed to.

Section 25—Involvement in serious organised crime

The Convener: Amendment 344, in the name of the minister, is grouped with amendments 345 to 351 and 358. I draw the attention of members to the pre-emption information on the groupings list.

Kenny MacAskill: Amendments 344, 346, 347, 349 to 351 and 358 will introduce changes to the detail of the provisions on serious organised crime in part 2 of the bill. Although we understand the reason behind amendments 345 and 348, we do not think that they are appropriate or necessary.

Amendment 344 sets out in more detail the circumstances in which somebody agrees to be involved in serious organised crime. The amendment is needed to help to target those who facilitate or enable serious organised crime groups, without themselves committing indictable offences. The amendment therefore makes it clear that a person agrees to become involved in serious organised crime when he agrees to do anything—criminal or otherwise—while knowing or suspecting that doing that thing will enable or further the commission of serious organised crime.

The offence, therefore, will remain broadly drawn but will, through amendment 344, be more clearly defined. That approach is necessary because we need to capture all forms of serious organised crime in order to get at its heart, and to do so requires flexibility. The activity around serious organised crime is wide ranging and we need a wide-ranging offence to tackle those who are involved in serious organised crime. That includes both those who commit the criminal act and those who supply and support the criminals. For example, someone may allow the use of their property while knowing or suspecting that the accommodation is being used to house people who are being trafficked for sexual exploitation, or they may allow their vehicle to be used for the transportation of drugs. Those activities may not, in themselves, be criminal acts, but the main purpose of the activity is to further the criminal purpose of a serious offence as defined in section...
25, and thereby to support serious organised crime. We realise that the offence is already widely drawn; however, it needs to be if we are to tackle the scourge of organised crime. The amendment is required if we are to capture all forms of activity that enable or further serious organised crime.

Robert Brown’s amendment 345 suggests additional criteria that will need to be satisfied to establish that crime amounts to serious organised crime. In particular, the amendment would provide that serious organised crime means crime involving two or more people committing or conspiring to commit serious offences “that would reasonably be regarded as being both serious and organised”.

However, it is not entirely clear what that is intended to achieve. We already have a definition of “serious offence” in the bill: it is an indictable offence that is “committed with the intention of securing a material benefit”; or an indictable threat or act of violence that is intended to obtain

“such a benefit in the future”.

I presume that Robert Brown intends that only serious offences within that technical meaning, which are also objectively serious and sufficiently organised, should constitute serious organised crime. Nevertheless, there is obviously a question as to what a court would make of such broad terminology. What do “serious” and “organised” mean in that context?

The more compelling argument against amendment 345 is that it would stifle the practical benefits of the provision. We know that serious organised crime is flexible and that it covers all levels of criminality and activity. Activities that are apparently minor or trivial in themselves often form part of a more insidious picture. The amendment would potentially miss significant elements of activity that contribute to the business interests of a serious crime network. If, for example, a group of people undertook shoplifting excursions with the purpose of generating profits to fund drug deals, would their shoplifting “reasonably be regarded as being both serious and organised”?

It may perhaps satisfy the latter test, but it is doubtful that it would be considered to be “serious”, particularly without further legislative guidance.

Although they will make the definition broad, the Government’s amendments make it sufficiently clear to capture the range of activity that constitutes involvement in serious organised crime. We accept that there is a valid concern that the provisions should not be used to punish offending that is genuinely minor and which is not, relatively speaking, organised. However, the best way in which to deal with that concern while retaining the flexibility that is required to tackle the diversity and innovation that are inherent in serious organised crime is to rely on the discretion of the police and the prosecution authorities to report and prosecute such offending appropriately.

Amendments 346, 350 and 358 are simple technical amendments that have the sole purpose of making the terminology in relation to obtaining “a material benefit” more consistent throughout the provisions on serious organised crime.

Amendments 347 and 349 will change the definition of “serious offence”, which forms an integral part of the definition of serious organised crime. Threats and violence are part of the armoury that is used by serious organised crime groups to protect their interests. They believe that they are in total control and thrive on the fact that people may not report their actions because of fear of retribution. Clearly, that is unacceptable. In recognition of that aspect of serious organised criminal activity, amendment 347 will modify the definition of serious offence to include indictable offences that are constituted by any act of violence, when the intention behind the commission of the act is to obtain a material benefit either directly or at some point in the future. That removes the prior qualification that only a “serious” act of violence could be a “serious offence” for these purposes.

We agree with the principle behind amendment 348. The technical definition of a “serious offence” that is committed to secure a future benefit should not be restricted to “serious” violence. The Scottish Government’s amendment 347 already seeks to cover that point, and the use of the term “threat” will cover instances of intimidation, which are themselves indictable offences. We think that the use of the term “threat” rather than the term “intimidation”, which is drawn from the common-law crime of threats, will be more easily understood by the courts.

Amendment 349 is also an adjustment of the definition of serious offence. It is required to ensure that a threat may be sufficient to establish the commission of serious organised crime when it is carried out by two or more people with the intention of securing a material benefit. It is important to note that, in that context, a threat will be a “serious offence” only if the threat is itself an indictable offence and the underlying intention is to secure a material benefit. We consider that it is necessary to deal specifically with threats because a threat of violence might, for example, engender fear that would prevent people from reporting a serious organised criminal or might prevent witnesses from giving evidence at a trial. Equally, threats and intimidation are commonly used by serious organised criminals to secure territorial advantages or to enhance their ability to conduct their criminal business.

Amendment 351 provides a definition of the term "material benefit" where it appears in sections 25 to 28. We are aware that the committee has a concern that the definition of "material benefit" as set out in the introduction could be extended to capture trivial forms of benefit. The amendment that we have made is designed to ensure that only an intended benefit in the form of heritable or moveable property will allow a court or jury to find that a person has agreed to become involved in serious organised crime or has directed somebody else to commit a serious offence.

Similarly, only a benefit in the form of property received in consequence of the commission of serious organised crime will suffice to trigger the duty to report serious organised crime in the context of close personal relationships. Although that definition is still technically wide enough to cover many forms of small-scale proprietary benefit, it makes it clear to courts and juries that we are not targeting those who seek or obtain intangible benefits other than in the form of incorporeal property. We would expect the Crown to exercise its discretion appropriately in deciding how to charge those who are accused of working together to achieve minor or trivial benefits.

I move amendment 344.

Robert Brown: There is broad agreement in committee on the need for weapons to tackle the Mr Bigs of serious organised crime, but there is also genuine anxiety about the scope of some of the offences that will be introduced by sections 25 to 28. I am bound to say that I have found the area difficult and complex—I am sure that other committee members have, too. My amendments in this group and the succeeding groups are designed to try to deal with some of those difficulties.

Amendment 345 relates to section 25. The committee will recall the evidence that a person could be prosecuted under the section if he got involved with someone else to steal a meat pie. Although I appreciate that the prosecutor would probably not use the section in that extreme way, we have to get the "serious and organised" bit into the definition of the crime for which, after all, one could go to jail for 10 years.

My proposed wording would contribute something without losing the targeted intention of the section. At the top of page 39 of the bill, a serious offence is defined as, among other things, an "indictable offence" of certain kinds. In principle, an indictable offence is a theft, a robbery, an assault, a sexual assault and even a breach of the peace, unless I am mistaken. The term covers a lot of offences that range from the very serious at one end, right down to the meat-pie theft at the other, which does not obviously have anything to do with Mr Big. We must have some form of words that narrows down that definition, which goes too far in terms of the areas that it is designed to pick up. Law has to mean something and people need at least an idea of what they are prevented from doing by the country's criminal legislation. I am not sure that the bill quite gets that right at the moment.

Amendment 348 goes the other way. It is clear from evidence that the committee received that serious and organised crime could manifest itself as relatively minor violence and threats. Providing that an offence is part of serious and organised crime, as I hope a previous amendment of mine will redefine, it should be caught by section 25. However, I concede that the Government has dealt with the point in its amendments 347 and 349, so I will not press amendment 348.

Stewart Maxwell: Although I understand the reasons why Robert Brown has lodged his amendments and the concern about the breadth of the proposed offences that he expressed during discussions of the stage 1 report, I remind the committee of the evidence that both the Lord Advocate and the Solicitor General gave us about the reasons why it is so necessary to have a broad definition of such offences; namely, the ability of the Mr Bigs—to use Robert Brown's expression—to get round the law if the definition is too constrained. I will not go over all the evidence that we all heard and used in our stage 1 report when we considered this part of the bill, but I thought that it was both compelling and detailed about why it is necessary to keep in the bill the offences as currently drafted. Therefore, I do not support Robert Brown's amendments to section 25, although I understand why he lodged them and the concerns that he has expressed. We must allow the law to be as flexible as possible so that it can deal with the fast-moving and ever-changing world of serious organised crime.

12:45

The Convener: If there are no other comments, I will make some of my own. All the amendments to section 25 are predicated on concerns about definitions. The general view has been that, as it stands, the bill has the capacity to catch with its provisions people whose involvement in serious organised crime is peripheral and which, in certain situations, could be accidental. It is clear that members and the Government have understood that and have sought to apply the appropriate remedies. It worth putting on the record, yet again, that the Parliament has a unanimous and firm commitment in that respect must be workable and proportionate. Robert Brown and the Government genuinely recognise that—it is the thinking that lies behind their amendments.

Mr MacAskill’s amendment 344 seeks to change one of the definitions, as does Robert Brown’s amendment 345. Although Mr Brown’s amendment is well thought out, makes a case that is entirely arguable and has merit, I think that the Government amendment is probably tidier and I will support it. Mr MacAskill’s amendment 346 seeks to deal with the committee’s concern about the material benefit provision. I think that it fits the bill and I will support it.

I ask Robert Brown to—I am sorry; it has been a long morning. It is for the minister to wind up.

Kenny MacAskill: In view of the time, I am happy just to press amendment 344.

The Convener: That is fine—I am obliged to you.

Amendment 344 agreed to.

The Convener: I invite Robert Brown to move or not to move amendment 345.

Robert Brown: I wonder whether I would be entitled not to move amendment 345 but, while not moving it, to make to the minister the point that some further examination, particularly of the “serious offence” definition, might be helpful. I would like to engage with him on that, if he would be prepared to do it.

The Convener: I take it that, having driven a horse and cart through standing orders—albeit that you were making a relevant point—you will not move amendment 345.

Robert Brown: Indeed.

Amendment 345 not moved.

Amendment 346 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

The Convener: I point out that if amendment 347 is agreed to, I will not be able to call amendment 348 on the ground of pre-emption.

Amendment 347 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

Amendments 349 to 351 moved—[Kenny MacAskill]—and agreed to.

Section 25, as amended, agreed to.

Section 26—Offences aggravated by connection with serious organised crime

The Convener: We move on to section 26, which is as far as we will get at today’s meeting.

Incidentally, I should earlier have welcomed Johann Lamont MSP, who has joined us. I doubt whether she will get any of the action, but she is welcome nonetheless.

Amendment 352, in the name of Robert Brown, is in a group on its own.

Robert Brown: Amendment 352 relates to the new aggravation issue in section 26 and is intended to restore the requirement for corroboration in the class of cases that is covered—those in which an ordinary offence of perhaps theft, assault, stalking or breach of the peace is said to be aggravated by a connection with serious organised crime. That situation is different from an aggravation for a racial or sectarian motive, when the nature of the crime has not really changed but an aspect requires a particular extra sanction.

Under section 26, the aggravation wholly alters the nature of the crime. For example, when a motor car is stolen to facilitate the operation of a major drugs or people-trafficking operation, that puts the crime into a new category with a new level of sentence. It appears that the aggravation could even apply to a motoring offence such as driving without insurance. We must take that into account. In such circumstances, surely the aggravation—which will dwarf the principal crime in many instances—should be corroborated, as it would have to be under section 25 as it has been amended today.

The point is important and is not just technical. The issue is not just about facilitating prosecution of serious criminals—the provision must be got right. If we are to land people with serious prison sentences as a consequence of the provision, the major element of the offence with which they are charged should be the subject of proper proof in the normal way.

I move amendment 352.

The Convener: The argument is interesting. I accept what Robert Brown says about the precedent from the various aggravations for sectarian, racial or homophobic motives, but I am instinctively drawn to a requirement for corroboration. I will listen with interest to the cabinet secretary.

Kenny MacAskill: I will try to clarify matters. We understand the reason behind amendment 352, but it is not appropriate or necessary. Notwithstanding our recent letter to the Justice Committee, we still think that there is some confusion about section 26(4). We are not removing the normal rules of corroboration—they will still apply in proving the underlying offence that incurs a statutory aggravation.
Only the essential elements of an offence—as opposed to, for example, an aggravation—must be proved by corroborated evidence in Scotland. Subsection (4) makes it clear that the approach of requiring only a single source of evidence to establish the aggravation, which has common law and statutory precedent, applies here.

If amendment 352 were agreed to, the position on proving the aggravation might be unclear. Courts might nonetheless resort to the common-law approach, which does not require corroboration of aggravating circumstances. In such an event, the amendment would be meaningless. On the other hand, the lack of any provision at all might produce uncertainty. I invite Robert Brown to withdraw amendment 352 and I hope that I have clarified the underlying aspects.

Robert Brown: I am bound to say that I am not sure whether the cabinet secretary listened to what I said. Neither I nor any other committee member is confused about what the provision is intended to do. I did not suggest any difficulty about the need to corroborate the principal offence; I said that the principal offence could easily be dwarfed by the aggravation. A person might be fined or whatever for the principal offence, but they could go to jail for a long time for the aggravation. That does not at all parallel the normal position of other aggravations, which we have heard about before.

There would be no doubt about the court’s position. It would be pretty obvious from the debate and from the Official Report, which can be taken into account in interpretation, why section 26(4) had been removed; it would be easy for judicial interpretation to make that conclusion.

I am not totally fixed on the issue—I raise it seriously, for the reasons that I have given. To be frank, I have heard no reason from the cabinet secretary for why I should not press amendment 352 to a vote. Given the circumstances, I will do so, but against the background of being happy to continue discussion, if the cabinet secretary can come back with anything more substantial.

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 352 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Aitken, Bill (Glasgow) (Con)
Brown, Robert (Glasgow) (LD)

Against
Butler, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab)
Constance, Angela (Livingston) (SNP)
Craigie, Cathie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (Lab)
Don, Nigel (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Kelly, James (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab)
Maxwell, Stewart (West of Scotland) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 2, Against 6, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 352 disagreed to.

Section 26 agreed to.

The Convener: That takes us to section 27, which is not politically controversial but could take a little time. In the circumstances, we will end proceedings now. I thank members, the cabinet secretary and his officials for their attendance.

I remind committee members that we have a couple of administrative items to deal with.

12:55

Meeting continued in private until 13:01.
4th Marshalled List of Amendments for Stage 2

The Bill will be considered in the following order—

- Sections 1 to 3 Schedule 1
- Sections 4 to 18 Schedule 2
- Sections 19 to 66 Schedule 3
- Sections 67 to 139 Schedule 4
- Sections 140 to 145 Schedule 5
- Sections 146 to 148 Long Title

Amendments marked * are new (including manuscript amendments) or have been altered.

Section 27

Robert Brown

353 In section 27, page 39, line 35, leave out  and insert <an offence under section 25(1)>

Kenny MacAskill

354 In section 27, page 40, line 9, leave out subsection (4)

Robert Brown

355 In section 27, page 40, line 14, leave out  and insert <an offence under section 25(1)>

Kenny MacAskill

356 In section 27, page 40, line 17, leave out subsection (6)

Section 28

Robert Brown

357 In section 28, page 40, line 28, after <suspects> insert <with good reason>

Bill Aitken

Supported by: Robert Brown

106 In section 28, page 40, line 36, at end insert—
In the case of knowledge or suspicion originating from information obtained by the person in the course of the person’s trade, profession, business or employment, this section applies only where the person’s experience or seniority in that trade, profession, business or employment makes it reasonable to assume that the person should be aware of any offence of the sort mentioned in subsection (1) that the other person has or may have committed.

Kenny MacAskill

358 In section 28, page 40, line 39, leave out <derived> and insert <obtained>

Robert Brown

359 In section 28, page 41, line 1, after <constable> insert <or other specified public official>

Robert Brown

360 In section 28, page 41, line 20, at end insert—

<( ) In subsection (3), “specified public official” means a person holding a public office specified in an order made by the Scottish Ministers.>

After section 28

Kenny MacAskill

107 After section 28, insert—

<Genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes

Genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes: UK residents

(1) The International Criminal Court (Scotland) Act 2001 (asp 13) is amended as follows.

(2) After section 8, insert—

“8A Meaning of “United Kingdom national” and “United Kingdom resident”

(1) In this Part—

“United Kingdom national” means—

(a) a British citizen, a British Overseas Territories citizen, a British National (Overseas) or a British Overseas citizen,

(b) a person who under the British Nationality Act 1981 (c.61) is a British subject, or

(c) a British protected person within the meaning of that Act,

“United Kingdom resident” means a person who is resident in the United Kingdom.

(2) To the extent that it would not otherwise be the case, the following individuals are to be treated for the purposes of this Part as being resident in the United Kingdom—

(a) an individual who has indefinite leave to remain in the United Kingdom,
(b) any other individual who has made an application for such leave (whether or not it has been determined) and who is in the United Kingdom,

c) an individual who has leave to enter or remain in the United Kingdom for the purposes of work or study and who is in the United Kingdom,

d) an individual who has made an asylum claim, or a human rights claim, which has been granted,

e) any other individual who has made an asylum claim or a human rights claim (whether or not the claim has been determined) and who is in the United Kingdom,

(f) an individual named in an application for indefinite leave to remain, an asylum claim or a human rights claim as a dependant of the individual making the application or claim if—

(i) the application or claim has been granted, or

(ii) the named individual is in the United Kingdom (whether or not the application or claim has been determined),

(g) an individual who would be liable to removal or deportation from the United Kingdom but cannot be removed or deported because of section 6 of the Human Rights Act 1998 (c.42) or for practical reasons,

(h) an individual—

(i) against whom a decision to make a deportation order under section 5(1) of the Immigration Act 1971 (c.77) by virtue of section 3(5)(a) of that Act (deportation conducive to the public good) has been made,

(ii) who has appealed against the decision to make the order (whether or not the appeal has been determined), and

(iii) who is in the United Kingdom,

(i) an individual who is an illegal entrant within the meaning of section 33(1) of the Immigration Act 1971 or who is liable to removal under section 10 of the Immigration and Asylum Act 1999 (c.33),

(j) an individual who is detained in lawful custody in the United Kingdom.

(3) When determining for the purposes of this Part whether any other individual is resident in the United Kingdom regard is to be had to all relevant considerations including—

(a) the periods during which the individual is, has been or intends to be in the United Kingdom,

(b) the purposes for which the individual is, has been or intends to be in the United Kingdom,

(c) whether the individual has family or other connections to the United Kingdom and the nature of those connections, and

(d) whether the individual has an interest in residential property located in the United Kingdom.

(4) In this section—
“asylum claim” means—

(a) a claim that it would be contrary to the United Kingdom’s obligations under the Refugee Convention for the claimant to be removed from, or required to leave, the United Kingdom,

(b) a claim that the claimant would face a real risk of serious harm if removed from the United Kingdom,

“Convention rights” means the rights identified as Convention rights by section 1 of the Human Rights Act 1998,

“detained in lawful custody” means—

(a) detained in pursuance of a sentence of imprisonment or detention, a sentence of custody for life or a detention and training order,

(b) remanded in or committed to custody by an order of a court,

(c) detained pursuant to an order under section 2 of the Colonial Prisoners Removal Act 1884 (c.31) or a warrant under section 1 or 4A of the Repatriation of Prisoners Act 1984 (c.47),

(d) detained under Part 3 of the Mental Health Act 1983 (c.20) or by virtue of an order under section 5 of the Criminal Procedure (Insanity) Act 1964 (c.84) or section 6 or 14 of the Criminal Appeal Act 1968 (c.19) (hospital orders etc.),

(e) detained by virtue of an order under Part 6 of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.46) (other than an order under section 60C) or a hospital direction under section 59A of that Act, and includes detention by virtue of the special restrictions set out in Part 10 of the Mental Health (Care and Treatment) (Scotland) Act 2003 (asp 13) to which a person is subject by virtue of an order under section 59 of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995,

(f) detained under Part 3 of the Mental Health (Northern Ireland) Order 1986 (SI 1986/595) or by virtue of an order under section 11 or 13(5A) of the Criminal Appeal (Northern Ireland) Act 1980 (c. 47),

“human rights claim” means a claim that to remove the claimant from, or to require the claimant to leave, the United Kingdom would be unlawful under section 6 of the Human Rights Act 1998 (public authority not to act contrary to Convention) as being incompatible with the person’s Convention rights,

“The Refugee Convention” means the Convention relating to the Status of Refugees done at Geneva on 28 July 1951 and the Protocol to the Convention,

“serious harm” has the meaning given by article 15 of Council Directive 2004/83/EC on minimum standards for the qualification and status of third country nationals or stateless persons as refugees or as persons who otherwise need international protection and the content of the protection granted.

(5) In this section, a reference to having leave to enter or remain in the United Kingdom is to be construed in accordance with the Immigration Act 1971.
(6) This section applies in relation to any offence under this Part (whether committed before or after the coming into force of this section).

(3) In section 28(1) (interpretation), the definitions of “United Kingdom national” and “United Kingdom resident” are repealed.

Kenny MacAskill

After section 28, insert—

<Genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes: retrospective application

After section 9 of the International Criminal Court (Scotland) Act 2001 (asp 13) insert—

“9A Retrospective application of certain offences

(1) Section 1 of this Act applies to acts committed on or after 1 January 1991.

(2) But that section does not apply to an act committed before 17 December 2001 which constitutes a crime against humanity or a war crime within article 8.2(b) or (e) unless, at the time the act was committed, it amounted in the circumstances to a criminal offence under international law.

(3) Section 2 of this Act applies to conduct engaged in on or after 1 January 1991.

(4) The references in subsections (1), (3) and (5) of that section to an offence include an act or conduct that would not constitute an offence but for this section.

(5) Any enactment or rule of law relating to an offence ancillary to a relevant offence applies—

(a) to conduct engaged in on or after 1 January 1991, and

(b) even if the act or conduct constituting the relevant offence would not constitute such an offence but for this section.

(6) But section 2 of this Act, and any enactment or rule of law relating to an offence ancillary to a relevant offence, do not apply to—

(a) conduct engaged in before 17 December 2001, or

(b) conduct engaged in on or after that date which was ancillary to an act or conduct that—

(i) was committed or engaged in before that date, and

(ii) would not constitute a relevant offence but for this section, unless, at the time the conduct was engaged in, it amounted in the circumstances to a criminal offence under international law.

(7) Section 5 of this Act, so far as it has effect in relation to relevant offences, applies—

(a) to failures to exercise control of the kind mentioned in subsection (2) or (3) of that section which occurred on or after 1 January 1991, and

(b) even if the act or conduct constituting the relevant offence would not constitute an offence but for this section.
(8) But section 5 of this Act, so far as it has effect in relation to relevant offences, does not apply to a failure to exercise control of the kind mentioned in subsection (2) or (3) of that section which occurred before 17 December 2001 unless, at the time it occurred, it amounted in the circumstances to a criminal offence under international law.

(9) In this section, “relevant offence” means an offence under section 1 or 2 of this Act or an offence ancillary to such an offence.

9B Provision supplemental to section 9A: modification of penalties

(1) This section applies in relation to—

(a) an offence under section 1 of this Act on account of an act committed before 17 December 2001 constituting genocide, if at the time the act was committed it also amounted to an offence under section 1 of the Genocide Act 1969,

(b) an offence under section 1 of this Act on account of an act committed before 1 September 2001 constituting a war crime, if at the time the act was committed it also amounted to an offence under section 1 of the Geneva Conventions Act 1957 (c.52) (grave breaches of the Conventions),

(c) an offence ancillary to an offence within paragraph (a) or (b) above.

(2) Section 3(5) of this Act has effect in relation to such an offence as if for “30 years” there were substituted “14 years”.

After section 31

Kenny MacAskill

109 After section 31, insert—

<Offensive weapons etc.

Offensive weapons etc.

(1) The Criminal Law (Consolidation) (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.39) is amended as follows.

(2) In section 47 (prohibition of the carrying of offensive weapons)—

(a) in subsection (1), the words from “without” to “him,” are repealed,

(b) after subsection (1), insert—

“(1A) It is a defence for a person charged with an offence under subsection (1) to show that the person had a reasonable excuse or lawful authority for having the weapon with the person in the public place.”, and

(c) for subsection (4), substitute—

“(4) In this section—

“offensive weapon” means any article—

(a) made or adapted for use for causing injury to a person, or

(b) intended, by the person having the article, for use for causing injury to a person by—
(i) the person having it, or
(ii) some other person,

“public place” means any place other than—
(a) domestic premises,
(b) school premises (within the meaning of section 49A(6)),
(c) a prison (within the meaning of section 49C(7)),

“domestic premises” means premises occupied as a private dwelling (including any stair, passage, garden, yard, garage, outhouse or other appurtenance of such premises which is not used in common by the occupants of more than one such dwelling).”.

(3) In section 49 (offence of having in public place article with blade or point)—
   (a) in subsection (4), for the words “prove that he had good reason” substitute “show that the person had a reasonable excuse”,
   (b) in subsection (5), for “prove” substitute “show”, and
   (c) for subsection (7), substitute—
   “(7) In this section, “public place” has the same meaning as in section 47(4).”.

(4) In section 49A (offence of having article with blade or point (or offensive weapon) on school premises)—
   (a) in subsection (3), for the words “prove that he had good reason” substitute “show that the person had a reasonable excuse”, and
   (b) in subsection (4), for “prove” substitute “show”.

(5) In section 49C(2) (offence of having offensive weapon etc. in prison), for the words “prove that he had good reason” substitute “show that the person had a reasonable excuse”.

(6) In section 50(4) (extension of constable’s power to stop, search and arrest without warrant), for “3” substitute “4”.

Johann Lamont

11 After section 31, insert—

<Offence of having article with blade or point (or offensive weapon) on workplace premises

(1) The Criminal Law (Consolidation) (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.39) is amended as follows.

(2) After section 49A, insert—

“49AA Offence of having article with blade or point (or offensive weapon) on workplace premises

(1) Any person who has an article to which section 49 of this Act applies with him on workplace premises is guilty of an offence.

(2) Any person who has an offensive weapon within the meaning of section 47 of this Act with him on workplace premises is guilty of an offence.
It is a defence for a person charged with an offence under subsection (1) or (2) above to prove that he had good reason or lawful authority for having the article or weapon with him on the premises in question.

Without prejudice to the generality of subsection (3) above, it is a defence for a person charged with an offence under subsection (1) or (2) above to prove that he had the article or weapon in question with him—

(a) for use at work (whether on the premises in question or otherwise),
(b) for religious reasons, or
(c) as part of any national costume.

A person guilty of an offence—

(a) under subsection (1) above is liable—

(i) on summary conviction to imprisonment for a term not exceeding twelve months, or a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum, or both;

(ii) on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding four years, or a fine, or both;

(b) under subsection (2) above is liable—

(i) on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months, or a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum, or both;

(ii) on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding four years, or a fine, or both.

In this section and section 49B of this Act, “workplace premises” means any premises (other than school premises) used for the purposes of an undertaking carried on by an employer and made available to any employee of the employer as a place of work; and includes—

(a) any part of those premises to which such an employee has access while at work;

(b) any premises (other than a public road or other public place within the meaning of section 49 of this Act)—

(i) which are a means of access to or egress from the place of work; or

(ii) where facilities are provided for use in connection with the place of work.”.

In section 49B(1)—

(a) after “school premises” insert “or workplace premises”;

(b) after “49A” insert “or 49AA”.

In section 50(3), for “or section 49A(1) or (2)” substitute “, 49A(1) or (2) or 49AA(1) or (2)”.

Rhoda Grant

After section 31, insert—
Offence of stalking

(1) A person (“A”) commits an offence, to be known as the offence of stalking, where A stalks another person (“B”).

(2) For the purposes of subsection (1), A stalks B where—
   (a) A engages in a course of conduct,
   (b) subsection (3) or (4) applies, and
   (c) A’s course of conduct causes B to suffer—
       (i) physical or psychological harm, or
       (ii) apprehension or fear for B’s own safety or for the safety of any other person.

(3) This subsection applies where A engages in the course of conduct with the intention of causing such harm to B or of arousing such apprehension or fear in B.

(4) This subsection applies where A knows, or ought in all the circumstances to have known, that engaging in the course of conduct would be likely to cause such harm or arouse such apprehension or fear.

(5) It is a defence for a person charged with an offence under this section to show that the course of action—
   (a) was authorised by virtue of any enactment or rule of law,
   (b) was engaged in for the purpose of preventing or detecting crime, or
   (c) was, in the particular circumstances, reasonable.

(6) In this section—
   “conduct” includes (but is not limited to)—
   (a) following B or any other person,
   (b) contacting B or any other person by post, telephone, email, text message or any other method,
   (c) publishing any statement or other material—
       (i) relating or purporting to relate to B or to any other person,
       (ii) purporting to originate from B or from any other person,
   (d) tracing the use by B or by any other person of the internet, email or any other form of electronic communication,
   (e) entering or loitering in the vicinity of—
       (i) the place of residence of B or of any other person,
       (ii) the place of work or business of B or of any other person,
       (iii) any place frequented by B or of any other person,
   (f) interfering with any property in the possession of B or of any other person,
   (g) giving offensive material to B or to any other person or leaving such material where it may be found by, given to or brought to the attention of B or any other person,
(h) keeping B or any other person under surveillance,

(i) acting in any other way that a reasonable person would expect would arouse apprehension or fear in B for B’s own safety or for the safety of any other person, and

“course of conduct” involves conduct on at least two occasions.

(7) A person convicted of the offence of stalking is liable—

(a) on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 5 years or to a fine or to both,

(b) on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 6 months or to a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum or to both.

Robert Brown

402A As an amendment to amendment 402, line 21, after <crime,> insert—

<( ) was engaged in as part of lawful and reasonable public protest or industrial action,>

Section 34

Kenny MacAskill

361 In section 34, page 49, line 4, leave out <(and any sounds accompanying it)>.

Kenny MacAskill

362 In section 34, page 49, line 5, leave out <(and any sounds accompanying them)>.

Kenny MacAskill

363 In section 34, page 49, line 7, at end insert—

<and reference may also be had to any sounds accompanying the image or the series of images.>

Kenny MacAskill

364 In section 34, page 49, line 31, after <images> insert—

<(i) any sounds accompanying the series of images,

(ii)>

Robert Brown

365 In section 34, page 50, line 4, leave out from <“excluded”> to <work> and insert <image is an “excluded image” if it is all or part of a classified work, and is so excluded from the time that an application for a classification certificate is received by the designated authority>

Kenny MacAskill

366 In section 34, page 50, line 18, after <images> insert—
(i) any sounds accompanying the series of images,
(ii)>

Kenny MacAskill

367 In section 34, page 50, line 19, leave out <and section 51C>

Kenny MacAskill

368 In section 34, page 50, line 27, leave out <and “extreme pornographic image” are> and insert <is>

Kenny MacAskill

369 In section 34, page 51, line 23, at end insert—

<(  ) In this section “image” and “extreme pornographic image” are to be construed in accordance with section 51A.”.>

Kenny MacAskill

517 In section 34, page 51, line 23, at end insert—

<(  ) In Schedule 3 to the Sexual Offences Act 2003 (c.42) (sexual offences for the purposes of Part 2 of that Act), after paragraph 44 insert—

“44A An offence under section 51A of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 (c.45) (possession of extreme pornography) if—

(a) the offender—

(i) was 18 or over, and

(ii) is or has been sentenced in respect of the offence to imprisonment for a term of more than 12 months, and

(b) in imposing sentence, the court determines that it is appropriate that Part 2 of this Act should apply in relation to the offender.”.>

After section 34

Kenny MacAskill

110 After section 34, insert—

<Voyeurism: additional forms of conduct>

(1) The Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009 (asp 9) is amended as follows.

(2) In section 9 (voyeurism)—

(a) after subsection (4), insert—

“(4A) The fourth thing is that A—

(a) without another person ("B") consenting, and

(b) without any reasonable belief that B consents, operates equipment beneath B’s clothing with the intention of enabling A or another person (“C”), for a purpose mentioned in subsection (7), to observe B’s genitals or buttocks (whether exposed or covered with underwear) or the underwear covering B’s genitals or buttocks, in circumstances where the genitals, buttocks or underwear would not otherwise be visible.

(4B) The fifth thing is that A—

(a) without another person (“B”) consenting, and

(b) without any reasonable belief that B consents,

records an image beneath B’s clothing of B’s genitals or buttocks (whether exposed or covered with underwear) or the underwear covering B’s genitals or buttocks, in circumstances where the genitals, buttocks or underwear would not otherwise be visible, with the intention that A or another person (“C”), for a purpose mentioned in subsection (7), will look at the image.”,

(b) in subsection (5)—

(i) for “fourth” substitute “sixth”, and

(ii) for paragraph (b), substitute—

“(b) constructs or adapts a structure or part of a structure, with the intention of enabling A or another person to do an act referred to in subsection (2), (3), (4), (4A) or (4B).”, and

(c) in subsection (7), for “and (4)” substitute “, (4), (4A) and (4B)”.

(3) In section 10(2) (interpretation of section 9), after “section 9(3)” insert “and (4A)”.

(4) In section 26 (voyeurism towards a young child)—

(a) after subsection (4), insert—

“(4A) The fourth thing is that A operates equipment beneath B’s clothing with the intention of enabling A or another person (“C”), for a purpose mentioned in subsection (7), to observe—

(a) B’s genitals or buttocks (whether exposed or covered with underwear), or

(b) the underwear covering B’s genitals or buttocks,

in circumstances where the genitals, buttocks or underwear would not otherwise be visible.

(4B) The fifth thing is that A records an image beneath B’s clothing of—

(a) B’s genitals or buttocks (whether exposed or covered with underwear), or

(b) the underwear covering B’s genitals or buttocks,

in circumstances where the genitals, buttocks or underwear would not otherwise be visible, with the intention that A or another person (“C”), for a purpose mentioned in subsection (7), will look at the image.”,

(b) in subsection (5)—

(i) for “fourth” substitute “sixth”, and

(ii) for paragraph (b), substitute—
“(b) constructs or adapts a structure or part of a structure, with the intention of enabling A or another person to do an act referred to in subsection (2), (3), (4), (4A) or (4B).”,

c) in subsection (7), for “and (4)” substitute “, (4), (4A) and (4B)”, and
d) in subsection (8)—
(i) after “section 9(3)” insert “, (4A)”, and
(ii) after “subsections (3)” insert “, (4A)”.

(5) In section 36 (voyeurism towards an older child)—

(a) after subsection (4), insert—

“(4A) The fourth thing is that A operates equipment beneath B’s clothing with the intention of enabling A or another person (“C”), for a purpose mentioned in subsection (7), to observe—

(a) B’s genitals or buttocks (whether exposed or covered with underwear), or

(b) the underwear covering B’s genitals or buttocks,
in circumstances where the genitals, buttocks or underwear would not otherwise be visible.

(4B) The fifth thing is that A records an image beneath B’s clothing of—

(a) B’s genitals or buttocks (whether exposed or covered with underwear), or

(b) the underwear covering B’s genitals or buttocks,
in circumstances where the genitals, buttocks or underwear would not otherwise be visible, with the intention that A or another person (“C”), for a purpose mentioned in subsection (7), will look at the image.”,

(b) in subsection (5)—

(i) for “fourth” substitute “sixth”, and

(ii) for paragraph (b), substitute—

“(b) constructs or adapts a structure or part of a structure, with the intention of enabling A or another person to do an act referred to in subsection (2), (3), (4), (4A) or (4B).”,

c) in subsection (7), for “and (4)” substitute “, (4), (4A) and (4B)”, and
d) in subsection (8)—

(i) after “section 9(3)” insert “, (4A)”, and

(ii) after “subsections (3)” insert “, (4A)” >

Kenny MacAskill

111 After section 34, insert—
Sexual offences: defences in relation to offences against older children

In section 39 of the Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009 (asp 9) (defences in relation to offences against older children), in subsection (4)(c), after “section 30(2)(d)” insert “or (e)”.

Kenny MacAskill

After section 34, insert—

Penalties for offences of brothel-keeping and living on the earnings of prostitution

(1) The Criminal Law (Consolidation) (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.39) is amended as follows.

(2) In section 11 (trading in prostitution and brothel-keeping)—

(a) in subsection (1), for the words from “liable” to the end substitute “guilty of an offence and liable to the penalties set out in subsection (1A)”;

(b) after that subsection insert—

“(1A) A person—

(a) guilty of the offence set out in subsection (1)(a) is liable—

(i) on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding seven years, to a fine, or to both,

(ii) on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 12 months, to a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum, or to both,

(b) guilty of the offence set out in subsection (1)(b) is liable—

(i) on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years,

(ii) on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 12 months.”,

(c) in subsection (4), for “subsection (1)” substitute “subsection (1A)(a)”, and

(d) for subsection (6) substitute—

“(6) A person guilty of an offence under subsection (5) is liable—

(a) on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding seven years, to a fine, or to both,

(b) on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 12 months, to a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum, or to both.”.

(3) In section 13(9) (living on earnings of another from male prostitution), for paragraphs (a) and (b) substitute—

“(a) on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding seven years, to a fine, or to both,

(b) on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 12 months, to a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum, or to both.”.

Trish Godman

After section 34, insert—
<Offences of engaging in, advertising and facilitating paid-for sexual activities>

(1) The Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009 (asp 9) is amended as follows.

(2) After section 11 insert—

"Engaging in, advertising and facilitating paid-for sexual activities

11A Engaging in a paid-for sexual activity

(1) A person ("A") commits an offence, to be known as the offence of engaging in a paid-for sexual activity, if A knowingly engages in a paid-for sexual activity with another person ("B").

(2) A sexual activity is paid for where B engages in that activity in exchange for payment.

(3) For the purposes of subsection (2), it is immaterial whether the payment is made—

(a) by A or by another person, or

(b) to B or to another person on B’s behalf.

11B Advertising paid-for sexual activities

A person commits an offence, to be known as the offence of advertising paid-for sexual activities, if that person knowingly advertises, by any means, the availability of sexual activities that can be engaged in for payment.

11C Facilitating engagement in a paid-for sexual activity

(1) A person ("A") commits an offence, to be known as the offence of facilitating engagement in a paid-for sexual activity, if A knowingly facilitates the engagement of another person ("B") in a paid-for sexual activity with another person ("C").

(2) A sexual activity is paid for where C engages in that activity in exchange for payment.

(3) For the purposes of subsection (2), it is immaterial whether the payment is made—

(a) by A, by B or by another person, or

(b) to C or to another person on C’s behalf.

(4) For the purposes of subsection (1), facilitating the engagement by B in a paid-for sexual activity includes (but is not limited to)—

(a) arranging B’s engagement in the activity,

(b) making payment to C or to another person on C’s behalf,

(c) making available premises in which the activity takes place, or

(d) transporting B, or arranging transport for B, to where the activity takes place.

11D Arrest for offences under sections 11A to 11C

(1) Where a constable reasonably believes that a person is committing or has committed an offence under section 11A, 11B or 11C, the constable may arrest the person without warrant.
(2) Subsection (1) is without prejudice to any power of arrest conferred by law apart from that subsection.”.

(3) In the table in schedule 2 insert at the appropriate place—

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Service</th>
<th>Section</th>
<th>Fine Description</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>“Engaging in a paid-for sexual activity”</td>
<td>11A</td>
<td>A fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Advertising paid-for sexual activities</td>
<td>11B</td>
<td>A fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Facilitating engagement in a paid-for sexual activity</td>
<td>11C</td>
<td>A fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Margo MacDonald

8A As an amendment to amendment 8, line 15, at end insert—

<11AA Causing alarm etc. by engaging in a paid-for sexual activity
In the circumstances described in section 11A(1), A and B commit an offence, to be known as the offence of causing alarm etc. by engaging in a paid-for sexual activity, if their engaging in the activity that constitutes the offence under that section causes alarm to another person (“C”), endangers C or creates a nuisance for C.>

Margo MacDonald

8B As an amendment to amendment 8, line 15, at end insert—

<11AB Profiting from coerced paid-for sexual activities
A person commits an offence, to be known as the offence of profiting from coerced paid-for sexual activities, if that person knowingly secures a direct benefit (whether financial or otherwise) from a paid-for sexual activity involving a person whose engagement in that activity has been secured as a result of coercion.>

Margo MacDonald

8C As an amendment to amendment 8, line 40, after <11A,> insert <11AA, 11AB>

Margo MacDonald

8D As an amendment to amendment 8, line 48, at end insert—
<“Causing alarm etc. by engaging in a paid-for sexual activity

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Profiting from coerced paid-for sexual activities</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Section 11AA</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Nigel Don

461 After section 34, insert—

<Offence of paying for sexual services of a prostitute subjected to force etc.

(1) The Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009 (asp 9) is amended as follows.

(2) After section 11 insert—

"Paying for sexual services of a prostitute subjected to force etc.

11E Paying for sexual services of a prostitute subjected to force etc.

(1) A person ("A") commits an offence, to be known as the offence of paying for sexual services of a coerced prostitute, if—

(a) A makes or promises payment for the sexual services of a prostitute ("B"),

(b) a third person ("C") has engaged in exploitative conduct of a kind likely to induce or encourage B to provide the sexual services for which A has made or promised payment, and

(c) C engaged in that conduct for or in the expectation of gain for C or another person (apart from A or B).

(2) The following are irrelevant—

(a) where in the world the sexual services are to be provided and whether those services are provided,

(b) whether A is, or ought to be, aware that C has engaged in exploitative conduct.

(3) C engages in exploitative conduct if—

(a) C uses force, threats (whether or not relating to violence) or any other form of coercion, or

(b) C practises any form of deception.”.

(3) In the table in schedule 2 insert at the appropriate place—

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>“Paying for sexual services of a coerced prostitute</th>
<th>Section 11E</th>
<th>A fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale”</th>
</tr>
</thead>
</table>
Section 35

Kenny MacAskill

371 In section 35, page 51, line 30, at end insert—

<( ) after subsection (1) insert—

“(1A) A person to whom subsection (6) applies commits an offence if the person arranges or facilitates—

(a) the arrival in or the entry into a country (other than the United Kingdom), or travel there (whether or not following such arrival or entry) by, an individual and—

(i) intends to exercise control over prostitution by the individual or to involve the individual in the making or production of obscene or indecent material; or

(ii) believes that another person is likely to exercise such control or so to involve the individual, there or elsewhere; or

(b) the departure from a country (other than the United Kingdom) of an individual and—

(i) intends to exercise such control or so to involve the individual; or

(ii) believes that another person is likely to exercise such control or so to involve the individual, outwith the country.”,”>
(ii) after paragraph (f) insert—

“(g) a person who at the time of the offence was habitually resident in Scotland, and

(h) a body incorporated under the law of a part of the United Kingdom.”.

Kenny MacAskill

377 In section 35, page 52, line 2, leave out subsection (2) and insert—

<(  ) In section 4 of the Asylum and Immigration (Treatment of Claimants, etc.) Act 2004 (c.19) (trafficking people for exploitation)—

(a) in subsection (1), after “arrival in” insert “or the entry into”,

(b) in subsection (2), the words from “in” where it first occurs to “committed” are repealed,

(c) after subsection (3) insert—

“(3A) A person to whom section 5(2) applies commits an offence if—

(a) in relation to an individual (the “passenger”), he arranges or facilitates—

(i) the arrival in or the entry into a country other than the United Kingdom of the passenger,

(ii) travel by the passenger within a country other than the United Kingdom,

(iii) the departure of the passenger from a country other than the United Kingdom, and

(b) he—

(i) intends to exploit the passenger, or

(ii) believes that another person is likely to exploit the passenger,

(wherever the exploitation is to occur).”,

(d) in subsection (4)—

(i) in paragraph (b), the words from “as a result” to “Act 2004,” become sub-paragraph (i),

(ii) immediately following that sub-paragraph insert “or—

(ii) which, were it done in Scotland, would constitute an offence mentioned in sub-paragraph (i),”,

(iii) after paragraph (b) insert—

“(ba) he is encouraged, required or expected to do anything in connection with the removal of any part of a human body—

(i) as a result of which he or another person would commit an offence under the law of Scotland (other than an offence mentioned in paragraph (b)(i)), or

(ii) which, were it done in Scotland, would constitute such an offence,”, and

(iv) for paragraph (d) substitute—
“(d) another person uses or attempts to use him for any purpose within sub-paragraph (i), (ii) or (iii) of paragraph (c), having chosen him for that purpose on the grounds that—

(i) he is mentally or physically ill or disabled, he is young, or he has a family relationship with a person, and

(ii) a person without the illness, disability, youth or family relationship would be likely to refuse to be used for that purpose.”.

( ) In section 5 of that Act—

(a) in subsection (1), for the words from “(3)” to the end substitute “(3A) of section 4
apply to anything done in or outwith the United Kingdom.”,

(b) in subsection (2)—

(i) the word “and” immediately following paragraph (e) is repealed, and

(ii) after paragraph (f) insert—

“(g) a person who at the time of the offence was habitually resident in Scotland, and

(h) a body incorporated under the law of a part of the United Kingdom.”,

(c) after subsection (2) insert—

“(2A) A person may be prosecuted, tried and punished for any offence to which section 4 applies—

(a) in any sheriff court district in which the person is apprehended or is in custody, or

(b) in such sheriff court district as the Lord Advocate may determine,
as if the offence had been committed in that district (and the offence is, for all purposes incidental to or consequential on the trial or punishment, to be deemed to have been committed in that district).

(2B) In subsection (2A), “sheriff court district” is to be construed in accordance with section 307(1) of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.46) (interpretation).”.

After section 35

Kenny MacAskill

112 After section 35, insert—

<Slavery, servitude and forced or compulsory labour

Slavery, servitude and forced or compulsory labour

(1) A person (“A”) commits an offence if—

(a) A holds another person in slavery or servitude and the circumstances are such that
A knows or ought to know that the person is so held, or

(b) A requires another person to perform forced or compulsory labour and the circumstances are such that A knows or ought to know that the person is being required to perform such labour.
(2) In subsection (1) the references to holding a person in slavery or servitude or requiring a person to perform forced or compulsory labour are to be construed in accordance with Article 4 of the Human Rights Convention (which prohibits a person from being held in slavery or servitude or being required to perform forced or compulsory labour).

(3) A person guilty of an offence under this section is liable—
   (a) on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 14 years, or to a fine, or to both,
   (b) on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 12 months, or to a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum, or to both.

(4) In this section “Human Rights Convention” means the Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms agreed by the Council of Europe at Rome on 4 November 1950.

After section 36

Kenny MacAskill

113 After section 36, insert—

<Articles for use in fraud

(1) A person ("A") commits an offence if A has in A’s possession or under A’s control an article for use in, or in connection with, the commission of fraud.

(2) A person guilty of an offence under subsection (1) is liable—
   (a) on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 12 months or to a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum, or to both,
   (b) on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 5 years or to a fine, or to both.

(3) A person commits an offence if the person makes, adapts, supplies or offers to supply an article—
   (a) knowing that the article is designed or adapted for use in, or in connection with, the commission of fraud, or
   (b) intending the article to be used in, or in connection with, the commission of fraud.

(4) A person guilty of an offence under subsection (3) is liable—
   (a) on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 12 months or to a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum, or to both,
   (b) on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 10 years or to a fine, or to both.

(5) In this section, “article” includes a program or data held in electronic form.

After section 37

Kenny MacAskill

114 After section 37, insert—
Abolition of offences of sedition and leasing-making

The following offences under the common law of Scotland are abolished—

(a) the offence of sedition,
(b) the offence of leasing-making.

Kenny MacAskill

378 After section 37, insert—

Threatening, alarming or distressing behaviour

(1) A person (“A”) commits an offence if—

(a) A behaves in such a manner that a reasonable person would be likely to—

(i) fear for the safety of any person on account of the behaviour, or
(ii) be alarmed or distressed by the behaviour, and

(b) the condition in subsection (2) is satisfied.

(2) That condition is that A—

(a) intends by the behaviour to cause fear, alarm or distress, or

(b) is reckless as to whether the behaviour would cause fear, alarm or distress.

(3) It does not matter—

(a) whether A’s behaviour is directed at anyone in particular,

(b) if it is directed at a particular person, whether that person is aware of the behaviour, or

(c) whether A’s behaviour—

(i) actually causes anyone fear, alarm or distress, or

(ii) takes place in public or private.

(4) Subsection (1) applies to—

(a) behaviour of any kind including, in particular, things said or otherwise communicated as well as things done,

(b) behaviour consisting of—

(i) a single act, or

(ii) a course of conduct.

