2. If a company is dissolved, a licence cannot be transferred under either section 33 or 34. Although the licence does not cease to have effect it means that the premises must stop selling alcohol. The assets of the dissolved company fall to the Queens and Lord Treasurers Remembrancer who is unlikely to participate in a section 33 transfer. Administrative steps can be taken to have the company restored but if this is not an option then again there is pressure on Clerks to accept a section 34 transfer where strictly speaking there is no legislative authority to do so.

“Site only” Provisional Premises Licence
The 1976 Act allowed for two types of provisional premises licence: a site only without detailed drawings and the other akin to the position under the 2005 Act. This presented no great problems and would allow the principal of proposals to be tested without the need for detailed drawings etc.

4. Taxi and Private Hire Car Licensing

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

35. What benefits should the licensing of taxis and private hire cars deliver for customers?

36. In what ways do customers, providers of taxi/private hire car services and local authorities benefit from the two-tier licensing regime for taxis and private hire cars?

37. The Government states that a radical overhaul of the current two-tier licensing regime would “clearly require a very high level of resource and would cause significant disruption for the trade, local authorities, the police and ultimately the travelling public”. What are your views on this and would the potential costs and disruptions outweigh any potential benefits of a unified system?
38. Do the changes made by sections 60 (overprovision of private hire car licences) and 61 (testing of private hire car drivers) of the Bill strike the right balance in terms of introducing greater consistency while maintaining justifiable differences?

Greater consistency between existing section 10(3) of the 1982 Act (refusal of taxi licences where no significant unmet demand) and section 60 of the Bill (overprovision of private hire car licences) would be helpful.

39. Do you have any views on the section 62 provisions bringing vehicles contracted for exclusive use for 24 or more hours within the licensing regime for taxis and private hire cars, and should any exemptions be included in the Bill?
The proposal would have a serious effect on Council contracts. Particularly in the more remote areas, the general market for private hire is small but the demand for school transport (and some other Council transport) is significant. In some areas it can be difficult to attract competition for tenders. There is no benefit from requiring operators to go through a licensing regime but there would be an increase in cost and a reduction in the number of available operators. Contracting authorities are able to require and enforce standards appropriate to the contract.

There could be a case for withdrawing the exemption for >24-hour hires made by the general public, while retaining it for all contracts let by public or private sector organisations. Those bodies should be able to set and ensure standards. Another solution would be to allow exemptions from licensing only for those who operate contracts on behalf of the Local Authority or Government Agencies such as the NHS where robust contract conditions are in place to address public safety issues.

Contractors would be likely to object to increased bureaucracy if the exemption was withdrawn, and the costs of going through the licensing process would undoubtedly be passed on to Councils in higher contract prices. This would cause an increased workload.

More operators would require to go through the licensing process, with extra expense (which would be passed on to the contracting authority) but little perceived or actual benefit.

The control of vehicles and drivers used on contract and currently exempted by Section 22(c) should be improved, but still recognising the need for flexibility to allow those operated under robust contractual terms and conditions to remain outside the licensing system. Currently, licensed vehicles and drivers whose licences are suspended for whatever reason may continue to operate on “contract” work; this is clearly placing the public at risk.

On the other hand, many operators work under detailed and robust contract conditions which equate well with the protection offered by licence requirements, whilst allowing the contracting organisations the flexibility that meets their requirements but would be difficult to address within a licensing regime.

There should be no noticeable effect on passengers on Council contracts. Operators offering whole day excursions for holidaymakers currently enjoy the exemption; this has absolutely no justification.

6. Scrap Metal Dealer Licensing

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

40. Taking the proposals in sections 63 to 66 of the Bill together, how will they have the desired effect of strengthening the metal dealers' licensing regime to the extent that metal theft and related criminal activity is reduced?

41. In your view, could the Bill be further strengthened in any way, for example, by including an accreditation scheme for metal dealers?

It would always be a good thing for a dealer to achieve such accreditation and is something the public can use in deciding on the choice of a dealer. However to be of any use the system must be nationwide and not left to individual Councils. Clarification would also require to be sought as to who would be responsible for promoting/paying for any such system.

42. Removal of exemption warrant - do you wish to comment on the proposal to remove the exemption warrant system?

This will create an unambiguous system where anyone dealing in metal will fall within the licensing scheme.
43. Removal of requirement to retain metal on-site - what impact will the proposal to remove the retention of metal requirement have on the enforcement of the licensing regime and prevention of criminal activities?

Yes, in principle it is agreed that the retention of metal requirements should be removed as a mandatory requirement of a licence, however Highland Council would be interested in the view of Police Scotland given that this condition would assist with the enforcement (tracing of metal) of the licensing scheme.

44. Forms of payment - what is your view on the proposal to go 'cashless' and is there merit in considering whether metal dealers could be allowed to operate using cash for only very small transactions, which could be limited to a certain number per month?

HC is of the view that no cash sales be permitted regardless of the size of the transaction.
45. Forms of identification and record keeping:

In line with the Scrap Metal Dealers Act 2013, the Bill adds additional record keeping requirements to a metal dealer's licence including recording the means by which a seller's name and address was verified and retaining a copy of the document, and the method of payment and a copy of the payment document. The Bill will also require a metal dealer to record information in books with serially numbered pages or by means of an electronic device, and to keep separate records at each place of business. Such information and documents are to be kept for three rather than the current two years.

How important is it that the record keeping requirements reflect those in the Scrap Metal Dealers Act 2013, and do you agree with the Scottish Government that the proposed record keeping requirements are not unduly burdensome?

The Council does not believe the proposed record keeping requirements to be too onerous and it would make sense for similar requirements to apply in Scotland as well as England and Wales.
46. Mandatory and discretionary licensing requirements:

The Scottish Ministers can impose mandatory licensing requirements, such as those included in the Bill relating to record keeping and the identification of customers. In addition, local authorities can also attach discretionary requirements to licences in their areas.

Does the Bill get the balance right between mandatory and discretionary licensing requirements? Should the Bill include other mandatory conditions for obtaining a metal dealer's licence, such as installing CCTV at metal dealers' premises or in relation to labelling of metal and 'forensic coding'?

47. Will there be any impacts during the transitional period between ending the current theatre licence and starting the public entertainment licence?

There will need to be a transitional period to allow Councils to consider whether they wish to include the performance of plays as a licensable activity and, if they do, comply with the procedures set out in section 9 of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982. 12 months at least should be allowed.

48. Are there additional costs or resource implications on theatres or licensing authorities?

There should be no significant costs or resources implications on either theatres or licensing authorities.

49. How should licensing authorities integrate their current fee charging structure into their public entertainment regime?

6. Civic Licensing – Sexual Entertainment Venues

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

50. What are the consequences of operating the new licensing regime using the definitions set out at section 68 of the Bill?

- 'sexual entertainment venue'
- 'audience'
- 'financial gain'
- 'organiser'
- 'premises'
- 'sexual entertainment', and
- 'display of nudity'

No adverse consequences are anticipated.

51. The Bill specifies that a venue hosting sexual entertainment on three occasions or less within a 12 month period would not be treated as a sexual entertainment venue: does this have any unintended consequences?
It makes no sense that the licensing authority would have power to set a desired number of sexual entertainment venues for localities in their area as nil, but then have no means of stopping any number of premises in those localities from providing sexual entertainment provided they did so only once or twice a year. Separately, it removes the ability of licensing authorities to set conditions controlling the sexual entertainment provided at premises which provide sexual entertainment only once or twice a year. Conditions such as conditions for the protection of performers and conditions for the protection of children and young persons are surely as necessary at premises providing sexual entertainment once or twice a year as they are at premises providing such entertainment all year round.

52. Local licensing authorities will be able to set the number of sexual entertainment venues in their area to below the existing level, or zero: are there any advantages or disadvantages to this approach?
It would be useful for the legislation to set out the matters which a Council could take into account in reaching such a decision or for the Government to provide guidance on this issue. It is unclear, for example, what, if any, difference there will be between the factors which can be taken into account in assessing the appropriate number of venues for the purposes of paragraphs 9(5)(c), 9(6) and 9(6A) of Schedule 2 and the factors which authorities may take into account under paragraph 9(5)(d) (grant of licence inappropriate having regard to character of locality, etc). Any such guidance should be produced as early as possible after enactment of the Bill, since authorities wishing to introduce licensing requirements for sexual entertainment venues will wish to carry out assessment of the appropriate number of venues for their area in advance of their resolutions under section 45B(1) coming into effect.

Secondly, the wording of paragraph 9(5A)(a) needs to be reconsidered. Paragraph 9(5)(c) will be amended to allow Local Authorities to refuse an application on the ground that “the number of sex shops in the local authority area or the relevant locality” is equal to or exceeds the number which the authority considers is appropriate for their area or that locality. However, paragraph 9(5A)(a) will then require authorities to determine, from time to time “the appropriate number of sexual entertainment venues for their area and for each relevant locality”.

If authorities are entitled to set the number of venues in their whole area as the existing level or zero, why must the periodic determination of the appropriate number of venues be both for the whole area and for each relevant locality? This will place an unnecessary burden on authorities who wish only to assess the appropriate number on a whole area basis. It is suggested therefore that paragraph 9(5A)(a) be reworded to read “from time to time determine the appropriate number of sexual entertainment venues for their area or for any relevant locality”.

Thirdly, it should be recognised that local authorities will be unable to rely on paragraph 9(5)(c) as a ground to refuse an application until they have made a determination under paragraph 9(5A)(a) of the appropriate number of venues for their area or for relevant localities. Ideally, therefore, authorities would wish to have their initial determination of the appropriate number of venues in place prior to the day specified in their resolution as the day on which Schedule 2 will have effect in their area.

However, if an authority makes a determination of the appropriate number before the day on which Schedule 2 will have effect, it could be argued that this was not a valid determination under paragraph 9(5A)(a) of Schedule 2 and cannot therefore be relied upon to refuse an application under paragraph 9(5)(c). It would be prudent, therefore, if section 45B contained specific provision to the effect that, notwithstanding the terms of subsection (2), a determination of the appropriate number of sexual entertainment venues for a local authority’s area carried out after the date of passing a resolution under subsection (1) but before the day specified in the resolution as the day on which Schedule 2 shall have effect shall be deemed to be a determination made under paragraph 9(5A) of Schedule 2.
53. The Bill relies mainly on the existing licensing regime for sex shops as set out in section 44 and Schedule 2 of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 (application, notification, objections and representations, revocation of licences etc., enforcement and appeals): is this mechanism adequate for the licensing of sexual entertainment venues - if not, please explain why?

Yes, subject to the comments at question 52 above.

However, in paragraph 25, it is perhaps unclear what the position will be for persons using premises as a sexual entertainment immediately prior to a s45B resolution being passed, and who apply for a venue licence before the appointed day, but whose licence application is then refused on either of the grounds specified in paragraph 9(5)(c) or (d). In terms of paragraph 24(2)(b), there is no right of appeal against refusal on either of these grounds. Such persons presumably therefore cannot rely on paragraph 25(1) as allowing them to continue using the premises as a sexual entertainment venue until expiry of the 28 day appeal period etc, and would be committing an offence under paragraph 19 if they continued to use the premises as a sexual entertainment venue beyond the date of refusal of the licence application by the licensing authority. This should perhaps be clarified in paragraph 25.

54. Are there any barriers to licensing authorities operating the new licensing regime?

The Bill is silent on how premises with a Premises Licence under the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 which permits adult entertainment are to be treated.

55. Civic Licensing

Do you have any other comments to make on the civic licensing aspects of the Bill?
To the Justice Committee,

I write to you today to plead for common sense to prevail when the Scottish Parliament MSPs vote on the proposed airgun legislation.

Mr MacAskill, who is no stranger to controversial decisions, appears to have a personal dislike of any guns or shooting sports and seems to be completely intolerant of the views of those people and organisations that are interested in them.

To get it into perspective the airguns he proposes licencing include the pellet guns that have been used at fairgrounds for the entertainment of children and adults for generations. Current airgun legislation limits the power of an unlicensed air rifle to 12 f/lbs and pistols to 6 f/lbs. and these are the safe limits set by the competent authorities many years ago. I am a keen airgun shooter and enjoy shooting paper targets safely in the privacy of my secluded back garden. As an indication of the low power of these airguns I can, and do regularly, shoot my air rifle and pistol inside my house using no more than an old pair of jeans or a couple of magazines as a backstop to catch the pellets. Although they look similar these guns must not be confused with real firearms.

Mr MacAskill insists that even if licencing is introduced an airgun cannot be used on private property in an urban environment as he thinks it is “inappropriate” for airgun use to be seen as normal by the public. Apparently there is no objection to their use for pest control. Where I live in the southern suburbs of the city we are plagued by the grey squirrel and as you will be aware it is illegal to release a grey squirrel into the wild in an effort to control their ever rising population. It would appear even while licenced I cannot use my air gun to shoot these pests on my own property. An airgun is ideal for shooting pests in an urban environment as it is safe and quiet. Pest control in a rural environment would be more likely done with a shotgun or .22 rifle.

Sadly it is a fact that injuries do happen from time to time with airguns however numbers have fallen dramatically over the last few years without any licencing regime at all so there is no logical reason to introduce one now. If looking at injury statistics it is quite easy to see that over the whole country there are far more football related injuries than airgun or indeed firearm injuries but I don’t hear any calls to ban football.

If this licencing proposal goes ahead it will cost the tax payer an obscene amount of money to implement and maintain. This money would be better used if put into the NHS or helping the homeless or elderly where it is desperately needed and not squandered on needless legislation.

I understand Mr MacAskill is regarded by some to be a bully and does not take defeat lightly. Nevertheless I urge you to let common sense prevail and vote against this proposal.

Yours sincerely,

Michael Brunsdon

40. Taking the proposals in sections 63 to 66 of the Bill together, how will they have the desired effect of strengthening the metal dealers' licensing regime to the extent that metal theft and related criminal activity is reduced?

41. In your view, could the Bill be further strengthened in any way, for example, by including an accreditation scheme for metal dealers?

42. Removal of exemption warrant - do you wish to comment on the proposal to remove the exemption warrant system?
43. Removal of requirement to retain metal on-site - what impact will the proposal to remove the retention of metal requirement have on the enforcement of the licensing regime and prevention of criminal activities?

44. Forms of payment - what is your view on the proposal to go 'cashless' and is there merit in considering whether metal dealers could be allowed to operate using cash for only very small transactions, which could be limited to a certain number per month?
45. Forms of identification and record keeping:

In line with the Scrap Metal Dealers Act 2013, the Bill adds additional record keeping requirements to a metal dealer's licence including recording the means by which a seller’s name and address was verified and retaining a copy of the document, and the method of payment and a copy of the payment document. The Bill will also require a metal dealer to record information in books with serially numbered pages or by means of an electronic device, and to keep separate records at each place of business. Such information and documents are to be kept for three rather than the current two years.

How important is it that the record keeping requirements reflect those in the Scrap Metal Dealers Act 2013, and do you agree with the Scottish Government that the proposed record keeping requirements are not unduly burdensome?
46. Mandatory and discretionary licensing requirements:

The Scottish Ministers can impose mandatory licensing requirements, such as those included in the Bill relating to record keeping and the identification of customers. In addition, local authorities can also attach discretionary requirements to licences in their areas.

Does the Bill get the balance right between mandatory and discretionary licensing requirements? Should the Bill include other mandatory conditions for obtaining a metal dealer’s licence, such as installing CCTV at metal dealers’ premises or in relation to labelling of metal and ‘forensic coding’?
7. Civic Licensing – Theatre Licensing

You may respond to all the questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

47. Will there be any impacts during the transitional period between ending the current theatre licence and starting the public entertainment licence?

48. Are there additional costs or resource implications on theatres or licensing authorities?

49. How should licensing authorities integrate their current fee charging structure into their public entertainment regime?
8. Civic Licensing – Sexual Entertainment Venues

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

50. What are the consequences of operating the new licensing regime using the definitions set out at section 68 of the Bill?

- 'sexual entertainment venue'
- 'audience'
- 'financial gain'
- 'organiser'
- 'premises'
- 'sexual entertainment', and
- 'display of nudity'

WILL INTERFERE WITH AN INDUSTRY ALREADY VERY WELL REGULATED AND LICENCED. WILL PUSH PERFORMANCES 'UNDERGROUND' AND AS SUCH LESS REGULATED AND BE DETERIMENTAL TO PERFORMERS. IT WILL Restrict FREEDOM OF CHOICE FOR CUSTOMERS AND INDIVIDUAL PERFORMERS.

51. The Bill specifies that a venue hosting sexual entertainment on three occasions or less within a 12 month period would not be treated as a sexual entertainment venue: does this have any unintended consequences?

WILL TRANSFER PERFORMANCES INTO 'PUB BACK ROOMS' AT VARYING LOCATIONS AND WILL NOT BE IN INTERESTS OF PERFORMERS AND WILL THEREFORE BE VIRTUALLY UNREGULATED.
52. Local licensing authorities will be able to set the number of sexual entertainment venues in their area to below the existing level, or zero: are there any advantages or disadvantages to this approach?

| CLOSING DOWN ALREADY WELL REGULATED VENUES WILL HAVE A DETRIMENTAL ECONOMIC EFFECT ON THE CITY. NO EVIDENCE OF ANY BENEFIT WHATSOEVER OF TAKING THIS APPROACH. WHO WILL REGULATE THE MOVING SHOWS GOING FROM PUB TO PUB. COUNCILLORS OWN PERSONAL OR RELIGIOUS VIEWS MIGHT BE AT ODDS WITH THOSE OF THEIR CONSTITUENTS AND THIS COULD HAVE AN ADVERSE ON THE WELLBEING AND WORKING CONDITIONS OF THE PERFORMERS WHEN MOVED UNDERGROUND. |

53. The Bill relies mainly on the existing licensing regime for sex shops as set out in section 44 and Schedule 2 of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 (application, notification, objections and representations, revocation of licences etc., enforcement and appeals): is this mechanism adequate for the licensing of sexual entertainment venues - if not, please explain why?

54. Are there any barriers to licensing authorities operating the new licensing regime?
55. Civic Licensing

Do you have any other comments to make on the civic licensing aspects of the Bill?

IT SEEMS A VERY HEAVY HANDED APPROACH TO SOLVE A PERCEIVED PROBLEM THAT, IN REALITY, DOES NOT ACTUALLY EXIST. CURRENT VENUES ARE EXTREMELY WELL RUN UNDER CURRENT LEGISLATION AND NO EVIDENCE OF WIDESPREAD ABUSE OR EXPLOITATION HAS EVER BEEN PUT FORWARD BY THE AUTHORITIES. ANOTHER EXAMPLE OF TRYING TO BE POLITICALLY CORRECT AND IGNORING THE HARD WORK THAT IS ACTUALLY GOING ON WITHIN THE INDUSTRY.

1. Air Weapons Licensing

You may respond to all the questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

13. In what ways will the creation of an air weapons licensing system in Scotland contribute to preserving public order and safety, reducing crime and advancing public health policy?

This will have no effect as offences are reducing with the existing conditions.

14. Is there sufficient provision, or sufficient capacity to provide, suitable numbers of air weapons clubs across all areas of Scotland for use by registered air weapons owners/users?

There is not enough clubs catering for airgun shooters. Fire arms clubs may accept airguns but will only consider them inconvenient as the ranges airguns shoot are different to that shot by firearms.

15. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for personal/recreational use?

Airguns are a comparatively cheap way of shooting and if the cost of a license is added and shooting has to be done at a club using firearms it will only cause shooters to go the way of getting a licence to shoot firearms.
16. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those aged 14 to 17 who use air weapons?

Parent will probably have the job of transporting the shooters to the clubs as juniors are not allowed to carry guns in public.

17. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for commercial/professional reasons (for example: for pest control; as part of the tourist/hunting season; as part of fairs, paintballing centre, entertainment sector etc.)?

A licence will not affect commercial events as the additional cost will be passed on to the customer.

18. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for competitive sporting purposes?

As the air guns used for competitive shooting are expensive the cost of a license will just be an additional burden.

19. Is it equitable for those applying for an air weapons certificate to pay a fee which cannot be refundable irrespective of whether a certificate is granted or not?

No.
20. Will the air weapons licensing system have a positive or negative impact on other areas of the public sector in Scotland (e.g. The work of local government, public agencies etc.)?

The obvious effect will be to add an additional work for local authorities or police to implement the licences.

21. What, if any, might the unintended consequences of introducing an air weapons licensing system in Scotland be?

If additional conditions are applied to a licence i.e. shooting in gardens, this will in my area lead to less grey squirrels being shot and more small birds killed by magpies. I also teach youngsters to initially train with airguns starting in my garden before using firearms at a club (for Duke of Edinburgh Award).

22. Do you have any other comments to make on air weapons licensing aspects of the Bill?

This licence appears to be unnecessary as airgun crime has and is reducing. The only effect it will have is to collect money and not all shooters will apply.

1. Air Weapons Licensing

You may respond to all the questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

13. In what ways will the creation of an air weapons licensing system in Scotland contribute to preserving public order and safety, reducing crime and advancing public health policy?

IT WILL HAVE AN ADVERSE EFFECT BY DIVERTING POLICE RESOURCES AWAY FROM SERIOUS CRIME

PRESENT CRIMINAL & IRRESPONSIBLE USERS WILL REMAIN UNAFFECTED BY ANY NEW SYSTEM: AS THEY ARE ALREADY IGNORING THE PRESENT RULES, GOVERNING USE OF AIRGUNS, CONTAINED IN THE VARIOUS FIREARMS ACTS & OTHER LAWS.

14. Is there sufficient provision, or sufficient capacity to provide, suitable numbers of air weapons clubs across all areas of Scotland for use by registered air weapons owners/users?

I AM NOT AWARE OF ANY PROVISION AT PRESENT FOR SUCH CLUBS, NOR MEASURES FOR ANY NEW CLUBS TO BE ESTABLISHED BY THE GOVERNMENT, TO ALLOW LEGAL OWNERS TO COMPLY WITH PROPOSED GOVERNMENT CHANGES

BEING ABLE TO PURSUE THE HOBBY ON PRIVATE LAND, AS AT PRESENT, IS FAR BETTER AND MORE COST EFFECTIVE THAN MAKING PEOPLE TRAVEL TO CLUBS WHICH MAY WELL HAVE LIMITED OPERATING HOURS.

15. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for personal/recreational use?

I PREDICT THAT THIS LACK OF FACILITIES WILL RESULT IN A HUGE NEGATIVE IMPACT ON THE LEGAL USERS OF AIRGUNS, WHO WILL BE DEPRIVED OF THEIR LEGAL RIGHT TO PURSUE THEIR HOBBY
16. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those aged 14 to 17 who use air weapons?

THE PRESENT SYSTEM HAS BEEN IN PLACE FOR OVER 40 YEARS, AND HELPS TO PROMOTE RESPONSIBLE SUPERVISED LEARNING, IN A RELAXED HOME ENVIRONMENT – IF SO SUITABLE

THE NEW SYSTEM WILL JUST PRESENT MORE HURDLES TOWARD YOUNG PEOPLE WISHING TO TAKE UP A NEW HOBBY & HAVE ZERO IMPACT ON THE IRRESPONSIBLE YOUTHS MISUSING AIRGUNS AT PRESENT

17. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for commercial/professional reasons (for example: for pest control; as part of the tourist/hunting season; as part of fairs, paintballing centre, entertainment sector etc.)?

MORE LAYERS OF GOVERNMENT INTERFERENCE/ BUREAUCRACY WILL BE ADDED – THEREFORE ADDING TO THE ADMINISTRATIVE COSTS BOTH FINANCIALLY & IN TERMS OF MAN HOURS

THE COSTS WILL BE ADDED TO THE END USERS

18. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for competitive sporting purposes?

THE AFFECT WILL BE SIMILAR TO THE BAN ON INTERNATIONAL .22 PISTOLS, IT WILL KILL SPORTING USE: AS AT PRESENT PEOPLE CAN PRACTICE AT HOME AT A TIME THAT IS CONVENIENT TO THEM. THIS OPTION WILL BE TAKEN AWAY BY THE NEW SYSTEM & WILL ALL BUT END SCOTTISH SHOOTERS TAKING MEDALS IN COMPETITION

19. Is it equitable for those applying for an air weapons certificate to pay a fee which cannot be refundable irrespective of whether a certificate is granted or not?
NO – IT IS NOT EQUITABLE, FAIR OR REASONABLE. THE LEGAL SPORTING USER SHOULD HAVE NO FEES TO PAY AT ALL, AS NOW

20. Will the air weapons licensing system have a positive or negative impact on other areas of the public sector in Scotland (eg. The work of local government, public agencies etc.)?

NEGATIVE IMPACT.
IT WILL BE SEEN AS DRACONIAN “BIG BROTHER” GOVERNMENT-FROM-THE-TOP-DOWN, AS POLLS ALREADY SHOW THE PUBLIC ARE MASSIVELY OPPOSED TO THE LICENSING SYSTEM

21. What, if any, might the unintended consequences of introducing an air weapons licensing system in Scotland be?

IT WILL BE EASIER TO BE GRANTED A LICENCE FOR A SHOTGUN THAN AN “AIR WEAPON” – SO PEOPLE WILL FIND IT EASIER TO TAKE UP SHOTGUN SHOOTING AS A HOBBY INSTEAD. THE ADMINISTRATIVE BURDEN WILL CRIPPLE WHOMSOEVER GETS TASKED WITH IT

22. Do you have any other comments to make on air weapons licensing aspects of the Bill?

THE BILL WILL BE A BIGGER WHITE ELEPHANT THAN THE EDINBURGH TRAM FIASCO & MAKE SCOTLAND THE MOST RESTRICTIVE COUNTRY IN EUROPE FOR THE SHOOTING SPORTS HOBBY...

IT WILL DIVERT RESOURCES AWAY FROM MAINSTREAM POLICING.

IT WILL HAVE A NEGATIVE IMPACT ON THE PERCEPTION OF HOLYROOD AS BEING THERE TO REPRESENT THE PEOPLE OF SCOTLAND.

PRESENT ILLEGAL USERS OF AIRGUNS WILL CARRY ON REGARDLESS AS THEY ARE ALREADY IGNORING THE CURRENT FIREARMS ACTS

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

50. What are the consequences of operating the new licensing regime using the definitions set out at section 68 of the Bill?

- 'sexual entertainment venue'
- 'audience'
- 'financial gain'
- 'organiser'
- 'premises'
- 'sexual entertainment', and
- 'display of nudity'

51. The Bill specifies that a venue hosting sexual entertainment on three occasions or less within a 12 month period would not be treated as a sexual entertainment venue: does this have any unintended consequences?

Yes! This could lead to a proliferation of “travelling” shows in the style of the Male Troupe, the “Chippendales”, which would be more difficult to “police” in terms of enforcing any expected standards.
52. Local licensing authorities will be able to set the number of sexual entertainment venues in their area to below the existing level, or zero: are there any advantages or disadvantages to this approach?

In the larger cities in Scotland there are only a handful of such venues. I believe that in a city the size of Glasgow or Edinburgh for instance, with their aspirations to be an international business/tourism centre, that the local Licensing Authority should not be able to set the level below existing or zero, when recreational or business visitors require as wide a range of activities as would be expected in an international centre.

53. The Bill relies mainly on the existing licensing regime for sex shops as set out in

13. In what ways will the creation of an air weapons licensing system in Scotland contribute to preserving public order and safety, reducing crime and advancing public health policy?

It will reduce the effects of opportunistic crime.

14. Is there sufficient provision, or sufficient capacity to provide, suitable numbers of air weapons clubs across all areas of Scotland for use by registered air weapons owners/users?

Definitely not enough provision or encouragement for airgun target shooting in Scotland.

15. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for personal/recreational use?

People should be encouraged to use air weapons for recreational use in a safe environment as much as possible.
16. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those aged 14 to 17 who use air weapons?

Provided these youngsters are supervised by an adult of 21 – that should be fine but also remember children younger than 14 should also be given the chance to shoot in safety.

17. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for commercial/professional reasons (for example: for pest control; as part of the tourist/hunting season; as part of fairs, paintballing centre, entertainment sector etc.)?

Provided the people using air weapons for commercial reasons are bona fide licence holders and responsible I see no problems.

18. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for competitive sporting purposes?

People taking part in competitions should be legitimate licence holders.

19. Is it equitable for those applying for an air weapons certificate to pay a fee which cannot be refundable irrespective of whether a certificate is granted or not?

Yes as the work has to be carried out whatever the outcome.
Local Government and Regeneration Committee – Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill

20. Will the air weapons licensing system have a positive or negative impact on other areas of the public sector in Scotland (e.g. the work of local government, public agencies etc.)?

I would hope that air weapon licensing will have a positive influence on all aspects of life in Scotland.

21. What, if any, might the unintended consequences of introducing an air weapons licensing system in Scotland be?

Air weapons will have to be kept in a safe locked place out of sight of minors and dangerous persons. I would think an internal cupboard with a secure lock would be sufficient.

22. Do you have any other comments to make on air weapons licensing aspects of the Bill?

I hope that the more people appreciate the enjoyment of target shooting and therefore also the safe handling of air weapons the better.

8. Do you consider that the Bill has any implications for meeting Scotland’s climate change commitments? Please explain.

9. Do you consider that the Bill has any implications for meeting Scotland’s equality and/or human rights commitments? Please explain.

   The proposed Bill infringes on The Human Rights Act 1998, articles 1 and 8

10. Do you consider that the Bill has any implications for preventative spending and/or public services reform? Please explain.

   The proposed Bill as it relates to the introduction of an air arms licensing system has massive implications for preventative spending as it will cost tens of millions of pounds to create, and then several hundreds of thousands of pounds per year to administer. Further costs will include a compensation scheme for the proposed deprivation of lawfully held items, the additional burden on Police Scotland and to the courts.
11. Do you consider that the Bill has any implications in relation to European Union issues? Please explain.

Only in that specified at 9

12. Do you have any other comments on the impact of the proposals contained in the Bill relation to Scottish Government objectives?

It appears clear that the current Scottish Government has a disproportionate ‘issue’ with civilian ownership of anything it would describe (incorrectly) as a ‘weapon’, therefore the proposed Bill relates well to Scottish Government ‘objectives’
2. Air Weapons Licensing

You may respond to all the questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

13. In what ways will the creation of an air weapons licensing system in Scotland contribute to preserving public order and safety, reducing crime and advancing public health policy?

In a very limited way, as indicated by the Committee in its letter to the Scottish Government dated 27th June 2014, particularly questions 1, 2 and 5. Every police force in the UK acknowledges that the majority of air ‘weapons’ crime is committed by persons who are already known to the police and who are incredibly unlikely to/wouldn’t be permitted to apply for a certificate for the air rifle/pistol they use. Even those incidents that do occur outside of the criminal fraternity are rarely ‘innocent accidents’. Once the details of the incidents are realised they almost inevitably seem to involve reckless use of said air rifle and/or a breach of the current legislation (e.g. Not preventing unauthorised access to an air rifle to persons under the age of 18. Air gun crime has been falling fairly rapidly in Scotland for the past half-decade and the proposed Bill is simply not required to continue this trend.

14. Is there sufficient provision, or sufficient capacity to provide, suitable numbers of air weapons clubs across all areas of Scotland for use by registered air weapons owners/users?

As this information is not readily available (and hence question 10 from the Committee), it is difficult to answer this. From my own experience of my locality, there are very few firearms clubs that also permit the use of air guns and as far as I am aware there are none that ONLY cater for air guns.

15. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for personal/recreational use?

N/A
In many cases it will exclude them entirely from the sport/hobby. Air guns are relatively cheap and the ease of use and lack of cost involved in shooting them is one of the most attractive features. If a licensing regime was brought in, in addition to the cost of the application, cost of a cabinet/safe and then the time and cost of travelling to the air gun club many people simply will not be able to afford to continue.

16. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those aged 14 to 17 who use air weapons?

The affect on youngsters LEGALLY using air guns will be even worse than it would be on adults as they naturally have less money, and many would not have the means of travel to get to a club.

17. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for commercial/professional reasons (for example: for pest control; as part of the tourist/hunting season; as part of fairs, paintballing centre, entertainment sector etc.)?

It would depend on the licensing regime implemented, if it was similar to the Firearms Certificate procedure large scale pest controllers etc would likely not be too badly affected, other than the onerous task of making the application, but smaller scale operations would be disproportionately affected and possibly put out of business if they suddenly find themselves an excluded person from air gun ownership.

18. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for competitive sporting purposes?
As less and less people take up air gun shooting due to the increased cost, time and bureaucracy, the pool of people who go onto become competitive sportspersons will also diminish. Hopefully it would never get to the ludicrous situation that exists with the British pistol team having to train abroad.

19. Is it equitable for those applying for an air weapons certificate to pay a fee which cannot be refundable irrespective of whether a certificate is granted or not?

No it most certainly is not. Just like with a Firearms or Shotgun certificate if the application was to be refused a full refund of the fee should be issued.

20. Will the air weapons licensing system have a positive or negative impact on other areas of the public sector in Scotland (eg. The work of local government, public agencies etc.)?

Only upon the work load of the Police licensing departments which are already overstretched.

21. What, if any, might the unintended consequences of introducing an air weapons licensing system in Scotland be?

As the intended consequences aren’t entirely clear this is difficult to answer, however as with Firearms legislation, the air gun legislation would have little impact on the criminal use of air guns as it is logical that those wishing to own an airgun for criminal purposes are either unlikely to apply for a certificate, and many will be ineligible anyway due to previous convictions.

The licensing system would increase the cost of airguns in Scotland and possibly the rest of the UK due to the lower demand.

numerous people without them ever having committed a crime, due to the irresponsible, criminal actions of a tiny minority.

22. Do you have any other comments to make on air weapons licensing aspects of the Bill?

It beggars belief that the Scottish government considers this proposal as an efficient use of limited public funds. Air gun crime in Scotland has been steadily falling for a number of years now and there is no indication that this trend will change soon.

50. What are the consequences of operating the new licensing regime using the definitions set out at section 68 of the Bill?

- 'sexual entertainment venue'
- 'audience'
- 'financial gain'
- 'organiser'
- 'premises'
- 'sexual entertainment', and
- 'display of nudity'

51. The Bill specifies that a venue hosting sexual entertainment on three occasions or less within a 12 month period would not be treated as a sexual entertainment venue: does this have any unintended consequences?

My view is that if something is to be regulated it not be on occasion.
52. Local licensing authorities will be able to set the number of sexual entertainment venues in their area to below the existing level, or zero: are there any advantages or disadvantages to this approach?

53. The Bill relies mainly on the existing licensing regime for sex shops as set out in section 44 and Schedule 2 of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 (application, notification, objections and representations, revocation of licences etc., enforcement and appeals): is this mechanism adequate for the licensing of sexual entertainment venues - if not, please explain why?

54. Are there any barriers to licensing authorities operating the new licensing regime?
55. Civic Licensing

Do you have any other comments to make on the civic licensing aspects of the Bill?

I am the major shareholder of one of the largest specialist recruitment companies in the UK. There is economical consequence of not having lap dancing venues in Glasgow to which I will explain. Entertaining clients, whether that be taking them to casinos, football, horse racing, boxing or lap dancing clubs is an integral part of business. Visiting Lap Dancing clubs is a popular choice for many business and is considered to be harmless fun. I have a choice to take clients to clubs in any locations where I have an office, but always favour Glasgow as it is my home town. By not having Lap Dancing clubs in Glasgow I just simply take my business to another UK city that has such venues. Glasgow losses out on hotel stays, money spend in restaurants etc. There has also been many occasions when high net worth clients of mine have spent large sums of money in with clothing retailers such as [redacted] Glasgow the next day after visiting lap dancing pubs in Glasgow.

Being in the recruitment business I am by nature a talkative individual and talk to other businessmen and can say for sure, my viewpoint is shared by many other businessmen. All major cities in Europe and indeed the world have lap dancing clubs. What signal would we be sending to the international business community if we banned lap dancing clubs.

There is another observation I have made. I hear reports that lap dancing clubs are linked with the exploitation of woman. I have never anything that is further away from the truth than this myth. Have anyone who is involved in this process every visited a lap dancing club. If they did, they would see that it is the girls who have complete control over the men. Not only that, if one was to talk to any one of these girls they would find people who not only have complete freedom of choice but can make large amounts of money for themselves.

1. Air Weapons Licensing

You may respond to all the questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

13. In what ways will the creation of an air weapons licensing system in Scotland contribute to preserving public order and safety, reducing crime and advancing public health policy?

There will be no contribution at all to preserving public order and safety or in reducing crime by the introduction of an air weapon licensing system. There has already been a dramatic decrease in crimes involving air guns and people who use airguns irresponsibly and break the law are not going to apply for a licence as by their very nature they do not care if what they are doing is illegal and there is currently adequate provision within current firearms legislation to cover any misuse of an airgun. The only people who are going to comply with the legislation are the thousands of responsible airgun owners who take the responsibility of using an airgun seriously.

14. Is there sufficient provision, or sufficient capacity to provide, suitable numbers of air weapons clubs across all areas of Scotland for use by registered air weapons owners/ users?

I am currently unaware if there is adequate provision of clubs for airgun users but no there is no doubt that any application for a new club premises to be created would meet with stiff opposition thus providing a back door way of further restricting what is the legal and legitimate use of airguns for target shooting.

15. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for personal/recreational use?
The licensing system will produce a huge burden on legitimate airgun users and will no doubt lead to many giving up a pastime that they carry out in an extremely safe and responsible manner.

16. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those aged 14 to 17 who use air weapons?

There will be a huge effect on those aged 14 to 17 as the licensing requirements will prevent many from taking up the sport and learning how to handle airguns responsibly which will have a serious detrimental effect on future sports stars and pest control.

There will be a huge economic impact as many people travel from other parts of the UK to carry out pest control duties (especially in the border areas) /take part in fairs/ paintballing which will become more expensive and bureaucratic preventing many from participating. This will also have a knock on effect in the gun trade as due to the overly stringent conditions being imposed for the granting of a licence there will be a marked decrease in people buying / replacing / upgrading air weapons so many will go out of business.

18. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for competitive sporting purposes?
There will be a huge impact on people using air guns for competitive sporting activities. The restrictions will prevent many young people taking up what is a very safe sport as well as preventing many shooters from the rest of the UK coming to Scotland to compete due to the cost of obtaining a licence to bring their guns to Scotland. Again this will lead to an adverse economic impact for Scotland.

19. Is it equitable for those applying for an air weapons certificate to pay a fee which cannot be refundable irrespective of whether a certificate is granted or not?

I feel it is unreasonable to ask someone to pay a non-refundable fee as it should be obvious from some simple quick checks to weed out most if not all of the applications that would result in a certificate not being granted. Making someone pay the full cost for a certificate that will not be granted after a few simple checks is unreasonable.

20. Will the air weapons licensing system have a positive or negative impact on other areas of the public sector in Scotland (eg. The work of local government, public agencies etc.)?

There will be a huge detrimental impact on the Police and government finances. The proposals set out for the licencing of air guns, even with a full cost recovery from the applicants, will create a huge strain on police licencing departments that are barely coping with the current licencing scheme without placing a huge further burden on them. This will lead to a huge cost increase in running these departments as a vast number of additional staff will require to be employed at a time when the police budget is decreasing leading to larger cuts having to be made in other departments. Unless the Scottish Government is willing to ignore the rights of legitimate and law abiding members of the public who shoot for pleasure or pest control and allow the timescales for the grant of certificates to become unacceptably long. If this is the case then this will have a knock on effect when licences are renewed leading to the very real possibility that thousands of law abiding people suddenly find themselves breaking the law as they are in possession of an unlicensed air gun through no fault of their own. Unless we get to the ridiculous position where as soon as the certificate is granted a renewal has to be applied for due to the time taken to process them.

The proposed scheme is overly bureaucratic, extremely expensive, unmanageable and superfluous as air gun crime has dropped dramatically and as a proportion of the estimated number of airguns (estimated to be 500,000 but... could be many more) the rate of airgun crime is infinitesimally small.

21. What, if any, might the unintended consequences of introducing an air weapons licensing system in Scotland be?

There will be several unintended consequences in introducing this bill such as a vast increase in finances required for the police or any other agency to administer the legislation, a vast number of responsible law abiding people suddenly finding themselves criminalised buy an unnecessary piece of legislation that will be totally unenforceable as well as many more people applying for a full firearms certificate as if the conditions for being granted a certificate are the same they may as well have the more powerful gun as this will make activities such as pest control easier as they will be able to shoot from further away.

Will there also be plans put in place to carry out border checks on the Scottish/English border as the legislation is not changing South of the Border people will be able to drive to England, purchase an airgun legally and then drive back to Scotland without anyone knowing that they are in possession of it. Therefore the very real possibility that thousands of airguns will be held illegally in Scotland with no way to stop the cross border trade without putting border checks in place. It has been suggested that airgun ammunition could also be regulated. But again as there will be no restrictions in England nobody will know who is bringing airgun ammunition over the border without checks being made.

22. Do you have any other comments to make on air weapons licensing aspects of the Bill?

The proposals will only be taken up by the vast law abiding majority who use air guns responsibly and sensibly. The government’s position that this legislation will solve what is an already small and decreasing number of airgun offences is ludicrous. People who use airguns illegally will take no notice of the bill. For example drink driving is against the law but it does not stop people from doing so. People that already break the law using airguns will continue to do so as there is no way of knowing how many airguns are in circulation in Scotland or who is bringing them or ammunition in from England.

8. Do you consider that the Bill has any implications for meeting Scotland’s climate change commitments? Please explain.

9. Do you consider that the Bill has any implications for meeting Scotland’s equality and/or human rights commitments? Please explain.
We believe the Bill if amended further from its Stage 1 draft has the opportunity to meet even more of Scotland’s equality and human rights commitments especially in regard to the preventative aspect of reducing exposed of children to indecent objectifying and gender stereotyping literature.

The publication on 25 June 2014 of the Equally Safe Strategy for Scotland in its key objectives clearly recognises the preventative agenda in preventing and eradicating all forms of violence against women and children.

The overall aim of the strategy is to prevent and eradicate violence against women and girls, creating a strong and flourishing Scotland where all individuals are equally safe and respected, and where women and girls live free from such abuse - and the attitudes that help perpetuate it.

Four key priorities are set out within the strategy:

1. Scottish society embraces equality and mutual respect, and rejects all forms of violence against women and girls.

2. Women and girls thrive as equal citizens: socially, culturally, economically and politically.

3. Interventions are early and effective, preventing violence and maximising safety and wellbeing of women and girls.

4. Men desist from all forms of violence against women and girls and perpetrators of such violence receive a robust and effective response.

While the strategy sets out some early commitments, it explains how a phased approach will help ensure that longer-term change is sustained. We think the Bill’s recast of certain Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 powers, which itself was proceeded and recast the Indecent Displays (Control) Act 1981, could have a significant contribution could have a significant environmental impact on the exposure of society especially young children to “sex sells” media.

We believe that legislation is the only avenue at the moment to reverse the current over-sexualised displays parents are exposed to whenever they take their children into the general public spaces and supposedly family friendly retail environment. This de-sexualisation of public places we think would be a significant contribution long-term to the achievement of the challenging goals outlined in the Equally Safe Strategy and also more widely expressed in other Scottish Government Equality and Human Rights documents.

The Equally Safe Strategy outlines that violence, as a continuum from sexual harassment to physical violence, stems from an ongoing inequality between men and women and can have immediate and long-lasting impact on the individuals and families involved. In addition, highlighting the wider impacts on health, wellbeing and safety of Scotland’s communities. In financial cost terms, the Strategy outlines that the estimates of expenditure to address the impacts of domestic abuse is £1.6 billion and £4 billion when impacts of all violence against women is incorporated. The strategy is bold in its ambition and rightly so in our view, outlining the need to eliminate the systematic gender inequality that lies at the root of violence against women and girls and the need to be bold about how we do it.

We also consider that the proposed amendment to the Stage 1 draft of the Air...
10. Do you consider that the Bill has any implications for preventative spending and/ or public services reform? Please explain.

The amendments proposed in Section 55 of this form to the existing Stage 1 draft Bill we think are in line with the Equally Safe objectives of seeking a stepchange in emphasis on preventing violence from occurring in the first place or intervening at the earliest possible stage to minimise the harm caused to the victim. Equally Safe highlights that prioritising prevention challenges the notion that violence is inevitable if acceptable. It demands a fundamental change in the societal attitudes, values and structures that give rise to and sustain the problem.

The strategy outlines that this is an ambitious approach to take, demanding a determined effort over the long-term and as well as the public sector re-design challenge also highlights the renewed and increased focus on prevention from those working in the private sector, to identify where they can pursue preventative measures.

Equally Safe recognises that some of the initiatives and legislation we are proposing may have short-term benefit but also may be challenging as the positive effects of such preventative measures may take some years to deliver noticeable benefits at a time when public resources are already squeezed and demand for measureable results is heightened. However, it concludes that prevention is the only approach if we are to achieve the aim of a strong and flourishing Scotland where all individuals, regardless of gender live Equally Safe.

11. Do you consider that the Bill has any implications in relation to European Union issues? Please explain.
12. Do you have any other comments on the impact of the proposals contained in the Bill relation to Scottish Government objectives?
3. General Licensing Issues

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

23. Is the current Scottish licensing regime, as set out in the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 and the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005, fit for purpose?

We believe that the current licensing regime does not provide parents with the confidence that the current public spaces are regulated in a manner that does not sexualise children through the consumption of their surroundings in everyday life.

Therefore, whilst we recognize that parents have a responsibility to protect children. The problem we have is that parents are unable to protect children as sexual imagery and pornography is in every arena.

24. Should a licensing system seek to regulate individual behaviour or communities of space (eg. ‘city space’ etc.)?

The Licensing and Civic Government provisions of the proposed Act in our view should seek to regulate individual behaviour and communities of space where the environment provided is indecent, degrading and offensive to women, children and parents and should provide a recourse for individuals and groups to register their complaints about such issues as shop window displays and other displays of material. For instance, a parent can only protect children from the degrading sexual imagery in shops (The Sport, Nuts, Zoo) if they either do not go into the shop or blindfold their child. Neither is a suitable solution. We have evidence from many shops including Co-op, Tesco and Spar.

25. In what way should the licensing system in Scotland interact with the support the land use planning system, community planning and regeneration?
26. How does the licensing system in Scotland assist with the delivery of sustainable development and economic balanced areas?

27. In what way does the licensing system in Scotland support health and planning, addressing health inequalities and public health wellbeing outcomes?

We think that licensing further the display of indecent and sexualised imagery within public places would contribute to the achievement of the objectives of the Equally Safe Strategy by providing a less sexualised environment for children to develop and form their own opinions on the current stereotypical gender roles specified for society via the publication and display of images across all forms of media and goods.
55. Civic Licensing

Do you have any other comments to make on the civic licensing aspects of the Bill?
We would respectfully suggest that the Bill also considers the opportunity offered to update some of the provisions of the Indecent Display (Control) Act 1981 and also related provisions in the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 around the display of sexualised images in public places and that it also takes the opportunity to close some of the loopholes/lack of powers for enforcement or removal of indecent displays. Whether this is via devolved primary legislation or a reserved legislative consent motion.

Specifically we would wish to see an amendment of Section 51 of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act covering obscene material to cover incendent and degrading imagery regularly published in the press displayed/placed in an appropriate area outwith general view:

51 Obscene material.

(1) Subject to subsection (4) below, any person who displays any obscene material in any public place or in any other place where it can be seen by the public shall be guilty of an offence under this section.

(2) Subject to subsection (4) below, any person who publishes, sells or distributes or, with a view to its eventual sale or distribution, makes, prints, has or keeps any obscene material shall be guilty of an offence under this section.

(2A) Subject to subsection (4) below, any person who—

(a) is responsible for the inclusion of any obscene material in a programme included in a programme service; or

(b) with a view to its eventual inclusion in a programme so included, makes, prints, has or keeps any obscene material, shall be guilty of an offence under this section.

(3) A person guilty of an offence under this section shall be liable, on summary conviction, to a fine not exceeding the prescribed sum or to imprisonment for a period not exceeding [F26 months] or to both or, on conviction on indictment, to a fine or to imprisonment for a period not exceeding [F23 years] or to both.

(4) A person shall not be convicted of an offence under this section if he proves that he had used all due diligence to avoid committing the offence.

(5) Under an indictment for or on a complaint of a breach of subsection (1) above, the court may, if satisfied that the person accused is guilty of an offence under section 1(1) of the M1 Indecent Displays (Control) Act 1981 (offence of public display of indecent matter), convict him of a breach of the said section 1(1).

(7) For section 5(4)(b) of the Indecent Displays (Control) Act 1981 (saving) there shall be substituted

1 To lower dignity, dishonour or disgrace.

Much more work for the police and the courts.

21. What, if any, might the unintended consequences of introducing an air weapons licensing system in Scotland be?

Many people will apply for a FAC or SGC.

22. Do you have any other comments to make on air weapons licensing aspects of the Bill?

The Scottish government has completely failed to provide any evidence at all that air gun misuse is a problem in Scotland. The justice minister is on record as saying that there are many communities in Scotland that are blighted by air gun crime yet he has provided no evidence to back up these claims. As they were only 171 reported offences involving air guns in the whole of Scotland last year [a record all time low] these claims are hard to believe.

8. Do you consider that the Bill has any implications for meeting Scotland’s climate change commitments? Please explain.

Yes it will mean more traffic journeys as thousands of air gun shooters travel to and from clubs.

9. Do you consider that the Bill has any implications for meeting Scotland’s equality and/or human rights commitments? Please explain.

Yes many disabled shooters who presently shoot at home will be unable to travel or gain access to gun clubs or afford it for that matter.

10. Do you consider that the Bill has any implications for preventative spending and/or public services reform? Please explain.

Yes the police will have a mountain of new work.
11. Do you consider that the Bill has any implications in relation to European Union issues? Please explain.

Could well break the HRA namely the right to property. Due to the retrospective catch 22 nature of this bill thousands of people will in effect have their previously legally held property Confiscated from them for no compensation.

12. Do you have any other comments on the impact of the proposals contained in the Bill relation to Scottish Government objectives?

This is clearly part of Scottish governments attempt to reduce public gun ownership to the lowest possible degree.
2. Air Weapons Licensing

You may respond to all the questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

13. In what ways will the creation of an air weapons licensing system in Scotland contribute to preserving public order and safety, reducing crime and advancing public health policy?

None new laws will INCREASE air gun offences.

14. Is there sufficient provision, or sufficient capacity to provide, suitable numbers of air weapons clubs across all areas of Scotland for use by registered air weapons owners/ users?

No for example most if not all the Scottish Islands have no air gun clubs.

15. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for personal/recreational use?

It will ban members of the public from shooting on or in their own private land and property.
16. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those aged 14 to 17 who use air weapons?

As they are to be banned from getting a AWC they will may apply for a FAC or SGC which they are allowed to do.

17. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for commercial/professional reasons (for example: for pest control; as part of the tourist/hunting season; as part of fairs, paintballing centre, entertainment sector etc.)?

It will make it more expensive.

18. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for competitive sporting purposes?

It will prevent young people from taking up the sport.

19. Is it equitable for those applying for an air weapons certificate to pay a fee which cannot be refundable irrespective of whether a certificate is granted or not?

No it must be the same as for FAC and SGC applications. Also i am confused all the previous questions refer to air weapon licence whereas this question refers to air weapon certificate as a licence and certificate have different legal meanings which is it going to be?

Response to call for evidence by the Local Government and Regeneration Committee on the Air Weapons and Licensing Scotland Bill

For several years, Scottish Government has worked to introduce an air weapon licensing scheme. Despite extensive lobbying by the pro-shooting community for the scheme to be scrapped, the proposed bill includes measures for a robust licensing scheme.