(5) The reference in subsection (1)(a)(i) to fear for a person’s safety is to fear that the person’s life could be endangered or that the person’s physical or psychological well-being could be harmed.

(6) A person guilty of an offence under subsection (1) is liable—

(a) on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 5 years, or to a fine, or to both, or
(b) on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 12 months, or to a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum, or to both.

Bill Aitken

115 After section 37, insert—

PART

DOUBLE JEOPARDY

Rule against double jeopardy

(1) It is not competent to charge a person who, whether on indictment or complaint (the “original” indictment or complaint), has been convicted or acquitted of an offence—

(a) with an offence of which it would have been competent to convict the person on the original indictment or complaint, or

(b) with an offence which—

(i) arises out of the same, or largely the same, acts or omissions as gave rise to the original indictment or complaint, and

(ii) is an aggravated way of committing the offence of which the person was convicted or acquitted.

(2) Whether the conviction or acquittal was before or after the coming into force of this section is, for the purposes of the section, immaterial.

(3) Subsection (1) is subject to sections (Tainted acquittals), (Admission subsequent to acquittal) and (New evidence) and is without prejudice to sections 118(1)(c) (disposal of appeals), 119 (provision where High Court authorises new prosecution), 183(1)(d) (stated case: disposal of appeal) and 185 (authorisation of new prosecution) of the 1995 Act.

(4) In this Part, reference to a person being convicted of an offence is—

(a) to the person being found guilty of the offence, or

(b) to the prosecutor accepting the person’s plea of guilty to the offence, in either case whether or not sentence is passed.

Bill Aitken

116 After section 37, insert—

Plea in bar of trial

(1) A person charged with an offence—

(a) whether on indictment or complaint, but

(b) other than by virtue of a section mentioned in section (Rule against double jeopardy)(3), may aver, as a plea in bar of trial, that the offence arises out of the same, or largely the same, acts or omissions as have already given rise to the person being tried for, and convicted or acquitted of, an offence (the “original offence”).

(2) Whether the conviction or acquittal was before or after the coming into force of this section is, for the purposes of the section, immaterial.
(3) If the court is satisfied, on a balance of probabilities, as to the truth of the person’s averment, the plea is to be sustained unless the prosecutor persuades the court that there is some special reason why the case should proceed to trial (as for example, but without prejudice to the generality of this subsection, where trials were separated on the application of, or with the consent of, the person).

(4) Subsections (1) to (3) apply irrespective of where the person was tried; but this subsection is subject to subsection (5).

(5) Where the person was tried outwith the United Kingdom the court may disregard a conviction or acquittal if—

(a) it determines that it is in the interests of justice to do so, and

(b) to permit the case to proceed to trial would not be inconsistent with the obligations of the United Kingdom under Article 54 of the Schengen Convention (that is to say, of the Convention of 19th June 1990 implementing the Schengen Agreement of 14th June 1985).

(6) In making a determination in pursuance of subsection (5)(a), the court is in particular to have regard to—

(a) whether the purpose of bringing the person to trial in the foreign country appears to have been to assist the person to evade justice,

(b) whether the proceedings in the foreign country appear to have been conducted—

(i) independently and impartially, and

(ii) in a manner consistent with dealing justly with the person,

(c) whether such sentence (or other disposal) as might be imposed in the foreign country for an offence of the kind for which the person has been acquitted or convicted is commensurate with any that might be imposed for an offence of that kind in Scotland, and

(d) the extent to which the acts or omissions can be considered to have occurred in, respectively—

(i) Scotland,

(ii) the foreign country.>

Bill Aitken

117 After section 37, insert—

<Eventual death of injured person>

(1) This section applies where—

(a) a person (“A”) sustains physical injuries,

(b) another person (“B”) is, whether on indictment or complaint, acquitted or convicted of an offence (“offence Y”) which comprises the infliction of the injuries, and

(c) after the acquittal or conviction A dies, ostensibly from the injuries.

(2) Whether the conviction or acquittal was before or after the coming into force of this section is, for the purposes of the section, immaterial.
(3) If B was acquitted of offence Y (and was not then convicted of a different offence, “offence Z”, which comprised the infliction of the injuries) it is not competent to charge B with—

(a) the murder of A,

(b) culpable homicide as respects A, or

(c) any other offence comprising causing A’s death.

(4) If B was convicted of offence Y (or of offence Z), then—

(a) for the purposes of sections (Rule against double jeopardy) and (Plea in bar of trial) the offences mentioned in paragraphs (a) to (c) of subsection (3) are not to be treated as offences arising out of the same, or largely the same, acts or omissions as the offence of which B was convicted, but

(b) on B being acquitted or convicted of any of the offences mentioned in those paragraphs, the court may, on the motion of B and after hearing the parties on that motion, quash B’s conviction of offence Y (or offence Z) where satisfied that it is appropriate to do so.

(5) A party may appeal to the High Court against the granting or refusing of a motion under subsection (4)(b).

Bill Aitken

118 After section 37, insert—

<Tainted acquittals

(1) A person who, whether on indictment or complaint (the “original” indictment or complaint), has been acquitted of an offence (the “original offence”) may, provided that the conditions mentioned in subsection (3) are satisfied, be charged with, and prosecuted anew for—

(a) the original offence, or

(b) an offence arising out of the same, or largely the same, acts or omissions as gave rise to the original offence.

(2) Whether the acquittal was before or after the coming into force of this section is, for the purposes of the section, immaterial.

(3) The conditions are—

(a) either—

(i) that the acquitted person or some other person has (or the acquitted person and some other person have) been convicted of an offence against the course of justice, being an offence in connection with proceedings on the original indictment or complaint, or

(ii) that on the application of the Lord Advocate the High Court has concluded on a balance of probabilities that the acquitted person or some other person has (or the acquitted person and some other person have) committed such an offence against the course of justice, and

(b) that on the application of the Lord Advocate the High Court has—

(i) set aside the acquittal, and

(ii) granted authority to bring, by virtue of this section, a new prosecution.
(4) On making an application under subsection (3), the Lord Advocate is to send a copy of that application to the acquitted person.

(5) The acquitted person is entitled to appear or to be represented at any hearing of the application.

(6) For the purpose of—
   (a) hearing and coming to a conclusion on any application under subsection (3)(a)(ii), or
   (b) hearing and determining any application under subsection (3)(b),
three of the Lords Commissioners of Justiciary are a quorum of the Court (the application being determined by majority vote of those sitting).

(7) The decision of the Court on the application is final.

(8) Subsection (7) is without prejudice to any power of those sitting to remit the application to a differently constituted sitting of the Court (as for example to the whole Court sitting together).

(9) The Court may appoint counsel to act as amicus curiae at the hearing in question.

(10) Subsections (11) and (12) apply in a case where (or as the case may be where the Court, in coming to a conclusion under subsection (3)(a)(ii), is satisfied on a balance of probabilities that) the offence against the course of justice consisted of or included interference with a juror or with the trial judge.

(11) An acquittal is to be set aside under subsection (3)(b)(i) if the Court is unable to conclude that the interference had no effect on the outcome of the proceedings on the original indictment or complaint.

(12) But it is not to be so set aside if in the course of the trial, the interference (being interference with a juror and not with the trial judge) became known to the trial judge, who then allowed the trial to proceed to its conclusion.

(13) Subsection (14) applies in a case other than is mentioned in subsection (10).

(14) An acquittal is not to be set aside under subsection (3)(b)(i) unless the Court is satisfied on a balance of probabilities—
   (a) that the offence led—
      (i) to the withholding of evidence which, had it been given, would have been, or
      (ii) to the giving of false evidence which was,
      evidence capable of being regarded as credible and reliable by a reasonable jury, and
   (b) that the withholding, or as the case may be the giving, of the evidence was likely to have had a material effect on the outcome of the proceedings on the original indictment or complaint.

(15) And an acquittal is not to be set aside under subsection (3)(b)(i), whether by virtue of subsections (10) to (12) or by virtue of subsections (13) and (14), if the court considers that setting it aside would be contrary to the interests of justice.

(16) In this section, the expression “offence against the course of justice”—
   (a) means an offence of perverting, or of attempting to pervert, the course of justice (by whatever means and however the offence is described), and
(b) without prejudice to the generality of paragraph (a), includes—

(i) an offence under section 45(1) of the Criminal Law (Consolidation) (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.39) (aiding, abetting, counselling, procuring or suborning the commission of an offence under section 44 of that Act),

(ii) the crime of subornation of perjury, and

(iii) the crime of bribery.

(17) But the expression does not include—

(a) the crime of perjury, or

(b) an offence under section 44(1) of that Act (statement on oath which is false or which the person making it does not believe to be true).

Bill Aitken

119 After section 37, insert—

<Further provision as regards prosecution by virtue of section (Tainted acquittals)

(1) A prosecution may be brought by virtue of section (Tainted acquittals) notwithstanding that any time limit for the commencement of such proceedings has elapsed.

(2) In proceedings in a prosecution brought by virtue of section (Tainted acquittals) it is competent for either party to lead evidence which it was competent for that party to lead in the earlier proceedings.

(3) But the indictment or complaint in the prosecution is to identify any matters as respects which the prosecutor intends to lead evidence by virtue of subsection (2) (being matters as respects which it would not have been competent to lead evidence but for that subsection).

(4) On granting authority under section (Tainted acquittals)(3)(b)(ii) to bring a new prosecution, the High Court may, after giving the parties an opportunity of being heard, order the detention of the accused person in custody or admit that person to bail.

(5) In—

(a) solemn proceedings, section 65(4)(aa) and (b) and (4A) to (9), and

(b) summary proceedings, section 147,

of the 1995 Act (prevention of delay in trials) applies to an accused person who is detained under subsection (4) as it applies to an accused person detained by virtue of being committed until liberated in due course of law.

Bill Aitken

120 After section 37, insert—

<Admission subsequent to acquittal

(1) A person who, whether on indictment or complaint (the “original” indictment or complaint), has been acquitted of an offence but subsequently admits to committing it may, provided that the condition mentioned in subsection (3) is satisfied, be charged with, and prosecuted anew for, the offence.

(2) Whether the acquittal was before or after the coming into force of this section is, for the purposes of the section, immaterial.
The condition is that on the application of the Lord Advocate the High Court has—

(a) set aside the acquittal, and
(b) granted authority to bring, by virtue of this section, a new prosecution.

On making an application under subsection (3), the Lord Advocate is to send a copy of that application to the acquitted person.

The acquitted person is entitled to appear or to be represented at any hearing of the application.

For the purpose of hearing and determining the application, three of the Lords Commissioners of Justiciary are a quorum of the Court (the application being determined by majority vote of those sitting).

An acquittal is not to be set aside under subsection (3)(a) unless the Court is satisfied—

(a) on a balance of probabilities, that subsequent to the acquittal the person credibly admitted having committed the offence, and
(b) that evidence is available sufficient to corroborate the admission.

Even if the Court is satisfied as is mentioned in subsection (7), it is not to set aside the acquittal if it considers that to do so would be contrary to the interests of justice.

Robert Brown

120A As an amendment to amendment 120, line 15, at end insert—

( ) Before hearing an application under subsection (3), the Court is to order that no publicity be given to the application, or to any document prepared in connection with the application, until—

(a) the application is refused,
(b) a final decision has been made not to bring, or to discontinue, a new prosecution, or
(c) the new trial is concluded.

Bill Aitken

121 After section 37, insert—

<Further provision as regards prosecution by virtue of section (Admission subsequent to acquittal)

(1) No sentence may be passed on conviction in a new prosecution brought by virtue of section (Admission subsequent to acquittal) which could not have been passed under the proceedings on the original indictment or complaint (“the earlier proceedings”).

(2) A new prosecution may be brought by virtue of section (Admission subsequent to acquittal) notwithstanding that any time limit, other than the time limit mentioned in subsection (3), for the commencement of such proceedings has elapsed.

(3) Proceedings in a new prosecution brought by virtue of section (Admission subsequent to acquittal) are to be commenced within 2 months after the date on which authority to bring the prosecution was granted.
(4) In proceedings in a new prosecution brought by virtue of section (Admission subsequent to acquittal) it is competent for either party to lead evidence which it was competent for that party to lead in the earlier proceedings.

(5) But the indictment or complaint in the new prosecution is to identify any matters as respects which the prosecutor intends to lead evidence by virtue of subsection (4) (being matters as respects which it would not have been competent to lead evidence but for that subsection).

(6) For the purposes of subsection (3), proceedings are deemed commenced—
   (a) in a case where a warrant to apprehend the accused is granted—
      (i) on the date on which the warrant is executed, or
      (ii) if it is executed without unreasonable delay, on the date on which it is granted, and
   (b) in any other case, on the date on which the accused is cited.

(7) Where the 2 months mentioned in subsection (3) elapse and no new prosecution has been brought under this section, the order under section (Admission subsequent to acquittal)(3)(a) setting aside the acquittal has the effect, for all purposes, of an acquittal.

(8) On granting authority under section (Admission subsequent to acquittal)(3)(b) to bring a new prosecution, the High Court may, after giving the parties an opportunity of being heard, order the detention of the accused person in custody or admit that person to bail.

(9) In—
   (a) solemn proceedings, section 65(4)(aa) and (b) and (4A) to (9), and
   (b) summary proceedings, section 147,
   of the 1995 Act (prevention of delay in trials) applies to an accused person who is detained under subsection (8) as it applies to an accused person detained by virtue of being committed until liberated in due course of law.

(10) It is immaterial, for the purposes of this section, whether the acquittal was before or after the coming into force of the section.

Bill Aitken

122 After section 37, insert—

<New evidence

(1) A person who has been acquitted, after the coming into force of this section (or on the day on which it comes into force), of an offence may—
   (a) if there is new evidence that the person committed the offence, and
   (b) the conditions mentioned in subsection (2) are satisfied,
   be charged with, and prosecuted for, the offence anew.

(2) The conditions are—
   (a) that the person’s acquittal was of an offence mentioned in subsection (9), and
   (b) that on the application of the Lord Advocate the High Court has—
      (i) set aside the acquittal, and
      (ii) granted authority to bring, by virtue of this section, a new prosecution.
(3) The setting aside of the acquittal and the granting of such authority may, under subsection (2)(b), be applied for on one occasion only.

(4) On making an application under that subsection, the Lord Advocate is to send a copy of the application to the acquitted person.

(5) The acquitted person is entitled to appear or to be represented at any hearing of the application.

(6) For the purpose of hearing and determining the application under subsection (2)(b), three of the Lords Commissioners of Justiciary are a quorum of the Court (the application being determined by majority vote of those sitting).

(7) An acquittal is not to be set aside under subsection (2)(b)(i) unless the Court is satisfied that—
   (a) the case against the accused is strengthened substantially by the new evidence,
   (b) the new evidence is evidence which was not available, and could not with the exercise of reasonable diligence have been made available, at the trial in respect of the original offence, and
   (c) on the new evidence and the evidence which was led at that trial it is highly likely that a reasonable jury properly instructed would have convicted the person of the offence.

(8) Even if the Court is satisfied as is mentioned in subsection (7), it is not to set aside the acquittal if it considers that to do so would be contrary to the interests of justice.

(9) The offences are—
   (a) murder,
   (b) at common law, rape, and
   (c) an offence under either section 1 (rape) or section 18 (rape of a young child) of the Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009 (asp 9).

(10) The Scottish Ministers may by order amend subsection (9) so as to add further offences to those for the time being mentioned in that subsection.

(11) But subsection (1) does not apply as respects a person’s acquittal of an offence so added if the date of acquittal is earlier than that on which the addition is effected.

Bill Aitken

123 After section 37, insert—

<Further provision as regards prosecution by virtue of section (New evidence)>

(1) No sentence may be passed on conviction in a new prosecution brought by virtue of section (New evidence) which could not have been passed under the indictment on the trial of which the person was acquitted of the offence in question.

(2) A new prosecution may be brought by virtue of section (New evidence) notwithstanding that any time limit for the commencement of such proceedings, other than the time limit mentioned in subsection (3), has elapsed.

(3) Proceedings in a new prosecution brought by virtue of section (New evidence) are to be commenced within 2 months after the date on which authority to bring the prosecution was granted.
(4) In proceedings in a new prosecution brought by virtue of section (New evidence) it is competent for either party to lead evidence which it was competent for that party to lead in the earlier proceedings.

(5) But the indictment in the new prosecution is to identify any matters as respects which the prosecutor intends to lead evidence by virtue of subsection (4) (being matters as respects which it would not have been competent to lead evidence but for that subsection).

(6) For the purposes of subsection (3), proceedings are deemed commenced—

(a) in a case where a warrant to apprehend the accused is granted—

(i) on the date on which the warrant is executed, or

(ii) if it is executed without unreasonable delay, on the date on which it is granted, and

(b) in any other case, on the date on which the accused is cited.

(7) Where the 2 months mentioned in subsection (3) elapse and no new prosecution has been brought under this section, the order under section (New evidence)(2)(b)(i) setting aside the acquittal has the effect, for all purposes, of an acquittal.

(8) On granting authority under section (New evidence)(2)(b)(ii) to bring a new prosecution, the High Court is, after giving the parties an opportunity of being heard, to order the detention of the accused person in custody or to admit that person to bail.

(9) Subsections (4)(aa) and (b) and (4A) to (9) of section 65 of the 1995 Act (prevention of delay in trials) apply to an accused person who is detained under subsection (8) as they apply to an accused person detained by virtue of being committed until liberated in due course of law.

Bill Aitken

124 After section 37, insert—

Nulity of proceedings on previous indictment or complaint

(1) Subsection (3) applies where—

(a) a person has, whether on indictment or complaint—

(i) been charged with, and

(ii) acquitted or convicted of, an offence, and

(b) the conditions mentioned in subsection (4) are satisfied.

(2) Whether the conviction or acquittal was before or after the coming into force of this section is, for the purposes of the section, immaterial.

(3) The person may be charged with, and prosecuted anew for, the offence.

(4) The conditions are that, on the application of the prosecutor and after hearing the parties, the High Court is satisfied—

(a) that the proceedings on the indictment or complaint were a nullity, and

(b) that it would not be contrary to the interests of justice to proceed as mentioned in subsection (3).
Bill Aitken

After section 37, insert—

<Amendment of Schedule 1 to the Contempt of Court Act 1981

(1) Schedule 1 to the Contempt of Court Act 1981 (c.49) (times when proceedings are active for the purposes of section 2 of that Act) is amended as follows.

(2) After paragraph 1 (the expressions “criminal proceedings” and “appellate proceedings”), there is inserted—

“1A Proceedings under sections (Plea in bar of trial) to (Nullity of proceedings on previous indictment or complaint) of the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Act 2010 (asp 00) are criminal proceedings (and are not appellate proceedings) for the purposes of this Schedule.”.

(3) In paragraph 4 (initial steps of criminal proceedings), at the end there is added—

“(f) the making of an application under section (Tainted acquittals)(3)(a)(ii) or (b) (tainted acquittals), (Admission subsequent to acquittal)(3) (admission subsequent to acquittal) or (New evidence)(2)(b) (new evidence) of the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Act 2010 (asp 00).”.

(4) In paragraph 5 (conclusion of criminal proceedings), at the end there is added—

“(d) where the initial steps of the proceedings are as mentioned in paragraph 4(f)—

(i) by refusal of the application,

(ii) if the application is granted and within 2 months thereafter a new prosecution is brought, by acquittal, or as the case may be by sentence, in the new prosecution.”.

(5) In paragraph 7 (discontinuance of proceedings), at the end there is added—

“(d) where the initial steps of the proceedings are as mentioned in paragraph 4(f) and the application is granted, if no new prosecution is brought within 2 months thereafter.”.>

Robert Brown

After section 37, insert—

<Breach of the peace

Breach of the peace: modification of common law offence

A person’s behaviour may constitute a breach of the peace—

(a) whether or not it is directed at anyone in particular, and

(b) whether it takes place in public or private,

and to the extent that any rule of law is to the contrary, it ceases to have effect.>
Section 38

Robert Brown

379 In section 38, page 53, line 15, leave out subsection (2) and insert—

<(2) In section 41 (age of criminal responsibility), for “eight” substitute “12”.

Bill Aitken

126 In section 38, page 53, line 17, after <not> insert <normally>

Bill Aitken

127 In section 38, page 53, line 18, after <not> insert <normally>

Richard Baker

389* In section 38, page 53, line 26, at end insert—

<(5) The Scottish Ministers must, as soon as possible after the end of each of the reporting years, lay before the Scottish Parliament and publish a report on the disposal of cases (“relevant cases”) involving children who, but for section 41A of the 1995 Act (as inserted by subsection (2)), would have been prosecuted.

(6) For the purposes of subsection (5), the “reporting years” are—

(a) the period of 12 months beginning with the day on which this section comes into force, and

(b) the periods of 12 months beginning with the first and second anniversaries of that day.

(7) A report under subsection (5) must, in particular—

(a) specify the number of relevant cases disposed of during the reporting year,

(b) set out how those cases were disposed of and the costs and other resources involved in those disposals, and

(c) state what (if any) consideration the Scottish Ministers have given during the year covered by the report to the merits of altering the range of disposals available in such cases.>

Section 39

Kenny MacAskill

128 In section 39, page 53, line 32, after <offence> insert <committed by the partnership>

Kenny MacAskill

129 In section 39, page 54, line 9, at end insert—

<( ) In subsection (1), the references to a partner of a partnership include references to a person purporting to act as a partner of the partnership.>
Section 40

Kenny MacAskill

130 In section 40, page 54, line 23, leave out <all reasonable hours> and insert

Bill Aitken
Supported by: Robert Brown

131 Leave out section 40

After section 40

Margaret Curran

403 After section 40, insert—

<Parole: victims’ representation>

Victims’ representation at Parole Board hearings

(1) Section 17 of the Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 2003 (asp 7) is amended as follows.

(2) After subsection (1), insert—

“(1A) Representations under subsection (1) may include a request by the victim to be heard (either in person or through a representative) at the relevant hearing of the Parole Board for Scotland.

(1B) In this section, the “relevant hearing” of the Board is the hearing at which the Board is to consider the convicted person’s case in order to decide whether to recommend, or direct, that person’s release on licence.”.

(3) In subsection (3), for “Parole Board for Scotland” substitute “Board”.

(4) After subsection (5), insert—

“(5A) Where representations are made under subsection (1) which include a request to be heard at the relevant hearing, the Board must—

(a) give the victim reasonable notice in writing of when and where the hearing is to take place and invite the victim to—

(i) attend the hearing, with or without an accompanying person, in order to be heard in person; or

(ii) send a representative to the hearing to be heard on the victim’s behalf;

(b) in so doing, give the victim appropriate information about the hearing and how it is likely to be conducted including, in particular—

(i) information about any parts of the hearing from which the victim and any accompanying person are, or the victim’s representative is, to be excluded, and

(ii) any limits on their participation during the other parts of the hearing;
(c) at the hearing, afford the victim (or the victim’s representative) a reasonable opportunity to be heard.

(5B) A victim’s representative may only be a member of the victim’s immediate family or a friend of the victim.

(5C) In reaching its decision at or after the hearing, the Board must take account of—

(a) any written representations made under subsection (1); and

(b) anything said by the victim (or the victim’s representative) at the hearing.”.

Section 41

Kenny MacAskill

518 In section 41, page 55, line 22, at end insert—

<(4A) The reference in subsection (4)(c) to any previous conviction of an offence under subsection (1)(b) includes any previous conviction by a court in England and Wales, Northern Ireland or a member State of the European Union other than the United Kingdom of an offence that is equivalent to an offence under subsection (1)(b).

(4B) The references in subsection (4)(d) to subsection (4) are to be read, in relation to a previous conviction by a court referred to in subsection (4A), as references to any provision that is equivalent to subsection (4).

(4C) Any issue of equivalence arising in pursuance of subsection (4A) or (4B) is for the court to determine.”.

After section 41

Kenny MacAskill

420 After section 41, insert—

<Grant of warrants

Grant of warrants for execution by constables and police members of SCDEA

(1) A sheriff or justice of the peace does not lack power or jurisdiction to grant a warrant for execution by a person mentioned in subsection (2) solely because the person is not a constable of a police force for a police area lying wholly or partly in the sheriff’s or justice’s sheriffdom.

(2) The persons referred to in subsection (1) are—

(a) a constable,

(b) a police member of the Scottish Crime and Drug Enforcement Agency.”.

After section 43

Kenny MacAskill

132 After section 43, insert—
<Bail conditions: remote monitoring requirements>
Sections 24A to 24E of the 1995 Act (bail conditions: remote monitoring) are repealed.>

Section 44

Kenny MacAskill

421 In section 44, page 58, line 5, at end insert—
<( ) The title of section 287 becomes “Demission from office of Lord Advocate and Solicitor General for Scotland”>.

Kenny MacAskill

422 In section 44, page 58, line 6, leave out from <subsection> to <Advocate)> and insert <that section>

Kenny MacAskill

423 In section 44, page 58, line 11, at end insert <and
( ) after “successor” insert “or the Solicitor General”,>.

Kenny MacAskill

424 In section 44, page 58, leave out line 13 and insert—
<( ) for “in name of” substitute “at the instance of Her Majesty’s Advocate or”, and>

Kenny MacAskill

425 In section 44, page 58, line 17, at end insert—
<(2AA) All indictments which have been raised at the instance of the Solicitor General shall remain effective notwithstanding the holder of the office of Solicitor General subsequently having died or demitted office and may be taken up and proceeded with by his successor or the Lord Advocate.>

Kenny MacAskill

426 In section 44, page 58, line 19, leave out from <as> to end of line 20

Kenny MacAskill

427 In section 44, page 58, line 24, at end insert—
<( ) in paragraph (a), after “subsection (1)” insert “or (2AA)”,>

After section 46

Kenny MacAskill

428 After section 46, insert—
Dockets and charges in sex cases

After section 288B of the 1995 Act insert—

“Dockets and charges in sex cases

288BA Dockets for charges of sexual offences

(1) An indictment or a complaint may include a docket which specifies any act or omission that is connected with a sexual offence charged in the indictment or complaint.

(2) Here, an act or omission is connected with such an offence charged if it—

(a) is specifiable by way of reference to a sexual offence, and

(b) relates to—

(i) the same event as the offence charged, or

(ii) a series of events of which that offence is also part.

(3) The docket is to be in the form of a note apart from the offence charged.

(4) It does not matter whether the act or omission, if it were instead charged as an offence, could not competently be dealt with by the court (including as particularly constituted) in which the indictment or complaint is proceeding.

(5) Where under subsection (1) a docket is included in an indictment or a complaint, it is to be presumed that—

(a) the accused person has been given fair notice of the prosecutor’s intention to lead evidence of the act or omission specified in the docket, and

(b) evidence of the act or omission is admissible as relevant.

(6) The references in this section to a sexual offence are to—

(a) an offence under the Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009,

(b) any other offence involving a significant sexual element.

288BB Mixed charges for sexual offences

(1) An indictment or a complaint may include a charge that is framed as mentioned in subsection (2) or (3) (or both).

(2) That is, framed so as to comprise (in a combined form) the specification of more than one sexual offence.

(3) That is, framed so as to—

(a) specify, in addition to a sexual offence, any other act or omission, and

(b) do so in any manner except by way of reference to a statutory offence.

(4) Where a charge in an indictment or a complaint is framed as mentioned in subsection (2) or (3) (or both), the charge is to be regarded as being a single yet cumulative charge.

(5) The references in this section to a sexual offence are to an offence under the Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009.”.
Section 47

Robert Brown

541 In section 47, page 61, line 2, at end insert—

<(A1) Section 44 of the 1995 Act (detention of children) is amended in accordance with subsections (B1) and (C1).

(B1) In subsection (1), after “child” insert “aged 16 years or over”.

(C1) In subsection (2), the words from “(other than” to “this Act)” are repealed.>

After section 51

Kenny MacAskill

429 After section 51, insert—

<Personal conduct of case by accused

Prohibition of personal conduct of case by accused in certain proceedings

(1) The 1995 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In section 288C (prohibition of personal conduct of defence in cases of certain sexual offences)—

(a) for subsection (1) substitute—

“(1) An accused charged with a sexual offence to which this section applies is prohibited from conducting his case in person at, or for the purposes of, any relevant hearing in the course of proceedings (other than proceedings in a JP court) in respect of the offence.

(1A) In subsection (1), “relevant hearing” means a hearing at, or for the purposes of, which a witness is to give evidence.”, and

(b) subsection (8) is repealed.

(3) In section 288D (appointment of solicitor by court in cases to which section 288C applies)—

(a) in subsection (1), after “proceedings” insert “(other than proceedings in a JP court)”,

(b) in subsection (2)(a), for sub-paragraphs (i) and (ii) substitute—

“(i) the conduct of his case at, or for the purposes of, any relevant hearing (within the meaning of section 288C(1A)) in the proceedings; or”, and

(c) in subsection (6), for the words from “of the accused’s defence” to the end substitute “referred to in subsection (2)(a) above.”.

(4) In section 288E (prohibition of personal conduct of defence in certain cases involving child witness under the age of 12)—

(a) subsection (1) is repealed,
(b) in subsection (2)(b), for “the trial” substitute “any hearing in the course of the proceedings”;
(c) after subsection (2) insert—
“(2A) The accused is prohibited from conducting his case in person at, or for the purposes of, any hearing at, or for the purposes of, which the child witness is to give evidence.”,
(d) in subsection (4), at the end insert “and as if references to a relevant hearing were references to a hearing referred to in subsection (2A) above”;
(e) in subsection (6)—
(i) for paragraphs (za) and (a) substitute—
“(a) that his case at, or for the purposes of, any hearing in the course of the proceedings at, or for the purposes of, which the child witness is to give evidence may be conducted only by a lawyer,”, and
(ii) in paragraph (c), for the words from “preliminary” to “trial” substitute “hearing”, and
(f) subsection (8) is repealed.

(5) In section 288F (power to prohibit personal conduct of defence in other cases involving vulnerable witnesses)—
(a) in subsection (1), for “the trial” substitute “any hearing in the course of the proceedings”;
(b) in subsection (2), for the words from “defence” to the end substitute “case in person at any hearing at, or for the purposes of, which the vulnerable witness is to give evidence.”,
(c) in subsection (3)(a), for “trial” substitute “hearing”,
(d) in subsection (4), for the words from “after” to the end substitute “in relation to a hearing after, as well as before, the hearing has commenced.”,
(e) subsection (4A) is repealed,
(f) in subsection (5), at the end insert “and as if references to a relevant hearing were references to any hearing in respect of which an order is made under this section”, and
(g) subsection (6) is repealed.

Section 52

Kenny MacAskill

519 In section 52, page 64, line 11, at end insert—

<( ) A reference in this section to a conviction which occurred on or after the date of offence O is a reference to such a conviction by a court in any part of the United Kingdom or in any other member State of the European Union.”.>

Kenny MacAskill

520 In section 52, page 64, line 36, at end insert—
( ) A reference in this section to a conviction which occurred on or after the date of offence O is a reference to such a conviction by a court in any part of the United Kingdom or in any other member State of the European Union.”.

After section 52

Kenny MacAskill

521 After section 52, insert—

Convictions by courts in other EU member States

(1) Schedule (Convictions by courts in other EU member States) makes modifications of the 1995 Act and other enactments for the purposes of and in connection with implementing obligations of the United Kingdom created by or arising under the Framework Decision (so far as they have effect in or as regards Scotland).

(2) The Scottish Ministers may by order make further provision for the purposes of and in connection with implementing those obligations.

(3) The provision may, in particular, confer functions—

(a) on the Scottish Ministers,

(b) on other persons.

(4) An order under subsection (2) may modify any enactment.

(5) In this section, the “Framework Decision” means Council Framework Decision 2008/675/JHA of 24 July 2008 on taking account of convictions in the Member States of the European Union in the course of new criminal proceedings.

After schedule 2

Kenny MacAskill

522 After schedule 2, insert—

Schedule (introduced by section (Convictions by courts in other EU member States)(1))

Convictions by courts in other EU member States: modifications of enactments

Part 1

The 1995 Act

1 The 1995 Act is amended as follows.

2 In section 23C(2)(d)(i) (previous convictions to be taken into consideration in determining bail), for “outwith Scotland” substitute “by courts outside the European Union”.

3 In section 27 (breach of bail conditions: offences), after subsection (3) insert—
“(3A) The reference in subsection (3)(b) to any previous conviction of an offence under subsection (1)(b) includes any previous conviction by a court in England and Wales, Northern Ireland or a member State of the European Union other than the United Kingdom of an offence that is equivalent to an offence under subsection (1)(b).

(3B) The references in subsection (3)(c) to subsection (3) are to be read, in relation to a previous conviction by a court referred to in subsection (3A), as references to any provision that is equivalent to subsection (3).

(3C) Any issue of equivalence arising in pursuance of subsection (3A) or (3B) is for the court to determine.”.

4 In section 202(2) (deferred sentence), for “Great Britain” substitute “the United Kingdom or in another member State of the European Union”.

5 In section 204 (restrictions on passing sentence of imprisonment or detention)—
   (a) in each of subsections (1) and (2), after “United Kingdom” insert “or in another member State of the European Union”,
   (b) after subsection (4) insert—
   “(4A) The court shall, for the purpose of determining whether a person has been previously sentenced to imprisonment or detention by a court in a member State of the European Union other than the United Kingdom—
   (a) disregard any previous sentence of imprisonment which, being the equivalent of a suspended sentence, has not taken effect;
   (b) construe detention as meaning an equivalent sentence to any of those mentioned in subsection (4)(b).
   (4B) Any issue of equivalence arising in pursuance of subsection (4A) is for the court to determine.”.

6 In section 205B (minimum sentence for third conviction of certain offences relating to drug trafficking)—
   (a) in subsection (1)(b), for “been convicted in any part of the United Kingdom of two other class A drug trafficking offences” substitute “two previous convictions for relevant offences”,
   (b) after subsection (1) insert—
   “(1A) In subsection (1), “relevant offence” means—
   (a) in relation to a conviction by a court in any part of the United Kingdom, a class A drug trafficking offence;
   (b) in relation to a conviction by a court in a member State of the European Union other than the United Kingdom, an offence that is equivalent to a class A drug trafficking offence.
   (1B) Any issue of equivalence arising in pursuance of subsection (1A)(b) is for the court to determine.”.

7 In section 275A (disclosure of accused’s previous convictions where court allows questioning or evidence under section 275)—
   (a) in subsection (10)—
   (i) the word “or” immediately following paragraph (a) is repealed,
(ii) after paragraph (a) insert—

“(aa) a conviction by a court in England and Wales, Northern Ireland or a member State of the European Union other than the United Kingdom of an offence that is equivalent to one to which section 288C of this Act applies by virtue of subsection (2) thereof; or”;

(b) after subsection (10) insert—

“(10A) Any issue of equivalence arising in pursuance of subsection (10)(aa) is for the court to determine.”.

8 In section 307 (interpretation)—

(a) in subsection (1), insert the following definition at the appropriate place—

“‘conviction’, in relation to a previous conviction by a court outside Scotland, means a final decision of a criminal court establishing guilt of a criminal offence;”, and

(b) for subsection (5) substitute—

“(5) Except where the context requires otherwise—

(a) any reference in this Act to a previous conviction is to be construed as a reference to a previous conviction by a court in any part of the United Kingdom or in any other member State of the European Union;

(b) any reference in this Act to a previous sentence is to be construed as a reference to a previous sentence passed by any such court;

(c) any reference to a previous conviction of a particular offence is to be construed, in relation to a previous conviction by a court outside Scotland, as a reference to a previous conviction of an equivalent offence; and

(d) any reference to a previous sentence of a particular kind is to be construed, in relation to a previous sentence passed by a court outside Scotland, as a reference to a previous sentence of an equivalent kind.”.

PART 2

OTHER ENACTMENTS

The Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 (c.45)

9 In section 58 of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982, after subsection (4) insert—

“(4A) In subsection (4), the reference to a conviction for theft includes a reference to a conviction by a court in England and Wales, Northern Ireland or a member State of the European Union other than the United Kingdom of an offence that is equivalent to theft.

(4B) Any issue of equivalence arising in pursuance of subsection (4A) is for the court to determine.”.

The Prisoners and Criminal Proceedings (Scotland) Act 1993 (c.9)

10 In section 27(1) of the Prisoners and Criminal Proceedings (Scotland) Act 1993 (interpretation of Part 1), insert at the appropriate place—
““previous conviction” means a previous conviction by a court in any part of the United Kingdom or in any other member State of the European Union;”.

The Criminal Law (Consolidation) (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.39)
11 (1) Section 9 of the Criminal Law (Consolidation) (Scotland) Act 1995 (permitting girl to use premises for intercourse) is amended as follows.

(2) In subsection (2A)—
   (a) the word “or” immediately following paragraph (a) is repealed, and
   (b) after paragraph (a) insert—
      “(aa) that person has a previous conviction for a relevant foreign offence committed against a person under the age of 16; or”.

(3) In subsection (3)—
   (a) the word “and” immediately following paragraph (a) is repealed, and
   (b) after paragraph (a) insert—
      “(aa) “a previous conviction for a relevant foreign offence” has the same meaning as in section 39(5)(aa) of that Act; and”.

The Custodial Sentences and Weapons (Scotland) Act 2007 (asp 17)
12 In section 4(1) of the Custodial Sentences and Weapons (Scotland) Act 2007 (basic definitions for purposes of Part 2), insert at the appropriate place—
   ““previous conviction” means a previous conviction by a court in any part of the United Kingdom or in any other member State of the European Union,”.

The Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009 (asp 9)
13 (1) Section 39 of the Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009 (defences in relation to offences against older children) is amended as follows.

(2) In subsection (2)—
   (a) in paragraph (a)—
      (i) the word “or” immediately following sub-paragraph (i) is repealed, and
      (ii) after sub-paragraph (i) insert—
         “(ia) if A has a previous conviction for a relevant foreign offence committed against a person under the age of 16, or”,
   (b) in paragraph (b)—
      (i) the word “or” immediately following sub-paragraph (i) is repealed, and
      (ii) after sub-paragraph (i) insert—
         “(ia) if B has a previous conviction for a relevant foreign offence committed against a person under the age of 16, or”.

(3) In subsection (5), after paragraph (a) insert—
“(aa) “a previous conviction for a relevant foreign offence” means a previous conviction by a court in a member State of the European Union other than the United Kingdom for an offence that is equivalent to one listed in paragraph 1, 4, 7, 10, 13 (so far as applying to an offence listed in paragraph 1, 4, 7 or 10) or 14 of schedule 1,”

(4) After subsection (5) insert—

“(5A) Any issue of equivalence arising in pursuance of subsection (5)(aa) is for the court to determine.

(5B) For that purpose, an offence may be equivalent to one listed in paragraph 1, 4, 7, 10, 13 (so far as applying to an offence listed in paragraph 1, 4, 7 or 10) or 14 of schedule 1 even though, under the law of the member State (or part of the member State) in question, it is an offence—

(a) regardless of the age of the victim, or

(b) only if committed against a person under an age other than 16 years.”

Section 54

Kenny MacAskill

462 In section 54, page 65, line 30, leave out <the close of the whole of the evidence> and insert <one or other (but not both) of the appropriate events>

Kenny MacAskill

463 In section 54, page 65, leave out lines 39 and 40 and insert—

<(  ) For the purposes of subsection (1), “the appropriate events” are—

(a) the close of the whole of the evidence,

(b) the conclusion of the prosecutor’s address to the jury on the evidence.>

Kenny MacAskill

464 In section 54, page 66, line 15, leave out <the prosecutor to amend the indictment> and insert <that the indictment be amended>

Kenny MacAskill

465 In section 54, page 66, line 22, after first <of> insert <the judge or>

Kenny MacAskill

466 In section 54, page 66, line 29, leave out <the prosecutor to amend the indictment> and insert <that the indictment be amended>

Kenny MacAskill

467 In section 54, page 66, line 37, after first <of> insert <the judge or>
Kenny MacAskill

468 In section 54, page 66, line 37, at end insert—

<97D No acquittal on “no reasonable jury” grounds

(1) A judge has no power to direct the jury to return a not guilty verdict on any charge on the ground that no reasonable jury, properly directed on the evidence, could convict on the charge.

(2) Accordingly, no submission based on that ground or any ground of like effect is to be allowed.>

Section 55

Kenny MacAskill

469 In section 55, page 67, line 4, at end insert—

<(1A) If, immediately after an acquittal under section 97 or 97B(2)(a), the prosecutor moves for the trial diet to be adjourned for no more than 2 days in order to consider whether to appeal against the acquittal under subsection (1), the court of first instance must grant the motion unless the court considers that there are no arguable grounds of appeal.

(1B) If, immediately after the giving of a direction under section 97B(2)(b) or 97C(2), the prosecutor moves for the trial diet to be adjourned for no more than 2 days in order to consider whether to appeal against the direction under subsection (1), the court of first instance must grant the motion unless the court considers that it would not be in the interests of justice to do so.

(1C) In considering whether it would be in the interests of justice to grant a motion for adjournment under subsection (1B), the court must have regard, amongst other things, to—

(a) whether, if an appeal were to be made and to be successful, continuing with the diet would have any impact on any subsequent or continued prosecution,

(b) whether there are any arguable grounds of appeal.

(1D) An appeal may not be brought under subsection (1) unless the prosecutor intimates intention to appeal—

(a) immediately after the acquittal or, as the case may be, the giving of the direction,

(b) if a motion to adjourn the trial diet under subsection (1A) or (1B) is granted, immediately upon resumption of the diet, or

(c) if such a motion is refused, immediately after the refusal.

(1E) Subsection (2) applies if—

(a) the prosecutor intimates an intention to appeal under subsection (1)(a), or

(b) the trial diet is adjourned under subsection (1A).>
Kenny MacAskill

470 In section 55, page 67, line 5, leave out from beginning to <Court> and insert <Where this subsection applies, the court of first instance must suspend the effect of the acquittal and>

Kenny MacAskill

471 In section 55, page 67, line 10, leave out <exceptionally and>

Kenny MacAskill

472 In section 55, page 67, line 11, at end insert—

   <( ) The court may, under subsection (2)(b), order the detention of the person in custody only if the court considers that there are arguable grounds of appeal.>

Kenny MacAskill

473 In section 55, page 67, leave out lines 25 to 33

Kenny MacAskill

474 In section 55, page 68, line 5, leave out <an appeal is brought> and insert <the prosecutor intimates intention to appeal>

Kenny MacAskill

475 In section 55, page 68, line 28, leave out <or 107B>

Kenny MacAskill

476 In section 55, page 69, line 13, at end insert—

   <( ) However, if the prosecutor moves for the diet to be deserted pro loco et tempore in relation to such other offence, the court must grant the motion.>

Section 57

Kenny MacAskill

477 In section 57, page 69, line 26, leave out <within 7 days after an appeal is brought under section 107A(1)> and insert <where the prosecutor intimates intention to appeal under section 107A(1), within 7 days after the acquittal or direction appealed against>

Section 58

Kenny MacAskill

478 In section 58, page 71, line 4, leave out from <18(7A)> to end of line 5 and insert <18 (prints, samples etc. in criminal investigations)—

   ( ) in subsection (3), for “section 18A” substitute “sections 18A to 18C”,

   ( ) in subsection (7A), for “sections 19 to 20” substitute “, subject to the modification in subsection (7AA), sections 18A to 19C”, and
( ) after subsection (7A) insert—

“(7AA) The modification is that for the purposes of section 19C as it applies in relation to relevant physical data taken from or provided by a person outwith Scotland, subsection (7A) is to be read as if in paragraph (d) the words from “created” to the end were omitted.”.

James Kelly

404 In section 58, page 71, line 4, leave out from <18(7A)> to <Act),> in line 5 and insert <18 (prints, samples etc. in criminal investigations)—

( ) in subsection (3), the words “or on the conclusion of such proceedings otherwise than with a conviction or an order under section 246(3) of this Act” are repealed, and

( ) in subsection (7A),>

James Kelly

405 In section 58, page 71, leave out line 6 and insert—

<( ) The title of section 18A becomes “Retention of samples, etc.: persons prosecuted but not convicted etc.”, and in that section>

Kenny MacAskill

479 In section 58, page 71, leave out lines 7 to 10 and insert—

<( ) for subsection (1) substitute—

“(1) This section applies to—

(a) relevant physical data taken or provided under section 18(2), and

(b) any sample, or any information derived from a sample, taken under section 18(6) or (6A),

where the condition in subsection (2) is satisfied.”.>

James Kelly

406 In section 58, page 71, line 11, after <(2)> insert—

<( ) the words “in respect of a relevant sexual offence or a relevant violent offence” are repealed, and

( )>

Kenny MacAskill

480 In section 58, page 71, line 13, leave out from <after> to <data,“> and insert <for “sample or information” substitute “relevant physical data, sample or information derived from a sample”,>

James Kelly

407 In section 58, page 71, line 13, at end insert—

<( ) in subsection (4)(a), for “3” substitute “6”.>
Kenny MacAskill

481 In section 58, page 71, line 14, leave out from beginning to <data,“> in line 15 and insert—

<c( ) after subsection (8) insert—

“(8A) If the sheriff principal allows an appeal against the refusal of an application under subsection (5), the sheriff principal may make an order amending, or further amending, the destruction date.

(8B) An order under subsection (8A) must not specify a destruction date more than 2 years later than the previous destruction date.”,

( ) in subsection (10), for “sample or information” substitute “relevant physical data, sample or information derived from a sample”>

Kenny MacAskill

482 In section 58, page 71, line 18, at end insert <and

( ) in the definition of “relevant sexual offence” and “relevant violent offence”, after “have” insert “, subject to the modification in subsection (12),”, and

( ) after subsection (11) insert—

“(12) The modification is that the definition of “relevant sexual offence” in section 19A(6) is to be read as if for paragraph (g) there were substituted—

“(g) public indecency if it is apparent from the offence as charged in the indictment or complaint that there was a sexual aspect to the behaviour of the person charged;”.”.>

James Kelly

408 In section 58, page 71, line 18, at end insert <, and

( ) the definition of “relevant sexual offence” and “relevant violent offence” is repealed.>

After section 58

Stewart Maxwell

418 After section 58, insert—

<Retention of samples etc. where offer under sections 302 to 303ZA accepted

After section 18A of the 1995 Act insert—

“18AA Retention of samples etc. where offer under sections 302 to 303ZA accepted

(1) This section applies to—

(a) relevant physical data taken from or provided by a person under section 18(2), and

(b) any sample, or any information derived from a sample, taken from a person under section 18(6) or (6A),

48
where the conditions in subsection (2) are satisfied.

(2) The conditions are—

(a) the relevant physical data or sample was taken from or provided by the person while the person was under arrest or being detained in connection with the offence or offences in relation to which a relevant offer is issued to the person, and

(b) the person—

(i) accepts a relevant offer, or

(ii) in the case of a relevant offer other than one of the type mentioned in paragraph (d) of subsection (3), is deemed to accept a relevant offer.

(3) In this section “relevant offer” means—

(a) a conditional offer under section 302,

(b) a compensation offer under section 302A,

(c) a combined offer under section 302B, or

(d) a work offer under section 303ZA.

(4) Subject to subsections (6) and (7) and section 18AB(9) and (10), the relevant physical data, sample or information derived from a sample must be destroyed no later than the destruction date.

(5) In subsection (4), “destruction date” means—

(a) in relation to a relevant offer that relates only to—

(i) a relevant sexual offence,

(ii) a relevant violent offence, or

(iii) both a relevant sexual offence and a relevant violent offence, the date of expiry of the period of 3 years beginning with the date on which the relevant offer is issued or such later date as an order under section 18AB(2) or (6) may specify,

(b) in relation to a relevant offer that relates to—

(i) an offence or offences falling within paragraph (a), and

(ii) any other offence, the date of expiry of the period of 3 years beginning with the date on which the relevant offer is issued or such later date as an order under section 18AB(2) or (6) may specify,

(c) in relation to a relevant offer that does not relate to an offence falling within paragraph (a), the date of expiry of the period of 2 years beginning with the date on which the relevant offer is issued.

(6) If a relevant offer is recalled by virtue of section 302C(5) or a decision to uphold it is quashed under section 302C(7)(a), all record of the relevant physical data, sample and information derived from a sample must be destroyed as soon as possible after—

(a) the prosecutor decides not to issue a further relevant offer to the person,
(b) the prosecutor decides not to institute criminal proceedings against the person, or
(c) the prosecutor institutes criminal proceedings against the person and those proceedings conclude otherwise than with a conviction or an order under section 246(3).

(7) If a relevant offer is set aside by virtue of section 303ZB, all record of the relevant physical data, sample and information derived from a sample must be destroyed as soon as possible after the setting aside.

(8) In this section, “relevant sexual offence” and “relevant violent offence” have, subject to the modification in subsection (9), the same meanings as in section 19A(6) and include any attempt, conspiracy or incitement to commit such an offence.