We believe the licensing scheme itself, as well as measures to prevent shooting in back gardens, are sensible and robust. However, we show below that:

- Attacks on animals using airguns occur in significant numbers, but are underreported
- Airgun attack on animals also have an impact on their owners and feelings of public safety, and that only controls on where air guns can be used will address these concerns
- There is a need for legislation to reflect the danger posed by air weapons to animals, and to be strengthened so that previous convictions for wildlife crime and animal cruelty are taken into account when applying for a licence
- There is little justification for allowing animals to be hunted for sport with air guns generally, and particularly by young and inexperienced shooters.

Overall, we believe that the Air Weapon component of the Bill is a positive step, but the legislation should be amended to make it more stringent, and the proposals should not be diluted in any way.

Data on airgun attacks on animals

The SSPCA reported over 178 air gun attacks on animals in 2012

Shortly before the unification of police forces in Scotland, a Freedom of Information request revealed the following figures for air gun attacks on animals in 2010/2012:

The disparity between SSPCA and Police figures, where the SSPCA record 178 attacks alone for 2012 but the Police have only 68 on record between 2010 and 2012, shows that the majority of airgun attacks on animals are not reported to the police.

Police reports tend to relate to large animals or attacks in unusual circumstances, including incidents where swans, pigs, and birds of prey were attacked.

It is likely that many attacks are never reported to either agency. Reasons for this include:

- Animals which are shot dead but their bodies not recovered. Uncertainty of events – animals have pellets lodged in their bodies which are only discovered by vets at a later date, or the animal goes missing for a time between being shot and arriving at home
- Animals are not taken to the vet for financial reasons
- Wild animals are targeted and their deaths not noted or investigated

Introducing an air gun licensing system would be the first step in regulating a practice which harms an unknown number of animals every year.

Airgun attacks on animals and feelings of public safety

Currently, it is permissible to use air guns in back gardens and on private land. We do not know the exact locations of many airgun attacks on animals. There have also been numerous reports of attacks on publically accessible or publically owned land such as parks, golf courses and other green spaces. Examples include a recent shooting of a cat in Carnoustie, and several recorded instances of attacks on swans.

As the cases outline below demonstrate, the damage to animals targeted by airguns can be fatal, and in some cases requires extensive medical treatment.

However, these case studies also show that attacks on animals can lead to people feeling less safe within their communities.

Case Study 1, Lenzie, 1996

This case involved a cat, Suki, which had a particularly friendly nature and often approached strangers, being shot at close range with an airgun. The lump found in Suki’s body was thought to be at the point of entry initially, but it transpired that the bullet passed most of the way through the cat’s body and lodged in the shoulder opposite the entry wound. The owner reported that:

_I never found out who shot my beloved cat. I don’t think I could print what I would do to them if I ever did. I do know however, that after that day a mistrust crept its way through most of us in the village. In mine and my family’s minds, everyone was potentially the culprit. Had we had the choice, we would have gladly kept Suki indoors for the rest of her life. Our village was a quiet, upper class residential neighbourhood, and we no longer felt safe there. The gun shot through the safety net we had held in each other and for me, changed how I saw the neighbours all around me._
Local Government and Regeneration Committee

Submission Name: League Against Cruel Sports  Submission Number: 31

Suki was severely injured yet managed to survive and recover fully.

Case Study 2, Stranraer, 2006

This case involved a cat, Clemmie, shot by the next door neighbour. Unusually, because the owner was nearby when the cat was shot, she was able to identify the attacker and call the police.

After her neighbour was arrested, the owner was called at 3am to let her know that the attacker had been released and to call the police if there was any further trouble, and in case her neighbour had other weapons on the property.

I had my disabled and elderly parents with me at the time and it was all very distressing indeed… Next morning I took the cat back to the vets, to be put on a drip, sedated and continue her observation. On my return from the vet’s, this delightful neighbour taunted me with ‘pussy cat, pussy cat’ calls.

The attacker moved house afterwards. Even though the owner had heard the gunshot and the neighbour had stored weapons and ammunition next to his window, the case never progressed to court.

Clemmie suffered extensive injuries and clung to life for a few hours, but despite the best efforts of the vets, began to fit as a result of her injuries. The owner had to take the very sad decision to euthanize the cat to prevent her suffering any further.

This case involved a cat, Mia, who disappeared for a day and was then found in her owner’s front garden.

As it was the weekend, the cat had to be taken to the emergency veterinary practice, and operated on. Her spleen and parts of her intestine were removed. Mia was fortunate enough to recover from the attack.

She is an outdoor cat and my initial reaction was to keep her as a house cat going forward because I had no idea who was to blame for the shooting.

All three of these cases illustrate that it can be extremely difficult to prosecute attackers, even in the rare instances where the attacker can be identified and further highlight the need for air gun licensing and restrictions imposed on where air guns can be used.

Previous convictions for wildlife or animal welfare offences

The proposed air gun legislation uses the 1978 Firearms Act as a basis for ruling which applications should and shouldn’t be granted a licence. However, this affords leeway in whether or not a conviction for wildlife crime should be considered a reason to refuse a licence.
Local Government and Regeneration Committee

Submission Name: League Against Cruel Sports Submission Number: 31

We believe that the proposed legislation should be amended in line with the regulations around General Licences. These state that:

4. You may not use this licence if you were convicted of a wildlife crime on or after 1st January 2008 unless, in respect of that offence, you were either dismissed with an admonition, you are a rehabilitated person (for the purposes of the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974 and your conviction is spent) or a court discharged you absolutely.

Any person not able to use the General Licence can still apply to Scottish Natural Heritage for an individual licence.

... “wildlife crime” means any offence under the Wildlife & Countryside Act 1981, the Conservation (Natural Habitats &c.) Regulations 1994, the Protection of Badgers Act 1992, the Protection of Wild Mammals (Scotland) Act 2002, the Animal Health & Welfare (Scotland) Act 2006 and the Protection of Animals (Scotland) Act 1912 (all as amended)

Given that nearly all parties represented in the Scottish Parliament are concerned about wildlife crime, we believe it would be consistent with the current direction of policy for the Air Weapons and Licensing Bill to be amended to bring it in line with the existing General Licences regime.

Appropriateness of shooting animals with an air gun for sport

The League Against Cruel Sports does not believe that animals should be harmed for entertainment, and we are not alone. A YouGov poll conducted in 2011 found that two-thirds of people in the UK find shooting live animals for sport totally unacceptable, and less than a quarter find it acceptable.

Much of the literature produced by the shooting industry suggests that animals are always killed cleanly by air guns, but this is unlikely given that the targeted animals are relatively small, highly agile and likely to be encountered in or near cover. The potential for animals to be injured or maimed and left to die a slow, lingering death is high.

Shooting of live animals by young people

Whether for pest control or for sporting purposes, humanely killing an animal with an air gun requires a considerable degree of skill. It is particularly inappropriate to allow people under the age of 18 to attempt to shoot live animals for any purpose.
Local Government and Regeneration Committee

Submission Name: League Against Cruel Sports
Submission Number: 31

Academic studies (Ceylan et al:2002 and Abad et al: 2009)\(^v\) have shown that young people are particularly likely both to be the victims and perpetrators of accidental shootings with air guns. Air guns can cause terrible injuries to people, and Abad et al particularly highlight the prevalence of eye injuries to young people caused by air guns. Allowing young people to stalk live animals, which move in space and time, has greater potential to cause accidental injuries to humans than shooting static targets at a club.

We therefore believe the legislation should be amended so that under 18s cannot shoot live animals.

Recommendations:

Firstly, we recommend that the committee take cognisance of the number of air gun attacks on animals and the considerable distress and pain that these cause to both the animals and their owners. Although this Bill was largely introduced because of injuries and deaths to humans, air gun licensing could have a very significant positive impact on animal welfare.

Specific recommendations:

- The requirement that shooting only take place in large areas of private land or shooting clubs remain within the Bill.
- The Bill be amended so that people with previous convictions for wildlife and animal welfare offences are not considered suitable to hold airgun licences
- That sporting use on live animals be removed as a legitimate purpose to hold a licence
- That a lower age limit of 18 be placed on the suitability of applications to use air guns on live animals.

2. Air Weapons Licensing

You may respond to all the questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

13. In what ways will the creation of an air weapons licensing system in Scotland contribute to preserving public order and safety, reducing crime and advancing public health policy?

I feel that any benefit would be minimal and the cost of administering such a licensing system would far out weigh any benefit. It may also serve to increase the number of firearm and shotgun certificate applications, where people feel that if they must submit to a formal licence, they may as well apply for either a FAC or SC as the qualifying criteria will be similar.

14. Is there sufficient provision, or sufficient capacity to provide, suitable numbers of air weapons clubs across all areas of Scotland for use by registered air weapons owners/ users?

In respect of the number of airguns currently in use in Scotland, I would think not

15. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for personal/recreational use?

The feelings at the moment (although not 100% sure) will be that air guns will have to be used only on licensed ranges as part of a club activity, or for pest control on private land with the landowners consent. Private safe use in the owners garden ill be illegal?? This is probably one of the largest uses of air guns, training youngsters who may well go on the firearms in later life.
16. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those aged 14 to 17 who use air weapons?

Greater degree of supervision will be required.

17. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for commercial/professional reasons (for example: for pest control; as part of the tourist/hunting season; as part of fairs, paintballing centre, entertainment sector etc.)?

People current using air guns for pest control will be forced to apply for a licence to use their air guns. On private land with owner consent. They can currently do this without a licence. I would not use the word hunting and air guns in the same sentence. In my opinion low powered air guns are only suitable for small pests. I haven’t given a lot of thought to paintballing fairs etc.

18. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for competitive sporting purposes?

It will, drive down the numbers of people competing, particularly those with limited budgets.

19. Is it equitable for those applying for an air weapons certificate to pay a fee which cannot be refundable irrespective of whether a certificate is granted or not?
No (millions of law abiding individuals use air guns at the moment, why should they have to pay a fee to continue to do so?

20. Will the air weapons licensing system have a positive or negative impact on other areas of the public sector in Scotland (eg. The work of local government, public agencies etc.)?

I would say a negative effect, certainly on those with the responsibility to oversee the licensing arrangements. Already overworked individuals with little support due to financing will find themselves facing an even greater workload.

21. What, if any, might the unintended consequences of introducing an air weapons licensing system in Scotland be?

AS mentioned previously, if people are going to have to apply for a licence, which has similar requirements to a FAC or SC, they may well apply for one, thus increasing the number of Firearms and Shotguns in circulation.

22. Do you have any other comments to make on air weapons licensing aspects of the Bill?

Limited funding would be more wisely spent in other areas, such as health, education or social work.

23. Is the current Scottish licensing regime, as set out in the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 and the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005, fit for purpose?

No.

Our detailed answers to specific questions in this document will refer.

24. Should a licensing system seek to regulate individual behaviour or communities of space (eg. ‘city space’ etc.)?

Civic licensing relates to licensing both in the public interest and for reasons of public safety. This relates both to the behaviours of individuals and the impact on communities of space.

Liquor licensing is similar based on the 5 statutory licensing objectives.

25. In what way should the licensing system in Scotland interact with the support the land use planning system, community planning and regeneration?
The European Services Directive promotes freedom of movement of business within Europe. Currently, not all licensing provisions reflect these provisions.

Community Planning can be reflected in policy decisions both by licensing boards and licensing authorities.

Case law suggests that licensing and planning regimes are separate entities.

At the present time, neither the liquor nor civic regime specifically address the issue of community regeneration.

26. How does the licensing system in Scotland assist with the delivery of sustainable development and economic balanced areas?

See our response to Question 25 above.

Further, the 1982 Act in particular, requires updating to allow a more flexible approach in this area.

27. In what way does the licensing system in Scotland support health and planning, addressing health inequalities and public health wellbeing outcomes?

The existing legislation is weak in this area.

Licensing Boards require to take account of the 4th licensing objective in relation to policies and decision-making.

The 1982 Act makes no such reference.

4. Alcohol Licensing

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

28. In what ways will the Bill’s provisions on alcohol licensing allow for reductions in crime and the preservation of public order?

We consider that there are a number of technical inconsistencies, which will make the application of the provisions, if enacted, difficult for Boards and licensing authorities. These include –

- Fit and proper person test linked to licensing objectives
- Lack of consistency across the provisions
- Not applied to occasional licences
- Transfer – fitness of the transferee is relevant not the fitness of the Applicant

29. Are there any other measures which should be taken to assist in the reduction of crime and the preservation of public order?

The Relevant Offences provisions in relation to liquor should be removed and a similar system to that provided in the 1982 regime established.

30. In what ways will the provisions in the Bill enhance the licensing objectives set out in the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005?
The addition of young persons to the licensing objective currently relating to children is welcomed.

We welcome the return of the fit and proper ground of refusal subject to the technical concerns outlined earlier.

Clarification on overprovision localities is welcome.

31. In what ways will the re-introduction of the “fit and proper person” test assist with the implementation of the licensing objectives set out in the 2005 act?

We are of the view that this should be a separate ground of refusal, the licensing objectives being adequately addressed.

If it stands alone, it widens the scope of the issues that Boards can take into account in making decisions.

32. Have there been any unintended consequences arising from the 2005 Act, for example, in rural areas or the economic regeneration of areas?

Yes. As referred to earlier, the liquor legislation makes no reference to economic regeneration.

Anecdotal evidence and numbers of licensed premises suggest a downturn in the number of businesses selling alcohol.

The whole system of obtaining a licence is now much more complex.

33. Which, if any, types of spent relevant offences should be required to be disclosed and what do you think the benefits of disclosure will be?
See answer to Question 29 above. A similar system to the 1982 Act should be put into place.

34. Do you have any other comments to make on the alcohol licensing aspects of the Bill?

We have the following additional comments –

- Constant amendment of the provisions leads to an increasingly complex system with a significant number of grey areas where procedures differ across the country. Such as -
  - Major Variations
  - Transfers
  - Occasional Licences
  - Reviews
- There needs to be a detailed specification in relation to Annual reports which Boards can comply with.

4. Taxi and Private Hire Car Licensing

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

35. What benefits should the licensing of taxis and private hire cars deliver for customers?

Public safety – suitable drivers and safe vehicles.

36. In what ways do customers, providers of taxi/private hire car services and local authorities benefit from the two-tier licensing regime for taxis and private hire cars?

Anecdotal evidence suggests that the public do not know the difference between the two.

The current system allows local authorities to attach greater restrictions to taxis than private hire cars.

37. The Government states that a radical overhaul of the current two-tier licensing regime would “clearly require a very high level of resource and would cause significant disruption for the trade, local authorities, the police and ultimately the travelling public”. What are your views on this and would the potential costs and disruptions outweigh any potential benefits of a unified system?
It will cause disruption.

Local Authorities have well established licensing schemes for both.

38. Do the changes made by sections 60 (overprovision of private hire car licences) and 61 (testing of private hire car drivers) of the Bill strike the right balance in terms of introducing greater consistency while maintaining justifiable differences?

No. There will be practical difficulties in implementing two different quantity restrictions with significant associated costs for local authorities.

The power for local authorities to introduce such tests is welcome, however, it should be left to local authority discretion as to whether the power should be implemented.

39. Do you have any views on the section 62 provisions bringing vehicles contracted for exclusive use for 24 or more hours within the licensing regime for taxis and private hire cars, and should any exemptions be included in the Bill?

SOLAR welcomes this.

40. Taking the proposals in sections 63 to 66 of the Bill together, how will they have the desired effect of strengthening the metal dealers' licensing regime to the extent that metal theft and related criminal activity is reduced?

SOLAR welcomes these provisions

41. In your view, could the Bill be further strengthened in any way, for example, by including an accreditation scheme for metal dealers?

42. Removal of exemption warrant - do you wish to comment on the proposal to remove the exemption warrant system?
43. Removal of requirement to retain metal on-site - what impact will the proposal to remove the retention of metal requirement have on the enforcement of the licensing regime and prevention of criminal activities?

44. Forms of payment - what is your view on the proposal to go 'cashless' and is there merit in considering whether metal dealers could be allowed to operate using cash for only very small transactions, which could be limited to a certain number per month?
45. Forms of identification and record keeping:

In line with the Scrap Metal Dealers Act 2013, the Bill adds additional record keeping requirements to a metal dealer’s licence including recording the means by which a seller’s name and address was verified and retaining a copy of the document, and the method of payment and a copy of the payment document. The Bill will also require a metal dealer to record information in books with serially numbered pages or by means of an electronic device, and to keep separate records at each place of business. Such information and documents are to be kept for three rather than the current two years.

How important is it that the record keeping requirements reflect those in the Scrap Metal Dealers Act 2013, and do you agree with the Scottish Government that the proposed record keeping requirements are not unduly burdensome?
46. Mandatory and discretionary licensing requirements:

The Scottish Ministers can impose mandatory licensing requirements, such as those included in the Bill relating to record keeping and the identification of customers. In addition, local authorities can also attach discretionary requirements to licences in their areas.

Does the Bill get the balance right between mandatory and discretionary licensing requirements? Should the Bill include other mandatory conditions for obtaining a metal dealer's licence, such as installing CCTV at metal dealers’ premises or in relation to labelling of metal and ‘forensic coding’?

47. Will there be any impacts during the transitional period between ending the current theatre licence and starting the public entertainment licence?

Where local authorities have not included theatres in their resolution for public entertainment provision there will be a lengthy period of time to get these amended, therefore the transitional period should have regard to this.

48. Are there additional costs or resource implications on theatres or licensing authorities?

There will be conversions costs to theatres in obtaining new licences and costs associated with updating resolutions for licensing authorities.

49. How should licensing authorities integrate their current fee charging structure into their public entertainment regime?

The whole question of fees relating to the 1982 Act needs to be reviewed and updated.

6. Civic Licensing – Sexual Entertainment Venues

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

50. What are the consequences of operating the new licensing regime using the definitions set out at section 68 of the Bill?

- 'sexual entertainment venue'
- 'audience'
- 'financial gain'
- 'organiser'
- 'premises'
- 'sexual entertainment', and
- 'display of nudity'

In order to avoid confusion, all references to adult entertainment should be removed from the liquor legislation provisions.

51. The Bill specifies that a venue hosting sexual entertainment on three occasions or less within a 12 month period would not be treated as a sexual entertainment venue: does this have any unintended consequences?

We would question how this may be enforced? Such an exemption may dilute the positive impact of the proposed legislation.
52. Local licensing authorities will be able to set the number of sexual entertainment venues in their area to below the existing level, or zero: are there any advantages or disadvantages to this approach?

We agree this decision should be left to local authorities.

53. The Bill relies mainly on the existing licensing regime for sex shops as set out in section 44 and Schedule 2 of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 (application, notification, objections and representations, revocation of licences etc., enforcement and appeals): is this mechanism adequate for the licensing of sexual entertainment venues - if not, please explain why?

We would reference our earlier comments in relation to the 1982 Act requiring to be overhauled and modernised.

54. Are there any barriers to licensing authorities operating the new licensing regime?

Until these provisions are enacted it is difficult to foresee what the barriers will be beyond earlier general comments made relating to the legislation.
55. Civic Licensing

Do you have any other comments to make on the civic licensing aspects of the Bill?

We would re-iterate that the Act is now over 30 years old and it is becoming increasingly difficult to address modern business activity within the structure of the Act.

In addition, penalties for civic offences are not generally commensurate with other licensing regimes e.g. liquor, private landlord registration, HMO licensing.

- 'sexual entertainment venue'
- 'audience'
- 'financial gain'
- 'organiser'
- 'premises'
- 'sexual entertainment', and
- 'display of nudity'

I should not be classed as working in the sexual entertainment industry I do nothing more than an actresses when they are in topless in films or shows if there not class as working in sexual entertainment then why should dancers.

51. The Bill specifies that a venue hosting sexual entertainment on three occasions or less within a 12 month period would not be treated as a sexual entertainment venue: does this have any unintended consequences?

I think this is not the answer lap dancing club provide a safe venue with trained staff 12 months of the year. I would not choose to go to a venue 3 times a year were the staff and customers are not used to a professionally run club this would be very unsafe.
52. Local licensing authorities will be able to set the number of sexual entertainment venues in their area to below the existing level, or zero: are there any advantages or disadvantages to this approach?

The disadvantage to this is as a dancer I have chosen this career, if lap dancing clubs in Scotland shut down it will not make dancers stop working but we will then have to travel, having a family this will be difficult and an inconvenience for many people.

53. The Bill relies mainly on the existing licensing regime for sex shops as set out in section 44 and Schedule 2 of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 (application, notification, objections and representations, revocation of licences etc., enforcement and appeals): is this mechanism adequate for the licensing of sexual entertainment venues - if not, please explain why?

54. Are there any barriers to licensing authorities operating the new licensing regime?

the barriers is that it creates an inequality within Scotland. what gives the council the right to choose were dancers should work if Glasgow get there licence taken away then it should be the same for everywhere. people of the council are deciding my families future when they know absolute nothing about the entertainment industry how does lying topless on a beach which most young adults do or have done any different from doing it in a secure night club.
55. Civic Licensing

Do you have any other comments to make on the civic licensing aspects of the Bill?

I have been a dancer for some time the entertainment industry we work in has provided a good life for me and my family. I love my job it’s fun safe and I pick my shifts flexible hours having two kids and a partner in Afghanistan. This is the ideal career we make our money if in any night we do not make money we don’t pay the club our fee, managers are fantastic, I have put myself through collage bought my own property in any other career path I may have taken I wouldn’t have been able to archive this at such a young age. A lap dancing club for most people in this day an age is a fun night out for male and female stag/hen party birthday ect… there no contact no nudity no touching nothing sexual guys enjoy coming for company many business man come to our club instead of sitting by them self in a hotel or empty bar for company, we provide entertainment these clubs do no harm in the many years I have worked in the industry never once have I felt unsafe or in any danger there is more danger and violence in a standard night club these clubs should be kept open.

Civic licensing – sexual entertainment venues
6. Civic Licensing – Sexual Entertainment Venues

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

50. What are the consequences of operating the new licensing regime using the definitions set out at section 68 of the Bill?

- 'sexual entertainment venue'
- 'audience'
- 'financial gain'
- 'organiser'
- 'premises'
- 'sexual entertainment', and
- 'display of nudity'

We believe that the consequence of using the language outlined above to describe “sexual entertainment” and it’s associated activities legitimises a pervasive form of Violence Against Women. It is our understanding, and that of the Scottish Government, that strip clubs, lap dancing clubs, etc are forms of gender based violence that have clear detrimental impacts for the women involved, local communities and on gender relationships as a whole.

51. The Bill specifies that a venue hosting sexual entertainment on three occasions or less within a 12 month period would not be treated as a sexual entertainment venue: does this have any unintended consequences?
We appreciate that providing “sexual entertainment” infrequently would not in itself mean that a venue was a “sexual entertainment venue”, but we would expect the premises to have in place a licence to host the “sexual entertainment”, regardless of frequency.

The Highland Violence Against Women Partnership understands terms such as “adult entertainment” and “sexual entertainment” to be euphemisms for forms of Commercial Sexual Exploitation, and, as such, forms of Violence Against Women. Commercial sexual exploitation is as harmful to the individuals involved and to society as a whole regardless of how frequent performances are.

52. Local licensing authorities will be able to set the number of sexual entertainment venues in their area to below the existing level, or zero: are there any advantages or disadvantages to this approach?

We still require clarity on whether or not Local Authorities will be able to do this under existing European legislation and “grandfather” or “acquired” rights”. We understand that Local Authorities could set their numbers to zero, but some Licensing Boards are concerned that where there are existing venues offering lap dancing, etc, they would not be legally able to set the numbers to zero. However, as we understand that this new legislation would have no bearing on the previous application for alcohol licensing (which is, in effect, all that current venues have in terms of licensing arrangements) we therefore anticipate that it would mean that areas could set their numbers at zero.

We welcome this proposal (subject to clarity around the issues raised above) as current approaches by local Councils to Violence Against Women are being undermined by the current system in relation to Licensing.

53. The Bill relies mainly on the existing licensing regime for sex shops as set out in section 44 and Schedule 2 of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 (application, notification, objections and representations, revocation of licences etc., enforcement and appeals): is this mechanism adequate for the licensing of sexual entertainment venues - if not, please explain why?

We are unsure if this is adequate, particularly as venues are often in areas with low population density and therefore there are not many residents in the area who are informed of the application. We believe that it is appropriate for Boards to adopt systems whereby they can draw attention to applications to a wider range of interested individuals, particularly their own Council’s lead officers for equalities and Violence Against Women issues.

54. Are there any barriers to licensing authorities operating the new licensing regime?

Only potentially the issue described in question 52 in relation to existing establishments.

2. Air Weapons Licensing

You may respond to all the questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

13. In what ways will the creation of an air weapons licensing system in Scotland contribute to preserving public order and safety, reducing crime and advancing public health policy?

The Scottish SPCA fully supports the introduction of a licensing system for air weapons. The Scottish SPCA accepts that there are lawful purposes that people may wish to own and use an air weapon, however, a licensing system should ensure that such a person has a legitimate reason for using an air weapon and a lawful place to use it, be that a gun club or on land with landowners permission.

Currently the Police have no power over the ownership of airguns, until a crime has been committed and the perpetrator identified. Air weapons are potentially dangerous weapons and should only be held by a fit and proper person who has a legitimate reason for possessing one. There is currently no involvement by the Police to determine if a person is deemed to be fit and proper with a lawful reason for using an air weapon.

There are wide ranging estimates on the number of air weapons currently held in Scotland, even if a percentage of these are removed from circulation, the misuse of air weapons will subsequently reduce.

Using an air weapon to shoot wildlife for non pest control purposes is an offence, as is shooting domestic pets and livestock, however, virtually no one is ever traced in relation to these offences. Since potential air weapon licensing was introduced by the Cabinet Secretary, the Scottish SPCA has seen a rise in the number of domestic cats shot by air weapons (three of which were fatal), this may be due to increased media interest and public awareness.

The use of air weapons against humans or animals is an offence and greater control over ownership will certainly reduce crime.

In the reported instances of air weapons being used against wildlife or domestic pets, owners of the animal or the Scottish SPCA can face substantial veterinary costs. The same will apply to the medical profession in relation to misuse of an air weapon where a human being is the victim.

In a 2012 survey of 120 veterinary practices in Scotland, 91% of respondents supported a change to the law.

In relation to air weapons, the Scottish SPCA responds to calls from the public or veterinary surgeons where animals have been the target of the misuse of air weapons.

In 2011 the Scottish SPCA responded to 114 air weapon related incidents.

In 2012 the Scottish SPCA responded to 156 air weapon related incidents.
14. Is there sufficient provision, or sufficient capacity to provide, suitable numbers of air weapons clubs across all areas of Scotland for use by registered air weapons owners/users?

This is unknown to the Scottish SPCA, however, given the estimated number of air weapons in Scotland, it is unlikely that there is currently the capacity throughout Scotland for all owners to have access to an existing club. Like many other participants in other sports and pastimes, clubs should be self-funding.

15. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for personal/recreational use?

As long as the personal/recreational use is deemed as a lawful purpose there should be no barrier to a person obtaining a licence. Clear definitions of personal/recreational use should be clearly defined. Many of the incidents involving domestic cats and wildlife are discovered in densely populated housing areas, where such personal/recreational use should be questioned.

16. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those aged 14 to 17 who use air weapons?

The lower age limit to apply and obtain a licence should be 18 years of age. Anyone aged between 14-17 should only be allowed access to an air weapon in the presence and under the supervision of a licenced person over the age of 18. The licence holder should bear legal responsibility for any misuse of an air weapon by a person under the age of 18 who is under their supervision.

17. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for commercial/professional reasons (for example: for pest control; as part of the tourist/hunting season; as part of fairs, paintballing centre, entertainment sector etc.)?
Under the proposals, pest control would be a lawful purpose. A licence for pest control should only be available to individuals on their own land or to a person who can demonstrate at the time of application that they have landowner’s permission to carry out pest control on a defined area of land. For commercial pest controllers, a licence condition should state that landowner’s permission is required.

As for entertainment venues – fairs, the owner of the airgun used should be licensed for that purpose and the licence holder should bear the responsibility for any misuse of an air weapon that is used by a client.

18. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for competitive sporting purposes?

Other than a potential cost implication and access to a suitable club or venue, the licensing of air weapons should have no effect on those participating in competitive sport.

19. Is it equitable for those applying for an air weapons certificate to pay a fee which cannot be refundable irrespective of whether a certificate is granted or not?

Yes, the Police will be required to carry out the same function regardless of whether a licence is or is not issued.

20. Will the air weapons licensing system have a positive or negative impact on other areas of the public sector in Scotland (eg. The work of local government, public agencies etc.)?

Any reduction in the misuse of air weapons will have a positive impact on the costs currently incurred by the Police in investigating misuse and the medical and veterinary costs caused by the misuse of air weapons.
21. What, if any, might the unintended consequences of introducing an air weapons licensing system in Scotland be?

No licensing system can prevent criminal activity, however, without such a system the Police currently have no ability to deal with air weapon ownership.

22. Do you have any other comments to make on air weapons licensing aspects of the Bill?

There are many activities that require to be licenced from driving to watching a television in your own home. UK citizens do not have a “right to bear arms”. Owning a weapon that is potentially dangerous to humans and animals is a privilege and not a right. In these circumstances it is not unreasonable for a person to prove that they are a fit and proper person, that they have an air weapon for a legitimate reason and that they can prove that they have permission to use the air weapon at a stated location.

The Scottish SPCA can provide details of individual cases if required.

I have included a report from the Scotsman newspaper below.
Airguns are not a licence for cruelty

Scottish SPCA supports plans to regulate weapon ownership with a permit scheme in a bid to protect animals says Mike Flynn

Scottish SPCA supports plans to regulate weapon ownership with a permit scheme in a bid to protect animals says Mike Flynn.

The practice of licensing airguns is already in place in many countries where the use of such weapons is legal. The Scottish SPCA believes that a permit scheme would help to ensure that only responsible owners are able to purchase and use airguns, thereby reducing the risk of misuse and cruelty to animals.

Mike Flynn, Chief Executive of the Scottish SPCA, said: "We fully support the Scottish Government's plans to introduce a permit scheme for the possession and use of airguns. It is a simple and effective way of ensuring that only responsible owners are able to purchase and use these weapons, thereby reducing the risk of misuse and cruelty to animals."

The permit scheme would require individuals to provide a number of details, including their age, address, and any previous convictions, before being granted a permit. The permit would also require the owner to renew it on a regular basis, ensuring that they remain responsible and capable of using the weapon safely.

"This is not only good for animals, but also for their owners," Flynn added. "A permit scheme would ensure that only responsible owners are able to purchase and use these weapons, thereby reducing the risk of misuse and cruelty to animals."

Mike Flynn continued: "We hope that the Scottish Government will continue to support our efforts to promote responsible gun ownership, and that the permit scheme will be implemented as soon as possible."

The Scottish SPCA has been campaigning for the introduction of a permit scheme for the possession and use of airguns in Scotland for many years. The organisation believes that this measure is necessary to protect both animals and their owners, and that it is a simple and effective way of ensuring that only responsible owners are able to purchase and use these weapons.

The organisation has long argued that the current system of licensing airguns is too lenient, and that a permit scheme would help to ensure that only responsible owners are able to purchase and use these weapons, thereby reducing the risk of misuse and cruelty to animals.

Mike Flynn concluded: "We fully support the Scottish Government's plans to introduce a permit scheme for the possession and use of airguns. It is a simple and effective way of ensuring that only responsible owners are able to purchase and use these weapons, thereby reducing the risk of misuse and cruelty to animals."

The permit scheme would require individuals to provide a number of details, including their age, address, and any previous convictions, before being granted a permit. The permit would also require the owner to renew it on a regular basis, ensuring that they remain responsible and capable of using the weapon safely.

34. Do you have any other comments to make on the alcohol licensing aspects of the Bill?

The National Licensing Standards Officers Group would like to put forward the proposal of two amendments to section 84A of the Licensing Scotland Act 2005.

At present section 84A, is restricted to the Chief Constable being able to bring a review of any personal licence, if the holder of a personal licence has been found to have acted in a manner inconsistent with the licensing objectives.

As a group, we would like to see the power to report a personal licence under section
Currently, should a holder of a personal licence be found, by an LSO, to be acting in a manner inconsistent with the licensing objectives, the only route to make the appropriate licensing board aware, is through a premises licence review application under section 36.

This approach is cumbersome and in the case of an Occasional Licence applied and held under a personal licence, not applicable.

We feel that, notwithstanding the normal process of guidance and advice carried out by LSO’s, it would be beneficial to be able to bring a personal licence holder before the issuing board. This would allow all parties to discuss their conduct before the board, and for the board to apply any endorsements, if appropriate.

The second amendment we would like to propose, would be the inclusion to section 84 of a provision similar to that in section 38. This is where a board receives a review of a premises licence, a licensing standards officer may prepare and submit a report on the proposal.

It is our view, that, if this could be included in the Act, it would assist boards in determining an application by the chief constable under 84A, as the licensing standards officer may have further information in terms of the licensing objectives or the “fit and proper person” aspect of the act.
Thank you for the opportunity to respond to this consultation.

The reduction in crime and increase in safety intended by the Act are likely to have the helpful effect of reducing Emergency Dept attendance.

At question 30:

Creation of new offences of supplying alcohol to a child or young person for consumption in a public place will enhance the Protecting Children From Harm licensing objective as currently there appears to be provision only for sales and purchase of alcohol within in the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005.

Additionally, the amendment of the licensing objective in relation to children to now include young person’s is welcomed as we recognise the health and other alcohol associated harms amongst 16 and 17 year olds of which there is no proviso for within current licensing objectives.

At question 34:

Amendment of the duration of licensing policy statement to align with the term of local government elections appears to be a sensible approach. It is reasonable to expect a revised policy statement within 18 months of local government elections as suggested. We anticipate that this will lengthen current policy statements to 4 years (with next policy statement thus being due by November 2017 instead of current planned November 2016). We would, however, be concerned if such an alignment caused any further postponement of the consultation and policy process. We would, therefore, welcome a requirement for a maximum period of 5 years for completion of a revised licensing policy.

It is encouraging that clarification has been given regarding entire Board areas being eligible to be described as an area of overprovision. Provision for Boards to take account of licensed hours in overprovision assessments is also welcomed. However, in section 54 of the Bill it is suggested that at Section 7-01 (3)(ii) the word ‘must’ is repealed and replaced with ‘may’ implying that the number, capacity and licensed hours is not an essential part of an overprovision assessment.

John

3. General Licensing Issues

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

23. Is the current Scottish licensing regime, as set out in the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 and the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005, fit for purpose?

The Scottish Licensed Trade Association has never been supportive of a licensing system governed by Local Authority Licensing Boards. In our opinion, such a system, solely administered by Local Councillors, continues to lead to rife inconsistencies, political “point scoring” and confusion, not just for the trade, but the customers it serves. The Scottish Licensed Trade Association is of the opinion that this fundamental flaw does not make the current licensing system in a general context fit for purpose and reiterates the need to change this inept and inefficient system and calls for a non-political National Government Licensing body to be set up. At local level/regional level there should be a group looking at local/regional issues. Such groups should consist of representatives from the trade, health organisation, community groups, the legal fraternity, police, in fact anyone deemed to be interested in the Licensed Trade. Perhaps these groups could be made up in a similar way to Local Licensing Fora. Alternatively a national independent adjudicator or an independent conciliation/arbitration body should be formed. With the need for the Scottish Government to currently consider separate legislation in respect of Tenant Licensees and the relationship they have with their Pubco/landlords, such an arbitrary system would be opportune to extend to cover all Licensing matters.

24. Should a licensing system seek to regulate individual behaviour or communities of space (eg. ‘city space’ etc.)?
25. In what way should the licensing system in Scotland interact with the support the land use planning system, community planning and regeneration?

26. How does the licensing system in Scotland assist with the delivery of sustainable development and economic balanced areas?

27. In what way does the licensing system in Scotland support health and planning, addressing health inequalities and public health wellbeing outcomes?

4. Alcohol Licensing

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

28. In what ways will the Bill’s provisions on alcohol licensing allow for reductions in crime and the preservation of public order?

The Association supports the additional new offence regarding the supply of alcohol to a child or young person in a public place and sees this as a resolution to ceasing outdoor “drinking dens” and strengthening the fifth licensing objective.

29. Are there any other measures which should be taken to assist in the reduction of crime and the preservation of public order?
Further action should be taken with regard to irresponsible promotions in the off trade. Despite some lenient mandatory conditions extended to off-sales premises in respect of controlling irresponsible promotional activity having been introduced, such activity still continues.

The SLTA recognises that The Scottish Executive is currently carrying out research into the link between binge/excessive drinking and promotions in Off-sales, and that, if necessary, further regulations can be introduced. However, in our opinion, it is within the Off-sales sector, particularly supermarkets, where the greatest problem exists. When you consider that 62% of all alcohol sold is sold through the Off-sales sector and 72.5% of that is sold through the top five supermarket chains, greater action needs to be taken.

More and more people are buying cheap drink from the Off-sales sector and consuming it at home. We have become a nation of home drinkers and evidence shows that violent domestic incidents are increasing and are a greater problem for police to deal with.

We know from other jurisdictions, who have a very high proportion of alcohol sales from the off-trade, that they have very high alcohol abuse problems as well. There are very many well-run responsible off-sales operators in this country, however there are also some who are totally irresponsible. The prices charged, especially in the supermarkets, are quite often invitations to abuse alcohol. Irresponsible drinks promotion regulations should be standardised for all retailers of alcohol.

30. In what ways will the provisions in the Bill enhance the licensing objectives set out in the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005?
31. In what ways will the re-introduction of the “fit and proper person” test assist with the implementation of the licensing objectives set out in the 2005 act?

The SLTA has for many years advocated that the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act should not apply to prospective new licence-holders. Our views have slightly changed on this in recent times to the effect that there should perhaps be some flexibility, at the discretion of the police, dependent on the severity of the crime previously committed. The 2005 Act narrowed the Police’s authority which was deeply concerning to the Licensed Trade and the Association was against limiting the Chief Constable’s ability to object on the grounds of an applicant’s involvement in serious organised crime. The Association welcomes the reintroduction of “fit and proper person” legislation enabling the Police to impart intelligence on an individual to the board.

With the reintroduction of “fit and proper person” legislation, Police powers of objection will no longer be restricted to only issues of “serious organised crime”, and will fit in, with not only the Licensing (Scotland) Act’s philosophies “to protect children and young persons from harm”, but also preventing crime and disorder, and securing public safety.

We are pleased to see that the ridiculous situation whereby the Police only had a very restrictive area of objection, yet any individual could object to a licence will be removed.

32. Have there been any unintended consequences arising from the 2005 Act, for example, in rural areas or the economic regeneration of areas?
33. Which, if any, types of spent relevant offences should be required to be disclosed and what do you think the benefits of disclosure will be?

34. Do you have any other comments to make on the alcohol licensing aspects of the Bill?

Overprovision

The SLTA disagrees with the changes proposed in the bill referring to overprovision. In our considered opinion the definition of overprovision has always been a contentious issue and is constantly challenged. In 2010, West Dunbartonshire Licensing Board was the first local authority to declare it was overprovided with all licensed premises and it initially appear that this policy was working. The City of Edinburgh Licensing Board declared in 2012 that Edinburgh had “reached saturation point” as regards the provision of off-sales, and changed its policy statement to the effect that new applications for off-sales licences would be refused. However, when a new Licensing Board was formed in both areas, following council elections, both board’s reversed its predecessor’s policies on overprovision.

Whilst this proposals would be a step further in combating overprovision, the practicalities of using the entire jurisdiction of a licensing board in the assessment of overprovision would no doubt be challenged, particularly in large rural areas. The proposal to use trading hours will only generate confusion and no doubt further challenges will be made, particularly by the large operators. The SLTA has great concerns already over the inaction of licensing boards due to fears their decisions could be challenged in court, leading them to face large legal costs. This often precluded boards from making decisions against bigger operators, especially supermarkets, because they know an appeal is a distinct possibility. Boards have already admitted that there is a two-tier licensing system. It has even been suggested that licensing boards would be more willing to pursue an action against individual operators as the chance of appeal was more remote and this situation will only continue.

In our opinion there is only one solution to the problem of overprovision of liquor licences and that is a moratorium on the number of licensed premises.
Licensing Policy Statements

Whilst the proposed alignment of licensing policy statements to council terms is welcomed, the introduction of an ouster clause, similar to the Town and Country Planning (Scotland) Act 1997, should be introduced. This gives parties six weeks to challenge an adopted local plan with no further challenges being allowed. We see this as strengthening board policy, particularly on overprovision. This would also in some way stop boards deviating from their own policy statement, as has been evident in the Shetland Isles and West Lothian, particularly on the issue of opening hours.

Licensing Boards Financial Reports.

With regard to Licensing Boards Financial Reports we understand that legislation will necessitate Licensing Boards to be transparent about their costs to demonstrate that the fees they set are based upon cost recovery, unless they choose to operate to a deficit. However we see no provision made for potential recovery of costs to the licensed trade for any excess income generated by local licensing fees and this must be addressed.
6. Civic Licensing – Sexual Entertainment Venues

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

50. What are the consequences of operating the new licensing regime using the definitions set out at section 68 of the Bill?

- 'sexual entertainment venue'
- 'audience'
- 'financial gain'
- 'organiser'
- 'premises'
- 'sexual entertainment', and
- 'display of nudity'

51. The Bill specifies that a venue hosting sexual entertainment on three occasions or less within a 12 month period would not be treated as a sexual entertainment venue: does this have any unintended consequences?

Whilst appreciating that the venue concerned would have to be hosting such an event, we are concerned with the definition of “host” does this mean organised by the venue or simply the venue allows such an entertainment being allowed on its premises, but organised by a third party, whether known or unknown by the premises. For example a licensed premises entertaining a stag or hen night finds that, with out their knowledge, a “stripogram” has been booked. If this was to happen on more than three occasions, would the premises be deemed to be a sexual entertainment venue? Clarification is required on this potential situation.
52. Local licensing authorities will be able to set the number of sexual entertainment venues in their area to below the existing level, or zero: are there any advantages or disadvantages to this approach?

53. The Bill relies mainly on the existing licensing regime for sex shops as set out in section 44 and Schedule 2 of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 (application, notification, objections and representations, revocation of licences etc., enforcement and appeals): is this mechanism adequate for the licensing of sexual entertainment venues - if not, please explain why?

54. Are there any barriers to licensing authorities operating the new licensing regime?
55. Civic Licensing

Do you have any other comments to make on the civic licensing aspects of the Bill?

50. What are the consequences of operating the new licensing regime using the definitions set out at section 68 of the Bill?

- 'sexual entertainment venue'
- 'audience'
- 'financial gain'
- 'organiser'
- 'premises'
- 'sexual entertainment', and
- 'display of nudity'

Having been a former employee in the adult entertainment sector, doing security to help pay my way through my engineering degree, I feel that changing the definition of the licence gives a certain stigma which I personally feel would be degrading and have an adverse effect on future employment opportunities. I also feel that for some of the young ladies working there for similar reasons would be characterised in a degrading manner due to the change in definition of the licence.

51. The Bill specifies that a venue hosting sexual entertainment on three occasions or less within a 12 month period would not be treated as a sexual entertainment venue: does this have any unintended consequences?
I feel this would be unfair and unjust, how can you possibly have 1 ruling for some venues allowing them to operate without a licence and in my opinion unsafely, as it would be an environment which has little to no experience of this area and could lead to young ladies being put at risk. Where as a functioning venue who has done risk assessments, has vetted and employed various members of staff to watch, lookout for, care for, and control the safety of every person within the venue is then given greater pressures and given a stigma that others are free from even though both are supplying the same service. Therefore any venue which supplies the service should be treated the same in order to be just and fair.

52. Local licensing authorities will be able to set the number of sexual entertainment venues in their area to below the existing level, or zero: are there any advantages or disadvantages to this approach?

This in my opinion is outrageous, how can you justify reducing the current level of venues to less than the current level or zero? This would mean closing companies that have operated legitimately for several years, thus causing numerous employees to be made unemployed and reducing the number of jobs available. Take myself and several friends I made while employed in the industry, we used this as a stop gap to help fund training and further education allowing us to better our lives. On top of this how can you let local councils choose the number of licences in their area? Surely to allow equality there has to be a ruling which gives all businesses in a given council areas the same chance, not being put at risk because some individuals in certain councils may have personal reasons as to why they dislike the industry.

53. The Bill relies mainly on the existing licensing regime for sex shops as set out in section 44 and Schedule 2 of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 (application, notification, objections and representations, revocation of licences etc., enforcement and appeals): is this mechanism adequate for the licensing of sexual entertainment venues - if not, please explain why?

There is no comparison between adult entertainment and a sex shop so how can the frame work for one be used in the other? The adult entertainment industry is not selling items to take home but is merely supplying entertainment.
54. Are there any barriers to licensing authorities operating the new licensing regime?

I feel this question is similar to one prior, if the new regime is used then we have an equality as some councils depending on their personal issues will have the chance to reduce or close currently operating businesses where as in the same country a few miles away others have the chance to increase or keep the industry.

55. Civic Licensing

Do you have any other comments to make on the civic licensing aspects of the Bill?

Having been a former employee in the industry I feel that the new licencing regime is completely unfair and unjust and unequal:

- Unfair, employees change in stigma is degrading.
- Unjust, business closed and people could be suddenly made unemployed.
- Unequal, across country all council areas should be equal.

50. What are the consequences of operating the new licensing regime using the definitions set out at section 68 of the Bill?

- 'sexual entertainment venue'
- 'audience'
- 'financial gain'
- 'organiser'
- 'premises'
- 'sexual entertainment', and
- 'display of nudity'

Considering that currently and for the past many years venues such as these have been places of entertainment I do not understand why it is now sexual. There are no sex acts performed in any way in any of these venues. The reclassification is ridiculous. I have been an entertainment manager for 10 years now I am to be classed as a sex manager? Do you not yourself find that absurd?

51. The Bill specifies that a venue hosting sexual entertainment on three occasions or less within a 12 month period would not be treated as a sexual entertainment venue: does this have any unintended consequences?

If you can do these entertainment shows 3 times a year and it is not sexual entertainment the what changes the 4th 5th or 1000th time the entertainment show is performed?
52. Local licensing authorities will be able to set the number of sexual entertainment venues in their area to below the existing level, or zero: are there any advantages or disadvantages to this approach?

53. The Bill relies mainly on the existing licensing regime for sex shops as set out in section 44 and Schedule 2 of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 (application, notification, objections and representations, revocation of licences etc., enforcement and appeals): is this mechanism adequate for the licensing of sexual entertainment venues - if not, please explain why?

54. Are there any barriers to licensing authorities operating the new licensing regime?

The licensing authorities should have nothing to do with what goes on in these venues. The do not tell night clubs what dj to let play and bars what bands to put on. Yes I breach of licensing policy happens in regards to the venue then by all means take control but about the entertainment provided in the venue?
55. Civic Licensing

Do you have any other comments to make on the civic licensing aspects of the Bill?

I have been a manager in this industry for the past 10 years. I met my partner in this industry and we have been together for 7 years. We have a 14 month old daughter who relies on this industry to keep a roof over her head and food in her mouth. This is an industry that has not breached any laws. Is accepted in the whole of Europe and the rest of the world it would. Provides thousands of jobs in the country and to give a zero tolerance policy in place is socially and economically unjust.

- 'sexual entertainment venue'
- 'audience'
- 'financial gain'
- 'organiser'
- 'premises'
- 'sexual entertainment', and
- 'display of nudity'

I strongly disagree with the term “sexual entertainment” being used to describe the atmosphere in which I work, I believe the change to the terminology from Adult entertainment to the term sexual entertainment deliberately implies that more goes on in the club than you chose to believe or are willing to accept, The girls where I work do no more than dance for the customers, they do nothing more than say a play in a theatre where a woman may be seen topless or naked, super models who wear revealing clothing or even topes are not in the “sexual entertainment business.

51. The Bill specifies that a venue hosting sexual entertainment on three occasions or less within a 12 month period would not be treated as a sexual entertainment venue: does this have any unintended consequences?

There should only be one law / regulation for all places of adult entertainment, I believe that a gentleman's club such as entertainment central provide a genuine safe working environment for women who CHOOSE to work there. These venues are professionally run establishment's unlike places that would be allowed have this 3 times a year in an uncontrolled environment.
52. Local licensing authorities will be able to set the number of sexual entertainment venues in their area to below the existing level, or zero: are there any advantages or disadvantages to this approach?

I do not think closing these venues would be a wise idea, all of the girls I know who work here chose to do so and it has paid for them to go to university and to save up money to open their own businesses. This place has provided me a place to work after I was made redundant and helped me to pay my bills etc.

53. The Bill relies mainly on the existing licensing regime for sex shops as set out in section 44 and Schedule 2 of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 (application, notification, objections and representations, revocation of licences etc., enforcement and appeals): is this mechanism adequate for the licensing of sexual entertainment venues - if not, please explain why?

54. Are there any barriers to licensing authorities operating the new licensing regime?

I believe it gives local authorities the power to close well established businesses whose owners, managers and staff have met if not exceeded every guideline, objective and code of conduct put to them.
55. Civic Licensing

Do you have any other comments to make on the civic licensing aspects of the Bill?

I have been to a few different adult clubs from time to time for stag do’s and works nights out they are just a bit of harmless fun, no one is forced to work there, who would get a dance of an unhappy dancer?

1. Air Weapons Licensing

You may respond to all the questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

13. In what ways will the creation of an air weapons licensing system in Scotland contribute to preserving public order and safety, reducing crime and advancing public health policy?

Considering crime in respect to air guns has fallen in the Government’s own figures further controls are unnecessary, costly and given that there are estimated to be over 500,000 airguns in Scotland, difficult to enforce.

14. Is there sufficient provision, or sufficient capacity to provide, suitable numbers of air weapons clubs across all areas of Scotland for use by registered air weapons owners/users?

No, not at present.

Scope should be made in the act for lawful use on owners own property, as the current legislation allows.

15. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for personal/recreational use?

Additional cost, loss of use on own property.
16. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those aged 14 to 17 who use air weapons?

17. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for commercial/professional reasons (for example: for pest control; as part of the tourist/hunting season; as part of fairs, paintballing centre, entertainment sector etc.)?

18. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for competitive sporting purposes?

Restrict opportunity for practice outside competitive venues.

19. Is it equitable for those applying for an air weapons certificate to pay a fee which cannot be refundable irrespective of whether a certificate is granted or not?

No, the system works perfectly well at the moment. If the Scottish Government wishes individuals to be licensed then the government should burden the cost.
20. Will the air weapons licensing system have a positive or negative impact on other areas of the public sector in Scotland (eg. The work of local government, public agencies etc.)?

Negative. Ridiculous use of precious resources administering the legislation.

21. What, if any, might the unintended consequences of introducing an air weapons licensing system in Scotland be?

Increase in Shotgun and Firearms certificate applications, if owning an airgun becomes a more involved process. Increase in SGC and FAC applications would use even more manpower in Police Scotland Firearms Department.

Possible criminalisation of people with air rifles in the attic who were unaware of the act.

22. Do you have any other comments to make on air weapons licensing aspects of the Bill?

This bill seeks to address a problem which simply does not exist to the degree that makes this legislation worthwhile.

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

23. Is the current Scottish licensing regime, as set out in the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 and the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005, fit for purpose?

The Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 is a useful tool which has served its purposes well. There are a number of features which are out of date and the Council’s view is that continued amendment of the Act is not helpful.

There is a growing gap between the 1982 Act and the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 and the relevant Licensing Provisions of the Housing (Scotland) Act 2006. This variance makes it more difficult for the public to understand the licensing systems.

For example the difference in determination periods for each type of licence, different language for temporary or occasional licences.

The 1982 Act is deficient in that a Licensing Authority cannot revoke a licence and may only ‘suspend’ a licence for its duration.

The Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 has broad support but it needs to be clear to what extent parliament intends a licence to issued under this Act to cover activity normally licensed under the 1982. For example a practice is common of using a occasional liquor licence, with much reduced fee, to licence what are major events which would otherwise be subject to the Public Entertainment Licence provisions of the 1982 Act. It could be argued that the 2005 is ill suited to regulating that type of activity.

24. Should a licensing system seek to regulate individual behaviour or communities of space (eg. ‘city space’ etc.)?
The Council believes the licensing system should seek to address both. There are normally two concerns for a licensing authority to address themselves to:

a) Is the Licence holder appropriate, usually referred to as fit and proper and
b) Will the premises which is licensed have an adverse impact on the community and its environment.

The system needs to address both concerns.

25. In what way should the licensing system in Scotland interact with the support the land use planning system, community planning and regeneration?

There is a complex relationship between each of these aspects. Frequently concerns raised by a prospective applicant will be very similar to those raised in objections to a planning application. Each system is independent of the other and the decisions can sometimes vary.

The licensing system struggles to deal with regeneration issues with applications often being many months or years from the original regeneration commencing.

Clarity in legislation about how these aspects should be considered in the licensing decision making process would be helpful.

26. How does the licensing system in Scotland assist with the delivery of sustainable development and economic balanced areas?

The licensing system is ill suited to these aspects as economic impact is not a ground with which a licensing decision could be made.
27. In what way does the licensing system in Scotland support health and planning, addressing health inequalities and public health wellbeing outcomes?
4. Alcohol Licensing

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

28. In what ways will the Bill’s provisions on alcohol licensing allow for reductions in crime and the preservation of public order?

The Council welcomes and supports the reintroduction of the ‘fit and proper’ test to the liquor licensing system. Similarly the broadening of the objectives to include ‘protecting young people from harm’ is necessary to remove that apparent gap.

29. Are there any other measures which should be taken to assist in the reduction of crime and the preservation of public order?

The Council would welcome consideration of whether the costs of policing the sale of alcohol could be recovered by means of a levy on relevant license holders. This would include costs for managing the night time economy which disproportionally impacts the City and other similar authorities in Scotland.

30. In what ways will the provisions in the Bill enhance the licensing objectives set out in the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005?

The Council supports the broaden of the ‘protecting of children’ to include ‘young people’
31. In what ways will the re-introduction of the “fit and proper person” test assist with the implementation of the licensing objectives set out in the 2005 Act?

The Council believes this will address public concern that these types of issue should be considered in addition to the licensing objectives when deciding whether or not to grant a relevant licence. It will enhance public confidence in the decision making process.

32. Have there been any unintended consequences arising from the 2005 Act, for example, in rural areas or the economic regeneration of areas?

The Council expresses concern that ‘occasional liquor licences’ are increasingly being used to licence events which would otherwise be licensed under the 1982 Act.

For example large music events operating on a £10 occasional licence. The Council respects that dual licensing is inappropriate but contends that this system is unsustainable for the following reasons:

a) It involves the Licensing Board in regulating issues beyond the sale of alcohol for which the 1982 Act already exists
b) There is a difference in how an event may be licensed depending on the Act used and this inconsistency is confusing
c) Large commercial events are benefitting from absurdly low licensing fees leaving local authorities to pay for managing these events from the general budgets.

33. Which, if any, types of spent relevant offences should be required to be disclosed and what do you think the benefits of disclosure will be?

It is important that public confidence in the system is maintained. If you apply for a Taxi or Private Hire Drivers Licences all convictions must be disclosed spent or otherwise this inconsistency is not helpful.

Generally any conviction disclosing violence or dishonesty should be disclosed.
34. Do you have any other comments to make on the alcohol licensing aspects of the Bill?

| The Council agrees with the introduction of determination period and the requirement to certify an application is complete, it notes however that these will increase costs for the Board. |
| The Council agrees that brining the timescales for the statement of local licensing policy in line with local government elections is sensible. |
| The Council has no concerns about the introduction of financial reports as a statutory requirement. |

5. Taxi and Private Hire Car Licensing

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

35. What benefits should the licensing of taxis and private hire cars deliver for customers?

| The Council strongly supports the continued licensing of these vehicles in order to prevent crime and protect public safety. The Council notes that most other forms of public transport have a licensing or regulatory oversight, e.g. passenger carrying vehicles. |

36. In what ways do customers, providers of taxi/private hire car services and local authorities benefit from the two-tier licensing regime for taxis and private hire cars?

| The Council notes that the separate arrangements appear to work relatively well and does not seek a change to the current system. |
37. The Government states that a radical overhaul of the current two-tier licensing regime would “clearly require a very high level of resource and would cause significant disruption for the trade, local authorities, the police and ultimately the travelling public”. What are your views on this and would the potential costs and disruptions outweigh any potential benefits of a unified system?

Such a change would require the Council to implement changes to bring its existing licensing system for both types of vehicle into line with the legislation. There are significant differences in types of vehicles, training of drivers, conditions and controls over numbers which would require significant work to harmonise. The Council would be concerned that such a change would require new and substantial resources to implement over a timescale of a number of years.

The Council not clear what the potential benefits are from such a unified system.

38. Do the changes made by sections 60 (overprovision of private hire car licences) and 61 (testing of private hire car drivers) of the Bill strike the right balance in terms of introducing greater consistency while maintaining justifiable differences?

The bill implements the position of the Council which it outlined when it responded to the previous Scottish Government Consultation.

The Council strongly support introducing provisions which would allow it to set a minimum standard of training for PHC drivers.

The Council support the power to introduce over provision for PHC but is not prejudging whether the Council would introduce such a cap. At present the number of PHC’s in the City have remained stable at approx 950 for the previous three years.

The Council would be concerned that some form of clear guidance would be required for Licensing Authorities to allow them to measuring demand as an initial assessment of whether to introduce a cap.

This guidance should be statutory and the Scottish Government should introduce it under a provision of the Act.

39. Do you have any views on the section 62 provisions bringing vehicles contracted for exclusive use for 24 or more hours within the licensing regime for taxis and private hire cars, and should any exemptions be included in the Bill?

The Act implements the position of the Council which it outlined when it responded to the previous Scottish Government Consultation. The Council has concerns that vehicle such as party limos or buses are unregulated.

The Council has no view to offer on exemptions.
6. Scrap Metal Dealer Licensing

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

40. Taking the proposals in sections 63 to 66 of the Bill together, how will they have the desired effect of strengthening the metal dealers' licensing regime to the extent that metal theft and related criminal activity is reduced?

The Council welcomes proposals to tighten the rules on metal dealers as a necessary response to incidence of theft of metal.

The Council is content that the 48 hour rule is no longer mandatory provided it retains discretion to apply as local condition depending on circumstances.

The form of records are similar to that which the Council currently requires for second hand dealers and the Council supports these.

41. In your view, could the Bill be further strengthened in any way, for example, by including an accreditation scheme for metal dealers?

The Council has no objection but notes that self regulating schemes of accreditation are of limited use in tackling problems dealers.

42. Removal of exemption warrant - do you wish to comment on the proposal to remove the exemption warrant system?
The Council supports the abolishing of the exemption warrants and has previously responded to a Scottish Government consultation in those terms.

43. Removal of requirement to retain metal on-site - what impact will the proposal to remove the retention of metal requirement have on the enforcement of the licensing regime and prevention of criminal activities?

The Council has no view on this.

44. Forms of payment - what is your view on the proposal to go 'cashless' and is there merit in considering whether metal dealers could be allowed to operate using cash for only very small transactions, which could be limited to a certain number per month?

The Council would be concerned that the rules are easily understood and enforceable. It may be prudent to restrict cash transactions to those below a small weight and to prevent repeated cash transactions with the same seller of metal.
45. Forms of identification and record keeping:

In line with the Scrap Metal Dealers Act 2013, the Bill adds additional record keeping requirements to a metal dealer’s licence including recording the means by which a seller’s name and address was verified and retaining a copy of the document, and the method of payment and a copy of the payment document. The Bill will also require a metal dealer to record information in books with serially numbered pages or by means of an electronic device, and to keep separate records at each place of business. Such information and documents are to be kept for three rather than the current two years.

How important is it that the record keeping requirements reflect those in the Scrap Metal Dealers Act 2013, and do you agree with the Scottish Government that the proposed record keeping requirements are not unduly burdensome?

The Council does not think the proposals are unduly burdensome.
46. Mandatory and discretionary licensing requirements:

The Scottish Ministers can impose mandatory licensing requirements, such as those included in the Bill relating to record keeping and the identification of customers. In addition, local authorities can also attach discretionary requirements to licences in their areas.

Does the Bill get the balance right between mandatory and discretionary licensing requirements? Should the Bill include other mandatory conditions for obtaining a metal dealer’s licence, such as installing CCTV at metal dealers’ premises or in relation to labelling of metal and ‘forensic coding’?
7. Civic Licensing – Theatre Licensing

You may respond to all the questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

47. Will there be any impacts during the transitional period between ending the current theatre licence and starting the public entertainment licence?

The questions assumes the licensing authorities will amend their public entertainment resolution as required. There is a risk that this process will take up to 18 months to achieve. There is a risk that Theatres will be unlicensed if a particular licensing authority does not include these premises within its public entertainment resolution.

48. Are there additional costs or resource implications on theatres or licensing authorities?

This will require a review of licence conditions and there will be some resource implications.

49. How should licensing authorities integrate their current fee charging structure into their public entertainment regime?

The Council anticipates that the current fee structure for public entertainment is broadly suitable.
8. Civic Licensing – Sexual Entertainment Venues

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

50. What are the consequences of operating the new licensing regime using the definitions set out at section 68 of the Bill?

- 'sexual entertainment venue'
- 'audience'
- 'financial gain'
- 'organiser'
- 'premises'
- 'sexual entertainment', and
- 'display of nudity'
Sexual Entertainment Venue, comments it is not clear what the difference between and audience and ‘live audience’ is in the bill. Secondly the definition would allow a loop hole if the Venue argued that the entertainment is provided for the financial benefit of any self employed entertainer as opposed to the organiser.

Audience, concern that the definition should include any interaction with the entertainment.

Financial gain, would this be sufficient if the organiser argued that this was provided free and the financial gain came from ancillary activity such as the sale of food and alcohol. Need to be clear that ‘free to enter’ would still be within the scope of this definition.

Organiser: See comment above re self employed entertainers.

Premises: Be helpful if it included temporary structures and explicitly private members clubs.

Sexual Entertainment: Would the display of any film or images be caught if the purpose was to stimulate a member of the audience. It would be useful if the definition could be clear as to whether parliament intends the scope of licensing to extend to those premises which charge an entrance fee and thereafter patrons may engage in sexual activity between themselves. NB the Council is not seeking to licence premises which were formerly licences as places of public entertainment before the resolution changed.

Display of Nudity: No comments

51. The Bill specifies that a venue hosting sexual entertainment on three occasions or less within a 12 month period would not be treated as a sexual entertainment venue: does this have any unintended consequences?

The bill should be clearer, an occasion may be subject. It may be easier to specify ‘on three occasions each occasion being less than 24 hours in total’.
52. Local licensing authorities will be able to set the number of sexual entertainment venues in their area to below the existing level, or zero: are there any advantages or disadvantages to this approach?

Without prejudice to any decision the Council may make the Council supports having the ability to control the numbers of such premises in its area. The Council must be able to take into account the views of residents and the cumulative impact or clustering of these premises.

The Council would like the ability to further control or limits these premises as appropriate within smaller geographically areas within its boundaries.

The Council would request that statutory guidance is provided to assist in exercise of any such power.

The Council notes that similar powers existing for local authorities in England and Wales.

53. The Bill relies mainly on the existing licensing regime for sex shops as set out in section 44 and Schedule 2 of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 (application, notification, objections and representations, revocation of licences etc., enforcement and appeals): is this mechanism adequate for the licensing of sexual entertainment venues - if not, please explain why?

The Council has no objection to Sections 44 and Schedule 2 being used for these premises.

The Council notes that there is a limitation on the powers of inspection for premises which ought to have a licence but does not. The Council would prefer that the powers of entry are amended to bring the Act into line with other statues which regulates business activity in respect of its powers.

54. Are there any barriers to licensing authorities operating the new licensing regime?
55. Civic Licensing

Do you have any other comments to make on the civic licensing aspects of the Bill?

The Council would argue that the 1982 Act requires updating in a number of key respects.

The Council would recommend that the powers section of the bill is reviewed in line with the sections above.

The Council would strongly argue that Licensing Authorities should have the power to revoke licences in the case of serious misconduct on the part of licence holders. The current position means that a licence authority is restricted to suspending a licence up to and including the ‘unexpired portion’. In practice this has meant that the Council has dealt with cases where it has had entertain renewal or variation application made with respect of licences. The Council is concerned that this allows interested parties to circumvent the decisions of the authority and retain a licence which ought to have been revoked.

Dear Sir/Madam

Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill

The Scottish Police Federation are supportive of the need for stricter control of Air Weapon use and ownership in Scotland and after reviewing the Bill, the Policy Memo, Explanatory Notes and the Delegated Powers Memorandum we make the following observations, which are limited to the section relating to the licensing of air weapons as this area causes us some concern.

The Bill will introduce a system of licensing for air weapons in Scotland using the existing definition of an air weapon from the Firearms Act 1968 and broadly follows the existing principles of the licensing regimes in place from that act for Shotguns and Firearms; it also creates several new offences.

It is accepted that approximately 500,000 air weapons are believed to be in circulation in Scotland and it is further accepted that many of these weapons will be unused or forgotten.

At this time some 60,000 firearm and shotgun certificate holders live in Scotland and are all licensed within the current licensing framework having passed the test of their suitability to possess the weapons which they are authorised to hold. Many of these certificate holders will also currently possess an air weapon, the Government estimate this could be in the region of 40,000 existing certificate holders. It is suggested, without evidence, that many of these already licensed shooters will actually currently possess more than one air weapon and therefore make up a considerable amount of the 500,000 weapons in circulation. (In paragraph 54 of Part 1 Air Weapons of the Explanatory note)

It can only roughly be estimated of the air weapons currently in circulation how many of these will ultimately be disposed of, destroyed or come within the scope of the licensing regime. Any suggested figures with regard to cost can only be viewed as a rough estimation and it is apparent that within the Explanatory notes document that all estimates have been kept low.
In paragraph 40 of Part 1 Air Weapons, in the Explanatory note, it states that the Police have much of the knowledge, infrastructure and experience required to set up and administer air weapon licensing already in place. It further indicates that this is true of established shooting organisation and members of the legitimate shooting community. The Police do have the knowledge and experience however the capacity of the infrastructure to deal with the increase in workload cannot be accurately estimated at this time. It is our belief that without additional resources the service will struggle to deal with this additional demand.

In paragraph 41 it states the Chief Constable shall be the licensing authority for air weapons, with day to day responsibility falling on firearms licensing officers and staff across Scotland.

In paragraph 61 it states that the current Licensing and Violence Reduction Division of Police Scotland has a well-established, trained and experienced team who operate the current licensing system. Whilst this may be true the capacity of this team to deal with an as yet unknown amount of additional work without significant disruption is at best doubtful.

- Highly likely that the increase in work that will be generated for the officers working within the Licensing system could not be delivered without significant disruption as suggest.

In paragraph 62 it lists the current staffing levels of the licensing service across Scotland, the figures quoted seem higher than our understanding of the current staffing profile for officers and police staff directly involved in Firearms Licensing alone, the figures quoted may represent staff in total within the Licensing and Violence Reduction Division. It also fails to take cognisance of more remote areas of Scotland where existing firearms licensing enquires are still dealt with by local police officers. For example N Division have very few staff directly involved in firearms licensing but have some 22% of the national workload of firearms licensing, with the majority of all current enquires going to operational police officers for enquiry.

- More accurate staffing figures for the licensing service across Scotland are required, clearly identifying only those staff, whether police or support staff directly involved in firearms licensing.

This paragraph further highlights the Government view that it does not believe there will be a need for significant additional staffing to process new applications but does accept there will be an impact in the first 12 – 24 months. Again it is hard to balance how any increase in the workload for this group of officers in the licensing service or for operational officers in the remote areas of Scotland can be achieved without an increase in staffing.

- Seek clarification on the number of operational Police officers currently carrying out firearms enquiries across the country and the volume of enquires they deal with.
- Seek clarity over the potential increase in staff necessary to facilitate the introduction of this licensing system.

In paragraph 63 it indicates that training costs will be minimal for existing staff who are simply adding to their current knowledge. If additional staffing is required then clearly there will be a significant training cost. Some additional training will have also have to be included all operational officers who currently carry out licensing enquiries, it is unclear if this has been factored into any cost analysis.
An assessment of the training implications for both the new system and more likely for additional staff.

In paragraph 64 it refers to the current ICT system used by Police Scotland, this is currently the SHOGUN IT system. It will soon be the system used by all licensing departments across the country. It states that Police Scotland have indicated the system will be capable of being built on to include air weapon certification within SHOGUN but this has only been confirmed in principle with the software developer. It goes on to indicate that no formal discussions have taken place with the company responsible for SHOGUN and it’s not possible to state with any certainty the development costs, but initial discussions indicate the costs would not be high. It is unclear what this assumption is based on. The current system is operating separately in each of the legacy Force areas that operate Shogun, until the national system is populated then we cannot even be sure of the systems capabilities to deal with 60,000 database entries. The number of new air weapon certificates cannot be quantified as yet, so the ability of an untested national system to increase its capacity remains unknown. The potential costs to develop the system with suitable software and storage could not be estimated until far more detailed and formal work was undertaken by Police Scotland and the developer.

More detailed and accurate work is required to confirm the ICT system will have the capacity and functionality required along with clear costs. It is not clear if the current work has undergone tendering.

The creation of Air Weapon licensing will put thousands of people onto the Criminal History System (CHS) as a firearms holders and it is unclear if the cost of creating these records has been factored into the calculations on overall costs.

Confirmation that certificate holder’s details will be added to the CHS system and the costs of this work.

In paragraph 66 it identifies that the main costs will fall on Police Scotland from the initial certification of air weapon holders. It highlights that it has been agreed that extensive background checks and home visits will be necessary in a very small proportion of cases. Without the ‘Guidance Document’ which is yet to be published, it is unclear what criteria will be used to gauge when checks or visits will be necessary. It would therefore be impossible to gauge what volume of work will be generated until the guidance is issued. Only once you are able to identify what is suitable security for an air weapon, what is suitable land, what background checks or other enquiries are necessary could it then be established what actual work will be required in processing an application.

Paragraph 67 indicates that on average a shotgun or firearms enquiry takes an enquiry officer 5 hours with a further 2 hours of admin work and states that the air weapon enquiry should be dealt with in much less time. It highlights there is agreement with Police Scotland that checks of a level such as “disclosure” checks would be appropriate in most cases with relatively few requiring significantly higher level background checks, there is no evidence of how this conclusion is reached and it would seem reasonable that any person with previous criminal convictions will require further checks or where any other doubts arise.

The number of applications requiring a full enquiry cannot be accurately assessed until the criteria for these has been established.
Within a table at paragraph 69 it details 98% of applications require only 1.2 hours of work by an admin officer along with a set figure of £60 for the ‘disclosure’ style background checks. Of the remaining 2% that require the more detailed process, then 1.75 hours of enquiry officer time is allowed in addition to the admin time and background checks as previously listed. It then draws an average cost of £85.55 per application and provides some figures in paragraph 70 per 10,000 applications.

Again there is no clear evidence of where a figure of only 2% of applications requiring full enquiry is reached and without the guidance document then no assumptions should be made about when full enquiry will be necessary. In the example quoted for 10,000 applications it provides an estimated cost of £855,500. If the percentage of applications requiring full enquiry is increased to only 20% then the cost per 10,000 applications increases by £125,000.

This increase in cost is only calculated using the produced figures of allowing 1.75hrs for licensing enquiry but at present for current firearms enquires 5 hours is seen as the accepted amount of time. In our more remote areas then 5 hours will not be unusual for the length of time taken when including travelling. It would also be necessary when full and thorough enquiry is required into an application.

If 5 hours is used to calculate the cost of an enquiry then the costs increase from the suggested £153.65 per enquiry to £225.65 and if you use a figure of 20% requiring full enquiry then the cost per 10,000 enquiries increases to over a million to £1,124,500 an overall increase from the estimate by £269,000.

- The time allocated for enquiry requires to be accurately assessed and costed.

Compliance costs in paragraph 76 makes it clear that Police Scotland should not pursue unlicensed air weapons as a significant new priority but rather deal with the licensing and identify and seize unlicensed weapons as part of wider policing responsibility and as such no additional officers should be required as a consequence of this legislation. Once the offences created in the Bill are in statute then officers will have to deal with the weapons and the owners and users without certificate or in breach of the certificate conditions as offenders. This will undoubtedly increase workload it is however impossible to make an accurate assessment of by how much at this time.

The subsequent costs quoted in paragraph 77 with regard to the cost to submit a report regarding an offence and testing of the weapon again seem low both in terms of the time involved and financial cost.

- The costs of the submission of an offence report and specialist weapon examination require proper and accurate detail.

Disposals of weapons is covered in paragraph 80 and highlights that many old or unwanted air weapons will be handed into the police for disposal or destruction and that Police Scotland will securely hold these weapons and destroy them in line with the existing arrangements. This section also suggests that owners can dispose of them by selling on the air weapon but it is likely that the market for such weapons in Scotland will be limited with an oversupply affecting any resale value of second hand weapons. This may increase the number of weapons being surrendered to Police for destruction even though they have some value.

In paragraph 81 it continues that the current arrangements for the disposal and destruction of firearms is cost neutral, with the private company benefiting from any scrap value from the destroyed weapons.
Again within this section rough estimates have been placed on costs associated with the disposal of weapons and a figure of £30,000 placed over the first two years of the scheme. There is no apparent supporting information to indicate that work has been done with the private companies, who currently dispose of the weapons, in the first instance that they wish to take on the additional work and then costs based on estimated figures of disposals in a year. With potentially many thousands of weapons to be destroyed this will be a significant increase in work for these companies who may no longer be able to deliver this on a cost neutral basis.

It is our understanding that the number of companies who carry out this work for Police Scotland is very limited and only a small number of weapons annually go for destruction as a percentage of the current weapons legitimately held. The lead-in phase to air weapon licensing would see an amnesty period where weapons could be handed into police for destruction. This will involve officers from all over the country having to physically take possession of weapons, securely store them, arrange for safe transportation to central storage areas and then for onward transportation to the approved disposal agents. All of this will involve many officer hours, transport costs, admin costs and none of the additional costs to the Police appear to be factored into the suggested figure.

- Clarity required that the current disposal system will manage to deal with air weapons, that providers have been asked to provide tenders or bids for the work and what the costs will be.
- The actual costs to police for the additional work in dealing with the surrendered weapons, storage, transportation and admin have not been included.

The creation of new offences will lead to prosecution in the courts and paragraphs 84-89 cover the suggested costs of dealing with offenders through the courts. The estimated number of offences seems low and in this section there appear no cognisance taken of the additional police time that will be required following detection of an offence, the necessity to take offenders into custody and the subsequent reporting of offences to the Procurator Fiscal. All of this will take considerable Police time not to mention possible appearance at court for Trial later. This again creates additional costs which fall from this legislation and have not been clearly identified nor can they be accurately assessed at this time.

In Section 5, subsection (2) of the Bill with regard to the Grant or renewal of an air weapon certificate the Chief Constable may when considering an application from an existing firearm or shotgun certificate holder be satisfied that the applicant is therefore fit to be trusted with an air weapon and is not prohibited from possessing such a weapon. It does however further require him to meet the test of subsection (1) (c) and (d) that the applicant has good reason and can do so without danger to the public. As these applicants have individually undergone such scrutiny to hold their existing certificate to possess far more lethal weapons it would seem logical to simply extend the authority of the existing certificate in that such a certificate holder is exempt from holding an individual AWC.

In Section 38, it goes on to provide the Transitional arrangements for an existing firearm or shotgun certificate holder which allows them to use and possess an air weapon and to do so without committing an offence during the transitional period. This would allow some current certificate holders to possess and use an air weapon for up to five years without having the need to apply for an AWC. It could be argued that the process for an existing certificate holder to obtain an AWC would simply be bureaucratic and unnecessary if there is already an assumption the applicant will meet the criteria and be granted an AWC. If the current 60,000 Firearms and Shotgun certificate holders were removed from the AWC by means of exemption this will have an impact on reducing the number of applications to be dealt with and could be up to 40,000 individuals if based on Government estimates.
This could go some way to help with reducing the initial cost of introducing such a system.

- Current firearm and shotgun certificate holders should be exemption from holding an air weapons certificate as long as they hold a current firearm or shotgun certificate.

In Section 6 of the Bill it introduces that every AWC will have conditions attached and further creates an offence in subsection (4) of failing to comply with a condition attached to a certificate. It is likely that a significant amount of work may be created by holders failing to comply with conditions, be that in connection with the storage of weapons or their use. This creates an anomaly when a current shotgun certificate has no conditions relevant to the use of the shotgun but an AWC will have such conditions. There is potential for offences to be committed by a lack of understanding of the differences between conditions that will apply to an air weapon and similarly to a firearm but not to a shotgun. This is especially relevant when transitonally a shotgun certificate holder may possess and use an air weapon but may not have an understanding of the likely conditions they should be adhering to. There is potential for one standard generic condition such as the weapon should only be used in a safe manner at all times.

- A review of the necessity for conditions to apply to each certificate holder, with only a simple generic condition applying to each certificate.

It is envisaged that the AWC will be similar in style to the existing certificates but it is unclear if the certificate will bear the holders photograph and it does not appear to be a requirement that any weapons owned will be listed on the certificate, whilst it is understood that not all air weapons have serial numbers there does not seem to be a process of any form of notification of sale from AWC holder to similar holder. Only on the sale by a Firearms dealer to a place outside of Great Britain does the Chief Constable require to be advised. It is unclear how it will be recorded for example how many air weapons an individual possesses at any one time and details of persons to whom weapons have been disposed.

- An understanding of how sales/transfers will be recorded and weapons be identified is required.

In section 13 there is a requirement for visitors to apply for a visitors permit to allow them to use, possess, purchase or acquire an air weapon while in Scotland. It is unclear how many individuals travel to Scotland currently from within the United Kingdom with an air weapon to use in this country and while an existing system for visitors permits for foreign nationals visiting the country with firearms or shoguns is in place this has not been for residents from other parts of the UK.

With no such licensing of air weapons in England and Wales it remains likely that individuals will travel to Scotland with air weapons without knowledge of the restrictions that will be in place. A significant amount of publicity will be required in a hope of raising an awareness within the general population of this restriction. Clearly if visitors are detected without a visitors permit then they will have committed an offence and will have to be dealt with accordingly.

- To avoid unnecessary offending a far reaching media campaign will be necessary not only in Scotland but the wider UK.
There may be a similar opportunity for holders of firearm or shotgun certificates not resident in Scotland to be exempt from requiring a visitors permit if travelling to Scotland with an air weapon.

- Consideration to be given to firearm and shotgun certificate holders from outwith Scotland being exempt from AWC.

In section 18 it provides power for the Chief Constable to approve air weapon rifle clubs and further states that in section 21 if the club is already a club approved as a rifle club in terms of the Firearms Amendment Act that its approval can run concurrently with its rifle club status and in a similar fashion to a current firearm or shotgun certificate holder it has already passed a test of its suitability and such a club could be exempted from the need for further approval during the time its approval as a rifle club in terms of the Firearms Amendment act continues. This would again remove some bureaucracy and a further tier of licensing and administration.

- Consideration be given to exempt existing approved rifle clubs from the necessity of air weapon rifle club approval.

In section 31 it creates further offences of failing to take reasonable precautions for the safe custody of an air weapon and in 1 (b) failing to report immediately to the Chief Constable the loss or theft of an air weapon. This again creates an anomaly as a shotgun or firearm certificate holder has as a condition of the certificate to report the loss or theft of any weapon within 7 days. Clearly such a report should be made immediately or as soon as is reasonably practical but this section introduces a higher level of requirement for the lower level weapon which seems disproportionate.

- The offence at section 31 (1) (b) be amended in line with the current provisions for firearms and shotgun and be reported within 7 days.

As stated at the start of this response the SPF are supportive of the need for stricter control of air weapons however we are concerned that the capacity of existing staffing and IT systems will not be able to deal with this additional workload and may have an adverse effect on the arrangements for licensing of firearms and shotguns also dealt with by these staff.

Yours faithfully

Calum Steele

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

40. Taking the proposals in sections 63 to 66 of the Bill together, how will they have the desired effect of strengthening the metal dealers' licensing regime to the extent that metal theft and related criminal activity is reduced?

41. In your view, could the Bill be further strengthened in any way, for example, by including an accreditation scheme for metal dealers?

42. Removal of exemption warrant - do you wish to comment on the proposal to remove the exemption warrant system?
The proposal to remove the exemption warrant procedure is supported to extend metal dealer licensing to all involved in the metal trade.

43. Removal of requirement to retain metal on-site - what impact will the proposal to remove the retention of metal requirement have on the enforcement of the licensing regime and prevention of criminal activities?

44. Forms of payment - what is your view on the proposal to go 'cashless' and is there merit in considering whether metal dealers could be allowed to operate using cash for only very small transactions, which could be limited to a certain number per month?

The proposal to go cashless is supported in order that transactions can be traced for enforcement purposes. There is a concern that any de minimis provisions could be exploited.
45. Forms of identification and record keeping:

In line with the Scrap Metal Dealers Act 2013, the Bill adds additional record keeping requirements to a metal dealer’s licence including recording the means by which a seller’s name and address was verified and retaining a copy of the document, and the method of payment and a copy of the payment document. The Bill will also require a metal dealer to record information in books with serially numbered pages or by means of an electronic device, and to keep separate records at each place of business. Such information and documents are to be kept for three rather than the current two years.

How important is it that the record keeping requirements reflect those in the Scrap Metal Dealers Act 2013, and do you agree with the Scottish Government that the proposed record keeping requirements are not unduly burdensome?
46. Mandatory and discretionary licensing requirements:

The Scottish Ministers can impose mandatory licensing requirements, such as those included in the Bill relating to record keeping and the identification of customers. In addition, local authorities can also attach discretionary requirements to licences in their areas.

Does the Bill get the balance right between mandatory and discretionary licensing requirements? Should the Bill include other mandatory conditions for obtaining a metal dealer’s licence, such as installing CCTV at metal dealers’ premises or in relation to labelling of metal and ‘forensic coding’?

13. In what ways will the creation of an air weapons licensing system in Scotland contribute to preserving public order and safety, reducing crime and advancing public health policy?

It will not contribute, at least in a positive way.

The amount of crime committed with airguns is falling without this legislation. Since those who misuse airguns currently will not be inclined to register airguns, the majority of current airgun-related offenses will not be reduced.

The most likely outcome is an increase in “crime” manufactured by innocent airgun owners who run afoul of the new laws.

It should be pointed out (and must, in the discussion of this bill, be raised) that the Violent Crime Reduction Act, enacted 2006 (one year after the tragedy that prompted this law) has already reduced airgun crime by over 70%. This bill is thus unnecessary and seems to be intended to only penalise the law-abiding without legitimate reason.

This appearance is backed up by the fact that despite 86% of those consulted calling for the law to be scrapped, an overwhelming majority by any means, Justice Minister Kenny MacAskill insists on pushing this unjust and unfair bill through Parliament.

14. Is there sufficient provision, or sufficient capacity to provide, suitable numbers of air weapons clubs across all areas of Scotland for use by registered air weapons owners/ users?
No. The current estimates are that there are half a million airguns owned by 125,000 people.

A significant number of these people “plink”, or shoot recreationally on their own land without impacting anyone around them. Some if not all of these people will be unable to find an airgun club nearby, or will have one that is packed trying to accept everyone affected by the enactment of this legislation.

Given the somewhat regressive attitude displayed towards firearms in this country, it is unlikely that the Government will give fair approval to any new airgun clubs wishing to open to ease the trouble made for airgun “plinkers”.

It is also unlikely that the Government will give their approval to airsoft or paintball groups, which will be unfairly affected by this bill (see section 22).

15. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for personal/recreational use?

It will all but cripple the hobby for a number of responsible owners, forcing unnecessary costs and restrictions on them – which many believe is the intent of the bill.

There are also the hobbies of Paintball and Airsoft which will in most likelihood be negatively affected.

16. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those aged 14 to 17 who use air weapons?

The new laws will disallow younger airgun users from owning their own guns, which could negatively impact young hobbyists from continuing the sport.

17. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for commercial/professional reasons (for example: for pest control; as part of the tourist/hunting season; as part of fairs, paintballing... centre, entertainment sector etc.)?

I cannot speak on most subjects mentioned.

On the subject of paintball – as far as I know, UK law prohibits firing airguns at a person within most cases. Paintball guns, although within current power ratings classifiable as “airguns” are currently exempt from such classification.

This new legislation will forcibly classify paintball guns as airguns, which could, if interpreted a certain way, have a significantly negative effect on the sport.

To a lesser extent, this will also affect Airsoft skirmishing, as a significant portion of Airsoft equipment will be wrongly reclassified as airguns.

I clarify somewhat in section 22.

18. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for competitive sporting purposes?

The increased difficulty in obtaining airguns and a permit will certainly reduce the amount of airgun owners involved in such activities.

A significant number of users, especially competitive shooters, shoot on their own land at targets, taking great care not to endanger anyone near them. Banning this practice will require shooters to go to ranges to practise, which will in some cases make the sport prohibitively expensive, which is unfair.

19. Is it equitable for those applying for an air weapons certificate to pay a fee which cannot be refundable irrespective of whether a certificate is granted or not?

No. If the applicant for a certificate is rejected, the fee should be refunded in full, as occurs with Firearms Certificates currently.

Alternatively, given that this scheme appears to unduly penalise airgun owners, it should be considered to waive all fees as a measure of good faith, for the first five years of the licensing scheme at least.
20. Will the air weapons licensing system have a positive or negative impact on other areas of the public sector in Scotland (eg. The work of local government, public agencies etc.)?

Negative impact. Implementing a licensing system will take several months, and will be expensive both in terms of manpower, IT allocation and with regards to funding.

Further monetary costs will be required if giving fair compensatory value to airgun owners handing their weapons in as the legislation permits.

Police will be required to enforce the new law, which will give them more work and may take officers off the streets to cope with the influx of requests. Several police officers have opined that the law as written is unenforceable, and yet their voices have gone ignored.

21. What, if any, might the unintended consequences of introducing an air weapons licensing system in Scotland be?

A significant amount of the shooting sports will be affected by this unnecessary Bill. The sports for Airguns draw in large amounts of tax revenue that may be lost if the Bill passes. The same goes for paintball and Airsoft, albeit in smaller quantities.

In previous licensing changes to other weapons, such as in 1997 with the handgun ban, those handing in guns and related items were in some cases given less than the value of the items relinquished, which cannot be legitimately called “fair compensatory value”. Although the Scottish Government may be inclined to offer fair value for weapons and other items handed in, there are fears that the same issues will arise again.

The Airsoft and Paintball sports do not appear to have been considered at all, and seem to have been deemed acceptable collateral damage. This is completely unjust, and cannot be permitted to occur. Both communities must be given a full say on the bill before it is considered.

22. Do you have any other comments to make on air weapons licensing aspects of the Bill?
The Bill and all of its consultations so far have unreasonably neglected the Airsoft skirmishing sport. Currently, Airsoft guns are legally permitted up to 1.3 Joules for automatic-capable guns and 2.5 Joules for single-shot only guns. This was recently confirmed as below lethal limits for these guns and therefore acceptable for use in skirmishing sport by the ACPO. These limits have been used in most skirmishing sites across the UK for quite some time.

Under the new Bill, Airsoft guns above 1 Joule will be wrongly reclassified as “airguns” and their use in the sport may be prohibited under the same laws that could affect Paintball. It is also likely that the Government will not allow current “skirmish sites” to be classified as clubs, which would disallow any use of reclassified Airsoft guns even at a site’s target range.

Overall, the law unfairly affects Airsoft, despite having used the aforementioned higher power ratings for several years without the injuries typically associated with airgun misuse.

The most concerning thing is that the Airsoft community was denied a say during the recent consultations, under the claim that they would not be affected at all by this Bill. As the Bill is written, this appears to have been a false statement.

Airsoft is currently regulated as part of the Violent Crime Reduction Act 2006, which also modified laws regarding airguns. Realistic Airsoft guns are only available to those who can prove proper use, such as membership at a local gaming site or re-enactors. This measure, despite being essentially “self-policied” by the exempt communities, has resulted in a significant drop in replicas used in crime, without unjustifiably penalising the legitimate use of the same.

The VCRA, as mentioned previously also regulated Airguns, and is almost certainly responsible for the 70+% decrease in airgun offenses following the Act becoming law. The proposed licensing bill is attempting to remedy an issue that has been covered sufficiently by previous legislation, and will only serve – and indeed appears to be intended – to penalise the legitimate users of airguns, paintball and Airsoft guns alike.

If the Government is insistent that this law be forced though, then in the interests of justice, the bill must without question include a common-sense amendment to exempt all Airsoft and Paintball guns within the current legally permitted limits.

50. What are the consequences of operating the new licensing regime using the definitions set out at section 68 of the Bill?

- 'sexual entertainment venue'
- 'audience'
- 'financial gain'
- 'organiser'
- 'premises'
- 'sexual entertainment', and
- 'display of nudity'

51. The Bill specifies that a venue hosting sexual entertainment on three occasions or less within a 12 month period would not be treated as a sexual entertainment venue: does this have any unintended consequences?

If a club offering this type of entertainment is to be so heavily regulated surely it makes no sense to allow other venues to do it on an ad hoc basis
52. Local licensing authorities will be able to set the number of sexual entertainment venues in their area to below the existing level, or zero: are there any advantages or disadvantages to this approach?

This in effect allows the local council the ability to close existing business when they have done nothing wrong yet allowing club who are in the same business in the same country to remain open. Postcode lottery comes to mind.

53. The Bill relies mainly on the existing licensing regime for sex shops as set out in section 44 and Schedule 2 of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 (application, notification, objections and representations, revocation of licences etc., enforcement and appeals): is this mechanism adequate for the licensing of sexual entertainment venues - if not, please explain why?

54. Are there any barriers to licensing authorities operating the new licensing regime?

I cant see how girls doing lap dancing relates to the sale of alcohol the barrier being the are not in a position of knowledge to make decision on these matters.
55. Civic Licensing

Do you have any other comments to make on the civic licensing aspects of the Bill?

The clubs I’ve been taken to on many business nights out have always been well run with very professional girls who take their jobs seriously. Although not everybody’s cup of tea no one can deny that they clubs are run to very strict rules and are heavily regulated, because some people don’t like them doesn’t mean they are not run properly or have no place in society. They are not marketed in an in your face way so the solution is simple if you don’t like them just don’t go!

There is nothing sexual that goes on in this club. We perform topless dances just the same as you would see on a beach on holiday.

51. The Bill specifies that a venue hosting sexual entertainment on three occasions or less within a 12 month period would not be treated as a sexual entertainment venue: does this have any unintended consequences?

I wouldn’t do it as I wouldn’t feel safe.
52. Local licensing authorities will be able to set the number of sexual entertainment venues in their area to below the existing level, or zero: are there any advantages or disadvantages to this approach?

The club I work in is well run, if this happens it would be shut down & I would be out a job or forced to work in another city.

In my opinion the licensing board have nothing to do with lapdancing.

My names [redacted], my dance names [redacted]. I enjoy the flexibility of my job that I can pick and choose when I work. I like working in the industry, meeting people from all different walks of life & making great friends from this job. Dancing has giving me the opportunity to fund the lifestyle a lot of people my age don’t usually have. If all lapdancing clubs in Glasgow were to close I would have to work in a city such as Edinburgh which is a city I am not familiar with also I do not drive so after my shift I would have no way of getting back home. But most importantly if I were to dance in another city I would need to do fully nude dances. In Glasgow all we do is topless dances which I am comfortable & feel safe performing. This is my only job I have at the moment. The club has a fun & enjoyable atmosphere.

- 'sexual entertainment venue'

Consequences of this turning into a sexual entertainment club is leading customers on that we do something in our work that we don't. Sexual puts into a customers mind that this isn't just a lap dancing venue. Which is certainly not what we do here.

51. The Bill specifies that a venue hosting sexual entertainment on three occasions or less within a 12 month period would not be treated as a sexual entertainment venue: does this have any unintended consequences?

The thought of this club or all clubs in Glasgow being shut down but then bars being allowed dancers 3 times a year is ridiculous. Why take away a club where the girls working there are all safe to be working in, but allow them to dance in a bar, where men aren’t used to having dancers there, & the safety procedures of the dancers wouldn’t be the same.
52. Local licensing authorities will be able to set the number of sexual entertainment venues in their area to below the existing level, or zero: are there any advantages or disadvantages to this approach?

If the clubs in Glasgow were closed down, I would be forced to work in Edinburgh. As you can see, I live in Ayrshire, so already travel an hour to Glasgow & back every time I work. What doesn’t make sense to me is that if Glasgow clubs closed down I would be forced to travel 2 hours to Edinburgh, and struggle to get home at night, or even work in Aberdeen, where my shifts will be reduced to 2 a week as I would only be able to go on weekends, & then have to travel the hour to Glasgow & three hours to Aberdeen.
Also, all these clubs are full nude, were as Glasgow offers the least of Scotland’s clubs. Why should I have to travel two hours to work somewhere where I am going to have to be more nude.

53. The Bill relies mainly on the existing licensing regime for sex shops as set out in section 44 and Schedule 2 of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 (application, notification, objections and representations, revocation of licences etc., enforcement and appeals): is this mechanism adequate for the licensing of sexual entertainment venues - if not, please explain why?

54. Are there any barriers to licensing authorities operating the new licensing regime?

The problem here is nothing to do with licensing for our club. A lot of the customers I see don’t even drink, it is a form of entertainment, sometimes for business men who are travelling alone, & don’t see it fit to sit in a bar on their own. In these clubs it’s about having someone to talk to also, having company on a night were you may be alone & just want to speak to someone. It isn’t all about drinking.
55. Civic Licensing

Do you have any other comments to make on the civic licensing aspects of the Bill?

In my 2 years of dancing, I have travelled between Glasgow, Edinburgh & even Blackpool. Glasgow has been the place where I have been most comfortable. It is the one place I have experienced in the UK where I haven’t had to take all my clothes off, & I feel completely safe in my surroundings. The management here look after me very well, & treat me with respect & I am also allowed to choose my own shifts so I can work around my day to day life. If I have ever had a problem with the odd rowdy customer it has been taken seriously & I have been well looked after in no way I can complain about. Removing this club or any club in Glasgow would ruin everything. The girls here work hard, & everyone is happy, including the customers that come in for either a quiet drink, a stag show, or a birthday. It is a great establishment in Glasgow which would be terrible to lose.

As the regulations allowed any licencing venue to have strippers night three times a year if they want, I believe on the other hand when the customers come to the lap dancing venue they know it’s a lap dancing club firstly they been told the rules by the door staff and most of the lap dancing clubs are covered with 25 cameras for the staff and customers safety. Cctv being watched by the management and security staff to maintain the licencing rules and regulations.

I have been working at many doors over 17 years including lap dancing clubs in Glasgow, they are very professionally run. I have experienced no trouble in lap dancing clubs as compared to other nightclubs. Management and staff are very professional and easy-going in my opinion. I can't see any reason to close the lap dancing clubs.

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

28. In what ways will the Bill’s provisions on alcohol licensing allow for reductions in crime and the preservation of public order?

I think the reintroduction of a fit and proper test on licenses premises and licensees will have a positive effect on the trade, but only if these tests are transparent and can be made public in order that any judgement can be fully scrutinised and assessed by all parties (Board, applicant, Police, Public) concerned, and indeed that they can appealed instantly through the courts by any who may feel wronged by any decisions by a board that would affect trading or granting of a licence.

29. Are there any other measures which should be taken to assist in the reduction of crime and the preservation of public order?
Yes..a more streamlined structure of licencing ..one where all boards operate by the same rules and instead of varying licence policy documents being put in place by councils across Scotland, some as little as 15 pages long , one indeed 123 pages the government put in stricter guidelines to make sure that they concentrate more on policy rather than detail and admin process. That all publish an over provision statement instead of as I can see 17 councils feeling the need not to publish ,even though there is statutory obligation in place that they do. That licensed hours in all city centres , suburban and rural areas are standardised by government not council as it is a shambolic lottery from city to city as to what hours are allowed , especially late opening hours and out door drinking. For example …Why is that Edinburgh allows during festival times which is half the year, inside and out , to the detriment of the local 365 day a year publicans opening hours to drink at times when the milk man and paper boy has started their deliveries yet Glasgow 45 miles away thankfully doesn’t…crazy ! Boards it seem up and down the land are all over the place when it comes to determining curfews, setting terminal hours, dealing with special events and defining the type of entertainment that should be considered for a late licence. Very few seem up on licensing law or indeed the 2005 act and the 5 licensing objectives set within. The Government it seems are also only too happy to allow this chaos to continue issuing bland guidelines and definitions on operating hours, security and what constitutes a late night club, what is a bar (style or hybrid)and more recently what is a casino? This has led to a scenario where the price of alcohol has been driven down by all in order to be competitive and makes a mockery of their 5 objectives. Licencing law is a pig in poke and not ruled by common sense but more where you are the map and what type of board you have, and indeed the politics they share. Government should be more robust in their definition of trading hours and remove some of those decisions from the board, their should be level playing field for all to play on and not what we have at present a furrowed field.

30. In what ways will the provisions in the Bill enhance the licensing objectives set out in the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005?

See above

31. In what ways will the re-introduction of the “fit and proper person” test assist with the implementation of the licensing objectives set out in the 2005 act?
32. Have there been any unintended consequences arising from the 2005 Act, for example, in rural areas or the economic regeneration of areas?

As stated above the 2005 act needs beefing up ... boards are all over the place since the 2005 act was put in place many publicans and licensees have been forced out of business. There has been a catastrophic effect on trade from implementation of the smoking ban, a banking crisis and world economic recession. Nothing has been put in place to regenerate licensing only more laws and law makers to abide to. SIA, Personal Licence, Licence Costs, LSO’s and both Government and Boards intransigence to deal effectively and with common sense the negative effects these and more factors have had on the trade. Far from being encouraged to go out and safety drink and have a dance they are now in their thousands staying at home pre loading or tanking up unmonitored, unsupervised and unsafe. Which I'm sure was not the intention of the act.

33. Which, if any, types of spent relevant offences should be required to be disclosed and what do you think the benefits of disclosure will be?

Full disclosure of all applicants, however common sense should apply ie if you haven’t paid your tv licence or parking fines then that should not be held against you. Only those crimes which would have the applicant at odds with the 5 objectives should be brought to bear.

34. Do you have any other comments to make on the alcohol licensing aspects of the Bill?

No

50. What are the consequences of operating the new licensing regime using the definitions set out at section 68 of the Bill?

- 'sexual entertainment venue'
- 'audience'
- 'financial gain'
- 'organiser'
- 'premises'
- 'sexual entertainment', and
- 'display of nudity'

51. The Bill specifies that a venue hosting sexual entertainment on three occasions or less within a 12 month period would not be treated as a sexual entertainment venue: does this have any unintended consequences?
52. Local licensing authorities will be able to set the number of sexual entertainment venues in their area to below the existing level, or zero: are there any advantages or disadvantages to this approach?

This could cause clubs to be closed even if they are well ran and popular with customers, taking the choice away from people who choose to visit them.

53. The Bill relies mainly on the existing licensing regime for sex shops as set out in section 44 and Schedule 2 of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 (application, notification, objections and representations, revocation of licences etc., enforcement and appeals): is this mechanism adequate for the licensing of sexual entertainment venues - if not, please explain why?

54. Are there any barriers to licensing authorities operating the new licensing regime?

Yes if they are deciding on what type of entertainment should be offered to the public, to force lap dancing out of business is unrelated to the sale of alcohol. They wouldn’t do this with other forms of entertainment comedy clubs for example often have very adult language in certain late night shows yet no one from licensing picks what type of comedy is suitable nor what type of music can be played in a club or what tricks a magician can perform. As long as the entertainment is legal it should be allowed for the public all over Scotland to choose if they wish to view it.
55. Civic Licensing

Do you have any other comments to make on the civic licensing aspects of the Bill?

It seems rather odd that if this Bill goes through that Lap dancing in Glasgow will by the council's own admission be closed down and its topless only but the clubs that offer full nude in Edinburgh will be left open. It's the same country and surely the people in Glasgow are as able as those in other parts of the country to decide if they wish to visit a lap dancing bar?

Sexual entertainment venue sounds quite harsh my opinion its to be left how it was because people will get annoyed when they will hear that.

51. The Bill specifies that a venue hosting sexual entertainment on three occasions or less within a 12 month period would not be treated as a sexual entertainment venue: does this have any unintended consequences?

It’s a terrible idea my opinion its that the girls that go to private partys are not safe and there more safe in clubs that have stewards and they specifically asked for adult entertainment.
52. Local licensing authorities will be able to set the number of sexual entertainment venues in their area to below the existing level, or zero: are there any advantages or disadvantages to this approach?

54. Are there any barriers to licensing authorities operating the new licensing regime?

The barrier is that they'll won't be any clubs in Glasgow and it's not fair if it's not affecting Aberdeen and Edinburgh...Glasgow it's a big city and should have lapdance clubs.
55. Civic Licensing

my name is and I’ve danced in many other countries like Germany Malta Norway. Glasgow it’s the cleanest place to work and would be a shame to leave the clubs that are not clean and all the girls that work in Glasgow will have to leave and go in places that are not clean.

- 'sexual entertainment venue'

Having worked as a dancer for the last year and a half I feel that to change the terminology from adult entertainer to sexual entertainer would have serious connotations. I feel that it would be derogative to me and my profession.

51. The Bill specifies that a venue hosting sexual entertainment on three occasions or less within a 12 month period would not be treated as a sexual entertainment venue: does this have any unintended consequences?

If this was to happen the implications would be that as a dancer I would be put into an unsafe environment without the appropriate rules and regulations being enforced. I have worked within regulated premises as a dancer and would feel extremely vulnerable if the correct security was not in place.
52. Local licensing authorities will be able to set the number of sexual entertainment venues in their area to below the existing level, or zero: are there any advantages or disadvantages to this approach?

So in my opinion there are no advantages to this situation as dancers and workers in the industry will constantly be in fear that they will lose their jobs, in the current climate this would not be a positive scenario.

53. The Bill relies mainly on the existing licensing regime for sex shops as set out in section 44 and Schedule 2 of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 (application, notification, objections and representations, revocation of licences etc., enforcement and appeals): is this mechanism adequate for the licensing of sexual entertainment venues - if not, please explain why?

Do you have any other comments to make on the civic licensing aspects of the Bill?

I feel to close the industry in Glasgow/Scotland would not be a positive thing. I love my job and we work as and when we chose to. It is a great environment and I have never felt my safety ever compromised. It would only be negative to shut the clubs down.

I think its unfair that someone can decide on behalf of all the woman who have chosen to dance that they have made the wrong choice, that they will be out of a job because others think its not right. We work to live and to take that away from us while its ok in other parts of Britain and Europe is wrong! We should have the right to decide our profession same as everyone else.

4. Alcohol Licensing

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

28. In what ways will the Bill’s provisions on alcohol licensing allow for reductions in crime and the preservation of public order?

Introducing the ‘fit and proper’ test to determine whether someone is suitable to hold a licence will allow Boards to consider a greater amount of information including Police intelligence and associations.

There is no guidance provided on ‘fit and proper’ test as it is noted Boards will have experience from other licensing regimes and case law to guide decision making with each case to be considered on its own merits.

Introducing new offences for supplying alcohol to a person under 18 in a public place will ensure that it is an offence both inside and outside of a licensed premise and will help reduce access to alcohol by children and young people.

It is noted however that this is only two of the licensing objectives and there should be equal weight on all five licensing objectives.