(9) The modification is that the definition of “relevant sexual offence” in section 19A(6) is to be read as if for paragraph (g) there were substituted—
“(g) public indecency if it is apparent from the relevant offer (as defined in section 18AA(3)) relating to the offence that there was a sexual aspect to the behaviour of the person to whom the relevant offer is issued;”.

18AB Section 18AA: extension of retention period where relevant offer relates to certain sexual or violent offences

(1) This section applies where the destruction date for relevant physical data, a sample or information derived from a sample falls within section 18AA(5)(a) or (b).

(2) On a summary application made by the relevant chief constable within the period of 3 months before the destruction date, the sheriff may, if satisfied that there are reasonable grounds for doing so, make an order amending, or further amending, the destruction date.

(3) An application under subsection (2) may be made to any sheriff—
(a) in whose sheriffdom the appropriate person resides,
(b) in whose sheriffdom that person is believed by the applicant to be, or
(c) to whose sheriffdom the person is believed by the applicant to be intending to come.

(4) An order under subsection (2) must not specify a destruction date more than 2 years later than the previous destruction date.

(5) The decision of the sheriff on an application under subsection (2) may be appealed to the sheriff principal within 21 days of the decision.

(6) If the sheriff principal allows an appeal against the refusal of an application under subsection (2), the sheriff principal may make an order amending, or further amending, the destruction date.

(7) An order under subsection (6) must not specify a destruction date more than 2 years later than the previous destruction date.

(8) The sheriff principal’s decision on an appeal under subsection (5) is final.

(9) Section 18AA(4) does not apply where—
(a) an application under subsection (2) has been made but has not been determined,
(b) the period within which an appeal may be brought under subsection (5) against a decision to refuse an application has not elapsed, or
(c) such an appeal has been brought but has not been withdrawn or finally determined.

(10) Where—
(a) the period within which an appeal referred to in subsection (9)(b) may be brought has elapsed without such an appeal being brought,
(b) such an appeal is brought and is withdrawn or finally determined against the appellant, or
(c) an appeal brought under subsection (5) against a decision to grant an application is determined in favour of the appellant,

the relevant physical data, sample or information derived from a sample must be destroyed as soon as possible after the period has elapsed, or, as the case may be, the appeal is withdrawn or determined.

(11) In this section—
“appropriate person” means the person from whom the relevant physical data was taken or by whom it was provided or from whom the sample was taken,
“destruction date” has the meaning given by section 18AA(5),
“the relevant chief constable” has the same meaning as in subsection (11) of section 18A, with the modification that references to the person referred to in subsection (2) of that section are references to the appropriate person.”.

Stewart Maxwell

419 After section 58, insert—

<Retention of samples etc. taken or provided in connection with certain fixed penalty offences

After section 18A of the 1995 Act insert—

“18AC Retention of samples etc. taken or provided in connection with certain fixed penalty offences

(1) This section applies to—
(a) relevant physical data taken from or provided by a person under section 18(2), and
(b) any sample, or any information derived from a sample, taken from a person under section 18(6) or (6A),

where the conditions in subsection (2) are satisfied.

(2) The conditions are—
(a) the person was arrested or detained in connection with a fixed penalty offence,
(b) the relevant physical data or sample was taken from or provided by the person while the person was under arrest or being detained in connection with that offence,

(c) after the relevant physical data or sample was taken from or provided by the person, a constable gave the person under section 129(1) of the 2004 Act—

(i) a fixed penalty notice in respect of that offence (the “main FPN”), or

(ii) the main FPN and one or more other fixed penalty notices in respect of fixed penalty offences arising out of the same circumstances as the offence to which the main FPN relates, and

(d) the person, in relation to the main FPN and any other fixed penalty notice of the type mentioned in paragraph (c)(ii)—

(i) pays the fixed penalty, or

(ii) pays any sum that the person is liable to pay by virtue of section 131(5) of the 2004 Act.

(3) Subject to subsections (4) and (5), the relevant physical data, sample or information derived from a sample must be destroyed before the end of the period of 2 years beginning with—

(a) where subsection (2)(c)(i) applies, the day on which the main FPN is given to the person,

(b) where subsection (2)(c)(ii) applies and—

(i) the main FPN and any other fixed penalty notice are given to the person on the same day, that day,

(ii) the main FPN and any other fixed penalty notice are given to the person on different days, the later day.

(4) Where—

(a) subsection (2)(c)(i) applies, and

(b) the main FPN is revoked under section 133(1) of the 2004 Act,

the relevant physical data, sample or information derived from a sample must be destroyed as soon as possible after the revocation.

(5) Where—

(a) subsection (2)(c)(ii) applies, and

(b) the main FPN and any other fixed penalty notices are revoked under section 133(1) of the 2004 Act,

the relevant physical data, sample or information derived from a sample must be destroyed as soon as possible after the revocations.

(6) In this section—

“the 2004 Act” means the Antisocial Behaviour etc. (Scotland) Act 2004 (asp 8),

“fixed penalty notice” has the meaning given by section 129(2) of the 2004 Act,
“fixed penalty offence” has the meaning given by section 128(1) of the 2004 Act.”.

Section 59

James Kelly

409 In section 59, page 72, line 19, leave out from <such> to second <offence> and insert—

<(  ) an offence of assault, categorised by the Principal Reporter as grave, or (  ) such—
(i) other relevant violent offence, or
(ii) relevant sexual offence,>

James Kelly

410 In section 59, page 72, leave out lines 21 to 36

Robert Brown

380 In section 59, page 72, leave out lines 21 and 22, and insert—

<(7) Where this section applies, the sheriff may, on summary application by the relevant chief constable, make an order that, subject to section 18C(6) and (7), the relevant physical data, sample or the information must be destroyed no later than the destruction date.

(7A) The sheriff may only make the order referred to in subsection (7) if satisfied that the child continues to pose a risk to public safety and that retention of the relevant physical data, sample or information until the destruction date is justified by that risk.>

Kenny MacAskill

483 In section 59, page 72, line 21, leave out <18C(5) and (6)> and insert <18C(6) and (7)>

Kenny MacAskill

484 In section 59, page 72, line 21, leave out <the information> and insert <information derived from a sample>

Robert Brown

545 In section 59, page 72, leave out lines 25 to 36 and insert <the date on which the relevant offence mentioned in subsection (3), (4) or, as the case may be, (5) was committed; or

(b) such later date as an order under section 18C(1) may specify.

(  ) For the purposes of subsection (8)(a)—

(a) if two or more relevant offences were committed on different dates, it is the most recent of those offences that is to be taken as the offence constituting the ground of referral; and
(b) if a relevant offence was committed on more than one date, the date on which the offence was committed is to be taken as the most recent of those dates.

Robert Brown

381 In section 59, page 72, line 40, at end insert—

"“relevant chief constable” has the same meaning as in section 18A(11), with the modification that references to the person referred to in subsection (2) of that section are references to the child referred to in subsection (1);".

Kenny MacAskill

485 In section 59, page 73, line 1, after <have> insert <, subject to the modification in subsection (11),>.

Kenny MacAskill

486 In section 59, page 73, line 3, at end insert—

<(11) The modification is that the definition of “relevant sexual offence” in section 19A(6) is to be read as if for paragraph (g) there were substituted—

“(g) public indecency if it is apparent from the ground of referral relating to the offence that there was a sexual aspect to the behaviour of the child;”.

James Kelly

411 In section 59, page 73, leave out lines 4 to 40

Robert Brown

546 In section 59, page 73, line 7, leave out from <there> to end of line 8 and insert <at least one ground for doing so, specified by virtue of subsection (1A), is established, make an order amending (or further amending) the destruction date.>

<(1A) The Scottish Ministers must, by regulations made by statutory instrument, specify the grounds on which an order under subsection (1) may be made.

(1B) Before making regulations under subsection (1A), the Scottish Ministers must consult such persons as they consider appropriate.

(1C) A statutory instrument containing regulations under subsection (1A) is subject to annulment in pursuance of a resolution of the Scottish Parliament.>

Kenny MacAskill

487 In section 59, page 73, line 17, at end insert—

<(4A) If the sheriff principal allows an appeal against the refusal of an application under subsection (1), the sheriff principal may make an order amending, or further amending, the destruction date.

(4B) An order under subsection (4A) must not specify a destruction date more than 2 years later than the previous destruction date.>
Kenny MacAskill
488 In section 59, page 73, line 23, leave out <expired> and insert <elapsed>

Kenny MacAskill
489 In section 59, page 73, line 28, leave out <expired> and insert <elapsed>

Kenny MacAskill
490 In section 59, page 73, line 33, after <information> insert <derived from a sample>

Kenny MacAskill
491 In section 59, page 73, line 34, leave out from <practicable> to end of line and insert <possible after the period has elapsed or, as the case may be, the appeal is withdrawn or determined.>

Kenny MacAskill
492 In section 59, page 73, line 37, leave out <section 18A(11)> and insert <subsection (11) of section 18A>

Robert Brown
382 In section 59, page 73, line 37, leave out from <18A(11)> to end of line 40 and insert <18B(10)>

Kenny MacAskill
493 In section 59, page 74, line 1, leave out subsection (2)

James Kelly
412 In section 59, page 74, line 2, leave out from <after> to end of line and insert <at beginning insert “Except where section 18B applies and”>

After section 59

Kenny MacAskill
494 After section 59, insert—

<Extension of section 19A of 1995 Act>
In section 19A(6) of the 1995 Act (definitions of certain expressions for purposes of section 19A)—

(a) in the definition of “relevant sexual offence”, for paragraph (g) substitute—

“(g) public indecency if the court, in imposing sentence or otherwise disposing of the case, determined for the purposes of paragraph 60 of Schedule 3 to the Sexual Offences Act 2003 (c.42) that there was a significant sexual aspect to the offender’s behaviour in committing the offence;”, and

(b) in paragraph (h) of the definition of “relevant violent offence”, after subparagraph (iv), insert—
“(v) section 47(1) (possession of offensive weapon in public place),
49(1) (possession of article with blade or point in public place), 49A(1) or (2) (possession of article with blade or point or offensive weapon on school premises) or 49C(1) (possession of offensive weapon or article with blade or point in prison) of the Criminal Law (Consolidation) (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.39);”.

Section 60

Kenny MacAskill

495 In section 60, page 74, line 6, leave out <This section> and insert <Subsection (2)>

Kenny MacAskill

496 In section 60, page 74, line 7, leave out <, or any information derived from relevant physical data,>

Kenny MacAskill

497 In section 60, page 74, line 12, leave out <, a sample or an impression> and insert <or a sample>

Kenny MacAskill

498 In section 60, page 74, line 17, leave out <relevant physical data or a sample or impression> and insert

Kenny MacAskill

499 In section 60, page 74, line 18, at end insert <and

( ) relevant physical data, a sample or information derived from a sample taken from, or provided by, a person outwith Scotland which is given by any person to—

(i) a police force,

(ii) the Scottish Police Services Authority, or

(iii) a person acting on behalf of a police force.>

Kenny MacAskill

500 In section 60, page 74, line 19, leave out <, impression or information> and insert <or information derived from a sample>

Kenny MacAskill

501 In section 60, page 74, line 23, leave out <, sample or impression> and insert <or sample>

Kenny MacAskill

502 In section 60, page 74, line 23, at end insert—
<(2A) Subsections (2B) and (2C) apply to relevant physical data, a sample or information derived from a sample falling within any of paragraphs (a) to (d) of subsection (1) (“relevant material”).

(2B) If the relevant material is held by a police force, the Scottish Police Services Authority or a person acting on behalf of a police force, the police force or, as the case may be, the Authority or person may give the relevant material to another person for use by that person in accordance with subsection (2).

(2C) A police force, the Scottish Police Services Authority or a person acting on behalf of a police force may, in using the relevant material in accordance with subsection (2), check it against other relevant physical data, samples and information derived from samples received from another person.>

Kenny MacAskill

503 In section 60, page 74, line 33, leave out <the United Kingdom> and insert <Scotland>

Kenny MacAskill

504 In section 60, page 74, line 35, leave out <the United Kingdom> and insert <Scotland>

Kenny MacAskill

505 In section 60, page 74, line 38, leave out from <, impressions> to end of line 39 and insert <or information derived from a sample>

Kenny MacAskill

506 In section 60, page 75, leave out line 2

Kenny MacAskill

507 In section 60, page 75, leave out line 5

Kenny MacAskill

508 In section 60, page 75, line 7, leave out <, impression or relevant physical data>

Kenny MacAskill

509 In section 60, page 75, line 12, leave out <, impression>

Kenny MacAskill

510 In section 60, page 75, line 14, leave out from beginning to <impression”> in line 25 and insert <, after “information” insert “derived from a sample”,

( ) in subsection (5)(b), the words “with all information derived from them” are repealed,

( ) in subsection (6)(a), for “it or them” substitute “the sample”,

( ) in subsection (7)(a), the words “or relevant physical data”, in the second place where they occur, are repealed,
Section 61

Kenny MacAskill

133 In section 61, page 76, line 6, after <reasons> insert <for making the reference>

Kenny MacAskill

134 In section 61, page 76, line 9, leave out from <additional> to end of line 10 and insert <the appellant to found the appeal on additional grounds>

Kenny MacAskill

135 In section 61, page 76, line 19, leave out <additional grounds to be raised> and insert <the appeal to be founded on additional grounds>

Before section 62

Kenny MacAskill

430 Before section 62, insert—

<Admissibility of prior statements of witnesses: abolition of competence test

(1) This section applies in relation to a prior statement made by a witness before the commencement of section 24 of the Vulnerable Witnesses (Scotland) Act 2004 (asp 3) (“the 2004 Act”) (which abolishes the competence test for witnesses in criminal and civil proceedings).

(2) For the purpose of the application of subsection (2)(c) of section 260 of the 1995 Act (admissibility of prior statement depends on competence of the witness at the time of the statement) in relation to the statement, section 24 of the 2004 Act is taken to have been in force at the time the statement was made.

(3) In this section, “prior statement” has the meaning it has in section 260 of the 1995 Act.>

Section 62

Robert Brown

383 In section 62, page 77, line 1, after <may> insert <, if satisfied that there is good reason to do so,>

After section 64

Kenny MacAskill

384 After section 64, insert—

<Child witnesses in proceedings for people trafficking offences

In section 271 of the 1995 Act (vulnerable witnesses: main definitions)—

(a) in subsection (1)(a), for “age of 16” substitute “relevant age”, and

(b) after subsection (1), insert—

“(1A) In subsection (1)(a), “the relevant age” means—
(a) in the case of a person who is giving or is to give evidence in proceedings for an offence under section 22 of the Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 2003 (asp 7) (trafficking in prostitution etc.) or section 4 of the Asylum and Immigration (Treatment of Claimants, etc.) Act 2004 (c.19) (trafficking people for exploitation), the age of 18, and

(b) in any other case, the age of 16.”.>

Section 66

Kenny MacAskill

431 In section 66, page 80, line 13, leave out from <other> to end of line 16 and insert <the jury>

Kenny MacAskill

432 In section 66, page 80, line 18, leave out <any persons within paragraph (a)(i) to (iii)> and insert <the judge or the jury>

Kenny MacAskill

433 In section 66, page 81, line 6, leave out <material> and insert <information>

Kenny MacAskill

434 In section 66, page 81, line 8, leave out <may> and insert <must>

Kenny MacAskill

435 In section 66, page 81, line 12, leave out <material”> and insert <information”>

Kenny MacAskill

436 In section 66, page 82, line 16, leave out <the weight of>

Kenny MacAskill

437 In section 66, page 82, line 18, leave out <the sole or decisive evidence> and insert <material in>

Kenny MacAskill

438 In section 66, page 82, line 36, leave out <warning> and insert <direction>

Kenny MacAskill

439 In section 66, page 83, leave out lines 33 to 36

Schedule 3

Kenny MacAskill

440 In schedule 3, page 148, line 28, leave out <treat the conviction as unsafe> and insert <quash the conviction>
In schedule 3, page 148, line 31, leave out <treat the conviction as unsafe> and insert <quash the conviction>

After section 67

Kenny MacAskill

After section 67, insert—

-European evidence warrants

(1) The Scottish Ministers may by order make provision for the purposes of and in connection with implementing any obligations of the United Kingdom created by or arising under the Framework Decision (so far as they have effect in or as regards Scotland).

(2) The provision may, in particular, confer functions—

(a) on the Scottish Ministers,
(b) on the Lord Advocate,
(c) on other persons.

(3) An order under subsection (1) may modify any enactment.

(4) An order under subsection (1) may contain provision creating offences and a person who commits such an offence is liable to such penalties, not exceeding those mentioned in subsection (5), as are provided for in the order.

(5) Those penalties are—

(a) on conviction on indictment, imprisonment for a period not exceeding 2 years, or a fine, or both,
(b) on summary conviction, imprisonment for a period not exceeding 12 months, or a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum, or both.

Before section 68

Kenny MacAskill

Before section 68, insert—

-Lists of jurors

(1) The 1995 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In section 84 (juries: returns of jurors and preparation of lists)—

(a) in subsection (3), for “list” substitute “lists”,
(b) for subsection (4) substitute—
“(4) For the purpose of a trial in the sheriff court, the sheriff principal must furnish the clerk of court with a list of names, containing the number of persons required, from lists of potential jurors of—

(a) the sheriff court district in which the trial is to be held (the “local district”), and

(b) if the sheriff principal considers it appropriate, any other sheriff court district or districts in the sheriffdom in which the trial is to be held (“other districts”).

(4A) Where the sheriff principal furnishes a list containing names of potential jurors of other districts, the sheriff principal may determine the proportion as between the local district and the other districts in which jurors are to be summoned.”,

(c) in subsection (5), for “list”, in both places where it occurs, substitute “lists”, and

(d) subsection (7) is repealed.

(3) In section 85(4) (juries: citation and attendance of jurors)—

(a) for the words from the beginning to “shall”, in the first place where it occurs, substitute “The sheriff clerk of—

(a) the sheriffdom in which the High Court is to sit, or

(b) the sheriff court district in which a trial in the sheriff court is to be held, shall”, and

(b) the word “such”, in the first place where it occurs, is repealed.>

Section 68

David McLetchie

415 In section 68, page 86, line 14, leave out from <for> to <relevant”> and insert <at beginning insert “subject to subsection (1A),”>

David McLetchie

416 In section 68, page 86, leave out lines 17 to 19 and insert—

<“(1A) In relation to criminal proceedings, a person is qualified and liable to serve as a juror despite being over 65 years of age.”>

After section 68

Kenny MacAskill

511 After section 68, insert—

<Excusal from jury service

(1) The Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) (Scotland) Act 1980 is amended as follows.

(2) In section 1 (qualification of jurors)—

(a) in subsection (1), after “below” insert “and to section 1A”,

61
(b) in subsection (2), after “service” in the second place where it occurs insert “in relation to civil proceedings”,

(c) in subsection (3), after “service” in the first place where it occurs insert “in relation to civil proceedings”,

(d) in subsection (5), after “above” insert “or under section 1A”, and

(e) in subsection (6), after paragraph (a) insert—

“(aa) section 1A;”.

(3) After section 1 insert—

“1A Excusal of jurors in relation to criminal proceedings

(1) A person who is qualified under section 1(1) but is among the persons listed in Part III of Schedule 1 to this Act (being persons excusable as of right from jury service) is to be excused from jury service in relation to criminal proceedings on any occasion where the person—

(a) has been required to provide information under section 3(2) of the Jurors (Scotland) Act 1825 (c.22); and

(b) gives written notice to the sheriff principal that the person wishes to be excused, before the end of the period of 7 days beginning with the day on which the person receives the requirement.

(2) A person who is qualified under section 1(1) but is among the persons listed in Group C of Part III of Schedule 1 to this Act is to be excused from jury service in relation to criminal proceedings on any occasion where—

(a) the person has been required to provide information under section 3(2) of the Jurors (Scotland) Act 1825; and

(b) the person’s commanding officer certifies to the sheriff principal that it would be prejudicial to the efficiency of the force of which the person is a member were the person required to be absent from duty.”.

(4) In section 3(1)(a) (offences in connection with jury service), after “been” insert “required to provide information under section 3(2) of the Jurors (Scotland) Act 1825 or”.

Section 69

David McLetchie

417 In section 69, page 86, line 30, at end insert <and ( ) persons who have attained the age of 71;>

Section 70

Kenny MacAskill

136 In section 70, page 89, line 34, leave out <and Wales>
In section 70, page 90, line 21, leave out from <body> to end of line 23 and insert <health and social care body mentioned in paragraphs (a) to (e) of section 1(5) of the Health and Social Care (Reform) Act (Northern Ireland) 2009 (c.1).>

Section 72

In section 72, page 94, line 29, leave out <Law> and insert <Justice>

In section 72, page 94, line 39, at end insert <, other than an offence under section 11A (engaging in a paid-for sexual activity) or 11B (advertising paid-for sexual activities)>

As an amendment to amendment 9, line 2, after <activity)> insert <, 11AA (causing alarm etc. by engaging in a paid-for sexual activity)>

In section 72, page 94, line 41, leave out <27> and insert <37>

In section 72, page 94, line 42, leave out <penetrative>

In section 72, page 95, line 1, leave out <31> and insert <42>

In section 72, page 95, line 2, leave out <35> and insert <46>

In section 72, page 95, line 3, at end insert—

<( ) an offence under section (Slavery, servitude and forced or compulsory labour) (slavery, servitude and forced or compulsory labour) of the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Act 2010 (asp 00).>

In section 72, page 95, line 14, leave out <42> and insert <54>
Section 74

Kenny MacAskill

444 In section 74, page 96, line 23, after <station> insert <in Scotland>

Kenny MacAskill

445 In section 74, page 97, line 5, leave out from  to end of line and insert—

(a) a requirement under section 117A(2) (surrender of passports: England and Wales and Northern Ireland), or

(b) a requirement under section 117B(2) (surrender of passports: Scotland).

Kenny MacAskill

446 In section 74, page 97, line 5, at end insert—

(1C) A person may be prosecuted, tried and punished for any offence under subsection (1B)—

(a) in any sheriff court district in which the person is apprehended or is in custody, or

(b) in such sheriff court district as the Lord Advocate may determine, as if the offence had been committed in that district (and the offence is, for all purposes incidental to or consequential on the trial or punishment, to be deemed to have been committed in that district).

After section 74

Kenny MacAskill

145 After section 74, insert—

Sex offender notification requirements

(1) The Sexual Offences Act 2003 (c.42) is amended as follows.

(2) In section 85 (notification requirements: periodic notification)—

(a) in subsection (1), for “period of one year” substitute “applicable period”,

(b) in subsection (3), for “period referred to in subsection (1)” substitute “applicable period”, and

(c) after subsection (4) insert—

“(5) In this section, the “applicable period” means—

(a) in any case where subsection (6) applies to the relevant offender, such period not exceeding one year as the Scottish Ministers may prescribe in regulations, and

(b) in any other case, the period of one year.
(6) This subsection applies to the relevant offender if the last home address notified by the offender under section 83(1) or 84(1) or subsection (1) was the address or location of such a place as is mentioned in section 83(7)(b).”.

(3) In section 86 (notification requirements: travel outside the United Kingdom), subsection (4) is repealed.

(4) In section 87 (method of notification and related matters), subsection (6) is repealed.

(5) In section 96 (information about release or transfer), subsection (4) is repealed.

(6) In section 138 (orders and regulations)—
(a) in subsection (2), after “84,” insert “85,” and
(b) after subsection (3) insert—
“(4) Orders or regulations made by the Scottish Ministers under this Act may—
(a) make different provision for different purposes,
(b) include supplementary, incidental, consequential, transitional, transitory or saving provisions.”.

After section 75

Kenny MacAskill

146 After section 75, insert—

<Risk of sexual harm orders: spent convictions
In section 7 of the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974 (c.53) (limitations on rehabilitation under the Act), in subsection (2), after paragraph (bb) insert—
“(bc) in any proceedings on an application under section 2, 4 or 5 of the Protection of Children and Prevention of Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2005 (asp 9) or in any appeal under section 6 of that Act;”.

Section 77

Kenny MacAskill

523 In section 77, page 98, leave out lines 5 to 10

Kenny MacAskill

524 In section 77, page 98, line 14, leave out from <(including) to <operation)> in line 15

Kenny MacAskill

525 In section 77, page 98, line 22, at end insert—
<( ) After that section insert—
“10A  Authorisation of surveillance: joint surveillance operations

In the case of a joint surveillance operation, where authorisation is sought for the carrying out of any form of conduct to which this Act applies, authorisation may be granted by any one of the persons having power to grant authorisation for the carrying out of that conduct.”.

Kenny MacAskill

526 In section 77, page 98, line 27, at end insert—

<(  ) In section 14 (approval required for authorisations to take effect)—

(a) in subsection (5)(b), after “General” insert “or the Deputy Director General”, and

(b) subsection (7) is repealed.>

Kenny MacAskill

527 In section 77, page 98, line 27, at end insert—

<(  ) In section 16 (appeals against decisions by Surveillance Commissioners), in subsection (1), after “General” insert “or the Deputy Director General”.>

Kenny MacAskill

528 In section 77, page 98, line 30, leave out from <, where> to <surveillance,> in line 31

Section 78

Kenny MacAskill

529 In section 78, page 98, line 39, leave out <(3)> and insert <(3A)>

Kenny MacAskill

530 In section 78, page 99, line 1, leave out <(3A)> and insert <(3AA)>

Kenny MacAskill

531 In section 78, page 99, line 8, leave out <or>

Kenny MacAskill

532 In section 78, page 99, line 18, leave out <(3A)> and insert <(3AA)>

Kenny MacAskill

533 In section 78, page 99, line 23, at end insert—

<(  ) in paragraph (cc) of subsection (6), after “General” insert “, or Deputy Director General,”.>

Kenny MacAskill

534 In section 78, page 99, line 26, leave out <(5)(a)> and insert <(5)>
Kenny MacAskill

535 In section 78, page 99, line 26, leave out <“where”> and insert <“Where”>

Kenny MacAskill

536 In section 78, page 99, line 29, after <operation,> insert <the person referred to in subsection (2)(h) is>

Section 79

Kenny MacAskill

537 In section 79, page 99, line 39, at end insert—

<( ) In section 113B (enhanced criminal record certificates), in subsection (3), for the words from “, or” immediately following paragraph (a) to the end of paragraph (b), substitute “(or states that there is no such matter or information), and

(b) if the applicant is subject to notification requirements under Part 2 of the Sexual Offences Act 2003 (c.42), states that fact.”.>

Kenny MacAskill

538 In section 79, page 100, line 1, leave out <section 113B> and insert <that section>

After section 79

Kenny MacAskill

447 After section 79, insert—

<Rehabilitation of offenders

Spent alternatives to prosecution: Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974

(1) The Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974 (c.53) is amended as follows.

(2) After section 8A (protection afforded to spent cautions), insert—

“8B Protection afforded to spent alternatives to prosecution: Scotland

(1) For the purposes of this Act, a person has been given an alternative to prosecution in respect of an offence if the person (whether before or after the commencement of this section)—

(a) has been given a warning in respect of the offence by—

(i) a constable in Scotland, or

(ii) a procurator fiscal,

(b) has accepted, or is deemed to have accepted—

(i) a conditional offer issued in respect of the offence under section 302 of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.46), or

(ii) a compensation offer issued in respect of the offence under section 302A of that Act,
(c) has had a work order made against the person in respect of the offence under section 303ZA of that Act,

(d) has been given a fixed penalty notice in respect of the offence under section 129 of the Antisocial Behaviour etc. (Scotland) Act 2004 (asp 8),

(e) has accepted an offer made by a procurator fiscal in respect of the offence to undertake an activity or treatment or to receive services or do any other thing as an alternative to prosecution, or

(f) in respect of an offence under the law of a country or territory outside Scotland, has been given, or has accepted or is deemed to have accepted, anything corresponding to a warning, offer, order or notice falling within paragraphs (a) to (e) under the law of that country or territory.

(2) In this Act, references to an “alternative to prosecution” are to be read in accordance with subsection (1).

(3) Schedule 3 to this Act (protection for spent alternatives to prosecution: Scotland) has effect.”.

(3) After section 9A (unauthorised disclosure of spent cautions), insert—

“9B Unauthorised disclosure of spent alternatives to prosecution: Scotland

(1) In this section—

(a) “official record” means a record that—

(i) contains information about persons given an alternative to prosecution in respect of an offence, and

(ii) is kept for the purposes of its functions by a court, police force, Government department, part of the Scottish Administration or other local or public authority in Scotland,

(b) “relevant information” means information imputing that a named or otherwise identifiable living person has committed, been charged with, prosecuted for or given an alternative to prosecution in respect of an offence which is the subject of an alternative to prosecution which has become spent,

(c) “subject of the information”, in relation to relevant information, means the named or otherwise identifiable living person to whom the information relates.

(2) Subsection (3) applies to a person who, in the course of the person’s official duties (anywhere in the United Kingdom), has or has had custody of or access to an official record or the information contained in an official record.

(3) The person commits an offence if the person—

(a) obtains relevant information in the course of the person’s official duties,

(b) knows or has reasonable cause to suspect that the information is relevant information, and

(c) discloses the information to another person otherwise than in the course of the person’s official duties.

(4) Subsection (3) is subject to the terms of an order under subsection (6).
(5) In proceedings for an offence under subsection (3), it is a defence for the accused to show that the disclosure was made—
   (a) to the subject of the information or to a person whom the accused reasonably believed to be the subject of the information, or
   (b) to another person at the express request of the subject of the information or of a person whom the accused reasonably believed to be the subject of the information.

(6) The Scottish Ministers may by order provide for the disclosure of relevant information derived from an official record to be excepted from the provisions of subsection (3) in cases or classes of cases specified in the order.

(7) A person guilty of an offence under subsection (3) is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding level 4 on the standard scale.

(8) A person commits an offence if the person obtains relevant information from an official record by means of fraud, dishonesty or bribery.

(9) A person guilty of an offence under subsection (8) is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding level 5 on the standard scale, or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 6 months, or to both.”.

(4) After Schedule 2 (protection for spent convictions) insert—

“SCHEDULE 3

PROTECTION FOR SPENT ALTERNATIVES TO PROSECUTION: SCOTLAND

Preliminary

1 (1) For the purposes of this Act, an alternative to prosecution given to any person (whether before or after the commencement of this Schedule) becomes spent—
   (a) in the case of—
      (i) a warning referred to in paragraph (a) of subsection (1) of section 8B, or
      (ii) a fixed penalty notice referred to in paragraph (d) of that subsection,
   at the time the warning or notice is given,
   (b) in any other case, at the end of the relevant period.

(2) The relevant period in relation to an alternative to prosecution is the period of 3 months beginning on the day on which the alternative to prosecution is given.

(3) Sub-paragraph (1)(a) is subject to sub-paragraph (5).

(4) Sub-paragraph (2) is subject to sub-paragraph (6).

(5) If a person who is given a fixed penalty notice referred to in section 8B(1)(d) in respect of an offence is subsequently prosecuted and convicted of the offence, the notice—
   (a) becomes spent at the end of the rehabilitation period for the offence, and
   (b) is to be treated as not having become spent in relation to any period before the end of that rehabilitation period.
(6) If a person who is given an alternative to prosecution (other than one to which sub-paragraph (1)(a) applies) in respect of an offence is subsequently prosecuted and convicted of the offence—

(a) the relevant period in relation to the alternative to prosecution ends at the same time as the rehabilitation period for the offence ends, and

(b) if the conviction occurs after the end of the period referred to sub-paragraph (2), the alternative to prosecution is to be treated as not having become spent in relation to any period before the end of the rehabilitation period for the offence.

2 (1) In this Schedule, “ancillary circumstances”, in relation to an alternative to prosecution, means any circumstances of the following—

(a) the offence in respect of which the alternative to prosecution is given or the conduct constituting the offence,

(b) any process preliminary to the alternative to prosecution being given (including consideration by any person of how to deal with the offence and the procedure for giving the alternative to prosecution),

(c) any proceedings for the offence which took place before the alternative to prosecution was given (including anything that happens after that time for the purpose of bringing the proceedings to an end),

(d) any judicial review proceedings relating to the alternative to prosecution,

(e) in the case of an offer referred to in paragraph (e) of subsection (1) of section 8B, anything done or undergone in pursuance of the terms of the offer.

(2) Where an alternative to prosecution is given in respect of two or more offences, references in sub-paragraph (1) to the offence in respect of which the alternative to prosecution is given includes a reference to each of the offences.

(3) In this Schedule, “proceedings before a judicial authority” has the same meaning as in section 4.

Protection for spent alternatives to prosecution and ancillary circumstances

3 (1) A person who is given an alternative to prosecution in respect of an offence is, from the time the alternative to prosecution becomes spent, to be treated for all purposes in law as a person who has not committed, been charged with or prosecuted for, or been given an alternative to prosecution in respect of, the offence.

(2) Despite any enactment or rule of law to the contrary—

(a) where an alternative to prosecution given to a person in respect of an offence has become spent, evidence is not admissible in any proceedings before a judicial authority exercising its jurisdiction or functions in Scotland to prove that the person has committed, been charged with or prosecuted for, or been given an alternative to prosecution in respect of, the offence,

(b) a person must not, in any such proceedings, be asked any question relating to the person’s past which cannot be answered without acknowledging or referring to an alternative to prosecution that has become spent or any ancillary circumstances, and
(c) if a person is asked such a question in any such proceedings, the person is not required to answer it.

(3) Sub-paragraphs (1) and (2) do not apply in relation to any proceedings—

(a) for the offence in respect of which the alternative to prosecution was given, and

(b) which are not part of the ancillary circumstances.

4 (1) This paragraph applies where a person (“A”) is asked a question, otherwise than in proceedings before a judicial authority, seeking information about—

(a) A’s or another person’s previous conduct or circumstances,

(b) offences previously committed by A or the other person, or

(c) alternatives to prosecution previously given to A or the other person.

(2) The question is to be treated as not relating to alternatives to prosecution that have become spent or to any ancillary circumstances and may be answered accordingly.

(3) A is not to be subjected to any liability or otherwise prejudiced in law because of a failure to acknowledge or disclose an alternative to prosecution that has become spent or any ancillary circumstances in answering the question.

5 (1) An obligation imposed on a person (“A”) by a rule of law or by the provisions of an agreement or arrangement to disclose any matter to another person does not extend to requiring A to disclose an alternative to prosecution (whether one given to A or another person) that has become spent or any ancillary circumstances.

(2) An alternative to prosecution that has become spent or any ancillary circumstances, or any failure to disclose an alternative to prosecution that has become spent or any ancillary circumstances, is not a ground for dismissing or excluding a person from any office, profession, occupation or employment, or for prejudicing the person in any way in any occupation or employment.

6 The Scottish Ministers may by order—

(a) exclude or modify the application of any of paragraphs (a) to (c) of paragraph 3(2) in relation to questions put in such circumstances as may be specified in the order,

(b) provide for exceptions from any of the provisions of paragraphs 4 and 5 in such cases or classes of case, or in relation to alternatives to prosecution of such descriptions, as may be specified in the order.

7 Paragraphs 3 to 5 do not affect—

(a) the operation of an alternative to prosecution, or

(b) the operation of an enactment by virtue of which, because of an alternative to prosecution, a person is subject to a disqualification, disability, prohibition or other restriction or effect for a period extending beyond the time at which the alternative to prosecution becomes spent.

8 (1) Section 7(2), (3) and (4) apply for the purpose of this Schedule as follows.
(2) Subsection (2), apart from paragraphs (b) and (d), applies to the determination of any issue, and the admission or requirement of evidence, relating to alternatives to prosecution previously given to a person and to ancillary circumstances as it applies to matters relating to a person’s previous convictions and circumstances ancillary thereto.

(3) Subsection (3) applies to evidence of alternatives to prosecution previously given to a person and ancillary circumstances as it applies to evidence of a person’s previous convictions and the circumstances ancillary thereto.

(4) For that purpose, subsection (3) has effect as if—

(a) a reference to subsection (2) or (4) of section 7 were a reference to that subsection as applied by this paragraph, and

(b) the words “or proceedings to which section 8 below applies” were omitted.

(5) Subsection (4) applies for the purpose of excluding the application of paragraph 3.

(6) For that purpose, subsection (4) has effect as if the words “(other than proceedings to which section 8 below applies)” were omitted.

(7) References in the provisions applied by this paragraph to section 4(1) are to be read as references to paragraph 3.”.

Kenny MacAskill

448 After section 79, insert—

<Medical services in prisons

Medical services in prisons

(1) For section 3A of the Prisons (Scotland) Act 1989 (c.45) (medical services in prisons) substitute—

“3A Medical officers for prisons

(1) The Scottish Ministers must designate one or more medical officers for each prison.

(2) A person may be designated as a medical officer for a prison only if the person is a registered medical practitioner performing primary medical services for prisoners at the prison under the National Health Service (Scotland) Act 1978 (c.29).

(3) A medical officer has the functions that are conferred on a medical officer for a prison by or under this Act or any other enactment.

(4) A medical officer is not an officer of the prison for the purposes of this Act.

(5) Rules under section 39 of this Act may provide for the governor of a prison to authorise the carrying out by officers of the prison of a search of any person who is in, or is seeking to enter, the prison for the purpose of providing medical services for any prisoner at the prison.

(6) Nothing in rules made by virtue of subsection (5) allows the governor to authorise an officer of a prison to require a person to remove any of the person’s clothing other than an outer coat, jacket, headgear, gloves and footwear.”.
(2) In section 41D of that Act (unlawful disclosure of information by medical officers), for subsection (1) substitute—
   “(1) This section applies to—
       (a) a medical officer for a prison, and
       (b) any person acting under the supervision of such a medical officer.”.

(3) In section 107 of the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 (c.33) (officers of contracted out prisons), for subsections (6) to (8) substitute—
   “(6) The director must designate one or more medical officers for the prison.
   (7) A person may be designated as a medical officer for the prison only if the person is a registered medical practitioner performing primary medical services for prisoners at the prison under the National Health Service (Scotland) Act 1978 (c.29).”.

(4) In section 110 of that Act (consequential modifications of the 1989 Act etc.)—
   (a) in each of subsections (3) and (4), for “3A(6)” substitute “3A(5) and (6)”,
   (b) subsection (4A) is repealed, and
   (c) in subsection (6), for “3A(1) to (5) (medical services)” substitute “3A(1) and (2) (medical officers)”.

(5) In section 111(3) of that Act (intervention by the Scottish Ministers), in paragraph (c), after “prison” insert “and the medical officer or officers for the prison.”.

Section 80

Angela Constance

413 In section 80, page 100, line 29, after <victims> insert <(including children and young people)>

Section 89

Bill Aitken

147 In section 89, page 106, line 37, leave out <review all the> and insert <disclose to the accused all>

Bill Aitken

148 In section 89, page 106, line 38, leave out from <and> to end of line 14 on page 107

Bill Aitken

149 In section 89, page 107, line 15, leave out <(5)> and insert <(2)>

Section 90

Bill Aitken

150 In section 90, page 107, line 19, leave out <(5) or (6)> and insert <(2)>
Bill Aitken

151 In section 90, page 107, leave out lines 24 to 26 and insert <and
(b) disclose to the accused any such information not already disclosed under section 89(2).>

Bill Aitken

152 In section 90, page 107, line 28, leave out <(5) or (6)> and insert <(2)>

Section 91

Bill Aitken

153 In section 91, page 108, line 5, leave out <89(5) or 90(2)> and insert <89(2) or 90(2)(b)>

Section 92

Bill Aitken

154 In section 92, page 108, line 10, leave out <89(5), 90(2)(c), 94(1)(c) or 95(3)(c)> and insert <89(2) or 90(2)(b)>

Section 93

Bill Aitken

155 In section 93, page 108, line 20, leave out <(5)> and insert <(2)>

Section 94

Bill Aitken

Supported by: Robert Brown

156 Leave out section 94

Section 95

Bill Aitken

Supported by: Robert Brown

157 Leave out section 95

Section 96

Bill Aitken

158 In section 96, page 110, line 28, leave out <89(5), 90(2)(c), 94(1)(c) or 95(3)(c)> and insert <89(2) or 90(2)(b)>
In section 97, page 110, line 36, leave out <89(5), 90(2)(c), 94(1)(c) or 95(3)(c)> and insert <89(2) or 90(2)(b)>

In section 98, page 111, line 5, leave out <89(5), 90(2)(c), 94(1)(c) or 95(3)(c)> and insert <89(2) or 90(2)(b)>

In section 100, page 111, line 36, leave out <89(5), 90(2)(c), 94(1)(c) or 95(3)(c)> and insert <89(2) or 90(2)(b)>

In section 102, page 112, line 26, leave out from <89(5)> to <information> in line 28 and insert <89(2) or 90(2)(b) the prosecutor is required to disclose an item of information to an accused>

In section 102, page 113, line 5, leave out from <89(5)> to end of line 6 and insert <89(2) or, as the case may be, 90(2)(b)>

In section 106, page 115, line 14, leave out <89(5), 90(2)(c), 94(1)(c) or 95(3)(c)> and insert <89(2) or 90(2)(b)>

In section 111, page 117, line 6, leave out <89(5), 90(2)(c), 94(1)(c) or 95(3)(c)> and insert <89(2) or 90(2)(b)>
Section 116

Bill Aitken

166 In section 116, page 119, line 24, leave out from <89(5)> to end of line 27 and insert <89(2),
(b) section 90(1) and (2),
(c) section 93(2) (where it first occurs),>

Section 117

Angela Constance

24 In section 117, page 120, line 10, at end insert <, or
(b) to determine or control that conduct despite being able to appreciate the nature or wrongfulness of it.>

Kenny MacAskill

167 In section 117, page 120, line 31, leave out <it> and insert <such abnormality>

Section 121

Kenny MacAskill

168 In section 121, page 123, leave out lines 2 and 3 and insert—
<(3A) No order may be made under subsection (1) unless a draft of the statutory instrument containing the order has been laid before and approved by resolution of the Scottish Parliament.>

Section 122

Kenny MacAskill

169 In section 122, page 125, line 1, leave out from <5,> to <29> in line 2 and insert <5 and 11>

Section 123

Robert Brown

385 Leave out section 123

After section 124

Kenny MacAskill

170 After section 124, insert—
<Licensing of street trading: food hygiene certificates
(1) Section 39 of the 1982 Act (street traders’ licences) is amended as follows.

76
(2) In subsection (4), for the words from “the requirements” to the end substitute “such requirements as the Scottish Ministers may by order made by statutory instrument specify”.

(3) After subsection (4), insert—

“(5) An order under subsection (4) may specify requirements by reference to provision contained in another enactment.

(6) A statutory instrument containing an order made under subsection (4) is subject to annulment in pursuance of a resolution of the Scottish Parliament.”.

Section 125

Kenny MacAskill
171 In section 125, page 128, line 24, at beginning insert <In>

Kenny MacAskill
172 In section 125, page 128, line 24, leave out from <is> to <In> in line 26 and insert <, in>

Cathie Craigie
2 In section 125, page 128, line 25, leave out subsection (2)

Cathie Craigie
3 In section 125, page 128, line 26, leave out subsection (3)

Cathie Craigie
Supported by: Robert Brown
4 Leave out section 125

After section 127

Sandra White
516 After section 127, insert—

<Control of lap dancing and other adult entertainment venues

(1) The 1982 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In section 41(2) (definition of place of public entertainment), after paragraph (aa) insert—

“(ab) adult entertainment venues (as defined in section 45A) in relation to which Schedule 2 (as modified for the purposes of that section) have effect, while being used as such;”.

(3) The title of Part 3 becomes “Control of sex shops and adult entertainment venues”.

(4) After section 45 insert—
“45A Control of lap dancing and other adult entertainment venues

(1) A local authority may resolve that Schedule 2, as modified for the purposes of this section, is to have effect in their area in relation to adult entertainment venues; and, if they do so resolve, that Schedule (as so modified) has effect from the day specified in the resolution.

(2) The day referred to in subsection (1) must not be before the expiry of the period of one month beginning with the day on which the resolution is passed.

(3) A local authority must, not later than 28 days before the day referred to in subsection (1), publish notice that they have passed a resolution under this section in a newspaper circulating in their area.

(4) The notice is to state the general effect of Schedule 2, as modified for the purposes of this section.

(5) For the purposes of this section, Schedule 2 is modified as follows—

(a) in paragraph 1, sub-paragraphs (b)(ii) (and the word “or” immediately preceding it) and (c) are omitted;

(b) for paragraph 2 substitute—

“2 In this Schedule, “adult entertainment venue” has the same meaning as in section 45A.”;

(c) in paragraph 9—

(i) after sub-paragraph (5)(c) insert—

“(ca) where it is intended to sell alcohol in the adult entertainment venue, an application for the grant, renewal or transfer of a premises licence under Part 3 of the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 (asp 16) relating to that venue has been refused;”;

(ii) after sub-paragraph (6) insert—

“(6A) A local authority may refuse an application for the grant or renewal of a licence despite the fact that a premises licence under Part 3 of the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 (asp 16) is in effect in relation to the adult entertainment venue.”;

(d) in paragraph 25, for “section 45” in each place where those words occur, substitute “section 45A”;

(e) for “sex shop”, in each place where those words occur, substitute “adult entertainment venue”.

(6) In this section, “adult entertainment venue” means any premises, vehicle, vessel or stall used for a business which consists to a significant degree of providing relevant entertainment before a live audience; and, for the purposes of that definition—

“audience” includes an audience of one;

“display of nudity” means—

(a) in the case of a woman, exposure of her breasts, nipples, pubic area, genitals or anus;

(b) in the case of a man, exposure of his pubic area, genitals or anus;

“relevant entertainment” means—
(a) any live performance; or
(b) any live display of nudity,
which is of such a nature that, ignoring financial gain, it must reasonably be assumed to be provided solely or principally for the purpose of sexually stimulating any member of the audience (whether by verbal or other means).”.

Section 128

Kenny MacAskill

173 In section 128, page 129, line 25, at end insert—
( ) in paragraph 2(3)(b), after “application” insert “(other than the date and place of birth of any person)”,
( ) in paragraph 2(8)(a), after “application” insert “(other than the date and place of birth of any person)”.

Section 129

Kenny MacAskill

174 Leave out section 129

After section 130

Bill Aitken

460 After section 130, insert—

<Premises licence applications: crime prevention objective
In section 23(5) of the 2005 Act (grounds for refusal of premises licence application), after paragraph (b), insert—
“(ba) that the appropriate chief constable has made a recommendation under section 21(5) that the application be refused,”.

After section 131

Kenny MacAskill

175 After section 131, insert—

<Reviews of premises licences: notification of determinations
(1) The 2005 Act is amended as follows.
(2) After section 39 (Licensing Board’s powers on review), insert—
“39A Notification of determinations
(1) Where a Licensing Board, at a review hearing—
(a) decides to take one of the steps mentioned in section 39(2), or
(b) decides not to take one of those steps,
the Board must give notice of the decision to each of the persons mentioned in subsection (2).

(2) The persons referred to in subsection (1) are—
(a) the holder of the premises licence, and
(b) where the decision is taken in connection with a premises licence review application, the applicant.

(3) Where subsection (1)(a) applies, the holder of the premises licence may, by notice to the clerk of the Board, require the Board to give a statement of reasons for the decision.

(4) Where—
(a) subsection (1)(a) or (b) applies, and
(b) the decision is taken in connection with a premises licence review application,
the applicant may, by notice to the clerk of the Board, require the Board to give a statement of reasons for the decision.

(5) Where the clerk of a Board receives a notice under subsection (3) or (4), the Board must issue a statement of the reasons for the decision to—
(a) the person giving the notice, and
(b) any other person to whom the Board gave notice under subsection (1).

(6) A statement of reasons under subsection (5) must be issued—
(a) by such time, and
(b) in such form and manner,
as may be prescribed.”.

After section 132

Kenny MacAskill

176 After section 132, insert—

Premises licence applications: food hygiene certificates

(1) Section 50 of the 2005 Act (certificates as to planning, building standards and food hygiene) is amended as follows.

(2) In subsection (7), for the words from “the requirements” to the end substitute “such requirements as the Scottish Ministers may, by order, specify.”.

(3) After subsection (7), insert—
“(7A) An order under subsection (7) may specify requirements by reference to provision contained in another enactment.”.

(4) In subsection (8)(c), for “the 1990 Act” substitute “section 5 of the Food Safety Act 1990 (c.16)”.

After section 132
George Foulkes

After section 132, insert—

Premises licence applications: disability compliance statements

In section 20 of the 2005 Act (application for premises licence), after subsection (4)(f), insert—

“(fa) a statement of compliance with Part 3 of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995, including information as to where reasonable adjustments have been or will be made to remove barriers to access for disabled people.”.

Robert Brown

After section 132, insert—

Provisional premises licences

(1) Section 45 (provisional premises licence) of the 2005 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In subsection (6), for “2 years” substitute “5 years”.

(3) In subsection (8), paragraph (b) and the word “and” immediately preceding it are repealed.

(4) In subsection (10), for paragraphs (a) and (b) substitute—

“(a) for subsection (2) there were substituted—

“(2) An application under subsection (1) must be accompanied by—

(a) a plan sufficient to identify the site of the subject premises and give a general indication of their size,

(b) a document giving a general indication of—

(i) the anticipated capacity of the premises,

(ii) the hours during which it is proposed to serve alcohol on the premises,

(iii) the extent to which it is proposed to allow children or young persons entry to the premises, and

(c) the certificate required by section 50(2).”, and

(b) subsections (4) and (5) were omitted.”.

(5) After subsection (10) insert—

“(10A) Sections 21 to 32 have effect in relation to any provisional premises licence application and to any provisional premises licence as if references to—

(a) the operating plan were read as references to the document required under section 20(2)(b) (as substituted by subsection (10)(a)), and

(b) the layout plan were read as references to the plan required under section 20(2)(a) (as so substituted).”.

Bill Aitken

After section 132, insert—
Premises licence: minor variations

(1) Section 29(6) of the 2005 Act (definition of minor variations to premises licence) is amended as follows.

(2) In paragraph (a), insert at the end “or if the variation relates only to parts of the premises to which the public does not have access”.

(3) After paragraph (c) insert—

“(ca) any reduction in the capacity of the premises,

(cb) any change in the name by which the business carried on in the premises is to be known or under which it trades,

(cc) any variation of the layout plan or operating plan required by virtue of any enactment relating to planning, building control, food safety or fire safety,”.

Robert Brown

Premises licence: transfer on application of person other than licence holder

(1) Section 34 (transfer on application of person other than licence holder) of the 2005 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In subsection (3)—

(a) the word “and” immediately preceding paragraph (d) is repealed, and

(b) after that paragraph insert “, and

“(e) for any other reason, the business that was (prior to the event in question) carried on in the licensed premises to which the licence relates ceases to be carried on in those premises.”.

(3) In subsection (4), insert at the beginning “Subject to subsection (4A),”.

(4) After that subsection insert—

“(4A) In the case of an application made following the event specified in subsection (3)(e)—

(a) subsection (8) of section 33 applies as if, after the words “the Board must” there were inserted “, if satisfied in all the circumstances that it is reasonable to do so,”, and

(b) subsection (10)(b) of that section applies as if, after the words “if not so satisfied,” there were inserted “but otherwise satisfied that in all the circumstances it is reasonable to do so.”.

After section 133

Bill Aitken

Consumption of alcohol on licensed premises outwith licensed hours

In section 63(2) of the 2005 Act (exceptions to offence of allowing sale, consumption etc. of alcohol outwith licensed hours), after paragraph (f) insert—
“(g) allow alcohol to be consumed on licensed premises at any time within 45 minutes of the end of any period of licensed hours by—

(i) the premises licence holder,

(ii) the premises manager, or

(iii) any person aged 18 or over who, at the end of that period of licensed hours, was working on the premises.”.

Section 134

Kenny MacAskill

539 In section 134, page 134, line 17, leave out from <after> to end of line 22 and insert <in sub-paragraph (4), after “Board” in the second place where it appears insert “or to a member of staff provided under paragraph 8(1)(b)”>.

After section 134

Kenny MacAskill

449 After section 134, insert—

<Extended hours applications: notification period

(1) Section 69 of the 2005 Act (notification of extended hours application) is amended as follows.

(2) After subsection (3), add—

“(4) Subsections (5) and (6) apply where the Licensing Board is satisfied that the application requires to be dealt with quickly.

(5) Subsections (2) and (3) have effect in relation to the application as if the references to the period of 10 days were references to such shorter period of not less than 24 hours as the Board may determine.

(6) Subsection (3) has effect in relation to the application as if for the word “must” there were substituted “may”.>.

Section 136

Kenny MacAskill

177 In section 136, page 135, line 3, at end insert—

<“(ba) the notice does not include a recommendation under section 73(4),>.

Kenny MacAskill

178 In section 136, page 135, leave out lines 22 to 27 and insert—

<(a) hold a hearing for the purposes of considering and determining the application, and

(b) after having regard to the circumstances in which the personal licence previously held expired or, as the case may be, was surrendered—>
(i) refuse the application, or
(ii) grant the application.”.>

After section 137

Kenny MacAskill

After section 137, insert—

<Appeals
In section 131(2) of the 2005 Act (appeals), the words “by way of stated case, at the instance of the appellant,” are repealed.>

Schedule 4

Kenny MacAskill

In schedule 4, page 149, line 11, leave out <22(2) or>

Kenny MacAskill

In schedule 4, page 150, leave out lines 18 to 21

Section 140

Kenny MacAskill

Leave out section 140

Section 142

Kenny MacAskill

Leave out section 142

Section 143

Kenny MacAskill

In section 143, page 138, line 32, at end insert—

<( ) an order under section (Mutual recognition of judgments and probation decisions)(1),>

Bill Aitken

In section 143, page 138, line 32, at end insert—

<( ) an order under section (New evidence)(10),>
In section 143, page 138, line 32, at end insert—

<(  ) an order under section (Convictions by courts in other EU member States)(2).>

Kenny MacAskill

In section 143, page 138, line 32, at end insert—

<(  ) an order under section (European evidence warrants)(1).>

Kenny MacAskill

In section 143, page 138, leave out line 33

Kenny MacAskill

In section 143, page 138, line 33, at end insert—

<(  ) an order under section 146(1) containing provisions which modify any enactment (including this Act), or>

Kenny MacAskill

In section 143, page 138, line 34, leave out <146(1) or>

Robert Brown

In section 143, page 138, line 35, at end insert <or

(  ) an order under section 148(1) bringing into force section 17(1), (2) or (3),>

Robert Brown

In section 143, page 138, line 35, at end insert <or

(  ) an order under section 148(1) bringing into force section 38(1), (2), (3) or (4),>

Schedule 5

In schedule 5, page 151, line 35, at end insert—

<The Libel Act 1792 (c.60)

The Libel Act 1792 is repealed.
The Criminal Libel Act 1819 (c.8)
The Criminal Libel Act 1819 is repealed.
The Defamation Act 1952 (c.66)

In the Defamation Act 1952, section 17(2) is repealed.>
Kenny MacAskill

451  In schedule 5, page 152, line 10, at end insert—

<The Law Officers Act 1944 (c.25)

In section 2(3) of the Law Officers Act 1944 (Lord Advocate and Solicitor General for Scotland), for the words from “three” to the end substitute “287 of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.46)”.

Kenny MacAskill

452  In schedule 5, page 152, line 12, leave out from <In> to <1974> and insert—

<(  ) The Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974 is amended as follows.

(  ) In section 1>

Kenny MacAskill

453  In schedule 5, page 152, line 15, at end insert—

<(  ) In section 6(6)(bb) (convictions in service disciplinary proceedings), for “the Schedule” substitute “Schedule 1”.

(  ) The Schedule (service disciplinary proceedings) is renumbered as Schedule 1.>

Kenny MacAskill

190  In schedule 5, page 152, line 24, at end insert—

<The Incest and Related Offences (Scotland) Act 1986 (c.36)

The Incest and Related Offences (Scotland) Act 1986 is repealed.>

Kenny MacAskill

191  In schedule 5, page 153, line 3, after <89> insert <, 111>

Kenny MacAskill

192  In schedule 5, page 153, line 3, at end insert—

<The Trade Union and Labour Relations (Consolidation) Act 1992 (c.52)

In section 243(4)(b) of the Trade Union and Labour Relations (Consolidation) Act 1992 (restriction of offence of conspiracy: Scotland), the words “or seditious” are repealed.>

Kenny MacAskill

193  In schedule 5, page 153, line 12, at end insert—

<The Criminal Procedure (Consequential Provisions) (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.40)

In Schedule 4 to the Criminal Procedure (Consequential Provisions) (Scotland) Act 1995 (minor and consequential amendments), in paragraph 44, sub-paragraph (2) is repealed.>
Kenny MacAskill

386 In schedule 5, page 153, line 35, at end insert—

<In section 11 (certain offences committed outside Scotland)—

(a) in subsection (3), for “proceeded against, indicted” substitute “prosecuted”,
(b) in subsection (4), for “dealt with, indicted” substitute “prosecuted”.

Kenny MacAskill

454 In schedule 5, page 153, line 35, at end insert—

<In section 17A (right of person accused of sexual offence to be told about restriction on conduct of defence: arrest), in subsection (1)—

(a) for paragraphs (za) and (a) substitute—

“(a) that his case at, or for the purposes of, any relevant hearing (within the meaning of section 288C(1A)) in the course of the proceedings may be conducted only by a lawyer,”, and

(b) in paragraph (c), for the words from “preliminary” to “trial” substitute “hearing”.

Kenny MacAskill

512 In schedule 5, page 153, line 35, at end insert—

<In section 18(8)(c) (power to take prints etc. under authority of a warrant unaffected by section), for “prints, impressions” substitute “relevant physical data”.

In section 19(1)(b) (samples etc. taken from person convicted of offence), the words “impression or”, in both places where they occur, are repealed.

Kenny MacAskill

513 In schedule 5, page 154, line 4, at end insert—

<Section 20 (use of prints, samples etc.) is repealed.

Kenny MacAskill

514 In schedule 5, page 154, line 5, at end insert—

<In section 23A (bail and liberation where person already in custody)—

(a) in each of subsections (1) and (4), for “23 or 65(8C)” substitute “23, 65(8C) or 107A(2)(b)”, and

(b) in subsection (3), for “22A(3) or 23(7)” substitute “22A(3), 23(7) or 107A(2)(b)”.

Kenny MacAskill

455 In schedule 5, page 154, line 5, at end insert—

<In section 35 (judicial examination), in subsection (4A)—

(a) for paragraphs (za) and (a) substitute—
“(a) that his case at, or for the purposes of, any relevant hearing (within the meaning of section 288C(1A)) in the course of the proceedings may be conducted only by a lawyer,”, and

(b) in paragraph (c), for the words from “preliminary” to “trial” substitute “hearing”.

Kenny MacAskill

456 In schedule 5, page 154, line 42, at end insert—

<In section 66 (service and lodging of indictment etc.), in subsection (6A)(a)—

(a) for sub-paragraphs (zi) and (i) substitute—

“(i) that his case at, or for the purposes of, any relevant hearing (within the meaning of section 288C(1A)) in the course of the proceedings (including at any commissioner proceedings) may be conducted only by a lawyer,”, and

(b) in sub-paragraph (iii), for the words from “preliminary” to “trial” substitute “hearing”.

In section 71 (first diet)—

(a) in subsection (A1), for the words “his defence at the trial” substitute “the conduct of his case at any relevant hearing in the course of the proceedings”,

(b) in subsection (B1)(c), for the words “before the trial diet” substitute “in relation to any hearing in the course of the proceedings”,

(c) in subsection (1A)(a), for “the trial” substitute “any hearing in the course of the proceedings”,

(d) in subsection (1B)(a), for “the trial” substitute “any hearing in the course of the proceedings”,

(e) in subsection (5A)(b), for the words “his defence at the trial” substitute “the conduct of his case at any relevant hearing in the course of the proceedings”, and

(f) after subsection (7), insert—

“(7A) In subsections (A1) and (5A)(b), “relevant hearing” means—

(a) in relation to proceedings mentioned in paragraph (a) of subsection (B1), any hearing at, or for the purposes of, which a witness is to give evidence,

(b) in relation to proceedings mentioned in paragraph (b) of that subsection, a hearing referred to in section 288E(2A),

(c) in relation to proceedings mentioned in paragraph (c) of that subsection, a hearing in respect of which an order is made under section 288F.”.

Kenny MacAskill

457 In schedule 5, page 155, line 3, at end insert—

<In section 79 (preliminary pleas and preliminary issues), in subsection (2)(b)(ii), after “under section” insert “22ZB(3)(b),”.

88
In section 140 (citation), in subsection (2A)—
(a) for paragraph (a) substitute—
“(a) that his case at, or for the purposes of, any relevant hearing (within the meaning of section 288C(1A)) in the course of the proceedings (including at any commissioner proceedings) may be conducted only by a lawyer,”, and
(b) in paragraph (c), for the words “his defence at the trial” substitute “the conduct of his case at, or for the purposes of, the hearing”.

In section 144 (procedure at first diet), in subsection (3A)—
(a) for paragraph (a) substitute—
“(a) that his case at, or for the purposes of, any relevant hearing (within the meaning of section 288C(1A)) in the course of the proceedings may be conducted only by a lawyer,”, and
(b) in paragraph (c), for the words “his defence at the trial” substitute “the conduct of his case at, or for the purposes of, the hearing”.

In section 146 (plea of not guilty), in subsection (3A)—
(a) for paragraph (a) substitute—
“(a) that his case at, or for the purposes of, any relevant hearing (within the meaning of section 288C(1A)) in the course of the proceedings may be conducted only by a lawyer,”, and
(b) in paragraph (c), for the words “his defence at the trial” substitute “the conduct of his case at, or for the purposes of, the hearing”.

In schedule 5, page 155, line 31, leave out paragraphs 35 to 39.

In schedule 5, page 157, line 8, at end insert—

<The Offensive Weapons Act 1996 (c.26)
In the Offensive Weapons Act 1996, section 5 is repealed.>

In schedule 5, page 157, line 8, at end insert—

<The Defamation Act 1996 (c.31)
In the Defamation Act 1996, section 20(2) is repealed.>

In schedule 5, page 157, line 10, leave out paragraph 44 and insert—

<(1) The Crime and Punishment (Scotland) Act 1997 is amended as follows.
(2) In section 9 (power to specify hospital unit), in subsection (1)(a), for “insane” substitute “found not criminally responsible or unfit for trial”.

(3) In section 13 (increase in sentences available to sheriff and district courts), subsection (2) is repealed.

(4) In section 56 (powers of the court on remand or committal of children and young persons), subsection (3) is repealed.

Kenny MacAskill

196 In schedule 5, page 157, line 28, at end insert—

<The Legal Deposit Libraries Act 2003 (c.28)

Section 10 of the Legal Deposit Libraries Act 2003 (exemption from liability: activities in relation to publications) is amended as follows—

(a) in subsection (1), the words “, or subject to any criminal liability,” are repealed,

(b) in subsection (2)(a), the words “in the case of liability in damages” are repealed,

(c) in subsection (3), the words “, or subject to any criminal liability,” are repealed,

(d) in subsection (4)(a), the words “in the case of liability in damages” are repealed,

(e) in subsection (6)(a), the words “, or subject to any criminal liability,” are repealed, and

(f) in subsection (8), the words “and criminal liability” are repealed.>

Kenny MacAskill

459 In schedule 5, page 157, line 36, at end insert—

<The Criminal Procedure (Amendment) (Scotland) Act 2004 (asp 5)

In the Criminal Procedure (Amendment) (Scotland) Act 2004 the following provisions are repealed—

(a) in section 4 (prohibition on accused conducting case in person in certain cases), subsection (4),

(b) section 17 (bail conditions: remote monitoring of restrictions on movements), and

(c) in the schedule (further modifications of the 1995 Act), paragraph 55.>

Kenny MacAskill

197 In schedule 5, page 158, line 36, at end insert <and

(ii) sub-paragraph (b) is repealed.>

Kenny MacAskill

387 In schedule 5, page 159, line 12, at end insert—

<The Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009 (asp 9)

In section 55(7) of the Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009 (offences committed outside the United Kingdom), for “proceeded against, indicted” substitute “prosecuted”.
Kenny MacAskill
198  In schedule 5, page 159, line 14, leave out <134> and insert <156>

Section 148

Robert Brown
393  In section 148, page 139, line 19, after <sections> insert <17(4) and>
4th Groupings of Amendments for Stage 2

This document provides procedural information which will assist in preparing for and following proceedings on the above Bill. The information provided is as follows:

- the list of groupings (that is, the order in which amendments will be debated). Any procedural points relevant to each group are noted;
- a list of any amendments already debated;
- the text of amendments to be debated on the fourth day of Stage 2 consideration, set out in the order in which they will be debated. THIS LIST DOES NOT REPLACE THE MARSHALLED LIST, WHICH SETS OUT THE AMENDMENTS IN THE ORDER IN WHICH THEY WILL BE DISPOSED OF.

Groupings of amendments

Directing serious organised crime
353, 354, 355, 356

Failure to report serious organised crime
357, 106, 359, 360

Genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes
107, 108

Clarification of existing offence prohibiting the carrying of offensive weapons
109, 11, 515

Extreme pornography – sounds accompanying images
361, 362, 363, 364, 366

Extreme pornography – excluded images
365, 367, 368, 369

Extreme pornography – sex offender notification
517

Voyeurism – additional forms of conduct
110

Sexual offences – defences in relation to offences against older children
111
Penalties for offences of brothel-keeping and living on the earnings of prostitution
370

Engaging in, advertising and facilitating paid-for sexual activities
8, 8A, 8B, 8C, 8D, 461, 9, 9A

People trafficking (and consequential provision)
371, 372, 373, 374, 375, 376, 377, 386, 387

Slavery, servitude and forced or compulsory labour
112, 143

Articles for use in fraud
113

Abolition of offences of sedition and leasing-making
114, 189, 192, 194, 196

Double jeopardy (Scottish Law Commission report)
115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 120A, 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 185

Children – age of criminal responsibility and minimum age of prosecution
379, 126, 127, 389, 549

Notes on amendments in this group
Amendment 379 pre-empts amendments 126 and 127

Offences – liability of partners
128, 129

Witness statements
130, 131

Victims’ representation at Parole Board hearings
403

Convictions in other UK or EU jurisdictions
518, 519, 520, 521, 522, 540

Power of sheriff or JP to grant warrants to police based outside sheriffdom 420

Bail conditions – remote monitoring requirements
132, 197

Prosecution on indictment – Scottish Law Officers
421, 422, 423, 424, 425, 426, 427, 451

Dockets and charges in sex cases
428
Remand and committal of children and young persons
541

Prohibition of personal conduct of case by accused 429, 454, 455, 456, 458, 459

Crown appeals
462, 463, 464, 465, 466, 467, 468, 469, 470, 471, 472, 473, 474, 475, 476, 477, 514

Retention of samples etc. – adults
478, 404, 405, 479, 406, 480, 407, 481, 482, 408, 494, 499, 502, 503, 504, 512, 513

Notes on amendments in this group
Amendment 478 pre-empts amendment 404

Retention of samples etc. – alternatives to prosecution
418, 419

Retention of samples etc. – children referred to children’s hearings
409, 410, 380, 483, 484, 545, 381, 485, 486, 411, 546, 487, 488, 489, 490, 491, 492, 382, 493, 412

Notes on amendments in this group
Amendment 410 pre-empts amendments 380, 483, 484 and 545
Amendment 380 pre-empts amendments 483 and 484
Amendment 411 pre-empts amendments 546, 487, 488, 489, 490, 491, 492 and 382
Amendment 492 pre-empts amendment 382
Amendment 493 pre-empts amendment 412

Use of samples etc.
495, 496, 497, 498, 500, 501, 505, 506, 507, 508, 509, 510

Scottish Criminal Cases Review Commission – grounds for appeal
133, 134, 135

Prior statements by witnesses – abolition of competence test
430

Witness statements – use during trial
383

Child witnesses in proceedings for people trafficking offences
384

Witness anonymity orders
431, 432, 433, 434, 435, 436, 437, 438, 439, 440, 441

European evidence warrants
442, 450
Jurors in criminal trials
443, 415, 416, 511, 417

Data matching for detection of fraud etc.
136, 137

Closure of premises associated with human exploitation etc. (minor corrections etc.)
138, 139, 140, 141, 142, 144, 198

Foreign travel orders – surrender of passports
444, 445, 446

Sex offender notification requirements
145

Risk of sexual harm orders – spent convictions
146

Police and SCDEA – authorisation of surveillance
523, 524, 525, 526, 527, 528

Police and SCDEA – authorisation of interference with property
529, 530, 531, 532, 533, 534, 535, 536

Enhanced criminal record certificates: disclosure of sex offender notification requirements
537, 538

Rehabilitation of offenders – spent alternatives to prosecution
447, 452, 453

Medical services in prisons
448

Assistance for victim support
413

Prosecutor’s duty to disclose information
147, 148, 149, 150, 151, 152, 153, 154, 155, 156, 157, 158, 159, 160, 161, 162, 163, 164, 165, 166

Mental disorder and unfitness for trial
24, 167, 195

Conditions to which licences under the 1982 Act are to be subject 168

Licensing – powers of entry etc. (definition of “authorised civilian employee”) 169
Licensing of metal dealers 385

Licensing of street trading – food hygiene certificates 170

Licensing of market operators 171, 172, 2, 3, 4

Notes on amendments in this group
Amendment 172 pre-empts amendments 2 and 3

Control of lap dancing and other adult entertainment venues 516

Applications for licences 173

Provisions to be considered as part of the Alcohol (Scotland) Bill 174, 182, 186

Premises licence applications 460, 176, 542, 180

Reviews of premises licences – notification of determinations 175

Provisional premises licences 543

Premises licence – minor variations 547

Premises licence – transfer 550

Consumption of alcohol on licensed premises outwith licensed hours 548

Occasional licences 539

Extended hours applications – notification period 449

Personal licence applications 177, 178, 181

Appeals against decisions of licensing board 179
Corruption in public bodies
183

Orders and regulations – circumstances in which affirmative procedure required 187, 188

Incest and related offences
190

Criminal law – revision
191, 193

Breach of undertakings – consequential modification
457

Amendments already debated

Offence of stalking, offence of threatening, alarming or distressing behaviour
With 399 – 402, 402A, 378, 544

Presumption against short periods of imprisonment or detention
With 100 – 392, 393

Mutual recognition of judgments and probation decisions
With 105 – 184

Involvement in serious organised crime
With 344 - 358
Present:

Bill Aitken (Convener) Robert Brown
Bill Butler (Deputy Convener) Angela Constance
Cathie Craigie Nigel Don
James Kelly Stewart Maxwell

Also present: Richard Baker, Margaret Curran, Trish Godman, Rhoda Grant, Johann Lamont and Margo MacDonald.

Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill: The Committee considered the Bill at Stage 2 (Day 4).

The following amendments were disagreed to (by division):

402A (For 4, Against 4, Abstentions 0; amendment disagreed to on casting vote)
8A (For 0, Against 8, Abstentions 0)
8 (For 3, Against 5, Abstentions 0).

The following amendments were moved and, with the agreement of the Committee, withdrawn: 353, 357, 365 and 115.

The following amendments were not moved: 355, 106, 359, 360, 11, 8B, 8C, 8D, 461, 378, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120 (and as a consequence 120A), 121, 122, 123, 124, 125 and 544.

Sections 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 36 and 37 were agreed to without amendment.

Sections 27, 28, 34 and 35 were agreed to as amended.

The Committee ended consideration of the Bill for the day, amendment 544 having been disposed of.
Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill: Stage 2

10:05

The Convener: Item 2 is the fourth day of stage 2 proceedings on the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill. The committee will not proceed beyond the end of part 3 today—indeed, that estimate might be slightly optimistic.

I welcome the Minister for Community Safety, Fergus Ewing, who will be accompanied during the course of the morning by various officials, who will in all probability change places from time to time, as different matters come before the committee.

I also welcome non-committee members. Joining us today are Johann Lamont, Rhoda Grant and Trish Godman. I anticipate that other members might join us as we deal with items of specific interest to them.

Members should have before them their copies of the bill, the fourth marshalled list and the fourth grouping of amendments.

Section 27—Directing serious organised crime

The Convener: Amendment 353, in the name of Robert Brown, is grouped with amendments 354 to 356.

Robert Brown (Glasgow) (LD): The committee will recall that, when we began discussing the series of amendments on serious organised crime, I observed that there was broad agreement about the need to have weapons to tackle the Mr Bigs of serious organised crime but that there was also some anxiety about the scope of some of the offences. I think that I also commented on how difficult and complex the area is.

Section 27(1) says:

“A person commits an offence by directing another person ... to commit a serious offence”.

I might be wrong, but I thought that that was, in effect, the principle behind the offence that relates to someone being art and part of or an accessory to a crime. I am not sure that section 27(1) adds anything to the common law in that regard. The essence seems to be the direction of another person to commit serious organised crime. Amendment 353 is a probing amendment that is designed to allow us to examine whether the phraseology of the section is correct in that respect. Amendment 355 echoes it.

The minister has lodged several slightly different amendments on details of the section. It is an important section, and the question of direction is
It is intended to have effect in Scotland. Given the outside Scotland will be an offence, provided that direction under section 27 that is made either in or govern jurisdiction in the area. Therefore, a direction is an offence triable in a Scottish court. The policy is now that common-law rules will be an offence to tackle all levels of serious organised crime, including those individuals who direct others to commit offences on their behalf. We consider that that provision is unnecessary and that the common-law rules, to which Robert Brown referred, can be relied on.

"Life is made up of sobs, sniffles, and smiles, with sniffles predominating."

He was right.

The matter that Robert Brown comments on was raised extensively by the committee and was considered by us extremely carefully. The Cabinet Secretary for Justice wrote to the committee on 29 January and again on 19 February on the matter. I have reread those letters in order to fully understand the matters that are before us this morning.

In response to the concerns that were raised, we have lodged a number of amendments to clarify the definition of "serious offence" and "material benefit", which the committee agreed to last week during consideration of section 25. Those definitions also apply to section 27. The clearer definitions ensure that the police and prosecution retain the flexibility to use the new offences to tackle all levels of serious organised crime, including those individuals who direct others to commit offences on their behalf. We have lodged two amendments to section 27.

Amendments 354 and 356 make changes to the detail of the provisions on serious organised crime in part 2 of the bill. Amendment 354 will delete section 27(4), which makes provision on the means by which a court can infer the intention of a person who has issued an apparent direction to commit serious organised crime. On reflection, we consider that that provision is unnecessary and that the common-law rules, to which Robert Brown alluded, can be relied on.

Amendment 356 will delete subsection (6), which sets out a rule as to when a direction under section 27 is to be treated as having been done in Scotland for the purpose of determining when a direction is an offence triable in a Scottish court. The policy is now that common-law rules will govern jurisdiction in the area. Therefore, a direction under section 27 that is made either in or outside Scotland will be an offence, provided that it is intended to have effect in Scotland. Given the intention to rely on the common law, subsection (6) is no longer required.

I appreciate that amendments 353 and 355, in the name of Robert Brown, seek to address the committee’s concerns about the breadth of the provision and that the committee specifically raised those concerns in a recommendation in its report to Parliament. We considered those concerns extremely carefully—and, indeed, I personally reviewed all the relevant paperwork. However, the amendments seem to be intended to restrict the directing serious organised crime offence by making it an offence to direct a person to agree to become involved in serious organised crime under section 25(1) rather than to direct a person to commit a specific indictable offence. Viewed in that way, the amendments seem to take the focus of inquiry back a stage, because they would focus the provision on a direction to a person to agree to do something that they reasonably know or suspect will enable or further the commission of a serious organised crime rather than on a direction simply to commit a serious offence within the meaning that is given by section 25. The latter could more easily be established in court. Moreover, the prosecution would be required to provide a direct link between the direction and criminal activity. Amendments 353 and 355 would allow the focus to fall on very early stages of preparation that might be difficult to prove. The proposal would therefore limit the impact of the directing of serious organised crime offence, which is targeted at those who direct others to commit a serious offence. We appreciate that the intention is to ensure that directions to commit offences that are not truly connected to organised crime should not be treated as such, but that concern is more appropriately addressed in this context by the proper exercise of police and prosecutorial discretion.

We introduced the new offence at the request of the serious organised crime task force, which includes police and Crown representation, because of the difficulty under the current law of prosecuting those who direct organised crime but do not become involved in it on a day-to-day basis. Officials have discussed Mr Brown’s amendments with the Crown Office, which considers that their effect would be to make the offence more difficult to understand and, in effect, unenforceable, thereby allowing those who direct others to commit offences on their behalf to avoid prosecution. Agreeing to the amendments would, in effect, render the offence unenforceable and unworkable.

For those reasons, I respectfully invite Robert Brown to withdraw amendment 353 and not to move amendment 355.
The Convener: In his preamble, Robert Brown properly and correctly underlined the issues that I think all committee members had with some of the original wording. His lodging of amendments 353 and 355 so that we could obtain clarification has been extremely useful. I think that the Government has gone a considerable way down the road of providing reassurance.

Robert Brown: I said that amendment 353 is a probing amendment. I remain not entirely clear about what section 27(1)(a) adds to the common law, but the minister rightly said that it is clearer than my amendment. I accept that and will not press amendment 353, but I have on-going reservations about whether anything is added to the common law. The provision seems to me to be a statutory codification of the common law rather than something new, but perhaps we can continue to discuss that at a later point. Against that background, with the minister's assurances and my desire not to foul up the bill, I am happy not to press amendment 353.

10:15
Amendment 353, by agreement, withdrawn.
Amendment 354 moved—[Fergus Ewing]—and agreed to.
Amendment 355 not moved.
Amendment 356 moved—[Fergus Ewing]—and agreed to.
Section 27, as amended, agreed to.

Section 28—Failure to report serious organised crime

The Convener: Amendment 357, in the name of Robert Brown, is grouped with amendments 106, 359 and 360.

Robert Brown: Section 28 is, I think, the section that has given the committee the most concern. It is the most difficult one because it goes a degree further, so it is important that we make it as clear as possible. Although we understand and support the motivation of dealing with serious organised crime, the net needs to be cast in a targeted way and not too widely.

Amendment 357 would provide that the "knowledge or suspicion" of serious organised crime must be based on "good reason". The law must have something a bit more solid than surmise before it can hold someone criminally liable, particularly for such a serious matter. The amendment is an attempt to bring a small element of definition into the provision.

I support amendment 106, in the name of the convener, which would target the senior people who profit by a connection with serious criminals, rather than the junior clerk or post boy. The convener will no doubt elaborate on that well-made point.

Amendment 359, in my name, deals with the anomaly that a police officer might not be the obvious person to make a report to. It might be a customs officer, a social security official or somebody of that sort. Surely it could not be right if someone who had properly reported an issue was still criminally liable because he had reported it to the wrong person.

I move amendment 357.

The Convener: The thinking behind the four amendments in the group is to avoid a comparatively junior person, for example, in a solicitor's or estate agent's office, being caught up in matters when their knowledge of what was going on was peripheral. Amendment 106 in my name seeks to avoid the situation in which a comparatively junior member of staff is liable for prosecution. A cashier in an office might be asked to bank cheques. He or she will do that fairly mechanically—they will simply fill in a bank pay-in slip, take the cheques to the bank and deposit them. Another example is an employee who has to pay electricity bills. Although they might consider that the electricity bill for a particular residence seems fairly high, they might not know that the house has been let out and is being used as a cannabis farm, if that is the case.

I am a little concerned that the wording of section 28 would enable the Crown Office to prefer charges against such individuals, which surely cannot be the legislative intent. Clearly, we are after the people who are euphemistically described as the Mr Bigs of the serious and organised crime world and we are not seeking to swallow up those who are somewhat further down the food chain.

Amendment 357, in the name of Robert Brown, attempts to go down the self-same route. He uses the phrase "with good reason", but there might be difficulties with the interpretation of that term. I am interested in what the minister has to say on that. Robert Brown's other amendments in the group seek to make it clear that the offences are indictable, which might have some merit.

Fergus Ewing: I fully understand the intention behind Robert Brown's three amendments and the convener's amendment 106. However, for the following reasons, we do not think that they are appropriate, necessary or helpful.

Amendment 357 would require the prosecution to prove not only that a person had a suspicion about serious organised crime, but that they had good reason for holding that suspicion. We do not think that the amendment is necessary, as sufficient safeguards are already in place. The prosecution must prove that a person who failed to report serious organised crime actually had the relevant knowledge or suspicion. It is not clear what purpose would be served, the existence of a suspicion having been proved, by having to prove in addition that the person had good reason to hold that suspicion.

We are aware of the reasons behind amendment 106, which seems to be intended to protect junior members of staff. It provides that a person is not to be under a duty to report in cases where, by reason of their inexperience or lack of seniority, it would not be reasonable to assume that they should have been aware of an offence having been committed.

I respectfully request that the committee resist amendment 106, first for a technical reason. The amendment seems to proceed on the basis of a misunderstanding of when the duty to report under section 28 applies. It does not apply where a person is assumed to have knowledge or suspicion of serious organised crime. Rather, the Crown must show that a person has actual knowledge or an actual suspicion—the Crown must prove that as a matter of fact. That is a significant safeguard, and it prevents the duty from applying to, for example, a very inexperienced member of an organisation who receives information that might have led a senior employee to suspect serious organised crime but did not lead that inexperienced junior employee to suspect serious organised crime. Viewed in that way, amendment 106 seems unnecessary, as the issue that it is intended to address does not exist.

Perhaps more important, there might also be an internal inconsistency in the bill if amendment 106 is accepted. At the moment, a person will be under a duty to report under section 28 when they are shown to have knowledge or a suspicion as to the commission of an offence as mentioned in section 28(1). As we have mentioned, that must be proved as a matter of fact. Where that is proved, what are we to make of a provision that says that, in spite of clear evidence of an accused's knowledge that an offence was committed, the duty does not apply at all, because he or she was insufficiently senior or experienced to be aware of the commission of an offence? That seems an illogical conclusion.

A more substantial—perhaps the most important—argument is that the nature of amendment 106 is problematic. We know that serious organised crime is very flexible, and it is not unknown for serious criminal networks to attempt to place members of those networks in businesses or organisations that undertake activity that will assist their aims. That may well include people in lower-level grades sometimes. Therefore, we do not believe that there should be a blanket ban protecting members of staff. That would create a significant loophole, which would inevitably be exploited by serious crime groups.

However, we recognise the committee's concerns and we wish to make it clear that we are not intending to capture people who have innocently had their suspicions raised and have not made any personal benefit from choosing not to report such activity.

Members will recall that section 28(2) specifies that, in other cases, namely where there is family involvement, there must be a “material benefit”. Perhaps the issues do not arise in connection with those cases in the same way. The offence is intended to capture those people who either happily facilitate serious organised crime or are wilfully blind to the consequences of their actions such that they continue to facilitate such criminality.

In addition to the safeguard that we have already mentioned, section 28(4) sets out a defence of reasonable excuse for failing to report, which should provide further comfort to all members of staff at whatever level in the organisation who come across information without realising that it is linked to serious organised crime.

Furthermore, the Solicitor General for Scotland has made it clear that prosecutorial guidance will be issued to ensure that the offence is targeted at and used proportionately against those in a position of authority or who have used their expertise in relation to the supply of goods and services and who have benefited from their connection with serious organised crime. An additional safeguard is that any such prosecution under this offence will proceed only with Crown counsel's consent. I hope that those safeguards, which have been carefully conceived and set out, provide the committee with some assurance.

Amendments 359 and 360 seek to allow a person to discharge his or her duty to report under section 28 by reporting to a person holding a public office specified by the Scottish ministers. I was going to say that it is not clear which holders of public office Robert Brown envisages being covered by these amendments, but he has helpfully set them out in his remarks. I am advised that matters reported to customs officials, whom Mr Brown mentioned, would then be reported to the police either by the official or by the person who originally brought the matter to the official's attention. However, ultimately, only a constable is able to ensure that a proper investigation takes place following the receipt of a report and that appropriate reports are sent to the procurator fiscal. Although there is no provision for what a public official would be required to do on receiving a report, they would presumably be expected in turn to report the suspicions of another to a constable. I fully understand Mr Brown’s point and believe that his remarks have been helpful but, with respect, the proposal seems to add an unnecessary layer of further reporting and bureaucracy.

I hope that that clarification assuresses committee members. For all those reasons, we suggest that the amendments in this group be resisted.

Robert Brown: I have listened carefully to the minister’s response, some of which I found persuasive and some of which—I must confess—I did not. I was particularly unimpressed by the suggestion that the offence is targeted at people who facilitate or are wilfully blind to the existence of serious organised crime, because I do not think that that is what section 28 is saying. Indeed, that is what I find difficult about it. The crime is defined extremely widely and applies to all sorts of circumstances that go way beyond the minister’s statement of what the Government is purportedly trying to get at.

The point about having to prove whether people had good reason to hold suspicions is valid. Should a junior member of an organisation, say, who has a fanciful notion about something but who nonetheless can be said to have a suspicion be charged with a serious criminal offence in that respect? I have doubts about that. I accept that there might be an issue as to whether the phrase “with good reason” has been properly defined, but I ask the Government to examine the issue between now and stage 3. Indeed, if I get such an undertaking, I will be happy to seek leave to withdraw amendment 357.

I am not persuaded by the distinction that was drawn between assumed and actual knowledge. After all, we are dealing with what can be proved against people, which is based on the inferences that can be drawn from particular factual situations. Indeed, that makes any apparent difference between assumed and actual knowledge more of a tautological dispute.

I am not sure about the convener’s view, but I see the minister’s point about the application of the provision to junior officials. However, we are still left with the difficulty that relatively junior officials who are not the prime movers or shakers in these crimes or the plants of the Mr Bigs can still be caught by section 28. That concerns me somewhat.

10:30

The defence, if you like, that the Government will arrange for prosecutorial guidance from the Crown Office and that prosecution will be undertaken only with the permission and agreement of Crown counsel admits that a problem exists, because such matters should not be the subject of prosecutorial guidance—we should get the legislation right.

On the question of reporting to someone other than a constable, it is a fact, which we should overcome, that the bill says that it is an offence not to make a disclosure to a constable but to make a disclosure to someone else. It might be fanciful of me to say that somebody might prosecute in that situation—perhaps that would not happen—but the phraseology should be right. The provisions are widely worded.

Given the difficulties, I do not propose to press amendment 357. I would appreciate the minister’s assurance of further discussion before stage 3, because we are not quite there yet.

Fergus Ewing: I thank Robert Brown for his detailed work. It is plain that he has made many points, as is his wont. We will carefully consider the Official Report of his remarks and any further representations that he would like to make. I undertake that we will write to the committee as soon as we reasonably can and in any event no later than stage 3 with our response to his arguments, particularly about the use of the word “constable”.

We will look at the Official Report and consider the remarks by Robert Brown and any other members who wish to contribute. I hope that that is helpful.

The Convener: That is a constructive way forward. Like Robert Brown, I have received some reassurance on my amendment. I am not yet totally convinced but, on the understanding that the matter will be considered again before stage 3, I will not take matters further today and I will not move amendment 106.

Amendment 357, by agreement, withdrawn. Amendment 106 not moved.

Amendment 358 moved—[Fergus Ewing]—and agreed to.

Amendments 359 and 360 not moved.

Section 28, as amended, agreed to.

After section 28

The Convener: Amendment 107, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is grouped with amendment 108.

Fergus Ewing: Amendments 107 and 108 provide for amendments to the International Criminal Court (Scotland) Act 2001 in respect of the offences of genocide, crimes against humanity and war crimes. The amendments match changes that the Coroners and Justice Act 2009 made to the International Criminal Court Act 2001 for England and Wales and Northern Ireland.
Such serious crimes are best dealt with in the country where they took place, which is where the evidence is most easily accessible and where witnesses are easier to contact. That is the best solution, because witnesses and survivors can see justice being done.

Failing that, such crimes should be dealt with by international courts or tribunals, where they exist. However, those options might not be available in some circumstances. We have therefore decided to strengthen the relevant domestic law in the same way as the United Kingdom Parliament and Government have done.

In 2001, the Scottish Parliament decided against making the law retrospective and that there are several pragmatic reasons for not doing so. However, it is unacceptable that we can have alleged genocide and war crimes suspects resident in the UK who cannot be extradited to stand trial and who we ourselves cannot deal with. That is particularly the case because this area of offending is recognised internationally as one in which countries can take wide jurisdiction and any justice gap is intolerable.

The catalyst for the amendments made at Westminster was undoubtedly the release of the four Rwandan genocide suspects last year. Such a situation has not arisen in Scotland, but it is perhaps clearer than it was in 2001 that Scotland could be a place for those suspected of such serious offences to hide. We need to address that.

Amendment 108 will provide that, as far as is permissible under the legal principles applicable to retrospection, we should cover the categories of crime of genocide, war crimes and crimes against humanity from 1 January 1991. That is the date from which the International Criminal Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia had jurisdiction to try offences under the tribunal’s statute, which was adopted by the United Nations Security Council.

We propose no change to the categories of people covered by the legislation, which should remain UK nationals and residents, including those who commit crimes and subsequently become resident. However, amendment 107 seeks to provide more certainty as to who may or may not be considered to be a UK resident.

Proposed new section 8A of the International Criminal Court (Scotland) Act 2001 will make additional provision in respect of UK residents in two ways. First, proposed new section 8A(2) lists a number of categories of person who are to be treated as being resident in the UK for the specific purposes of the 2001 act to the extent that that would not otherwise be the case. The specific categories are listed in proposed new sections 8A(2)(a) to 8A(2)(j). Secondly, proposed new section 8A(3) provides a non-exhaustive list of considerations that a court must take into account in determining whether a person is resident in the UK.

I move amendment 107.

Bill Butler (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab): I do not know the answer to this question; I seek the minister’s guidance. Obviously, I support the general thrust of both amendment 107 and amendment 108. I probably have this wrong, but I might as well ask about proposed new section 9B of the 2001 act, which is entitled “Provision supplemental to section 9A: modification of penalties”. Will proposed new section 9B(2) of the 2001 act mean that there is a reduction in penalty from 30 years to 14 years? If so, what is the rationale for that? I hope that I have simply got that wrong. I would be grateful if the minister could clarify that for the record.

The Convener: As no one else wishes to contribute, I merely comment that there is merit in the amendments. I invite the minister to wind up and to answer Bill Butler’s question.

Fergus Ewing: I think that the answer to Mr Butler’s main question is no. I will double-check afterwards that I have fully understood that that is the case, but that is the advice that I have been given.

I commend amendments 107 and 108 to the committee.

Amendment 107 agreed to.

Amendment 108 moved—[Fergus Ewing]—and agreed to.

Sections 29 to 31 agreed to.

After section 31

The Convener: Amendment 109, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is grouped with amendments 11 and 515.

Fergus Ewing: Amendment 109 will correct a problem that exists in the provisions of the Criminal Law (Consolidation) (Scotland) Act 1995 that deal with the possession of knives and offensive weapons in public places. We have become aware of cases in which people have escaped prosecution for carrying weapons in the common parts of shared dwellings, such as the stair of a tenement block, because the courts have not found the location to be a “public place”. The previous Administration recognised the lacuna in relation to prisons and took steps to resolve it in the Custodial Sentences and Weapons (Scotland) Act 2007 by inserting new section 49C into the 1995 act to deal with weapons in prisons.

Amendment 109 deals with these problems by defining a public place as any place other than domestic premises, school premises or prisons. The common areas of communal buildings are expressly included in the definition of a public place. Effectively, this turns the existing definition on its head—instead of saying what is a public place, it provides that everywhere is a public place, subject to a number of limited exceptions.

Amendment 109 also creates uniform defences to the various offences under the 1995 act that deal with knives and offensive weapons. It makes sense to have consistent defences to charges for possession of a knife or offensive weapon. Amendment 109 provides that persons charged with possession of a knife or offensive weapon under sections 47, 49, 49A or 49C of the 1995 act will have a defence if they are able to show that they have a “reasonable excuse” or “lawful authority” for being in possession of the knife or offensive weapon. Further, to achieve consistency, amendment 109 harmonises the penalties for the obstruction and concealment offences detailed in sections 48 and 50 of the 1995 act. It will increase the maximum penalty under section 50(4) of the 1995 act to a level 4 fine in order to align that provision with the similar offence under section 48(2). Amendment 515 is consequential on amendment 109.

We support the principle behind amendment 11 of ensuring that the prohibitions on carrying knives and offensive weapons that already apply to public places apply to workplaces, too. We are aware of the specific case involving a weapon being brought into a call centre that has possibly prompted Johann Lamont’s amendment. However, our amendment 109 will achieve the same effect as amendment 11 and go further, by redefining public places as anywhere other than domestic premises and those school premises and certain prisons for which bespoke offences already exist. We therefore believe that amendment 11 is superseded by amendment 109, and we respectfully invite Johann Lamont not to move amendment 11.

I move amendment 109.

Johann Lamont (Glasgow Pollok) (Lab): I am very grateful for the assistance that the clerks gave me in drafting an amendment both to identify an issue and to try to find a solution to it. I will come on to the minister’s comments in a moment, but I think that it will be helpful if first I explain the purpose of amendment 11.

The legislative process has an important role in reflecting people’s experiences and trying to close loopholes or address the apparent perpetration of injustice. That is the intention behind amendment 11. A particular experience has been brought to my attention. It was reported that an offensive weapon was brought to a workplace via the mail—it was not carried into the workplace but delivered to it, which might have been caught under other legislation. Indeed, as the minister indicated, the person who had the offensive weapon could not be charged, because the workplace was not defined as a public place. When I reflected on that, I noted the fact that, for the purposes of the smoking ban, we regarded workplaces as public places, so we perhaps had already gone some way along that route.

The aim of amendment 11 is to close that loophole by inserting a section into the Criminal Law (Consolidation) (Scotland) Act 1995 that reflects the models in section 49 of that act, which makes it an offence to carry a knife in a public place, and section 49A, which makes it an offence to carry a knife on school premises. The model for the provision in respect of workplace premises was found in the Fire (Scotland) Act 2005—but not by me, I hasten to add.

I ask that the minister confirm the position in his summing up. I welcome what he said, but perhaps he understands that my anxiety about the matter arises from not being able to understand the technicalities when I read amendment 109. I seek an assurance that amendment 109 will address the circumstances that I described. If there is a need to look again at what the Scottish Government has proposed, we could have dialogue on that before stage 3. However, the purpose of amendment 11 is to close a loophole. If I have confidence that that loophole has been closed, I am more than happy not to move amendment 11.

10:45

James Kelly (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab): I support amendment 109 and consequential amendment 515, which are sensible because they widen the definition of a public place and ensure that the carrying of knives in such places will be legislated against appropriately. The amendments try to achieve a sensible objective.

I also support amendment 11. Again, no one expects to go into their workplace and be threatened by an offensive weapon such as a knife. Amendment 11 seeks to close the loophole through which potential offenders in such circumstances can escape the appropriate consequences under the law.

Like Johann Lamont, I seek clarification from the minister on the purpose-and-effect notes that the Government has provided on amendment 11. They state:

“This new offence would be in addition to the existing offences of possessing a knife in a public place”.

I assume that that was drafted under the law as it stands, not as it will be if amendment 109 is agreed to. I am not casting doubt on what the
Robert Brown: I also support amendment 109, which, as the minister says, is intended to close definite loopholes in the existing legislation.

I have a couple of queries. I might have missed this, but I do not think that the minister dealt with proposed new section 47(1A) of the Criminal Law (Consolidation) (Scotland) Act 1995, which would be inserted by subsection (2) of amendment 109, on the "defence for a person ... to show that the person had a reasonable excuse or lawful authority".

Indeed, I do not think that he addressed the definition of offensive weapon in proposed new section 47(4) of the 1995 act, which refers to:

"any article ... made or adapted for use".

It might be that I do not understand the links between the statutes, but my view is that that is pretty much what the existing law says. Will the minister clarify whether any changes are intended in that regard or, if not, what the purpose is of those provisions?

I am also intrigued by Johann Lamont’s amendment 11 and proposed new section 49AA(4) of the Criminal Law (Consolidation) (Scotland) Act 1995, which talks about there being a reasonable defence for carrying a knife

"(a) for use at work ...
(b) for religious reasons, or
(c) as part of any national costume."

In the days when I was a scout, we wore knives for various non-criminal purposes, for the most part. I know that there are issues around Sikh costume, for example, which sometimes has a weapon attached to it, and, of course, around the sgian dubh. The phrase “reasonable excuse”, as it is used in the minister’s amendment 109, might cover all those instances, but I would like the minister to clarify that the Government is satisfied that it does so adequately, and that it covers the use of a knife at work, which in some ways is a much more important issue than the others.

The Convener: As the minister said, amendment 109 is predicated on an appeal court decision that held that the possession of a knife in the common close and landing of a building did not constitute an offence under the existing law. It might be worthy of note that, in that particular case, the controlled entry system of the building was defective, which is why the accused was able to get access. Nevertheless, that judgment has caused concern. Amendment 109 seeks to remedy the situation and is therefore worthy of support.

Johann Lamont’s amendment 11 is perfectly understandable. She stated that she requires some reassurance that the bill, as amended, will cover eventualities such as the one that she brought to us today.