29. Are there any other measures which should be taken to assist in the reduction of crime and the preservation of public order?
We would encourage consideration of further legislation to limit the supply of alcohol to children. For example, currently it is illegal to allow a child aged under 5 to consume alcohol [Children and Young Persons (Scotland) Act] and consideration should be given to raising this to at least 12 years of age, preferably 15 years of age to meet medical advice. Scotland’s Chief Medical Officer’s advice is that children under the age of 15 should not drink any alcohol.

Previously in the Further Options for Alcohol Licensing Consultation we supported the extension of police powers to impose restrictions on licensed premises within a specified geographical area where disorder is likely to occur.

Legislation currently excludes members’ clubs from the assessment of overprovision in an area. Within Scottish Borders, 22% of all licensed premises are members’ clubs contributing to a significant proportion of the overall availability of alcohol.

One key area of concern is changing licensing boards’ requirement that they ‘must’ take account of certain issues when considering overprovision to that they ‘may’ take account of these. This could potentially weaken existing legislation and know that over provision is already a challenge for Licence Boards to consider.

30. In what ways will the provisions in the Bill enhance the licensing objectives set out in the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005?

By expanding the licensing objective of protecting children from harm to include young people will close the loophole whereby people between 16 and 17 were unprotected within the licensing objective.

31. In what ways will the re-introduction of the “fit and proper person” test assist with the implementation of the licensing objectives set out in the 2005 act?
32. Have there been any unintended consequences arising from the 2005 Act, for example, in rural areas or the economic regeneration of areas?

As previously noted the current exclusion of members clubs from the assessment of overprovision has the effect of the overall availability of alcohol being underestimated. Within Scottish Borders, 22% of all licensed premises are members’ clubs contributing to a significant proportion of the overall availability of alcohol.

An unintended consequence arising from overprovision for an entire board may mean more rural areas like the Scottish Borders may have someone in an outlying area who would not be able to obtain a licence even though the nearest licence premise was many miles away.

Current regulation around occasional licenses means that these can be granted to voluntary groups or members clubs at a low cost (£10) and contribute to overall availability. Therefore these should be considered in any overprovision assessment. An occasional license also allows groups to compete on an unfair basis with mainstream licensed premises where the same legal regulations are not required e.g. staff having completed basic training.

33. Which, if any, types of spent relevant offences should be required to be disclosed and what do you think the benefits of disclosure will be?

It is difficult to comment on this since as well as the type of offence the length of time (and age of applicant) at the time of offence may influence decisions. For example, sexual or violent offences may be of concern.

34. Do you have any other comments to make on the alcohol licensing aspects of the Bill?
A number of other helpful suggestions were made within the Further Options for Alcohol Licensing which included ways to address concerns around members clubs and restricting access to alcohol where disorder is likely to occur. It would be informative if reasons for not including these in the Bill were shared.

It would have been beneficial for increased transparency for Boards if they were under a statutory obligation to report each year on how the Board has fulfilled its duty to promote each of the licensing objectives including a range of key performance indicators and a reporting template to ensure consistent reporting. This would allow consistency across Scotland and ensures that Licensing Board take cognisance of the data provided. This would also point out any weaknesses or areas of objectives that are proving difficult to meet which may potentially be provided with central support. Unfortunately this has been restricted to a financial report only.

1. Air Weapons Licensing

You may respond to all the questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

13. In what ways will the creation of an air weapons licensing system in Scotland contribute to preserving public order and safety, reducing crime and advancing public health policy?

I do not believe that this legislation will help to improve public order and safety, reduce crime or advance public health. The current Firearms legislation is sufficient, in my opinion, to control the use of firearms and to punish those who misuse them. The current Firearms system is stretched and under resourced since Police Scotland formed – in my experience, the Aberdeen Firearms Licensing office is experiencing lengthy delays in processing applications and visiting.

I do agree that there are people who should not be allowed to own or use air weapons however this Bill will not have the desired effect of restricting them. People who do not use air weapons legally now, will continue to use them illegally in the future. There is an extremely large pool of unregistered air weapons to which undesirable people can access to now. If this legislation was introduced, unregistered air weapons will continue to be easily accessible in England and taken across the border into Scotland.

Weapons that are used in crimes are often unregistered or stolen.

The number of crimes committed involving air weapons is relatively small in comparison to this legislative reaction. More people are harmed by dangerous dogs than air weapons. More protected wildlife is killed by uncontrolled roaming cats than are killed by air weapons. It is, in my opinion, a disproportionate response to a small number of isolated incidents involving air weapons.

The banning of back garden plinking will not improve public safety.

14. Is there sufficient provision, or sufficient capacity to provide, suitable numbers of air weapons clubs across all areas of Scotland for use by registered air weapons owners/ users?
I am unsure as I am not a member of a shooting club. I have safely used air rifles in a controlled environment from a young age in the back garden of my family home.

15. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for personal/recreational use?

I believe this legislation will restrict those who use air weapons, the vast majority of which do so legally and safely. I currently shoot air weapons (as well as my shotguns and firearms) on privately owned land and do so in a safe manner. I would find it very restrictive if I had to join a shooting club to continue practising my sport.

The main reason I shoot air weapons is for enjoyment, which is not a suitable ‘good reason’ under the proposed legislation. Air weapons are enjoyable to shoot and cheap to run which is why so many people choose to learn to shoot with them. Whilst I do also use air weapons for pest control and thus have a ‘good reason’ I think that this legislation would stop people from owning and shooting air weapons in their garden for enjoyment. Air weapons can be fired safely in urban environments such as a back garden if simple and reasonable precautions are made to stop the pellet traveling beyond the target.

I think it would discourage new people from entering the sport and learning the safe handling and shooting techniques before moving onto other firearms.

16. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those aged 14 to 17 who use air weapons?

Young people will be restricted from learning the key skills for handling and firing firearms safely.

Illegally held air weapons - If young people are exposed to illegally held firearms they may think that it is cool and similarly to recreational drugs they may slip into a culture where more powerful illegal weapons are held and used irresponsibly.

17. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for commercial/professional reasons (for example: for pest control; as part of the tourist/hunting season; as part of fairs, paintballing centre, entertainment sector etc.)?

No affect, those who currently use air weapons for pest control are likely to use FAC air weapons and be FAC/SG certificate holders.

18. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for competitive sporting purposes?

I think that this will restrict people bringing air weapons from the rest of the UK into Scotland for competitions.

19. Is it equitable for those applying for an air weapons certificate to pay a fee which cannot be refundable irrespective of whether a certificate is granted or not?

No, based on my opinion that I think that the current firearms licensing system is fair.

20. Will the air weapons licensing system have a positive or negative impact on other areas of the public sector in Scotland (eg. The work of local government, public agencies etc.)?

I do not think that the police can cope with an increase in firearms applications, this is based on my dealings with the Aberdeen branch of Scotland Police.

I think that the current firearms legislation adequately controls the use of air weapons and that those who misuse them can be adequately punished for doing so.
21. What, if any, might the unintended consequences of introducing an air weapons licensing system in Scotland be?

- An increase in black market dealing of firearms in Scotland.
- Complications for people bringing air weapons across the Scotland/England border.
- Increase in high power air weapon ownership.
- Reduction in the number of people learning how to handle and shoot firearms safely from a young age.
- Increased interest from young people in the misuse of air weapons as it may become cool to own an unregistered air weapon.
- Reduction in competitions taking place in Scotland.

22. Do you have any other comments to make on air weapons licensing aspects of the Bill?

- I do not think that this will increase public safety, or reduce the number of air weapon related crimes. I think that the current Firearms legislative system is fit for purpose.
- I think this bill is a disproportionate response to a relatively minor issue that can be addressed and punished under the current legal framework. I think the
- I do not think that Police Scotland have the capacity to deal with an Air Weapons licensing system and that any private company brought in to manage the licensing system will not provide value for money.
- If sub-12ft/lb air weapons are to be licensed as plus-12ft/lb air weapons are licensed through the Firearms Certificate, then I think we will see an increase in the number of more powerful air weapons being owned because if you have to apply for it, you may as well apply for the more powerful version.
- This is my understanding of Democracy – We (the people of Scotland) have voted for the Scottish Parliament to act on our behalf. When the Scottish Parliament asked us (the people of Scotland) our opinion on the Bill, we responded with an overwhelmingly majority against it. The people of Scotland do not want this and I do not want this. The people of Scotland have asked you not to do this and I am asking you not to introduce this Bill. It is therefore your democratic duty to listen to the people of Scotland and scrap this Bill.

4. Alcohol Licensing

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

28. In what ways will the Bill’s provisions on alcohol licensing allow for reductions in crime and the preservation of public order?

SHAAP recognises the role that alcohol can play as an underlying cause of crime and disorder, and that this is an important priority for the Scottish Government. It should be noted however, that all five licensing objectives are given equal weight within the 2005 Act. We would have liked to have seen more provisions included for promoting and improving public health.

In general, we support the provisions brought forward by the Bill.

Overprovision is one of the key mechanisms that can be used to prevent crime and disorder, and section 54(2)(b) widens the factors that a licensing board can consider when assessing overprovision. While we welcome this extension, we are concerned that the effect of the drafting is to change the requirement that licensing boards must have regard to the number and capacity of licensed premises in the locality to that they may have regard to (among other things) the number, capacity and licensed hours of licensed premises in a locality.

We would support the retention of a requirement that regard must be had to the number and capacity of licensed premises, but adding that licensing boards may also have regard to (among other things) licensed hours. As discussed at question 34, we would also like numbers of members’ clubs and occasional licences granted to be included in an assessment of overprovision.

29. Are there any other measures which should be taken to assist in the reduction of crime and the preservation of public order?
SHAAP believes that that there is an urgent need to improve the quality and detail of published licensing data. Licensing boards should be given a statutory duty to record, collate and report on a comprehensive licensing data set, in a format that can be compared with other areas.

Collection of such data would enhance the information available to licensing boards to inform the development of their policy statements. It would also assist in understanding and reviewing how the licensing system is functioning, or assess whether it is achieving its purpose.

We believe this investment should lead to potential cost savings in other areas; better informed decision making should help mitigate the risks of alcohol harm and therefore the costs associated with such harms.

30. In what ways will the provisions in the Bill enhance the licensing objectives set out in the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005?

We are broadly supportive of the Bill’s provisions.

We support section 41 of the Bill expanding the licensing objective of protecting children from harm to include young people.

We support the clarification provided by section 54(2)(a) that in assessing overprovision, a licensing board may determine that the whole of the board’s area is a locality. This change reflects the reality that different-sized localities are needed for assessing overprovision in relation to different alcohol problems.

We are disappointed that the opportunity has been missed within this Bill to further enhance the licensing objectives by strengthening their status within the legislation. We believe that the licensing objectives should be clearly identified as the overriding principles underpinning the Act, with a general duty placed on licensing boards to promote the objectives when undertaking their work.

It should be made explicit that the five licensing objectives should be the primary consideration when deciding licensing applications. As outlined within question 34, we also believe additional reporting, while extra work for licensing boards, would introduce much needed transparency and accountability in the licensing system.

31. In what ways will the re-introduction of the “fit and proper person” test assist with the implementation of the licensing objectives set out in the 2005 act?
We have concerns about whether the definition of ‘fit and proper’ could impact on the accountability of licensing boards, by making it problematic to assess whether the test is being applied consistently. A lack of any sort of guidelines about what factors may be taken into account when assessing if someone is ‘fit and proper’ to hold a licence may also make it more difficult for people to raise concerns about an applicant or licence holder.

32. Have there been any unintended consequences arising from the 2005 Act, for example, in rural areas or the economic regeneration of areas?

As discussed at question 30, the objective to protect children from harm left a loophole leaving young people aged 16 and 17 unprotected by the 2005 Act. We support the closure of this loophole.

SHAAP is concerned that the current exclusion of members clubs from the assessment of overprovision has had the effect of the overall availability of alcohol being underestimated during these assessments. We believe members’ clubs should be included within the assessment of overprovision.

We have concerns about the current rules governing occasional licenses, which are cheap (£10) and easy to obtain. It is our view that the current rules create a loophole enabling legal requirements of fully licensed premises to be bypassed. Action to address this loophole is recommended. As occasional licences can add to the provision of alcohol in an area, we also believe the number of occasional licences granted in an area should be included in assessments of overprovision.

As noted at question 30, we believe the lack of a general statutory obligation to promote the licensing objectives has created ambiguity about the extent to which these objectives should be the primary consideration making. We believe this unintended consequence could be addressed by using this Bill to amend the 2005 Act to include a general duty on licensing boards to promote the licensing objectives.

33. Which, if any, types of spent relevant offences should be required to be disclosed and what do you think the benefits of disclosure will be?

34. Do you have any other comments to make on the alcohol licensing aspects of the Bill?
Licensing Policy Periods (section 42)
We support extending the period of time for which a statement of licensing policy is in force to five years.

Safeguards also need to be put in place to strengthen the mechanisms of accountability of licensing boards, to include:
- Improving monitoring and accountability arrangements.
- Production of an annual report by every licensing board

Deemed grant of applications (section 58)

It is essential to ensure that sufficient protections are in place to guard against automatic grant of licences which have been delayed to allow more information to be sought due to concerns or controversy about the application.

Guidance
The current guidance on the 2005 Act needs to be updated as a matter of urgency. A requirement should be placed on the Scottish Government to regularly review and update the guidance.

As recommended by the MESAS evaluation, it would be helpful if Boards were given more guidance on:
- The public health objective
- How to assess overprovision, including how to measure capacity,
- The role and function of Licensing Forums
- Any new, relevant legislation that is implemented.

SHAAP endorses the Alcohol-related comments submitted by our partner organisation, Alcohol Focus Scotland, who have assisted us in preparing our submission.
The Scottish Parliament’s Local Government & Regeneration Committee has called for written evidence from interested parties as part of Stage 1 consideration of the Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill.

The Gun Trade Association (GTA), which represents 700 members of the UK sporting, recreational and professional gun trade, is such an interested party in this exercise, having been a member of the Scottish Firearms Consultative Panel and having provided substantial evidence for both the impact assessment for the Bill and the Consultation exercise which preceded the Bill. The GTA submits the following evidence to the Scottish Parliament, setting out its views on the provisions of the Bill.

It is of particular note that this is the first Bill which addresses air weapon licensing in the UK with all the complexities involved. The regulation of air weapons was devolved to Scotland from Westminster in the Scotland Act 2012 (at Section 10). Significantly, the powers devolved to Scotland only addressed air weapons and not other similar items such as ‘specially dangerous’ air weapons or air weapons ‘disguised as other objects’.

The definitions which will be used to control the use, possession, purchase and acquisition of air weapons in Scotland, as outlined in Section 1 of the Bill, merit special scrutiny as the rest of the Bill will be entirely dependent on the definition of the air weapon itself.

Section 1 – Meaning of an Air Weapon

In 1(3) Component parts in (a) and accessories in (b).

The inclusion of component parts in the Bill is complicated by the lack of definition in the Firearms Act, 1968.

The Violent Crime Reduction Act, 2006, gives some assistance in this regard, wherein component parts are considered to be solely those parts that are pressure bearing. For air weapons, these include cylinders, air reservoirs, barrels, etcetera, but crucially not screws, stocks, springs, and any parts that are not directly pressure bearing.
It would seem both sensible and pragmatic to adopt this approach and we suggest that allowing possession of component parts of air weapons, in Scotland, should be addressed through appropriate wording on the Air Weapon Certificate. (e.g. ‘may possess air weapons and component parts thereof’).

Accessories; for the most part these are detachable sound moderators (silencers) which have never been controlled for air weapons. Moderators for Section 1 firearms are listed on Firearms Certificates.

We suggest that detachable sound moderators for air weapons are addressed in the same manner as component parts and certificates are worded; ‘may possess air weapons and accessories’. These provisions will allow RFDs to determine, at point of sale, the purchasers’ rights to acquire and allow the police and firearms licensing the necessary controls through clear wording on certificates.

We believe that Section 1(4) of the Bill is potentially legally contradictory.

To be an “air weapon” as defined by Section 1(3)(b) of the Firearms Act 1968 it must be sufficiently powerful to be potentially lethal, but not sufficiently powerful to be specially dangerous as defined by the Specially Dangerous Air Weapons (Rules) 1969. By any reasonable definition, an “air gun” incapable of discharging a missile with a muzzle energy in excess of 1 joule does not meet these criteria and is de facto not an “air weapon” as defined by section 1 (3) (b).

To avoid ambiguity we suggest the wording be altered as follows;

(4) But the expression does not include—

a) an air gun, air rifle or air pistol which is incapable of discharging a missile with a kinetic energy in excess of one joule as measured at the muzzle of the weapon.

b) an air weapon that is designed to be used only when submerged in water or the component parts of any such weapon.
The effect of this is to establish a clear lower limit by which air weapons may be judged.

The GTA is firmly of the opinion that a definition of a lower limit of muzzle energy will help the Scottish police to positively differentiate between airsoft and air weapons. Furthermore a definition, such as 1 joule, will limit the danger to public safety as airsoft type items will have a lower level of muzzle energy and the possession of air weapons will be controlled through certification.

The protection of public safety is a police issue and not that of Firearms Licensing who do not deal with ‘non-lethal’ and/or other ‘unlicensed weapons’.

Section 2 – Requirement for air weapon certificate

Clarification is required as to the definition of both the words ‘use’ and ‘possess’. The Firearms Act 1968, at Section 57, does not define possession or use but it is often taken that possession encompasses use. (‘Possession’ does not necessarily imply ‘ownership’).

The Policy Memorandum makes it clear that air weapon certificates will licence individuals rather than weapons. Thus the quantity of air weapons held will not be registered on the certificate.

Should this important definition be stated on the face of the Bill?

Section 3 – Application for grant or renewal of air weapon certificate

(3) The Chief Constable must maintain a register containing the details of each application made under this section (whether or not the application results in an air weapon certificate being granted or renewed). If a certificate is not granted is the Chief Constable in breach of the Data Protection Act if he keeps the data?

Section 4 – Verification of applications

Will there be a lower age restriction for a ‘verifier’?

Section 5 – Grant or renewal of air weapon certificate
The requirements or tests for the grant are, as is stated in the Policy Memorandum, broadly in line with those for more powerful weapons under Section 1 of the Firearms Act 1968. We believe that is disproportionate and unnecessarily burdensome. We suggest the approach taken in the 1968 Act to the grant and renewal of shotgun certificates is more appropriate and proportionate and should be adopted. As a consequence the Chief Constable would need to have good reason not to issue a certificate, as is the case for shotgun certificates.

We are awaiting ‘Guidance’ (under Section 39), as to definitions of ‘fit person’ and ‘good reason’. Will these mirror the definition used for current UK Firearms Legislation (as in 5(2))? The Policy Memorandum states that there will be further discussions with stakeholders on the above questions. The GTA awaits the response before any secondary legislation is drafted.

Section 6 – Air weapon certificate: conditions

Awaiting definitions of conditions.

The Policy Memorandum makes specific mention of ‘Plinking’ in gardens and/or other urban or highly populated settings. Plinking is in effect informal target shooting and it is extremely well established that the majority of young people start their air weapon shooting safely and under supervision, in that environment. The GTA considers it unreasonable to overly restrict this type of shooting and we believe that clear definitions of “gardens”, “other urban” and “highly populated settings” will be needed to avoid this.
Conditions, although necessary, must make allowances for safe informal target shooting or “plinking”.

Section 7 – Special requirements and conditions for young persons

In sub-section (5) there is no provision in the conditions for a young person to possess/use an air weapon for ‘sporting purposes’ (i.e. for shooting live quarry), but they are allowed, in (5)(d), ‘to use and possess only for the purposes of protecting livestock, crops or produce on land used for or in connection with agriculture’. Further, in (5)(e), ‘the holder may use and possess an air weapon while carrying on business as a pest controller or acting as the employee of a pest controller.’

This definition presents the young person, who holds an air weapon certificate, with a potential difficulty; Whilst using a borrowed air weapon, and shooting rabbits for crop protection, or pest control, how could the young person justify to a constable that the shooting was not ‘for sporting purposes’?

Clarification is required. Why should a young person, who has satisfied the requirement of ‘fit person’ and has ‘good reason’ for using an air weapon, not be allowed to use the air weapon for ‘sporting purposes’? We suggest that (5)(a) be amended to include ‘sporting purposes’.

Section 8 – Duration of air weapon certificate

Sub-section (2) is pragmatic and practical, and should be extended to firearm and shotgun certificates.

Section 9 – Alignment of different types of certificates

A pragmatic solution for alignment of certificates.

Section 10 – Variation of air weapon certificate

The Chief Constable has the right to issue a notice to the certificate holder requiring the certificate for variation. A list of conditions, as mentioned in Section 6, is required.
Section 11 – Revocation of air weapon certificate

In the event of the notice of revocation and the surrender of air weapons, the police must give assurances that the air weapons will be held securely and without any damage being caused to the items in their care.

Section 12 – Police permits

In (1)(b) On the face of the Bill private persons must also be permitted to sell air weapons held under a police permit.

Section 13 – Visitor permits

Clarification will be required in Guidance as to whether visitor permits will have to be applied for through a ‘sponsor’ resident in Scotland.

In (4)(c). A qualifying visitor from outside the UK will not be subject to the terms of Section 21 of the Firearms Act 1968 when the application is made.

Section 14 – Visitor permits: young persons

As per Section 7 where young persons may not possess an air weapon for ‘sporting purposes’ (shooting live quarry), young persons, who visit Scotland on a visitor permit, will not be permitted to shoot live quarry.

The same arguments for changing this condition apply. (see Section 7, above).

Sub-section 14(6) appears to be contradictory. Must the Chief Constable be satisfied that the visitor permit does not allow young persons to shoot live quarry or not?

Section 15 – Police and visitor permits: conditions

Definitions of mandatory conditions are awaited in Guidance.

Section 16 – Police and visitor permits: variation and revocation

Definitions of mandatory conditions are awaited in Guidance.

Section 17 – Event permits
It is not clear whether the ‘organiser’ (who may not own air weapons and thus not have an air weapon certificate), may borrow or hire air weapons from an RFD, or a private air weapon certificate holder, and then lend/hire to the participants of the event.

Sub-section (7). A fuller description of ‘activity’ will be required in Guidance.

Section 18 – Approval of air weapon clubs
Section 19 – Variation of approval
Section 20 – Duration of approval
Section 21 – Alignment of club approvals
Section 22 – Power to enter and inspect club premises

The GTA has no comment to make on air weapon clubs.

Section 23 – Requirements for recreational shooting facilities

Sub-sections (1)(2) and (3); It is presumed that an RFD may possess air weapons without holding a specific air weapon certificate. An RFD who owns a miniature rifle range or a facility for combat games may therefore loan/hire air weapons, in the normal course of his business, to someone who does not hold an air weapon certificate. Conditions of age and supervision will apply.

Sub-section (4)(b); Combat games. Air weapons will have a muzzle energy of more than 1 joule. The GTA believes that the use of ‘air weapons’ at recreational facilities would be a danger to public safety. (See proposed revised definition of ‘air weapon’ at Section 1(4)).

It is also important to bear in mind is that the airsoft community in England (UKARA), consider that a range of muzzle energies from 1.3-2.5 joules is acceptable before the item should be defined as an air weapon.

Section 24 – Restrictions on transactions involving air weapons

Sub-section (2)(c)(i); There will be some countries that do not limit the purchase of air weapons to 18 years of age. Is it therefore correct to limit the age for purchase to a young person under 18 who may legitimately make the same purchase in his own country of residence, especially if, as in (2)(c)(ii), he may not take possession in Scotland?

Sub-section (2)(c)(ii), ‘Outwith Great Britain’ precludes England and Wales. This would prevent potentially considerable sales to those who visit Scotland from England and Wales and wish to purchase air weapons whilst visiting. This is a serious restriction of trade.

Section 25 – Requirement for commercial sales of air weapons to be in person

Sub-section (2) contradicts Section 24 sub-section (2)(c)(ii) where it states that possession may only be transferred by being ‘delivered outwith Great Britain’, without coming into the purchaser’s possession.

Section 26 – Requirement to notify Chief Constable of certain sales

Sub-section (1)(b); see Section 24 and comments on sub-section (2)(c)(ii).

Section 27 – Power of search with warrant

No comment.

Section 28 – Production of air weapon certificate

Sub-section (1)(a); it would practical to allow also the production of a photocopy of the air weapon certificate.

Section 29 – Cancellation of air weapon certificate

Sub-sections (2) and (3); Is there the right of appeal as in the case of revocation?

Section 30 – Forfeiture and disposal of air weapons

Sub-section (5); should also include ‘or part of a collection of antique air weapons’.

Section 31 – Failure to keep air weapon secure or report loss to the police
Sub-section (b); a time limit should be prescribed in Guidance as to ‘immediately’. A person might return to where the air weapon is normally kept after a holiday, or other absence, to find their air weapon missing.

Section 32 – False statements, certificates and permits

No comment.

Section 33 – Time limit for offences

No comment.

Section 34 – Offences by bodies corporate

If the body corporate forms a part of an English body corporate (e.g. a subsidiary of an English company), it must be established as to where any prosecution is brought.

Section 35 – Appeals

No comment.

Section 36 – Fees

Awaiting secondary legislation and guidance to determine the level of fees.

Section 37 – Power to make further provisions

Awaiting secondary legislation and guidance.

Section 38 – Transitional arrangements for existing certificate holders

Awaiting further guidance, especially in the case where a young person may have been ‘gifted’ an air weapon.

Section 39 – Guidance

It is imperative that sufficient public funds are made available to ensure that any guidance is published as widely as possible.
Section 40 – Interpretation of Part 1

It is essential that the definitions in Section 1 are clarified as to the meaning of ‘air weapon’.

Sub-section (5). The GTA believes that reference should also be made to the Violent Crime Reduction Act 2006.

Additional points that need to be considered:

- We feel that it is important to note that the GTA has been responsible for considerable input into the Financial Memorandum. The Scottish Government has accepted the figure of 500,000 air weapons, provided by the GTA, as the core estimate of numbers for the Bill. (See Explanatory Notes Paragraphs 44 – 49).

- Confirmation is required as to exactly what details will be required for entries into the Registers of Registered Firearms Dealers (RFDs).

- England and Wales will introduce electronic RFD Registers on the 31st December 2014. Will Scotland be included in the requirements of the EU Firearms Directive?

- Regarding RFD Registers: Will storage and repair of air weapons be a requirement in the register?

- Regarding internet sales: How will internet sales be dealt with under the air weapons Bill?

- Will remote sales be permitted between dealers in Scotland and those in the rest of the UK?

- Regarding firearms offences and the requirements for air weapon certificates: What will be the lead time period for ‘hand-in’ before an offence is committed?

6. Scrap Metal Dealer Licensing

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

40. Taking the proposals in sections 63 to 66 of the Bill together, how will they have the desired effect of strengthening the metal dealers' licensing regime to the extent that metal theft and related criminal activity is reduced?
Over the years Calor has placed more than 10 million cylinders on to the British market with a replacement value of over £300 million. Each year Calor invests between £10m and £11m putting new cylinders into circulation and maintaining the existing fleet. This is a significant investment.

Scrap metal has a value of c£250/tonne, but the cost to the LPG industry in replacement cylinders is significantly higher than this. Calor recovers 100,000 cylinders a year via a legitimate third party internal recovery scheme at a cost of £300k. These cylinders are mostly recovered from the Civic Amenity sites, but also from scrap yards, though entry to the latter can be exceptionally fraught. The percentage we successfully manage to recover is unknown, but best estimates would be:

- We probably recover half of what is out there meaning that a further 100,000 cylinders are permanently lost to the scrap metal recycling industry. At an average tare weight of 30kgs a cylinder at least £0.75m is generated by the scrapping of the remaining 100,000 cylinders.
- The replacement value is, as already stated, much higher - with cylinders costing between £25 and £60 apiece. At this rate, just to maintain stock levels, it costs Calor at least £4.5m a year.
- No assessment for the brass valves have been made though they equally have a value.

It should be noted that Calor is just half of the LPG industry so the figures above should be doubled for industry cost purposes i.e. 200,000 cylinders are scrapped each year with a scrap value of £1.5m but a much higher replacement value of c£6m.

Calor recognises that the Scottish Government takes the rising trend of metal theft seriously. We have been working in partnership with Metal Theft Scotland on the issue, and have provided case studies to the group. Our overall message will echo those who have been pushing for a tougher regulatory regime for the scrap metal industry across the UK; namely, that whenever possible, Scottish legislation should seek to meet the standards already set out in the Scrap Metal Dealers Act 2013 for England and Wales.

Calor therefore welcomes the latest proposals contained within the proposed Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill, which should help to ensure that legislation is consistent with what is in place elsewhere in the UK. By tightening up the record keeping expected by metal dealers, there should be a more consistent paper trail. Calor cylinders have been found across the world, in many places where we don’t do business, suggesting that there is an international trade taking place. Better licensing and removing all cash payments would make illegal trading much more difficult for those criminal elements seeking to sell on our products.

We welcome the move to bring itinerant scrap metal dealers into the legislation and be subject to the same licensing conditions as fixed premises dealers.
41. In your view, could the Bill be further strengthened in any way, for example, by including an accreditation scheme for metal dealers?

Calor was interested to learn in the explanatory notes to the Bill that there are around 280 licenses for metal dealers, but that only half of them (142) are actually in use, with 130 believed to have ceased trading or not actively dealing in scrap metal. Calor would be interested to know what work is undertaken to ensure that licenses are checked regularly to ensure that their status doesn’t change between license renewals.

The draft legislation states that metal dealers which do not comply with the proposals will be subject to a fine. Calor would welcome further detail on the range of actions which can be taken to metal dealers trading in illegal goods, up to closing unlicensed premises. This is a power which is contained within the Scrap Metal Dealers Act 2013, and we would argue Police Scotland should have the same powers as those in England and Wales.

While the legislation makes it clear that dealers in precious metals will be affected by the changes in the Bill, we would appreciate confirmation that car breakers or motor salvage operators are classified within these proposals as they are in the Scrap Metal Dealers Act 2013.

With regard to accreditation, Calor recognises the value of having a scheme to improve overall standards in the scrap dealer industry but this should not be implemented in lieu of a stronger regulatory regime. We would recommend that any such scheme be administered centrally to ensure that the information can be easily accessed.

42. Removal of exemption warrant - do you wish to comment on the proposal to remove the exemption warrant system?

Calor welcomes the removal of the exemption warrant as it ensures that all metal dealers are operating under the same regime. This should simplify monitoring and enforcement.

43. Removal of requirement to retain metal on-site - what impact will the proposal to remove the retention of metal requirement have on the enforcement of the licensing regime and prevention of criminal activities?

If law enforcement agencies in Scotland are happy for the 48 hour metal retention requirement to be rescinded we have no objection.

44. Forms of payment - what is your view on the proposal to go 'cashless' and is there merit in considering whether metal dealers could be allowed to operate using cash for only very small transactions, which could be limited to a certain number per month?

Calor Gas supports moving to cashless payments across the entirety of the UK, and would want to see a consistent approach taken in Scotland. Calor cylinders could potentially come under the definition of “small transactions”. A cash ban on all transactions will make legislation consistent with the Scrap Metal Dealers Act 2013, and would put an end to the current loophole used by itinerant dealers. This would also remove the potential threat of criminal elements wishing to take advantage of a weaker regime North of the border.

45. Forms of identification and record keeping:

In line with the Scrap Metal Dealers Act 2013, the Bill adds additional record keeping requirements to a metal dealer's licence including recording the means by which a seller's name and address was verified and retaining a copy of the document, and the method of payment and a copy of the payment document. The Bill will also require a metal dealer to record information in books with serially numbered pages or by means of an electronic device, and to keep separate records at each place of business. Such information and documents are to be kept for three rather than the current two years.

How important is it that the record keeping requirements reflect those in the Scrap Metal Dealers Act 2013, and do you agree with the Scottish Government that the proposed record keeping requirements are not unduly burdensome?
As a company which does business across the United Kingdom, Calor believes it is vital that legislation in Scotland is consistent with the Scrap Metal Dealers Act 2013.

While we would not wish to make the process of record keeping burdensome, ensuring that record keeping can be easily matched up to those kept elsewhere in the UK is key if we are to reduce incidents of cross border crime.

46. Mandatory and discretionary licensing requirements:

The Scottish Ministers can impose mandatory licensing requirements, such as those included in the Bill relating to record keeping and the identification of customers. In addition, local authorities can also attach discretionary requirements to licences in their areas.

Does the Bill get the balance right between mandatory and discretionary licensing requirements? Should the Bill include other mandatory conditions for obtaining a metal dealer’s licence, such as installing CCTV at metal dealers’ premises or in relation to labelling of metal and ‘forensic coding’?

All mandatory conditions should be consistent with those contained within the Scrap Metal Dealers Act 2013.

6. Civic Licensing – Sexual Entertainment Venues

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

50. What are the consequences of operating the new licensing regime using the definitions set out at section 68 of the Bill?

- ‘sexual entertainment venue’
- ‘audience’
- ‘financial gain’
- ‘organiser’
- ‘premises’
- ‘sexual entertainment’, and
- ‘display of nudity’

51. The Bill specifies that a venue hosting sexual entertainment on three occasions or less within a 12 month period would not be treated as a sexual entertainment venue: does this have any unintended consequences?

It would mean that sexual entertainment could occur without the protections that should be offered to performers and communities under a licensing regime. It may mean businesses operating by rotating around different premises in order to avoid the requirement for a license.
52. Local licensing authorities will be able to set the number of sexual entertainment venues in their area to below the existing level, or zero: are there any advantages or disadvantages to this approach?

This is the right approach – it means that local authorities can respond to local communities as well as local and national equality and child protection strategy to eliminate SEVs and associated harms in their area.

53. The Bill relies mainly on the existing licensing regime for sex shops as set out in section 44 and Schedule 2 of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 (application, notification, objections and representations, revocation of licences etc., enforcement and appeals): is this mechanism adequate for the licensing of sexual entertainment venues - if not, please explain why?

54. Are there any barriers to licensing authorities operating the new licensing regime?
55. Civic Licensing

Do you have any other comments to make on the civic licensing aspects of the Bill?

Submission from Zero Tolerance to the Scottish Government consultation: Air Weapons and Licensing

Zero Tolerance are responding only to section 68: Licensing of sexual entertainment venues. We are resubmitting our original response to the 2013 consultation on the Regulation of Sexual Entertainment Venues, as the majority of the points we (and many others) made at that time do not appear to have been addressed in the current Bill. In particular:

- The legislation must specify more clearly what kinds of sexual entertainment are acceptable under license and other standards that venues must comply with. Given the prevalence of prostitution being accessed in sexual entertainment venues (see pg. 10), and the overwhelming evidence that women working in SEVs and/or in prostitution are particularly vulnerable to VAW\(^1\), this legislation must take the opportunity to establish better protections. These should include:
  - No physical contact between performer and client
  - No private booths for performances
  - Changing areas for performers which are single-gender and separate to public areas.
  - Clear policies in place in every venue on the safety of performers and behaviour of clientele.

License inspections should be used as an opportunity to monitor the wellbeing of performers and offer links to support services where required.

- The legislation should also stipulate restrictions on signage and advertising of SEVs to protect the local community and particularly children. No sexual imagery should be allowed outside the venue or on advertising material which could be accessible to children; SEV’s websites should be age-restricted. There should be no visibility from the street into the SEV.

- There should be clearer, and stronger, regulations on notifying and involving the local community in decision-making on providing licenses. With the Community Empowerment Bill currently also out for consultation it would be inconsistent not to provide for communities to be involved in decision making on SEVs, which arguably have at least as great an impact on communities as planning decisions.

- A license should be required by all venues offering sexual entertainment, even if only once in a twelve-month period. The problems and risks associated with sexual entertainment are present no matter how often entertainment of this kind is offered, as accepted by previous consultation respondents involved in the industry:

“I feel this will result in groups of inexperienced persons operating businesses providing Exotic Dancing performances, in multiple venues throughout Scotland with a view to avoid any such proposed licensing restrictions, thus causing great concerns in respect of safety for the performers as well as the public.” (2013 submission from Miss Hollywood)

- Given the issues outlined above and in our previous submission around women’s safety, it is essential that a clause is introduced requiring that license holders are fit and proper persons. A history of any offence of violence or abuse, particularly towards women and girls, or involvement in organised crime, should preclude an individual from obtaining a SEV license.

Regarding two clauses which have been added since the previous consultation:

- Adopting a sexual entertainment venue licensing policy should not be optional for local authorities. Local authorities which have a larger number of SEVs are both more in need of a policy and, in some cases, less likely to voluntarily adopt one. If a policy is needed in any LA, it is needed in all, and the approach to SEVs must be consistent across Scotland.
- Under-18s should not be allowed inside sexual entertainment venues at any time. Those working with and responsible for children and young people in Scotland are currently facing multiple challenges arising from the normalisation of sexualised media and behaviour; allowing under-18s to access venues dedicated to providing sexualised entertainment will only exacerbate these challenges and undermine work being done to address them. Many SEVs currently display pornographic imagery and there is a high level of risk in such a venue of the breaking of child protection laws in relation to exposure to such material (see e.g. Guidance on the Sexual Offences Scotland Act section 33: causing an older child to look at a sexual image). Given the aforementioned prevalence of prostitution in SEVs and recent cases highlighting the widespread sexual exploitation of children, which the Scottish Government’s own report has explicitly connected to early sexualisation, it is entirely inappropriate that children be allowed in SEVs.

2 See e.g. www.zerotolerance.org.uk/sites/all/files/UnderPressure_Doc_Web_sm.pdf; A forthcoming event on young men and sexualised imagery is heavily oversubscribed with applicants from sexual health, teaching, youth work, social work and more. Applicants express high levels of concern around how young men’s behaviour is affected by exposure to objectifying and sexualised imagery.

3 For example Criminal Justice Social Work training on sexualisation and relationship abuse; SHARE resource and training for schools on sexualisation, pornography and consent; Rape Crisis education work on consent and sexualisation; Zero Tolerance Under pressure training for youth workers.

The current Bill appears to have been written with a view to ironing out legal technicalities in the regulation of sexual entertainment and alcohol, rather than with a consideration of the more important themes of gender equality, women’s safety, child protection and the rights and safety of communities. The final Bill must cohere clearly with Scottish Government policies on gender equality, child protection and violence against women and girls, including Equally Safe.

Submission from Zero Tolerance to the Scottish Government consultation re: Regulation of Sexual Entertainment Venues.
September 2013

About Zero Tolerance

Zero Tolerance is a national charity working to end men’s violence against women (VAW) in all its forms. We promote a primary prevention approach, believing that changing societal attitudes, values and structures is the key to ending gender-based violence. We also believe that pervasive gender inequality in our society creates a culture in which VAW is prevalent and tolerated and that this must change. More information about our work can be found on our website, www.zerotolerance.org.uk

Summary of our position

We support the creation of a new regime to regulate Sexual Entertainment Venues (SEVs) but with some caveats, which stem from a philosophical disagreement with the approach of regulating a form of social harm as opposed to trying to end it. We are concerned about possible unintended consequences, such as legitimising an industry we see as extremely harmful and problematic. But, on balance, we support the proposals as they represent an improvement on the current regime of licensing and they are better than no change at all.

Our support for some of the intent behind this proposal does not lessen our belief that, fundamentally, lap-dancing, stripping and all other forms of sexual entertainment are forms of commercial sexual exploitation, and as such of violence against women. The industry which provides SEVs sanctions objectification of women, glamorises exploitation and harms work to achieve gender equality.

We aspire to a Scotland without these forms of so-called ‘entertainment’ and admire societies which have taken action to end highly gendered ‘sexual entertainment’. For example Iceland has legislated to ban all strip clubs. The law was passed with no votes against and only two abstentions. It makes it illegal for any business in Iceland to profit from the nudity of its employees. Arguably there is a correlation between gender equality and SEVS – the societies with the least gender inequality tend to have the fewest of these kinds of venues. It is not unrealistic to aspire to a society with no SEVs. It is a matter of political will.

Concerns re: conflicting policy positions
We are dismayed that the consultation paper notes that the Scottish Government defines the activities that happen in the types of venue likely to regulated as SEVs as commercial sexual exploitation, and yet decides that freedom of choice must be balanced against the harm these venues cause. The Scottish Government’s current strategy on VAW notes that these activities cause harm to all women, by sanctioning objectification of women’s bodies, and further notes that this harm to women collectively happens regardless of whether individuals claim liberation or empowerment from the activity, so it is not clear why they should be allowed to continue, because of ‘freedom of choice’. In a civilised society in which ‘our people and communities support and respect each other’ (SG Strategy for Justice in Scotland, 2012) some choices are curtailed in the interests of all. It is interesting and disappointing that men’s choices to watch women perform in a sexualised manner are being protected here. We would like to see much more emphasis, alongside regulatory work, on challenging men’s choices, and a much more robust approach to promoting gender equality.

Scotland has led the way in tackling other forms of violence against women e.g. domestic abuse. It is unfortunate that we are less progressive in tackling the harms of the sex industry, perhaps because governments are excessively distracted by the economic aspects of this industry. But who really profits? And who loses? These are questions that we feel need further reflection.

In early 2013, we sought opinion of counsel on licensing matters and that confirmed the difficulties of reconciling policy positions with the current licensing regime. Per Opinion of Counsel, A Hajducki QC, March 2013, “even if the City of Edinburgh Council [or any council] were to view lap-dancing as exploitative, harmful to women’s health or otherwise undesirable it is hard to see how this could properly form part of their statement of [alcohol] licensing policy." This is not satisfactory or acceptable.

Specific questions and answers

In answer to the questions posed in the consultation paper:

Q1: Yes, there needs to be a separate regime for licensing SEVs and alcohol.

We strongly agree there needs to be a new regime. The regime we have now does not work. Many premises have a ‘Code of conduct on dance entertainment’ or similar, appended to their alcohol licence. Compliance is largely voluntary and breaches are common. It is clear that any such policy is “little more than a statement of intent or suggested code of conduct”; therefore “conditions specifically relating to the adult entertainment provided are effectively unenforceable following Brightcrew” (source: Opinion of Counsel A Hajducki QC, March 2013). ‘Brightcrew’ is a case that found it was not permissible for Licensing Boards to impose additional conditions not directly related to the sale and consumption of alcohol.6

Our concerns about how the regime is failing at present were set out in our response to the Scottish Government consultation ‘Further Options for Alcohol Licensing’ in March 2013.7

We anticipate that some bodies, such as the Law Society of Scotland or COSLA, may express concerns about creating a double licensing regime. We believe that this is not an issue.

The opinion of counsel we sought in March 2013 suggests that in previous discussions of this topic, “objections…that the introduction of licensing for such establishments would result in a dual licensing regime which was a thing to be avoided overlooks two important factors, namely that we already have a dual licensing regime in several areas and secondly that an existing enforcement and checking regime already exists. The dual licence argument ignores the fact that certain activities are already subject to dual licensing e.g. cinemas which have to be licensed under the 2005 Act for the sale of alcohol and under the Cinemas Act 1985 in respect of the exhibition of films, and so far as I am aware this has never caused any particular problem. The ‘policing’ functions for alcohol and entertainment licensing are already carried out in many areas by the same licensing enforcement officers employed by the council and both the 2005 Act and the 1982 Act have parallel enforcement powers (including search and other powers, designated officers, entry and inspection provisions, penalties and procedural codes), and if anything the 1982 Act powers are more comprehensive and would not add any significant costs to councils.” (A Hajducki QC)

Q2: Yes, SEVs should be licensed separately from other forms of public entertainment.

We strongly agree with this proposal. Going to watch some ‘sexual entertainment’ is not the same as going for a coffee, a meal or a sunbed session. It is not aimed at all members of our society. Licensing it separately reflects the harm it causes; can allow for a separate monitoring process and data aggregation that can be useful in future policy development (for example, monitoring the gender of licence applicants); and can allow for special tailored measures e.g. a differential pricing regime to inhibit growth of this sector.

We have concerns about labelling this kind of activity ‘entertainment’ as we feel that normalises and trivialises it; we would prefer ‘sexual performance’ or some alternative language. In England and Wales the term ‘sexual encounter establishment’ is used but we believe that the word ‘encounter’ implies physical contact so we would not wish it to be adopted in Scotland.

We strongly disagree with the proposal at para. 16 of the consultation paper that “it would be at the discretion of the local licensing authority as to whether or not a licensing regime was needed in their area.” Discretion leads to inconsistent policy, and in some local authorities to very poor decision making around VAW (ref. the City of Edinburgh Council’s well known ‘discretionary’ policy regarding saunas and indoor prostitution). There must be a consistent national approach and an adoptive regime would not deliver this. (Being obliged to have a licensing regime for SEVs does not of course mean being obliged to have the same approach to them in each area).

It MUST be mandatory or the cities which currently have the majority of sexual entertainment venues in Scotland may well opt out to avoid having a difficult or controversial decision to make.

Q3: Yes, the definition of the audience is appropriate.

This will encapsulate performances in a private space where there is only one person watching. These should not happen but we must anticipate that they might, as they are prohibited in many clubs at present but still advertised on the clubs’ websites.

Q4: The definition is clear, subject to one change.

We agree with the definition of sexual entertainment, but we would suggest that the definition should mention nudity or partial nudity as some venues will try to get round the legislation by requiring women performers to wear miniscule items of lingerie so they can say they are not nude. This is already common practice: we are aware that women wear crotchless garments, or G-strings, or string bras, to avoid breaching the ‘full nudity’ clauses in some venues.

We do not believe that other measures are required to protect the position of artistic performances, as the more variations are introduced, the more likelihood that a venue that is operating as a SEV will try to present its offerings as ‘artistic’ to escape regulation. We have already seen this process starting in Edinburgh with the rebranding of one very prominent strip club as a ‘gentlemen’s club’ that now offers burlesque, dance classes etc. in an effort to appear more ‘respectable’.

Q5: There are no other venues which should be exempt.

Q6: We do NOT agree with exemption for premises offering sexual entertainment less than three times a year.

All premises which offer sexual entertainment should be subject to the same regulation, regardless of how frequently they wish to provide this entertainment.

Q7: Yes, local authorities should be allowed to decide that there should be no SEVs in their area.

This is crucial. At present community councils have no say and residents have no input, especially when existing premises apply for licence renewals. The licensing process is obscure and most people do not know that they can object, or how to go about it. Small print notices on lamp-posts near the venue don’t encourage people to engage with the process, and many people who object to strip clubs feel resigned to them existing in perpetuity, especially in cities like Edinburgh that have a very established sex industry with local authority support.

When councils are given a choice about having SEVs they often choose a nil limit – most recently in Swansea. In Highland they recently granted their first licence for a strip club, and the licensing board chair is on record as having had to do so against her wishes, and despite numerous objections, because she had no legal leeway to refuse the application. Many communities would not want such clubs near them, for a range of reasons including preventing public disorder, promoting gender equality, protecting children from harm and from exposure to inappropriate sexual imagery, or developing an area as a cultural or business hub.

Local authorities can then take into account factors such as proximity to schools or children’s centres and decide if SEVs are to be allowed, where they should be located, and seek to avoid the clustering of venues (as in Edinburgh, where there are multiple venues on Lothian Road and the West Port area – presently six venues within a square mile, one part of which is known locally as the ‘pubic triangle’). At present there is no power to object on the basis of over-provision of this type of entertainment as the dance activity is seen as ancillary to the liquor provision.

We strongly believe that communities must be more involved in setting limits on SEVs. The Scottish Social Attitudes survey in 2012 found that only 22% of Scots feel that they have a say in their community, a figure which must be improved upon.

Q8: No comment

Q9: Other issues

We would suggest the Scottish Government should give consideration to the following issues when setting policy on SEVs:

9.1 Economic issues – good places to work?

The Scottish Government’s Economic strategy speaks of the value of creating high quality, permanent jobs; of creating highly skilled jobs as part of new developing markets such as the renewable energy sector; and of promoting equity in the economy. It is unclear how SEVs will fit with any aspects of this agenda.

Lap-dancing and strip clubs are generally extremely poor employers – for example, lap-dancing clubs routinely:

• Ask women to pay to appear/dance (unlike other dance performances where the audience members pay for a ticket and the organisation staging the performance pays the performers), meaning that they can be out of pocket if they don’t have enough customers to cover their appearance fee on a given night – what other jobs involve women making no money at all on a shift?
• Use women who are self-employed dancers as opposed to employees, so they have limited protection, job security and rights.
• Fine dancers for breaches of rules, which can be arbitrary and unpredictable.
• Have high staff turnover because men demand new ‘products’ to look at and engage with and do not wish to see the same girls and women repeatedly – they wish a range of nationalities, breast sizes etc. The nature of the work is that it’s not permanent – sexual entertainment is provided by young women whose attractiveness is deemed to diminish with age.

- Encourage or tolerate drinking among the dancers, some of whom develop alcohol dependency problems.
- Make the women who work there feel unsafe or degraded, with long-term impacts on their physical and psychological well-being - many women report a heavy psychological toll linked to dealing with, in effect, normalised sexual harassment on a nightly basis.

For detailed testimony on the experience of working in these kinds of clubs and the harms it creates see http://www.object.org.uk/lapdancing-testimonies - selected excerpts from some of these testimonies are below:

“The industry by its very nature, is highly discriminatory and ageist, it is a certain fact that men want to see nubile young women naked, not 40 year old women, so the very core of the industry is extremely derogatory, and degrading to women of all ages” (Alexandra, former lap-dancer)

“You have a code of conduct but it’s not adhered to too much. It’s just to placate the local authorities. We weren’t even encouraged to read it. You just sign it quickly. I was worried about signing it – but it became apparent it was all nonsense.” (Sarah, former lap-dancer)

“I increasingly, rather than getting dances, was making customers buy me a drink instead, and on more nights that I am too ashamed to admit would be so drunk that I would lose my dancing money, fight with other girls and customers and not remember getting back home. It was hell.” (Liz, former lap-dancer)

“There’s no hierarchy. You can’t be promoted. It’s for quick money. There’s no holiday or sickness pay. Shifts are booked on a weekly basis. If you’re ill you can’t work. There’s no pension!” (Sarah)

“The management in all the clubs treated the girls very badly, they were discriminatory, frequently derogatory in their comments to and about the girls...The customers’ attitudes varied between politeness to downright hostility and abuse.” (Alexandra).

As suggested in Alexandra’s testimony, these venues do not generate work opportunities for women after a certain age or who do not fit a very narrow, culturally-relative interpretation of physical attractiveness; and they do not create jobs where there is any kind of advancement or career structure possible.

Due to the temporary nature of the work and the relative lack of scrutiny these venues are also attractive to people traffickers and more must be done to integrate anti-trafficking work with reform of this industry.

Lap-dancing clubs also routinely employ women who are not sober, as many of the women feel they need to misuse alcohol to survive the experience of working there – see Liz above and also the testimony of Jennifer Danns:

The 2004 research report, “Profitable Exploits: Lap dancing in the UK” also found that dancers are encouraged by management to drink alcohol on site, which would be condemned in any other workplace. It reported that it is common for women in the sex industry to misuse substances to enable them to cope with the stresses of the work. Would any other employer who encouraged the drinking of alcohol and tolerated the use of other illegal drugs as part of a job be tolerated and supported by the licensing regime?

Their presence in society also puts working women at risk of encountering sexual harassment, through being excluded from corporate entertainment at strip clubs or expected to join in against their will. The Fawcett Society’s ‘Corporate Sexism’ report noted the commonness of firms holding business meetings, entertaining clients and celebrating deals at lap-dancing venues, with some establishments offering unmarked receipts for expenses. They identify this as a major threat to women’s equality at work.

The industry promotes stripping and lap-dancing as exciting and lucrative ‘work’ for women but the reality is that lap-dancing clubs are highly exploitative and offer very poor work. Councils and the Scottish Government will need to consider how these fit with local and national economic strategies.

9.2 Economic issues - legitimate, law-abiding businesses?

Most SEVs maintain a high ‘performer to punter’ ratio, to offer the customer a choice of ‘types’ of women e.g. different nationalities or body types (in itself an indicator of their view that women are objects for looking at and not human beings with rights and dignity) and this means there is intense competition between performers, which in turns escalates the types of performance on offer.