Robert Brown raised his career as a scout, which many of us might regard as an historical curiosity. Nevertheless, he raised an appropriate point. I do not wish to anticipate what the minister is going to say, but surely Robert Brown’s point is covered by the wording in both the bill and existing legislation. Any such charge states that the accused had an offensive weapon in his possession without “lawful authority” or a “reasonable excuse”. I would have thought that a scout or someone in national dress, within the normal and sensible confines of the definition, would have a “reasonable excuse”.

The intention of the law, as it is finalised, should be that everyone, in the privacy of their own home, should be able to have knives and other implements that could be used as weapons but which are not likely to be used as weapons in domestic circumstances. Basically, we have to ensure that knives are not used or carried outwith the home or in a public place. Amendment 109 should remedy the matter, but I would be grateful if Mr Ewing could provide the reassurance asked for by Mr Kelly, Mr Brown and Ms Lamont.

Fergus Ewing: And by yourself, convener. I am in a position to be 100 per cent helpful. Ms Lamont has asked for an absolute undertaking that amendment 109 will provide a comprehensive provision, and I am happy to provide that undertaking to her. The fact that amendment 109 provides that everywhere is a public place, subject to a number of limited exceptions, means that it states a general principle that will apply to and address the problems that have been alluded to.

I thank Ms Lamont for raising with the cabinet secretary the case that she alluded to briefly today—in which the police felt powerless to act, as they held that the workplace was not a public place—because that helped us with the drafting of amendment 109, which will tackle and remove that problem. It will also remove the problem relating to incidents in common stairwells. I am thinking of one incident in which police found two men in a stairwell, one carrying a baseball bat and the other carrying a knife, but the procurator fiscal determined that no substantive crime had been committed and marked the case as no proceedings. I think that the convener alluded to the case of Templeton, in which a sword was found lying at the bottom of a stairwell in a common close and, on appeal, the appeal court found that that was not a public place, which meant that the conviction of the person responsible for the presence of the sword in the stairwell was overturned.

I am happy to provide an absolute assurance to all members who have, quite rightly, raised questions about the issue because of the importance of ensuring that there are no loopholes and that those who are found to be carrying knives and offensive weapons without reasonable excuse or authority are convicted of that serious offence.

Robert Brown raised the issue of knives being carried in connection with the national dress of this country or the dress that is associated with various religions. That issue is already dealt with by separate statutory provisions. The provisions that we are talking about today will not affect the position, and the defence will continue to apply.

The purpose of amendment 109 is to provide uniform wording of the defence provision. Members will have noted that the wording in section 47 of the 1995 act is slightly different from that in section 49 of the same act. Section 47 talks about “lawful authority or reasonable excuse” and section 49 talks about “good reason or lawful authority”.

It was felt that there should be uniform wording, as the same defence applies. That will ensure that there will be no inconsistencies with regard to what is, basically, the same offence. If the offence is the same, the defence should be the same.

I think that that answers all the points. I am happy to address any points that members feel I have inadvertently neglected to deal with. However, if members are happy with what they have heard, I will press amendment 109 and respectfully ask Ms Lamont to not move amendment 11, while thanking her for lodging it.

The Convener: Members look uncharacteristically relaxed, so I think that they feel that they have covered everything.

Amendment 109 agreed to.
Amendment 11 not moved.
Amendment 402 moved—[Rhoda Grant].
Amendment 402A moved—[Robert Brown].

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 402A be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Brown, Robert (Glasgow) (LD)
Butler, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab)

Against
Aitken, Bill (Glasgow) (Con)
Constance, Angela (Livingston) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West of Scotland) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 4, Against 4, Abstentions 1.

The casting vote goes against the amendment.

Amendment 402A disagreed to.
Amendment 402 agreed to.
Sections 32 and 33 agreed to.

Section 34—Extreme pornography

The Convener: Amendment 361, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is grouped with amendments 362 to 364 and 366.

Fergus Ewing: I will be brief. Amendments 361 to 364 and 366 are technical amendments that are intended to clarify the factors that may be taken into consideration in determining whether an image is a pornographic image, whether an image depicts an extreme act and whether an image extracted from a film that is classified by the British Board of Film Classification has been extracted solely or principally for the purpose of sexual arousal. The amendments will make it clear that any sounds that accompany an image are one factor that may be taken into consideration in making such a determination.

I move amendment 361.

Amendment 361 agreed to.

Amendments 362 to 364 moved—[Fergus Ewing]—and agreed to.

The Convener: Amendment 365, in the name of Robert Brown, is grouped with amendments 367 to 369.

Robert Brown: I have previously expressed concern that there is a lacuna in the arrangements for excluding classified works. There is a period of time before a classification certificate is obtained when a video or film is liable to be criminalised. If it eventually gets a certificate, it is obviously not reasonable that its makers should be prosecuted. Obviously, if it does not get a certificate, that is a different story. My amendment 365 would extend the protection back to the point when the application for classification was made, provided that the certificate was subsequently granted. I appreciate that there would still be an in-between situation, but that would exist anyway. At least the amendment would help a little to avoid criminalising people who ought not to be criminalised.
I have no comment on amendments 367 to 369, which seem perfectly reasonable.

I move amendment 365.

Stewart Maxwell (West of Scotland) (SNP): I understand what Robert Brown is trying to do, but I have a small question for him. If we move back the exclusion to the point that he suggests, rather than the point of classification, would that provide a defence for those who make the images that we want to deal with? In effect, while the images were being made and before they achieved classification, there would be a defence in law that said, “You can’t touch me, because I am going to apply for classification.” I am concerned that an unfortunate by-product of the amendment would be that those who make the kind of extreme pornography with which we wish to deal could use the defence of saying that they were going to apply for classification. I know that that is not the intention; I just wonder whether Robert Brown has considered that point.

11:00

The Convener: It might be more useful for Mr Brown to deal with that in his summing up.

Fergus Ewing: We understand that amendment 365 seeks to provide that a work will be excluded from the extreme pornography provisions if it forms all or part of a work in respect of which an application has been received by the British Board of Film Classification for a film certificate. As drafted, the bill provides that a film is excluded from the offence provisions if it forms all or part of a classified work—in other words, if it is a film to which the BBFC has granted a classification certificate.

It is important to understand the purpose of the provision excluding BBFC-certificated works. The BBFC is clear that it would not give a classification certificate to a pornographic film containing depictions of rape, serious sexual violence, bestiality or sexual activity with a corpse. The provision is intended, for the avoidance of doubt, to reassure members of the public, who may not be familiar with the detailed provisions of the offence, that they cannot face prosecution for possessing a BBFC-certified film. As it is up to film makers to ensure that their films do not constitute extreme pornography, there is no need to extend the exemption to films that have not yet received a BBFC certificate.

We are also not sure that amendment 365 as drafted achieves its intended effect. The amendment applies only to a classified work, which is defined in proposed new section 51B(5) of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982, as inserted by section 34 of the bill, as “a video work in respect of which a ... certificate has been issued”.

As the amendment seeks to cover the work until the certificate is issued it cannot logically be a “classified work”, which would mean that someone could be committing an offence by possessing material that did not yet have a certificate until such time as the certificate was issued, at which point it would be decriminalised retrospectively.

Amendments 367 to 369 are technical amendments that seek to clarify how the terms “image” and “extreme pornographic image” are to be construed in these provisions.

I invite Robert Brown to withdraw amendment 365.

Robert Brown: The problem is that there is a difficulty either way. Even if a work ends up as classified, there is a period before it is classified in which it does not enjoy the protection of section 34. I accept that there is a risk of creating the somewhat paradoxical situation in which a work could be illegal at one point but then suddenly become legal once it was classified. Indeed, that is one of the problems that I had when I discussed with the clerks how I might phrase an amendment.

I do not disagree with the Government’s intention to ban the kind of extreme pornography that has been indicated, but we need to be careful that the way in which we are going does not have any unintended consequences. I do not think that amendment 365 will have the effect that Stewart Maxwell has suggested, although there is, as I have said, a paradox here.

Although I am anxious for the Government to examine the provision further and satisfy itself that it does what it ought to do and does not catch things that it ought not to catch, I am not prepared to press amendment 365 against the Government’s wishes.

Amendment 365, by agreement, withdrawn.

Amendments 366 to 369 moved—[Fergus Ewing]—and agreed to.

The Convener: Amendment 517, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is in a group on its own.

Fergus Ewing: I will be brief.

Amendment 517 provides that a person who has been convicted of the offence of possession of extreme pornography, has been sentenced to imprisonment of more than 12 months, and was aged 18 or older at the time of the offence may be made subject to the sex offender notification requirements where the court considers that that is appropriate. Without any specific provision, it would be left for the courts to determine in each individual case whether there was a significant sexual aspect to the offender’s behaviour in committing the offence. Amendment 517 will ensure that the most serious offenders who have been convicted of possessing extreme pornography and may pose a risk to the public can be monitored.

I move amendment 517.

Amendment 517 agreed to.

Section 34, as amended, agreed to.

The Convener: Amendment 110, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is in a group on its own.

Fergus Ewing: Amendment 110 amends the voyeurism offences that are contained in the Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009. Committee members may be aware that, shortly before stage 3 of the Sexual Offences (Scotland) Bill, a Scottish Parliament information centre briefing drew attention to a then unpublished paper by James Chalmers that raised concerns that the voyeurism offences in that bill did not criminalise so-called up-skirt voyeurism—where, for example, a person uses a camera that is hidden in a bag to film up women’s skirts in a public place. James Chalmers noted that a number of instances of such behaviour had been discovered.

Amendment 110 extends the offence of voyeurism so that it is committed where a person records an image of the victim’s genitals or buttocks from beneath their clothing or operates equipment beneath the victim’s clothing with the intention of enabling any person to observe her buttocks or genitals, whether in a public place or not, in circumstances in which they would not otherwise be visible, and does so without that person’s consent. As such, it ensures that so-called up-skirt voyeurism falls within the scope of the new offence. The amendment also makes equivalent changes to the offences concerning voyeurism and children. We are grateful to Mr Chalmers for his work on those matters.

I move amendment 110.

Amendment 110 agreed to.

The Convener: Amendment 111, in the name of Kenny MacAskill, is in a group on its own.

Fergus Ewing: Again, I will be brief.

Amendment 111 is a technical amendment that corrects an omission in the Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009 concerning defences in relation to offences against older children.

I move amendment 111.

Amendment 111 agreed to.

The Convener: Amendment 370, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is in a group on its own.

Fergus Ewing: Amendment 370 raises the maximum penalties for a number of prostitution-related offences to ensure that they represent a more effective deterrent to criminality and give the police better tools to address issues.

Amendment 370 amends the Criminal Law (Consolidation) (Scotland) Act 1995 to increase the maximum penalties for brothel keeping, living on the earnings of prostitution and living on the earnings of male prostitution in sections 11 and 13 of that act. Currently, the maximum penalty for living on the earnings of prostitution of any kind is two years’ imprisonment or a fine of £10,000, and the maximum penalty for brothel keeping is six months’ imprisonment and a fine of £2,500. The Government’s view is that those penalties are out of date and unrealistic, as it is clear that they do not present an effective disincentive to criminality. Therefore, we propose to increase the penalties from their current levels to a maximum penalty of seven years’ imprisonment and an unlimited fine. That will bring the terms of imprisonment into line with the penalties for the equivalent offences in England and Wales, and will provide for a more realistic level of fine to be imposed, especially where it is clear that significant money is being made from those forms of exploitation.

The Government welcomes the recently launched Equality and Human Rights Commission inquiry into trafficking in Scotland and the Equal Opportunities Committee’s inquiry into migration and trafficking. Trafficking for sexual exploitation in Scotland appears to be exclusively for prostitution. We therefore expect that the findings of those inquiries will address not only trafficking but connected issues relating to prostitution. We do not wish to be perceived as prejudging the outcomes of those inquiries by making substantial changes to the law on prostitution, but we consider it appropriate to lodge a simple amendment to complement the bill’s existing provisions on prostitution and human trafficking, and to provide additional practical assistance to the police in tackling those issues.

I move amendment 370.

The Convener: The issues are fairly straightforward, and there are no further contributions.

Amendment 370 agreed to.

The Convener: I welcome to the committee Richard Baker and Margo MacDonald, who are joining us for some of this morning’s business.

Amendment 8, in the name of Trish Godman, is grouped with amendments 8A to 8D, 461, 9 and 9A.
Trish Godman (West Renfrewshire) (Lab): I express my thanks to the clerks.

Proposed new sections 11A to 11D of the Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009, which amendment 8 contains, are linked. They cover all areas, and would make it an offence to buy sex. New section 11A, “Engaging in a paid-for sexual activity”, would include all forms of payment, including payment in kind and presents. I accept that those provisions might have to be sorted at a later date. New section 11B, which proposes a ban on advertising, is clear. Ann Hamilton, a witness who appeared before the committee, pointed out an example from a newspaper. I have one such example with me today, should committee members wish to see it. Proposed new section 11C is on “Facilitating engagement in a paid-for sexual activity”, which refers to sexual activity as described in the Sexual Offences Act 2003. New section 11D provides a tariff following a person’s arrest for said offences. I will return to those provisions in a moment.

Margo MacDonald’s proposed new section 11AA of the 2009 act, which would be inserted by amendment 8A, is on “Causing alarm etc”. I am disappointed that it calls only for an offence of breach of the peace to apply. I believe that the matter is much more serious. That amendment disregards the exploitation, violence and abuse that are a reality for the majority of individuals who sell sex. The proposed measures do not acknowledge the harm of prostitution, and they put no focus on the buyer of sex.

Nigel Don’s proposed new section 11E, “Paying for sexual services of a prostitute subjected to force etc”, would be introduced by his amendment 461, and Margo MacDonald’s proposed new section 11AB, “Profiting from coerced paid-for sexual activities”, would be introduced by her amendment 8B. Both those amendments distinguish between victims of trafficking or people who are under the control of a pimp, and those who are forced to sell sex as a result of circumstances, for instance poverty or drug abuse. They would create a two-tier approach to tackling prostitution, whereby only certain victims would be worthy of the protection of the law.

My amendments challenge the acceptance of prostitution. At the moment, buying sex is viewed as something that men do, to which there is an entitlement and which does not cause harm. We need to discourage the demand that feeds that exploitation. There have been interventions on behalf of prostitutes for a long time, all focused on the women. Demand has remained invisible and without scrutiny. There is now substantial evidence that prostitution causes harm and will continue to do so unless intervention moves to the buyer—in other words, those who demand sex.

I wish to comment about my impressions of the committee meeting of 23 March. It seems that reservations arose because criminalising the buyer is thought to push prostitution underground or indoors, and one witness believed that that would impact adversely on the women’s economic situation. If prostitution goes underground, the services need to respond to that. If the punter can find women indoors, so can the services and so can the police. Ann Hamilton gave you examples of that happening. It might go underground or indoors, but it would not be invisible.

The committee came to a full stop when it came to statistical information. We know that people are trafficked and that people prostitute themselves for all kinds of reasons. The evidence exists. I know it does—I have read it, and it is all sourced.

The view was expressed that women have the right to be prostitutes. Those women are not the focus of the amendments. The Scottish prostitutes education project—SCOT-PEP—supports women who have made that choice. However, we must remember those women of Ipswich and Glasgow who were murdered. Prostitution is a dangerous activity, and services need to be available to any woman who wishes to leave, including those women who believe that they have the right.

The two proposals on raising awareness and banning adverts directly support the principle that the buyer commits an offence. Up until now, the response from the Government has been weak—it has been mostly about education and making people aware of the problem. That has a role to play, but it does not address the fundamental issue of demand for services.

My understanding is that the previous Government’s position was that prostitution is on the spectrum of violence against women. Demand has to be the central focus of intervention, and my amendments address that.

11:15

The revelation to the committee that Scotland’s information base is so limited that it leads to uncertainty about the way forward was appalling. Given the international profile of the issue of trafficked women and prostitution and the activity’s known links to serious crime, such a state of affairs is untenable.

In the discussion last week about amendments 10 and 10A, which were on minimum sentencing for people who are found carrying a knife, members suggested that the fear of being caught is much more effective than the fear of going to prison. As I speak, men are raping trafficked women and men are buying sex from prostitutes. They have no fear—they will never be caught—because that is not an offence. We need to send a strong message that buying sex is not harmless or acceptable. It should be regarded in Scotland as an abuse and an exploitation that will not be tolerated. I argue that we owe it to all women who are victimised by prostitution to do what we can now.

If my amendments are not agreed to, I would be interested to know how the Government intends to move policy forward on violence against women.

I move amendment 8.

Margo MacDonald (Lothians) (Ind): I must say from the outset that the amendments that Trish Godman and I have lodged really have no place in the bill, which was not intended to cover the issue. It is certain that no commensurate consultation has taken place on the proposals, which would represent a major change in our legal system.

If the committee takes the amendments one after the other as they are set out in the marshalled list, and if Trish Godman’s amendments are not supported, I will be happy to withdraw amendment 8A and not to move my other amendments. I lodged my amendments simply because I thought that balance was required in the committee’s scrutiny and not because I thought that my proposals should be inserted into the bill.

I have read the evidence that was given to the committee. The police were represented by Assistant Chief Constable Livingstone, who said that, in his view, no more powers were needed at this stage to deal with prostitution. He felt that the police had a sufficient range of powers in the law as it stands to deal with prostitution. He also said that no national consensus exists and that how prostitution is carried out and how the community views it are local matters. Of course, that has something to do with the geography and history of communities and with how the police have managed the situation.

Deciding on legislation before the basic intelligence has been gathered from the police, apart from anybody else, would be putting the cart before the horse. The police gave evidence that much more intelligence is needed. As Trish Godman said, it is worrying that so little evidence is available about something that people appear to think is very important and worthy of priority law making.

The minister said earlier—I just caught his remarks—that we should not get matters out of sequence and that we should tackle them logically. The current approach to the proposals is not logical.

There is a basic flaw in the argument. I will not debate whether trying to curtail demand for the services of prostitutes would be effective, but it takes two to tango. If we decide—as Trish Godman requests—that all sexual services that are traded must be illegal, the law should treat the seller and the purchaser of sexual services equally.

We have heard reference in this committee to the Swedish approach to things—it was in Ann Hamilton’s evidence. I have here a communication that I received from the Stockholm city police yesterday, which states that they do not register prostitutes, so official statistics are impossible to give. I therefore caution the committee that dangling the Swedish model in front of it as providing some sort of template for this Parliament would be wrong. In Stockholm, an estimate of the number of prostitutes is made by the police officers who work in the area, which is exactly what happens here, so Sweden has no more to teach us than we have to teach it in that regard.

As the committee will know, an attempt was made in Sweden to do what the amendments that we are discussing seek, which is to criminalise the purchase of sex. It is true that prostitutes left the streets in Stockholm, Malmö and so on, but according to the police estimate from Stockholm yesterday there are about 300 prostitutes working on the streets. On a daily basis, around 10 to 30 of them can be found on Stockholm’s streets, which is a bit higher than the number we have working in Edinburgh, for example. It is a lot lower than the number in Glasgow, but figures from Glasgow are very difficult to come by, as we know.

I bring the Swedish example to the committee’s attention simply to point out that there is no panacea if the objective is to eliminate prostitution. We have been told umpteen times by the people who support the Swedish experiment that it worked in Sweden. One of the things that happened in the first year after the legislation was passed was similar to what we discovered in relation to our legislation on kerb crawling—there was a change in behaviour, but things started to drift back to where they had been. I sincerely hope that that does not happen with regard to kerb crawling in Glasgow, because I thought that a fair case was made there.

In Sweden, people worked underground, and the support services were concerned, because they knew that criminality would come in to a much greater extent than previously. However, women are now drifting back to the streets without too much being said about it, because at least the support services can get to them and the police know where they are and can manage the situation to a much greater extent—that was what I suggested to the committee the last time. As well as talking about recategorising the buying and selling of sex as a nuisance crime where it affects a third person, I tried to explain that the balance... was that no one was likely to try to sell sex—and therefore no one was likely to look to buy it—in an area where they knew that a third party would complain about them. A red-light district would therefore be created, which is what enabled the police in Aberdeen and Edinburgh to have much better intelligence on what was happening and at least to hold to a minimum the add-on criminality that attaches to prostitution. I do not think that that has changed, other than that many fewer women work on the streets now—they work indoors.

As I explained to the committee the last time, I hope that the Government decides to reconstitute a committee to investigate indoor prostitution. Most of the women with whom I have contact work not for pimps or managers but for their own sake. They determine how to operate and do so discreetly, so they are not lifted by the police, neighbours do not complain and so on. However, that is still not satisfactory if we believe that there is trafficking. Few women have been shown to have been trafficked into Scotland, but that is not satisfactory. We need much more knowledge about the issue and the police need to be better informed so that they can better inform us before we try to change the law so drastically.

I move amendment 8A.

The Convener: I invite Nigel Don to speak to amendment 461 and the other amendments in the group.

Nigel Don (North East Scotland) (SNP): I agree with Margo MacDonald: I do not think that this is the appropriate legislative place for these amendments, although I understand why Trish Godman has raised these pressing issues. I accept that prostitution is generally an abuse of women and that we should address that, but there is a great deal more to be said about that—mostly to us rather than by us. We need to hold a serious inquiry into this area of the law. I do not know how we would fit that in or what the Government feels it would do about it, but I do not think that we have got to the bottom of the matter yet and we should not just scrape the surface, as I fear that we would do by passing these amendments.

I remind members that my amendment 461 mimics section 14 of the Policing and Crime Act 2009 in England and Wales, which I think is about to be brought into force. It seemed to me that there was value in having similar law, particularly criminal law, north and south of the border and that we should explore that. However, most of the responses that we got to that were simply dismissive, because people preferred Trish Godman’s version. The responses were not in favour of what was suggested; there were significant comments against it. I fall back on the point that we are talking about a strict liability offence, which we should not introduce lightly. We should think about introducing the suggested provisions only if people’s response is, “Of course we should be doing this. It’s long overdue. Everybody agrees.” It is plain that that is not the case. On that basis alone, I will not move amendment 461.

Robert Brown: This has been a useful debate in which valid views have been expressed on all sides of the argument. It is useful that Trish Godman started the debate in this context. However, I believe that it is right to oppose all the amendments in the group.

I have expressed concerns about trafficking in the context of the Commonwealth games and the lack of prosecution in that area. I disagree with Margo MacDonald in one respect: I think that there is good evidence that a significant number of people are trafficked into and across Scotland. Such evidence comes from, among others, the trafficking awareness raising alliance in Glasgow, which supports people who have been trafficked. There is a big difference between the number of people who are supported in that context and the non-existence of prosecutions in this area.

Otherwise, Margo MacDonald’s words of caution were wise. We have to be chary about inserting well-intentioned amendments on such wide issues into bills at stage 2. I am not saying that it cannot be done—the stalking amendments that we passed earlier were narrow enough and there was sufficient consensus on them to make that possible—but prostitution is an activity on which there are conflicting views and practices in different parts of Scotland. As Margo MacDonald said, there is no national consensus on the way forward. Prostitution is also an activity that has been with us for thousands of years. It is right to be sceptical about whether an amendment to the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill in 2010 will suddenly change all that.

There are issues about the phraseology of Trish Godman’s amendment. It would introduce what has been categorised as a strict liability offence, which I think is possibly right, but what is the definition of “sexual activity”? Does it include non-physical activity such as texting? Does it include escort work? Is there an objective or subjective test as to what is involved? What does “paid-for” comprise? Trish Godman indicated that it included payments in kind or in gifts, but in some respect that makes things worse, because how do you distinguish between people’s multiple interactions in on-going short or long-term relationships? Would that have the effect of making prostitution more marginal and more dangerous? There are issues about that, notwithstanding the views that are held at the Glasgow end of things, if you like. Would it handicap police investigations of the murder or rape of people who are involved in this area of activity? On the other hand, it could be a price worth paying if far fewer women resorted to prostitution because demand was stifled by criminalisation, although Margo MacDonald has made the valid point that whatever the early effects of the Swedish model, it does not necessarily produce a long-term change in activity.

We have evidence from the City of Edinburgh Council that there is no consensus on the way forward. We could benefit from a rather more detailed study, either by recalling the task force or by seeking a royal commission-type study. Before I could be satisfied of the need to go in the proposed direction, I would need there to be much greater agreement and underlying justification than we have had in the limited context of today’s stage 2 debate.

11:30

Richard Baker (North East Scotland) (Lab): I will speak briefly in favour of Trish Godman’s amendments. It is right that she has lodged them at this stage. The bill is wide ranging, and a number of issues that were not part of the stage 1 consultation have been brought forward for consideration at stage 2. We will make different decisions on whether those issues should be advanced further, but it is right that Trish Godman has brought forward this important matter for consideration at this point.

The amendments reflect a campaign that has been waged strongly, on the basis of good evidence, by Glasgow City Council. Neither the council nor Trish Godman has described a change in the law as a panacea or a silver bullet. The council has looked at a range of interventions; Trish Godman referred to the SCOT-PEP project and help to provide routes out of prostitution. Nevertheless, a change in the laws on prostitution has been described in the campaign and by Trish Godman as a key measure to deal with the misery and exploitation that, we must remember, exists around prostitution for so many women. Unfortunately, many women are trafficked into Scotland for that purpose.

People have talked about when we should consider the issue. The problem is likely to be even more pressing at the time of the 2014 Commonwealth games. It is clear that 2010 is exactly the kind of time for us to talk about how we can have the best laws to deal with the issue.

The argument for a change in the law has been well made. People have talked about equality in the law. To me, it has always seemed perverse that prostitutes have routinely been prosecuted whereas those who have purchased sex have not; indeed, they have not even been criminalised in the eyes of the law. There are international examples—not just from Sweden but, I believe, from across Scandinavia—that indicate that criminalising the actions of the purchaser has a positive effect in tackling the problem. On that basis, I strongly support Trish Godman’s amendment 8.

Margo MacDonald has lodged her amendments to enable her to take part in the debate. I appreciate the intention but, as has been said, the amendments appear to be covered by existing offences of breach of the peace and public indecency.

Amendment 461, in the name of Nigel Don, does not reflect the change that Trish Godman seeks. As Nigel Don said, it would create a new offence of paying or promising to pay for the sexual services of a coerced prostitute, which would leave Scotland in a position similar to that which obtains on the issue in England and Wales. We do not want the laws on prostitution here to be weaker than those in England and Wales; in fact, we would support amendment 461 in the event of Trish Godman’s amendments falling. In any event, we seek an opportunity to return to the matter and to move to the reform of the law that Trish Godman proposes, which we see as optimal.

Stewart Maxwell: I have a great deal of sympathy for Trish Godman’s intent. The principle behind her amendments is well considered and, probably, overdue. However, I have some issues with the detail and practical application of the amendments.

Robert Brown has covered much of the ground that I had intended to cover, so I will try to keep my remarks reasonably short. We took oral evidence on this set of amendments. Richard Baker talked about the experience and evidence of the Glasgow witness, but the evidence from the Edinburgh witness and the police officer from whom we heard was very different. There is a range of opinions and, as others have said, a lack of consensus on the way forward in the area. Despite my sympathies for the intentions behind the amendments, the bottom line is that the issue is far too large and complex to be dealt with in this fashion.

I want to make two further points. First, at the meeting to which I referred, I asked witnesses about the definitions in the amendments. Trish Godman indicated that she understands that there are issues relating to the definitions and she believes that they can be dealt with at a later stage. I am not sure about that; there are problems with those definitions. I will not go over them, as we dealt with them at a previous meeting and Robert Brown has already covered the matter.

My second point concerns whether we should agree to the amendments at all. I think that the issue here is effectiveness. If I truly and genuinely believed or even thought, on balance, that the amendments would have the intended effect of helping women who find themselves in a very difficult position, preventing other women from falling into prostitution or tackling the serious organised crime behind a lot of prostitution, I might have been willing to support them. However, I question their practical effectiveness. I think that it would be much better to take the issue away, look at it on its own seriously and in great depth, tackle it properly and come up with a very effective solution that would deal with all our concerns.

As a result, I am not minded to support Trish Godman’s amendments or, partly for the reasons that have been stated, Nigel Don’s amendment 461. I also do not support Margo MacDonald’s amendments. However, she has said that she will withdraw amendment 8A and not move her other amendments if the other amendments in the group do not progress, because she wants a much wider debate about the issues.

James Kelly: I support Trish Godman’s amendments. I realise that the area is complex and controversial; indeed, that much is clear from the breadth of contributions, evidence that we have received and comments that have been made outwith the committee. I welcome the fact that Trish Godman and others have lodged the amendments and their contribution to a very much needed debate on this issue.

My support for amendments 8 and 9 is based, first, on the strong indication in the evidence that we received of the need to reduce demand if we are to tackle the adverse effects of women being dragged into the sex industry. Indeed, Trish Godman made that point strongly in her own comments and I certainly think that her amendments would tackle the issue.

Secondly, the amendments have a punishment element. Wisely, Trish Godman referred to last week’s debate on the amendments concerning knife crime, in which some members supported the view that stronger penalties for such crime would act as a deterrent. If a punishment element is associated with the purchasing of sex, people are likely to be less inclined to participate in the activity, demand will reduce and fewer women will be caught in very difficult situations.

The Convener: Although Margo MacDonald is correct to say that there was no consultation on the amendments, I point out that the committee took additional evidence on the issue. That move has proved to be useful, because it has allowed me to conclude that views are very mixed. For example, the views of Ann Hamilton from Glasgow were to some extent contradicted by the other two witnesses who gave evidence with her, and I have to say that I was largely persuaded by the evidence given by the police that, if agreed to, Trish Godman’s amendments would lead to difficulties.

The amendments in the group have been well thought out and were lodged in a sincere effort to combat the unfortunate and sometimes tragic situations that can arise, particularly when women have been forced into prostitution by threats, violence or other forms of coercion. In fact, we are about to debate an amendment that I believe goes some way towards dealing with trafficking, which we all want to deal with in an exceptionally severe way.

That said, I am concerned that if we agree to amendments 8 and 9 difficulties in workability will arise. For a start, the evidence that would be required to secure a conviction would be very difficult to obtain. Apart from using closed-circuit television or something of that nature, I question whether the evidence would be available to ensure a successful prosecution.

I do not intend to deal with Margo MacDonald’s amendments at any great length, as she has candidly admitted that she lodged the amendments to counterbalance in some way the amendments in the name of Trish Godman. However, we will have to deal with her amendments first as they seek to amend Trish Godman’s amendments and, procedurally, there is no other way forward.

Margo MacDonald: May I ask a procedural question on that point?

The Convener: I will deal with that presently.

The other arguments that have impressed me were those that were made by Robert Brown. I largely agreed with what he said under a number of headings. I am also of the view that the matter should be subject to wider and further inquiry, but I do not think that stage 2 of what is largely a legal bill is the appropriate time to agree to any of the amendments, bearing in mind the lack of consultation and the lack of an opportunity to take fuller evidence. However, I anticipate that the matter will be revisited, under some heading, in the time ahead.

Angela Constance (Livingston) (SNP): I echo the comments that have been made by most members around the table. There needs to be a more dedicated and focused examination of the issue in its entirety. Although I welcome the desire to focus more on the buyers of sex—mainly men—I have issues with that approach because, by and large, criminals do not think that they will get caught. Like others, I accept that the issues around prostitution appear to be different in different parts of the country.
All those who have lodged amendments on this issue are to be commended for bringing the issues once again to the fore, as they had slipped off the radar. All the remarks that have been made have resonated with me. The question to the Government is, rightly, focused on how we can take the issue forward, but I am not convinced that this bill is the right way in which to do so. We need to think about how we can address the issue in a more dedicated and thoughtful manner.

Fergus Ewing: In response to Trish Godman, I say that the Government treats with the utmost gravity all issues relating to violence against women, as any Government would. That is expressed by action across the directorates of Government and by the actions of the police, the justice system in general, social work and the voluntary sector. In my area of responsibility, the new strategy that is contained in “The Road to Recovery: A New Approach to Tackling Scotland’s Drug Problem”—as we all recognise, drug addiction fuels much of the prostitution that takes place in Scotland—is a valuable tool that we can use to help women to find recovery and thereby exit prostitution.

I pay tribute to the work that has been done in connection to, for example, Strathclyde Police’s persistent offenders project. When I visited that project, I met a young woman who, six months previously, had been 6 stone in weight, perhaps close to death, on the streets and on the game. However, she had been helped to regain her life by the intervention of the social work department and the police. I want to mention that project because the causes behind prostitution need to be considered, as they are part of the complex background that many members have alluded to.

Amendments 8, 8A to 8D, 9, 9A and 461 all deal with the issue of prostitution and propose to criminalise the purchase of sexual services and associated behaviour, although not the selling of sexual services. Those changes would represent a significant change to the law in this area. Like many others, I have previously offered strong views on the issue of prostitution, and I want to draw members’ attention to the wider context in which the Government has been considering the issue.

11:45

Many members will recall the substantial and prolonged debate on prostitution that took place in the run-up to the Prostitution (Public Places) (Scotland) Act 2007, particularly during the passage of the bill through Parliament. As some of you will know, I participated fully in that debate and voiced my views on the issue along with many others who had strong views to offer. That debate made it very clear that the substantial and complex issues surrounding prostitution are not amenable to simple solutions or quick fixes—to be fair, I do not think that anyone believes that that is the case. Nevertheless, the consideration of, and debate around, the Prostitution (Public Places) (Scotland) Bill resulted in a very welcome development in the law that targeted kerb crawlers. Whereas the law had always criminalised the antisocial behaviour associated with soliciting and loitering for the purposes of selling sex—I well remember hearing committee evidence about such behaviour in the east end of Glasgow that caused huge concerns to the residents there—the 2007 act levelled the playing field by ensuring that those soliciting and loitering for the purpose of buying sex are also criminalised.

However, we remind the committee that the initial impetus for a fresh consideration of street prostitution came from the Prostitution Tolerance Zones (Scotland) Bill, which was introduced by Margo MacDonald in 2002. Although that bill proposed that prostitution should in effect be legalised, the five years of consideration and debate that led to the 2007 act came to a very different conclusion, which was that more of the antisocial behaviour associated with prostitution should be criminalised. Bearing that in mind, the committee may not be surprised to hear that the Government is concerned about making substantial changes to the law in this difficult, complex and sensitive area by means of stage 2 amendments to the bill. We are concerned that such significant changes to such a sensitive area of law have not been properly debated or consulted on. We know that the committee, too, was concerned that these amendments raised significant new issues on which there had not been proper consideration and agreed to take written and, indeed, oral evidence on those. We think that the volume of responses on the matter and the wide range of issues that they raise reinforce the concerns.

I note that, in written evidence that the committee received, a group of academics appealed for “more extensive consultation with all key stakeholders which would presumably help to broaden out the current narrow focus of reform into a more inclusive, research-informed reform strategy. We would urge the committee to make a careful balanced assessment of this complex area”.

We would remind the committee that the stage 1 call for written evidence resulted in around 90 submissions, covering all the provisions contained in the bill, yet, in only two weeks, 93 responses have been received on these prostitution amendments alone.

The changes leading to the 2007 act had the benefit of proper consideration by the expert group on prostitution, and the Government's view is that the significant changes to the law that are proposed by these amendments require similar scrutiny. I believe that that was the thrust of Margo MacDonald's submission this morning. A more considered review of the issues is needed to ensure that any measures that are put in place are necessary, practicable and sustainable. The volume of written evidence offers overwhelming confirmation that prostitution is a complex area that requires careful consideration and debate prior to additional measures being taken to address the issue.

I carefully read the Official Report of the oral evidence session that took place on 23 March, particularly the contributions by Ann Hamilton, Iain Livingstone and George Lewis. Several members, including Stewart Maxwell and the convener, alluded to that evidence. I found that it raised very significant issues of concern. For example, the Association of Chief Police Officers in Scotland stated:

"The links between prostitution and vulnerable individuals, organised crime, community concern and antisocial behaviour are probably more complex than they are in relation to any other issue ... there are gaps in our understanding—the profile of prostitution is different throughout Scotland."

Margo MacDonald has often made that point in detail. The police argued that prostitution

"is not a single entity and does not manifest itself in any single way. It can be very complex and multilayered with regard to whether it occurs on-street or off-street".

They also expressed their anxiety about

"legislating on a social problem and a social phenomenon when we do not have a clear understanding of prostitution and the scale and extent of the problem".

Margo MacDonald also explained to the committee this morning that similar difficulties may take place in Stockholm. It would seem sensible to suggest that we may need more evidence from that source as we proceed. The police also suggested that "There is value in our committing to having a longer look at the problem, its various layers and complexities and interdependencies".

The convener and other members have already proposed that solution.

Assistant Chief Constable Livingstone expressed considerable concerns about the evidential difficulties of securing successful convictions. He described those as a “fundamental reservation" and he asked:

"would we end up with a piece of legislation on the statute book that was not enforced or utilised, which would undermine our whole approach?"—[Official Report, Justice Committee, 23 March 2010; c 2776, 2779, 2789, 2795 and 2784.]

Other members have characterised the evidence that was heard by the committee on 23 March as tantamount to saying that agreeing to the amendments in Trish Godman’s name would lead to the problem being driven underground thereby, as members have rightly said, potentially exacerbating the already very serious threats to women. If the experts say that passing amendments might make a problem worse, it seems to me that the case for taking a further look at the evidence becomes overwhelming. Even Glasgow Community and Safety Services acknowledges that indoor prostitution has not received the type of attention and research that it requires and did not oppose further consideration of these complex issues before we legislate.

The Equality and Human Rights Commission recently announced an inquiry into human trafficking in Scotland. The inquiry, which will be chaired by Baroness Helena Kennedy, will focus on sexual exploitation. All the available intelligence indicates that any trafficking into Scotland for sexual exploitation is for the purposes of prostitution, so the inquiry will inevitably focus on prostitution. The Government welcomes the commission’s inquiry and we have made clear to Baroness Kennedy that the Government will seek to support the inquiry and assist it in its consideration. Given the focus on prostitution, we are hopeful that the inquiry will reach some positive conclusions on the way forward on this issue and we look forward to reading its report on the matter. It would seem to make a lot of sense that we give Helena Kennedy the opportunity to complete her inquiries and that we contribute to them—as all members are entitled to do—and consider their outcome carefully before we proceed further. I note that ACPOS has also welcomed the helpful work that Baroness Kennedy has kicked off.

As I said during the debate on amendment 370, the Government is concerned about making substantial changes to the law in this difficult, complex and sensitive area without proper consideration of and consultation on all the issues involved.

In conclusion, rushing through a major change to the law on prostitution through stage 2 amendments, without any proper consultation and with very limited time for consideration, is a bad idea. The issues involved are complex and require proper consideration. I therefore ask the committee to reject all the amendments.

Trish Godman: I will try to address as many issues as I can.

Margo MacDonald said that there is no place in the bill for my amendments because of a lack of consultation, and others, too, have made that comment. I wonder, though, where I should have raised the issue, because other amendments have been raised late and it is a wide-ranging bill, but perhaps you know better than me.

The police say that no more powers are needed, but no one has been arrested for trafficking here. It is worrying that the police say that there is little evidence but that they have the power to do something about it.

Assistant Chief Constable Livingstone told the committee: “We recently visited all licensed premises—and there are a number of gay saunas in Edinburgh—with a view to engaging with people working in those establishments. They were not enforcement visits, but welfare visits.”—[Official Report, Justice Committee, 23 March 2010; c 2786.]

I do not know how many police make welfare visits, but I do not think that many of them do. However, if I was a trafficked woman living in a foreign country where I did not speak the language and the police came into the sauna, I am not sure that I would consider that they were present for the purposes of a welfare visit. I accept that that is what the police were trying to do, but Assistant Chief Constable Livingstone’s point was that he was not receiving evidence about trafficked women in saunas.

The law needs to be equal. It is certainly not equal at the moment, but amendment 8 would change that. Currently, the woman gets charged, but the man does not.

Margo MacDonald mentioned Sweden. We can copy good practice from Sweden, where there has definitely been a reduction in trafficking. Indeed, when I visited the Metropolitan Police, I was given information about two international gangs whose leaders are each serving 25 years in a Swedish prison because they were found to be trafficking women into that country.

Nigel Don said that the bill is wide ranging but that it is the wrong place for the proposed measure. I should pick him up on his point that women in prostitution are generally abused; they are, I suggest, always abused. He also mentioned that the Metropolitan Police is implementing the new legislation that has been introduced this month. However, I was told by the Metropolitan Police that the new legislation in England was introduced on the basis of roughly the same amount of information as we currently have in Scotland.

Robert Brown talked about trafficking in the context of the bill and of the Commonwealth games. I know that the Metropolitan Police has a dedicated Olympics team working in the borough of Newham, where the accommodation for the athletes is currently being built by men from the eastern European bloc. The Metropolitan Police team has already managed to help some trafficked women there. I am not sure that similar numbers of people will be trafficked for the Commonwealth games, but I certainly think that we need to address the issue.

Robert Brown also said that there is no national consensus across Scotland on my proposals. I suggest that there is no national consensus on any law that we introduce. We have introduced serious laws such as the smoking ban that were not agreed on throughout Scotland. In our job, that happens quite a lot. In response to his other point, as I have already said, the Sexual Offences Act 2003 provides a definition of “sexual activity”.

I have sourced an article that suggests that there is a possibility—I repeat, this is a possibility—that Edinburgh has a thousand licensed premises, in each of which an average of 20 women might work. Even if the number of premises is half that amount and is only 500, some 20 women might work in each sauna because of shifts and so on. Therefore, I suggest that there are women out there in danger every day.

Stewart Maxwell said that he had sympathy for my proposal but had not heard enough evidence. That point has been made before. He also picked up on the definitions, and I accept that point. If my amendments are agreed to, we may need to look at that point later.

James Kelly talked about the need to reduce demand and to tackle the effects of prostitution on women. Again, the fear of getting caught is an important point. There is currently no fear because people know that they will not get caught because engaging in paid-for sexual activity is not an offence.

Bill Aitken also asked for additional evidence and said that he was persuaded by the police’s evidence that the proposed measures might have difficulty in working. I am not sure about that. If the amendments are agreed to and become law, the police will need to deal with the issue in the same way as those people who currently provide services to help women who are trafficked into prostitution. Ann Hamilton explained that services need to respond to what is happening out there.

Angela Constance said that she echoed the comments of others in believing that a more dedicated focus was required for the issue. She also mentioned that the criminals do not get caught. As I have said, they do not get caught because prostitution is currently not an offence.

The minister mentioned the new strategy on drug abuse, but that is, as he will surely agree, only one part of the picture. Not all prostitutes are drug users and people enter prostitution for all kinds of different reasons. He was concerned about changes in the law on such a sensitive issue. Clearly, the issue needs to be addressed, given that we have received 93 submissions for and against the proposals, which have aroused a lot of response from the general public. Of course prostitution is a complex issue, not only because it involves organised crime but because there are gaps in our understanding on why women prostitute themselves. Prostitution is not a single entity but a multilevel problem.

However, that misses the point. I am aware of all that—I know all that—but I also know that men can currently go out and demand or buy sex from a woman in the knowledge that nothing will happen to them. I can separate that out from everything else that is going on—I can do that quite easily. An offence has been committed. If the amendments were accepted and became part of the bill, the police would have other powers to use and services would have a different way of dealing with the problem and looking at all the multifaceted issues that are involved—I do not think that my amendments will change any of that, as it is very complex subject.

I hope that committee members will support my amendments, but I suspect that you will not.

12:00

The Convener: Thank you. Before I ask Margo MacDonald to wind up, I advise her that, under rule 9.10.10 of the standing orders, it is necessary for the committee to dispose of amendments to amendments prior to the principal amendments being dealt with. That is perfectly logical. As Margo MacDonald is seeking to amend Trish Godman’s amendment, we must deal with hers first.

Margo MacDonald: I apologise, convener. I should have been up a bit earlier to read rule 9.10.10.

The Convener: Clearly, you are not a full-time member of the Justice Committee or you would be up early every morning.

Margo MacDonald: Oh, please. I would work so much harder if I was, though.

The business of trafficking has been referred to, but we have no figures on it in front of us in any of the evidence that has been submitted to the committee. Despite that, it was talked about in relation to Glasgow and the assertion was made that we know that there are trafficked women. First, how do we define “trafficked women”? Are they people who come here illegally, as economic migrants, or are they people who are brought here against their will and coerced into prostitution? Even the terminology is not common to everyone who uses it. I suggest that it is no basis for a new law.

As we know, the economic situation does not exactly look promising. In every society in the world, over the past 2,000 years, there has been a record of women being forced to the extreme of selling themselves in order to put food on the table or look after their children. I do not mean to be sentimental or emotional, but it is just true that it may be the last thing that a woman has left to protect her and her family. In 2010, the situation is not so drastic; on the other hand, it could be that arrangements are made privately because women do not have money coming in to cover the necessities of everyday living. We are characterising someone in that situation in exactly the same way as we are characterising a refugee—either an illegal immigrant or someone who has been kidnapped, brought to this country and forced to prostitute themselves. However, the two things are very different.

Several members have admitted that this is a complex area. It is complex and fast changing, as women no longer sell themselves only on the street; the new technology means that the telephone and the internet are used to further the business of prostitution. If she wants to, a woman can work much more easily without a criminal gang or a pimp behind her. I know that from speaking to women who are doing that. We can expect that to be much more the pattern in the future. If the intention of the committee and the Parliament is to outlaw paid-for sex between consenting adults, they will have to tackle that, and it will need much more information than we have got this morning. Is the business of escorting to be treated in the same way as phone sex? I do not see how that can be policed or how an equitable punishment can be arrived at if that is what the committee thinks is needed.

At the end of her remarks, Trish Godman said that there are many different reasons why women prostitute themselves. That suggests that there might be an element of choice in some cases. If choice is involved, we are proceeding from an erroneous basis in saying that all prostitution is the exploitation of women and violence against women.

I hate to throw a spanner in the works at the last minute, but I could not pass up the chance. I have been trying to explain to various parliamentary committees for a long time that the answer is much more complex than simply saying that we will abolish prostitution. We must determine what prostitution is, first.

The Convener: Thank you. You have not intimated whether you are pressing or withdrawing your amendment.
Margo MacDonald: Because of rule what-you-may-call-it—

The Convener: Rule 9.10.10 of the standing orders. You are pressing your amendment.

Margo MacDonald: Does that help you, convener?

The Convener: I am entirely in your hands on the matter.

Margo MacDonald: Och, I never thought that that would happen. Yes, I will press my amendment.

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 8A be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

Against
Aitken, Bill (Glasgow) (Con)
Brown, Robert (Glasgow) (LD)
Butler, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab)
Constance, Angela (Livingston) (SNP)
Craigie, Cathie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (Lab)
Don, Nigel (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Kelly, James (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab)
Maxwell, Stewart (West of Scotland) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the amendment is: For 0, Against 8, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 8A disagreed to.

Amendments 8B to 8D not moved.

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 8 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Butler, Bill (Glasgow Anniesland) (Lab)
Craigie, Cathie (Cumbernauld and Kilsyth) (Lab)
Kelly, James (Glasgow Rutherglen) (Lab)

Against
Aitken, Bill (Glasgow) (Con)
Brown, Robert (Glasgow) (LD)
Constance, Angela (Livingston) (SNP)
Don, Nigel (North East Scotland) (SNP)
Maxwell, Stewart (West of Scotland) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 3, Against 5, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 8 disagreed to.

Amendment 461 not moved.

12:07

Meeting suspended.

12:17

On resuming—

Section 35—People trafficking

The Convener: Amendment 371, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is grouped with amendments 372 to 377, 386 and 387.

Fergus Ewing: Human trafficking is an abhorrent crime. Our role as legislators is to ensure that we provide our police, prosecutors and courts with the right tools to tackle it.

Section 35 already seeks to make amendments to the legislation on human trafficking to broaden the application of the offences and to ensure that our courts have jurisdiction to try them. However, since the bill was introduced, there have been a number of developments in England and Wales and in Europe of which we need to take account. Over the past year, the European justice and home affairs council has worked on a new framework decision on human trafficking. Although that proposal fell with the coming into force of the Treaty of Lisbon, the draft has reappeared as a proposal for a directive. We are, therefore, taking the chance to get ahead of the game.

Section 22(1) of the Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 2003 and section 4 of the Asylum and Immigration (Treatment of Claimants, etc) Act 2004 make it an offence to arrange or facilitate the trafficking of human beings into, within or out of the UK for the purposes of various forms of exploitation. Amendments 371 to 373 and 377 create new offences that deal with the arrangement or facilitation of trafficking for those forms of exploitation but also cover the trafficking of persons into, within or out of a country other than the UK. Amendments 376 and 377 provide that those new offences apply to UK nationals, people habitually resident in Scotland and UK corporate bodies. That will help to ensure compliance with any new directive.

Amendment 377 also expands in several ways the definition of “exploitation” in section 4(4) of the 2004 act. Those changes ensure that we have complete coverage of trafficking where the exploitation would involve removal of body parts including blood, rather than simply the removal of organs for transplantation.

Through the Borders, Citizenship and Immigration Act 2009, changes have been made for England, Wales and Northern Ireland to cover the use or attempted use of a person for the provision of services or the provision or acquisition of benefits of any kind, where the person is chosen on the grounds of ill health, disability, youth or family relationship. Part of amendment 377 replicates that change. The change ensures that the offence of trafficking captures those cases... where the role of the person who is being exploited is entirely passive and that person is being used as a tool by which others can gain a benefit of any kind.

The existing offence in section 4(2) of the 2004 act of trafficking persons within the United Kingdom requires that the person who arranges or facilitates the travel within the UK believes that an offence under subsection (1) may have been committed—that is to say, that the person has already been trafficked into the UK. Amendment 377 adjusts section 4(2) to remove the requirement for that belief, so that the act of a person who arranges or facilitates the travel intending to exploit the victim, or believing that another person is likely to do so, is sufficient for an offence to be committed.

Amendment 377 also ensures that the sheriff court has jurisdiction over the 2004 act offences. Amendments 374 and 377 clarify that those offences can be taken by solemn or summary procedure, although, given the gravity of the offences, we would expect most cases to be dealt with on indictment.

Amendments 386 and 387 are technical amendments that clarify the jurisdiction of the sheriff court in relation to those offences for which section 11(3) of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 and section 55(7) of the Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009 make provision. By those provisions, proceedings can be taken in Scotland in relation to certain specified criminal activity by certain persons that has taken place outwith Scotland. The amendments clarify that both solemn and summary prosecutions may be taken in the sheriff court for those offences.

Amendment 386 also amends section 11(4) of the 1995 act to provide that persons may be prosecuted in Scotland by solemn or summary procedure for those offences to which that provision applies.

I move amendment 371.

Amendment 371 agreed to.

Amendments 372 to 377 moved—[Fergus Ewing]—and agreed to.

Section 35, as amended, agreed to.

After section 35

The Convener: Amendment 112, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is grouped with amendment 143.

Fergus Ewing: There is little doubt that slavery, servitude or forced or compulsory labour, we think that there is a risk of a gap in the law in so far as it may not deal with the employer of an individual who is subject to such behaviour, particularly where that person—the employer—has not been engaged in the trafficking of the individual. That could be of particular relevance to people who are brought to this country, possibly in good faith, and taken advantage of because of their uncertain immigration status. A case against France in the European Court of Human Rights a few years ago highlighted the need to ensure that the law is clear in that area to avoid a finding that article 4 of the European convention on human rights has been breached.

Amendment 112 is designed to ensure that there is no gap in the law by creating new statutory offences of holding an individual in slavery or servitude, or requiring that individual to perform forced or compulsory labour where the offender either knew or ought to have known that the person was being held or required to perform labour in such circumstances. Slavery, servitude and forced or compulsory labour will be defined by reference to article 4 of the European convention on human rights, to ensure compliance with the convention. Given its seriousness, the offence will attract a maximum penalty of 14 years' imprisonment.

The offence mirrors the new offence that is contained in section 71 of the UK Coroners and Justice Act 2009. We consider that a provision in virtually the same terms for Scotland is appropriate, not least because a difference in approach between Scotland and the rest of the UK would be unhelpful. Any difference would also run the risk of the UK being found to be in breach of its obligations under article 4.

Amendment 143 seeks to include the new offence as an exploitation offence, as defined in section 40A of the Antisocial Behaviour etc (Scotland) Act 2004, which section 72(7) of the bill introduces. The section provides for the closure of premises that are associated with human exploitation.

I move amendment 112.

Amendment 112 agreed to.

Section 36 agreed to.

After section 36

The Convener: Amendment 113, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is in a group on its own.

Fergus Ewing: Amendment 113 inserts a new section into the bill to create two new statutory offences relating to fraud.

Following publication of “Her Majesty’s Inspectorate of Constabulary for Scotland:
Thematic Inspection Serious Fraud” in May 2008, an ACPOS-led short-life working group looked at whether changes to fraud law were needed in Scotland. It noted that the common law of fraud worked well, but it recommended the creation of two new statutory offences to complement common law. The new offences are based on similar offences in sections 6 and 7 of the Fraud Act 2006, which does not extend to Scotland.

The two new offences will criminalise the possession or control of articles for use in, or in connection with, the commission of fraud; and the making, adaptation and supply or offering to supply an article that has been either designed or adapted for use in, or in connection with, the commission of fraud, or when the person intends that the article is to be used in, or in connection with, the commission of fraud.

Currently, when an individual is found with, say, a credit card skimming machine in their possession but there is no proof that they have attempted to undertake a fraud, no offence has been committed though it is clear that the article is to be used for fraudulent purposes. In future, if it can be proved that the accused possessed the article and that the article was to be used in or in connection with the commission of fraud, the new offence of possession or control of the article will apply and the person can be prosecuted.

Some may query why the new offences do not simply outlaw the possession or supply of fraudulent articles, but it would be very difficult to define exactly what is a fraudulent article. For example, a credit card skimming machine can be very similar to credit card readers that are used by shops all over the country, while a list of credit card numbers held on a computer could simply be part of a shop’s retail records. We therefore believe that, in addition to a person possessing the article, it must also be established that the article was to be used in, or in connection with, the commission of fraud. We consider that the wording of the provision is sufficient to allow the courts to interpret the provision as including possession of an article intended for use in fraud.

We are glad to be able to include the two new statutory offences in the bill as they will help to ensure that our laws are comprehensive in dealing with fraud.

I move amendment 113.

Amendment 113 agreed to.

Section 37 agreed to.

After section 37

The Convener: Amendment 114, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is grouped with amendments 189, 192, 194 and 196.

Fergus Ewing: Amendments 114, 189, 192, 194 and 196 allow me to pay tribute to the Liberal Democrats—not in this Parliament, but at Westminster.

It was Dr Evan Harris MP who first raised the continuing existence in England of the offences of sedition and seditious libel during the passage through Parliament last year of the Coroners and Justice Bill. As he said, although it would be unthinkable for the state to use the offences today in the way that they were used against the likes of John Wilkes in previous centuries, they remain part of our law. Theoretically, every time that a journalist harangues the Government or a comedian insults the Crown, they are liable to be arrested.

The provisions are more than a mere theoretical curiosity to amuse law students. More importantly, the fact that the UK has such laws is used as a convenient excuse for repressive regimes worldwide to have, and to use, their own. In such countries not only is there a chilling effect—people being too afraid to air criticism of the authorities and elites—but citizens are regularly prosecuted for speaking out.

The UK Government was seized of the force of the arguments and tabled amendments to the Coroners and Justice Bill to sweep away the offences of sedition, seditious libel, obscene libel and defamatory libel in the rest of the UK. We believe that it is appropriate for us to follow suit and lay finally to rest the Scots law offences of sedition and leasing-making, which is what amendment 114 does. That will help give the UK greater moral authority when dealing with repressive regimes.

Amendments 189, 192, 194 and 196 tidy up the statute book in consequence of amendment 114 and the changes made in the rest of the UK, including the complete repeal of two antiquated acts as they apply to Scotland.

I move amendment 114.

12:30

Angela Constance: It would be interesting if the minister could explain leasing-making when he winds up.

The Convener: I am sure that he will do so. While he is being advised, I should say that there is a delicious irony in a Scottish National Party Government minister—a representative of a party that I have always thought to be a seditious bunch—moving that that part of the law be removed and those of us of greater ilk being denied the protection that the law presently allows against being traduced in such an unseemly manner.

The UK Government was seized of the force of the arguments and tabled amendments to the Coroners and Justice Bill to sweep away the offences of sedition, seditious libel, obscene libel and defamatory libel in the rest of the UK. We believe that it is appropriate for us to follow suit and lay finally to rest the Scots law offences of sedition and leasing-making, which is what amendment 114 does. That will help give the UK greater moral authority when dealing with repressive regimes.

Amendments 189, 192, 194 and 196 tidy up the statute book in consequence of amendment 114 and the changes made in the rest of the UK, including the complete repeal of two antiquated acts as they apply to Scotland.

I move amendment 114.

12:30

Angela Constance: It would be interesting if the minister could explain leasing-making when he winds up.

The Convener: I am sure that he will do so. While he is being advised, I should say that there is a delicious irony in a Scottish National Party Government minister—a representative of a party that I have always thought to be a seditious bunch—moving that that part of the law be removed and those of us of greater ilk being denied the protection that the law presently allows against being traduced in such an unseemly manner.
Stewart Maxwell: I am not sure that that meets the criterion for being respectful to other members of the Parliament. [Laughter.]

The Convener: Mr Ewing, would you like to sum up?

Fergus Ewing: Indeed. I was not aware that every time a journalist harangues the Government, he is liable to be arrested. Had I known that, convener, history might have been somewhat different. However, as a habitually loyal colleague, I am happy to move the amendments. When I read out the words "leasing-making", I wondered whether a typographical error had crept into my script; that is why I paused momentarily. However, there is no error—one does not expect errors from one's officials—and it means lese-majesty, or the act of making critical remarks of Her Majesty, so I am happy to have lodged the amendment. I am pleased to say that, according to the current edition of Gordon, there have been no reported prosecutions for leasing-making since 1715. Members can draw whatever conclusions they wish from that fact.

The Convener: Yes—we are entitled to some light relief after a heavy morning.

Amendment 114 agreed to.

The Convener: Amendment 378, in the name of the cabinet secretary, has been debated with amendment 399. Minister, I believe that you do not intend to move amendment 378.

Fergus Ewing: No, and I will explain briefly. Following extensive discussion at last week's meeting, there was agreement to consider further the various amendments relating to the proposed new stalking offence that Rhoda Grant lodged, and our offence of threatening, alarming or distressing behaviour. The committee earlier agreed to Rhoda Grant's amendment 402, and we will now work with Rhoda Grant and the committee to prepare further amendments that will ensure that the final version of the stalking offence is robust and workable.

I will not move Government amendment 378 at this time. Instead, we will refine the text as necessary and engage with interested members to ensure that we can lodge an amendment at stage 3 that will address the uncertainty created by Her Majesty's Advocate v Harris and which will, I believe, have broad parliamentary support.

Amendment 378 not moved.

The Convener: Thank you; that is useful.

Amendment 115, in my name, is grouped with amendments 116 to 120, 120A, 121 to 125 and 185. The amendments have been overtaken by events. Since they were lodged, the Government has intimated its intention to legislate separately after a consultation process. On the basis of a brief assurance from the minister that that is still the Government's intention, I will seek to withdraw or not move my amendments, with the committee's approval.

I move amendment 115.

Fergus Ewing: We are certainly pleased with the broad consensus in favour of reforming the law of double jeopardy. It might be helpful if I read into the record our reasons for doing so, because that is the basis on which the convener will feel able to withdraw amendment 115.

As we indicated during the debate in Parliament last month, we welcome the intention behind the amendments in the group, but they do not go far enough. The convener's amendments adopt the provisions that were set out in the Scottish Law Commission's recent report on double jeopardy. We are grateful to the commission for its work in the area and on the related issue of creating a Crown right of appeal—that reform is, of course, already in the bill. During last month's debate, we outlined our reasons for conducting a consultation exercise instead of pressing ahead with the commission's recommendations on the bill. Our view remains focused on the creation of an exception to double jeopardy where new evidence has arisen, and on the need to get this important reform right.

Although the commission provided draft legislation to create a new evidence exception to double jeopardy, it was offered on a provisional basis. The commission was unable to recommend either way on the principle of whether to have such an exception. We are in favour of a new evidence exception and share the convener's enthusiasm for change, but the issue is complex and important and we think that we should wait for the results of the consultation exercise. In particular, we want to hear the views of the public on issues such as the offences to be covered by a new evidence exception and whether it should be made retrospective. I am pleased that the convener shares those views, if I have interpreted his remarks correctly. I hope that Mr Brown shares those views, too. We hope that the Government's consultation exercise, which is due to close on 14 June, will form a solid foundation for taking forward reform of the law in the area.

Robert Brown: I share those views.

The Convener: As no one else wishes to contribute and I assume that the minister feels no need to sum up, I seek permission to withdraw amendment 115.

Amendment 115, by agreement, withdrawn.

Amendments 116 to 120, 120A, 121 to 125 and 544 not moved.
The Convener: In view of the lateness of the hour and the fact that one further item is likely to cause some debate, and because the committee has a couple of administrative items to deal with in private, I suspend proceedings. I am sorry that we did not reach Margaret Curran’s amendment, but unfortunately time does not allow. I thank the minister and his team for their attendance.

12:39

Meeting suspended.
The Bill will be considered in the following order—

- Sections 1 to 3
- Schedule 1
- Sections 4 to 18
- Schedule 2
- Sections 19 to 66
- Schedule 3
- Sections 67 to 139
- Schedule 4
- Sections 140 to 145
- Schedule 5
- Sections 146 to 148
- Long Title

Amendments marked * are new (including manuscript amendments) or have been altered.

Section 38

Robert Brown

379 In section 38, page 53, line 15, leave out subsection (2) and insert—

<(2) In section 41 (age of criminal responsibility), for “eight” substitute “12”.

Bill Aitken

126 In section 38, page 53, line 17, after <not> insert <normally>

Bill Aitken

127 In section 38, page 53, line 18, after <not> insert <normally>

Richard Baker

389 In section 38, page 53, line 26, at end insert—

<(5) The Scottish Ministers must, as soon as possible after the end of each of the reporting years, lay before the Scottish Parliament and publish a report on the disposal of cases (“relevant cases”) involving children who, but for section 41A of the 1995 Act (as inserted by subsection (2)), would have been prosecuted.

(6) For the purposes of subsection (5), the “reporting years” are—

(a) the period of 12 months beginning with the day on which this section comes into force, and

(b) the periods of 12 months beginning with the first and second anniversaries of that day.

(7) A report under subsection (5) must, in particular—

(a) specify the number of relevant cases disposed of during the reporting year,

(b) set out how those cases were disposed of and the costs and other resources involved in those disposals, and
(c) state what (if any) consideration the Scottish Ministers have given during the year covered by the report to the merits of altering the range of disposals available in such cases.

Section 39

Kenny MacAskill

128 In section 39, page 53, line 32, after <offence> insert <committed by the partnership>

Kenny MacAskill

129 In section 39, page 54, line 9, at end insert—

<( ) In subsection (1), the references to a partner of a partnership include references to a person purporting to act as a partner of the partnership.>

Section 40

Kenny MacAskill

130 In section 40, page 54, line 23, leave out <all reasonable hours> and insert

Bill Aitken

Supported by: Robert Brown

131 Leave out section 40

After section 40

Margaret Curran

403* After section 40, insert—

<Parole: victims’ representation>

Victims’ representation at Parole Board hearings

(1) Section 17 of the Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 2003 (asp 7) is amended as follows.

(2) After subsection (1), insert—

“(1A) Representations under subsection (1) may include notification by the victim of a desire to be heard (either in person or through a representative) at the relevant hearing of the Parole Board for Scotland.

(1B) In this section, the “relevant hearing” of the Board is the hearing at which the Board is to consider the convicted person’s case in order to decide whether to recommend, or direct, that person’s release on licence (and if there are to be a number of hearings which otherwise meet this description, the Board may determine which is the relevant hearing for the purposes of this section).”.

(3) In subsection (3), for “Parole Board for Scotland” substitute “Board”.

(4) After subsection (5), insert—
“(5A) Where representations are made under subsection (1) which include notification of a desire to be heard at the relevant hearing, the Board must—

(a) give the victim reasonable notice in writing of when and where the hearing is to take place and invite the victim to—

(i) attend the hearing, with or without an accompanying person, in order to be heard in person; or

(ii) send a representative to the hearing to be heard on the victim’s behalf;

(b) in so doing, give the victim appropriate information about the hearing and how it is likely to be conducted including, in particular—

(i) information about any parts of the hearing from which the victim and any accompanying person are, or the victim’s representative is, to be excluded, and

(ii) any limits on their participation during the other parts of the hearing;

(c) at the hearing, afford the victim (or the victim’s representative) a reasonable opportunity to be heard.

(5B) A victim’s representative may only be a member of the victim’s immediate family or a friend of the victim.

(5C) In reaching its decision at or after the hearing, the Board must take account of—

(a) any written representations made under subsection (1); and

(b) anything said by the victim (or the victim’s representative) at the hearing.”.

(5) In section 20(4) of the Prisoners and Criminal Proceedings (Scotland) Act 1993 (c.9) (Parole Board rules), after paragraph (ba) insert—

“(bb) in relation to victims who have made representations under section 17(1) of the Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 2003 (asp 7) which include notifications of a desire to be heard at the relevant hearing (within the meaning of subsection (1B) of that section), enabling such victims to attend such hearings of the Board;”.

Section 41

Kenny MacAskill

518 In section 41, page 55, line 22, at end insert—

<(4A) The reference in subsection (4)(e) to any previous conviction of an offence under subsection (1)(b) includes any previous conviction by a court in England and Wales, Northern Ireland or a member State of the European Union other than the United Kingdom of an offence that is equivalent to an offence under subsection (1)(b).

(4B) The references in subsection (4)(d) to subsection (4) are to be read, in relation to a previous conviction by a court referred to in subsection (4A), as references to any provision that is equivalent to subsection (4).
(4C) Any issue of equivalence arising in pursuance of subsection (4A) or (4B) is for the court to determine.

After section 41

Kenny MacAskill

420 After section 41, insert—

<Grant of warrants

Grant of warrants for execution by constables and police members of SCDEA

(1) A sheriff or justice of the peace does not lack power or jurisdiction to grant a warrant for execution by a person mentioned in subsection (2) solely because the person is not a constable of a police force for a police area lying wholly or partly in the sheriff’s or justice’s sheriffdom.

(2) The persons referred to in subsection (1) are—

(a) a constable,

(b) a police member of the Scottish Crime and Drug Enforcement Agency.

After section 43

Kenny MacAskill

132 After section 43, insert—

<Bail conditions: remote monitoring requirements

Sections 24A to 24E of the 1995 Act (bail conditions: remote monitoring) are repealed.

Section 44

Kenny MacAskill

421 In section 44, page 58, line 5, at end insert—

<( ) The title of section 287 becomes “Demission from office of Lord Advocate and Solicitor General for Scotland”.

Kenny MacAskill

422 In section 44, page 58, line 6, leave out from <subsection> to <Advocate)> and insert <that section>

Kenny MacAskill

423 In section 44, page 58, line 11, at end insert <and

( ) after “successor” insert “or the Solicitor General”.

Kenny MacAskill

424 In section 44, page 58, leave out line 13 and insert—
Kenny MacAskill

In section 44, page 58, line 17, at end insert—

<(2AA) All indictments which have been raised at the instance of the Solicitor General shall remain effective notwithstanding the holder of the office of Solicitor General subsequently having died or demitted office and may be taken up and proceeded with by his successor or the Lord Advocate.>.

Kenny MacAskill

In section 44, page 58, line 19, leave out from <as> to end of line 20

Kenny MacAskill

In section 44, page 58, line 24, at end insert—

<( ) in paragraph (a), after “subsection (1)” insert “or (2AA)”,>.

After section 46

Kenny MacAskill

After section 46, insert—

<Dockets and charges in sex cases

Dockets and charges in sex cases

After section 288B of the 1995 Act insert—

“Dockets and charges in sex cases

288BA Dockets for charges of sexual offences

(1) An indictment or a complaint may include a docket which specifies any act or omission that is connected with a sexual offence charged in the indictment or complaint.

(2) Here, an act or omission is connected with such an offence charged if it—

(a) is specifiable by way of reference to a sexual offence, and

(b) relates to—

(i) the same event as the offence charged, or

(ii) a series of events of which that offence is also part.

(3) The docket is to be in the form of a note apart from the offence charged.

(4) It does not matter whether the act or omission, if it were instead charged as an offence, could not competently be dealt with by the court (including as particularly constituted) in which the indictment or complaint is proceeding.

(5) Where under subsection (1) a docket is included in an indictment or a complaint, it is to be presumed that—
(a) the accused person has been given fair notice of the prosecutor’s intention to lead evidence of the act or omission specified in the docket, and
(b) evidence of the act or omission is admissible as relevant.

(6) The references in this section to a sexual offence are to—
(a) an offence under the Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009,
(b) any other offence involving a significant sexual element.

288BB Mixed charges for sexual offences

(1) An indictment or a complaint may include a charge that is framed as mentioned in subsection (2) or (3) (or both).
(2) That is, framed so as to comprise (in a combined form) the specification of more than one sexual offence.
(3) That is, framed so as to—
(a) specify, in addition to a sexual offence, any other act or omission, and
(b) do so in any manner except by way of reference to a statutory offence.
(4) Where a charge in an indictment or a complaint is framed as mentioned in subsection (2) or (3) (or both), the charge is to be regarded as being a single yet cumulative charge.
(5) The references in this section to a sexual offence are to an offence under the Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009.”.

Section 47

Robert Brown

541 In section 47, page 61, line 2, at end insert—
(A1) Section 44 of the 1995 Act (detention of children) is amended in accordance with subsections (B1) and (C1).
(B1) In subsection (1), after “child” insert “aged 16 years or over”.
(C1) In subsection (2), the words from “(other than” to “this Act)” are repealed.

After section 51

Kenny MacAskill

429 After section 51, insert—

Personal conduct of case by accused

Prohibition of personal conduct of case by accused in certain proceedings

(1) The 1995 Act is amended as follows.
(2) In section 288C (prohibition of personal conduct of defence in cases of certain sexual offences)—

(a) for subsection (1) substitute—

“(1) An accused charged with a sexual offence to which this section applies is prohibited from conducting his case in person at, or for the purposes of, any relevant hearing in the course of proceedings (other than proceedings in a JP court) in respect of the offence.

(1A) In subsection (1), “relevant hearing” means a hearing at, or for the purposes of, which a witness is to give evidence.”, and

(b) subsection (8) is repealed.

(3) In section 288D (appointment of solicitor by court in cases to which section 288C applies)—

(a) in subsection (1), after “proceedings” insert “(other than proceedings in a JP court)”;

(b) in subsection (2)(a), for sub-paragraphs (i) and (ii) substitute—

“(i) the conduct of his case at, or for the purposes of, any relevant hearing (within the meaning of section 288C(1A)) in the proceedings; or”;

(c) in subsection (6), for the words from “of the accused’s defence” to the end substitute “referred to in subsection (2)(a) above.”.

(4) In section 288E (prohibition of personal conduct of defence in certain cases involving child witness under the age of 12)—

(a) subsection (1) is repealed,

(b) in subsection (2)(b), for “the trial” substitute “any hearing in the course of the proceedings”,

(c) after subsection (2) insert—

“(2A) The accused is prohibited from conducting his case in person at, or for the purposes of, any hearing at, or for the purposes of, which the child witness is to give evidence.”,

(d) in subsection (4), at the end insert “and as if references to a relevant hearing were references to a hearing referred to in subsection (2A) above”;

(e) in subsection (6)—

(i) for paragraphs (za) and (a) substitute—

“(a) that his case at, or for the purposes of, any hearing in the course of the proceedings at, or for the purposes of, which the child witness is to give evidence may be conducted only by a lawyer,”, and

(ii) in paragraph (c), for the words from “preliminary” to “trial” substitute “hearing”, and

(f) subsection (8) is repealed.

(5) In section 288F (power to prohibit personal conduct of defence in other cases involving vulnerable witnesses)—

7
(a) in subsection (1), for “the trial” substitute “any hearing in the course of the proceedings”,
(b) in subsection (2), for the words from “defence” to the end substitute “case in person at any hearing at, or for the purposes of, which the vulnerable witness is to give evidence.”,
(c) in subsection (3)(a), for “trial” substitute “hearing”,
(d) in subsection (4), for the words from “after” to the end substitute “in relation to a hearing after, as well as before, the hearing has commenced.”,
(e) subsection (4A) is repealed,
(f) in subsection (5), at the end insert “and as if references to a relevant hearing were references to any hearing in respect of which an order is made under this section”, and
(g) subsection (6) is repealed.>

Section 52

Kenny MacAskill

519 In section 52, page 64, line 11, at end insert—

<(  ) A reference in this section to a conviction which occurred on or after the date of offence O is a reference to such a conviction by a court in any part of the United Kingdom or in any other member State of the European Union.”.>

Kenny MacAskill

520 In section 52, page 64, line 36, at end insert—

<(  ) A reference in this section to a conviction which occurred on or after the date of offence O is a reference to such a conviction by a court in any part of the United Kingdom or in any other member State of the European Union.”.>

After section 52

Kenny MacAskill

521 After section 52, insert—

<Convictions by courts in other EU member States>

(1) Schedule (Convictions by courts in other EU member States) makes modifications of the 1995 Act and other enactments for the purposes of and in connection with implementing obligations of the United Kingdom created by or arising under the Framework Decision (so far as they have effect in or as regards Scotland).

(2) The Scottish Ministers may by order make further provision for the purposes of and in connection with implementing those obligations.

(3) The provision may, in particular, confer functions—

(a) on the Scottish Ministers,
(b) on other persons.
(4) An order under subsection (2) may modify any enactment.

(5) In this section, the “Framework Decision” means Council Framework Decision 2008/675/JHA of 24 July 2008 on taking account of convictions in the Member States of the European Union in the course of new criminal proceedings.

After schedule 2

Kenny MacAskill

522 After schedule 2, insert—

<SCHEDULE

(introduced by section (Convictions by courts in other EU member States)(1))

CONVICTIONS BY COURTS IN OTHER EU MEMBER STATES: MODIFICATIONS OF ENACTMENTS

PART 1

THE 1995 ACT

The 1995 Act
1 The 1995 Act is amended as follows.

2 In section 23C(2)(d)(i) (previous convictions to be taken into consideration in determining bail), for “outwith Scotland” substitute “by courts outside the European Union”.

3 In section 27 (breach of bail conditions: offences), after subsection (3) insert—

“(3A) The reference in subsection (3)(b) to any previous conviction of an offence under subsection (1)(b) includes any previous conviction by a court in England and Wales, Northern Ireland or a member State of the European Union other than the United Kingdom of an offence that is equivalent to an offence under subsection (1)(b).

(3B) The references in subsection (3)(c) to subsection (3) are to be read, in relation to a previous conviction by a court referred to in subsection (3A), as references to any provision that is equivalent to subsection (3).

(3C) Any issue of equivalence arising in pursuance of subsection (3A) or (3B) is for the court to determine.”.

4 In section 202(2) (deferred sentence), for “Great Britain” substitute “the United Kingdom or in another member State of the European Union”.

5 In section 204 (restrictions on passing sentence of imprisonment or detention)—

(a) in each of subsections (1) and (2), after “United Kingdom” insert “or in another member State of the European Union”,

(b) after subsection (4) insert—

“(4A) The court shall, for the purpose of determining whether a person has been previously sentenced to imprisonment or detention by a court in a member State of the European Union other than the United Kingdom—

(a) disregard any previous sentence of imprisonment which, being the equivalent of a suspended sentence, has not taken effect;
(b) construe detention as meaning an equivalent sentence to any of those mentioned in subsection (4)(b).

(4B) Any issue of equivalence arising in pursuance of subsection (4A) is for the court to determine.”.

6 In section 205B (minimum sentence for third conviction of certain offences relating to drug trafficking)—

(a) in subsection (1)(b), for “been convicted in any part of the United Kingdom of two other class A drug trafficking offences” substitute “two previous convictions for relevant offences”,

(b) after subsection (1) insert—

“(1A) In subsection (1), “relevant offence” means—

(a) in relation to a conviction by a court in any part of the United Kingdom, a class A drug trafficking offence;

(b) in relation to a conviction by a court in a member State of the European Union other than the United Kingdom, an offence that is equivalent to a class A drug trafficking offence.

(1B) Any issue of equivalence arising in pursuance of subsection (1A)(b) is for the court to determine.”.

7 In section 275A (disclosure of accused’s previous convictions where court allows questioning or evidence under section 275)—

(a) in subsection (10)—

(i) the word “or” immediately following paragraph (a) is repealed,

(ii) after paragraph (a) insert—

“(aa) a conviction by a court in England and Wales, Northern Ireland or a member State of the European Union other than the United Kingdom of an offence that is equivalent to one to which section 288C of this Act applies by virtue of subsection (2) thereof; or”,

(b) after subsection (10) insert—

“(10A) Any issue of equivalence arising in pursuance of subsection (10)(aa) is for the court to determine.”.

8 In section 307 (interpretation)—

(a) in subsection (1), insert the following definition at the appropriate place—

““conviction”, in relation to a previous conviction by a court outside Scotland, means a final decision of a criminal court establishing guilt of a criminal offence;”;

(b) for subsection (5) substitute—

“(5) Except where the context requires otherwise—

(a) any reference in this Act to a previous conviction is to be construed as a reference to a previous conviction by a court in any part of the United Kingdom or in any other member State of the European Union;

(b) any reference in this Act to a previous sentence is to be construed as a reference to a previous sentence passed by any such court;
(c) any reference to a previous conviction of a particular offence is to be construed, in relation to a previous conviction by a court outside Scotland, as a reference to a previous conviction of an equivalent offence; and

(d) any reference to a previous sentence of a particular kind is to be construed, in relation to a previous sentence passed by a court outside Scotland, as a reference to a previous sentence of an equivalent kind.”.

PART 2

OTHER ENACTMENTS

The Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 (c.45)

9 In section 58 of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982, after subsection (4) insert—

“(4A) In subsection (4), the reference to a conviction for theft includes a reference to a conviction by a court in England and Wales, Northern Ireland or a member State of the European Union other than the United Kingdom of an offence that is equivalent to theft.

(4B) Any issue of equivalence arising in pursuance of subsection (4A) is for the court to determine.”.

The Prisoners and Criminal Proceedings (Scotland) Act 1993 (c.9)

10 In section 27(1) of the Prisoners and Criminal Proceedings (Scotland) Act 1993 (interpretation of Part 1), insert at the appropriate place—

““previous conviction” means a previous conviction by a court in any part of the United Kingdom or in any other member State of the European Union;”.

The Criminal Law (Consolidation) (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.39)

11 (1) Section 9 of the Criminal Law (Consolidation) (Scotland) Act 1995 (permitting girl to use premises for intercourse) is amended as follows.

(2) In subsection (2A)—

(a) the word “or” immediately following paragraph (a) is repealed, and

(b) after paragraph (a) insert—

“(aa) that person has a previous conviction for a relevant foreign offence committed against a person under the age of 16; or”.

(3) In subsection (3)—

(a) the word “and” immediately following paragraph (a) is repealed, and

(b) after paragraph (a) insert—

“(aa) “a previous conviction for a relevant foreign offence” has the same meaning as in section 39(5)(aa) of that Act; and”.
The Custodial Sentences and Weapons (Scotland) Act 2007 (asp 17)

12 In section 4(1) of the Custodial Sentences and Weapons (Scotland) Act 2007 (basic definitions for purposes of Part 2), insert at the appropriate place—

““previous conviction” means a previous conviction by a court in any part of the United Kingdom or in any other member State of the European Union,”.

The Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009 (asp 9)

13 (1) Section 39 of the Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009 (defences in relation to offences against older children) is amended as follows.

(2) In subsection (2)—

(a) in paragraph (a)—

(i) the word “or” immediately following sub-paragraph (i) is repealed, and
(ii) after sub-paragraph (i) insert—

“(ia) if A has a previous conviction for a relevant foreign offence committed against a person under the age of 16, or”,

(b) in paragraph (b)—

(i) the word “or” immediately following sub-paragraph (i) is repealed, and
(ii) after sub-paragraph (i) insert—

“(ia) if B has a previous conviction for a relevant foreign offence committed against a person under the age of 16, or”.

(3) In subsection (5), after paragraph (a) insert—

“(aa) “a previous conviction for a relevant foreign offence” means a previous conviction by a court in a member State of the European Union other than the United Kingdom for an offence that is equivalent to one listed in paragraph 1, 4, 7, 10, 13 (so far as applying to an offence listed in paragraph 1, 4, 7 or 10) or 14 of schedule 1,”

(4) After subsection (5) insert—

“(5A) Any issue of equivalence arising in pursuance of subsection (5)(aa) is for the court to determine.

(5B) For that purpose, an offence may be equivalent to one listed in paragraph 1, 4, 7, 10, 13 (so far as applying to an offence listed in paragraph 1, 4, 7 or 10) or 14 of schedule 1 even though, under the law of the member State (or part of the member State) in question, it is an offence—

(a) regardless of the age of the victim, or
(b) only if committed against a person under an age other than 16 years.”.

Section 54

Kenny MacAskill

462 In section 54, page 65, line 30, leave out <the close of the whole of the evidence> and insert <one or other (but not both) of the appropriate events>
In section 54, page 65, leave out lines 39 and 40 and insert—

< ( ) For the purposes of subsection (1), “the appropriate events” are—

(a) the close of the whole of the evidence,

(b) the conclusion of the prosecutor’s address to the jury on the evidence.>

In section 54, page 66, line 15, leave out <the prosecutor to amend the indictment> and insert <that the indictment be amended>

In section 54, page 66, line 22, after first <of> insert <the judge or>

In section 54, page 66, line 29, leave out <the prosecutor to amend the indictment> and insert <that the indictment be amended>

In section 54, page 66, line 37, after first <of> insert <the judge or>

In section 54, page 66, line 37, at end insert—

<97D No acquittal on “no reasonable jury” grounds

(1) A judge has no power to direct the jury to return a not guilty verdict on any charge on the ground that no reasonable jury, properly directed on the evidence, could convict on the charge.

(2) Accordingly, no submission based on that ground or any ground of like effect is to be allowed.>

Section 55

In section 55, page 67, line 4, at end insert—

< (1A) If, immediately after an acquittal under section 97 or 97B(2)(a), the prosecutor moves for the trial diet to be adjourned for no more than 2 days in order to consider whether to appeal against the acquittal under subsection (1), the court of first instance must grant the motion unless the court considers that there are no arguable grounds of appeal.>
(1B) If, immediately after the giving of a direction under section 97B(2)(b) or 97C(2), the prosecutor moves for the trial diet to be adjourned for no more than 2 days in order to consider whether to appeal against the direction under subsection (1), the court of first instance must grant the motion unless the court considers that it would not be in the interests of justice to do so.

(1C) In considering whether it would be in the interests of justice to grant a motion for adjournment under subsection (1B), the court must have regard, amongst other things, to—

(a) whether, if an appeal were to be made and to be successful, continuing with the diet would have any impact on any subsequent or continued prosecution,

(b) whether there are any arguable grounds of appeal.

(1D) An appeal may not be brought under subsection (1) unless the prosecutor intimates intention to appeal—

(a) immediately after the acquittal or, as the case may be, the giving of the direction,

(b) if a motion to adjourn the trial diet under subsection (1A) or (1B) is granted, immediately upon resumption of the diet, or

(c) if such a motion is refused, immediately after the refusal.

(1E) Subsection (2) applies if—

(a) the prosecutor intimates an intention to appeal under subsection (1)(a), or

(b) the trial diet is adjourned under subsection (1A).

Kenny MacAskill
470 In section 55, page 67, line 5, leave out from beginning to <Court> and insert <Where this subsection applies, the court of first instance must suspend the effect of the acquittal and>

Kenny MacAskill
471 In section 55, page 67, line 10, leave out <exceptionally and>

Kenny MacAskill
472 In section 55, page 67, line 11, at end insert—

< ( ) The court may, under subsection (2)(b), order the detention of the person in custody only if the court considers that there are arguable grounds of appeal.>

Kenny MacAskill
473 In section 55, page 67, leave out lines 25 to 33

Kenny MacAskill
474 In section 55, page 68, line 5, leave out <an appeal is brought> and insert <the prosecutor intimates intention to appeal>
Kenny MacAskill

475 In section 55, page 68, line 28, leave out <or 107B>

Kenny MacAskill

476 In section 55, page 69, line 13, at end insert—

<( ) However, if the prosecutor moves for the diet to be deserted pro loco et tempore in relation to such other offence, the court must grant the motion.>

Section 57

Kenny MacAskill

477 In section 57, page 69, line 26, leave out <within 7 days after an appeal is brought under section 107A(1)> and insert <where the prosecutor intimates intention to appeal under section 107A(1), within 7 days after the acquittal or direction appealed against>

Section 58

Kenny MacAskill

478 In section 58, page 71, line 4, leave out from <18(7A)> to end of line 5 and insert <18 (prints, samples etc. in criminal investigations)—

( ) in subsection (3), for “section 18A” substitute “sections 18A to 18C”,

( ) in subsection (7A), for “sections 19 to 20” substitute “subject to the modification in subsection (7AA), sections 18A to 19C”, and

( ) after subsection (7A) insert—

“(7AA) The modification is that for the purposes of section 19C as it applies in relation to relevant physical data taken from or provided by a person outwith Scotland, subsection (7A) is to be read as if in paragraph (d) the words from “created” to the end were omitted.”.>

James Kelly

404 In section 58, page 71, line 4, leave out from <18(7A)> to <Act),> in line 5 and insert <18 (prints, samples etc. in criminal investigations)—

( ) in subsection (3), the words “or on the conclusion of such proceedings otherwise than with a conviction or an order under section 246(3) of this Act” are repealed, and

( ) in subsection (7A),>

James Kelly

405 In section 58, page 71, leave out line 6 and insert—

<( ) The title of section 18A becomes “Retention of samples, etc.: persons prosecuted but not convicted etc.’”, and in that section>
Kenny MacAskill

479 In section 58, page 71, leave out lines 7 to 10 and insert—

<( ) for subsection (1) substitute—

“(1) This section applies to—

(a) relevant physical data taken or provided under section 18(2), and

(b) any sample, or any information derived from a sample, taken under section 18(6) or (6A),

where the condition in subsection (2) is satisfied.”>

James Kelly

406 In section 58, page 71, line 11, after <(2)> insert—

<( ) the words “in respect of a relevant sexual offence or a relevant violent offence” are repealed, and

( )>

Kenny MacAskill

480 In section 58, page 71, line 13, leave out from <after> to <data,“> and insert <for “sample or information” substitute “relevant physical data, sample or information derived from a sample”>

James Kelly

407 In section 58, page 71, line 13, at end insert—

<( ) in subsection (4)(a), for “3” substitute “6”>

Kenny MacAskill

481 In section 58, page 71, line 14, leave out from beginning to <data,”> in line 15 and insert—

<( ) after subsection (8) insert—

“(8A) If the sheriff principal allows an appeal against the refusal of an application under subsection (5), the sheriff principal may make an order amending, or further amending, the destruction date.

(8B) An order under subsection (8A) must not specify a destruction date more than 2 years later than the previous destruction date.”,

( ) in subsection (10), for “sample or information” substitute “relevant physical data, sample or information derived from a sample”>

Kenny MacAskill

482 In section 58, page 71, line 18, at end insert <and

( ) in the definition of “relevant sexual offence” and “relevant violent offence”, after “have” insert “, subject to the modification in subsection (12),” , and

( ) after subsection (11) insert—
“(12) The modification is that the definition of “relevant sexual offence” in section 19A(6) is to be read as if for paragraph (g) there were substituted—

“(g) public indecency if it is apparent from the offence as charged in the indictment or complaint that there was a sexual aspect to the behaviour of the person charged;”.”.

James Kelly

In section 58, page 71, line 18, at end insert <, and

( ) the definition of “relevant sexual offence” and “relevant violent offence” is repealed.

After section 58

Stewart Maxwell

After section 58, insert—

<Retention of samples etc. where offer under sections 302 to 303ZA accepted

After section 18A of the 1995 Act insert—

“18AA Retention of samples etc. where offer under sections 302 to 303ZA accepted

(1) This section applies to—

(a) relevant physical data taken from or provided by a person under section 18(2), and

(b) any sample, or any information derived from a sample, taken from a person under section 18(6) or (6A),

where the conditions in subsection (2) are satisfied.

(2) The conditions are—

(a) the relevant physical data or sample was taken from or provided by the person while the person was under arrest or being detained in connection with the offence or offences in relation to which a relevant offer is issued to the person, and

(b) the person—

(i) accepts a relevant offer, or

(ii) in the case of a relevant offer other than one of the type mentioned in paragraph (d) of subsection (3), is deemed to accept a relevant offer.

(3) In this section “relevant offer” means—

(a) a conditional offer under section 302,

(b) a compensation offer under section 302A,

(c) a combined offer under section 302B, or

(d) a work offer under section 303ZA.
Subject to subsections (6) and (7) and section 18AB(9) and (10), the relevant physical data, sample or information derived from a sample must be destroyed no later than the destruction date.

In subsection (4), “destruction date” means—

(a) in relation to a relevant offer that relates only to—
   (i) a relevant sexual offence,
   (ii) a relevant violent offence, or
   (iii) both a relevant sexual offence and a relevant violent offence,
   the date of expiry of the period of 3 years beginning with the date on which the relevant offer is issued or such later date as an order under section 18AB(2) or (6) may specify,

(b) in relation to a relevant offer that relates to—
   (i) an offence or offences falling within paragraph (a), and
   (ii) any other offence,
   the date of expiry of the period of 3 years beginning with the date on which the relevant offer is issued or such later date as an order under section 18AB(2) or (6) may specify,

(c) in relation to a relevant offer that does not relate to an offence falling within paragraph (a), the date of expiry of the period of 2 years beginning with the date on which the relevant offer is issued.

If a relevant offer is recalled by virtue of section 302C(5) or a decision to uphold it is quashed under section 302C(7)(a), all record of the relevant physical data, sample and information derived from a sample must be destroyed as soon as possible after—

(a) the prosecutor decides not to issue a further relevant offer to the person,

(b) the prosecutor decides not to institute criminal proceedings against the person, or

(c) the prosecutor institutes criminal proceedings against the person and those proceedings conclude otherwise than with a conviction or an order under section 246(3).

If a relevant offer is set aside by virtue of section 303ZB, all record of the relevant physical data, sample and information derived from a sample must be destroyed as soon as possible after the setting aside.

In this section, “relevant sexual offence” and “relevant violent offence” have, subject to the modification in subsection (9), the same meanings as in section 19A(6) and include any attempt, conspiracy or incitement to commit such an offence.

The modification is that the definition of “relevant sexual offence” in section 19A(6) is to be read as if for paragraph (g) there were substituted—

“(g) public indecency if it is apparent from the relevant offer (as defined in section 18AA(3)) relating to the offence that there was a sexual aspect to the behaviour of the person to whom the relevant offer is issued;”.
Section 18AA: extension of retention period where relevant offer relates to certain sexual or violent offences

(1) This section applies where the destruction date for relevant physical data, a sample or information derived from a sample falls within section 18AA(5)(a) or (b).

(2) On a summary application made by the relevant chief constable within the period of 3 months before the destruction date, the sheriff may, if satisfied that there are reasonable grounds for doing so, make an order amending, or further amending, the destruction date.

(3) An application under subsection (2) may be made to any sheriff—
   (a) in whose sheriffdom the appropriate person resides,
   (b) in whose sheriffdom that person is believed by the applicant to be, or
   (c) to whose sheriffdom the person is believed by the applicant to be intending to come.

(4) An order under subsection (2) must not specify a destruction date more than 2 years later than the previous destruction date.

(5) The decision of the sheriff on an application under subsection (2) may be appealed to the sheriff principal within 21 days of the decision.

(6) If the sheriff principal allows an appeal against the refusal of an application under subsection (2), the sheriff principal may make an order amending, or further amending, the destruction date.

(7) An order under subsection (6) must not specify a destruction date more than 2 years later than the previous destruction date.

(8) The sheriff principal’s decision on an appeal under subsection (5) is final.

(9) Section 18AA(4) does not apply where—
   (a) an application under subsection (2) has been made but has not been determined,
   (b) the period within which an appeal may be brought under subsection (5) against a decision to refuse an application has not elapsed, or
   (c) such an appeal has been brought but has not been withdrawn or finally determined.

(10) Where—
   (a) the period within which an appeal referred to in subsection (9)(b) may be brought has elapsed without such an appeal being brought,
   (b) such an appeal is brought and is withdrawn or finally determined against the appellant, or
   (c) an appeal brought under subsection (5) against a decision to grant an application is determined in favour of the appellant,

the relevant physical data, sample or information derived from a sample must be destroyed as soon as possible after the period has elapsed, or, as the case may be, the appeal is withdrawn or determined.

(11) In this section—
“appropriate person” means the person from whom the relevant physical data was taken or by whom it was provided or from whom the sample was taken,

“destruction date” has the meaning given by section 18AA(5),

“the relevant chief constable” has the same meaning as in subsection
(11) of section 18A, with the modification that references to the person referred to in subsection (2) of that section are references to the appropriate person.”.

Stewart Maxwell

419 After section 58, insert—

<Retention of samples etc. taken or provided in connection with certain fixed penalty offences

After section 18A of the 1995 Act insert—

“18AC Retention of samples etc. taken or provided in connection with certain fixed penalty offences

(1) This section applies to—

(a) relevant physical data taken from or provided by a person under section
18(2), and
(b) any sample, or any information derived from a sample, taken from a person under section 18(6) or (6A),

where the conditions in subsection (2) are satisfied.

(2) The conditions are—

(a) the person was arrested or detained in connection with a fixed penalty
offence,
(b) the relevant physical data or sample was taken from or provided by the person while the person was under arrest or being detained in connection with that offence,
(c) after the relevant physical data or sample was taken from or provided by the person, a constable gave the person under section 129(1) of the 2004
Act—

(i) a fixed penalty notice in respect of that offence (the “main FPN”), or
(ii) the main FPN and one or more other fixed penalty notices in respect of fixed penalty offences arising out of the same circumstances as the offence to which the main FPN relates, and
(d) the person, in relation to the main FPN and any other fixed penalty notice of the type mentioned in paragraph (c)(ii)—

(i) pays the fixed penalty, or
(ii) pays any sum that the person is liable to pay by virtue of section
131(5) of the 2004 Act.
(3) Subject to subsections (4) and (5), the relevant physical data, sample or information derived from a sample must be destroyed before the end of the period of 2 years beginning with—

(a) where subsection (2)(c)(i) applies, the day on which the main FPN is given to the person,

(b) where subsection (2)(c)(ii) applies and—

(i) the main FPN and any other fixed penalty notice are given to the person on the same day, that day,

(ii) the main FPN and any other fixed penalty notice are given to the person on different days, the later day.

(4) Where—

(a) subsection (2)(c)(i) applies, and

(b) the main FPN is revoked under section 133(1) of the 2004 Act,

the relevant physical data, sample or information derived from a sample must be destroyed as soon as possible after the revocation.

(5) Where—

(a) subsection (2)(c)(ii) applies, and

(b) the main FPN and any other fixed penalty notices are revoked under section 133(1) of the 2004 Act,

the relevant physical data, sample or information derived from a sample must be destroyed as soon as possible after the revocations.

(6) In this section—

“the 2004 Act” means the Antisocial Behaviour etc. (Scotland) Act 2004 (asp 8),

“fixed penalty notice” has the meaning given by section 129(2) of the 2004 Act,

“fixed penalty offence” has the meaning given by section 128(1) of the 2004 Act.”.

Section 59

James Kelly

409 In section 59, page 72, line 19, leave out from <such> to second <offence> and insert—

<(  ) an offence of assault, categorised by the Principal Reporter as grave, or (  ) such—

(i) other relevant violent offence, or
(ii) relevant sexual offence,>
Robert Brown

380 In section 59, page 72, leave out lines 21 and 22, and insert—

<(7) Where this section applies, the sheriff may, on summary application by the relevant chief constable, make an order that, subject to section 18C(6) and (7), the relevant physical data, sample or the information must be destroyed no later than the destruction date.

(7A) The sheriff may only make the order referred to in subsection (7) if satisfied that the child continues to pose a risk to public safety and that retention of the relevant physical data, sample or information until the destruction date is justified by that risk.>

Kenny MacAskill

483 In section 59, page 72, line 21, leave out <18C(5) and (6)> and insert <18C(6) and (7)>

Kenny MacAskill

484 In section 59, page 72, line 21, leave out <the information> and insert <information derived from a sample>

Robert Brown

545 In section 59, page 72, leave out lines 25 to 36 and insert <the date on which the relevant offence mentioned in subsection (3), (4) or, as the case may be, (5) was committed; or

(b) such later date as an order under section 18C(1) may specify.

( ) For the purposes of subsection (8)(a)—

(a) if two or more relevant offences were committed on different dates, it is the most recent of those offences that is to be taken as the offence constituting the ground of referral; and

(b) if a relevant offence was committed on more than one date, the date on which the offence was committed is to be taken as the most recent of those dates.>

Robert Brown

381 In section 59, page 72, line 40, at end insert—

<“relevant chief constable” has the same meaning as in section 18A(11), with the modification that references to the person referred to in subsection (2) of that section are references to the child referred to in subsection (1);>

Kenny MacAskill

485 In section 59, page 73, line 1, after <have> insert <, subject to the modification in subsection (11),>

Kenny MacAskill

486 In section 59, page 73, line 3, at end insert—
<(11) The modification is that the definition of “relevant sexual offence” in section 19A(6) is to be read as if for paragraph (g) there were substituted—

“(g) public indecency if it is apparent from the ground of referral relating to the offence that there was a sexual aspect to the behaviour of the child;”.