Increasingly men expect explicit sexualised behaviour and full nudity. We have reported a number of venues to the City of Edinburgh Council for breach of the code of conduct on dance entertainment, for advertising fully nude dances or dances in private booths. We have not had a satisfactory outcome to these complaints. One compliance officer admitted to us “we have taken our eye off these places”.

http://www.guardian.co.uk/lifeandstyle/2011/nov/10/truth-lap-dancer-clubs

Julie Bindel, Child and Woman Abuse Studies Unit, London Metropolitan University, Aug 2004
This is an industry in which breaches of licensing policy are commonplace, as we have found by checking Edinburgh venues’ compliance with ‘codes of conduct’. It is hard for women’s sector agencies to have confidence in the inspection regime when it generally involves men from the local authority and police visiting a premises to check what is happening.

It is well known that the buying and selling of sex acts occurs in some clubs. Scottish research with 110 men who had bought sex found that 31% of the men had accessed prostitution through a lap dancing club.\textsuperscript{12} Selling sex is not illegal but brothel-keeping is and if more than one performer is selling sex in the same premises on the same night then the premises is effectively operating as a brothel, and the owner/manager is living off immoral earnings. These are crimes.

We do not have confidence that the venues operating as strip clubs at present, which are likely to apply to become SEVs, are legitimate, law-abiding businesses. The monitoring of these must be much more stringent than it is at present, with unannounced visits, conducted by officers who are trained in recognising signs that someone may have been trafficked. Compliance with regulation must be seen as paramount in these kinds of venues, commensurate with the risks they pose and their well-documented harms.

9.3 Gender equality

Lap-dancing is a manifestation of gender inequality. It is not a coincidence that the performers in lap-dancing clubs in Scotland are almost all women and the customers and business owners are almost all men. This industry thrives on the systematic exploitation of women by men and a gendered hierarchy of power.

The consultation on SEVs uses gender neutral language like ‘performers’ and ‘customers’ and says that entertainment can be ‘provided by both male and female performers.’ Yet there is not one single lap-dancing or strip club in Scotland where men perform for women’s sexual gratification. There is not one venue with graphic images of nearly naked men outside on the windows, or photos of men in underwear outside, or on the website. There are no reviews of men’s bodies on the review websites for these premises. There are explicit reviews of women’s bodies. There are no descriptions of men on the sites, but there are descriptions of women.

Women sometimes watch male strippers at hen parties for example, but the power dynamic at these events is very different from events where men, the dominant sex in our society, who have more money and power than women, watch women performers. There are no dedicated venues which offer women the chance to see men perform in this way, because there is no demand for this. Women generally do not demand to see men naked or near naked and in submissive poses. This issue cannot be understood separately from the wider issues of the unequal distribution of money and power between men and women in Scotland and the wider world.

This is an industry run by men, for men, in which women are the objects to be watched, touched and lusted over. A pretence of gender neutrality or symmetry does not help us towards making good policy on this issue.

These venues also exploit men. Although women are the primary victims of a regime which objectifies and commodifies them, men too are hugely exploited by this industry – the clubs are very tactical about parting men from their money, and the dancers are skilled in knowing how to make men pay more than they had intended.

“The private one on one dance was everyone’s bread and butter and the trick was to try and get them to stay in there as long as possible and have multiple dances at £10 each. The manipulative trick to this was to remain topless, lean over and whisper in their ear, “Would you like me to carry on?” to which any red blooded man would pant “yes!” whether they could afford to or not.” (Liz – former lap-dancer)

This industry preys on men’s willingness to be seen as a ‘lad’ and to conform to stereotypes about men’s desire to exploit women sexually and to value women primarily for their appearance.

It’s hard to see how local authorities can meet their obligations under the Equality Act 2010, and the sex/gender aspects of the Public Sector Equality Duty, whilst licensing premises which do so much to undermine equality between men and women.

9.4 Normalisation of the sex industry

Over the past decade, lap-dancing has entered the mainstream and the clubs are keen to present themselves as respectable. Some strip clubs offer lessons to women in pole fitness or striptease skills – e.g. Club Rouge in Edinburgh. Many leisure and fitness centres now offer ‘pole fitness’ classes to teach the skills for pole-dancing. In 2006 Comic Relief, which funds projects for young people affected by sexual violence, included a show called ‘Strictly Come Pole Dancing’ in its plans for fundraising. (This was later dropped due to the volume of protests.)

Clubs are not discreet or hidden venues. They are advertised on flyers, in magazines and local papers, on local taxis and on larger billboards, and by promotional staff (often dressed in lingerie) handing out flyers in high streets. The clubs are very visible on main streets, many with frontage which makes it clear what is on offer inside. Regulating the appearance of these venues has been difficult in Edinburgh as the advertising regulations have been interpreted by council officers in such a way as to allow these venues to place large silhouettes of naked women in their windows.

In February 2010, the Home Office published a review of the Sexualisation of Young People. This review examined culture and society in the UK and found that jobs in brothels and lap-dancing clubs were advertised by Job Centre Plus and that “we are seeing the normalisation of [sex work] as viable career choices” which “sends out a powerful message to young people about what is of value” (para 29). The review concluded that popular culture lends “credence to the idea that women are there to be used and that men are there to use them” (para 30).

In this climate, it is easy for young people to be groomed for involvement in the sex industry and for escalation to occur. Many young women who work in lap-dancing clubs do not intend initially to become involved in prostitution but soon find that is the norm in these clubs and become involved in selling sex, with severe consequences for their wellbeing.

We are concerned that this new regime may have an unintended consequence; that of further cementing this ‘normalisation’. Venues will be able to say they have an SEV licence and this may confer respectability. It may even be that we see a mushrooming of this sector as more people apply to run an SEV, if this regime makes it clearer what is involved and resolves some of the difficulties created since the Brightcrew case. On balance we think the proposed regime is better than the status quo and that change is needed but we urge caution over the risks of expanding an industry which is so harmful.

9.5 Other AEWG recommendations?

We note that some recommendations\textsuperscript{14} made by the Adult Entertainment Working Group in 2006 have not been enacted and would encourage the Scottish Government to revisit these.

9.6 Link to local policing

We would like to see more linkages made between policing plans/local policing, and the licensing regime. For example, police data collection could seek to establish if there is any correlation between levels of harassment/sexual assaults etc. in a (say) 2 mile radius of SEVs, or if customers who cause disorder at these venues also have convictions for forms of gender-based crime such as domestic abuse or sexual assault. This would help us gather more evidence about the impact of SEVs on our communities.

9.7 Frontage/signage

We recommend that the regime created includes provision for restricting the types of frontage/signage permissible at these venues. One lap-dancing club in Edinburgh has photos of some of the women performers in lingerie in a display case outside the front door, and others have graphic representations of women stripping or pole dancing, as mentioned at 9.4. We would prefer that if these venues exist at all, that they be disallowed from using such imagery as advertising for their services.

9.8 Prevention of crime

We need more clarity on how this new proposed regime will stop prostitution from happening in SEVs – we know it does presently\textsuperscript{15} – what will prevent this? There need to be clear rules prohibiting private dances, private booths and the sale of sexual acts, and these need to be enforced.

\textsuperscript{14} \url{http://www.scotland.gov.uk/Publications/2006/04/24135036/3}

\textsuperscript{15} Women’s Support Project research on men who bought sex - \url{http://www.womensupportproject.co.uk/userfiles/file/uploads/Challenging_Men%C2%92s_Demand.pdf} – found that 34% of men who had bought sex in Edinburgh had located prostitutes in a lap-dancing club.

9.9 Safer communities

The SG wishes to create safer communities. We believe that lap-dancing clubs harm communities. They make women feel uncomfortable and unsafe, and create no-go areas in our towns and cities. We have a lot of anecdotal evidence of women in Edinburgh avoiding Lothian Road and the West Port to avoid walking past strip clubs. We also wonder what risk men who are sexually excited on leaving a strip club pose to women in the city, both to strangers and to the women they are in relationships with. There needs to be further study of this.

One study, in Glasgow, conducted by the Glasgow Chamber of Commerce in 2003, found that three quarters of city centre businesses believed that lap-dancing clubs would damage the reputation of the city; and half were concerned about the safety of their staff in the vicinity of the clubs.

Case study: Camden

In 2001, the female rape rate in the London Borough of Camden, which then had seven lap-dancing clubs sited mainly in residential areas, was three times the national average. Researchers at the Lilith Project say that since 1999, rape of women in Camden has increased by 50 per cent and indecent assault by 57 per cent. In 2002, a report from the council's environmental health department recorded that some streets had turned into "a no-go area for female shoppers and male passers-by who are often accosted by pimps and other strip clubs offering sexual services and favours".

9.10 Fit and Proper

We believe that the regime that is created should include provision to determine whether the holder of an SEV is a ‘fit and proper’ person, and that the definition of ‘fit and proper’ should incorporate whether or not a person has any convictions for illegal behaviour. This should include a reasonable assessment of whether the criminal conviction is for an offence which may put the public at risk (e.g. assault, sexual assault) or a more victimless crime e.g. a public order offence gained in protesting. The public have the right to be protected from licensees who have serious criminal convictions.

Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill
Call for Evidence
Supplementary Paper from British Hospitality Association, Scotland

This paper provides the observations of the British Hospitality Association (BHA) in Scotland on the Alcohol Licensing proposals in the Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill. The Association does not consider that the questions (28-34) posed in Section 4 of the invitation to submit evidence provide an adequate opportunity to make its views known. The Association’s views are therefore presented in this supplementary paper which should be read in conjunction with the official form for submitting evidence to which this paper is attached.

The Association has not commented on proposals within the Bill with which it is in agreement; in fact, most of these proposals are welcome. The observations provided below represent aspects of the Bill with which the BHA disagrees or which it considers should be removed or amended.

1. In general terms, the BHA would much prefer that when alcohol licensing legislation is amended a consolidated piece of legislation should be produced which clearly identifies the changes that are proposed. BHA believes that such an approach would save public and private resources.
2. BHA is uncomfortable with the re-introduction of a fit and proper person test which was done away with in the 2005 Act.
3. BHA considers that there is no value to introduce spent convictions into licensing hearings without just cause. Spent convictions are just that – ‘spent’.
4. BHA considers that there is no value whatsoever in the inclusion of Angostura Bitters in the definition of alcohol.
5. BHA is pleased with the introduction of ‘deemed grant’ but believes that the time period of 9 months within which Licensing Boards must determine applications is too long and that this should be reduced to 6 months.

3. General Licensing Issues

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

23. Is the current Scottish licensing regime, as set out in the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 and the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005, fit for purpose?

We do not believe that the current legislation adequately protects the health of children and young people, specifically in relation to street traders and mobile food vendors in the vicinity of schools.

The Scottish Government has recently published ‘Beyond the School Gate’ (BTSG). It highlights that 14 authorities have placed a condition/restriction on trader’s licences to restrict their operation in the vicinity of schools under section 39 of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 (which require amendments in accordance with the statutory process detailed in section 9 of the Act in order that a new condition can be attached to the licence). Restrictions have been introduced in respect of the area and/or times that street traders can operate and, in effect, means there can be an exclusion zone in place around schools within which street traders are not allowed to trade (usually during certain times/days). The document states that the degree of any condition/restriction is determined by local circumstances and varies between local authorities.

We believe that any restrictions under the current legislation would be ultra vires and challengeable.

The Highland Council does not currently use licensing powers in this manner. We are pleased that the introduction of BTSG advocates the restriction of licensing for mobile food vendors in the vicinity of schools but The Council’s legal advice is that to be competent, any move to introduce exclusion zones around schools for street traders requires to be supported by changes in primary legislation. The Air Weapons and Licensing Bill provides an opportunity to address this important issue in relation to the health of our children.
24. Should a licensing system seek to regulate individual behaviour or communities of space (eg. ‘city space’ etc.)?

25. In what way should the licensing system in Scotland interact with the support the land use planning system, community planning and regeneration?

26. How does the licensing system in Scotland assist with the delivery of sustainable development and economic balanced areas?

27. In what way does the licensing system in Scotland support health and planning, addressing health inequalities and public health wellbeing outcomes?
The Highland Council and its partners have been working to improve the school food environment through an officer/member stakeholder group.

One of our major challenges is the availability of unhealthy food in the vicinity of our schools. We believe that any move to introduce exclusion zones around schools for street traders requires to be supported by changes in primary legislation. The Air Weapons and Licensing Bill provides an opportunity to address this important issue in relation to the health of our children.

6. Civic Licensing – Sexual Entertainment Venues

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

50. What are the consequences of operating the new licensing regime using the definitions set out at section 68 of the Bill?

- 'sexual entertainment venue'
- 'audience'
- 'financial gain'
- 'organiser'
- 'premises'
- 'sexual entertainment', and
- 'display of nudity'

Sexual Entertainment Venues – In particular lap dancing venues hold have no hidden agenda, they are simply a method of light hearted entertainment and no different to Bands, DJ's or other live shows.

51. The Bill specifies that a venue hosting sexual entertainment on three occasions or less within a 12 month period would not be treated as a sexual entertainment venue: does this have any unintended consequences?

It is irrelevant how many times per annum this form of entertainment in is held, there is no malice in it in front of or behind the scenes.
52. Local licensing authorities will be able to set the number of sexual entertainment venues in their area to below the existing level, or zero: are there any advantages or disadvantages to this approach?

No advantage to the community what so ever. This form of venue would in fact cause less disruption to the surrounding community than a conventional night club or live music venue with regards to noise levels, clientele etc.

53. The Bill relies mainly on the existing licensing regime for sex shops as set out in section 44 and Schedule 2 of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 (application, notification, objections and representations, revocation of licences etc., enforcement and appeals): is this mechanism adequate for the licensing of sexual entertainment venues - if not, please explain why?

To something such as a lap dancing bar in the same breath is ludicrous. Venues such as this are merely light hearted entertainment and a far cry from anything underground or seedy.

54. Are there any barriers to licensing authorities operating the new licensing regime?

The only change the new regime will make is damaging an already wounded licensed trade in a crucial time for the Scottish employment and economy.
55. Civic Licensing

Do you have any other comments to make on the civic licensing aspects of the Bill?

See above.

8. Do you consider that the Bill has any implications for meeting Scotland’s climate change commitments? Please explain.

9. Do you consider that the Bill has any implications for meeting Scotland’s equality and/or human rights commitments? Please explain.

10. Do you consider that the Bill has any implications for preventative spending and/or public services reform? Please explain.
11. Do you consider that the Bill has any implications in relation to European Union issues? Please explain.

12. Do you have any other comments on the impact of the proposals contained in the Bill relation to Scottish Government objectives?

This bill will have a negative effect on the Scottish Government’s Policy to make Scots active for life. The policy reads;

The Scottish Government’s over-arching policy objective is to make Scots active for life. We want to get and keep more Scots active help Scots be the best by dealing with a spectrum of physical activity - helping those who are inactive at one end, to supporting elite athletes at the other.

By aligning sport and physical activity more closely together, the links between the two will be strengthened. The Scottish Government’s sport and physical activity strategies continue to play an important role in setting out the detail of what needs to be delivered on the ground.

The Scottish Government has made Physical Activity a new national indicator to reflect its importance. Physical inactivity contributes to nearly 2,500 deaths in Scotland and costs the NHS around £91 million per year. It is a health challenge that the Scottish Government is passionate about taking on. An annual investment of £3 million is aimed at increasing physical activity, including those furthest away from meeting the physical activity guidelines - teenage girls and older adults. This is in addition to National Programmes such as Active Schools, which provided over five million opportunities for young people to be physically active.

2. Air Weapons Licensing

You may respond to all the questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

13. In what ways will the creation of an air weapons licensing system in Scotland contribute to preserving public order and safety, reducing crime and advancing public health policy?

We don’t think it will.

Forcing young children to have to shoot at existing club premises where the number of shooters using airguns will increase dramatically if the bill is passed, will place them in a more heavily lead contaminated environment, this would be counter to public health policies.

In addition Scottish Saltires MPC and Scottish Tetrathlon members are taught to be extremely safety conscious and look after their pistols responsibly as they are given training by Scottish Saltires MPC and Scottish PC Tetrathlon Range Officers. Scottish Saltires MPC and Scottish Tetrathlon work hand in hand in training at all levels. 90% of pentathletes start the sport of Modern Pentathlon through Scottish Tetrathlon.

14. Is there sufficient provision, or sufficient capacity to provide, suitable numbers of air weapons clubs across all areas of Scotland for use by registered air weapons owners/users?
There is not currently sufficient provision of air weapons clubs across all areas of Scotland. Many members of Scottish Saltires MPC are not in an area that can support a traditional club due to geography.

Pentathletes currently train with Scottish Saltires MPC and Scottish Tetrathlon in various locations and practice on private land without incurring the cost of being members of an Air Weapon Club. If the bill was passed and Scottish Saltires MPC and Scottish Tetrathlon (under the auspice of Pony Club) were to become an approved air weapon club which uses multiple premises across Scotland this would provide sufficient capacity. By virtue of Schedule 1 Exemption 1 Scottish Saltires MPC and Scottish Tetrathlon members would be able to train with Scottish Saltires MPC and Scottish Tetrathlon at various premises and on private land without requiring individual certificates. Schedule 1 Exemption 1 would need to be slightly amended to reflect this.

As many pentathletes are under 14 years of age Scottish Saltires MPC and Scottish Tetrathlon request that Schedule 1 Exemption 1 be amended to allow a parent/guardian/adult over 21 be allowed to supervise both training and competitions.

15. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for personal/recreational use?
If all pentathletes were to require an air weapons certificate it will add cost and bureaucracy to a sport/organisation which is well controlled and teaches young people responsibility and respect. If all pentathletes were required to go through the time consuming and costly process of both obtaining a licence and joining an additional club, they would be unlikely to take up the sport and may also choose to leave the sport.

If passed as is, pentathletes will not be able to repair their air weapons either at their own homes or during a competition without the presence of a registered firearms dealer. There are not sufficient firearms dealers to service this requirement and they will add additional cost to enter this sport. Scottish Saltires MPC has proved to be, along with Scottish Tetrathlon, the grass roots organisation for many young athletes who have gone on to become elite athletes in modern pentathlon.

They currently have 70 members regularly competing approx 75% are girls and 70% are under 14 years of age with Scottish Tetrathlon having 200 members.

Many Scots have gone on to compete at elite level, representing GB and part of the World Class program. Currently competing are 2012 World Champion and 2012 Olympian Mhairi Spence who is from Farr near Inverness, Inverurie's. Freyja Prentice, reserve athlete for London 2012, junior individual medal winner at World and European level. Joanna Muir from Castle Douglas spent time on top of the world junior ranking list this year. Aberdeen’s Eilidh Prise has won individual youth world and European medals and started 2014 on top of the youth world ranking. Maili McKenzie from Dumfries represented GB at junior world and European championships this year. We, Mhairi, Freyja, Jo and Eilidh are part of a group of 7 women on the GB world class program on Podium and Podium Potential which is clearly dominated by Scots women. We all started at grass roots level through Scottish Tetrathlon, moving onto Pentathlon as a result of the high standard of performance we showed in Scottish Tetrathlon.

Airgun shooting is a sport accessible to all ages and disabilities. This bill will deter people starting recreationally due to the beaurocracy and so stop the development of competitive shooters at all levels.

16. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those aged 14 to 17 who use air weapons?
The majority of Pentathletes are under 17 and as such the air weapons licensing systems would have a huge effect on them. If however Scottish Saltires MPC and Scottish Tetrathlon were allowed to become an approved air weapon club and therefore exempt from individual licences this would work for their organisation.

Each person will require an air weapons certificate which will add cost and bureaucracy.

They will not be able to repair their weapons without a registered firearms dealer, again adding cost and time. In addition as they are 14-17 they will probably be unable to drive and therefore find it difficult to access a firearms dealer especially in the more remote areas of Scotland.

18. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for competitive sporting purposes?

All competitors require a licence incurring cost and bureaucracy. This would require event and visitor permits. This would be totally untenable for our sport as we often have more than 20 visitors attending our competitions and training events which run monthly. Having tried and failed to get visitor permits to take across to Northern Ireland we know how difficult and impractical such a requirement is.

In 2013 the Irish Pentathlon team came over to Scotland to compete against Scottish Saltires. All competitors were youth’s and gained invaluable experience from competing at this level against another nation. The Scottish youths took a convincing win which gave the sport a boost and encouraged participation. Eilidh Prise competed at this event and is now an athlete recognised by GB as having olympic potential and is included in a program to support this. This event would be impossible under the current proposals in this bill.

If Scottish Saltires MPC and Scottish Tetrathlon were to become an approved air weapons club as requested previously, according to our interpretation of Schedule 1 section 1b(i) we would not require an event or visitor licence which would allow us to continue to run our competitions which are only open to and attended by our members.

19. Is it equitable for those applying for an air weapons certificate to pay a fee which cannot be refundable irrespective of whether a certificate is granted or not?

We do not agree that a fee should be payable for unsuccessful applications.

20. Will the air weapons licensing system have a positive or negative impact on other areas of the public sector in Scotland (eg. The work of local government, public agencies etc.)?

We think that the air weapons licensing system will have a negative effect on the public sector in Scotland. Given that the Firearms teams are already over stretched, resourcing this requirement for licensing of air weapons, clubs, permits will place unprecedented demand on already slim resources.

21. What, if any, might the unintended consequences of introducing an air weapons licensing system in Scotland be?

We believe that in making it difficult or costly to run events (run, shoot, swim, fence and ride) people will choose not to put themselves through the difficulty of obtaining an air weapons certificate, a visitors permit or joining an additional club, nor to pay the additional costs we will need to charge at competitions to take account of the cost of obtaining event permits. This will mean that grass roots organisation that currently has up to 200 children from 8-25 competing monthly will no longer exist. In the future we will not have the next generation of Modern Pentathlete or Air Pistol Olympians as they will have no foundation.

The risk of introducing a requirement for an airgun license may encourage applicants to go the full hog and apply for a shotgun/firearms certificate that will thereby increase the number of more high powered/more lethal weapon
22. Do you have any other comments to make on air weapons licensing aspects of the Bill?

We respect the bill and are keen to work with it. However as it is currently drafted it would be unworkable for us. If however Scottish Saltires MPC and Scottish Tetrathlon were to become an approved Air Weapons Club with multiple premises for training and competitions across Scotland and allowing all our members and visitors to use air weapons without holding individual certificates, as detailed above, this would allow them to work within the bill and the continuation of our sport along with the added benefit of a pipeline of elite athletes into Modern Pentathlon and the sport of Air Pistol Shooting to follow in our footsteps.

Allow Scottish Saltires MPC to become an approved air weapons club.

Allow all members within Scottish Saltires MPC NOT to require an air weapons certificate, but that Scottish Saltires MPC will hold the air weapons certificate for all weapons used.

Allow Scottish Saltires MPC Qualified Range Officer to repair, transfer or sell air weapons.

Allow anyone visiting from England, Northern Ireland or Wales to be exempt from visitors permits.

Do not limit the size of visiting groups.

1. Equalities, Climate Change and other Scottish Government objectives

You may respond to all the questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

8. Do you consider that the Bill has any implications for meeting Scotland’s climate change commitments? Please explain.

9. Do you consider that the Bill has any implications for meeting Scotland’s equality and/or human rights commitments? Please explain.

10. Do you consider that the Bill has any implications for preventative spending and/or public services reform? Please explain.

11. Do you consider that the Bill has any implications in relation to European Union issues? Please explain.

12. Do you have any other comments on the impact of the proposals contained in the Bill relation to Scottish Government objectives?
2. Air Weapons Licensing

You may respond to all the questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

13. In what ways will the creation of an air weapons licensing system in Scotland contribute to preserving public order and safety, reducing crime and advancing public health policy?

14. Is there sufficient provision, or sufficient capacity to provide, suitable numbers of air weapons clubs across all areas of Scotland for use by registered air weapons owners/ users?

15. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for personal/recreational use?
16. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those aged 14 to 17 who use air weapons?

18. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for competitive sporting purposes?

19. Is it equitable for those applying for an air weapons certificate to pay a fee which cannot be refundable irrespective of whether a certificate is granted or not?
20. Will the air weapons licensing system have a positive or negative impact on other areas of the public sector in Scotland (eg. The work of local government, public agencies etc.)?

21. What, if any, might the unintended consequences of introducing an air weapons licensing system in Scotland be?

22. Do you have any other comments to make on air weapons licensing aspects of the Bill?
3. General Licensing Issues

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

23. Is the current Scottish licensing regime, as set out in the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 and the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005, fit for purpose?

The Civic Government Licensing Framework remains resilient but could do with up-dating to make sure that the provisions purposively reflect modern requirements including means of communication, EU Services Directive and Data Protection.

The fact that the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 has undergone substantial changes since its commencement in 2009 and this Bill’s proposes to add other significant changes speak loudly that it remains not fit for purpose.

24. Should a licensing system seek to regulate individual behaviour or communities of space (eg. ‘city space’ etc.)?

Need these be mutually exclusive? Groups of individuals impact on city space. Is this relevant to a consultation on a specific Bill?

25. In what way should the licensing system in Scotland interact with the support the land use planning system, community planning and regeneration?
Licensing must relate to a well-defined activity and have a clear well-understood purpose. It should only adversely impact on other regimes when this is necessary but must always be recognised as independent of those other regimes and not subservient to them.

26. How does the licensing system in Scotland assist with the delivery of sustainable development and economic balanced areas?

Licensing should lead to benchmarking standards, improvement to service delivery and increased professionalism of staff.

27. In what way does the licensing system in Scotland support health and planning, addressing health inequalities and public health wellbeing outcomes?

Many licensing systems, for example Skin Piercing and Tattooing, have these elements at their core.
4. Alcohol Licensing

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

28. In what ways will the Bill’s provisions on alcohol licensing allow for reductions in crime and the preservation of public order?

The new offence of supplying alcohol to a child or young person outwith licensed premises is welcome but will the police and courts have the resources to prosecute to the extent required to provide deterrence?

The other side of this is that it is designed to address proxy purchases; it would also criminalise responsible parents introducing young persons to alcohol within a family picnic setting.

29. Are there any other measures which should be taken to assist in the reduction of crime and the preservation of public order?

Before considering new measures, there must be a proper assessment of the existing measures.

30. In what ways will the provisions in the Bill enhance the licensing objectives set out in the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005?

Adding Young Persons to Licensing Objective (e) will strengthen that objective.
31. In what ways will the re-introduction of the “fit and proper person” test assist with the implementation of the licensing objectives set out in the 2005 act?

In its present form, the link with the licensing objectives is likely to frustrate its re-introduction as there is already one and only one ground of refusal relating to the Licensing objectives: the logic of the leading case of Brightcrew would prevail—what exactly has this to do with the sale of alcohol?

An expert legal opinion is needed on whether the proposed linking of the objectives and the fit and proper test would bring the results heralded and fill the vacuum created by the 2005 Act or lead to confusion and frustration in practice.

The proposal that a revocation must flow from a Premises Licence Review or Personal Licence Review finding that the licence holder is not a fit and proper person is draconian. It also would be an unjustified restriction on the Board’s authority and decision making powers.

32. Have there been any unintended consequences arising from the 2005 Act, for example, in rural areas or the economic regeneration of areas?

One which will be addressed by the Bill is the mandatory premises licence review proposal for any conviction for a relevant or foreign offence by giving the Board discretion in stated circumstances.

One which will be created by the Bill is the negation of the refresher training requirements for a personal licence holder. The proposal to enable a personal licence holder to re-apply immediately on revocation of their licence because of their deliberate failure to comply with the refresher training requirements, would render refresher training nugatory by statutory approbation of failure to comply.

33. Which, if any, types of spent relevant offences should be required to be disclosed and what do you think the benefits of disclosure will be?
The Board will get full information on which to decide an application. Other decision making bodies can decide that justice cannot be done unless reference is made to spent convictions and alternatives to prosecution and the Bill would extend this to Boards. The procedure to consider whether spent conviction should be disclosed is pre-existing- Section 7 of the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act

34. Do you have any other comments to make on the alcohol licensing aspects of the Bill?

This has not been a helpful questionnaire: it would have been better to seek views on each of the proposals rather than ask very open ended, almost exam type questions. It is likely to be difficult to collate the responses cohesively.

The proposal to require the Board to forward a copy of a personal licence application to the LSO to report to the Board does not appear to be closing a gap. It would make perfect sense if the proposal required the Board to forward a copy of a premises licence application or an application for major variation of a premises licence. This is already supported by the LSO’s extensive powers in relation to inspection of premises to prepare an assessment on the impact on the Licensing Objectives.

If it is designed to assist with “renewal” of personal licences towards the end of their 10 year duration, this really merits detailed analysis. The present provisions are a legislative nightmare. The most obvious defect is that if the renewal application were processed within the current licence duration, the renewal application must be refused as the applicant already has a personal licence.

The Bill contains proposals to amend the time within which the “renewal” application can be lodged. This is tinkering with a cumbersome, immediately otiose process: there is still time for a proper assessment and introduction of an effective renewal process. At the same time there should be consideration of how the second 5 year refresher training requirement would fit within the renewal process.

The proposal that the Board can recognise its whole area as a locality for assessment of overprovision should be recognised as a fundamental development and not the addressing of a lacuna.

The change of the term of a licensing policy statement from 3 to 5 years and the link to the Local Government Election appear immediately attractive and practical. However, 5 years is a long time not to be seeking views of the community stakeholders and trade on the policy. In practical terms it is likely that supplementary statements would be necessary. Linking with the Local Government Election would draw the licensing policy statement within the political cycle following the election. Although appointment of Board Members must follow the setting up of the new council, it is generally recognised that a Board is politically neutral; this proposal may give the impression that this is not the case.

5. Taxi and Private Hire Car Licensing

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

35. What benefits should the licensing of taxis and private hire cars deliver for customers?

- Inclusivity, safety, affordability, customer care and effective a-b service along the shortest route.

36. In what ways do customers, providers of taxi/private hire car services and local authorities benefit from the two-tier licensing regime for taxis and private hire cars?

- It is argued that one system would lead to congestion due to increased number of vehicles within town centres.

37. The Government states that a radical overhaul of the current two-tier licensing regime would “clearly require a very high level of resource and would cause significant disruption for the trade, local authorities, the police and ultimately the travelling public”. What are your views on this and would the potential costs and disruptions outweigh any potential benefits of a unified system?

This matter has been the subject of detailed consultation, collation and analysis of responses within the framework of the Scottish Government’s Taxi and Private Hire Car Licensing: Proposals for Change Consultation. It has to be asked whether it is necessary or appropriate to consult on such wide terms at this late stage.

38. Do the changes made by sections 60 (overprovision of private hire car licences) and 61 (testing of private hire car drivers) of the Bill strike the right balance in terms of introducing greater consistency while maintaining justifiable differences?

Any answer must be speculative. This would be a complete innovation relating to a service which is now largely hidden: the customer calls the operator to arrange for the hire and agree the fare. Unless undertaking a hire or coming back from one the private hire vehicle need not be on the street. This contrasts with the visibility of taxis which are either on ranks or are seeking hails from the street.

Overprovision is a problem when operators are openly competing on price for fares.

39. Do you have any views on the section 62 provisions bringing vehicles contracted for exclusive use for 24 or more hours within the licensing regime for taxis and private hire cars, and should any exemptions be included in the Bill?

This is going to be a massive area of work: most operations under an exemption are likely to be well hidden: from where are they going to receive notice of the licensing requirements?

Any exemptions should be sorted out before the Bill is passed: it is recognised that Scottish Ministers would be empowered to create exemptions by Statutory Instrument but meantime those operating the hires would be breaking the law if they did not have the necessary licences.
6. Scrap Metal Dealer Licensing

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

40. Taking the proposals in sections 63 to 66 of the Bill together, how will they have the desired effect of strengthening the metal dealers' licensing regime to the extent that metal theft and related criminal activity is reduced?

Not the function of a consultee to justify proposals within the Bill. These proposals have followed detailed consultation and reflection on changes in England and Wales.

41. In your view, could the Bill be further strengthened in any way, for example, by including an accreditation scheme for metal dealers?

From where has the suggestion of “an accreditation scheme for metal dealers” arisen?

There is a need to look at how different licensing regimes interact: SEPA and licensing authority.

42. Removal of exemption warrant - do you wish to comment on the proposal to remove the exemption warrant system?

No
43. Removal of requirement to retain metal on-site - what impact will the proposal to remove the retention of metal requirement have on the enforcement of the licensing regime and prevention of criminal activities?

Not known

44. Forms of payment - what is your view on the proposal to go 'cashless' and is there merit in considering whether metal dealers could be allowed to operate using cash for only very small transactions, which could be limited to a certain number per month?

Introducing an exemption from the cashless system for small transactions would weaken the system: the cash exemption would be open to abuse by operators.
45. Forms of identification and record keeping:

In line with the Scrap Metal Dealers Act 2013, the Bill adds additional record keeping requirements to a metal dealer's licence including recording the means by which a seller's name and address was verified and retaining a copy of the document, and the method of payment and a copy of the payment document. The Bill will also require a metal dealer to record information in books with serially numbered pages or by means of an electronic device, and to keep separate records at each place of business. Such information and documents are to be kept for three rather than the current two years.

How important is it that the record keeping requirements reflect those in the Scrap Metal Dealers Act 2013, and do you agree with the Scottish Government that the proposed record keeping requirements are not unduly burdensome?

What is the information from England and Wales about the effectiveness of the 2013 Act requirements?
46. Mandatory and discretionary licensing requirements:

The Scottish Ministers can impose mandatory licensing requirements, such as those included in the Bill relating to record keeping and the identification of customers. In addition, local authorities can also attach discretionary requirements to licences in their areas.

Does the Bill get the balance right between mandatory and discretionary licensing requirements? Should the Bill include other mandatory conditions for obtaining a metal dealer’s licence, such as installing CCTV at metal dealers’ premises or in relation to labelling of metal and ‘forensic coding’?

Mandatory conditions allow a baseline and local conditions allow authorities to take into account specific local concerns and circumstances.
7. Civic Licensing – Theatre Licensing

You may respond to all the questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

47. Will there be any impacts during the transitional period between ending the current theatre licence and starting the public entertainment licence?

The proposal to abolish mandatory licensing for theatres should be recognised as such. Only if licensing authorities are satisfied that local licensing, under PEL, is necessary should their PEL Resolution be extended to cover theatres or certain specification of theatres. This should not be perceived as merely a shift of theatre licensing to PEL.

48. Are there additional costs or resource implications on theatres or licensing authorities?
It is to be noted that the inference that theatres would likely be covered by a Public Entertainment Licence, fails to appreciate fully that theatre licensing is presently mandatory whereas it is up to each licensing authority to determine whether to license places of public entertainment and, if so, what type of entertainment to cover.

The licensing authority will require information upon which to decide whether there is a need to license theatres as places of public entertainment. The fact that mandatory licensing of theatres has been abolished will be a very strong indicator, perhaps even a starting point, that licensing of theatres under PEL is not necessary.

For authorities not licensing places of public entertainment any consultation and decision making process under the 1982 Act is likely to be substantial and detailed.

For those presently with PEL, the process may be less detailed but will still include significant press publication fees for statutory notices if the authority’s resolution is to be widened to include theatres.

Many local theatres are amateur, community based initiative who will not welcome any increase in fees-which must be extremely likely.

49. How should licensing authorities integrate their current fee charging structure into their public entertainment regime?

Local decision taking into account local circumstances.

8. Civic Licensing – Sexual Entertainment Venues
50. What are the consequences of operating the new licensing regime using the definitions set out at section 68 of the Bill?

- 'sexual entertainment venue'
- 'audience'
- 'financial gain'
- 'organiser'
- 'premises'
- 'sexual entertainment', and
- 'display of nudity'

This has been the subject of detailed consultation with responses on these issues having been collated and analysed.

51. The Bill specifies that a venue hosting sexual entertainment on three occasions or less within a 12 month period would not be treated as a sexual entertainment venue: does this have any unintended consequences?

Policing springs to mind.

52. Local licensing authorities will be able to set the number of sexual entertainment venues in their area to below the existing level, or zero: are there any advantages or disadvantages to this approach?
If Scottish Ministers believe that this activity should be prohibited as exploitation then they should legislate to ban it and not merely allow a licensing authority a tortuous process to introduce the licensing of this activity and then effectively to ban it by agreeing a zero level.

53. The Bill relies mainly on the existing licensing regime for sex shops as set out in section 44 and Schedule 2 of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 (application, notification, objections and representations, revocation of licences etc., enforcement and appeals): is this mechanism adequate for the licensing of sexual entertainment venues - if not, please explain why?

There should be a separate schedule.

54. Are there any barriers to licensing authorities operating the new licensing regime?

As it will be a decision of the licensing authority whether to license Sexual Entertainment Venues, this will involves detailed consultation, Committee and officer time and press publication fees for statutory notices and Committee and officer time in preparing and issuing a policy on the appropriate number of SEVs for its area, which limit may be zero.

It is extremely unlikely that an authority would receive an application: most of the wasted effort would be avoided by making it a mandatory licensed activity.
55. Civic Licensing

Do you have any other comments to make on the civic licensing aspects of the Bill?

No further views.

4. Taxi and Private Hire Car Licensing

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

35. What benefits should the licensing of taxis and private hire cars deliver for customers?

The Office of Fair Trading (OFT) conducted a market study in 2003 on the regulatory framework affecting licensed taxi and private hire vehicles (PHVs) across the UK. The report found that consumers value quality and safety controls for vehicles and drivers, and licensing addresses these issues which might be difficult for them to judge when hiring a vehicle (for example the technical safety of the vehicle and the competence of the driver). Quality and safety controls and licensing are therefore necessary to ensure passenger safety and security.

However, using licensing to limit the number of new taxis and PHVs may lead to an increased demand for illegal taxis where neither the driver nor the vehicle has been subject to appropriate quality and safety checks. We believe this could expose consumers to greater safety threats. Limited supply of taxis could also contribute to difficulties faced by the police in clearing city centres or public places in the evenings.

In 2003 the OFT said that licensing authorities should consider the needs of consumers and the effect of the proposed specifications on the availability of taxis and PHVs. Limiting the number of PHVs should be a last resort and licensing authorities should try to ensure that any quality and safety specifications do not go beyond what is required to achieve this policy aim.

36. In what ways do customers, providers of taxi/private hire car services and local authorities benefit from the two-tier licensing regime for taxis and private hire cars?
In the 2003 report the OFT found that the two tier system of taxis and PHVs worked well and benefited both consumers and licensing authorities. The main benefits being:

- It provides a degree of choice for the consumer in terms of vehicle type. This is particularly important for disabled and older consumers who will often require a particular type of vehicle, which is not necessarily the traditional, wheelchair accessible taxi.

- It increases choice and value for money for consumers living close to administrative borders. Taxis can take passengers from within their licensed area to other licensing authorities but can’t accept bookings for passengers or ply for hire outside the area in which they are licensed. PHVs, on the other hand, can take passengers from any point to any other providing the PHV driver, vehicle and operator are licensed in the same area.

- It allows regulations to be targeted at the parts of the market where they are needed, without disrupting the market in sectors where such regulation is unnecessary. For example separate regulations for vehicles that only work in the phone booked or online sector of the market, where OFT research has shown competition and consumer protection issues are less of a problem, allow these vehicles to be subject to less regulation. In contrast, taxis plying on the street and at ranks, where there is more need to protect consumers, are subject to much tighter regulations. The reduced amount of regulation benefits both PHV providers and licensing authorities.

- It also provides for greater competition and choice, on both quality and price, in the telephone and online markets, and to a lesser extent, between rank/hail and telephone markets. Competition encourages taxi and PHV drivers to offer better value for money and better quality service to consumers.

The OFT did find that there are some drawbacks of the two tier system. The main issue being that consumers can find it hard to tell the difference between taxis and PHVs. This can mean that consumers may not be aware what regulation applies to the vehicle they are travelling in. It may be that this lack of consumer awareness impedes monitoring and enforcement in circumstances where some PHV operators may be illegally plying for hire. For example, in circumstances where taxis may not be able to meet all of consumer demand at certain peak times.
37. The Government states that a radical overhaul of the current two-tier licensing regime would “clearly require a very high level of resource and would cause significant disruption for the trade, local authorities, the police and ultimately the travelling public”. What are your views on this and would the potential costs and disruptions outweigh any potential benefits of a unified system?

The CMA’s view is that the current regime is fit for purpose and we have not seen any evidence that suggests that consumers are disadvantaged by it. A new system of licensing will require initial start-up costs which could be expected to be high and also ongoing costs to PHVs. Introducing these costs may impact on the supply of PHVs in a locality due to reduced incentives that result from lower profits.

In relation to Section 60 of the Bill we believe that the market works better without quantity restrictions on taxis and PHVs. The OFT’s market study found that the licensed taxi and PHV market is already highly regulated and that the overall quality of taxi services could be enhanced by reducing aspects of the regulatory framework. We found that quantity restrictions can actually have an adverse impact on both choice and price for consumers. The long term benefit to society of lifting quantity restrictions, in terms of lower waiting times, improved safety and lower costs of market entry outweigh the potential drawbacks. This would also introduce greater consistency between the two forms of transport.

We consider that the current two-tier system, provided it differentiates between the two regulatory regimes for taxis and PHVs on objective and proportionate criteria, is fit for purpose. The CMA recognises and understands that there are circumstances where it will be appropriate to have a quantity restriction for taxis, for example when there are concerns about public safety, congestion or pollution. We have not seen any objective evidence that suggests that similar circumstances might apply in respect of PHVs, given that they are demand-responsive. Without such evidence, it is difficult to see how local licensing authorities will be able to determine whether there is over-provision of PHVs in their areas. Private hire cars can only be pre-booked and therefore demand is not as easily measured in the same way as with taxis. Consideration will need to be given to ensuring that any policy on overprovision of PHVs is robust against challenge, given the difficult task of determining whether this is, in reality, causing actual consumer detriment. Local licensing authorities, in our view, would be advised to consider cautiously representations made by competitors of potential new entrants to the taxi/PHV market in this regard. We understand that the Scottish Government will be producing guidance to assist local licensing authorities. We believe that licensing authorities should be made to consider whether introducing licensing restrictions for PHVs are the most appropriate method of achieving the policy objective, and, for any given locality, whether quantity restriction is the most appropriate and proportionate response.

We would strongly encourage the Scottish Government to consider these points when preparing guidance for licensing authorities on measuring over provision and seek advice from the CMA on the potential risks of restricted competition and poorer outcomes for consumers.

We believe setting particular requirements for driver licensing including a geographical knowledge test can be a good way for licensing authorities to manage driver quality directly. Consumers are likely to expect both PHV and taxi drivers to have a level of geographical knowledge. When hiring a taxi or PHV they are unable to judge whether a driver has a good geographical knowledge or not. A test is an effective way of establishing a driver’s level of knowledge. However, any tests need to be based on clear, objective and transparent criteria and be proportionate.
39. Do you have any views on the section 62 provisions bringing vehicles contracted for exclusive use for 24 or more hours within the licensing regime for taxis and private hire cars, and should any exemptions be included in the Bill?

The licensing of hire cars being used on contract for 24 hours or more was not covered in the OFT’s 2003 Market Study. However, updating licensing conditions to ensure that there is consistency across local authority areas will help to create a ‘level playing field’ across the sector. This would ensure that competition is not distorted. We understand that one of the areas this will cover is voluntary transport arrangements that are run as a charitable activity. The provisions of competition law can also apply to operations that are run a not for profit basis.

6. Scrap Metal Dealer Licensing

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

40. Taking the proposals in sections 63 to 66 of the Bill together, how will they have the desired effect of strengthening the metal dealers’ licensing regime to the extent that metal theft and related criminal activity is reduced?

We believe that the new measures which include steps to tighten record keeping and customer identification requirements are positive. Of upmost importance, is the new prohibition which will prevent a dealer from paying for metal in cash. We opine that this will remove the incentive of ready cash for a potential metal thief as well as making it easier to identify any persons involved in the selling of metal.

41. In your view, could the Bill be further strengthened in any way, for example, by including an accreditation scheme for metal dealers?
Penalty

We consider that the maximum penalty of £5000 for an offence is disproportionate given the implications that the theft of metal can cause. Whilst we do appreciate this is the maximum level afforded by the Criminal Procedures (Scotland) Act 1995 for statutory offences, we understand that the limit for common law offences tried summarily are in fact higher. It is our position that an increase in maximum penalty is required to have any meaningful impact. We believe that the legislation must allow for the application of the full sentencing powers available to the courts, including the additional sentencing powers available under the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 and the Proceeds of Crime (Scotland) Act 1995 than are currently provided for in the bill in order to present a more effective deterrent to offenders. Another area which could be improved is with regards to repeat offenders as the current bill does not deal with harsher penalties for such offenders.

Identity

The Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 proposed section 33B (5)(c) says that a dealer must “keep a copy of any document produced by a person to verify that person’s name and address”. We believe that there should be a requirement placed on a dealer to verify the identity of a person supplying or receiving metal for recycling.

If such a requirement is introduced, it is essential that the person whose identity is to be verified, and the form of acceptable documents, is set out clearly and unambiguously. This would be most easily achieved by a photographic identification which we believe should be a mandatory requirement of the bill.
We propose that there may be an opportunity to use credit card style credentials with photographs & authorisations. This could be similar to Energy & Utility Skills register cards or Street Works qualifications register. This would allow for the tracking of holders and location of where the scrap is being disposed of. Ultimately, this would be aligned to a register of fixed base & Itinerant Scrap Metal Dealers (SMD’s) countywide which would include information on volumes & types of scrap collated. This would permit the authorities / public to ask who is taking their scrap away with a fee or not involved to satisfy themselves of the legitimacy of the itinerate scrap dealer.

Metal dealer definition

The Bill’s definitions of a metal dealer and an itinerant metal dealer in the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 section 37 are not changed by the new Bill and require a person both to buy and to sell metal before they qualify. One significant implication is that a typical itinerant who collects from households without making payment for the items or materials he collects would not require a licence, and would thus remain outside the scope of the Bill. Furthermore, there is scope for a person collecting general waste and other materials, but actually earning a substantial proportion of his income from separating out and selling scrap metal, to escape the licensing regime. Similarly, skip hire operators and demolition contractors generating a substantial amount of their revenue from sale of scrap metal could escape the definition and need for licensing.

We note that the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 section 37(2) allows the ability to smelt etc. This should result in an enhanced set of records to be kept and verified as to who and where materials came from and payments to what registered licence holder(s). This would also improve traceability of the raw materials. The list of Scrap Metal Dealers as already known under the metal theft group we are part of already has an established RAG (Red, Amber & Green) flag system which could be utilised. Should a person engaged in this scrap process not be VAT registered, it would seem logical to require them to pay tax of some description through either a business or home address which can be verified.

Licences

The Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 section 5(4) allows a person who may be carrying on an activity which requires licensing five days to produce the licence.

By placing an obligation on metal dealers to display copies of their licence on their premises, and for itinerant metal collectors to display their license/s on their collection vehicles, this may assist enforcement agencies in identifying illegal dealers.
42. Removal of exemption warrant - do you wish to comment on the proposal to remove the exemption warrant system?

N/A

43. Removal of requirement to retain metal on-site - what impact will the proposal to remove the retention of metal requirement have on the enforcement of the licensing regime and prevention of criminal activities?

N/A

44. Forms of payment - what is your view on the proposal to go 'cashless' and is there merit in considering whether metal dealers could be allowed to operate using cash for only very small transactions, which could be limited to a certain number per month?
Cash trading

We welcome measures that will deter metal theft by removing opportunities for the anonymous disposal of stolen material for cash.

Methods of payment

Electronic transfer definitions and associated record-keeping requirements are poorly defined. As a specific example, ‘payment in kind’ is not addressed.

Payment mechanisms that would be permitted under the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 proposed section 33A are unclear. For example, in proposed section 33A (2)(a) there is no restriction on the person to whom a non-transferrable cheque may be made out; it does not have to be the seller or any person whose identity has been verified.

Furthermore, proposed section 33A(2)(b) fails to link the seller and payee for electronic transfers. It also does not define “account”, nor does it set any parameters for traceability of transfer between an account and the seller.

One of the schemes currently employed in England & Wales is the setting up of cheque cashing facilities by scrap metal dealers “next door” to their existing traditional operations. This allows the thieves to potentially accept a cheque and then cash it almost immediately without question. We do not believe that this issue is addressed in this bill.

Scrap Metal Dealers or Itinerate Scrap Metal Dealers who cannot supply a card or licence to register the scrap against should automatically default and therefore no payment should be made to them. This would also encourage the Itinerate Scrap Dealer to register, and the receiving Scrap Metal Dealer to log what they have received against a registered person. This will result in the payment being made to a known registered licence holder. Taxation should be a matter for the proper authorities.
45. Forms of identification and record keeping:

In line with the Scrap Metal Dealers Act 2013, the Bill adds additional record keeping requirements to a metal dealer's licence including recording the means by which a seller's name and address was verified and retaining a copy of the document, and the method of payment and a copy of the payment document. The Bill will also require a metal dealer to record information in books with serially numbered pages or by means of an electronic device, and to keep separate records at each place of business. Such information and documents are to be kept for three rather than the current two years.

How important is it that the record keeping requirements reflect those in the Scrap Metal Dealers Act 2013, and do you agree with the Scottish Government that the proposed record keeping requirements are not unduly burdensome?

Record keeping requirements are pragmatic and may potentially be utilised as evidence by the authorities should a case be raised against an appellant.
46. Mandatory and discretionary licensing requirements:

The Scottish Ministers can impose mandatory licensing requirements, such as those included in the Bill relating to record keeping and the identification of customers. In addition, local authorities can also attach discretionary requirements to licences in their areas.

Does the Bill get the balance right between mandatory and discretionary licensing requirements? Should the Bill include other mandatory conditions for obtaining a metal dealer’s licence, such as installing CCTV at metal dealers’ premises or in relation to labelling of metal and ‘forensic coding’?

With the exception of our belief that there should be a requirement placed on a dealer to verify the identity of a person supplying or receiving metal for recycling; any further obligations should be discretionary.

Should the requirement to provide photographic evidence not be stipulated in the final bill; we would be keen to see CCTV as an alternative and a mandatory requirement.

1. Equalities, Climate Change and other Scottish Government objectives

You may respond to all the questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

8. Do you consider that the Bill has any implications for meeting Scotland’s climate change commitments? Please explain.

No

9. Do you consider that the Bill has any implications for meeting Scotland’s equality and/or human rights commitments? Please explain.

With respect to equality we do feel that the proposed legislation unfairly discriminates against young people. Those aged 14 or over will be expected to pay the same amount for a certificate as those over 18, but for a shorter duration.

10. Do you consider that the Bill has any implications for preventative spending and/or public services reform? Please explain.

No
11. Do you consider that the Bill has any implications in relation to European Union issues? Please explain.

No

12. Do you have any other comments on the impact of the proposals contained in the Bill relation to Scottish Government objectives?

No
2. Air Weapons Licensing

You may respond to all the questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

13. In what ways will the creation of an air weapons licensing system in Scotland contribute to preserving public order and safety, reducing crime and advancing public health policy?

This air weapons licensing system is unlikely to contribute to preserving public order and safety, or reduce crime. The reason that we state this is due to the fact that the only people who will submit themselves to the licensing system will be those who are already law-abiding. Those who are not law-abiding will not apply for a licence and will either dispose of their air weapon (that could further compromise public order and safety) or continue to keep it illegally. This point is accepted by Scottish Government in their response to this Committee on the 1st September 2014 (Q5).

Offences involving firearms, and specifically air weapons, are at their lowest level for many years. Creating new legislation that affects the possession and use of an estimated 500,000 air weapons in Scotland will inevitably result in an increase in reported crime, even if an offence has been committed unintentionally.

The creation of this air weapons licensing system will not affect public health policy.