James Kelly

411 In section 59, page 73, leave out lines 4 to 40

Robert Brown

546 In section 59, page 73, line 7, leave out from <there> to end of line 8 and insert <at least one ground for doing so, specified by virtue of subsection (1A), is established, make an order amending (or further amending) the destruction date.

<(1A) The Scottish Ministers must, by regulations made by statutory instrument, specify the grounds on which an order under subsection (1) may be made.

(1B) Before making regulations under subsection (1A), the Scottish Ministers must consult such persons as they consider appropriate.

(1C) A statutory instrument containing regulations under subsection (1A) is subject to annulment in pursuance of a resolution of the Scottish Parliament.>

Kenny MacAskill

487 In section 59, page 73, line 17, at end insert—

<(4A) If the sheriff principal allows an appeal against the refusal of an application under subsection (1), the sheriff principal may make an order amending, or further amending, the destruction date.

(4B) An order under subsection (4A) must not specify a destruction date more than 2 years later than the previous destruction date.>

Kenny MacAskill

488 In section 59, page 73, line 23, leave out <expired> and insert <elapsed>

Kenny MacAskill

489 In section 59, page 73, line 28, leave out <expired> and insert <elapsed>

Kenny MacAskill

490 In section 59, page 73, line 33, after <information> insert <derived from a sample>

Kenny MacAskill

491 In section 59, page 73, line 34, leave out from <practicable> to end of line and insert <possible after the period has elapsed or, as the case may be, the appeal is withdrawn or determined.>
Kenny MacAskill

492 In section 59, page 73, line 37, leave out <section 18A(11)> and insert <subsection (11) of section 18A>

Robert Brown

382 In section 59, page 73, line 37, leave out from <18A(11)> to end of line 40 and insert <18B(10)>

Kenny MacAskill

493 In section 59, page 74, line 1, leave out subsection (2)

James Kelly

412 In section 59, page 74, line 2, leave out from <after> to end of line and insert <at beginning insert “Except where section 18B applies and”>

After section 59

Kenny MacAskill

494 After section 59, insert—

<Extension of section 19A of 1995 Act>

In section 19A(6) of the 1995 Act (definitions of certain expressions for purposes of section 19A)—

(a) in the definition of “relevant sexual offence”, for paragraph (g) substitute—

“(g) public indecency if the court, in imposing sentence or otherwise disposing of the case, determined for the purposes of paragraph 60 of Schedule 3 to the Sexual Offences Act 2003 (c.42) that there was a significant sexual aspect to the offender’s behaviour in committing the offence;”, and

(b) in paragraph (h) of the definition of “relevant violent offence”, after subparagraph (iv), insert—

“(v) section 47(1) (possession of offensive weapon in public place), 49(1) (possession of article with blade or point in public place), 49A(1) or (2) (possession of article with blade or point or offensive weapon on school premises) or 49C(1) (possession of offensive weapon or article with blade or point in prison) of the Criminal Law (Consolidation) (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.39);”.

Section 60

Kenny MacAskill

495 In section 60, page 74, line 6, leave out <This section> and insert <Subsection (2)>
In section 60, page 74, line 7, leave out <, or any information derived from relevant physical data,>.

In section 60, page 74, line 12, leave out <, a sample or an impression> and insert <or a sample>.

In section 60, page 74, line 17, leave out <relevant physical data or a sample or impression> and insert .

In section 60, page 74, line 18, at end insert <and ( ) relevant physical data, a sample or information derived from a sample taken from, or provided by, a person outwith Scotland which is given by any person to—
(i) a police force,
(ii) the Scottish Police Services Authority, or
(iii) a person acting on behalf of a police force.>.

In section 60, page 74, line 19, leave out <, impression or information> and insert <or information derived from a sample>.

In section 60, page 74, line 23, leave out <, sample or impression> and insert <or sample>.

In section 60, page 74, line 23, at end insert—

<(2A) Subsections (2B) and (2C) apply to relevant physical data, a sample or information derived from a sample falling within any of paragraphs (a) to (d) of subsection (1) (“relevant material”).

(2B) If the relevant material is held by a police force, the Scottish Police Services Authority or a person acting on behalf of a police force, the police force or, as the case may be, the Authority or person may give the relevant material to another person for use by that person in accordance with subsection (2).

(2C) A police force, the Scottish Police Services Authority or a person acting on behalf of a police force may, in using the relevant material in accordance with subsection (2), check it against other relevant physical data, samples and information derived from samples received from another person.>
Kenny MacAskill
503 In section 60, page 74, line 33, leave out <the United Kingdom> and insert <Scotland>

Kenny MacAskill
504 In section 60, page 74, line 35, leave out <the United Kingdom> and insert <Scotland>

Kenny MacAskill
505 In section 60, page 74, line 38, leave out from <, impressions> to end of line 39 and insert <or information derived from a sample>

Kenny MacAskill
506 In section 60, page 75, leave out line 2

Kenny MacAskill
507 In section 60, page 75, leave out line 5

Kenny MacAskill
508 In section 60, page 75, line 7, leave out <, impression or relevant physical data>

Kenny MacAskill
509 In section 60, page 75, line 12, leave out <, impression>

Kenny MacAskill
510 In section 60, page 75, line 14, leave out from beginning to <impression”> in line 25 and insert <, after “information” insert “derived from a sample”;
   ( ) in subsection (5)(b), the words “with all information derived from them” are repealed,
   ( ) in subsection (6)(a), for “it or them” substitute “the sample”,
   ( ) in subsection (7)(a), the words “or relevant physical data”, in the second place where they occur, are repealed,>

Section 61

Kenny MacAskill
133 In section 61, page 76, line 6, after <reasons> insert <for making the reference>

Kenny MacAskill
134 In section 61, page 76, line 9, leave out from <additional> to end of line 10 and insert <the appellant to found the appeal on additional grounds>
Kenny MacAskill

In section 61, page 76, line 19, leave out <additional grounds to be raised> and insert <the appeal to be founded on additional grounds>

Before section 62

Kenny MacAskill

Before section 62, insert—

<Admissibility of prior statements of witnesses: abolition of competence test

(1) This section applies in relation to a prior statement made by a witness before the commencement of section 24 of the Vulnerable Witnesses (Scotland) Act 2004 (asp 3) (“the 2004 Act”) (which abolishes the competence test for witnesses in criminal and civil proceedings).

(2) For the purpose of the application of subsection (2)(c) of section 260 of the 1995 Act (admissibility of prior statement depends on competence of the witness at the time of the statement) in relation to the statement, section 24 of the 2004 Act is taken to have been in force at the time the statement was made.

(3) In this section, “prior statement” has the meaning it has in section 260 of the 1995 Act.>

Section 62

Robert Brown

In section 62, page 77, line 1, after <may> insert <, if satisfied that there is good reason to do so,>

After section 64

Kenny MacAskill

After section 64, insert—

<Child witnesses in proceedings for people trafficking offences

In section 271 of the 1995 Act (vulnerable witnesses: main definitions)—

(a) in subsection (1)(a), for “age of 16” substitute “relevant age”, and

(b) after subsection (1), insert—

“(1A) In subsection (1)(a), “the relevant age” means—

(a) in the case of a person who is giving or is to give evidence in proceedings for an offence under section 22 of the Criminal Justice (Scotland) Act 2003 (asp 7) (trafficking in prostitution etc.) or section 4 of the Asylum and Immigration (Treatment of Claimants, etc.) Act 2004 (c.19) (trafficking people for exploitation), the age of 18, and

(b) in any other case, the age of 16.”.
Section 66

Kenny MacAskill
431 In section 66, page 80, line 13, leave out from <other> to end of line 16 and insert <the jury>

Kenny MacAskill
432 In section 66, page 80, line 18, leave out <any persons within paragraph (a)(i) to (iii)> and insert <the judge or the jury>

Kenny MacAskill
433 In section 66, page 81, line 6, leave out <material> and insert <information>

Kenny MacAskill
434 In section 66, page 81, line 8, leave out <may> and insert <must>

Kenny MacAskill
435 In section 66, page 81, line 12, leave out <material”> and insert <information”>

Kenny MacAskill
436 In section 66, page 82, line 16, leave out <the weight of>

Kenny MacAskill
437 In section 66, page 82, line 18, leave out <the sole or decisive evidence> and insert <material in>

Kenny MacAskill
438 In section 66, page 82, line 36, leave out <warning> and insert <direction>

Kenny MacAskill
439 In section 66, page 83, leave out lines 33 to 36

Schedule 3

Kenny MacAskill
440 In schedule 3, page 148, line 28, leave out <treat the conviction as unsafe> and insert <quash the conviction>

Kenny MacAskill
441 In schedule 3, page 148, line 31, leave out <treat the conviction as unsafe> and insert <quash the conviction>
After section 67

Kenny MacAskill

442 After section 67, insert—

<European evidence warrants

(1) The Scottish Ministers may by order make provision for the purposes of and in connection with implementing any obligations of the United Kingdom created by or arising under the Framework Decision (so far as they have effect in or as regards Scotland).

(2) The provision may, in particular, confer functions—
   (a) on the Scottish Ministers,
   (b) on the Lord Advocate,
   (c) on other persons.

(3) An order under subsection (1) may modify any enactment.

(4) An order under subsection (1) may contain provision creating offences and a person who commits such an offence is liable to such penalties, not exceeding those mentioned in subsection (5), as are provided for in the order.

(5) Those penalties are—
   (a) on conviction on indictment, imprisonment for a period not exceeding 2 years, or a fine, or both,
   (b) on summary conviction, imprisonment for a period not exceeding 12 months, or a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum, or both.

Before section 68

Kenny MacAskill

443 Before section 68, insert—

<Lists of jurors

(1) The 1995 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In section 84 (juries: returns of jurors and preparation of lists)—
   (a) in subsection (3), for “list” substitute “lists”,
   (b) for subsection (4) substitute—

“(4) For the purpose of a trial in the sheriff court, the sheriff principal must furnish the clerk of court with a list of names, containing the number of persons required, from lists of potential jurors of—
   (a) the sheriff court district in which the trial is to be held (the “local district”), and

29
(b) if the sheriff principal considers it appropriate, any other sheriff court district or districts in the sheriffdom in which the trial is to be held (“other districts”).

(4A) Where the sheriff principal furnishes a list containing names of potential jurors of other districts, the sheriff principal may determine the proportion as between the local district and the other districts in which jurors are to be summoned.”,

(c) in subsection (5), for “list”, in both places where it occurs, substitute “lists”, and

(d) subsection (7) is repealed.

(3) In section 85(4) (juries: citation and attendance of jurors)—

(a) for the words from the beginning to “shall”, in the first place where it occurs, substitute “The sheriff clerk of—

(a) the sheriffdom in which the High Court is to sit, or

(b) the sheriff court district in which a trial in the sheriff court is to be held, shall”, and

(b) the word “such”, in the first place where it occurs, is repealed.>

Section 68

David McLetchie

415 In section 68, page 86, line 14, leave out from <for> to <relevant”> and insert <at beginning insert “subject to subsection (1A),”>

David McLetchie

416 In section 68, page 86, leave out lines 17 to 19 and insert—

<“(1A) In relation to criminal proceedings, a person is qualified and liable to serve as a juror despite being over 65 years of age.”>

After section 68

Kenny MacAskill

511 After section 68, insert—

<Excusal from jury service

(1) The Law Reform (Miscellaneous Provisions) (Scotland) Act 1980 is amended as follows.

(2) In section 1 (qualification of jurors)—

(a) in subsection (1), after “below” insert “and to section 1A”,

(b) in subsection (2), after “service” in the second place where it occurs insert “in relation to civil proceedings”,

(c) in subsection (3), after “service” in the first place where it occurs insert “in relation to civil proceedings”,

(d) in subsection (5), after “above” insert “or under section 1A”, and
(c) in subsection (6), after paragraph (a) insert—
   “(aa) section 1A;”.

(3) After section 1 insert—

“1A  Excusal of jurors in relation to criminal proceedings

(1) A person who is qualified under section 1(1) but is among the persons listed in Part III of Schedule 1 to this Act (being persons excusable as of right from jury service) is to be excused from jury service in relation to criminal proceedings on any occasion where the person—
   (a) has been required to provide information under section 3(2) of the Jurors (Scotland) Act 1825 (c.22); and
   (b) gives written notice to the sheriff principal that the person wishes to be excused, before the end of the period of 7 days beginning with the day on which the person receives the requirement.

(2) A person who is qualified under section 1(1) but is among the persons listed in Group C of Part III of Schedule 1 to this Act is to be excused from jury service in relation to criminal proceedings on any occasion where—
   (a) the person has been required to provide information under section 3(2) of the Jurors (Scotland) Act 1825; and
   (b) the person’s commanding officer certifies to the sheriff principal that it would be prejudicial to the efficiency of the force of which the person is a member were the person required to be absent from duty.”.

(4) In section 3(1)(a) (offences in connection with jury service), after “been” insert “required to provide information under section 3(2) of the Jurors (Scotland) Act 1825 or”.

Section 69

David McLetchie

417 In section 69, page 86, line 30, at end insert <and ( ) persons who have attained the age of 71;>

Section 70

Kenny MacAskill

136 In section 70, page 89, line 34, leave out <and Wales>

Kenny MacAskill

137 In section 70, page 90, line 21, leave out from <body> to end of line 23 and insert <health and social care body mentioned in paragraphs (a) to (e) of section 1(5) of the Health and Social Care (Reform) Act (Northern Ireland) 2009 (c.1).>
After section 71

Robert Brown

After section 71, insert—

<Collection of information on criminal injuries>

Duty of Health Boards to collect etc. information on criminal injuries

(1) The Scottish Ministers may make regulations requiring every Health Board to—
   (a) collect information on criminal injuries treated in or otherwise coming to the attention of relevant hospitals, and
   (b) provide that information to the relevant chief constable.

(2) The Scottish Ministers must make the first regulations under subsection (1) before the expiry of 12 months beginning with the day of Royal Assent.

(3) Regulations under subsection (1) must include provision that any information provided to a relevant chief constable must be in such a form that persons who have sustained criminal injuries cannot be identified.

(4) Regulations under subsection (1) may include provision about—
   (a) the criminal injuries about which information is to be collected (including by reference to the offences involved),
   (b) the information on such injuries which is to be collected (including information as to the places at which, and circumstances in which, those injuries are sustained), (c) the types of hospitals from which such information is to be collected (including the departments within such hospitals from which information is to be collected), (d) the times at which and manner in which such information is to be provided to relevant chief constables.

(5) In this section—
   “criminal injuries” means injuries which are, or are suspected of having been, directly attributable to the commission of an offence involving violence, “Health Board” means a board constituted by order under section 2(1)(a) of the National Health Service (Scotland) Act 1978 (c.29), “relevant chief constable” means the chief constable for the police force whose area comprises or includes all or part of the Health Board’s area, “relevant hospitals” means hospitals the administration of which is the Health
   Board’s responsibility.

Section 72

Kenny MacAskill

138 In section 72, page 94, line 29, leave out <Law> and insert <Justice>

Kenny MacAskill

139 In section 72, page 94, line 41, leave out <27> and insert <37>
In section 72, page 94, line 42, leave out <penetrative>.

In section 72, page 95, line 1, leave out <31> and insert <42>.

In section 72, page 95, line 2, leave out <35> and insert <46>.

In section 72, page 95, line 3, at end insert—

<(  ) an offence under section (Slavery, servitude and forced or compulsory labour) (slavery, servitude and forced or compulsory labour) of the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Act 2010 (asp 00).>

In section 72, page 95, line 14, leave out <42> and insert <54>.

In section 74, page 96, line 23, after <station> insert <in Scotland>.

In section 74, page 97, line 5, leave out from  to end of line and insert—

<(a) a requirement under section 117A(2) (surrender of passports: England and Wales and Northern Ireland), or

(b) a requirement under section 117B(2) (surrender of passports: Scotland).”>.

In section 74, page 97, line 5, at end insert—

<(1C) A person may be prosecuted, tried and punished for any offence under subsection (1B)—

(a) in any sheriff court district in which the person is apprehended or is in custody, or

(b) in such sheriff court district as the Lord Advocate may determine, as if the offence had been committed in that district (and the offence is, for all purposes incidental to or consequential on the trial or punishment, to be deemed to have been committed in that district).”>.
After section 74

Kenny MacAskill

145 After section 74, insert—

<Sex offender notification requirements

Sex offender notification requirements

(1) The Sexual Offences Act 2003 (c.42) is amended as follows.

(2) In section 85 (notification requirements: periodic notification)—

(a) in subsection (1), for “period of one year” substitute “applicable period”,

(b) in subsection (3), for “period referred to in subsection (1)” substitute “applicable period”, and

(c) after subsection (4) insert—

“(5) In this section, the “applicable period” means—

(a) in any case where subsection (6) applies to the relevant offender, such period not exceeding one year as the Scottish Ministers may prescribe in regulations, and

(b) in any other case, the period of one year.

(6) This subsection applies to the relevant offender if the last home address notified by the offender under section 83(1) or 84(1) or subsection (1) was the address or location of such a place as is mentioned in section 83(7)(b).”.

(3) In section 86 (notification requirements: travel outside the United Kingdom), subsection (4) is repealed.

(4) In section 87 (method of notification and related matters), subsection (6) is repealed.

(5) In section 96 (information about release or transfer), subsection (4) is repealed.

(6) In section 138 (orders and regulations)—

(a) in subsection (2), after “84,” insert “85,”, and

(b) after subsection (3) insert—

“(4) Orders or regulations made by the Scottish Ministers under this Act may—

(a) make different provision for different purposes,

(b) include supplementary, incidental, consequential, transitional, transitory or saving provisions.”.

>After section 75

Kenny MacAskill

146 After section 75, insert—

<Risk of sexual harm orders: spent convictions

In section 7 of the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974 (c.53) (limitations on rehabilitation under the Act), in subsection (2), after paragraph (bb) insert—
“(bc) in any proceedings on an application under section 2, 4 or 5 of the Protection of Children and Prevention of Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2005 (asp 9) or in any appeal under section 6 of that Act;”.

Section 77

Kenny MacAskill

523 In section 77, page 98, leave out lines 5 to 10

Kenny MacAskill

524 In section 77, page 98, line 14, leave out from <(including> to <operation)> in line 15

Kenny MacAskill

525 In section 77, page 98, line 22, at end insert—

<( ) After that section insert—

“10A Authorisation of surveillance: joint surveillance operations

In the case of a joint surveillance operation, where authorisation is sought for the carrying out of any form of conduct to which this Act applies, authorisation may be granted by any one of the persons having power to grant authorisation for the carrying out of that conduct.”.

Kenny MacAskill

526 In section 77, page 98, line 27, at end insert—

<( ) In section 14 (approval required for authorisations to take effect)—

(a) in subsection (5)(b), after “General” insert “or the Deputy Director General”, and
(b) subsection (7) is repealed.

Kenny MacAskill

527 In section 77, page 98, line 27, at end insert—

<( ) In section 16 (appeals against decisions by Surveillance Commissioners), in subsection (1), after “General” insert “or the Deputy Director General”.

Kenny MacAskill

528 In section 77, page 98, line 30, leave out from <, where> to <surveillance,> in line 31

Section 78

Kenny MacAskill

529 In section 78, page 98, line 39, leave out <(3)> and insert <(3A)>
In section 78, page 99, line 1, leave out <(3A)> and insert <(3AA)>

In section 78, page 99, line 8, leave out <or>

In section 78, page 99, line 18, leave out <(3A)> and insert <(3AA)>

In section 78, page 99, line 23, at end insert—

<(  ) in paragraph (cc) of subsection (6), after “General” insert “, or Deputy Director General,”.>

In section 78, page 99, line 26, leave out <(5)(a)> and insert <(5)>

In section 78, page 99, line 26, leave out <“where”> and insert <“Where”>

In section 78, page 99, after <operation,> insert <the person referred to in subsection (2)(h) is>

Section 79

In section 79, page 99, line 39, at end insert—

<(  ) In section 113B (enhanced criminal record certificates), in subsection (3), for the words from “, or” immediately following paragraph (a) to the end of paragraph (b), substitute “(or states that there is no such matter or information), and
(b) if the applicant is subject to notification requirements under Part 2 of the Sexual Offences Act 2003 (c.42), states that fact.”.>

In section 79, page 100, line 1, leave out <section 113B> and insert <that section>

After section 79

After section 79
Rehabilitation of offenders

Spent alternatives to prosecution: Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974

(1) The Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974 (c.53) is amended as follows.

(2) After section 8A (protection afforded to spent cautions), insert—

“8B Protection afforded to spent alternatives to prosecution: Scotland

(1) For the purposes of this Act, a person has been given an alternative to prosecution in respect of an offence if the person (whether before or after the commencement of this section)—

(a) has been given a warning in respect of the offence by—

(i) a constable in Scotland, or
(ii) a procurator fiscal,

(b) has accepted, or is deemed to have accepted—

(i) a conditional offer issued in respect of the offence under section 302 of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 (c.46), or
(ii) a compensation offer issued in respect of the offence under section 302A of that Act,

(c) has had a work order made against the person in respect of the offence under section 303ZA of that Act,

(d) has been given a fixed penalty notice in respect of the offence under section 129 of the Anti-social Behaviour etc. (Scotland) Act 2004 (asp 8),

(e) has accepted an offer made by a procurator fiscal in respect of the offence to undertake an activity or treatment or to receive services or do any other thing as an alternative to prosecution, or

(f) in respect of an offence under the law of a country or territory outside Scotland, has been given, or has accepted or is deemed to have accepted, anything corresponding to a warning, offer, order or notice falling within paragraphs (a) to (e) under the law of that country or territory.

(2) In this Act, references to an “alternative to prosecution” are to be read in accordance with subsection (1).

(3) Schedule 3 to this Act (protection for spent alternatives to prosecution: Scotland) has effect.”.

(3) After section 9A (unauthorised disclosure of spent cautions), insert—

“9B Unauthorised disclosure of spent alternatives to prosecution: Scotland

(1) In this section—

(a) “official record” means a record that—

(i) contains information about persons given an alternative to prosecution in respect of an offence, and

(ii) is kept for the purposes of its functions by a court, police force, Government department, part of the Scottish Administration or other local or public authority in Scotland,
(b) “relevant information” means information imputing that a named or otherwise identifiable living person has committed, been charged with, prosecuted for or given an alternative to prosecution in respect of an offence which is the subject of an alternative to prosecution which has become spent,

(c) “subject of the information”, in relation to relevant information, means the named or otherwise identifiable living person to whom the information relates.

(2) Subsection (3) applies to a person who, in the course of the person’s official duties (anywhere in the United Kingdom), has or has had custody of or access to an official record or the information contained in an official record.

(3) The person commits an offence if the person—

(a) obtains relevant information in the course of the person’s official duties,

(b) knows or has reasonable cause to suspect that the information is relevant information, and

(c) discloses the information to another person otherwise than in the course of the person’s official duties.

(4) Subsection (3) is subject to the terms of an order under subsection (6).

(5) In proceedings for an offence under subsection (3), it is a defence for the accused to show that the disclosure was made—

(a) to the subject of the information or to a person whom the accused reasonably believed to be the subject of the information, or

(b) to another person at the express request of the subject of the information or of a person whom the accused reasonably believed to be the subject of the information.

(6) The Scottish Ministers may by order provide for the disclosure of relevant information derived from an official record to be excepted from the provisions of subsection (3) in cases or classes of cases specified in the order.

(7) A person guilty of an offence under subsection (3) is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding level 4 on the standard scale.

(8) A person commits an offence if the person obtains relevant information from an official record by means of fraud, dishonesty or bribery.

(9) A person guilty of an offence under subsection (8) is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding level 5 on the standard scale, or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 6 months, or to both.”.

(4) After Schedule 2 (protection for spent convictions) insert—

“SCHEDULE 3

PROTECTION FOR SPENT ALTERNATIVES TO PROSECUTION: SCOTLAND

Preliminary

1 (1) For the purposes of this Act, an alternative to prosecution given to any person (whether before or after the commencement of this Schedule) becomes spent—

(a) in the case of—
(i) a warning referred to in paragraph (a) of subsection (1) of section 8B, or

(ii) a fixed penalty notice referred to in paragraph (d) of that subsection,

at the time the warning or notice is given,

(b) in any other case, at the end of the relevant period.

(2) The relevant period in relation to an alternative to prosecution is the period of 3 months beginning on the day on which the alternative to prosecution is given.

(3) Sub-paragraph (1)(a) is subject to sub-paragraph (5).

(4) Sub-paragraph (2) is subject to sub-paragraph (6).

(5) If a person who is given a fixed penalty notice referred to in section 8B(1)(d) in respect of an offence is subsequently prosecuted and convicted of the offence, the notice—

(a) becomes spent at the end of the rehabilitation period for the offence, and

(b) is to be treated as not having become spent in relation to any period before the end of that rehabilitation period.

(6) If a person who is given an alternative to prosecution (other than one to which sub-paragraph (1)(a) applies) in respect of an offence is subsequently prosecuted and convicted of the offence—

(a) the relevant period in relation to the alternative to prosecution ends at the same time as the rehabilitation period for the offence ends, and

(b) if the conviction occurs after the end of the period referred to sub-paragraph (2), the alternative to prosecution is to be treated as not having become spent in relation to any period before the end of the rehabilitation period for the offence.

2 (1) In this Schedule, “ancillary circumstances”, in relation to an alternative to prosecution, means any circumstances of the following—

(a) the offence in respect of which the alternative to prosecution is given or the conduct constituting the offence,

(b) any process preliminary to the alternative to prosecution being given (including consideration by any person of how to deal with the offence and the procedure for giving the alternative to prosecution),

(c) any proceedings for the offence which took place before the alternative to prosecution was given (including anything that happens after that time for the purpose of bringing the proceedings to an end),

(d) any judicial review proceedings relating to the alternative to prosecution,

(e) in the case of an offer referred to in paragraph (e) of subsection (1) of section 8B, anything done or undergone in pursuance of the terms of the offer.

(2) Where an alternative to prosecution is given in respect of two or more offences, references in sub-paragraph (1) to the offence in respect of which the alternative to prosecution is given includes a reference to each of the offences.
In this Schedule, “proceedings before a judicial authority” has the same meaning as in section 4.

Protection for spent alternatives to prosecution and ancillary circumstances

3 (1) A person who is given an alternative to prosecution in respect of an offence is, from the time the alternative to prosecution becomes spent, to be treated for all purposes in law as a person who has not committed, been charged with or prosecuted for, or been given an alternative to prosecution in respect of, the offence.

(2) Despite any enactment or rule of law to the contrary—
   (a) where an alternative to prosecution given to a person in respect of an offence has become spent, evidence is not admissible in any proceedings before a judicial authority exercising its jurisdiction or functions in Scotland to prove that the person has committed, been charged with or prosecuted for, or been given an alternative to prosecution in respect of, the offence,
   (b) a person must not, in any such proceedings, be asked any question relating to the person’s past which cannot be answered without acknowledging or referring to an alternative to prosecution that has become spent or any ancillary circumstances, and
   (c) if a person is asked such a question in any such proceedings, the person is not required to answer it.

(3) Sub-paragraphs (1) and (2) do not apply in relation to any proceedings—
   (a) for the offence in respect of which the alternative to prosecution was given, and
   (b) which are not part of the ancillary circumstances.

4 (1) This paragraph applies where a person (“A”) is asked a question, otherwise than in proceedings before a judicial authority, seeking information about—
   (a) A’s or another person’s previous conduct or circumstances,
   (b) offences previously committed by A or the other person, or
   (c) alternatives to prosecution previously given to A or the other person.

(2) The question is to be treated as not relating to alternatives to prosecution that have become spent or to any ancillary circumstances and may be answered accordingly.

(3) A is not to be subjected to any liability or otherwise prejudiced in law because of a failure to acknowledge or disclose an alternative to prosecution that has become spent or any ancillary circumstances in answering the question.

5 (1) An obligation imposed on a person (“A”) by a rule of law or by the provisions of an agreement or arrangement to disclose any matter to another person does not extend to requiring A to disclose an alternative to prosecution (whether one given to A or another person) that has become spent or any ancillary circumstances.
An alternative to prosecution that has become spent or any ancillary circumstances, or any failure to disclose an alternative to prosecution that has become spent or any ancillary circumstances, is not a ground for dismissing or excluding a person from any office, profession, occupation or employment, or for prejudicing the person in any way in any occupation or employment.

The Scottish Ministers may by order—

(a) exclude or modify the application of any of paragraphs (a) to (c) of paragraph 3(2) in relation to questions put in such circumstances as may be specified in the order,

(b) provide for exceptions from any of the provisions of paragraphs 4 and 5 in such cases or classes of case, or in relation to alternatives to prosecution of such descriptions, as may be specified in the order.

Paragraphs 3 to 5 do not affect—

(a) the operation of an alternative to prosecution, or

(b) the operation of an enactment by virtue of which, because of an alternative to prosecution, a person is subject to a disqualification, disability, prohibition or other restriction or effect for a period extending beyond the time at which the alternative to prosecution becomes spent.

Section 7(2), (3) and (4) apply for the purpose of this Schedule as follows.

Subsection (2), apart from paragraphs (b) and (d), applies to the determination of any issue, and the admission or requirement of evidence, relating to alternatives to prosecution previously given to a person and to ancillary circumstances as it applies to matters relating to a person’s previous convictions and circumstances ancillary thereto.

Subsection (3) applies to evidence of alternatives to prosecution previously given to a person and ancillary circumstances as it applies to evidence of a person’s previous convictions and the circumstances ancillary thereto.

For that purpose, subsection (3) has effect as if—

(a) a reference to subsection (2) or (4) of section 7 were a reference to that subsection as applied by this paragraph, and

(b) the words “or proceedings to which section 8 below applies” were omitted.

Subsection (4) applies for the purpose of excluding the application of paragraph 3.

For that purpose, subsection (4) has effect as if the words “(other than proceedings to which section 8 below applies)” were omitted.

References in the provisions applied by this paragraph to section 4(1) are to be read as references to paragraph 3.”

Kenny MacAskill

After section 79, insert—
Medical services in prisons

(1) For section 3A of the Prisons (Scotland) Act 1989 (c.45) (medical services in prisons) substitute—

“3A Medical officers for prisons

(1) The Scottish Ministers must designate one or more medical officers for each prison.

(2) A person may be designated as a medical officer for a prison only if the person is a registered medical practitioner performing primary medical services for prisoners at the prison under the National Health Service (Scotland) Act 1978 (c.29).

(3) A medical officer has the functions that are conferred on a medical officer for a prison by or under this Act or any other enactment.

(4) A medical officer is not an officer of the prison for the purposes of this Act.

(5) Rules under section 39 of this Act may provide for the governor of a prison to authorise the carrying out by officers of the prison of a search of any person who is in, or is seeking to enter, the prison for the purpose of providing medical services for any prisoner at the prison.

(6) Nothing in rules made by virtue of subsection (5) allows the governor to authorise an officer of a prison to require a person to remove any of the person’s clothing other than an outer coat, jacket, headgear, gloves and footwear.”.

(2) In section 41D of that Act (unlawful disclosure of information by medical officers), for subsection (1) substitute—

“(1) This section applies to—

(a) a medical officer for a prison, and

(b) any person acting under the supervision of such a medical officer.”.

(3) In section 107 of the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 (c.33) (officers of contracted out prisons), for subsections (6) to (8) substitute—

“(6) The director must designate one or more medical officers for the prison.

(7) A person may be designated as a medical officer for the prison only if the person is a registered medical practitioner performing primary medical services for prisoners at the prison under the National Health Service (Scotland) Act 1978 (c.29).”.

(4) In section 110 of that Act (consequential modifications of the 1989 Act etc.)—

(a) in each of subsections (3) and (4), for “3A(6)” substitute “3A(5) and (6)”,

(b) subsection (4A) is repealed, and

(c) in subsection (6), for “3A(1) to (5) (medical services)” substitute “3A(1) and (2) (medical officers)”.

(5) In section 111(3) of that Act (intervention by the Scottish Ministers), in paragraph (c), after “prison” insert “and the medical officer or officers for the prison”.

>
Section 80

Angela Constance

413 In section 80, page 100, line 29, after <victims> insert <(including children and young people)>.

Section 85

Kenny MacAskill

696 In section 85, page 104, line 7, leave out <an accused> and insert <criminal proceedings relating to a person>.

Kenny MacAskill

553 In section 85, page 104, line 7, leave out <(other than precognitions and victim statements)>.

Kenny MacAskill

697 In section 85, page 104, line 9, leave out <case against the accused> and insert <proceedings>.

Kenny MacAskill

555 In section 85, page 104, line 10, leave out subsection (2).

Kenny MacAskill

556* In section 85, page 104, line 20, at end insert—

<(3) In sections (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance) to (Review of ruling under section (Application by appellant for ruling on disclosure)) “information”, in relation to appellate proceedings, includes material of any kind given to or obtained by the prosecutor in connection with the appellate proceedings or the earlier proceedings.

(4) In subsection (3)—

“appellate proceedings” has the meaning given by section (Sections (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance) to (Review of ruling under section (Application by appellant for ruling on disclosure)): interpretation),

“earlier proceedings” has the meaning given in section (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance)(5).>.

Section 86

Kenny MacAskill

557 Leave out section 86 and insert—

<Provision of information to prosecutor: solemn cases

(1) This section applies where in a prosecution—

(a) an accused appears for the first time on petition, or
(b) an accused appears for the first time on indictment (not having appeared on petition in relation to the same matter).

(2) As soon as practicable after the appearance, the investigating agency must provide the prosecutor with details of all the information that may be relevant to the case for or against the accused that the agency is aware of that was obtained (whether by the agency or otherwise) in the course of investigating the matter to which the appearance relates.

(3) As soon as practicable after being required to do so by the prosecutor, the investigating agency must provide the prosecutor with any of that information that the prosecutor specifies in the requirement.

(4) In this section, “investigating agency” means—

(a) a police force, or

(b) such other person who—

(i) engages (to any extent) in the investigation of crime or sudden deaths, and

(ii) submits reports relating to those investigations to the procurator fiscal, as the Scottish Ministers may prescribe by regulations.>

Section 87

Kenny MacAskill

558 In section 87, page 105, line 24, leave out <86(3)> and insert <(Provision of information to prosecutor: solemn cases)(2)>

Kenny MacAskill

559 In section 87, page 105, line 30, leave out subsection (2) and insert—

<( ) As soon as practicable after becoming aware of the further information, the investigating agency must provide the prosecutor with details of it.

( ) As soon as practicable after being required to do so by the prosecutor, the investigating agency must provide the prosecutor with any of that further information that the prosecutor specifies in the requirement.>

Kenny MacAskill

560 In section 87, page 105, line 33, leave out from beginning to <“the” in line 34

Kenny MacAskill

561 In section 87, page 105, line 35, leave out <86(3)> and insert <(Provision of information to prosecutor: solemn cases)(2)>

Kenny MacAskill

562 In section 87, page 106, line 1, leave out <this section> and insert <subsection (3)>
Section 88

Kenny MacAskill

563 Leave out section 88

After section 88

Kenny MacAskill

564 After section 88, insert—

<Provision of information to prosecutor: summary cases

(1) This section applies where a plea of not guilty is recorded against an accused charged on summary complaint.

(2) As soon as practicable after the recording of the plea, the investigating agency must inform the prosecutor of the existence of all the information that may be relevant to the case for or against the accused that the agency is aware of that was obtained (whether by the agency or otherwise) in the course of investigating the matter to which the plea relates.

(3) As soon as practicable after being required to do so by the prosecutor, the investigating agency must provide the prosecutor with any of that information that the prosecutor specifies in the requirement.>

Kenny MacAskill

565 After section 88, insert—

<Continuing duty of investigating agency: summary cases

(1) This section applies where—

(a) an investigating agency has complied with section (Provision of information to prosecutor: summary cases)(2) in relation to an accused, and

(b) during the relevant period the investigating agency becomes aware that further information that may be relevant to the case for or against the accused has been obtained (whether by the agency or otherwise) in the course of investigating the accused’s case.

(2) As soon as practicable after becoming aware of the further information, the investigating agency must inform the prosecutor of the existence of the information.

(3) As soon as practicable after being required to do so by the prosecutor, the investigating agency must provide the prosecutor with any of that further information that the prosecutor specifies in the requirement.

(4) In this section, “relevant period” means the period—

(a) beginning with the investigating agency’s compliance with section (Provision of information to prosecutor: summary cases)(2) in relation to the accused, and

(b) ending with the agency’s receiving notice from the prosecutor of the conclusion of the proceedings against the accused.

(5) For the purposes of subsection (4), proceedings against an accused are to be taken to be concluded if—
(a) a plea of guilty is recorded against the accused,
(b) the accused is acquitted,
(c) the proceedings against the accused are deserted \textit{simpliciter},
(d) the accused is convicted and does not appeal against the conviction before the expiry of the time allowed for such an appeal,
(e) the proceedings are deserted \textit{pro loco et tempore} for any reason and no further trial diet is appointed, or
(f) the complaint falls or is for any other reason not brought to trial, the diet is not continued, adjourned or postponed and no further proceedings are in contemplation.

Section 89

\textbf{Kenny MacAskill}

566 In section 89, page 106, line 31, after \textit{where} insert \textit{in a prosecution}

\textbf{Kenny MacAskill}

567 In section 89, page 106, line 33, after \textit{indictment} insert \textit{(not having appeared on petition in relation to the same matter)}

\textbf{Bill Aitken}

147 In section 89, page 106, line 37, leave out \textit{review all the} and insert \textit{disclose to the accused all}

\textbf{Bill Aitken}

148 In section 89, page 106, line 38, leave out from \textit{and} to end of line 14 on page 107

\textbf{Kenny MacAskill}

568 In section 89, page 107, line 1, leave out from beginning to \textit{applies} in line 2 and insert—

\textit{<(b) disclose to the accused the information to which subsection (3) applies.}

(3) This subsection applies to information>

\textbf{Kenny MacAskill}

569 In section 89, page 107, line 3, leave out \textit{prosecution case} and insert \textit{evidence that is likely to be led by the prosecutor in the proceedings against the accused}

\textbf{Kenny MacAskill}

570 In section 89, page 107, line 5, leave out \textit{prosecution case} and insert \textit{evidence to be led by the prosecutor in the proceedings against the accused}

\textbf{Kenny MacAskill}

571 In section 89, page 107, line 6, leave out subsections (4) to (6)
After section 89

Kenny MacAskill

573 After section 89, insert—

<Disclosure of other information: solemn cases>

(1) This section applies where by virtue of subsection (2)(b) of section 89 the prosecutor is required to disclose information to an accused who falls within paragraph (a) or (b) of subsection (1) of that section.

(2) As soon as practicable after complying with the requirement, the prosecutor must disclose to the accused details of any information which the prosecutor is not required to disclose under section 89(2)(b) but which may be relevant to the case for or against the accused.

(3) The prosecutor need not disclose under subsection (2) details of sensitive information.

(4) In subsection (3), “sensitive”, in relation to an item of information, means that if it were to be disclosed there would be a risk of—

(a) causing serious injury, or death, to any person,

(b) obstructing or preventing the prevention, detection, investigation or prosecution of crime, or

(c) causing serious prejudice to the public interest.>

Section 90

Kenny MacAskill

574 In section 90, page 107, line 19, leave out <subsection (5) or (6) of section 89> and insert <section 89(2)(b)>

Bill Aitken

150 In section 90, page 107, line 19, leave out <(5) or (6)> and insert <(2)>

Kenny MacAskill

575 In section 90, page 107, line 24, leave out from beginning to <“the”> in line 27 and insert <and

(b) disclose to the accused any information to which section 89(3) applies.

(2A) As soon as practicable after complying with subsection (2), the prosecutor must disclose to the accused details of any other information that may be relevant to the case for or against the accused of which the prosecutor is aware.

(2B) The prosecutor need not disclose under subsection (2A) details of sensitive information.
(2C) In subsection (2)>

Bill Aitken

151 In section 90, page 107, leave out lines 24 to 26 and insert(b) disclose to the accused any such information not already disclosed under section 89(2).>

Kenny MacAskill

576 In section 90, page 107, line 28, leave out <subsection (5) or (6) of section 89> and insert <section 89(2)(b)>

Bill Aitken

152 In section 90, page 107, line 28, leave out <(5) or (6)> and insert <(2)>

Kenny MacAskill

577 In section 90, page 107, line 30, at end insert—<“sensitive” has the meaning given by section (Disclosure of other information: solemn cases)(4).>

Kenny MacAskill

578 In section 90, page 107, line 31, leave out <this section> and insert <subsection (2C)>

Section 91

Kenny MacAskill

579 In section 91, page 108, line 5, leave out <under section 89(5) or 90(2)> and insert <by virtue of this Part>

Bill Aitken

153 In section 91, page 108, line 5, leave out <89(5) or 90(2)> and insert <89(2) or 90(2)(b)>

Kenny MacAskill

580 Move section 91 to after section 99

Section 92

Kenny MacAskill

581 In section 92, page 108, line 10, leave out from <section> to <accused> in line 11 and insert <this Part the prosecutor is required to disclose>
Bill Aitken

154 In section 92, page 108, line 10, leave out <89(5), 90(2)(c), 94(1)(c) or 95(3)(c)> and insert <89(2) or 90(2)(b)>

Kenny MacAskill

582 Move section 92 to after section 96

Section 93

Bill Aitken

155 In section 93, page 108, line 20, leave out <(5)> and insert <(2)>

Kenny MacAskill

583 Leave out section 93

Section 94

Kenny MacAskill

584 In section 94, page 108, line 30, leave out from beginning to <pre-trial> in line 31 and insert—

<(1) This section applies where the accused lodges a defence statement under section 70A of the 1995 Act.

(1A) As soon as practicable after the prosecutor receives a copy of the defence>

Kenny MacAskill

585 In section 94, page 108, leave out lines 34 to 36 and insert <and

(b) disclose to the accused any information to which section 89(3) applies.>

Kenny MacAskill

586 In section 94, page 109, line 8, leave out lines 8 to 13 and insert—

<(4) At least 7 days before the trial diet the accused must—

(a) where there has been no material change in circumstances in relation to the accused’s defence since the last defence statement was lodged, lodge a statement stating that fact,

(b) where there has been a material change in circumstances in relation to the accused’s defence since the last defence statement was lodged, lodge a defence statement.>

Kenny MacAskill

587 In section 94, page 109, line 13, at end insert—

<(4A) If after lodging a statement under subsection (2), (3) or (4) there is a material change in circumstances in relation to the accused’s defence, the accused must lodge a defence statement.
Where subsection (4A) requires a defence statement to be lodged, it must be lodged before the trial diet begins unless on cause shown the court allows it to be lodged during the trial diet.

Kenny MacAskill

588 In section 94, page 109, line 14, after <statement> insert—

<( )>

Kenny MacAskill

589 In section 94, page 109, line 14, leave out <other>

Kenny MacAskill

590 In section 94, page 109, line 15, at end insert <or

( ) during the trial diet if the court on cause shown allows it.>

Kenny MacAskill

591 In section 94, page 109, line 15, at end insert—

<( ) As soon as practicable after lodging a defence statement or a statement under subsection (4)(a), the accused must send a copy of the statement to the prosecutor and any co-accused.>

Kenny MacAskill

592 In section 94, page 109, line 20, at end insert—

<( ) particulars of the matters of fact on which the accused intends to rely for the purposes of the accused’s defence.>

Kenny MacAskill

593 In section 94, page 109, line 21, leave out <in relation to disclosure>

Kenny MacAskill

594 In section 94, page 109, line 27, at end insert—

<( ) In section 78 of the 1995 Act (special defences, incrimination, notice of witnesses etc.), after subsection (1) insert—

“(1A) Subsection (1) does not apply where—

(a) the accused lodges a defence statement under section 70A, and

(b) the accused’s defence consists of or includes a special defence.”.>

Bill Aitken

Supported by: Robert Brown

156 Leave out section 94
Section 95

Kenny MacAskill

595 In section 95, page 109, line 32, leave out <prosecutor receives from the accused> and insert <accused lodges>

Kenny MacAskill

596 In section 95, page 109, line 38, at end insert—

<( ) particulars of the matters of fact on which the accused intends to rely for the purposes of the accused’s defence,>

Kenny MacAskill

597 In section 95, page 109, line 39, leave out <in relation to disclosure>

Kenny MacAskill

598 In section 95, page 110, line 4, at end insert—

<( ) As soon as practicable after lodging a defence statement, the accused must send a copy of the statement to the prosecutor and any co-accused.>

Kenny MacAskill

599 In section 95, page 110, line 5, after <receiving> insert

Kenny MacAskill

600 In section 95, page 110, leave out lines 8 to 10 and insert <and

(b) disclose to the accused any information to which section 89(3) applies.>

Kenny MacAskill

601 In section 95, page 110, line 24, at end insert—

<( ) In section 149B of the 1995 Act (notice of defences), after subsection (2) insert—

“(2A) Subsection (1) does not apply where—

(a) the accused lodges a defence statement under section 95 of the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Act 2010 (asp 00),

(b) the statement is lodged—

(i) where an intermediate diet is to be held, at or before the diet, or

(ii) where such a diet is not to be held, no later than 10 clear days before the trial diet, and

(c) the accused’s defence consists of or includes a defence to which that subsection applies.”.>
After section 95

Kenny MacAskill

602 After section 95, insert—

<Change in circumstances following lodging of defence statement: summary proceedings

(1) This section applies where the accused lodges a defence statement under section 95 at least 14 days before the trial diet.

(2) At least 7 days before the trial diet the accused must—

(a) where there has been no material change in circumstances in relation to the accused’s defence since the defence statement was lodged, lodge a statement stating that fact,

(b) where there has been a material change in circumstances in relation to the accused’s defence since the defence statement was lodged, lodge a defence statement.

(3) If after lodging a statement under subsection (2) there is a material change in circumstances in relation to the accused’s defence, the accused must lodge a defence statement.

(4) Where subsection (3) requires a defence statement to be lodged, it must be lodged before the trial diet begins unless on cause shown the court allows it to be lodged during the trial diet.

(5) As soon as practicable after lodging a statement under subsection (2)(a) or a defence statement under subsection (2)(b) or (3), the accused must send a copy of the statement concerned to the prosecutor and any co-accused.

(6) As soon as practicable after receiving a copy of a defence statement lodged under subsection (2)(b) or (3) the prosecutor must—

(a) review all the information that may be relevant to the case for or against the accused of which the prosecutor is aware, and

(b) disclose to the accused any information to which section 89(3) applies.

(7) In this section, “defence statement” is to be construed in accordance with section 95(2).>

Kenny MacAskill

603 After section 95, insert—

<Court rulings on disclosure

Application by accused for ruling on disclosure

(1) This section applies where the accused—
(a) has lodged a defence statement under section 70A of the 1995 Act or section 95 or (Change in circumstances following lodging of defence statement: summary proceedings) of this Act, and

(b) considers that the prosecutor has failed, in responding to the statement, to disclose to the accused an item of information to which section 89(3) applies (the “information in question”).

(2) The accused may apply to the court for a ruling on whether section 89(3) applies to the information in question.

(3) An application under subsection (2) is to be made in writing and must set out—

(a) where the accused is charged with more than one offence, the charge or charges to which the application relates,

(b) a description of the information in question, and

(c) the accused’s grounds for considering that section 89(3) applies to the information in question.

(4) On receiving an application under subsection (2), the court must appoint a hearing at which the application is to be considered and determined.

(5) However, the court may dispose of the application without appointing a hearing if the court considers that the application does not—

(a) comply with subsection (3), or

(b) otherwise disclose any reasonable grounds for considering that section 89(3) applies to the information in question.

(6) At a hearing appointed under subsection (4), the court must give the prosecutor and the accused an opportunity to be heard before determining the application.

(7) On determining the application, the court must—

(a) make a ruling on whether section 89(3) applies to the information in question or to any part of the information in question, and

(b) where the accused is charged with more than one offence, specify the charge or charges to which the ruling relates.

(8) Except where it is impracticable to do so, the application is to be assigned to the justice of the peace, sheriff or judge who is presiding, or is to preside, at the accused’s trial.

Kenny MacAskill

604 After section 95, insert—

Review of ruling under section (Application by accused for ruling on disclosure)

(1) This section applies where—

(a) the court has made a ruling under section (Application by accused for ruling on disclosure) that section 89(3) does not apply to an item of information (the “information in question”), and

(b) during the relevant period—

(i) the accused becomes aware of information (the “secondary information”) that was unavailable to the court at the time it made its ruling, and
(ii) the accused considers that, had the secondary information been available to the court at that time, it would have made a ruling that section 89(3) does apply to the information in question.