14. Is there sufficient provision, or sufficient capacity to provide, suitable numbers of air weapons clubs across all areas of Scotland for use by registered air weapons owners/ users?
It is not known if there is sufficient provision or capacity of air weapons clubs across all areas of Scotland. In July this year there were 138 approved rifle clubs in Scotland. It is not known how many of these clubs currently have the facilities for air weapon shooting or how many currently unapproved air weapon clubs there are. SARPA, in their submission, estimate that no more than 5% of air weapon users are currently involved in clubs.

Scottish Government stated on 1st September 2014 (Q10) that they “will work with stakeholders to encourage the development of a network of air weapon clubs across Scotland”. We look forward to being involved in this initiative but fear that it will be difficult to establish such a network without commitment and funding, especially if the requirements for approval are seen as onerous.

15. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for personal/recreational use?

Those who currently use air weapons for personal/recreational use do so without any need for a licence. Many chose to use air weapons rather than other firearms for this reason. In addition, they are not exposed to the cost of a licence or to any restrictive conditions placed on a licence. They do, however, have to act within the law and ensure that they only shoot on land over which they have permission.

The air weapons licensing system will introduce the need for a licence, the cost associated with this and the real possibility that, for many, their “good reason” would not be seen as adequate. (We refer here to the references in the Policy Memorandum and Explanatory Notes to the presumption against informal target shooting in gardens – “plinking”.) Consequently a significant number of licence applicants (or potential applicants) could be deprived of their sport.

It has already been noted by BASC that a number of hitherto exclusively air weapon shooters have now applied for either a Shotgun Certificate or a Firearms Certificate. They have concluded that if they need to have a certificate they might as well get one for a more powerful firearm and still be able to enjoy their air weapons shooting for free, for a period of up to five years.

16. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those aged 14 to 17 who use air weapons?
Many young people may be disinclined to apply for or pay for an air weapon licence and therefore lose their opportunity to enjoy their sport. Their parents may take a similar view.

A number of young people who do apply for a licence will be directly affected by the restriction on live quarry shooting being conditional upon protecting livestock, crops etc. This would prevent them from undertaking many aspects of essential pest control for conservation reasons (Section 7 (5) (d)).

We do not understand why a certificate granted to a person under the age of 18 will expire when that person reaches the age of 18. (Section 8 (1) (a)) This effectively makes a certificate for a young person proportionately more expensive than one for an adult and may lead to a delayed application, waiting until the person reaches the age of 18. This appears to us to contravene the principles of equality.

Professional use will be affected by requiring all who use air weapons to be licenced. This may have a minimal effect on pest controllers who have to be licenced for many other activities, such as the use of poisons, but it will be another financial burden on predominantly small businesses. Those based out with Scotland but operating in Scotland will have the additional burden of applying for a Visitor Permit at least annually, unless a long-term visitor’s permit is introduced.

Professional use would also apply to the many people who use air weapons for the humane dispatch of captured pests species, such as rats, grey squirrels, mink etc. Many of these individuals are either employed by conservation agencies or NGOs and would face the cost of a licence just to allow the occasional use for this purpose.

It is not known how many tourists come to Scotland to participate in air weapon hunting but it is thought to be less than those who come for hunting with either a rifle or shotgun. However, if they came from England or Wales they would have to apply for a Visitor Permit for an air weapon but not for a rifle or shotgun.

18. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for competitive sporting purposes?
Those involved in competitive air weapon sports and residing in Scotland will inevitably apply for and hopefully receive their air weapons licence that will then allow them to both train and compete as before.

Those wishing to come to Scotland will require a visitor’s permit and this may well act as a disincentive to both individuals and groups, especially if an application has to be made each year, or more often. We are aware that there have been delays and frustrations over recent years with respect to visitor permits for shotguns and rifles. In such situations the visiting sportsman or woman can borrow a firearm, such as an “estate rifle”, and still participate. However, few air weapon competitors would be able to compete if they did not have their own rifle or pistol due to the fact that most are customised for their own particular requirements.

19. Is it equitable for those applying for an air weapons certificate to pay a fee which cannot be refundable irrespective of whether a certificate is granted or not?

BASC does not think that it is equitable that the fee is charged even for an unsuccessful application. Each person applying is doing so to remain law-abiding and it is wrong to financially penalise them if their application is rejected. Given that it is anticipated that the majority of applications will be dealt with at a civilian/administrative level in just over one hour of processing time there will inevitably be mistakes based, for example, of failure to recognise good reason. It is fundamentally wrong to financially penalise a person for trying to do the right thing.

Again, this could act as encouragement to apply for a Shot Gun or Firearms Certificate instead.

20. Will the air weapons licensing system have a positive or negative impact on other areas of the public sector in Scotland (eg. The work of local government, public agencies etc.)?
While the air weapons licensing system will not affect many areas of the public sector it will affect Police Scotland. BASC has considered the figures in the Financial Memorandum. Our main concerns relate to the “Processing Costs” outlined from Para. 66 onwards. An assumption is made that “extensive, detailed background checks and home visits will be necessary only in a very small proportion of cases”. The assumption is made that 98% of applications will only require 1.2 hours of processing by administrative staff, with no enquiry officer involvement. Given that there is a “good reason” requirement for obtaining an air weapon certificate we find it hard to believe that 98% of those applying for a certificate will be able to provide a “good reason” that will be processed (and confirmed) within 1.2 hours and will not require enquiry officer investigation.

It is assumed that the majority of air weapon owners use them for informal target shooting in their garden and we note that the Policy Memorandum states (para. 64) “Ministers do not believe that target shooting in such an environment (in gardens or other urban of highly populated settings) should generally be acceptable unless the applicant can satisfy the Chief Constable as to the safety and other arrangements in place to ensure that shooting can be carried out without risk to the public”. With this in mind we feel that a large number, possibly 50% of applications, will give such informal target shooting as their good reason. We do not know what decision-based mechanism could be used to determine whether this would be acceptable or not without enquiry officer involvement and/or a home visit. Instead of 2% of applications requiring “detailed process incl. home visit” we feel that this would be nearer to 50%. This would result in the average cost of each application rising to £118.90, an increase of almost 40%.

This would mean that the cost, spread over five years, for 10,000 applications would be £1,189,000 and for 30,000 applications £3,567,000. This will have a considerable negative impact.

The only other public agency that may be affected is SNH, which does employ staff who require air weapons for humane dispatch purposes.

21. What, if any, might the unintended consequences of introducing an air weapons licensing system in Scotland be?
The requirement to obtain an air weapon certificate will encourage many people to get rid of their air weapon. Some will be surrendered, some will be sold but many could be otherwise disposed of, leading to a possible increase in offences involving air weapons in the coming years.

The requirement to obtain an air weapon certificate may be the incentive for many to decide to apply for a shot gun or firearms certificate instead. The process may be easier (there is no need for good reason for a shot gun certificate and no conditions can be attached, for example) and possibly cheaper, and if the application is unsuccessful the fee will be returned.

22. Do you have any other comments to make on air weapons licensing aspects of the Bill?

The Bill refers to applicants being required to demonstrate “good reason”. This is defined as “pest control, sporting target shooting, or being a collector” in the Explanatory Notes (Sect. 18). However, the Policy Memorandum is clear that Ministers do not believe that “plinking” in gardens “should generally be acceptable”. This is the most common use for air weapons in Scotland. Many applications for an air weapon certificate could therefore be rejected due to advice in the Policy Memorandum rather than what is in the Bill itself. This will deprive a large number of air weapon shooters of their sport.

50. What are the consequences of operating the new licensing regime using the definitions set out at section 68 of the Bill?

- 'sexual entertainment venue'
- 'audience'
- 'financial gain'
- 'organiser'
- 'premises'
- 'sexual entertainment', and
- 'display of nudity'

The Scottish Women’s Convention (SWC) welcomes the definitions put forward under s68 of the proposed Bill. The SWC are particularly pleased that ‘audience’ includes an audience of one. This definition will ensure that men who purchase private dances in sexual entertainment venues, whereby they are in a room alone with a woman, are subject to licensing conditions.

Many clubs state that they have ‘no touching’ rules, however there is no enforcement of these either by the club individually or under licensing conditions as they stand. It is hoped that under a new licensing regime, this type of rule will be enforceable and women will not be subject to the abuse they face at the moment. Regulation is necessary as many customers assume that dancers will agree to provide sexual services.

51. The Bill specifies that a venue hosting sexual entertainment on three occasions or less within a 12 month period would not be treated as a sexual entertainment venue: does this have any unintended consequences?
The SWC has real concerns that this loophole could be exploited. Not considering a venue hosting sexual entertainment on three occasions or less within a 12 month period as a sexual entertainment venue could lead the organiser (again, as defined under s.68 of the Bill) to provide sexual entertainment in a number of other venues which are not covered by licensing laws. This could, in effect, lead to an organiser using several venues throughout a Local Authority to provide sexual entertainment, with each venue being used no more than three times, and all the while avoiding being subject to specific sexual entertainment licensing. The possibility of this happening seems to be counter-productive to the strong definitions outlined in the Bill and the aim of the legislation overall.

52. Local licensing authorities will be able to set the number of sexual entertainment venues in their area to below the existing level, or zero: are there any advantages or disadvantages to this approach?

One of the main advantages to this proposal is the control that it would give to Local Authorities. Areas that do not want to have any sexual entertainment venues will be able to make that quite clear. This, in turn, will send a clear message that the commercial sexual exploitation of women is not something they want as part of their community.

Conversely, allowing each Local Authority to set the number of sexual entertainment venues in their area could lead to inconsistency throughout the country. The activities which go on in sexual entertainment venues constitute commercial sexual exploitation. The Scottish Government considers commercial sexual exploitation as a form of Violence Against Women (VAW); however it is giving individual Local Authorities the opportunity to decide whether it wants to have sexual entertainment venues (such as lap dancing clubs) in their areas, as opposed to objecting to them overall. This approach seems to go against not only the ethos of the Scottish Government, but also the amount of work which has been done in the field of VAW towards prevention and eradication of this blight on society.

Lap dancing and strip clubs are fundamental examples of gender inequality. This type of ‘entertainment’ is a euphemism for commercial sexual exploitation and normalises activities which often disguise more abusive, controlling and demeaning behaviour towards women. Most women undertake work in these types of venues because of poverty and lack of choice. Lap dancing portrays women’s bodies and their sexuality as their most important qualities as valued by men.

While moves to create more regulation are important, a shift towards a zero tolerance approach to such venues would be welcomed. It is vital that there is consistency throughout Scotland in order to avoid exploitation of the law.
53. The Bill relies mainly on the existing licensing regime for sex shops as set out in section 44 and Schedule 2 of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 (application, notification, objections and representations, revocation of licences etc., enforcement and appeals): is this mechanism adequate for the licensing of sexual entertainment venues - if not, please explain why?

54. Are there any barriers to licensing authorities operating the new licensing regime?

55. Civic Licensing

35. What benefits should the licensing of taxis and private hire cars deliver for customers?

36. In what ways do customers, providers of taxi/private hire car services and local authorities benefit from the two-tier licensing regime for taxis and private hire cars?

37. The Government states that a radical overhaul of the current two-tier licensing regime would “clearly require a very high level of resource and would cause significant disruption for the trade, local authorities, the police and ultimately the travelling public”. What are your views on this and would the potential costs and disruptions outweigh any potential benefits of a unified system?
38. Do the changes made by sections 60 (overprovision of private hire car licences) and 61 (testing of private hire car drivers) of the Bill strike the right balance in terms of introducing greater consistency while maintaining justifiable differences?

40. Taking the proposals in sections 63 to 66 of the Bill together, how will they have the desired effect of strengthening the metal dealers' licensing regime to the extent that metal theft and related criminal activity is reduced?

Energy Networks Association (ENA) represents the “wires and pipes” transmission and distribution network operators for gas and electricity in the UK and Ireland.

ENA led the campaign in England and Wales for a change to the Scrap Metal Dealers Act and have lobbied for similar legislation in Scotland and Northern Ireland. We support the broad objectives of the Bill and welcome the Scottish Government’s commitment to amending the law in this area.

ENA has also maintained an ongoing lobbying campaign as organisers of the Westminster Parliament All-Party Group on Combating Metal Theft which brings together Network Rail and BT as well as the War Memorials Trust, the Church and a range of other organisations affected.

Metal theft is a serious problem for electricity and gas network operators. Its cost cannot just be counted in monetary terms or even the impact it has on people’s energy supplies but also the serious danger it exposes the public to. That is why we have campaigned for legislative change. It is clear that if you remove the means of disposal of stolen metal you impact on the crime itself.

This has been illustrated in England and Wales. According to figures from the Health and Safety Executive, in the year following the introduction of the Scrap Metal Dealers Act incidents of theft and interference with electricity network assets fell by 25%. Over the same year incidents of theft and interference in Scotland increased by 62%. We believe this illustrates that England and Wales have exported the thieves to Scotland. That is why it is vital that the legislation is passed as quickly as possible.

The English and Welsh scrap metal industry has almost completely reformed its practises as a result of the legislation and the main trade association for the industry, the British Metals Recycling Association has strongly welcomed the legislation and believes it has removed the rogue element and cleaned up the sector.
41. In your view, could the Bill be further strengthened in any way, for example, by including an accreditation scheme for metal dealers?
Yes we believe there are and these are set out below. The comments below address not only the content of the Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill, but also the consequences of leaving certain other elements of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 (“CGSA”) unamended.

Production of licences
There is no requirement for a metal dealer or itinerant metal dealer to display a copy of a licence within the Bill. CGSA S5(4) allows a person who may be carrying on an activity which requires licensing five days to produce the licence. We believe it is essential to place an obligation on metal dealers to display copies of their licence on their premises, and for itinerant metal collectors to display their license/s on their collection vehicles. This will ensure effective enforcement of the new regime.

Verification of identity
CGSA (as amended) S33B(5)(c) says that a dealer must “keep a copy of any document produced by a person to verify that person’s name and address”. However, there is no requirement placed on a dealer to verify the identity of a person supplying or receiving metal for recycling. We believe that this is essential and the form of acceptable documents, is set out clearly and unambiguously.

Metal dealer definition
The Bill’s definitions of a metal dealer and an itinerant metal dealer in the CGSA S37 are not changed by the new Bill and require a person both to buy and to sell metal before they qualify.

One significant implication is that a typical itinerant who collects from households without making payment for the items or materials he collects would not require a licence, and would thus remain outside the scope of the Bill. Furthermore, there is scope for a person collecting general waste and other materials, but actually earning a substantial proportion of his income from separating out and selling scrap metal, to escape the licensing regime. Similarly, skip hire operators and demolition contractors generating a substantial amount of their revenue from sale of scrap metal could escape the definition and need for licensing. Furthermore car breakers are not covered by the definition, a situation exacerbated by the absence of a definition of scrap.

We believe that the Bill should be amended to provide exemptions for manufacturers disposing of their own surplus materials or offcuts. A clear and comprehensive definition of metal dealer, to include vehicle dismantlers and other businesses generating a significant proportion of their income from sale of scrap metal is essential.
42. Removal of exemption warrant - do you wish to comment on the proposal to remove the exemption warrant system?

43. Removal of requirement to retain metal on-site - what impact will the proposal to remove the retention of metal requirement have on the enforcement of the licensing regime and prevention of criminal activities?

44. Forms of payment - what is your view on the proposal to go 'cashless' and is there merit in considering whether metal dealers could be allowed to operate using cash for only very small transactions, which could be limited to a certain number per month?
We strongly support the introduction of a cashless regime. This has undoubtedly had a very positive effect in England and Wales, not least in helping to radically reform the sector. However, we believe there are elements of the payment process that could be much better defined.

Electronic transfer definitions and associated record-keeping requirements are very poorly defined. Payment in kind is not addressed.

A notable weakness of the regime in England and Wales is a poor definition of acceptable payment methods. The payment mechanisms that would be permitted under the CGSA (as amended) S33A are equally unclear. For example, in S33A(2)(a) there is no restriction on the person to whom a non-transferrable cheque may be made out; it does not have to be the seller or any person whose identity has been verified (if indeed there is any requirement for verification of any person’s identity. Furthermore, S33A(2)(b) not only fails to link the seller and payee for electronic transfers, it also does not define “account”, nor does it set any parameters for traceability of transfer between an account and the seller.

45. Forms of identification and record keeping:

In line with the Scrap Metal Dealers Act 2013, the Bill adds additional record keeping requirements to a metal dealer’s licence including recording the means by which a seller’s name and address was verified and retaining a copy of the document, and the method of payment and a copy of the payment document. The Bill will also require a metal dealer to record information in books with serially numbered pages or by means of an electronic device, and to keep separate records at each place of business. Such information and documents are to be kept for three rather than the current two years.

How important is it that the record keeping requirements reflect those in the Scrap Metal Dealers Act 2013, and do you agree with the Scottish Government that the proposed record keeping requirements are not unduly burdensome?

46. Mandatory and discretionary licensing requirements:

The Scottish Ministers can impose mandatory licensing requirements, such as those included in the Bill relating to record keeping and the identification of customers. In addition, local authorities can also attach discretionary requirements to licences in their areas.

Does the Bill get the balance right between mandatory and discretionary licensing requirements? Should the Bill include other mandatory conditions for obtaining a metal dealer’s licence, such as installing CCTV at metal dealers’ premises or in relation to labelling of metal and ‘forensic coding’?
7. Civic Licensing – Theatre Licensing

You may respond to all the questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

47. Will there be any impacts during the transitional period between ending the current theatre licence and starting the public entertainment licence?

48. Are there additional costs or resource implications on theatres or licensing authorities?

49. How should licensing authorities integrate their current fee charging structure into their public entertainment regime?

8. Civic Licensing – Sexual Entertainment Venues

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

50. What are the consequences of operating the new licensing regime using the definitions set out at section 68 of the Bill?

- 'sexual entertainment venue'
- 'audience'
- 'financial gain'
- 'organiser'
- 'premises'
- 'sexual entertainment', and
- 'display of nudity'

51. The Bill specifies that a venue hosting sexual entertainment on three occasions or less within a 12 month period would not be treated as a sexual entertainment venue: does this have any unintended consequences?
52. Local licensing authorities will be able to set the number of sexual entertainment venues in their area to below the existing level, or zero: are there any advantages or disadvantages to this approach?

53. The Bill relies mainly on the existing licensing regime for sex shops as set out in section 44 and Schedule 2 of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 (application, notification, objections and representations, revocation of licences etc., enforcement and appeals): is this mechanism adequate for the licensing of sexual entertainment venues - if not, please explain why?

54. Are there any barriers to licensing authorities operating the new licensing regime?
55. Civic Licensing

Do you have any other comments to make on the civic licensing aspects of the Bill?
Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill Call for Evidence – The Co-operative Response

The UK Consumer Co-operative Movement comprises 16 retail Co-operative Societies. The Co-operative Group is the largest Co-operative Society, operating as a consumer co-operative and comprises a family of businesses whose activities range from food to finance and from farms to funerals. Food retailing is core to our activities, including in Scotland, providing almost half of the Group’s turnover. The Co-operative Group operates Food stores at the heart of hundreds of communities across Scotland from Lockerbie to Lerwick and from Castlebay to Coldstream. Similarly we have partner societies operating in different areas of Scotland such as Scotmid Co-operative Society, Clydebank Co-operative Society, and a number of small community co-ops that we support in the most remote areas of Scotland. Part of the retail mix in Co-operative Food stores is the sale of alcohol products. Therefore we wish to comment only on the proposals contained within the draft Bill as they relate to alcohol licensing.

When the Scottish Government launched its Further Options for Alcohol Licensing consultation in December 2012 it promised an “open and productive discussion” and it was in this atmosphere that we responded to the consultation. We agreed with the Scottish Government that due to the recent rapid pace of alcohol licencing reform in Scotland there are aspects of the licensing regime that have become unbalanced; we felt that it was important that the retail co-operative societies trading in Scotland responded constructively. Some of the proposals put forward at that time were ones we felt that we could support. Certain other proposals caused us greater concern and so we stated our apprehensions to ensure that any further legislative reform did not have the potential to create new problems.

On the whole the proposals put forward are ones which we feel we can support. The one exception to this is the return of the ‘fit and proper person’ test. This is not something we are particularly keen to see re-introduced as in our experience as multiple licensees this was purely an administrative hurdle through which we were required to jump and which did not add anything to the promotion of the licensing objectives.

28. In what ways will the Bill’s provisions on alcohol licensing allow for reductions in crime and the preservation of public order?

29. Are there any other measures which should be taken to assist in the reduction of crime and the preservation of public order?

30. In what ways will the provisions in the Bill enhance the licensing objectives set out in the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005?

Proxy purchase
We believe that the biggest positive impact will come with criminalising the supply of alcohol to a person under 18 for consumption in a public place. We supported this proposal when we responded to the consultation.

Retailers have worked hard to incorporate age verification schemes into their businesses. The Co-operative and other retailers in the Retail of Alcohol Standards Group were already operating a Challenge 25 policy across their Scottish estates before this became a mandatory condition following the Alcohol etc (Scotland) Act 2010. These policies have reduced the amount of alcohol bought from retailers by underage individuals. A report by NHS Health Scotland in July 2012 revealed a reduction in direct sales of alcohol to young people. However, it also noted that the reduction in alcohol sales to underage individuals has not necessarily translated into a reduction in alcohol consumption by underage individuals: “Despite [this]... no-one reported a decrease in young people’s alcohol consumption at this time.” (Section 4.1.2).

The explanation for this disparity between sales and consumption is due to ‘proxy purchasing’. The Serve Legal and Plymouth University ‘Checked Out’ Report published in June 2012 revealed (Section 7) that over half of all underage drinkers now obtain their alcohol through family and friends. Their research showed that supermarkets and convenience stores are now ranked as the very last places from which underage drinkers would attempt to obtain alcohol. As the off-trade has become more rigorous in its policing of sales, underage drinkers have resorted to ‘proxy purchases’ – getting over-age individuals to legally buy alcohol and then sell or gift it on. The Co-operative, as a responsible retailer, has incorporated guidance on how to spot proxy purchases into its training for all front-line store staff. This cannot be infallible however, particularly when the underage individual does not come anywhere near the store.

The recent ‘Rising to the Challenge’ report assessing the performance of the Challenge 25 scheme’s operation looked specifically at the issue of proxy purchasing. It concluded that “Given the complex nature of proxy sales, it is important that the trade, trading standards, the police and the Home Office look to work ever more closely on dealing with the issue.”

Retailers now identify proxy purchase as the biggest challenge they face in preventing alcohol getting into the hands of underage individuals. Last year the Association of Convenience Stores commissioned the think tank Demos to look at three problems relating to alcohol, one of which was underage drinking. The resulting ‘Sobering Up’ report concluded that tackling proxy purchasing requires targeting parents and adults. To drive the message home that facilitating underage drinking is not to be tolerated the report recommended radical action in this area including ‘social shaming’ and alcohol-related community sentences targeted at those purchasing alcohol for children.

Currently all the penalties for proxy purchasing are targeted at the retailer rather than the proxy purchaser. We are happy to support the law being amended so that the truly guilty – those that fraudulently purchase alcohol with the intent of passing it on to an under-18 – can be prosecuted in such cases. However, any new law must be utilised; at present we do not believe that existing powers are effectively enforced.

Our one concern is that by focusing solely on consumption in a public place the proposals do not go far enough. As the Scottish Government has previously stated, drinking in Scotland is a societal issue. Education is probably the key means of changing Scotland’s drinking habits. With this in mind we would encourage a blanket ban on supplying alcohol to under-18s. We believe that it is a stronger and clearer message than the one hedged with exemptions proposed in the Bill. When, in July last year, as part of their support for the East Edinburgh Community Alcohol Partnership, the police seized alcohol possessed by underage individuals they stated: “we believe a number of adults continue to assist underage drinking through the proxy purchase of alcohol. Friends, family members and other persons over the age of 18 are reminded that it is an offence to buy or supply anyone underage with alcohol.” Even under the new proposals this statement will not be accurate.

The present Bill states that supplying alcohol for consumption by a child will not be an offence as long as it is consumed anywhere other than a ‘public place’. If it is to be consumed at home no offence is committed. This will make it harder to police proxy purchase in store – not only do staff members have to make a judgement about whether the alcohol purchased is on behalf of an under-18 but they also have to make a judgement about the location in which it will be consumed.

‘Young People’
In the same light we approve of the licensing objective “to protect children from harm” being amended to include ‘young people’. Legally, a child is defined as “a person under the age of 16”. However, it is also illegal to sell alcohol to 16 and 17-year-olds; a person aged 16 or 17 is defined as a “young person”. This means that should alcohol be sold to an individual aged 16 or 17 the law will have been broken, but not the licensing objective.

The current mandatory condition creates the paradoxical situation where the law might have been broken, but the licensing objective has not. We have heard of at least one instance where a retailer has successfully defended itself at a hearing on the basis that, in selling alcohol to a 17-year-old, they had not contravened the terms of the alcohol licence. As all licensees should be operating a Challenge 25 policy amending the mandatory condition to close this loophole should not cause responsible retailers any extra cost or difficulty – assuming an appropriate phrase can be agreed. This is an example of eliminating contradictions in the licensing regime which impose no extra regulatory burden upon licence-holders.

It makes sense to harmonise the mandatory objective with the statutory age restriction. The more comprehensive a standard, the easier it is to understand and prosecute. However we would need absolute clarity upon the definition of a “young person” – in official statistics this term often covers all individuals over 16 but under 25. It would create genuine difficulties if the licensing objective were amended to make retailers consider the potential impact on consumers aged over 18 who were legally entitled to purchase alcohol. Doing so would also contravene the Equality Act.

31. In what ways will the re-introduction of the “fit and proper person” test assist with the implementation of the licensing objectives set out in the 2005 act?

We are not convinced that the re-introduction of the ‘fit and proper person’ test will positively affect compliance with the licensing objectives. In our consultation submission we stated that we did not see any particular need to re-introduce this test. We continue to believe that the current requirements of the personal licence application and licence review processes are effective enough to support the licensing objectives. Our objections are based upon the amount of non-productive time required to attend any required interviews rather than fears that our applicants will fail the test. Despite the subjective nature of the phrase we cannot recall any applicant nominated by either The Co-operative Group or Scotmid falling foul of such a test. The statement in the Policy Memorandum (paragraph 137) that “A definition of ‘fit and proper’ is not necessary” does concern us, however. From a natural law standpoint we would prefer any new legislation to clearly define what activities or associations would result in an applicant being deemed to be not ‘fit and proper’.

Whilst the test was officially removed by the 2005 Act we have found that in practice it never went away. In certain areas the police still call in potential personal licence holders for face-to-face interviews before they are content to let the application go through. In Edinburgh, for example, the police invite all applicants for a 5-10 minute interview at force headquarters at Fettes Avenue with a licensing officer. This is something they used to do under the 1976 Act when a new premises manager was nominated. The questions asked are basic and will have been covered by the personal licence qualification training – we do not believe that they add anything extra to enforcement of the licensing objectives.

While we cannot see any advantages from this activity to ensure the objectives are upheld, they are time-consuming. Personal licence holders have to be released from their day-job (with cover provided) and travel across to the headquarters for what is often just a five minute interview before they can return. This can take up to two hours out of store even in a relatively small area like Edinburgh.

We would be concerned if the fit and proper person test meant that this sort of interview was expected for all premises managers and all personal licence-holders. Before the 2005 Act came into effect most forces would interview a new premises manager. We never saw this as a particularly useful expenditure of the police’s time. In all cases for The Cooperative Group and Scotmid a new store premises manager will already have a qualification as a personal licence holder and in most cases they will already be a premises manager moving to a new store. We cannot recall any occasions where such interviews brought to light any new information to suggest that our applicant was not a ‘fit and proper person’, despite the subjective nature of that phrase. Obviously we will only have one premises licence per licensed store but we will have more personal licence holders employed. As stated above, it currently takes up to two hours for a member of staff to get across a relatively small area like Edinburgh and back; considering the stores we operate in some of the remotest communities in Scotland we have significant fears that if every proposed premises managers or personal licence-holders were called in to interview by the police or Licensing Board we could lose up to an entire day’s work – or more in the case of island stores reliant on ferry crossings – for each staff member for the sake of a 5-10 minute conversation. The end result is that operators of licenced premises could potentially try to reduce this non-productive time by reducing the number of personal licence holders they employ. This would tend to undermine the licensing objectives rather than support them.

32. Have there been any unintended consequences arising from the 2005 Act, for example, in rural areas or the economic regeneration of areas?

The Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 introduced the concept of ‘overprovision’. Since its introduction co-operative societies in Scotland have raised objections about the application of the policy. We favour concrete action being taken to identify and deal with problem purveyors of alcohol, but oppose sweeping generalisations that tar responsible retailers with the same brush as the irresponsible. Overprovision assessments create increased administrative cost and burden to licensees and thereby stifle competition and local growth.

We believe that assessments of overprovision on health grounds are only valid if two conditions are met:

- a clear causal link between the number of alcohol licences in an area and resultant health problems can be shown
- that the alcohol consumed by those with alcohol-related health problems was purchased primarily in that area.

We do not believe that either of these conditions are met.

No causal link can be established between the number of licences locally and health problems. Alcohol Focus claimed to have found a ‘moderate’ relationship between off-licence density and alcohol harms in young people in England in their One on every corner report, but to make this claim they had to specifically exclude London where no such trend was evident. Even amongst the areas they saw fit to quote there are clear anomalies. For example, Malvern Hills had 26.7 off-licences per 100,000 population whereas Tunbridge Wells had almost twice as many (48.3), and yet Tunbridge Wells saw far fewer alcohol specific under-18 hospital admissions (48.4 per 100,000 population) over a two-year period than Malvern Hills (82.4). Moreover there is an assumption that all licences are equally harmful, despite the amount of alcohol purchased on a daily basis varying enormously between an out-of-town hypermarket and a local corner shop or between a ‘vertical drinking’ chain pub and a small bistro.

Nor is it possible to demonstrate in most cases that harm is caused by alcohol purchased within the local area. The consultation document acknowledged this fact (“it is very difficult, if not impossible in most cases to make a causal link between where alcohol is sold and where it is consumed”, paragraph 97). The 2011 submission to the Scottish Government for the Alcohol (Minimum Pricing) (Scotland) Bill by West Dunbartonshire Licensing Board et al made the point that whereas 31% of the respondents to a 2008 survey in Whitecrook bought alcohol at a local convenience store 85% bought it from a supermarket outwith the local area: “the problems occurred in Whitecrook but the alcohol was bought in Clydebank Central”. The 2010 Statement of Licensing Policy for West Dunbartonshire states that “persons in West Dunbartonshire, wishing to obtain alcohol from off-licences will travel up to two miles across sub-localities to purchase alcohol” (section 28).
They will also cross local authority boundaries. Since the introduction of the multi-buy ban in 2011 there have been reports that consumers resident near the English border have simply been crossing to England to buy alcohol – should minimum unit pricing be introduced in Scotland and not in England we would expect to see this trend continue. As a result health or crime problems caused by alcohol bought in England would be felt in Scotland.

What overprovision does do is stifle local investment and competition. Overprovision assumes that alcohol consumption is led by availability – the more premises there are selling alcohol the more consumption there will be. We would instead argue that both consumption and availability is led by demand – consumers expect to be able to complete a full shopping trip in just one location. This is why the number of independent stand-alone greengrocers, butchers and bakers has plummeted over the last thirty years. Consumers expect to be able to buy all their fruit and vegetables, their meat, their bread and all the rest of their shopping under one roof. This includes alcohol. If a consumer is not able to buy a bottle of wine in the same place as the rest of their evening meal they will travel elsewhere. It does not therefore make commercial sense for a convenience store or supermarket to invest in a community unless they can sell alcohol as part of that offer.

Where alcohol licences are restricted retailers are reluctant to invest in that area, stifling job-creation and competition. High street vacancy rates in Scotland already stand at 14.9% according to the Local Data Company. Safe from competition, existing retailers are at risk of becoming complacent and letting standards slip.

Bearing these reservations in mind, we do not support the concept of overprovision unless clear evidence meeting the two conditions specified above can be demonstrated. Extending the locality to cover the entire Board area, as proposed in Section 54, would compound the existing problems. It would mean that pockets of perceived problems would blight wide areas where no new investment or competition was allowed in. For example, during the Highland Licensing Board's assessment of overprovision, NHS Highland identified that twelve of Highland's 22 wards showed rates of alcohol-related hospitalisation significantly above the Scottish average. If this was translated into an assessment that the entire Highland area was overprovided it would mean that Ullapool, for instance, would be starved of increased retail opportunities when the nearest area NHS Highland had identified as a problem was Cromarty Firth over 40 miles away. Indeed, Cromarty Firth's neighbouring ward, the Black Isle, would face the same issue, despite the fact that Black Isle's rate of hospitalisation for alcohol-related conditions was 20% lower than the Scottish average (877.4 per 100,000 as opposed to 1,088). In these circumstances, in effect, a 'surrender' policy for licences would be established. Our experience of the surrender policy in Northern Ireland is that it disproportionately disadvantages independent and smaller retailers and has retarded investment and economic growth. For overprovision assessments to have any utility at all they need to be based on clear, hard evidence. Having localities covering the entire area will only dilute any impact and effectiveness from measures introduced to address specific local issues. We therefore believe that locality boundaries should be drawn as tightly as possible.

We believe that the proposal to count extensions in opening hours would be an over-reaction to a very small issue. An extension of trading hours would in general only be likely to marginally increase alcohol provision. Even then an increase in the hours within which alcohol can be purchased would not necessarily mean that more alcohol would be consumed: since licensing hours were relaxed in England and Wales in 2005 alcohol consumption has fallen by over 17%. Just as importantly we feel that it should be noted that the hours in which alcohol can be sold are already restricted by laws and licence conditions. Making this subject to an overprovision assessment would duplicate other, existing, regulations. The proposal is simply that a Board “may” have regard to licensed hours with no greater detail about what that would entail. For example, if an off-licenced premises were to apply to extend its licensed hours from 21:00 to 22:00 would all licensed premises be taken into account to determine whether the locality was overprovided or only those that were licenced between 21:00 and 22:00?

Again we are, on balance, opposed to including increases in capacity under the overprovision rules. Capacity in this sense would either be the number of individuals the premises can contain in the on-trade, or the size of the alcohol sales area in the on-trade. However in practice such increases would not dramatically increase the amount of alcohol being sold. It would be strange if an extra half a metre of shelving in a convenience store was counted as just as big a threat to an overprovision assessment as a new out-of-town hypermarket. Yet under this proposal each would be subject to exactly the same test. Retailers frequently remerchandise and refit stores to best meet consumer needs. Most of the time these will just involve ‘micro-space’: keeping the existing shelving and general space splits but moving products around on the shelves. Sometimes, however, to meet consumer demand, to fit in with new brand ideas or to roll out improved formats ‘macro-space’ revisions are necessary. These may involve changing old shelves for new, increasing or decreasing the splits in store space between different categories, or gutting and refitting the store entirely. Extensions to the selling area might be necessary under macro-space refits. Creating a general presumption that no increase in alcohol capacity would be approved in certain areas would almost certainly mean that existing retailers would not invest in modernising and refitting stores in those areas. This will create negative impressions of those areas, as the existing stores become tired and shabby. As alcohol-related health harms or crimes are predominantly associated with more deprived areas it is most likely that it is more deprived areas will be covered by overprovision assessments. It would be a shame if they were deprived of modernised or newly-refitted retail opportunities.

33. Which, if any, types of spent relevant offences should be required to be disclosed and what do you think the benefits of disclosure will be?

34. Do you have any other comments to make on the alcohol licensing aspects of the Bill?

We support the proposals in Section 57 for the removal of the prohibition on any individual who has had a personal licence revoked due to a failure to prove to the Licensing Board that they have undergone refresher training from reapplying for a new personal licence within five years. We are confident that we have the information to hand to ensure that personal licence-holders we employ will be scheduled to undertake refresher training in advance of the deadline. However there can be occasions where it is not possible for the individual to sit training at the appropriate time – due to maternity leave or illness for example. Preventing licence-holders from reapplying for a five year period would only have the effect of weakening the field of employees responsible for upholding the licensing objectives by removing long-standing licence-holders. Barring them from taking responsibility for the authorisation of sales of alcohol would be counter-intuitive. We are glad to see this rule revoked.

Likewise the increased notice that a Licensing Board must give prior to the expiry date of a personal licence and the extension of the period within which it is possible to apply for a renewal will help licence holders plan around maternity leave or ongoing illness.

Overprovision

1. The new licensing bill proposes to amend section 7 of the 2005 Act to enable Licensing Boards to determine that the whole of the Board’s area is a locality. SGF opposes this proposal.

2. We recognise that groups such as Alcohol Focus Scotland assert that there is a strong body of evidence to show that the availability of alcohol (i.e. the number of premises) is a significant factor in the prevalence of alcohol-related problems, particularly alcohol-related crime. However, we are not convinced that this evidence is either robust or conclusive enough. There is no simple cause-and-effect relationship between the number of premises and alcohol-related problems and overall it is becoming increasingly difficult to make a link between individual premises and problems in a specific locality. Inequality continues to be the main determining factor: alcohol-related harm in Scotland is still disproportionately experienced by those from more deprived areas.¹

3. Moreover there is an assumption that all licences are equally harmful, despite the amount of alcohol purchased on a daily basis varying enormously between a large supermarket and a local corner shop or between a ‘vertical drinking’ chain pub and a small bistro. As it currently stands overprovision is a blunt instrument: it does not take into account the differences between licensed premises and different business sectors. For example, Edinburgh has 449 restaurants, 428 bars/pubs but only 243 licensed convenience stores. As such it is clear that overprovision restricts business development and job creation in business sectors where no genuine overprovision exists.

4. We do not believe, for example, that for the purposes of assessing overprovision convenience stores and off-licences should remain in the same category. Whilst a convenience store and an off-licence may be the same size they make a very different offering to customers. In an off-licence the entire store will generally be designated as the alcohol display area and the premises will concentrate on selling alcoholic products to the exclusion of most others. In contrast a convenience store provides a full retail offering, where alcohol counts for a much smaller proportion of sales, with chilled and ambient food, household goods and newspapers and magazines comprising the bulk of turnover. In a typical convenience store alcohol will only account for approximately 12% of the entire volume of sales (Chilled foods, for example, currently account for about 13% of total sales and tobacco upwards of 20%) Their alcohol display area would hence be much smaller than that in a similarly-sized off-licence. This makes the two types of business very different and they cater for very different customer shopping missions.

5. As Scotland’s only Trade Association for the convenience store sector, we strongly believe that responsibly-run convenience stores are a vital community asset. We would therefore suggest that, for the purposes of overprovision, the Licensing Boards separate ‘local convenience stores’ and ‘off-licences’ into different categories, much as has already happened with ‘Large supermarkets’. It is important to note that no causal link has been established between the number of licences in a locality and alcohol-related health problems. Nor is it possible to demonstrate, in most cases, that harm is caused by alcohol purchases within the local area. Indeed this was acknowledged by the Scottish government in its consultation paper ‘Further Options on Alcohol’ – ‘it is very difficult, if not impossible in most cases, to make a causal link between where alcohol is sold and where it is consumed.’

6. Capacity is an important issue in determining overprovision. If the entire Board area was regarded as being overprovided for it would prevent retailers from ever increasing the capacity of their alcohol sales area. However, in practice such increases would not dramatically increase the amount of alcohol being sold. It would be a paradox if a 20m² increase in selling area of a convenience store was counted as just as big a threat to an overprovision assessment as a new out-of-town hypermarket. Yet under this proposal each would be subject to exactly the same sort of scrutiny. Retailers frequently remerchandise and refit stores to best meet consumer needs. Most of the time these will just involve ‘micro-space’: keeping the existing shelving and general space splits but moving products around on the shelves. Sometimes, however, to meet consumer demand, to fit in with new brand ideas or to roll out improved formats ‘macro-space’ revisions are necessary. These may involve changing old shelves for new, increasing or decreasing the splits in store space between different categories, or gutting and refitting the store entirely. Extensions to the selling area might be necessary under macro-space refits. It should be noted that, of course, retailers are charged a fee for any major or minor variation to their licences.

7. Creating a general presumption that no increase in alcohol capacity would be approved in the entire Board area would almost certainly mean that existing retailers would not invest in modernising and refitting stores.

8. Similarly, an extension of trading hours would in general only be likely to marginally increase alcohol provision. Even then an increase in the hours within which alcohol can be purchased would not necessarily mean that more alcohol would be consumed. Just as importantly we feel that it should be noted that the hours in which alcohol can be sold are already restricted by laws and licence conditions.

9. Rather than taking a ‘blanket’ approach to overprovision, Boards should continue to take into account the specific activities and mode of operation of the applicant. The categories used should make clear distinctions between premises such as convenience stores and supermarkets and indeed convenience stores and off-licenses. It is important to note, however, that arguably the number or capacity of premises in a locality in unlikely to be the key factor in deciding whether there is overprovision. Instead, the determining factor is the extent to which there are alcohol-related, health, and crime problems in the area.

2 Fraser, A (2012) Preparing an evidence based overprovision policy
10. The Board’s approach to overprovision should be based on evidence. This will help to ensure clarity and consistency. The evidence should be based on obtainable data per data zone such as alcohol-related deaths, hospital admissions and alcohol-related crime. To re-iterate: the number or capacity of premises in a locality is unlikely to be the key factor in deciding whether there is overprovision.

11. We should point out that overwhelmingly our members are responsible retailers; they put considerable effort into ensuring that alcohol is sold in a responsible way. This happens through the following key areas:

   a. Full compliance with the Challenge 25 regulations;
   b. Staff training;
   c. Appropriate signage;
   d. In-house test purchasing;
   e. Refusal books.

   Whilst only Challenge 25 and basic staff training are mandatory, the other areas listed are carried out on an entirely voluntary basis by our members.

12. Rather than designating their entire area as a locality for overprovision purposes, Boards should focus strongly on enforcement: proxy purchases are the biggest problem area in relation to under age sales and individuals participating in these must be prosecuted. The number of prosecutions for purchasing alcohol for consumption by persons under 18 actually fell from 156 in 2009/10 to 64 in 2011/12.\(^3\) Clearly this point on enforcement also has to apply any retailers who act in an irresponsible way - it is time to root out the rogue retailers.

40. Taking the proposals in sections 63 to 66 of the Bill together, how will they have the desired effect of strengthening the metal dealers' licensing regime to the extent that metal theft and related criminal activity is reduced?

The National Metal Theft Taskforce (NMTT) supports the reform of the legislation around dealing in metal and would prefer to see a regime that mirrored that in England and Wales to avoid displacement of offending and dealing in stolen metal.

The removal of exemption warrants is supported as we believe legislation should apply to all scrap metal dealers, no matter what size.

We have seen no convincing commercial argument for not retaining metal for 48 hours and it would be of great assistance to law enforcement if metal was required to be retained. As part of the minimum standards of investigation, British Transport Police officers visit, at least, the three most local SMDs to search for the stolen cable, it would facilitate the identification of both stolen property and the premises that repeatedly process stolen metal if SMDs had to retain metal for 48 hours. It would also have a deterrent effect of SMDs refusing to accept metal they thought “may” be stolen if they thought that they may make themselves liable to handling type offences.

41. In your view, could the Bill be further strengthened in any way, for example, by including an accreditation scheme for metal dealers?
We would welcome an accreditation scheme which could follow on from the RAG status by which all SMDs in England, Scotland and Wales have been evaluated as part of Operation Tornado. This would assist with the licensing process, reducing the burden on local councils, and allow all the relevant parties involved in the licensing of SMDs – law enforcement, SEPA and LAs – to focus their enforcement activity on those who choose not to comply with the legislation.

The NMTT is currently developing a Scrap Metal Dealers Register for all SMDs in England and Wales to provide a comprehensive register of all SMDs, motor salvage operators and mobile collectors. This will not only hold all the details of licences issued and applications refused, but will also hold intelligence in order that the appropriate decision is made regarding the licence, and all agencies have access to up to date information to prioritise their visits and inform activity. We believe this would be enhanced by the inclusion of all Scottish SMDs, to enhance information sharing, avoid duplication and eradicate knowledge gaps.

We note that the definition of a dealer and itinerant dealer requires that they “buy and sell metal”. This will exclude itinerant collectors who collect from door to door but do not pay, or can not be proved to have paid. This was identified when the SMD Act 2013 was drawn up and the wording of the 1964 Act was amended to “buy or sell”. It is our belief that such a change should be made through the medium of this Act as well.

We believe that records should be maintained for longer than six months. Whilst huge strides have been made against organised crime groups involved in metal theft, these investigations can take many months and even years, investigating multiple offenders and wide ranging offences. Without a mandatory requirement to retain records potential evidence would be lost.

We would like to recommend that records are kept for the length of the licence. Then, LAs could also use them, should they choose, to check whether the records had been completed and stored correctly as part of the relicensing process.

The Scrap metal Dealers Act 2013 specifically precludes payment in kind and we believe that this Act should mirror that to avoid any subversion of the cashless system.

We can find no mention in the Bill of a requirement
42. Removal of exemption warrant - do you wish to comment on the proposal to remove the exemption warrant system?

As stated above – we believe there needs to be a comprehensive scheme that covers all SMDs, motor salvage operators and mobile collectors no matter what size.

43. Removal of requirement to retain metal on-site - what impact will the proposal to remove the retention of metal requirement have on the enforcement of the licensing regime and prevention of criminal activities?

As previously stated we believe that the requirement to retain metal for 48 hours, coupled with the requirement to record metals received, would be of great assistance to law enforcement investigating the theft of stolen metal locally and we do not believe that this would be commercially disadvantageous to SMDs.

44. Forms of payment - what is your view on the proposal to go 'cashless' and is there merit in considering whether metal dealers could be allowed to operate using cash for only very small transactions, which could be limited to a certain number per month?
Our experience working with dealers in England and Wales is that they have adapted very well to the new regime of cashless transactions since the inception of, initially LASPO 2012 and then the Scrap Metal Dealers Act 2013. SMDs have tried to undermine the legislation by instigating cheque cashing services on sites, but, if they are run correctly and have third party involvement then these are legal and, indeed, provide another layer of identification confirmation through the necessary KYC checks of a Money service business.

We firmly believe that the evidence from England and Wales proves that there is no requirement for any transactions, however small, to be paid in cash, and the blanket ban relieves SMDs of any pressure from unscrupulous customers to make a series of payments under the threshold to avoid identification via a cheque or bank account.

45. Forms of identification and record keeping:

In line with the Scrap Metal Dealers Act 2013, the Bill adds additional record keeping requirements to a metal dealer’s licence including recording the means by which a seller’s name and address was verified and retaining a copy of the document, and the method of payment and a copy of the payment document. The Bill will also require a metal dealer to record information in books with serially numbered pages or by means of an electronic device, and to keep separate records at each place of business. Such information and documents are to be kept for three rather than the current two years.

How important is it that the record keeping requirements reflect those in the Scrap Metal Dealers Act 2013, and do you agree with the Scottish Government that the proposed record keeping requirements are not unduly burdensome?
The requirement for identification is one of the key tenets of the legislation in that it removes the capability of thieves to dispose of the metal they have stolen anonymously and increases the risk of detection for them. As such it has been extremely effective, particularly again low level less organised offenders by removing the legitimate market for stolen property. This is why, prior to the legislation, law enforcement and partner agencies worked with the BMRA to get SMDs signed up to start voluntarily requiring identification as part of Operation Tornado, which has proved to be extremely successful and paved the way for the legislative requirement when the SMD Act came in to force in 2013. Identification documents should be limited to passports and driving licences and proof of address, a household bill, excluding a mobile phone bill, as per SMD Act 2013.

46. Mandatory and discretionary licensing requirements:

The Scottish Ministers can impose mandatory licensing requirements, such as those included in the Bill relating to record keeping and the identification of customers. In addition, local authorities can also attach discretionary requirements to licences in their areas.

Does the Bill get the balance right between mandatory and discretionary licensing requirements? Should the Bill include other mandatory conditions for obtaining a metal dealer's licence, such as installing CCTV at metal dealers' premises or in relation to labelling of metal and 'forensic coding'?

Whilst it is right that each local authority may apply additional licensing requirements accordingly to their local needs, close liaison with law enforcement and partner agencies should be undertaken to ensure they are aware of any additional requirements when undertaking visits/stops etc.

CCTV could be considered to be an unnecessary burden by small operators, however, no only would it be useful for crime investigation purposes, it would also have a deterrent effect, making the premises less vulnerable to burglaries or thefts.

9. Do you consider that the Bill has any implications for meeting Scotland’s equality and/or human rights commitments? Please explain.

10. Do you consider that the Bill has any implications for preventative spending and/or public services reform? Please explain.

The evidence supports the conclusion that restrictions on the availability of alcohol can contribute to a reduction in alcohol-related problems. Investment in improving the effectiveness of the alcohol licensing system, particular in improving the pursuit of the licensing objectives, therefore has the potential to reduce the potential costs of alcohol-related harm that arise in other public services and the wider economy.

23. Is the current Scottish licensing regime, as set out in the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 and the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005, fit for purpose?

In relation to transparency and accountability of the licensing system the East Renfrewshire Alcohol and Drug Partnership recommend that the current guidance requires to be updated to reflect current legislative changes. There is currently no system to hold licensing boards to account where they do not consult or develop a licensing policy statement and assessment of overprovision.

Further actions we would like to see addressed are:-

- A statutory duty on licensing boards to promote the licensing objectives.
- A statutory duty on licensing boards to produce an annual report outlining how they have complied with their licensing policy statement.
- A requirement for the Scottish Government to regularly review and update the statutory guidance for licensing boards.
- The requirement for overprovision assessments to include members clubs and occasional licences.

24. Should a licensing system seek to regulate individual behaviour or communities of space (eg. ‘city space’ etc.)?

supports approaches that regulate communities of space, such as restricting the availability of alcohol as this contributes directly to a reduction in alcohol-related harm.
25. In what way should the licensing system in Scotland interact with the support the land use planning system, community planning and regeneration?

The alcohol licensing system is an important means through which the Scottish Government’s priorities set out in Changing Scotland’s Relationship with Alcohol: A Framework for Action can be achieved. Furthermore the licensing system has a key contribution to make through the implementation of the licensing policy statement and overprovision assessment to support the achievement of community planning and alcohol and drug partnership priorities to prevent and reduce alcohol related harm.

It is imperative that the licensing policy does not operate in a silo and works constructively to compliment and align with key local strategies and plans such as community planning, land use planning and alcohol and drug partnership delivery plans.

26. How does the licensing system in Scotland assist with the delivery of sustainable development and economic balanced areas?

The East Renfrewshire Alcohol and Drug Partnership recognise the importance of economic development however this must not be at the expense of the adverse health and social consequences linked to alcohol.

27. In what way does the licensing system in Scotland support health and planning, addressing health inequalities and public health wellbeing outcomes?
Evidence clearly indicates that reducing availability and increasing price are amongst the most effective policy measures to reduce alcohol consumption and harm in a population. The inclusion of the licensing objective to protect and improve public health, and the requirement for licensing boards to include a statement on overprovision in the licensing policy statement provides the foundation on which licensing boards can act to address alcohol-related health harm. The extent to which public health data is used in practice continues to be subject to varying interpretations of the evidence by licensing boards and the licensing policy outcome therefore does not always reflect the health evidence presented.

28. In what ways will the Bill's provisions on alcohol licensing allow for reductions in crime and the preservation of public order?

supports the additional new offence regarding the supply of alcohol to a child or young person in a public place will enhance the protecting children from harm licensing objective.
29. Are there any other measures which should be taken to assist in the reduction of crime and the preservation of public order?

recognise that the 2005 Act has successfully addressed the issue of irresponsible drink promotions in the on trade however we believe that this should be further strengthened in relation to the off trade.

30. In what ways will the provisions in the Bill enhance the licensing objectives set out in the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005?

welcome the following:

- The inclusion of the fit and proper person test as a ground for refusal.
- Clarification of overprovision to include the whole board area reflects a whole population approach to addressing alcohol related harm and availability.
- The addition of young persons to the protecting children from harm objective now protects young people of 16 and 17 within the licensing legislation.

31. In what ways will the re-introduction of the “fit and proper person” test assist with the implementation of the licensing objectives set out in the 2005 act?

supports the return to fit and proper test as this allows greater scope for relevant information to be presented before the Board in which to determine an application. The fit and proper test should not be linked to the licensing objectives but stand alone as this would widen the range of issues a Board can consider. We would recommend that appropriate guidelines be produced for licensing boards.
32. Have there been any unintended consequences arising from the 2005 Act, for example, in rural areas or the economic regeneration of areas?

The East Renfrewshire Alcohol and Drug Partnership has concerns regarding the rules and use of occasional licenses. The current rules create a loophole enabling legal requirements of fully licensed premises to be bypassed.

This allows commercial premises to be run under a series of occasional licenses and is inequitable to permanent licence premises. Furthermore it can increase the availability of alcohol in an area that is not presently taken into account for overprovision assessment purposes.

33. Which, if any, types of spent relevant offences should be required to be disclosed and what do you think the benefits of disclosure will be?

34. Do you have any other comments to make on the alcohol licensing aspects of the Bill?

The East Renfrewshire Alcohol and Drug Partnership supports the extension of the time frame for the operation of licensing policy statements to five years. As noted in section 23 this should include accountability measures to ensure boards comply with publishing their local policy statements within the agreed timeframe.

We welcome the clarification regarding the entire board area being described as an area of overprovision. Boards should take into account licensed hours, members clubs and occasional licenses.

The national guidance should be updated and the reference to the requirement to have a causal link between individual premises and alcohol related harm should be removed.

We would not recommend that Section 54 of the Bill (section 7-01(3) (ii) that the word ‘must’ is replaced with ‘may’ in relation to overprovision.
We propose that Section 84a of the 2005 Act should be extended to further include in addition to the Chief Constable the Licensing Standards Officer (LSO). This would allow LSO’s to deal with issues arising with personal license holders in particular when using the occasional licence system inappropriately.

23. Is the current Scottish licensing regime, as set out in the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 and the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005, fit for purpose?

See the word document submitted with this response.

24. Should a licensing system seek to regulate individual behaviour or communities of space (eg. ‘city space’ etc.)?

It is submitted that the system should be enforced more robustly by Police Scotland in conjunction with the Crown Office to regulate individual behaviour so as to protect the public and prevent disorder. At present very few licensing offences are prosecuted.

In relation to communities of space if there is to be an expectation that such areas will be regulated through licensing a power to do so should be made explicit in the legislation to prevent uncertainty.

There should be a restriction on the number of occasional licences which can be granted for any premises in any 12 month period. At present there is no restriction, although there is scope in the legislation for the Scottish Government to impose a limit. Premises which would otherwise not get a premises licence, as they would not be able to get the required Section 50 certificates, are operating with occasional licences almost on a weekly basis. Some of these premises are utilising in excess of 70 occasional licences per year meaning that although alcohol is sold in these premises on a very regular basis they remain unlicensed premises. It is submitted that this situation is not what the act envisaged. Occasional licences should be for premises which are only licensed on a truly occasional basis.

25. In what way should the licensing system in Scotland interact with the support the land use planning system, community planning and
It is submitted that in order to prevent a variety of different layers of bureaucracy the licensing system should be amended to make it clear that such considerations can be considered before licences are granted. It is often unclear to customers that they may need a number of separate consents to operate, e.g. a street trader trading on council land may need planning permission, a street trader’s licence, permission from the Council to occupy the land and a food hygiene certificate.

26. How does the licensing system in Scotland assist with the delivery of sustainable development and economic balanced areas?

It is submitted that the licensing system is too prescriptive and narrow in its approach to be of any assistance in these respects.

27. In what way does the licensing system in Scotland support health and planning, addressing health inequalities and public health wellbeing outcomes?

These are not currently licensing considerations and unless the law is changed to make these licensing issues any decisions made on these grounds would be open to challenge.
4. Alcohol Licensing

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

28. In what ways will the Bill’s provisions on alcohol licensing allow for reductions in crime and the preservation of public order?

It is submitted that it is not clear if the Bill’s provisions on alcohol licensing will allow for reductions in crime and the preservation of public order. This would require the police to act and utilise the powers they have to deal with liquor licensing offences. The act distinguishes between breaches of licensing conditions and offences and envisages a regime where offences are dealt with through the courts. However it is the case that very few offences are prosecuted. It is not clear if that is as a result of decisions taken not to prosecute by Procurator Fiscals or if the Police do not report offences. It is submitted that if the licensing legislation was utilised correctly, with the backing of the Crown Office that a lot of the crimes and offences committed by persons under the influence of alcohol would decrease for example if people were prosecuted for being drunk on licensed premises, if licence holders or “responsible persons” were prosecuted for allowing drunk persons on their premises or for selling alcohol to drunk persons. It is submitted that public drunkenness could become socially unacceptable if the law was enforced. Those frequenting late night premises could be made to think twice about ‘preloading’ if they were to be refused entry and / or reported to the courts. It would take time but attitudes could be changed to make licensing offences as socially unacceptable as drink driving. If people were not supplied alcohol to the extent where they were completely drunk there would be less instances of anti-social behaviour around premises, fewer fights and assaults and fewer associated domestic incidents when persons returned home. There has to be a concerted effort by all interested parties which is just not there at present. At present the Police are dealing with the late night economy problems with fewer resources and by making applications for review of premises licences where there is regular disorder at specific premises.

With regard to interested persons / connected persons. There is the position where a premises licence is held by a brewery for example and they lease the premises to a person or company who stipulate who the Designated Premises Manager is. The brewery and the premises manager are interested / connected but the ‘middleman’ is not mentioned anywhere in any Board records or on the licence. Section 147 (5) is in place but is not in force. It opens the way for ‘organised crime’ to have a major stake in the running of licensed premises with no measures in place to ascertain who they are. Indeed were there to be any review of the premises licence for any matter they premises licence holder and the designated premises manager could be held accountable by the Board but the person / company actually operating the premises are not held accountable due to this part of the Act not being in force.

The Board has a concern that due to the way the legislation is structured often licence holders, particularly larger companies such breweries or restaurant chains, have little involvement in the day to day running of licensed premises.
29. Are there any other measures which should be taken to assist in the reduction of crime and the preservation of public order?

As stated in the answer to Q28 Police Scotland and the Crown Office and Procurator Fiscal Service could take a more active stance in the reporting and prosecution of licensing offences which have for some time been seen as ‘minor’ and ‘not worth pursuing’. Similarly to drink driving where once it was almost the norm it is now seen as an antisocial activity and shunned by most. If more people were reported and prosecuted for licensing offences e.g. being drunk in licensed premises and allowing persons to be drunk in licensed premises.

30. In what ways will the provisions in the Bill enhance the licensing objectives set out in the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005?

The change to include young persons in the “protecting children from harm” objective is welcomed.

31. In what ways will the re-introduction of the “fit and proper person” test assist with the implementation of the licensing objectives set out in the 2005 act?

The Board agrees that the introduction of a “fit and proper” test would allow greater scope for Police Scotland to present relevant information to board members which they can take into account when determining applications.

32. Have there been any unintended consequences arising from the 2005 Act, for example, in rural areas or the economic regeneration of areas?
33. Which, if any, types of spent relevant offences should be required to be disclosed and what do you think the benefits of disclosure will be?

It is submitted that the list of relevant offences should be reviewed to ensure that all relevant statutory offences are included or change the legislation to Police Scotland to report all offences to allow boards to decide which offences are relevant.

34. Do you have any other comments to make on the alcohol licensing aspects of the Bill?

LSOs have no access to criminal records and in the vast majority of cases the applicant will not be known to the LSOs so it is difficult to know what comments they could make on applications for personal licences.

Given the number of changes to the legislation since the 2005 Act was brought into effect and the provisions of section 142 which require boards to have regard to the guidance issued it is submitted that updated guidance to take cognisance of the changes in legislation should be issued after any legislative change.
ANSWER TO QUESTION 23

It is not considered that the current licensing regimes are fit for purpose. A response regarding the 1982 Act has been submitted by West Lothian Council. This response concentrates on liquor licensing.

It is submitted that there have been a number of key changes to the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 since it was brought into full effect in 2009. These incremental changes have meant that all parties involved in liquor licensing find it extremely difficult to keep track. A fully consolidated act would assist greatly as everyone would be able to look at the legislation as one act and not have to ascertain if a section had been amended by a subsequent act or SSI. The fact that the act has been amended several times and that one needs to have access to the 40 plus statutory instruments to understand the full effect of its provisions means that it is almost impossible for someone without access to legal advice to understand their responsibilities under this legislation.

Premises licence holders, personal licence holders and staff working within licensed premises have little or no legal training or access to legal advice and, on the whole, find the act completely confusing despite the personal licence qualification. It is incredulous that following receipt of the training certificate a significant number of those who have undertaken the training still remain confused and are under the misapprehension that by undertaking the training they have been issued with a personal licence. This has become even more of a problem over the last few months since personal licence holders have sending in their refresher training certificates. A number of persons have contacted the Board attempting to update their personal licences and it is has only then been identified that despite undertaking the initial training course in 2009 they never applied for personal licences. In all these circumstances it is submitted that the standard of this qualification and the content of the training be reviewed.

Experience also shows that the personal licence document issued to personal licence holders is not in a form which is practical for its purpose. Personal licence holders do necessarily have an office or filing facilities in the same way as is likely to be available to a business or employer. They may understandably be reluctant to put their licence into the hands of another person such as their employer. It is submitted that a more practical form of licence for persons working in the licensed trade would be preferable e.g. a laminated ID containing key licence details.

As a Board we see the practical effect of lack of understanding of the legal requirements by those working in the trade on a very regular basis. Examples of this are –

- Confusion about the role of premises manager and licence holder – many applications are submitted by the wrong persons and worryingly often by persons not named on the licence who are in de facto control of the management of the premises
- A lack of understanding amongst the former registered clubs about their legal responsibilities under this legislation, many are trying to increase their income by running functions/events open to the public or advertising that they are open to the public for meals etc.
- A lack of understanding amongst voluntary organisations and other applicants for occasional licences about how alcohol, should be sold under an occasional licence Confusion over price variations and what can be done on on-sales and off-sales premises. There are regular complaints about these and where there is both on and off-sales there are two different timescales for the varying of prices for the same premises. It is difficult for licence holders to comply with the legislation because it is so detailed and complex.

With regard to on sales and price variations, our experience is that premises have found a way round the mandatory conditions on a daily basis as they claim that a certain brand of alcohol is only available for a specific period of time and is priced extremely cheaply. Some premises have different ‘offers’ each and every day of the week. The answer when questioned is that the price of the brand remains the same but it only available until 9 pm or it is only available on a Thursday for example. It would be a lot less confusing for all concerned if the same rules applied to all premises. The legislation should also stipulate that if a brand of alcohol is a certain price then, if it is on the premises it must be available for sale. This would go some way to stop premises merely removing a brand from behind the bar and placing it in a store room and telling customers that it is not available.

There is a lot of confusion relating to the varying of premises licences and what constitutes a “major” or minor variation. An off-sales premises for example with the maximum trading hours of 10 am until 10 pm and store opening hours of 8 am until 10 pm have to make a major variation application to open from 7 am until 10 pm. They cannot sell alcohol for any more hours in the day but the store is open an hour earlier. This is a change to information contained in the operating plan and is considered to be major. In contrast an on-sales premises with outside drinking which builds an extension to the premises and increases the size of their outside area but stipulates that there will be no increase in capacity can apply for a minor variation, which must be granted, as they are operating in the same manner as the information contained in their operating plan but the premises can be considerably larger. There is also no neighbour notification for a minor variation, which means that a neighbour can have a licensed premises increase in size and not be given the opportunity to make comment or objection to the Board. These are practical examples of the effect of the rules on what amounts to a minor variation.

Section 91 the approved qualification for obtaining a personal licence has never been prescribed by the Scottish Government and accordingly Boards are having difficulties as the qualification has changed and the ‘older’ certificates have qualifications which are ‘lapsed’. There was never any advice or information forthcoming from the Scottish Government regarding this which has resulted in a fragmented approach across the country and a great deal of confusion for both applicants and Boards.

It is submitted that the Government should take urgent steps to introduce the Personal Licence Database and give all Boards access to it. Without this facility it is impossible for Boards to know if designated premises managers are also working in that capacity in other areas or after 1 December 2014 have had their personal licences revoked.

The Board continues to have serious concerns regarding the operation of the Scottish Government’s Guidance as to how overprovision policy should be formed in practice, and the knock-on effect of this with regard to the application by boards of the ground for refusal based on overprovision contained in different sections of the 2005 Act. In particular the Board is concerned by lack of engagement by advisors at the evidential level suggested in the Guidance, and a growing trend for advisors, or parties purporting to represent their interests, to later criticise boards unfairly for their failure to introduce substantive overprovision policy.

50. What are the consequences of operating the new licensing regime using the definitions set out at section 68 of the Bill?

- 'sexual entertainment venue'
- 'audience'
- 'financial gain'
- 'organiser'
- 'premises'
- 'sexual entertainment', and
- 'display of nudity'
Sexual entertainment venue – we are still concerned regarding the financial gain element of the definition. We previously stated that the fact that it depends on the financial gain of the organiser to be licensed could mean that it could be argued that where performers are self employed a licence is not required, arguing that the performers provide the entertainment and that the occupier/ owner provides only ancillary entertainment. We would therefore seek clarification of the definition of the term Organiser and would seek confirmation as to whether this would now include performers who were self employed.

Audience – pleased to see that you have taken on board comments previously made and that definition includes an audience of one so that lap dancing and peep shows would be covered.

Financial Gain – definition would appear sufficient but we would question why the financial gain element has been included since the similar provision for the payment of money or moneys worth has recently been removed from the licensing of places of Public entertainment. Again we would submit that there is a need for consistency of approach in the act.

Organiser – the definition would appear sufficiently wide but as questioned above we would seek clarification as to whether it includes self employed performers.

Premises – we are in agreement with this definition.

Sexual entertainment - our previous comments we would submit are still valid. We submitted that the definition of sexual entertainment was sufficiently clear and wide enough to encompass all types of sexual entertainment including any future developments. However we feel it may still be too wide so as to include, with regards to (a) burlesque and exotic dancing. In order to ensure that such forms of entertainment are not caught by the new legislation. We noted that in the Chambers dictionary for example the definition of exotic includes “pertaining to striptease” If there is not further definition it would be possible for different authorities to take different views on whether something required a licence, again giving rise to a lack of consistency.

Display of nudity – agree that this is very clearly defined.

51. The Bill specifies that a venue hosting sexual entertainment on three occasions or less within a 12 month period would not be treated as a sexual entertainment venue: does this have any unintended consequences?
Yes this would have consequences as it could potentially create a loop hole which could be exploited by organisers who rather than having a permanent premises with a licence and proper facilities for the performers could simply transfer the activity around different venues where there are no such facilities and protection. Such an exemption could therefore mean defeating the aims and purposes of these amendments to the 1982 Act.

52. Local licensing authorities will be able to set the number of sexual entertainment venues in their area to below the existing level, or zero: are there any advantages or disadvantages to this approach?

We agree that licensing authorities should be allowed to decide whether there should be no such premises/venues in their area. In doing so they should be allowed to take account of their own local circumstances.

There would of course be a disadvantage to exiting businesses which are licensed. Although there is quite a lengthy period before the authority’s decision could take effect there could be a significant impact on their income and livelihood.

53. The Bill relies mainly on the existing licensing regime for sex shops as set out in section 44 and Schedule 2 of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 (application, notification, objections and representations, revocation of licences etc., enforcement and appeals): is this mechanism adequate for the licensing of sexual entertainment venues - if not, please explain why?
Yes we would agree that the mechanism for the licensing of sex shops is adequate for the licensing of sexual entertainment venues as putting these together and taking them out of the realm of the 2005 Act is more appropriate.

Additionally we welcome the introduction of mandatory conditions and for the introduction of government guidance which will provide consistency across the country together with the scope for local conditions to deal with local and circumstances. This we believe will help better regulate the industry.

However given that the licences are to be regulated by Schedule 2 and have the same one year duration as sex shop licences we are concerned as to whether this short period is appropriate. Many of these premises have Premises Licences under the 2005 Act which last indefinitely would a longer duration of say three years maybe be more appropriate for their sex entertainment licence.

There is also the question of fees. We appreciate that Schedule 2 states that authorities must charge such reasonable fees as they may determine. The level of fees for sex shops are often very high. If the fees for sex entertainment venues are to be regulated in the same way consideration will require to be given as to the appropriate level and whether these are consistent with the fees for sex shops and if not the reasons for this and any issues that could arise from this lack of consistency.

54. Are there any barriers to licensing authorities operating the new licensing regime?
The majority of premises that would be affected by the new licensing regime are already licensed under the terms of the 2005 Act and therefore the premises have already been assessed. The new type of licence will simply bring in additional safeguards aimed particularly at the entertainment provided and for the protection of those delivering that entertainment. Therefore although this is an additional form of licence and the introduction of this will have some resource implications of local authorities there are not a huge number of these premises.

We would however request a suitable transition period in order that premises can smoothly move over to the new licensing regime with minimal impact to their businesses and allowing authorities the appropriate guidance and time to process the necessary applications.

If however an authority were to decide that the appropriate level of sexual entertainment premises for their locality was to be zero this could lead to appeals against such policies and impede the operation of the regime.

55. Civic Licensing

3. General Licensing Issues

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

23. Is the current Scottish licensing regime, as set out in the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 and the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005, fit for purpose?

NO

24. Should a licensing system seek to regulate individual behaviour or communities of space (eg. ‘city space’ etc.)?

BOTH INDIVIDUAL BEHAVIOUR AND THAT OF BODIES CORPORATE

25. In what way should the licensing system in Scotland interact with the support the land use planning system, community planning and regeneration?
26. How does the licensing system in Scotland assist with the delivery of sustainable development and economic balanced areas?

N/A

27. In what way does the licensing system in Scotland support health and planning, addressing health inequalities and public health wellbeing outcomes?

6. Scrap Metal Dealer Licensing

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

40. Taking the proposals in sections 63 to 66 of the Bill together, how will they have the desired effect of strengthening the metal dealers' licensing regime to the extent that metal theft and related criminal activity is reduced?

As currently drafted we do not think the proposals in sections 63 to 66 of the Bill will strengthen the metal dealers' licensing regime and they could increase the opportunities for criminal behaviour.

We do however support a radical overhaul of the licensing regime

See detailed comments annexed to this response

41. In your view, could the Bill be further strengthened in any way, for example, by including an accreditation scheme for metal dealers?

See detailed comments annexed to this response

42. Removal of exemption warrant - do you wish to comment on the proposal to remove the exemption warrant system?
We support the removal of the exemption warrant

43. Removal of requirement to retain metal on-site - what impact will the proposal to remove the retention of metal requirement have on the enforcement of the licensing regime and prevention of criminal activities?

See detailed comments annexed to this response

44. Forms of payment - what is your view on the proposal to go 'cashless' and is there merit in considering whether metal dealers could be allowed to operate using cash for only very small transactions, which could be limited to a certain number per month?

See detailed comments annexed to this response
45. Forms of identification and record keeping:

In line with the Scrap Metal Dealers Act 2013, the Bill adds additional record keeping requirements to a metal dealer’s licence including recording the means by which a seller’s name and address was verified and retaining a copy of the document, and the method of payment and a copy of the payment document. The Bill will also require a metal dealer to record information in books with serially numbered pages or by means of an electronic device, and to keep separate records at each place of business. Such information and documents are to be kept for three rather than the current two years.

How important is it that the record keeping requirements reflect those in the Scrap Metal Dealers Act 2013, and do you agree with the Scottish Government that the proposed record keeping requirements are not unduly burdensome?

See detailed comments annexed to this response
46. Mandatory and discretionary licensing requirements:

The Scottish Ministers can impose mandatory licensing requirements, such as those included in the Bill relating to record keeping and the identification of customers. In addition, local authorities can also attach discretionary requirements to licences in their areas.

Does the Bill get the balance right between mandatory and discretionary licensing requirements? Should the Bill include other mandatory conditions for obtaining a metal dealer’s licence, such as installing CCTV at metal dealers’ premises or in relation to labelling of metal and ‘forensic coding’?

BMRA response to the Scottish Parliament Local Government and Regeneration Committee’s call for evidence on the Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill 2014

Introduction

The British Metals Recycling Association (BMRA) is the trade association for ferrous and non-ferrous recycling companies throughout the UK and represents some 340 businesses which between them handle over 95% of the metal recycled in the UK. This £5.6 billion industry processes over 15 million tonnes of metal annually into secondary raw material, which is vital for metals manufacturing.

Within membership there are 28 companies with facilities located in Scotland (see Annex A) ranging in size from small family-owned enterprises to large multi-national companies. They operate from approximately 50 sites, processing around 1.3 million tonnes of metal-rich materials including end-of-life vehicles; waste electrical and electronic equipment; and packaging wastes, as well as household, business and industrial waste arisings. Each year the industry contributes around £500 million to the Scottish economy, and because of a decline in the UK’s production of steel and other metals, the majority of recycled metals produced in Scotland are exported; generating around £300m in foreign exchange earnings.

BMRA has previously commented on consultations by Scottish Government published November 2011 and February 2013 and on an early draft of the Bill circulated in March 2014.

We are disappointed that despite our continued engagement with Scottish Government, on seeking a robust and equitable licensing regime for all metal dealers, the Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill (“AWLS”) published in May 2014 for scrutiny appears to do nothing to address the significant loopholes and weaknesses we identified in previous submissions.

The comments below are based on a thorough assessment of the AWLS Bill, our experience of the reforms to scrap metal dealer licensing in England and Wales and extensive consultation with all of our Scottish members. Our comments consider the content of the AWLS Bill and also the consequences of leaving certain other elements of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 (“CGSA”) un-amended.
The changes recommended by BMRA in this document are designed to cover the key issues. However, these observations are not exhaustive and we are prepared to discuss these and propose further amendments that would serve to strengthen and aid the effective implementation of the AWLS Bill.

Major Issues

Cash trading
We welcome any measures that will deter metal theft by removing opportunities for the anonymous disposal of stolen material for cash. However, this has to be on the basis that the AWLS Bill will minimise the creation of new unfair competitive opportunities for those operating on the margins of the licensing regime at the expense of compliant dealers.

The AWLS Bill seeks to ban cash payments using virtually identical text to the Scrap Metal Dealers Act 2013 (England & Wales), but contains significant weaknesses relating to the licensing regime itself that would provide readily-exploitable loopholes for unscrupulous operators.

Date of processing
S33B(4)(b) of the CGSA (as amended) calls for a dealer to record the date on which metal is processed, including its description and weight prior to the processing operation.

Such a requirement is wholly unrealistic in a typical metal recycling facility where material is continually received and sorted for processing in economical quantities. Compliance with the requirement would require the batching of all material through processes that are intrinsically continuous. This would require a substantial increase in the land allocated and licensed by SEPA for the purpose of metal recycling and would threaten the economic viability of many Scottish businesses.

Register of licences
It appears that responsibility to maintain registers of metal dealers remains with each licensing authority (CGSA Schedule 1, para 14 refers), although an itinerant's licence will remain valid for collections anywhere in Scotland (CGSA S 32(2) refers).

Local registers may be appropriate for the other activities regulated by the CGSA. However, metal trading, particularly by itinerant metal dealers, frequently involves collections and transportation throughout multiple local authority jurisdictions. That means enforcement agencies may have to access and consult registers for distant local authorities in order to establish whether an individual or a business is licensed.

Failure to set up a national register of metal dealers, potentially managed by SEPA who already maintain registers of all these businesses in one form or other, would constitute a lost opportunity to assist enforcement agencies in the detection and prosecution of metal theft and breaches of the CGSA.
Production of licences
We can find no requirement for a metal dealer or itinerant metal dealer to display a copy of a licence.

CGSA S5(4) allows a person who may be carrying on an activity which requires licensing five days to produce the licence. We consider that placing an obligation on metal dealers to display copies of their licence on their premises, and for itinerant metal collectors to display their licence/s on their collection vehicles, would be a useful measure to assist enforcement agencies in identifying illegal dealers.

Verification of identity
CGSA (as amended) S33B(5)(c) says that a dealer must “keep a copy of any document produced by a person to verify that person’s name and address”.

However, we cannot find any requirement placed on a dealer to verify the identity of a person supplying or receiving metal for recycling (see below under “Methods of payment”). If such a requirement is introduced it is essential that the person whose identity is to be verified, and the form of acceptable documents, is set out clearly and unambiguously.

Methods of payment
Electronic transfer definitions and associated record-keeping requirements are very poorly defined in the AWLS Bill. ‘Payment in kind’ is not addressed.

A notable weakness of the regime in England and Wales is a poor definition of acceptable payment methods. The payment mechanisms that would be permitted under the CGSA (as amended) S33A are equally unclear. For example, in S33A(2)(a) there is no restriction on the person to whom a non-transferrable cheque may be made out; it does not have to be the seller or any person whose identity has been verified (if indeed there is any requirement for verification of any person’s identity - see above under “Verification of identity”). Furthermore, S33A(2)(b) not only fails to link the seller and payee for electronic transfers, it also does not define “account”, nor does it set any parameters for traceability of transfer between an account and the seller.

S33A of the Act as amended defines acceptable forms of payment for metal by a person who falls within the definition of a “metal dealer” or an “itinerant metal dealer” (S37 refers), but does not restrict that to metal for recycling, indeed the nature of the metal is neither defined in the CGSA, nor mentioned in the AWLS Bill.

That might be seen to be a useful means of avoiding ambiguity over when an item might qualify as scrap. However, banning anyone who fits the definition of “metal dealer” or “itinerant metal dealer” from buying any metallic item for cash seems to be a draconian measure and is unlikely to have been the intention of the drafter. The absences of a definition of metal, or of any reference to licensing regimes or restrictions on methods of trading relating to metal, are serious weaknesses in the legislation.

It would be appropriate to re-work the AWLS Bill to make it clear that the ban on cash payment relates to metal traded in the course of a metal dealer’s/itinerant metal dealer’s business, and not (for example) to consumer goods he might buy. A natural consequence is that a clear definition of metal, including when an end of life vehicle may be considered scrap, is essential.

Metal dealer definition
The Bill’s definitions of a metal dealer and an itinerant metal dealer in the CGSA S37 are not changed by the AWLS Bill and require a person both to buy and to sell metal before they qualify.

One significant implication is that a typical itinerant who collects from households without making payment for the items or materials he collects would not require a licence, and would thus remain outside the scope of the AWLS Bill. Furthermore, there is scope for a person collecting general waste and other materials, but actually earning a substantial proportion of his income from separating out and selling scrap metal, to escape the licensing regime. Similarly, skip hire operators and demolition contractors generating a substantial amount of their revenue from sale of scrap metal could escape the definition and need for licensing. Furthermore car breakers are not covered by the definition, a situation exacerbated by the absence of a definition of scrap.

We note that CGSA S37(2) excludes manufacturers’ buying of scrap for manufacture of other articles from the definition of metal dealer, providing scope for creative interpretation of both “manufacture” and “other articles” to evade licensing. For example, a metal dealer who has a small furnace for the manufacture of aluminium ingot would fall outside the scope of the AWLS Bill. We believe that the AWLS Bill should be amended to capture “all persons carrying out a business consisting of buying or selling scrap metal”, with some specific exemptions for manufacturers disposing of their own surplus materials or offcuts. A clear and comprehensive definition of metal dealer, to include vehicle dismantlers and other businesses generating a significant proportion of their income from sale of scrap metal is essential.

Powers of Search and Seizure
We consider the existing powers vested in police officers under Section 60(1)(c) of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 to enter and search premises occupied by a metal dealer without warrant to be draconian, particularly in the light of the levelling of playing field for regulation of all metal dealers through the removal of the exemption warrant system. The AWLS Bill provides an opportunity to regularize the situation by removing specific additional powers in respect of metal dealers’ premises and vehicles.

Local Government and Regeneration Committee – Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill

Name/Organisation: Federation Scottish Theatre

1. Air Weapons Licensing

You may respond to all the questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

13. In what ways will the creation of an air weapons licensing system in Scotland contribute to preserving public order and safety, reducing crime and advancing public health policy?

No comment

14. Is there sufficient provision, or sufficient capacity to provide, suitable numbers of air weapons clubs across all areas of Scotland for use by registered air weapons owners/users?

No comment

15. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for personal/recreational use?

No comment
16. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those aged 14 to 17 who use air weapons?

No comment

Very few theatres use live air weapons in performances, most preferring to use dummy or ‘prop’ weapons. Where they do use air weapons, it would be helpful to clarify if they will need to have a licence even if they are hiring from a licensed supplier for a defined period (as opposed to owning and keeping an air weapon permanently on their premises) or whether it is sufficient to apply for a temporary police permit. We understand the proposed exemption is for the individual performer handling a weapon in performance and not for the theatre management who may have to store a hired air weapon overnight between performances.

18. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for competitive sporting purposes?

No comment

19. Is it equitable for those applying for an air weapons certificate to pay a fee which cannot be refundable irrespective of whether a certificate is granted or not?
20. Will the air weapons licensing system have a positive or negative impact on other areas of the public sector in Scotland (eg. The work of local government, public agencies etc.)?

No comment

21. What, if any, might the unintended consequences of introducing an air weapons licensing system in Scotland be?

No comment

22. Do you have any other comments to make on air weapons licensing aspects of the Bill?

No comment
6. Civic Licensing – Theatre Licensing

You may respond to all the questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

47. Will there be any impacts during the transitional period between ending the current theatre licence and starting the public entertainment licence?

Whilst welcoming the simplification that this rationalisation of the licensing regime would create, we would ask that all licensing authorities and licensed premises are given sufficient time and guidance in advance of the transition to make any necessary adjustments in order to comply with the change in licensing arrangements. We would also propose that licensing authorities allow licensees to transfer to the new licensing regime at the end of their current license period in order to avoid both a backlog of license renewals all at the same time and any additional expense for the licensee by effectively having to renew their licence before the old one has expired.

48. Are there additional costs or resource implications on theatres or licensing authorities?

It is hard to predict if there will be additional costs for theatres as licensing authorities do not necessarily set the same charges for their PELs as for their Theatre Licenses. This would require further research. Some venues because of the nature of their operation hold both a PEL and a Theatre Licence and for these venues we anticipate a saving in both time and money.

49. How should licensing authorities integrate their current fee charging structure into their public entertainment regime?
We would certainly expect that licensing authorities do not increase their current fees for PELs as we understand that the cost is determined on a self-funding basis and we would see the simplification of the licensing regime for theatre as, at worst, cost neutral for licensing authorities and, at best, cost beneficial.
7. Civic Licensing – Sexual Entertainment Venues

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

50. What are the consequences of operating the new licensing regime using the definitions set out at section 68 of the Bill?

- ‘sexual entertainment venue’
- ‘audience’
- ‘financial gain’
- ‘organiser’
- ‘premises’
- ‘sexual entertainment’, and
- ‘display of nudity’

We believe the definition as currently composed runs the risk of both vexatious complaint and potential self-censorship of artists for fear of falling within the scope of the legislation. We would propose the removal of the word ‘any’ from the definition as this leaves open the potential for vexatious complaint and the removal of the word ‘verbal’ which might then include any dialogue of a sexual nature.

We would also like to see included in the Bill an explicit statement that this is not intended to include ‘artistic performances whose primary purpose is artistic, creative or educational’ and an exemption for ‘arts venues and venues taking part in an arts festival.’

We would also expect any accompanying guidance to local authorities to emphasise the intention of the act not to limit or censor artistic performance so that local authorities, venue programmers and artists are clear about the purpose and scope of the legislation.

51. The Bill specifies that a venue hosting sexual entertainment on three occasions or less within a 12 month period would not be treated as a sexual entertainment venue: does this have any unintended consequences?

No comment

52. Local licensing authorities will be able to set the number of sexual entertainment venues in their area to below the existing level, or zero: are there any advantages or disadvantages to this approach?

No comment

53. The Bill relies mainly on the existing licensing regime for sex shops as set out in section 44 and Schedule 2 of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 (application, notification, objections and representations, revocation of licences etc., enforcement and appeals): is this mechanism adequate for the licensing of sexual entertainment venues - if not, please explain why?

No comment
54. Are there any barriers to licensing authorities operating the new licensing regime?

No comment

55. Civic Licensing

Do you have any other comments to make on the civic licensing aspects of the Bill?

No comment

1. Air Weapons Licensing

You may respond to all the questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

13. In what ways will the creation of an air weapons licensing system in Scotland contribute to preserving public order and safety, reducing crime and advancing public health policy?

We see no perceivable benefit in public order or public safety that would not be achieved by the diligent use of existing legislation, only law abiding citizens will apply for a licence, criminal users though very few will by their very nature continue to abuse air weapons without regard. The current control regimen has seen airgun incidents fall year on year (71% in 5 years) to a low of 171 for 2013. The vast majority of offences being minor with very few serious incidents where actual harm was caused.

14. Is there sufficient provision, or sufficient capacity to provide, suitable numbers of air weapons clubs across all areas of Scotland for use by registered air weapons owners/ users?
Currently only a minority of airgun users frequent clubs, most airguns are used in vermin control or private land target shooting, the club structure we have in place covers approximately but no more than 5% of all airgun owners. Clubs are currently run by volunteers, while we have initiatives to increase land availability working with public bodies and have established a framework to make it easier for clubs to get started we still depend greatly on the response from either the private or public land holder.

Many airgun users have individuals permissions to shoot on private land on an ad hoc basis which works well for very small groups but land holders in general will have concerns over increased numbers that would be involved in the creation of formal “Clubs”

Other than disciplines run by the International Shooting Sports Federation such as those seen at Olympics or Commonwealth Games Airgun shooting tends to be an outdoor or field activity in general while there is some small infrastructure and access to a small number of shared, licenced indoor and Firearms ranges these are only beneficial for those to train in “ISSF” like disciplines what is greatly is required access to suitable forestry and lands suited to airgun “field” type shooting. A small club with a single Field Target course requires a minimum of 4 - 8 Acres with a suitable safe backdrop area as compared to an indoor range which requires a building of around 50M x 25M

15. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for personal/recreational use?

The implementation of legislation may drive many out of the sport entirely or more likely with the requirement to hold a licence many will choose to move to traditional full power firearms. There will be the additional financial burden from the licence and significant costs if they need to travel to a club to shoot as opposed to on their local premises, while there are a good number of clubs in the central belt out with that area it can be a two to three hour drive to access any club facilities sometimes further for Field Target clubs.

For those engaged in vermin / pest control the lack of access to practice on private ground outwith their vermin control area may impact their ability to sustain their skill levels.

In addition where it is currently sufficient to have approval to shoot over suitable lands granted by a land owner, indication is that further approval by the chief of police may be required removing access to safe shooting grounds, impacting the rural target shooter and domestic vermin control further increasing the burden on Firearms control officers to review such sites.
16. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those aged 14 to 17 who use air weapons?

SARPA have concern over the licencing of juniors, not in the fact that they have every right to shoot but by that in licencing individuals who are in effect minors may pass the message that responsibility lies solely with them rather than parents or responsible guardians who need to ensure that airguns are controlled and only used in safe responsible manner. There are a great number of junior shooters who take part in air rifle target shooting as part out door activities such as Boys Brigade, Scouts, Air Training Corp, Cadets this legislation should not get in the way of delivering safe and educational exposure to shooting as a sport.

17. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for commercial/professional reasons (for example: for pest control; as part of the tourist/hunting season; as part of fairs, paintballing centre, entertainment sector etc.)?

Scotland is renowned for its shooting heritage with many traditional “country sports” type hotels and outdoor pursuits venues providing airgun shooting as an visitor attraction and activity. The implementation of this licence scheme may well see the removal of airgun shooting events from many of our rural tourist attractions, hotels and other event organisations directly impacting tourism and shooting sport venue revenues. In addition it will put at jobs at risk for a great many who work delivering airgun shooting at these venues.

Many come to our nation to enjoy the outdoor activities and Airgun shooting is often the only practical and accessible form of shooting available.

Currently Pest Control can be ether a professional or personal service, may farmers and land holders have a mutual agreement with airgun shooters and rely on individuals who they have built up a trust relationship with. Any professional pest control services offered from across the border would also require some form of long term licence solution or visitor permit to operate cross border.

18. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for competitive sporting purposes?
This licence scheme will directly impact the ability of competitors to access the sport from across borders and from other nations. Currently we have a common licence scheme across the UK and our events are accessible to many nations, this legislation could make Scotland a shooting backwater unable to hold major international events, Competitors will travel to less officious countries with less red tape to be deal with.

On top of ISSF, national, commonwealth events there are many other airgun shooting events such as Field Target, Hunter Field Target, Bench rest, Iron Plate etc. etc. many of which see competitors traveling from abroad. Most of these sports are practiced in the outdoor natural arena.

On the domestic front the impact may be minimal depending on the application of the legislation, many clubs operate with private land holders to deliver competition grounds, as well as other events which take place in conjunction with country fairs and public events, if each “site” or event is required to be licenced, public involvement and competition will become a thing of the past with competition being restricted to far fewer “Approved” sites.

19. Is it equitable for those applying for an air weapons certificate to pay a fee which cannot be refundable irrespective of whether a certificate is granted or not?

This position is NOT equitable, currently individuals may own air guns for many reasons all perfectly legal and law abiding, should any application from such an individual be declined no charge should be leveraged against them legally or financially.

Many individuals hold equipment to the value of thousands of pounds, if forced to surrender or sell that equipment given the potential negative impact on airgun values from a flood of equipment hitting the market not only should there be no charge but there should be a compensation system to address the financial lost being imposed through no fault of their own.

20. Will the air weapons licensing system have a positive or negative impact on other areas of the public sector in Scotland (eg. The work of local government, public agencies etc.)?
There is the potential for a huge negative impact on the public sector in the loss of man hours spent on what is essentially a non-issue, the current firearms control structure is barely able to meet the need of the 70,000 current firearms owners, adding around 50,000-150,000 air weapon licences and potential home/site visits for any deemed as requiring further attention will impact the public purse to a far greater level than is currently stated in the Financial impact study.

21. What, if any, might the unintended consequences of introducing an air weapons licensing system in Scotland be?

This bill may cause a large migration of shooters from air guns to firearms straining further both Firearms control structure and the supporting club structures.

We can also see large number of airguns dumped on the grey market or thrown in skips where children or irresponsible individuals could access them and create a far greater public risk.

Legislation may also cause the criminalisation of any who may hold an airgun who may not apply for a licence in appropriate time or though not knowing they are accountable for them in the case of guns airguns held for youths or held in storage.

It may also cause significant damage to a growing sport at the grass roots level from which the likes of Sian Bruce, Caroline Brownlie, David Owen and Jen McIntosh Scotland’s most decorated Olympian and others stemmed from.

By the introduction of new offences created by this bill crime statistics will inevitably increase as people fall foul of any new regulation, the unfortunate fact is that it will not create any further public safety benefit and may through uncontrolled “dumped” air weapons put them in the very hands of those who would misuse them ether through ignorance or deliberate act.

22. Do you have any other comments to make on air weapons licensing aspects of the Bill?
Currently there is no issue with airgun users, the fact is that as a member of the public you are at far greater risk of injury from dogs, golfers, cyclists or attending football, we see no benefit to this legislation as proposed.

We can see that regardless of the very positive input and constructive discussions held between the SFCP and invited bodies the content of those discussions have been largely ignored.

Should a licence be introduced which we believe it will be a large and ineffective waste of public resource, any scheme needs to be proportionate, fairer and far lighter than the current proposal, which as it stands exceeds the requirements for Shotgun ownership.

This proposal has no majority support from either the shooting fraternity or the general public,. A fact demonstrated by both the petition of 20,600 against the bill and the 87% or respondents to the Consultation process who rejected the need for change.

We still support the position that no further regulation is required other than the application of existing laws.

In relation to the bill there remains the option to either remove this proposal from the bill entirely or put a proportionate and responsible system in place.

RFD’s are already obliged to register anyone buying a new airgun under existing legislation something airgun buyers have lived with for almost a decade, expansion of this to facilitate self registration through an online system with an automated PNC check would cost far less, engage with a wider audience delivering the sort of data that may help the Airgun retailers and police identify legitimate airgun users freeing police time to focus on the criminal element who given their nature would not register.

The underlying causes of airgun use will not be addressed by further legislation, what could drive the statistics down even further would be a public education program ensuring shooters, parental guardians and the public at large are informed on the facts and obligations under the laws we have today.

You may respond to all the questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

8. Do you consider that the Bill has any implications for meeting Scotland’s climate change commitments? Please explain.

9. Do you consider that the Bill has any implications for meeting Scotland’s equality and/or human rights commitments? Please explain.

10. Do you consider that the Bill has any implications for preventative spending and/or public services reform? Please explain.

11. Do you consider that the Bill has any implications in relation to European Union issues? Please explain.

12. Do you have any other comments on the impact of the proposals contained in the Bill relation to Scottish Government objectives?

As an organisation we feel that the Bill should aim for a light regulatory touch with minimum cost when it impacts on bona fide sport clubs such as Scottish Tetrathlon. This will help limit potential detrimental effects this Bill might have on the various Scottish Government objectives and initiatives in Scottish Sport such as:- "Girls on the Move" (75% of our participants are girls) and "Giving Young People a Sporting Chance" all our participants are under 21.
2. Air Weapons Licensing

You may respond to all the questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

13. In what ways will the creation of an air weapons licensing system in Scotland contribute to preserving public order and safety, reducing crime and advancing public health policy?

We don’t think it will.

Forcing young children to have to shoot at existing club premises where the number of shooters using airguns will increase dramatically if the bill is passed, will place them in a more heavily lead contaminated environment, this would be counter to public health policies.

In addition our members are taught to be extremely safety conscious and look after their pistols responsibly as they are given training by Scottish Tetrathlon Range Officers.

14. Is there sufficient provision, or sufficient capacity to provide, suitable numbers of air weapons clubs across all areas of Scotland for use by registered air weapons owners/users?

There is not currently sufficient provision of air weapons clubs across all areas of Scotland. Many members of Scottish Tetrathlon are not in an area that can support a traditional club due to geography.

Members currently train with Scottish Tetrathlon in various locations and practice on private land without incurring the cost of being members of an Air Weapon Club. If the bill was passed and Scottish Tetrathlon (under the auspice of Pony Club) were to become an approved air weapon club which uses multiple premises across Scotland this would provide sufficient capacity. By virtue of Schedule 1 Exemption 1 Scottish Tetrathlon members would be able to train with Scottish Tetrathlon at various premises and on private land without requiring individual certificates. Schedule 1 Exemption 1 would need to be slightly amended to reflect this.

As many of our members are under 14 years of age Scottish Tetrathlon request that Schedule 1 Exemption 1 be amended to allow a parent/guardian/adult over 21 be allowed to supervise both training and competitions.
15. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for personal/recreational use?

If each of our members were to require an air weapons certificate it will add cost and bureaucracy to a sport/organisation which is well controlled and teaches young people responsibility and respect. If all our members were required to go through the time consuming and costly process of both obtaining a licence and joining an additional club, our members would be unlikely to take up the sport and may also choose to leave the sport.

If passed as is, members will not be able to repair their air weapons either at their own homes or during a competition without the presence of a registered firearms dealer. There are not sufficient firearms dealers to service this requirement and they will add additional cost to enter this sport. Scottish Tetrathlon has proved to be the grass roots organisation for many young athletes who have gone on to become elite athletes in both shooting and modern pentathlon.

We currently have 200 members regularly competing approx 150 are girls and 75% are under 14 years of age.

Many Scots have gone on to compete at elite level, representing GB and part of the World Class program. Currently competing are 2012 World Champion and 2012 Olympian Mhairi Spence who is from Farr, Inveruries. Freyja Prentice, reserve athlete for London 2012, junior individual medal winner at World and European level. Joanna Muir from Castle Douglas spent time on top of the world junior ranking list this year. Aberdeen's Eilidh Prise has won individual youth world and European medals and started 2014 on top of the youth world ranking. Maili McKenzie from Dumfries represented GB at junior world and European championships this year. Mhairi, Freyja, Jo and Eilidh are part of a group of 7 women on the GB world class program on Podium and Podium Potential which is clearly dominated by Scots women. They all started at grass roots level through Scottish Tetrathlon, moving onto Pentathlon as a result of the high standard of performance they showed in Scottish Tetrathlon.

Of the current Scottish Pistol squad, both junior and senior, all bar 1 of the ladies came through Scottish Tetrathlon and the majority of the junior boys too. Both the Liddon sisters who came through Scottish Tetrathlon and now coach for Scottish Tetrathlon have been invited onto project Rio.

In addition the Scottish Team competing at the Junior International Air Gun Competition at Bisley this year was made up of 3 boys and 4 girls who all bar one came via Scottish Tetrathlon and collected 2 bronze and 2 silver medals.

Airgun shooting is a sport accessible to all ages and abilities. This bill will deter people starting recreationally due to the bureaucracy and so stop the development of competitive shooters at all levels.
16. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those aged 14 to 17 who use air weapons?

The majority of our members are under 17 and as such the air weapons licensing systems would have a huge effect on them. If however we were allowed to become an approved air weapon club and therefore exempt from individual licences this would work for our organisation.

Each person will require an air weapons certificate which will add cost and bureaucracy.

They will not be able to repair their weapons without a registered firearms dealer, again adding cost and time. In addition as they are 14-17 they will probably be unable to drive and therefore find it difficult to access a firearms dealer especially in the more remote areas of Scotland.

18. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for competitive sporting purposes?

All competitors require a licence incurring cost and bureaucracy. This would require event and visitor permits. This would be totally untenable for our sport as we often have more than 20 visitors attending our competitions and training events which run monthly. Having tried and failed to get visitor permits to take air pistols across to Northern Ireland we know how difficult and impractical such a requirement is.
If Scottish Tetrathlon were to become an approved air weapons club as requested previously, according to our interpretation of Schedule 1 section 1b(i) we would not require an event or visitor licence which would allow us to continue to run our competitions which are only open to and attended by our members.

19. Is it equitable for those applying for an air weapons certificate to pay a fee which cannot be refundable irrespective of whether a certificate is granted or not?

We do not agree that a fee should be payable for unsuccessful applications.

20. Will the air weapons licensing system have a positive or negative impact on other areas of the public sector in Scotland (eg. The work of local government, public agencies etc.)?

We think that the air weapons licensing system will have a negative effect on the public sector in Scotland. Given that the Firearms teams are already over stretched, resourcing this requirement for licensing of air weapons, clubs, permits will place unprecedented demand on already slim resources.

21. What, if any, might the unintended consequences of introducing an air weapons licensing system in Scotland be?

We believe that in making it difficult or costly to run our events (run, shoot, swim and ride) people will choose not to put themselves through the difficulty of obtaining an air weapons certificate, a visitors permit or joining an additional club, nor to pay the additional costs we will need to charge at competitions to take account of the cost of obtaining event permits. This will mean that our grass roots organisation that currently has up to 200 children from 8-25 competing monthly will no longer exist. In the future we will not have the next generation of Modern Pentathlete or Air Pistol Olympians as they will have no foundation.

The risk of introducing a requirement for an airgun license may encourage applicants to go the full hog and apply for a shotgun/firearms certificate that will thereby increase the number of more high powered/more lethal weapon ownership.

22. Do you have any other comments to make on air weapons licensing aspects of the Bill?

We respect the bill and are keen to work with it. However as it is currently drafted it would be unworkable for us. If however Scottish Tetrathlon were to become an approved Air Weapons Club with multiple premises for training and competitions across Scotland and allowing all our members and visitors to use air weapons without holding individual certificates, as detailed above, this would allow us to work within the bill and the continuation of our sport along with the added benefit of a pipeline of elite athletes into Modern Pentathlon and the sport of Air Pistol Shooting.

Allow Scottish Tetrathlon via Pony Club to become an approved air weapons club.

Allow all members within Scottish Tetrathlon NOT to require an air weapons certificate, but that Scottish Tetrathlon will hold the air weapons certificate for all weapons used.

Allow Scottish Tetrathlon Qualified Range Officer to repair, transfer or sell air weapons.

Allow anyone visiting from England, Northern Ireland or Wales to be exempt from visitors permits.

Do not limit the size of visiting groups.

1. Equalities, Climate Change and other Scottish Government objectives

You may respond to all the questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

8. Do you consider that the Bill has any implications for meeting Scotland’s climate change commitments? Please explain.

9. Do you consider that the Bill has any implications for meeting Scotland’s equality and/or human rights commitments? Please explain.

10. Do you consider that the Bill has any implications for preventative spending and/or public services reform? Please explain.
11. Do you consider that the Bill has any implications in relation to European Union issues? Please explain.

12. Do you have any other comments on the impact of the proposals contained in the Bill relation to Scottish Government objectives?
2. Air Weapons Licensing

You may respond to all the questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

13. In what ways will the creation of an air weapons licensing system in Scotland contribute to preserving public order and safety, reducing crime and advancing public health policy?

14. Is there sufficient provision, or sufficient capacity to provide, suitable numbers of air weapons clubs across all areas of Scotland for use by registered air weapons owners/users?

15. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for personal/recreational use?
16. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those aged 14 to 17 who use air weapons?

18. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for competitive sporting purposes?

19. Is it equitable for those applying for an air weapons certificate to pay a fee which cannot be refundable irrespective of whether a certificate is granted or not?
20. Will the air weapons licensing system have a positive or negative impact on other areas of the public sector in Scotland (eg. The work of local government, public agencies etc.)?

21. What, if any, might the unintended consequences of introducing an air weapons licensing system in Scotland be?

22. Do you have any other comments to make on air weapons licensing aspects of the Bill?
3. General Licensing Issues

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

23. Is the current Scottish licensing regime, as set out in the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 and the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005, fit for purpose?

24. Should a licensing system seek to regulate individual behaviour or communities of space (eg. ‘city space’ etc.)?

25. In what way should the licensing system in Scotland interact with the support the land use planning system, community planning and regeneration?

26. How does the licensing system in Scotland assist with the delivery of sustainable development and economic balanced areas?

27. In what way does the licensing system in Scotland support health and planning, addressing health inequalities and public health wellbeing outcomes?
4. Alcohol Licensing

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

28. In what ways will the Bill’s provisions on alcohol licensing allow for reductions in crime and the preservation of public order?

29. Are there any other measures which should be taken to assist in the reduction of crime and the preservation of public order?

30. In what ways will the provisions in the Bill enhance the licensing objectives set out in the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005?
31. In what ways will the re-introduction of the “fit and proper person” test assist with the implementation of the licensing objectives set out in the 2005 act?

32. Have there been any unintended consequences arising from the 2005 Act, for example, in rural areas or the economic regeneration of areas?

33. Which, if any, types of spent relevant offences should be required to be disclosed and what do you think the benefits of disclosure will be?

34. Do you have any other comments to make on the alcohol licensing aspects of the Bill?
Name/Organisation:

5. Taxi and Private Hire Car Licensing

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

35. What benefits should the licensing of taxis and private hire cars deliver for customers?

The safety of the public should be the priority of all Licensing Authorities and Councils. This safety should not only consist of the suitability, condition and roadworthiness of any vehicle who either operate as a Taxi or a Private Hire Car but should encompass the drivers and operators of such vehicles.

36. In what ways do customers, providers of taxi/private hire car services and local authorities benefit from the two-tier licensing regime for taxis and private hire cars?

In areas where two tier systems operate, a clear delineation of type i.e. Purpose Built Hackney type carriages which are fully Wheel chair Accessible and this allows the public to know which can be hailed on the street as a “there and then hire” and a Private Hire Car can only be pre-booked through a Licensed Booking Office. This distinction is blurred by certain areas using saloon type cars as Taxi’s. A high provision of W.A.V. is therefore desirable to meets the needs and rights of disabled people and many saloon cars cannot provide this flexibility.