(2) The accused may apply to the court which made the ruling for a review of the ruling.

(3) An application under subsection (2) is to be made in writing and must set out—
   (a) where the accused is charged with more than one offence, the charge or charges to which the application relates,
   (b) a description of the information in question and the secondary information, and
   (c) the accused’s grounds for considering that section 89(3) applies to the information in question.

(4) On receiving an application under subsection (2), the court must appoint a hearing at which the application is to be considered and determined.

(5) However, the court may dispose of the application without appointing a hearing if the court considers that the application does not—
   (a) comply with subsection (3), or
   (b) otherwise disclose any reasonable grounds for considering that section 89(3) applies to the information in question.

(6) At a hearing appointed under subsection (4), the court must give the prosecutor and the accused an opportunity to be heard before determining the application.

(7) On determining the application, the court may—
   (a) affirm the ruling being reviewed, or
   (b) recall that ruling and—
      (i) make a ruling that section 89(3) applies to the information in question or to any part of the information in question, and
      (ii) where the accused is charged with more than one offence, specify the charge or charges to which the ruling relates.

(8) Except where it is impracticable to do so, the application is to be assigned to the justice of the peace, sheriff or judge who dealt with the application for the ruling that is being reviewed.

(9) Nothing in this section affects any right of appeal in relation to the ruling being reviewed.

(10) In this section, “relevant period”, in relation to an accused, means the period—
    (a) beginning with the making of the ruling being reviewed, and
    (b) ending with the conclusion of proceedings against the accused.

(11) For the purposes of subsection (10), proceedings against the accused are taken to be concluded if—
    (a) a plea of guilty is recorded against the accused,
    (b) the accused is acquitted,
    (c) the proceedings against the accused are deserted simpliciter,
    (d) the accused is convicted and does not appeal against the conviction before expiry of the time allowed for such an appeal, the proceedings are deserted pro loco et tempore for any reason and no further trial diet is appointed, or

(f) the indictment or complaint falls or is for any other reason not brought to trial, the diet is not continued, adjourned or postponed and no further proceedings are in contemplation.

Kenny MacAskill

605 After section 95, insert—

<Appeals against rulings under section (Application by accused for ruling on disclosure)>

(1) The prosecutor or the accused may, within the period of 7 days beginning with the day on which a ruling is made under section (Application by accused for ruling on disclosure), appeal to the High Court against the ruling.

(2) Where an appeal is brought under subsection (1), the court of first instance or the High Court may—

(a) postpone any trial diet that has been appointed for such period as it thinks appropriate,

(b) adjourn or further adjourn any hearing for such period as it thinks appropriate,

(c) direct that any period of postponement or adjournment under paragraph (a) or (b) or any part of such period is not to count toward any time limit applying in the case.

(3) In disposing of an appeal under subsection (1), the High Court may—

(a) affirm the ruling, or

(b) remit the case back to the court of first instance with such directions as the High Court thinks appropriate.

(4) This section does not affect any other right of appeal which any party may have in relation to a ruling under section (Application by accused for ruling on disclosure).

Section 96

Kenny MacAskill

606 In section 96, page 110, line 28, leave out <89(5), 90(2)(c), 94(1)(c) or 95(3)(c)> and insert <89(2)(b), 90(2)(b), 94(1A)(b) or 95(3)(b)>

Bill Aitken

158 In section 96, page 110, line 28, leave out <89(5), 90(2)(c), 94(1)(c) or 95(3)(c)> and insert <89(2) or 90(2)(b)>

Kenny MacAskill

607 In section 96, page 110, line 32, leave out from <is> to end of line and insert <but for that plea would have been likely to have formed part of the evidence to be led by the prosecutor in the proceedings against the accused.*>
After section 96

Kenny MacAskill

608* After section 96, insert—

 Disclosure after conclusion of proceedings at first instance

Sections (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance) to (Review of ruling under section (Application by appellant for ruling on disclosure)): interpretation

In sections (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance) to (Review of ruling under section (Application by appellant for ruling on disclosure))—

“appellant”, in relation to appellate proceedings, includes a person authorised by an order under section 303A(4) of the 1995 Act to institute or continue the proceedings,

“appellate proceedings” means—

(a) an appeal under section 106(1)(a) or (f) of the 1995 Act which brings under review an alleged miscarriage of justice,

(b) an appeal under paragraph (b), (ba), (bb), (c), (d), (db) or (dc) of subsection (1) of section 106 of the 1995 Act which brings under review in accordance with subsection (3)(a) of that section an alleged miscarriage of justice,

(c) an appeal under section 175(2) or (d) of the 1995 Act which brings under review an alleged miscarriage of justice,

(d) an appeal under paragraph (b), (c) or (cb) of subsection (2) of section 175 of the 1995 Act which brings under review an alleged miscarriage of justice which is based on the type of miscarriage described in subsection (5) of that section,

(e) an appeal to the Supreme Court against a determination by the High Court of Justiciary of a devolution issue,

(f) an appeal against conviction by bill of suspension under section 191(1) of the 1995 Act,

(g) an appeal against conviction by bill of advocation,

(h) a petition to the nobile officium in respect of a matter arising out of criminal proceedings which brings under review an alleged miscarriage of justice which is based on the existence and significance of new evidence,

(i) an appeal under section 62(1)(b) of the 1995 Act against a finding under section 55(2) of that Act,

(j) the referral to the High Court of Justiciary under section 194B of the 1995 Act of—

(i) a conviction, or

(ii) a finding under section 55(2) of that Act.

Kenny MacAskill

609* After section 96, insert—
Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance

(1) This section applies where appellate proceedings are instituted in relation to an appellant.

(2) As soon as practicable after the relevant act the prosecutor must—
   (a) review all information of which the prosecutor is aware that relates to the grounds of appeal in the appellate proceedings, and
   (b) disclose to the appellant any information that falls within subsection (3).

(3) Information falls within this subsection if it is—
   (a) information that the prosecutor was required by virtue of section 89(2)(b) or 90(2)(b) to disclose in the earlier proceedings but did not disclose,
   (b) information to which, during the earlier proceedings, the prosecutor considered paragraph (a) or (b) of section 89(3) did not apply but to which the prosecutor now considers one or both of those paragraphs would apply, or
   (c) information of which the prosecutor has become aware since the disposal of the earlier proceedings that, had the prosecutor been aware of it during those proceedings, the prosecutor would have been required to disclose by virtue of section 89(2)(b) or 90(2)(b).

(4) The prosecutor need not disclose under subsection (2) anything that the prosecutor has already disclosed to the appellant.

(5) In this section—
   “earlier proceedings”, in relation to appellate proceedings, means the proceedings to which the appellate proceedings relate,
   “relevant act” means—
   (a) in relation to proceedings of the type mentioned in paragraph (a) or (b) of the relevant definition, the granting under section 107(1)(a) of the 1995 Act of leave to appeal,
   (b) in relation to proceedings of the type mentioned in paragraph (c) or (d) of the relevant definition, the granting under section 180(1)(a) or, as the case may be, 187(1)(a) of that Act of leave to appeal,
   (c) in relation to proceedings of the type mentioned in paragraph (e) of the relevant definition, the granting of leave to appeal by the High Court of Justiciary or, as the case may be, the Supreme Court,
   (d) in relation to proceedings of the type mentioned in paragraph (f) of the relevant definition—
      (i) if leave to appeal is required, the granting under section 191(2) of that Act of leave to appeal,
      (ii) if leave to appeal is not required, service on the prosecutor under the relevant rule of a certified copy of the bill of suspension and the interlocutor granting first order for service,
   (e) in relation to proceedings of the type mentioned in paragraph (g) of the relevant definition, service on the prosecutor under the relevant rule of a certified copy of the bill of advocation and the interlocutor granting first order for service,
(f) in relation to proceedings of the type mentioned in paragraph (h) of the relevant definition, service on the prosecutor under the relevant rule of a certified copy of the petition and the interlocutor granting first order for service,

(g) in relation to proceedings of the type mentioned in paragraph (i) of the relevant definition, the lodging of the appeal,

(h) in relation to proceedings of the type mentioned in paragraph (j) of the relevant definition, the lodging of the grounds of appeal by the person to whom the referral relates,

“relevant definition” means the definition of appellate proceedings in section (Sections (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance) to (Review of ruling under section (Application by appellant for ruling on disclosure)): interpretation),

(ii) the abandonment of the appeal under section 184(1) of that Act,

(iii) the setting aside of the conviction or sentence or, as the case may be, conviction and sentence under section 188(1) of that Act, or

(iv) the disposal of the appeal under section 190(1) of that Act,

(c) in relation to proceedings of the type mentioned in paragraph (e), (f), (g) or (h) of the relevant definition, the disposal or abandonment of the appeal,

(d) in relation to proceedings of the type mentioned in paragraph (i) of the relevant definition, the disposal of the appeal under section 62(6) of that Act or the abandonment of the appeal,

(e) in relation to proceedings of the type mentioned in paragraph (j) of the relevant definition—

(i) if the referral or finding is being treated as if it were an appeal under Part 8 of that Act, the conclusion mentioned in paragraph (a) above,

(ii) if the referral or finding is being treated as if it were an appeal under Part 10 of that Act, the conclusion mentioned in paragraph (b) above or, where the referral or finding proceeds by way of bill of suspension, bill of advocation or petition to the nobile officium, paragraph (c) above.

(6) In this section, “relevant definition” has the meaning given by section (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance)(5).

Kenny MacAskill

611 After section 96, insert—

<Application to prosecutor for further disclosure

(1) This section applies where—

(a) the prosecutor has complied with section (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance)(2) in relation to an appellant, and

(b) the appellant lodges a further disclosure request—

(i) during the preliminary period, or

(ii) if the court on cause shown allows it, after the preliminary period but before the relevant conclusion.

(2) A further disclosure request must set out—

(a) by reference to the grounds of appeal, the nature of the information that the appellant wishes the prosecutor to disclose, and

(b) the reasons why the appellant considers that disclosure by the prosecutor of any such information is necessary.

(3) As soon as practicable after receiving a copy of the further disclosure request the prosecutor must—

(a) review any information of which the prosecutor is aware that relates to the request, and

(b) disclose to the appellant any of that information that falls within section (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance)(3).

(4) In this section—
“preliminary period”, in relation to the appellate proceedings concerned, means the period beginning with the relevant act and ending with the beginning of the hearing of the appellate proceedings,

“relevant act” has the meaning given by section (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance)(5),

“relevant conclusion” has the meaning given by section (Continuing duty of prosecutor)(5).

Kenny MacAskill

612 After section 96, insert—

<Further duty of prosecutor: conviction upheld on appeal>

(1) This section applies where—

(a) in an appeal to the High Court of Justiciary, the High Court upholds the conviction of a person, and

(b) after the conclusion of the appeal the prosecutor becomes aware of—

(i) information that the prosecutor was required by virtue of section 89(2)(b) or 90(2)(b) to disclose in the earlier proceedings but did not disclose, or

(ii) information that falls within section (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance)(3) which would have related to the grounds of appeal but was not disclosed.

(2) As soon as practicable after becoming aware of the information the prosecutor must disclose it to the person.

(3) The prosecutor need not disclose under subsection (2) anything that the prosecutor has already disclosed to the person.

(4) Nothing in this section requires the prosecutor to carry out a review of information of which the prosecutor is aware.

(5) In this section, “earlier proceedings” has the meaning given by section (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance)(5).

Kenny MacAskill

613 After section 96, insert—

<Further duty of prosecutor: convicted persons>

(1) This section applies where—

(a) a person has been convicted,

(b) after conviction the prosecutor becomes aware of information that the prosecutor was required by virtue of section 89(2)(b) or 90(2)(b) to disclose in the earlier proceedings but did not disclose, and

(c) section (Further duty of prosecutor: conviction upheld on appeal) does not apply.

(2) As soon as practicable after becoming aware of the information the prosecutor must disclose it to the person.

(3) If the person institutes appellate proceedings in relation to the conviction, the prosecutor need not comply with the duty imposed by subsection (2) during the appropriate period.
(4) The prosecutor need not disclose under subsection (2) anything that the prosecutor has already disclosed to the person.

(5) Nothing in this section requires the prosecutor to carry out a review of information of which the prosecutor is aware.

(6) In this section—

“appropriate period”, in relation to appellate proceedings, means the period beginning with the relevant act and ending with the relevant conclusion,

“earlier proceedings” has the meaning given by section (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance)(5),

“relevant act” has the meaning given by section (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance)(5),

“relevant conclusion” has the meaning given by section (Continuing duty of prosecutor)(5).>

Kenny MacAskill

614 After section 96, insert—

<Further duty of prosecutor: appeal against acquittal

(1) This section applies where—

(a) the prosecutor appeals against the acquittal of a person, and

(b) after lodging the appeal the prosecutor becomes aware of information which relates to the appeal and falls within section (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance)(3).

(2) As soon as practicable after becoming aware of the information the prosecutor must disclose it to the person.

(3) The prosecutor need not disclose under subsection (2) anything that the prosecutor has already disclosed to the person.

(4) The prosecutor ceases to be subject to the duty imposed by subsection (2) on the disposal of the appeal by the High Court of Justiciary.

(5) Nothing in this section requires the prosecutor to carry out a review of information of which the prosecutor is aware.>

Kenny MacAskill

615 After section 96, insert—

<Court rulings on disclosure: appellate proceedings

Application by appellant for ruling on disclosure

(1) This section applies where the appellant—

(a) has made a further disclosure request under section (Application to prosecutor for further disclosure), and

(b) considers that the prosecutor has failed, in responding to the request, to disclose to the appellant an item of information falling within section (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance)(3) (the “information in question”).
The appellant may apply to the court for a ruling on whether the information in question falls within section (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance)(3).

An application under subsection (2) is to be made in writing and must set out—

(a) where the appellant is or was charged with more than one offence, the charge or charges to which the application relates,

(b) a description of the information in question, and

(c) the appellant’s grounds for considering that the information in question falls within section (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance)(3).

On receiving an application under subsection (2), the court must appoint a hearing at which the application is to be considered and determined.

However, the court may dispose of the application without appointing a hearing if the court considers that the application does not—

(a) comply with subsection (3), or

(b) otherwise disclose any reasonable grounds for considering that the information in question falls within section (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance)(3).

At a hearing appointed under subsection (4), the court must give the prosecutor and the appellant an opportunity to be heard before determining the application.

On determining the application, the court must—

(a) make a ruling on whether the information in question, or any part of the information in question, falls within section (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance)(3), and

(b) where the appellant is or was charged with more than one offence, specify the charge or charges to which the ruling relates.

In this section, “the court” means the court before which the appellant’s appeal is brought.

Except where it is impracticable to do so, the application is to be assigned to the judges who are to hear the appellant’s appeal.

Kenny MacAskill

After section 96, insert—

Review of ruling under section (Application by appellant for ruling on disclosure)

This section applies where—

(a) the court has made a ruling under section (Application by appellant for ruling on disclosure) that an item of information (the “information in question”) does not fall within section (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance)(3), and

(b) during the relevant period—

(i) the appellant becomes aware of information (“secondary information”) that was unavailable to the court at the time it made its ruling, and
(ii) the appellant considers that, had the secondary information been available to the court at that time, it would have made a ruling that the information in question does fall within section (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance)(3).

(2) The appellant may apply to the court which made the ruling for a review of the ruling.

(3) An application under subsection (2) is to be made in writing and must set out—
   (a) where the appellant is or was charged with more than one offence, the charge or charges to which the application relates,
   (b) a description of the information in question and the secondary information, and
   (c) the appellant’s grounds for considering that the information in question falls within section (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance)(3).

(4) On receiving an application under subsection (2), the court must appoint a hearing at which the application is to be considered and determined.

(5) However, the court may dispose of the application without appointing a hearing if the court considers that the application does not—
   (a) comply with subsection (3), or
   (b) otherwise disclose any reasonable grounds for considering that the information in question falls within section (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance)(3).

(6) At a hearing appointed under subsection (4), the court must give the prosecutor and the appellant an opportunity to be heard before determining the application.

(7) On determining the application, the court may—
   (a) affirm the ruling being reviewed, or
   (b) recall that ruling and—
      (i) make a ruling that the information in question, or any part of the information in question, falls within section (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance)(3), and
      (ii) where the appellant is or was charged with more than one offence, specify the charge or charges to which the ruling relates.

(8) Except where it is impracticable to do so, the application is to be assigned to the judges who dealt with the application for the ruling that is being reviewed.

(9) Nothing in this section affects any right of appeal in relation to the ruling being reviewed.

(10) In this section, “relevant period”, in relation to an appellant, means the period—
    (a) beginning with the making of the ruling being reviewed, and
    (b) ending with the relevant conclusion.

(11) In subsection (10), “relevant conclusion” has the meaning given by section (Continuing duty of prosecutor)(5).
Section 97

Kenny MacAskill

617 In section 97, page 110, line 36, leave out <section 89(5), 90(2)(c), 94(1)(c) or 95(3)(c)> and insert <this Part>

Bill Aitken

159 In section 97, page 110, line 36, leave out <89(5), 90(2)(c), 94(1)(c) or 95(3)(c)> and insert <89(2) or 90(2)(b)>

Kenny MacAskill

618 In section 97, page 111, line 2, at end insert—

<(4) Subsection (5) applies if the information is contained in—
  (a) a precognition,
  (b) a victim statement,
  (c) a statement given by a person whom the prosecutor does not intend to call to give evidence in the proceedings, or
  (d) where the proceedings relating to the accused are summary proceedings, a statement given by a person whom the prosecutor intends to call to give evidence in the proceedings.

(5) In complying with the requirement, the prosecutor need not disclose the precognition or, as the case may be, statement.

(6) Subsection (7) applies where the proceedings relating to the accused are solemn proceedings and—
  (a) the information is contained in a statement given by a person whom the prosecutor intends to call to give evidence in the proceedings, or
  (b) the information is contained in a statement and the prosecutor intends to apply under section 259 of the 1995 Act to have evidence of the statement admitted in the proceedings.

(7) In complying with the requirement, the prosecutor must disclose the statement.>

Section 98

Kenny MacAskill

619 In section 98, page 111, line 5, leave out <section 89(5), 90(2)(c), 94(1)(c) or 95(3)(c)> and insert <this Part>

Bill Aitken

160 In section 98, page 111, line 5, leave out <89(5), 90(2)(c), 94(1)(c) or 95(3)(c)> and insert <89(2) or 90(2)(b)>
In section 98, page 111, line 19, at end insert—

\((4A)\) If despite subsection (2) the accused discloses the information or anything recorded in it other than in accordance with subsection (3), a person to whom information is disclosed must not use or disclose the information or anything recorded in it.

\((4B)\) Subsections (2), (4) and (4A) do not apply in relation to the use or disclosure of information which is in the public domain at the time of the use or disclosure.

In section 98, page 111, line 22, at end insert—

\(<(\quad\text{a petition to the nobile officium,}\>

\(<\quad\text{proceedings in the European Court of Human Rights.}>\>

In section 100, page 111, line 36, leave out <89(5), 90(2)(c), 94(1)(c) or 95(3)(c)> and insert <89(2) or 90(2)(b)>.

Leave out section 100.

Leave out section 101.

In section 102, page 112, line 26, leave out <89(5), 90(2)(c), 94(1)(c) or 95(3)(c)> and insert <89(2)(b), 90(2)(b), 94(1A)(b), 95(3)(b) or (Change in circumstances following lodging of defence statement: summary proceedings)(6)(b)>

In section 102, page 112, line 26, leave out from <89(5)> to <information> in line 28 and insert <89(2) or 90(2)(b) the prosecutor is required to disclose an item of information to an accused>.

In section 102, page 112, line 31, leave out from <serious> to <prejudice> in line 34 and insert
Kenny MacAskill

626 In section 102, page 112, line 35, leave out from  to end of line 7 on page 113 and insert <an order under section 106 (a “section 106 order”).>

Bill Aitken

163 In section 102, page 113, line 5, leave out from <89(5)> to end of line 6 and insert <89(2) or, as the case may be, 90(2)(b)>

Section 103

Kenny MacAskill

627 In section 103, page 113, line 10, leave out <non-disclosure> and insert <section 106>

Kenny MacAskill

628 In section 103, page 113, line 11, leave out <non-disclosure> and insert <section 106>

Kenny MacAskill

629 In section 103, page 113, line 12, after <may> insert <also>

Kenny MacAskill

630 In section 103, page 113, line 15, leave out <non-disclosure> and insert <section 106>

Kenny MacAskill

631 In section 103, page 113, line 16, after <may> insert <also>

Kenny MacAskill

632 In section 103, page 113, line 20, leave out <non-disclosure> and insert <section 106>

Kenny MacAskill

633 In section 103, page 113, line 24, after <section> insert <104 or>

Kenny MacAskill

634 In section 103, page 113, line 26, leave out <non-disclosure> and insert <section 106>

Kenny MacAskill

635 In section 103, page 113, line 31, leave out <non-disclosure> and insert <section 106>

Section 104

Kenny MacAskill

636 In section 104, page 114, line 4, leave out <non-disclosure> and insert <section 106>
In section 104, page 114, line 12, leave out from <non-disclosure> to <accused> in line 16 and insert <section 106 order would be likely to cause a real risk of substantial harm or damage to the public interest>

In section 104, page 114, leave out lines 23 to 26 and insert—

<(9) If after giving the prosecutor and, subject to subsection (10), the accused an opportunity to be heard, the court is satisfied that the conditions in subsection (4) of section 105 are met, the court may make an exclusion order under subsection (3) of that section.

(10) On the application of the prosecutor the court may exclude the accused from the hearing appointed under subsection (8).>

Section 105

In section 105, page 114, line 28, after <103(2)(b)> insert <or (3)>

In section 105, page 114, line 30, at end insert—

<(2A) On the application of the prosecutor the court may exclude the accused from the hearing.>

In section 105, page 114, line 31, after <and> insert <, subject to subsection (2A),>

In section 105, page 114, line 31, after <heard> insert <on the applications for the exclusion order and the section 106 order to which it relates>

In section 105, page 114, line 36, leave out from <non-disclosure> to <accused> in line 39 and insert <section 106 order relates would be likely to cause a real risk of substantial harm or damage to the public interest>

Section 106

In section 106, page 115, line 3, leave out <non-disclosure> and insert <section 106>

In section 106, page 115, line 6, leave out subsection (2) and insert—
The court must—

(a) consider the item of information to which the application for a section 106 order relates,
(b) give the prosecutor and (if the court has not made an exclusion order) the accused the opportunity to be heard, and
(c) determine—

(i) whether the conditions in subsection (3) apply, and
(ii) if so, whether subsection (4) applies.

Kenny MacAskill

646 In section 106, page 115, line 14, leave out <89(5), 90(2)(c), 94(1)(c) or 95(3)(c)> and insert <89(2)(b), 90(2)(b), 94(1A)(b), 95(3)(b) or (Change in circumstances following lodging of defence statement: summary proceedings)(6)(b)>

Bill Aitken

164 In section 106, page 115, line 14, leave out <89(5), 90(2)(c), 94(1)(c) or 95(3)(c)> and insert <89(2) or 90(2)(b)>

Kenny MacAskill

647 In section 106, page 115, line 15, at end insert—

<(  ) that section 89(3)(a) or (b) applies to the information,>

Kenny MacAskill

648 In section 106, page 115, line 16, leave out from <it> to <prejudice> in line 20 and insert <there would be a real risk of substantial harm or damage>

Kenny MacAskill

649 In section 106, page 115, line 23, leave out <non-disclosure> and insert <section 106>

Kenny MacAskill

650 In section 106, page 115, line 25, leave out from beginning to <conditions> in line 27 and insert <This subsection applies if the court considers that the item of information could be disclosed or partly disclosed in such a way that—

(a) the condition>

Kenny MacAskill

651 In section 106, page 115, line 29, at end insert—

<(4A) If the court considers that subsection (3) (but not subsection (4)) applies, it may make a section 106 order preventing disclosure of the information.

(4B) If the court considers that subsection (4) applies, it may make a section 106 order requiring the information to be disclosed or partly disclosed to the accused in the manner specified in the order.>
After section 106

Kenny MacAskill

653 After section 106, insert—

<Orders preventing or restricting disclosure: Secretary of State

Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State

(1) The Secretary of State may apply to the relevant court for an order under this section (a “section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) order”) in relation to the proposed disclosure by the prosecutor to the accused in relevant criminal proceedings of information which the prosecutor—

(a) is required to disclose by virtue of section 89(2)(b), 90(2)(b), 94(1A)(b), 95(3)(b) or (Change in circumstances following lodging of defence statement: summary proceedings)(6)(b), or

(b) intends to disclose otherwise than by virtue of this Part.

(2) If the Secretary of State also makes an application in accordance with subsection (2) or (3) of section (Application for ancillary orders: Secretary of State), the relevant court must comply with subsections (6) and (7) of that section.

(3) Where an application is made under subsection (1), the relevant court must—

(a) consider the item of information to which the application relates,

(b) give the Secretary of State and the prosecutor the opportunity to be heard,

(c) if the application relates to information which the prosecutor is required to disclose by virtue of section 89(2)(b), 90(2)(b), 94(1A)(b), 95(3)(b) or (Change in circumstances following lodging of defence statement: summary proceedings)(6)(b) and a non-attendance order has not been made, give the accused the opportunity to be heard, and

(d) determine—

(i) whether the conditions in subsection (4) apply, and

(ii) if so, whether subsection (5) applies.

(4) The conditions are—

(a) that if the item of information were to be disclosed there would be a real risk of substantial harm or damage to the public interest,

(b) that withholding the item of information would be consistent with the accused’s receiving a fair trial, and

(c) that the public interest would be protected only if a section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) order of the type mentioned in subsection (6) were to be made.

(5) This subsection applies if the court considers that the item of information could be disclosed or partly disclosed in such a way that—

(a) the condition in paragraph (a) of subsection (4) would not be met, and
(b) the disclosure (or partial disclosure) would be consistent with the accused’s receiving a fair trial.

(6) If the court considers that subsection (4) (but not subsection (5)) applies, it may make a section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) order preventing disclosure of the information.

(7) If the court considers that subsection (5) applies, it may make a section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) order requiring the information to be disclosed or partly disclosed to the accused in the manner specified in the order.

(8) For the purposes of subsection (7) the order may in particular specify that—

(a) the item of information be disclosed after removing or obscuring parts of it (whether by redaction or otherwise),
(b) extracts or summaries of the item of information (or part of it) be disclosed instead of the item of information.

(9) If an application is made under this section the relevant criminal proceedings must be adjourned until the application is disposed of or withdrawn.

(10) In this section and sections (Application for ancillary orders: Secretary of State) to (Application for non-attendance order)—

“relevant court” means the court before which relevant criminal proceedings are taking place,

“relevant criminal proceedings” means criminal proceedings relating to the item of information to which the application under this section relates.

Kenny MacAskill

654 After section 106, insert—

<Application for ancillary orders: Secretary of State>

(1) This section applies where the Secretary of State applies for a section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) order.

(2) If the application under section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) relates to solemn proceedings, the Secretary of State may also apply to the relevant court for—

(a) a restricted notification order and a non-attendance order, or
(b) a non-attendance order (but not a restricted notification order).

(3) If the application under section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) relates to summary proceedings, the Secretary of State may also apply to the court for a non-attendance order.

(4) A restricted notification order is an order under section (Application for restricted notification order and non-attendance order) prohibiting notice being given to the accused of—

(a) the making of an application for—

(i) the section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) order to which the restricted notification order relates,
(ii) the restricted notification order, and
(iii) a non-attendance order, and

(b) the determination of those applications.

(5) A non-attendance order is an order under section (Application for non-attendance order) prohibiting the accused from attending or making representations in proceedings for the determination of the application for the section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) order to which the non-attendance order relates.

(6) Subsection (7) applies where the Secretary of State applies—

(a) by virtue of subsection (2)(a) for a restricted notification order and a non-attendance order, or

(b) by virtue of subsection (2)(a) or (b) for a non-attendance order.

(7) Before determining the application for the section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) order, the court must—

(a) in accordance with section (Application for restricted notification order and non-attendance order), determine any application for a restricted notification order and a non-attendance order,

(b) in accordance with section (Application for non-attendance order), determine any application for a non-attendance order.

Kenny MacAskill

655 After section 106, insert—

Application for restricted notification order and non-attendance order

(1) This section applies where by virtue of section (Application for ancillary orders: Secretary of State)(2)(a) the Secretary of State applies for a restricted notification order and a non-attendance order.

(2) On receiving the application, the relevant court must appoint a hearing to determine whether a restricted notification order should be made.

(3) The accused is not to be notified of—

(a) the applications for the section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) order, the restricted notification order and the non-attendance order, or

(b) the hearing appointed under subsection (2).

(4) The accused is not to be given the opportunity to be heard or be represented at the hearing.

(5) If, after giving the Secretary of State and the prosecutor an opportunity to be heard, the court is satisfied that the conditions in subsection (6) are met, the court may make a restricted notification order.

(6) Those conditions are—

(a) that disclosure to the accused of the making of the application for the section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) order would be likely to cause a real risk of substantial harm or damage to the public interest, and
(b) that, having regard to all the circumstances, the making of a restricted notification order would be consistent with the accused’s receiving a fair trial.

(7) If the court makes a restricted notification order, it must also make a non-attendance order.

(8) If the court refuses to make a restricted notification order, the court must appoint a hearing to determine the application for a non-attendance order.

(9) If after giving the Secretary of State, the prosecutor and, subject to subsection (10), the accused an opportunity to be heard, the court is satisfied that the conditions in subsection (5) of section (Application for non-attendance order) are met, the court may make a non-attendance order under subsection (4) of that section.

(10) On the application of the Secretary of State the court may exclude the accused from the hearing appointed under subsection (8).

Kenny MacAskill

656 After section 106, insert—

<Application for non-attendance order

(1) This section applies where by virtue of section (Application for ancillary orders: Secretary of State)(2)(b) the Secretary of State applies for a non-attendance order (but not a restricted notification order).

(2) On receiving the application, the relevant court must appoint a hearing.

(3) On the application of the Secretary of State the court may exclude the accused from the hearing.

(4) If after giving the Secretary of State, the prosecutor and, if not excluded under subsection (3), the accused an opportunity to be heard the court is satisfied that the conditions in subsection (5) are met, the court may make a non-attendance order.

(5) Those conditions are—

(a) that disclosure to the accused of the nature of the information to which the application for the section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) order relates would be likely to cause a real risk of substantial harm or damage to the public interest, and

(b) that, having regard to all the circumstances, the making of a non-attendance order would be consistent with the accused’s receiving a fair trial.

Section 107

Kenny MacAskill

657 In section 107, page 116, leave out lines 6 and 7 and insert—

<( ) an application for an exclusion order,

( ) an application for a section 106 order,

( ) an application for a restricted notification order,

( ) an application for a non-attendance order, an application for a section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) order).

Kenny MacAskill

In section 107, page 116, line 11, leave out <to whom the application, review or appeal relates> and insert <in relation to the determination of the application, review or appeal>

Kenny MacAskill

In section 107, page 116, line 14, at end insert—

Before deciding whether to appoint special counsel in a non-notification case, the court—

(a) must give the prosecutor an opportunity to be heard, but
(b) must not give the accused an opportunity to be heard.

Before deciding whether to appoint special counsel in a restricted notification case, the court—

(a) must give the prosecutor and the Secretary of State an opportunity to be heard,
(b) must not give the accused an opportunity to be heard.

Before deciding whether to appoint special counsel in any case other than a non-notification case or a restricted notification case, the court must give all the parties an opportunity to be heard.

The prosecutor may appeal to the High Court against a decision of the court not to appoint special counsel in any case.

The Secretary of State may appeal to the High Court against a decision of the court not to appoint special counsel in a restricted notification case.

The accused may appeal to the High Court against a decision not to appoint special counsel in any case other than a non-notification case or a restricted notification case.

In this section and section (Role of special counsel)—

“non-notification case” means a case where the court is determining—

(a) an application for a non-notification order,
(b) an application for review of the grant or refusal of a non-notification order,
(c) an appeal relating to such an order,

“restricted notification case” means a case where the court is determining—

(a) an application for a restricted notification order,
(b) an application for review of the grant or refusal of a restricted notification order,
(c) an appeal relating to such an order.

After section 107

Kenny MacAskill

After section 107, insert—
Persons eligible for appointment as special counsel

The court may appoint a person as special counsel under section 107(2) only if the person is a solicitor or advocate.

Kenny MacAskill

After section 107, insert—

Role of special counsel

(1) Special counsel’s duty is, in relation to the determination of the relevant application or appeal, to act in the best interests of the accused with a view only to ensuring that the accused receives a fair trial.

(2) Special counsel—
   (a) is entitled to see the confidential information, but
   (b) must not disclose any of the confidential information to the accused or the accused’s representative (if any).

(3) Special counsel appointed in a non-notification case or a restricted notification case must not—
   (a) disclose to the accused or the accused’s representative (if any) the making of the relevant application or appeal, or
   (b) otherwise communicate with the accused or the accused’s representative (if any) about the relevant application or appeal.

(4) Special counsel appointed in any case other than a non-notification case or a restricted notification case must not communicate with the accused about the relevant application or appeal except—
   (a) with the permission of the court, and
   (b) where permission is given, in accordance with such conditions as the court may impose.

(5) Before deciding whether to grant permission, the court must give—
   (a) the prosecutor, and
   (b) in the case of an application for a section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) order or a non-attendance order, the Secretary of State, an opportunity to be heard.

(6) In this section—
   “the confidential information” means—
   (a) the information to which the relevant application or appeal relates, and
   (b) a copy of the relevant application or appeal,
   “relevant application or appeal” means the application or appeal referred to in section 107(1) in respect of which special counsel is appointed.

Kenny MacAskill

After section 107, insert—
<Appeals>

(1) The prosecutor may appeal to the High Court against—
   (a) the making of a section 106 order under section 106(4B),
   (b) the making of a section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) order,
   (c) the making of a restricted notification order,
   (d) the making of a non-attendance order,
   (e) the refusal of an application for a non-notification order,
   (f) the refusal of an application for an exclusion order, or
   (g) the refusal of an application for a section 106 order.

(2) The accused may appeal to the High Court against the making of—
   (a) an exclusion order under section 105(3),
   (b) a section 106 order,
   (c) a section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) order, or
   (d) a non-attendance order.

(3) The Secretary of State may appeal to the High Court against—
   (a) the making of a section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) order under section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State)(7),
   (b) the refusal of an application for a restricted notification order,
   (c) the refusal of an application for a non-attendance order, or
   (d) the refusal of an application for a section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) order.

(4) If special counsel was appointed in relation to an application for a non-notification order, special counsel may appeal to the High Court against the making of—
   (a) the non-notification order, or
   (b) a section 106 order in relation to the same item of information.

(5) If special counsel was appointed in relation to an application for a restricted notification order, special counsel may appeal to the High Court against the making of—
   (a) the restricted notification order, or
   (b) a section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) order in relation to the same item of information.

(6) An appeal must be lodged not later than 7 days after the decision appealed against.

(7) The prosecutor is entitled to be heard in any appeal under this section.

(8) The accused is entitled to be heard in an appeal under—
   (a) subsection (1)(a) or (g) or (2)(b) unless—
      (i) a non-notification order has been made, or
      (ii) an exclusion order has been made,
(b) subsection (1)(b), (2)(c) or (3)(a) or (d) unless—
   (i) a restricted notification order has been made, or
   (ii) a non-attendance order has been made,
(c) subsection (1)(d), (2)(d) or (3)(c) unless the court, on the application of the Secretary of State, excludes the accused from the hearing,
(d) subsection (1)(f) or (2)(a) unless the court, on the application of the prosecutor excludes the accused from the hearing.

(9) The Secretary of State is entitled to be heard in an appeal under subsection (1)(b), (c) or (d), (2)(c) or (d) or (5).>
Kenny MacAskill
669 In section 111, page 117, line 8, leave out <non-disclosure> and insert <section 106>

Kenny MacAskill
670 In section 111, page 117, line 10, leave out <non-disclosure> and insert <section 106>

Kenny MacAskill
671 In section 111, page 117, line 13, leave out <non-disclosure> and insert <section 106>

Kenny MacAskill
672 In section 111, page 117, line 16, after <prosecutor> insert <or, as the case may be, special counsel>

Kenny MacAskill
673 In section 111, page 117, line 19, leave out <non-disclosure> and insert <section 106>

Kenny MacAskill
674 In section 111, page 117, line 22, after <prosecutor> insert <or, as the case may be, special counsel>

Kenny MacAskill
675 In section 111, page 117, line 26, leave out <non-disclosure> and insert <section 106>

Kenny MacAskill
676 In section 111, page 117, line 27, leave out <non-disclosure> and insert <section 106>

Kenny MacAskill
677 In section 111, page 117, line 29, leave out <non-disclosure> and insert <section 106>

Kenny MacAskill
678 In section 111, page 117, line 33, leave out <non-disclosure> and insert <section 106>

After section 111

Kenny MacAskill
679 After section 111, insert—

<Review of section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) order>

(1) This section applies where—

(a) the court makes a section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) order, and
(b) during the relevant period the Secretary of State, the prosecutor, special counsel or the accused becomes aware of information that was unavailable to the court at the time when the order was made.

(2) The Secretary of State or, as the case may be, the prosecutor, special counsel or the accused may apply to the court to review the order.

(3) Except in the case mentioned in subsection (4), the same persons are entitled to be heard on the application for review as were entitled to be heard on the application for the order.

(4) If—

(a) a restricted notification order was granted in relation to the order which is under review, and

(b) the court is satisfied that the conditions in section (Application for restricted notification order and non-attendance order) (6) are met, the court may, where the Secretary of State or, as the case may be, the prosecutor or special counsel applies for the review, make an order prohibiting notification of the application for review being given to the accused.

(5) If—

(a) a non-attendance order was granted in relation to the order which is under review, and

(b) the court is satisfied that the conditions in section (Application for non-attendance order) (5) are met, the court may, where the Secretary of State or, as the case may be, the prosecutor, special counsel or the accused applies for the review, exclude the accused from the review.

(6) If the court is not satisfied that the conditions mentioned in section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) (4) are met, the court may—

(a) recall the order which is under review, or

(b) recall the order which is under review and make an order requiring the information to be disclosed or partly disclosed to the accused in the specified manner.

(7) Nothing in this section affects any right of appeal in relation to the order which is under review.

(8) In this section—

“specified” means specified in the order of the court,

“the relevant period”, in relation to an accused, means the period—

(a) beginning with the making of the section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) order, and

(b) ending with the conclusion of the proceedings against the accused.
Section 112

Kenny MacAskill

680 In section 112, page 118, line 6, leave out <non-disclosure> and insert <section 106>

Kenny MacAskill

681 In section 112, page 118, line 6, after <order> insert <or a section (Order preventing or restricting disclosure: application by Secretary of State) order>

Kenny MacAskill

682 In section 112, page 118, line 7, after <consider> insert <in relation to each order>

Kenny MacAskill

683 In section 112, page 118, line 8, leave out <non-disclosure order> and insert <order concerned>

Kenny MacAskill

684 In section 112, page 118, line 10, leave out <non-disclosure order> and insert <order concerned>

Kenny MacAskill

685 In section 112, page 118, line 12, leave out <90(4)> and insert <111(8)>

Section 113

Kenny MacAskill

686 In section 113, page 118, line 21, leave out <non-disclosure> and insert <section 106>

Kenny MacAskill

687 In section 113, page 118, line 30, leave out <non-disclosure> and insert <section 106>

After section 115

Kenny MacAskill

688* After section 115, insert—

<Abolition of common law rules about disclosure>

(1) The provisions of this Part replace any equivalent common law rules about disclosure of information by the prosecutor in connection with criminal proceedings.

(2) The common law rules about disclosure of information by the prosecutor in connection with criminal proceedings are abolished in so far as they are replaced by or are inconsistent with the provisions of this Part.
Sections (Application by accused for ruling on disclosure) and (Application by appellant for ruling on disclosure) do not affect any right under the common law of an accused or appellant to seek disclosure or recovery of information by or from the prosecutor by means of a procedure other than an application under one or other of those sections.

Subsection (5) applies where, following an application (the “earlier disclosure application”) by the accused or the appellant under section (Application by accused for ruling on disclosure) or section (Application by appellant for ruling on disclosure), the court has made a ruling that (as the case may be)—

(a) section 89(3) does not apply to information, or

(b) information does not fall within section (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance)(3).

The accused or, as the case may be, the appellant, is not entitled to seek the disclosure or recovery of the same information by or from the prosecutor by means of any other procedure at common law on grounds that are substantially the same as any of those on which the earlier disclosure application was made.

Subsection (7) applies where, following an application (the “earlier common law application”) by the accused under a procedure other than an application under section (Application by accused for ruling on disclosure) or (Application by appellant for ruling on disclosure), the court has decided not to make an order for the recovery or disclosure of information by or from the prosecutor.

The accused or, as the case may be, the appellant is not entitled to make an application under section (Application by accused for ruling on disclosure) or (Application by appellant for ruling on disclosure) in relation to the same information on grounds that are substantially the same as any of those on which the earlier common law application was made.

In this section, “appellant” has the meaning given by section (Sections (Duty to disclose after conclusion of proceedings at first instance) to (Review of ruling under section (Application by appellant for ruling on disclosure)): interpretation).

Section 116

Kenny MacAskill

689 In section 116, page 119, line 20, leave out from <“prosecutor”> to end of line 21 and insert—

<“investigating agency” has the meaning given by section (Provision of information to prosecutor: solemn cases)(4),

“procurator fiscal” and “prosecutor” have the meanings given by section 307(1) of the 1995 Act.>

Kenny MacAskill

690 In section 116, page 119, line 24, leave out <89(5) and (6),> and insert <89(2)(b),

( ) section (Disclosure of other information: solemn cases)(2),>

Bill Aitken

166 In section 116, page 119, line 24, leave out from <89(5)> to end of line 27 and insert <89(2),

---

80
(b) section 90(1) and (2),
(c) section 93(2) (where it first occurs),>

Kenny MacAskill
691 In section 116, page 119, leave out line 26

Kenny MacAskill
692 In section 116, page 119, leave out line 30

Section 117

Angela Constance
24 In section 117, page 120, line 10, at end insert <, or
   (b) to determine or control that conduct despite being able to appreciate the nature or wrongfulness of it.>

Kenny MacAskill
167 In section 117, page 120, line 31, leave out <it> and insert <such abnormality>

Section 121

Kenny MacAskill
168 In section 121, page 123, leave out lines 2 and 3 and insert—
   <(3A) No order may be made under subsection (1) unless a draft of the statutory instrument containing the order has been laid before and approved by resolution of the Scottish Parliament.>

Section 122

Kenny MacAskill
169 In section 122, page 125, line 1, leave out from <5,> to <29> in line 2 and insert <5 and 11>

Section 123

Robert Brown
385 Leave out section 123

After section 124

Kenny MacAskill
170 After section 124, insert—
<Licensing of street trading: food hygiene certificates

(1) Section 39 of the 1982 Act (street traders’ licences) is amended as follows.

(2) In subsection (4), for the words from “the requirements” to the end substitute “such requirements as the Scottish Ministers may by order made by statutory instrument specify”.

(3) After subsection (4), insert—

“(5) An order under subsection (4) may specify requirements by reference to provision contained in another enactment.

(6) A statutory instrument containing an order made under subsection (4) is subject to annulment in pursuance of a resolution of the Scottish Parliament.”>
(4) After section 45 insert—

45A Control of lap dancing and other adult entertainment venues

1. A local authority may resolve that Schedule 2, as modified for the purposes of this section, is to have effect in their area in relation to adult entertainment venues; and, if they do so resolve, that Schedule (as so modified) has effect from the day specified in the resolution.

2. The day referred to in subsection (1) must not be before the expiry of the period of one month beginning with the day on which the resolution is passed.

3. A local authority must, not later than 28 days before the day referred to in subsection (1), publish notice that they have passed a resolution under this section in a newspaper circulating in their area.

4. The notice is to state the general effect of Schedule 2, as modified for the purposes of this section.

5. For the purposes of this section, Schedule 2 is modified as follows—

   (a) in paragraph 1, sub-paragraphs (b)(ii) (and the word “or” immediately preceding it) and (c) are omitted;

   (b) for paragraph 2 substitute—

   “2 In this Schedule, “adult entertainment venue” has the same meaning as in section 45A.”;

   (c) in paragraph 9—

   (i) after sub-paragraph (5)(c) insert—

   “(ca) where it is intended to sell alcohol in the adult entertainment venue, an application for the grant, renewal or transfer of a premises licence under Part 3 of the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 (asp 16) relating to that venue has been refused;”;

   (ii) after sub-paragraph (6) insert—

   “(6A) A local authority may refuse an application for the grant or renewal of a licence despite the fact that a premises licence under Part 3 of the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 (asp 16) is in effect in relation to the adult entertainment venue.”;

   (d) in paragraph 25, for “section 45” in each place where those words occur, substitute “section 45A”; and

   (e) for “sex shop”, in each place where those words occur, substitute “adult entertainment venue”.

6. In this section, “adult entertainment venue” means any premises, vehicle, vessel or stall used for a business which consists to a significant degree of providing relevant entertainment before a live audience; and, for the purposes of that definition—

   “audience” includes an audience of one;

   “display of nudity” means—

   (a) in the case of a woman, exposure of her breasts, nipples, pubic area, genitals or anus;

   (b) in the case of a man, exposure of his pubic area, genitals or anus;
“relevant entertainment” means—
(a) any live performance; or
(b) any live display of nudity,
which is of such a nature that, ignoring financial gain, it must reasonably be assumed to be provided solely or principally for the purpose of sexually stimulating any member of the audience (whether by verbal or other means).”.

Section 128

Kenny MacAskill

173 In section 128, page 129, line 25, at end insert—

<(  ) in paragraph 2(3)(b), after “application” insert “(other than the date and place of birth of any person)”,
(  ) in paragraph 2(8)(a), after “application” insert “(other than the date and place of birth of any person)”),>

Section 129

Kenny MacAskill

174 Leave out section 129

After section 130

Bill Aitken

460 After section 130, insert—

<Premises licence applications: crime prevention objective

In section 23(5) of the 2005 Act (grounds for refusal of premises licence application), after paragraph (b), insert—

“(ba) that the appropriate chief constable has made a recommendation under section 21(5) that the application be refused,”.>

After section 131

Kenny MacAskill

175 After section 131, insert—

<Reviews of premises licences: notification of determinations

(1) The 2005 Act is amended as follows.
(2) After section 39 (Licensing Board’s powers on review), insert—

“39A Notification of determinations

(1) Where a Licensing Board, at a review hearing—
(a) decides to take one of the steps mentioned in section 39(2), or
(b) decides not to take one of those steps,
the Board must give notice of the decision to each of the persons mentioned in subsection (2).

(2) The persons referred to in subsection (1) are—
(a) the holder of the premises licence, and
(b) where the decision is taken in connection with a premises licence review application, the applicant.

(3) Where subsection (1)(a) applies, the holder of the premises licence may, by notice to the clerk of the Board, require the Board to give a statement of reasons for the decision.

(4) Where—
(a) subsection (1)(a) or (b) applies, and
(b) the decision is taken in connection with a premises licence review application,
the applicant may, by notice to the clerk of the Board, require the Board to give a statement of reasons for the decision.

(5) Where the clerk of a Board receives a notice under subsection (3) or (4), the Board must issue a statement of the reasons for the decision to—
(a) the person giving the notice, and
(b) any other person to whom the Board gave notice under subsection (1).

(6) A statement of reasons under subsection (5) must be issued—
(a) by such time, and
(b) in such form and manner,
as may be prescribed.”.

After section 132

George Foulkes

542 After section 132, insert—

Premises licence applications: disability compliance statements

In section 20 of the 2005 Act (application for premises licence), after subsection (4)(f), insert—

“(fa) a statement of compliance with Part 3 of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995, including information as to where reasonable adjustments have been or will be made to remove barriers to access for disabled people,”.

Bill Aitken

547 After section 132, insert—
Premises licence: minor variations

(1) Section 29(6) of the 2005 Act (definition of minor variations to premises licence) is amended as follows.

(2) In paragraph (a), insert at the end “or if the variation relates only to parts of the premises to which the public does not have access”.

(3) After paragraph (c) insert—

“(ca) any reduction in the capacity of the premises,

(cb) any change in the name by which the business carried on in the premises is to be known or under which it trades,

(cc) any variation of the layout plan or operating plan required by virtue of any enactment relating to planning, building control, food safety or fire safety.”.

Robert Brown

550 After section 132, insert—