In many areas Taxi drivers have to go through a test of their knowledge of their area whereas at present the majority of Private Hire drivers are not required to do so. It is far better for the public to use a vehicle where the driver has the knowledge to take them to their destination without delay or referring to maps or other means of navigation.

The Public can make the choice but only a two tier system can give it to them!

37. The Government states that a radical overhaul of the current two-tier licensing regime would “clearly require a very high level of resource and would cause significant disruption for the trade, local authorities, the police and ultimately the travelling public”. What are your views on this and would the potential costs and disruptions outweigh any potential benefits of a unified system?

If a single tier system were to be introduced the effect would be catastrophic and the disruption would take years to sort out!
The first and most important problem be “what would the criteria” be for a Taxi?
If they were all Purpose Built traditional type hackney taxis, operators who at present use saloon type cars will be faced with a huge increase in the cost of operating a “Taxi” as the saloon cars in use at present are in all occasions less than half the cost of a traditional W.A.V. This would force many operators out of business and lead to a significant increase in costs to the public and the and could lead to a shortfall in the amount of vehicles available for hire.
If on the other hand “saloon cars” were the vehicle of choice operators of W.A.V. taxis would move to the cheaper saloon car option. (At present a purpose built taxi costs in the region of £35.000 as against £15.000 for a car) These saloons offer better M.P.G. and comfort for the driver.
Saloon cars would probably sound the death knell of companies manufacturing purpose built Taxis as a significant decrease in sales, due to the purchase of cheaper alternatives.

38. Do the changes made by sections 60 (overprovision of private hire car licences) and 61 (testing of private hire car drivers) of the Bill strike the right balance in terms of introducing greater consistency while maintaining justifiable differences?
There is a real need to put a ceiling on the issue of Private Hire Licences. There is a real bone of contention that the unrestricted issues of P/H licences is to provide the public with a better service or choice but in reality it is merely a revenue raiser for cash strapped councils who do not research if there is a need for these licences. This creates a situation where P/H’s in an area with over provision gravitate to other areas where there is the opportunity to “Pirate” or illegally ply for hire. This situation is evident within Glasgow City Council’s Licensed where P/H’s from the adjoining areas “trade illegally” with impunity. The need for a statutory role for police in curbing this is urgently required and despite repeated meetings and requests for action very little is carried out. The reluctance of the Procurator Fiscal to pursue these instances is understandable with their work load but never the less these people are breaking the law. English Councils routinely prosecute for not only illegally plying for hire but prosecute for driving without the appropriate insurance. The issue of statutory powers for Enforcement Officers to issue fixed penalty notices for offences should be seriously considered. In Scotland there are around 20,000 Taxis and P/H’s licensed in Scotland and 10,000 are in the Glasgow and surrounding areas and the situation is out of control. Effective and punitive action is urgently required!

39. Do you have any views on the section 62 provisions bringing vehicles contracted for exclusive use for 24 or more hours within the licensing regime for taxis and private hire cars, and should any exemptions be included in the Bill?

To protect the public from coming into contact with unsuitable persons it is desirable that all such companies are brought into the licensing umbrella.
6. Scrap Metal Dealer Licensing

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

40. Taking the proposals in sections 63 to 66 of the Bill together, how will they have the desired effect of strengthening the metal dealers' licensing regime to the extent that metal theft and related criminal activity is reduced?

41. In your view, could the Bill be further strengthened in any way, for example, by including an accreditation scheme for metal dealers?

42. Removal of exemption warrant - do you wish to comment on the proposal to remove the exemption warrant system?
43. Removal of requirement to retain metal on-site - what impact will the proposal to remove the retention of metal requirement have on the enforcement of the licensing regime and prevention of criminal activities?

44. Forms of payment - what is your view on the proposal to go 'cashless' and is there merit in considering whether metal dealers could be allowed to operate using cash for only very small transactions, which could be limited to a certain number per month?
45. Forms of identification and record keeping:

In line with the Scrap Metal Dealers Act 2013, the Bill adds additional record keeping requirements to a metal dealer's licence including recording the means by which a seller’s name and address was verified and retaining a copy of the document, and the method of payment and a copy of the payment document. The Bill will also require a metal dealer to record information in books with serially numbered pages or by means of an electronic device, and to keep separate records at each place of business. Such information and documents are to be kept for three rather than the current two years.

How important is it that the record keeping requirements reflect those in the Scrap Metal Dealers Act 2013, and do you agree with the Scottish Government that the proposed record keeping requirements are not unduly burdensome?
46. Mandatory and discretionary licensing requirements:

The Scottish Ministers can impose mandatory licensing requirements, such as those included in the Bill relating to record keeping and the identification of customers. In addition, local authorities can also attach discretionary requirements to licences in their areas.

Does the Bill get the balance right between mandatory and discretionary licensing requirements? Should the Bill include other mandatory conditions for obtaining a metal dealer’s licence, such as installing CCTV at metal dealers’ premises or in relation to labelling of metal and ‘forensic coding’?
7. Civic Licensing – Theatre Licensing

You may respond to all the questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

47. Will there be any impacts during the transitional period between ending the current theatre licence and starting the public entertainment licence?

48. Are there additional costs or resource implications on theatres or licensing authorities?

49. How should licensing authorities integrate their current fee charging structure into their public entertainment regime?
8. Civic Licensing – Sexual Entertainment Venues

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

50. What are the consequences of operating the new licensing regime using the definitions set out at section 68 of the Bill?

- 'sexual entertainment venue'
- 'audience'
- 'financial gain'
- 'organiser'
- 'premises'
- 'sexual entertainment', and
- 'display of nudity'

51. The Bill specifies that a venue hosting sexual entertainment on three occasions or less within a 12 month period would not be treated as a sexual entertainment venue: does this have any unintended consequences?
52. Local licensing authorities will be able to set the number of sexual entertainment venues in their area to below the existing level, or zero: are there any advantages or disadvantages to this approach?

53. The Bill relies mainly on the existing licensing regime for sex shops as set out in section 44 and Schedule 2 of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 (application, notification, objections and representations, revocation of licences etc., enforcement and appeals): is this mechanism adequate for the licensing of sexual entertainment venues - if not, please explain why?

54. Are there any barriers to licensing authorities operating the new licensing regime?
55. Civic Licensing

Do you have any other comments to make on the civic licensing aspects of the Bill?
Thank you for responding to the Local Government and Regeneration Committee’s Call for Evidence on the Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill. All submissions will be examined and considered as part of the Committee’s scrutiny of the Bill.

2. Air Weapons Licensing

You may respond to all the questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

13. In what ways will the creation of an air weapons licensing system in Scotland contribute to preserving public order and safety, reducing crime and advancing public health policy?

It is unlikely to meet these goals as it will predominantly impact on the law-abiding and demand considerable police involvement at a time of shrinking resources.

14. Is there sufficient provision, or sufficient capacity to provide, suitable numbers of air weapons clubs across all areas of Scotland for use by registered air weapons owners/users?

Presumably the majority of existing approved small-bore clubs would apply for air weapon approval as will existing air rifle clubs and field target clubs, but this question can only be answered meaningfully if the distribution of existing clubs was known and the criteria for air weapon clubs had been promulgated.

It should be noted that there appears to be no reason why a shooting range using air rifles (but not air pistols) could not continue to benefit from Section 11(4) of the 1968 Act without need for approval.

It is most regrettable that the proposal for a long-term visitors permit for competitive shooters has not been pursued.

15. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for personal/recreational use?
Expense and loss of flexibility in pursuit of the sport. All certificates should be conditioned to permit target shooting on private land, thus allowing practice and helping to ensure that those engaged in quarry shooting or pest control can maintain their skills. As an example of lack of flexibility, a person with a certificate granted on the basis of membership of an approved air weapon club would need to obtain a variation if he wished to hunt or engage in pest control. Informal target shooting, properly conducted, is safe and should not be discouraged. Consultation is required to establish safe practice in gardens and urban areas.

16. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those aged 14 to 17 who use air weapons?

The exclusion of young persons from hunting with an air rifle is most regrettable. One outcome is likely to be an increase in applications for firearm and/or shotgun certificates by young persons who wish to hunt. Quarry shooting represents a major income stream for the Scottish rural economy and many young shots begin their hunting careers with an air rifle.

17. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for commercial/professional reasons (for example: for pest control; as part of the tourist/hunting season; as part of fairs, paintballing centre, entertainment sector etc.)?

A long-term visitor’s permit would also be useful for professional pest controllers based in England but with business in Scotland. At no time in the debate about air weapon licensing in Scotland has there been, to BSSC’s knowledge, any concern with regard to public safety about the commercial or professional use of air weapons. Licensing will just add another cost and a complication to small businesses.

18. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for competitive sporting purposes?
Primarily as a disincentive to competitors from outside Scotland. A long-term visitor’s permit for competitive shooters would go some way to mitigate this impact.

19. Is it equitable for those applying for an air weapons certificate to pay a fee which cannot be refundable irrespective of whether a certificate is granted or not?

No. BSSC remains opposed to the charging of a fee for unsuccessful application for an air weapons certificate. The fee is not a punt on the races, it is part of an attempt at compliance with mandatory legislation, so it is inequitable to keep the money if the application fails. It may also encourage applications for firearm or shotgun certificates.

20. Will the air weapons licensing system have a positive or negative impact on other areas of the public sector in Scotland (eg. The work of local government, public agencies etc.)?

BSSC does not see any positive impact on other areas of the public sector in Scotland. Negative impact will primarily be on the police service. Given that there are accepted to be 500,000 air weapons in Scotland, BSSC considers that there are likely to be more than 30,000 applications from people who do not hold firearm certificates or shotgun certificates.

21. What, if any, might the unintended consequences of introducing an air weapons licensing system in Scotland be?

The Bill creates a number of new offences, primarily related to licensing, so this may slow down or reverse the fall in the number of offences recorded annually after a substantial period of significant decline (71% decrease in five years). While there would be more offences committed, this would not add to the level of risk to the public, since the offences would be administrative. Unless steps are taken to prevent it (and none has been suggested so far) there will be a huge increase every five years in those renewals from shooters whose air weapon certificates were not initially made co-terminous with a firearm (or shotgun) certificate. This will require additional, probably temporary, licensing staff, training and financial resources.

22. Do you have any other comments to make on air weapons licensing aspects of the Bill?

BSSC has comments relating to the Bill, the explanatory notes and the financial memorandum:

Air Weapons and licensing (Scotland) Bill: BSSC Comments

7(5)(a-e) If more than one of these conditions is applied, then the word ‘only’ used in each of these conditions is inappropriate as it is exclusive and the conditions will be mutually contradictory.

24(2)(c)(ii) and 26(1)(b). This would seem to disadvantage those resident in England and Wales. Why could not a person resident in England who does not hold a visitor permit have a Scottish Registered Firearms Dealer export an air weapon directly to England?

38. As part of the transitional arrangements, the Chief Constable should be required to communicate individually by letter with all firearm certificate and shotgun certificate holders to advise them of the effect of the new legislation.

Air Weapons and licensing (Scotland) Bill Explanatory Notes: BSSC Comments

11. As air weapons are not to be entered on Air Weapon Certificates, it would be anomalous to make a requirement to enter component parts or sound moderators on such certificates and this should read ‘...and possession must be authorised by an air weapon certificate’. A straightforward way of dealing with this would be for every air weapon certificate to state that the holder may possess air weapons, components and sound moderators.

31. (and 81) The BSSC strongly supports this renewal process.

94-97. Will transactions between English and Scottish RFDs be subject to full import/export controls? What will be required for private sales between individuals when the purchaser is in Scotland and the vendor is in England? Would it be correct to say that a Scottish domiciled private vendor could sell in England to an English domiciled purchaser without formality, since there would be no bar to the former taking the air weapon into England?

Air Weapons and licensing (Scotland) Bill Financial Memorandum: BSSC Comments

43. (also 101) See BSSC’s response at 19 above.

46-54. As already indicated, BSSC believes that, with c. 500,000 air weapons in circulation, then 30,000 applications from people who do not hold FACs or SGCs are likely to be a significant under-estimate. If the figure is under 30,000, then the legislation is almost certainly to be in some aspects a failure, given the number of air weapons believed to be in public hands. For 30,000 new applicants plus 40,000 existing certificate holders likely to be possessing air weapons, this would indicate a holding of around 7 air weapons per certificate holder. If air weapon figures are close to the average of firearms or shotguns possessed then an average of about 3 would be more likely. Clearly a number of air weapons will be surrendered and others disposed of outside Scotland. Ultimately, as the air weapons will not be entered on to the certificate, then no-one will have a clear idea of the success or failure of the legislation.

80. The likely effect of the Act will be that the legitimate market will be flooded with old, tired or poor quality air weapons with little or no resale value. Many dealers will be reduced to scrapping unsalable air weapons, and this could impact on police costs if they wished to verify destruction (a difficult process given that many air weapons lack serial numbers). This is one reason why a buy-in is beneficial, since the owner can realise at least some of the value of his property and the air weapon is dealt with in an accountable manner.

98. Shooting organisations are likely to be significantly impacted financially through the provision of advice to their members, at least in the initial stages of implementation of the legislation.

101. Is the intention that the fee be hypothecated and used to offset licensing costs, or will it just form part of Police Scotland’s income stream?
Thank you for responding to the Local Government and Regeneration Committee’s Call for Evidence on the Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill. All submissions will be examined and considered as part of the Committee’s scrutiny of the Bill.

1. Air Weapons Licensing

You may respond to all the questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

13. In what ways will the creation of an air weapons licensing system in Scotland contribute to preserving public order and safety, reducing crime and advancing public health policy?
The Scottish Countryside Alliance (SCA) does not believe that creation of an air weapons licensing system in Scotland will contribute to preserving public order and safety in any meaningful way, or indeed reduce crime and advance public health policy! Conversely, the SCA believes that changes to the current legislation carry with it the significant risk of involuntary penalties. The changes proposed by the Scottish Government will create a number of new offences, some of which we believe will inevitably be breached without intent and/or in ignorance. The gun crime question is already popularly and symbolically constructed as a problem of the gun as if gun crime were a distinct set of offences that made sense and could be understood together. This is unlikely to be the case and probably unhelpful as gun crime can take a wide variety of forms, which share no necessary common features and have no necessary relationship to one another. For example, gun crime can include crime committed involving real guns; anti-social behaviour (criminal damage) with an air weapon; crime committed involving public display of imitation guns; crime facilitated by guns; the sale, transfer, distribution or mere possession of guns; and the discharge of a gun even where no injury results.

The definition of gun crime influences the patterns of crime recording. For example, the criminal statistics record offences involving the criminal use of a firearm rather than simple offences of illegal possession of a firearm. Such deficiencies in offence definition and recording inevitably contribute to intelligence gaps and crime prevention problems. The resulting convictions will result in a perceived rise in offences before the courts, damaging the good work carried out by the Scottish Police Forces over the past years in enforcement, prevention and consequently reducing firearms crime in Scotland to its current 35 year low and creating a perceived problem with legitimate air weapons ownership in Scotland when in fact there is none.

Whilst we accept the Government’s thoughts on those who knowingly misuse air weapons, or who would not be able to show that they had a legitimate reason for possessing and using such weapons, may be unlikely to apply for a certificate and therefore commit an offence under the terms of any new licence as proposed. The SCA questions the logic in this as criminals habitually break the law; simply creating a licence for air weapons will not change the attitude or habits of the criminally active individuals and gangs throughout Scotland.

14. Is there sufficient provision, or sufficient capacity to provide, suitable numbers of air weapons clubs across all areas of Scotland for use by registered air weapons owners/ users?
The SCA is aware of 138 approved rifle clubs in Scotland, however because clubs which use air weapons are not currently required to be authorised to do so, it is not possible to identify how many of the above clubs offer air weapon shooting facilities in tandem with traditional small and full bore. We are therefore currently unable to establish a national picture of airgun clubs in Scotland.

We are encouraged that the Scottish Government believes that air weapon clubs provide the ideal safe and supportive environment for shooters and in particular new shooters to learn the sport and that they will work with stakeholders to encourage the development of a network of air weapon clubs across Scotland. The Scottish Government has long recognised the economic restraints placed upon business operating in the rural or wider countryside and has many initiatives to aid the sustainable growth of rural and countryside based business. It is our hope that the Scottish Government does not impose such restrictions to the establishment of an approved air rifle club that would make the running of an approved air rifle club in anyway unduly prohibitive. i.e. Insisting on remote locations or the prohibition or limitations on the establishment of urban or indeed inner city clubs.

15. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for personal/recreational use?
The SCA questions the proposed restrictions on the use of air weapons within the confines of personal property or gardens leading to a likely prohibition of the use of air weapons for "plinking" in gardens or other urban or highly populated settings. Although the SCA accepts and welcomes the establishment of approved air weapon clubs we are concerned that statements such as “Target shooting in such an environment will not generally be acceptable unless the applicant can satisfy the Chief Constable as to the safety and other arrangements in place to ensure that shooting can be carried out without risk to the public”.

The reluctance to allow the use of an individual’s own premises causes the SCA concern on several fronts. The ability of a low earner(s) to apply and pay for a licence may then limit the ability of the individual(s) to access approved clubs which it is presumed will carry a membership fee and range use fee, greatly limiting the individual(s) ability to practice and enjoy low powered air weapon shooting. The SCA also feel that those with physical disability may also find themselves restricted from free practice within their own premises. Simple economics often see the limitation to the provision of disabled facilities which are generally limited numerically in relation to that offered to the able bodied i.e. less provision of specialist access areas leading to lower opportunities for disabled shooters to practice. Further to this, we question the motive behind the above statement on satisfying the Chief Constable in relation to safety and wonder if this is translated into effectively requiring approved air weapons club status if they are to be allowed to legally use their own garden premises, actions we believe to be disproportional to the threat and financially prohibitive.

16. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those aged 14 to 17 who use air weapons?
The SCA Welcome the Scottish Governments recognition of young people's associations, for example the Scouts, Guides, the Pony Club and various cadet forces, also include air weapon shooting as part of the range of activities offered to their members.; and the fact that the Bill allows options for this to continue, either as guests at an approved air weapon club or miniature rifle range, or under an event permit issued by the police.

We do however question areas within the conditions as applied to a young person’s certificate and conditions as applied to a young person’s visitor permit within the proposed licensing system:

The conditions are that—

(a) the holder may use and possess an air weapon only for the purposes of target shooting on private land,
(b) the holder may use and possess an air weapon only for the purposes of participating in events or competitions,
(c) the holder may use and possess an air weapon only for the purposes of the holder’s membership of an approved air weapon club,
(d) the holder may use and possess an air weapon only for the purposes of protecting livestock, crops or produce on land used for or in connection with agriculture,
(e) the holder may use and possess an air weapon only while carrying on business as a pest controller or acting as the employee of a pest controller.

We note with some concern that young people achieving a certificate under the proposed licensing system will be permitted to use an air weapon for the purpose of protecting livestock, crops or produce on land used for or in connection with agriculture and carrying on business as a pest controller or acting as the employee of a pest controller, but excluded to use the licenced air weapon for sporting purposes (including shooting live quarry) on private land.

The SCA would hope that any certificate granted to a qualifying young person would not prohibit the use of a licenced air weapon for sporting purposes (including shooting live quarry) on private land. We note with interest that a Young Person operating under a visitor permit would also appear to be prohibited to use the licenced air weapons for sporting purposes (including shooting live quarry) on private land.
17. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for commercial/professional reasons (for example: for pest control; as part of the tourist/hunting season; as part of fairs, paintballing centre, entertainment sector etc.)?

The SCA is encouraged that the low powered air weapon licence as proposed makes provision for those using weapons commercially or professionally and define these as separate from paintballing, fairs of the entertainment sector. Our interest and area of expertise lies within the former our answer then applies to the commercial and professional employed within wildlife management and pest control. The SCA are concerned that this professional body of participants will be further hampered in a sector with very fine financial margins through the unnecessary charges relating to an unwarranted licence. We further believe that if pushed to make an application for a low powered air weapon that many will be encouraged to apply for a licence to possess a section one or section two firearm leading to a further impact on public services.

18. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for competitive sporting purposes?

Great Britain has a long and enviable history of sporting prowess within our shooting disciplines gaining a range of medals across a range of disciplines in Commonwealth, World and Olympic championships.

The SCA recognise the provision under the bill that the chief constable may, on the application of a person (“the organiser”) who is organising or otherwise responsible for an event, grant a permit authorising individuals at the event to borrow, hire, use and possess air weapons while engaging in an event activity without holding an air weapon certificate (“an event permit”).

In addition to the suggestion of approved clubs and the exemptions offered under private land under supervision and do not believe that the licence as proposed affect those using air weapons for competitive sporting purposes.

19. Is it equitable for those applying for an air weapons certificate to pay a fee which cannot be refundable irrespective of whether a certificate is granted or not?
The SCA does not believe that it is equitable for those applying for an air weapons certificate to pay a fee which cannot be refundable irrespective of whether a certificate is granted or not.

Sections 32 and 35 of the 1968 Act state a fee is charged only upon “grant”, “renewal” or “replacement” of a certificate. Therefore forces are unable to charge for the cost of a firearms or shotgun certificate upon refusal.

The SCA does not understand the difference in the approach taken by the Scottish Government in the decision to charge a non-returnable fee for an application for a low powered air weapon licence when applicants can apply for section one and section two firearms and if refused received a full reimbursement.

20. Will the air weapons licensing system have a positive or negative impact on other areas of the public sector in Scotland (eg. The work of local government, public agencies etc.)?

It is the belief of the SCA that the air weapon license as introduced will have a negative effect and impact on public sectors in Scotland.

We accept that the Scottish Government have made provision for the ownership of a low powered air weapon where an individual aged 14 years or more holds a firearm certificate or a shotgun certificate with the individual making an application for an air weapon when the current certificate expires. However, the projected numbers of low powered air weapons in circulating greatly outweigh the numbers of shotgun and firearms certificate holders, even if all of those possessing a current shotgun or firearms certificate were to confirm ownership of a low powered air weapon. Further to this we firmly believe that the introduction of a licence for a low powered air weapon will see a greater application for a licence to obtain a section one or section two weapon, greatly increasing the number of weapons in circulation and further compounding the workload of Police Scotland firearms licensing teams, seriously compromising the processing of section one and section two certificate holders grants or renewals.

21. What, if any, might the unintended consequences of introducing an air weapons licensing system in Scotland be?
As previously stated the SCA believes that a system to license the estimated half-a-million airguns in Scotland will be a costly and bureaucratic mistake.

It has been widely recognised that offences involving air weapons in Scotland has fallen by 75% in recent years. Between 2006-07 and 2012-13 with a reduction from a ten year peak 683 air weapon offences to 171 offences. Further to this, generic firearms offences are now at the lowest level since records began. Airguns are already extensively regulated by law, with more than thirty offences on the statute books. Introducing a licence for low powered air weapons will not deter those who are already determined to break the law. It is the belief of the SCA that the changes proposed by the Scottish Government will create a number of new offences, some of which will inevitable be breached without intent and/or in ignorance. Consequentially statistics will record an increase in firearms crime, which may lead to a knee jerk reaction and the implementation of further unwarranted legislation.

22. Do you have any other comments to make on air weapons licensing aspects of the Bill?

The SCA recognise the introduction of a low powered air weapon licensing regime in Scotland to be a step change in firearms licensing within the UK. We question the implementation of a non-refundable application fee and the setting of prescriptive conditions for the ownership and use of a low powered air weapon both distinctively differing from ownership of a low powered air weapon anywhere else within the United Kingdom. We do not believe the implementation of a low powered air weapon licence to be proportional to the perceived threat from low powered air weapons and that the licensing of low powered air weapons will prove to be bureaucratic and expensive without actually reducing the illegal use of firearms in Scotland.

The SCA seek to point out our thoughts on the unnecessary introduction of a licensing regime to prevent, perceived or real, firearms crime when so much has been achieved in the last ten years through legislator and participant collaboration and cooperation. Significant reduction in crimes involving firearms has been achieved by the Scottish Government, Police Scotland and those representing shooting at all levels coming together to improve education and the awareness of existing legislation.

We draw on the Justice Secretary Kenny MacAskill who recently announced that the “education and enforcement” approach has proved successful in reducing knife crime in Scotland. Indeed research commissioned by the Scottish government stated that education and prevention were key to reducing knife crime. Figures from the Recorded Crime Bulletin 2012/13 back up the statement showing that crimes of handling an offensive weapon (including knives) had dropped dramatically in Scotland, falling by a massive 67% in Glasgow and 60% in Scotland since 2006/07.

We ask at this time why the significant fall of 75% in offences involving air weapons over a similar timescale doesn’t merit the same educational and prevention campaign as witnessed in the £2 million investment in the No Knives, Better Lives campaign. The Scottish Countryside Alliance believes that further investment in this direction would realise a greater return than an administrative and bureaucratic licensing regime.

It is our humble opinion that the introduction of a licence for low powered air weapons will not make a significant contribute to preserving public order and safety in any meaningful way, or indeed reduce crime and advance public health policy.

1. Air Weapons Licensing

You may respond to all the questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

13. In what ways will the creation of an air weapons licensing system in Scotland contribute to preserving public order and safety, reducing crime and advancing public health policy?

I personally don’t think it will. It is an unfortunate fact that there is a small number of people in the world who will commit crimes. If they are happy to break one law then they are more than likely to be happy to break another. Whether it is illegal for them to have an airgun or not, if they are committing another crime, it is unlikely that they will stop to think if they have the correct paperwork for their airgun.

I also do not think it will advance the public health policy. Lead pellets are used with airguns and the management of this lead is controlled by the staff at the shooting ranges. If approved ranges are the only place athletes are allowed to train then the large influx of new shooters to the approved ranges will cause an increase in the amount of lead being used. This in an enclosed environment such as a range produces a high risk to the athletes using the facility.

14. Is there sufficient provision, or sufficient capacity to provide, suitable numbers of air weapons clubs across all areas of Scotland for use by registered air weapons owners/ users?

According to British Shooting and the National Small-bore rifle association in Dumfries & Galloway and the Borders there are only two airgun clubs – one in Dumfries and one in Hawick. In the same area there are roughly 10 pony clubs, each with their own team of tetrathletes who shoot air pistol. There are cadets, modern pentathletes and development pistol shooters who aren’t members of any clubs and find their own safe place to shoot. If all of these athletes were bound by the law to train at an airgun club, it could result in hours of travelling for them and not to mention the overloading of the two airgun clubs who could not physically cope with the numbers of new members due to health and safety restrictions for numbers in the building and they would not be able to maintain a safe range officer to athlete ratio.
15. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for personal/recreational use?

Shooting is a sport which is already difficult to get into due to the stigma around guns and the lack of facilities in Scotland. By adding the airgun licensing system it will make the sport almost impossible to try. How will those who have seen the sport on the BBC during the Olympic Games and the Commonwealth Games find a way to give the sport a go and find out if they could be the ones competing at future games. This then has a knock on effect with no new comers to the sport, those who already compete will have no one to push them further and compete for places on National teams therefore reducing the standard and participation in one of Scotlands most successful sports.

16. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those aged 14 to 17 who use air weapons?

Age 14-17 is the age where a lot of adolescents get involved in sport. Pony Club Tetrathlon, Modern Pentathlon and Air pistol/rifle shooting are all legitimate sports. Sport is proven to help improve time-management, determination and concentration in school children. Having an outlet from school work in the form of sport gives youngsters a safe, controlled environment to enjoy themselves and spend time with their friends. The Scottish Government strive to increase participation in sport for school children, particularly with females. All the above mentioned sports give both girls and boys an opportunity to take part. By introducing the licensing system a deterrent is created for those looking at taking part in the sport. The added bureaucracy, time, paperwork and cost makes it less likely for people to get started in the sport which ruins the grassroots of the sport creating a large knock on effect to the elite end of the sport as well as reducing the number of children getting involved in sport as per the Scottish Governments aims.

17. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for commercial/professional reasons (for example: for pest control; as part of the tourist/hunting season; as part of fairs, paintballing centre, entertainment sector etc.)?
18. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for competitive sporting purposes?

The requirement of a visitors permit for anyone coming to compete in Scotland will deter those who are willing to travel to the competitions held in this country. Due to this the level of competition held in Scotland will decrease therefore not pushing the Scottish athletes further in their abilities. This will reduce the success of Scottish athletes at a National and International level. Not only this but those who are only just getting into the sport will be deterred due to the cost and

19. Is it equitable for those applying for an air weapons certificate to pay a fee which cannot be refundable irrespective of whether a certificate is granted or not?

I don’t feel that it is appropriate to charge a fee if an application is unsuccessful.

20. Will the air weapons licensing system have a positive or negative impact on other areas of the public sector in Scotland (eg. The work of local government, public agencies etc.)?

I feel that there will be a negative impact on the public sector. Firearms departments are already overstretched with the work that they currently have, adding thousands of applications for individual, club and premises permits will increase the workload ten fold.

21. What, if any, might the unintended consequences of introducing an air weapons licensing system in Scotland be?

I believe there will be a large knock on effect caused by the introduction of the airgun licensing system. Currently there are 6 Olympic disciplines which involve the use of airguns. Many of the athletes representing Great Britain in these events have come from small Pony Clubs who use local facilities to train outwith airgun clubs. For example, Georgina Geike who competed in the 2012 Olympic Games in London came from a Pony Club background, Mhairi Spence another Team GB member for London 2012 was introduced to her sport of Modern Pentathlon through the Pony Club. The consequences of introducing an airgun licensing system will include increased costs in running competitions due to the necessity of obtaining event permits, increased costs in participation, again due to the necessity of obtaining a permit, increased difficulty in getting started in the sport due to the impossibility of giving the sport a try before committing to it, the increased difficulty of finding training facilities close to home due to the requirement of a licensed premises. All of these factors will have a large impact on participation in the sport and will significantly reduce Scotland’s chances of medalling at both Commonwealth and Olympic Games as well as World and European Championships.

22. Do you have any other comments to make on air weapons licensing aspects of the Bill?

Since the license only applies to Scotland, I am unsure how the Scotland/England border will be watched to ensure the control of airgun movement between the two countries. I am also unsure how the airgun owners in England, Wales and Northern Ireland will be informed of the licensing to ensure that visitors abide by the law.

Personally I believe that this licensing system will have a very small effect with regards to the great increase in bureaucracy. According to Scotland.gov.uk, between 2011-12 and 2012-13 the number of crimes handling offensive weapons dropped by 29%, the crime in this area is already reducing and for the added work for the firearms department that this licensing system would involve, I don’t believe the benefit would be significant enough to justify it.

28. In what ways will the Bill’s provisions on alcohol licensing allow for reductions in crime and the preservation of public order?

29. Are there any other measures which should be taken to assist in the reduction of crime and the preservation of public order?

30. In what ways will the provisions in the Bill enhance the licensing objectives set out in the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005?
31. In what ways will the re-introduction of the “fit and proper person” test assist with the implementation of the licensing objectives set out in the 2005 act?

32. Have there been any unintended consequences arising from the 2005 Act, for example, in rural areas or the economic regeneration of areas?

33. Which, if any, types of spent relevant offences should be required to be disclosed and what do you think the benefits of disclosure will be?

5. Taxi and Private Hire Car Licensing

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

35. What benefits should the licensing of taxis and private hire cars deliver for customers?

_________________________________________________________________________

36. In what ways do customers, providers of taxi/private hire car services and local authorities benefit from the two-tier licensing regime for taxis and private hire cars?

_________________________________________________________________________

37. The Government states that a radical overhaul of the current two-tier licensing regime would “clearly require a very high level of resource and would cause significant disruption for the trade, local authorities, the police and ultimately the travelling public”. What are your views on this and would the potential costs and disruptions outweigh any potential benefits of a unified system?

_________________________________________________________________________
38. Do the changes made by sections 60 (overprovision of private hire car licences) and 61 (testing of private hire car drivers) of the Bill strike the right balance in terms of introducing greater consistency while maintaining justifiable differences?

39. Do you have any views on the section 62 provisions bringing vehicles contracted for exclusive use for 24 or more hours within the licensing regime for taxis and private hire cars, and should any exemptions be included in the Bill?
6. Scrap Metal Dealer Licensing

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

40. Taking the proposals in sections 63 to 66 of the Bill together, how will they have the desired effect of strengthening the metal dealers' licensing regime to the extent that metal theft and related criminal activity is reduced?

41. In your view, could the Bill be further strengthened in any way, for example, by including an accreditation scheme for metal dealers?

42. Removal of exemption warrant - do you wish to comment on the proposal to remove the exemption warrant system?
43. Removal of requirement to retain metal on-site - what impact will the proposal to remove the retention of metal requirement have on the enforcement of the licensing regime and prevention of criminal activities?

44. Forms of payment - what is your view on the proposal to go 'cashless' and is there merit in considering whether metal dealers could be allowed to operate using cash for only very small transactions, which could be limited to a certain number per month?
45. Forms of identification and record keeping:

In line with the Scrap Metal Dealers Act 2013, the Bill adds additional record keeping requirements to a metal dealer's licence including recording the means by which a seller’s name and address was verified and retaining a copy of the document, and the method of payment and a copy of the payment document. The Bill will also require a metal dealer to record information in books with serially numbered pages or by means of an electronic device, and to keep separate records at each place of business. Such information and documents are to be kept for three rather than the current two years.

How important is it that the record keeping requirements reflect those in the Scrap Metal Dealers Act 2013, and do you agree with the Scottish Government that the proposed record keeping requirements are not unduly burdensome?
46. Mandatory and discretionary licensing requirements:

The Scottish Ministers can impose mandatory licensing requirements, such as those included in the Bill relating to record keeping and the identification of customers. In addition, local authorities can also attach discretionary requirements to licences in their areas.

Does the Bill get the balance right between mandatory and discretionary licensing requirements? Should the Bill include other mandatory conditions for obtaining a metal dealer's licence, such as installing CCTV at metal dealers' premises or in relation to labelling of metal and 'forensic coding'?
7. Civic Licensing – Theatre Licensing

You may respond to all the questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

47. Will there be any impacts during the transitional period between ending the current theatre licence and starting the public entertainment licence?

48. Are there additional costs or resource implications on theatres or licensing authorities?

49. How should licensing authorities integrate their current fee charging structure into their public entertainment regime?
8. Civic Licensing – Sexual Entertainment Venues

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

50. What are the consequences of operating the new licensing regime using the definitions set out at section 68 of the Bill?

- ‘sexual entertainment venue’
- ‘audience’
- ‘financial gain’
- ‘organiser’
- ‘premises’
- ‘sexual entertainment’, and
- ‘display of nudity’

51. The Bill specifies that a venue hosting sexual entertainment on three occasions or less within a 12 month period would not be treated as a sexual entertainment venue: does this have any unintended consequences?
52. Local licensing authorities will be able to set the number of sexual entertainment venues in their area to below the existing level, or zero: are there any advantages or disadvantages to this approach?

53. The Bill relies mainly on the existing licensing regime for sex shops as set out in section 44 and Schedule 2 of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 (application, notification, objections and representations, revocation of licences etc., enforcement and appeals): is this mechanism adequate for the licensing of sexual entertainment venues - if not, please explain why?

54. Are there any barriers to licensing authorities operating the new licensing regime?
55. Civic Licensing

Do you have any other comments to make on the civic licensing aspects of the Bill?

21. What, if any, might the unintended consequences of introducing an air weapons licensing system in Scotland be?

Airsoft within Scotland is alive and vibrant. Scotland has within it's borders two of the most established retailers working within the industry and is overly provided with active skirmish sites. Thanks to the work of filmmakers like John Welsh, Scottish airsoft is literally viewed by millions worldwide.

For those of you not familiar with the pastime, airsoft is similar in broad terms to paintball, but rather than using markers which fire frangible ammunition, airsoft guns predominantly shoot 6mm plastic or biodegradable balls at muzzle energies of up to 2.3 joules, although the majority of sites impose limits closer to 1.3 joules. The term airsoft gun is misleading, as although they closely resemble firearms, airsoft guns are incapable of discharging live ammunition and are ballistically more closely related to muskets in that they project a ball along a smooth barrel.

This background is important because as it stands it is impossible to read this Bill without fearing for it's effects, unintended as they no doubt are, on this popular pastime.

The Bill defines the level at which an object should be considered to be an air weapon at 1 joule. This figure comes originally from an appendix to the 11th annual report of the now-disbanded Firearms Consultative Committee. It was made without reference to any scientific investigation but has assumed the nature of canon law within the realm of legislators since. In 2011, the Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO) commissioned a report into airsoft guns and lethality from the Forensic Science Service (FSS) in order to better define lethality. Based on the finding from the FSS, ACPO recommended to it's members that muzzle energy of 1.3 Joules in an airsoft gun capable of automatic fire, and 2.3 Joules in a single shot airsoft gun were unlikely to cause more than a trivial injury. Since the
17. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for commercial/professional reasons (for example: for pest control; as part of the tourist/hunting season; as part of fairs, paintballing centre, entertainment sector etc.)?

The inclusion of paintball in the question must immediately raise doubts as to the competence of those asking. Paintball markers are not covered by the powers delegated to the Scottish Parliament, a fact which those drafting this Bill should be well aware of. The Bill will however have a potential impact upon the pastime of Airsoft within Scotland as detailed below in Sect. 21

18. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for competitive sporting purposes?

19. Is it equitable for those applying for an air weapons certificate to pay a fee which cannot be refundable irrespective of whether a certificate is granted or not?
publication of this report, the airsoft industry within the United Kingdom has broadly adopted these standards.

If this Bill is passed into law without amendment, it is difficult to see how there will not be an overwhelming argument that in order to fall outside the remit of air weapon licensing, airsoft guns must be restricted to 1 joule or less. The Bill makes no mention of airsoft guns but given that they are capable of firing a projectile it seems reasonable to assume that over 1 joule of muzzle energy they would have to be licensed. Since they are unsuitable for any of the purposes listed within Section 7 of the Bill (which appear to be indicative of the permitted purposes for the grant of a license) it is likely, and I would posit probable, that the Scottish Police Service would decline to grant a licence specifically for airsofting.

There is also the question as to whether or not it is appropriate, given the putative reasoning behind this Bill, to permit anyone to shoot at another human being with a licensed air weapon, regardless of how 'harmless' or not it might be.

For those within Scotland engaged in the business of airsoft, this Bill presents a number of challenges. It is difficult to ensure that imports of new stock will comply with the 1 joule limit. This is for historical reasons but is largely a function of the fact that internationally much higher muzzle energy limits exist for airsoft guns. Do businesses have to register new stock as air weapons? Once they have been brought below the 1 joule limit can they be "deregulated"? There exists no provision within the Bill at present for this. Can the existing businesses legally import anything over the 1 joule limit without registering as Firearms dealers?

For those who operate the numerous skirmish sites across Scotland where airsoft is regularly played are they now faced with having to police the new laws? What consequences might befall them if a player is found to be using what would in effect constitute a licensed air weapon?

This may all seem somewhat esoteric however the greatest threat to airsoft in Scotland is the law of unintended consequences. It was undoubtedly not the intention of the present Scottish Government to legislate for airsoft equipment, but they have done so by accident. In setting a lower muzzle energy limit of 1 Joule they are flying in the face of the most current research on the subject. If this Bill passes unamended it will disadvantage Scottish businesses compared to their competitors in the rest of the United Kingdom, which is where the majority of their market lies.

I suggest the addition of a simple clause which at once defines and excludes airsoft guns from the meaning of air weapon as defined in Section
1. Something along the lines of "Airsoft guns, being defined as low-powered air weapons designed to project spherical, non-metallic projectiles via a smooth-bored barrel not exceeding 8mm in internal diameter, and with a muzzle energy not exceeding 2.5 joules are excluded from all the provisions of this Bill as they relate to air weapon licensing". Freed from the dangers contained within this Bill, the industry, the sites and the players will continue to act and to play responsibly within the now-well-established limits resulting from the ACPO / FSS report referred to above.

22. Do you have any other comments to make on air weapons licensing aspects of the Bill?

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

40. Taking the proposals in sections 63 to 66 of the Bill together, how will they have the desired effect of strengthening the metal dealers’ licensing regime to the extent that metal theft and related criminal activity is reduced?

British Transport Police and Police Scotland welcome any legislation which will contribute towards a reduction in metal theft.

The phenomenon, driven by international commodity prices and a perception by criminals of a low risk high reward crime, has blighted communities, business and major utilities.

The market-makers in stolen metal have been unscrupulous scrap metal dealers who have exploited the law, failed to keep adequate records and allowed a system to develop that has made disposal of stolen metal easier. Arguably the availability of cash in this industry adds to the anonymity which further reduces the risk to thieves of being traced and apprehended.

The proposals therefore should provide law enforcement with greater control and can introduce a level playing field across the scrap metal industry but there are additional steps that can strengthen the bill for the benefit of communities.
41. In your view, could the Bill be further strengthened in any way, for example, by including an accreditation scheme for metal dealers?

British Transport Police and Police Scotland fully support an accreditation system and see this as an important step for the industry to progress. Accreditation would raise the standard of the industry and allow sellers to make informed decisions based on the ability of dealers to meet a minimum set of standards. The scheme ideally should be driven by the industry, for the industry and would be the next logical step. Companies such as BT Openreach and Network Rail already have disposal policies; an accreditation system would ensure contracts were awarded to the dealers who have successfully attained accreditation.

Should the maintenance of retaining registers for metal dealers remain with Local Authorities this may be problematic as metal trading can involve collection and transportation of metal throughout multiple Local Authority areas. British Transport Police and Police Scotland would like to see the introduction of a national register of metal dealers (including itinerant metal dealers) which could be accessed by enforcement agencies. In addition it would be beneficial for metal dealers (including itinerant metal dealers) to display a copy of their licence. The current legislation allows five days for production of a licence which can hinder police investigations. We would propose that licenses should be clearly displayed within premises or vehicles in the case of itinerant metal dealers.

42. Removal of exemption warrant - do you wish to comment on the proposal to remove the exemption warrant system?

British Transport Police and Police Scotland fully support the removal of exemption warrants. The removal will improve investigations. Currently Police, Local Authorities, SEPA and other stakeholders can be hindered by unscrupulous metal dealers who can deny site access and thwart preventative measures to ensure that criminality is not taking place.

The removal of the exemption warrant together with a statutory power of entry and inspection will ensure that the industry operates on a level playing field, that they all can face the same level of scrutiny and regulatory oversight.

One concern around the Bill is that if the definition of a Metal Dealer remains unchanged (both buy and sell metal) this will by its wording exclude Itinerant Metal Dealers who collect from households without making payment for the items/materials collected. The definition would also allow for operators who deal predominately in End of Life Vehicles or those who collect general waste and other materials then sort them into waste and metal for sale to avoid licensing.
43. Removal of requirement to retain metal on-site - what impact will the proposal to remove the retention of metal requirement have on the enforcement of the licensing regime and prevention of criminal activities?

British Transport Police and Police Scotland preference would be to retain the retention of metal for 48 hours as this is consistent with second hand dealer legislation and conditions. This permits a Constable or duly authorised individual to enter and inspect following any theft or reset allegation. The daily fluctuations in commodity prices may make this unpalatable to the trade although if this is a nationally agreed condition then the short term impact should be evened out.

Should the removal of retention remain the police would look to the Local Authority to impose specific conditions on those who are suspected of involvement in irregular practices or criminality.

44. Forms of payment - what is your view on the proposal to go 'cashless' and is there merit in considering whether metal dealers could be allowed to operate using cash for only very small transactions, which could be limited to a certain number per month?

The British Transport Police and Police Scotland view is that there should be no cash transactions and that the requirement to purchase without cash should be applied across the industry (including all mobile collectors).

Experience and evidence from France where the government initially introduced legislation that provided a €500 threshold below which transactions could be in cash was revisited and amended within 8 months to ban cash completely.

Therefore there should be no minimum amount and all transactions should be either electronic or by cheque. The opportunity to exploit a cashless loop hole will increase with the addition of a minimum cash payment amount. The costs involved in issuing cheques or crediting debit cards is minimal and should not restrict business activity. The absence of large amounts of cash, reduce risks, bank charges and insurance costs. Low level offending must be discouraged. Prior to the Scrap Metal Dealers Act 2013 there were a number of concerns raised in terms of loosing smaller amounts, there have been no complaints since the introduction of the act.
45. Forms of identification and record keeping:
In line with the Scrap Metal Dealers Act 2013, the Bill adds additional record keeping requirements to a metal dealer's licence including recording the means by which a seller's name and address was verified and retaining a copy of the document, and the method of payment and a copy of the payment document. The Bill will also require a metal dealer to record information in books with serially numbered pages or by means of an electronic device, and to keep separate records at each place of business. Such information and documents are to be kept for three rather than the current two years. How important is it that the record keeping requirements reflect those in the Scrap Metal Dealers Act 2013, and do you agree with the Scottish Government that the proposed record keeping requirements are not unduly burdensome?

The requirement for record keeping should be standardised across the industry as this has been extremely successful in England and Wales in terms of deterring low level criminality. A tightening of the existing measures which should be supported by photographic identification (ID) and proof of address would not add an administrative burden; it just ensures that requirements are strengthened. The existing conditions under section 30 of the Act regarding record keeping should continue and be subject to proper scrutiny.

46. Mandatory and discretionary licensing requirements:

The Scottish Ministers can impose mandatory licensing requirements, such as those included in the Bill relating to record keeping and the identification of customers. In addition, local authorities can also attach discretionary requirements to licences in their areas.

Does the Bill get the balance right between mandatory and discretionary licensing requirements? Should the Bill include other mandatory conditions for obtaining a metal dealer's licence, such as installing CCTV at metal dealers' premises or in relation to labelling of metal and 'forensic coding'?

British Transport Police and Police Scotland would like to see a requirement for CCTV to be mandatory and not left to the discretion of the Local Authority. To ensure that smaller businesses are not financially hindered the level of coverage could be set to a minimum standard to ensure that only certain critical areas are covered for example entrances and exits, payment offices, scales and weigh bridges.

Following introduction of the Scrap Metal Dealers Act 2013 some dealers exploited a loop hole in the legislation introducing cheque cashing facility within the yard. This has now been addressed in England and Wales although this appears to have been overlooked within the proposed Bill.

40. Taking the proposals in sections 63 to 66 of the Bill together, how will they have the desired effect of strengthening the metal dealers’ licensing regime to the extent that metal theft and related criminal activity is reduced?

It will depend on how it is regulated, the key point being Police Scotland will have to enforce and regulate this thoroughly. Everybody should be under the same legislation ie waste companies demolition companies and car breakers as well as metal dealers, as they all deal in metals in some form or another.

41. In your view, could the Bill be further strengthened in any way, for example, by including an accreditation scheme for metal dealers?

We suggest that a law is introduced to stop any metals being sold to non-registered metal dealers.

42. Removal of exemption warrant - do you wish to comment on the proposal to remove the exemption warrant system?
As long as the Authorities regulate the itinerant dealers and all other aspects of metal recycling that are not included in the bill, we have no objection to the removal of the exemption warrant.

43. Removal of requirement to retain metal on-site - what impact will the proposal to remove the retention of metal requirement have on the enforcement of the licensing regime and prevention of criminal activities?

None

44. Forms of payment - what is your view on the proposal to go 'cashless' and is there merit in considering whether metal dealers could be allowed to operate using cash for only very small transactions, which could be limited to a certain number per month?

In rural areas there are a lot of small transactions from private households (under £10.00), which due to the administration costs involved with the “cashless” payments make them to be worthless to process, which could stop the idea of recycling these materials, which could then lead them to be fly tipped.
45. Forms of identification and record keeping:

In line with the Scrap Metal Dealers Act 2013, the Bill adds additional record keeping requirements to a metal dealer’s licence including recording the means by which a seller’s name and address was verified and retaining a copy of the document, and the method of payment and a copy of the payment document. The Bill will also require a metal dealer to record information in books with serially numbered pages or by means of an electronic device, and to keep separate records at each place of business. Such information and documents are to be kept for three rather than the current two years.

How important is it that the record keeping requirements reflect those in the Scrap Metal Dealers Act 2013, and do you agree with the Scottish Government that the proposed record keeping requirements are not unduly burdensome?

Record keeping is very important, and obviously we want to assure the identity of the seller. What worries us is that the itinerant dealer will not be policed or have to enforce the same requirements, and then they have the ability to source materials away from the fixed licensed sites. There needs to be clear definitions on what to use for identifying the seller of the metal and the recording of it, so everyone uses the same process.
46. Mandatory and discretionary licensing requirements:

The Scottish Ministers can impose mandatory licensing requirements, such as those included in the Bill relating to record keeping and the identification of customers. In addition, local authorities can also attach discretionary requirements to licences in their areas.

Does the Bill get the balance right between mandatory and discretionary licensing requirements? Should the Bill include other mandatory conditions for obtaining a metal dealer's licence, such as installing CCTV at metal dealers’ premises or in relation to labelling of metal and ‘forensic coding’?
Everyone throughout the country should have the same conditions, and not be left to the discretion of a local council to implement discretionary requirements. Perhaps it could be policed if a site is caught breaking licensing conditions they could be struck off after 3 misdemeanours.

NB- a few other points we would like to raise on the bill
Date of Processing of Metal – there is a an amendment calling for the dealer to record the date on which metal is processed – such a requirement is totally unpracticable and unworkable in any yard in the country.
Methods of Payment – method of payment and record keeping should be CLEARLY defined so we know exactly what is acceptable.
Metal Definition – This needs to be clearly defined, so anybody dealing with metal comes under the new act, as your Act does not include car breakers, demolition companies, waste management companies, who all have the ability to buy metal in their day-to-day basis.
Metal Dealer definition – You need to define who is actually a metal dealer, as previously stated car breakers, waste management companies and demolition companies can deal with metal and do not come under the Act at the present time.
Powers of Search & Seizure – We consider the existing powers vested in police officers under Section 60(1)© of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 to enter and search premises occupied by a metal dealer without warrant to be draconian, particularly in the light of the levelling of playing field for regulation of all metal dealers through the removal of the exemption warrant system.

As a past President of the Scottish Metal Association, I find it frustrating, that having sat in several consultation meetings with colleagues at the Scottish Parliament and explained the potential pitfalls and problems following the changes in the English law, that we can still see similar problems occurring in the Scottish Bill, and it appears that it is only there to appease the general public, and not deal with the actual problem.

1. Equalities, Climate Change and other Scottish Government objectives

You may respond to all the questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

8. Do you consider that the Bill has any implications for meeting Scotland's climate change commitments? Please explain.

9. Do you consider that the Bill has any implications for meeting Scotland’s equality and/or human rights commitments? Please explain.

10. Do you consider that the Bill has any implications for preventative spending and/ or public services reform? Please explain.

11. Do you consider that the Bill has any implications in relation to European Union issues? Please explain.

12. Do you have any other comments on the impact of the proposals contained in the Bill relation to Scottish Government objectives?

Provisions in the Bill relating to the granting of a licence for an air weapon should be compatible with the intention of existing Scottish legislation relevant to safeguarding cat welfare in Scotland. We hope the provisions of the Bill relating to the licensing of airguns will help prevent casual and random acts of cruelty towards cats in Scotland. Cats are protected animals under the provisions of the Animal Health and Welfare (Scotland) Act 2006. However there are evidential difficulties in enforcing this Act with regard to air gun attacks on cats – see Q 13.

In the case of owned cats there is the additional offence of vandalism under Section 52, Criminal Law (Consolidation) (Scotland) Act 1995. Again evidential difficulties may well arise.
2. Air Weapons Licensing

You may respond to all the questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

13. In what ways will the creation of an air weapons licensing system in Scotland contribute to preserving public order and safety, reducing crime and advancing public health policy?

Where airguns are used randomly casually or deliberately to inflict injuries on cats (and other animals) we are aware that that the owners of those cats are often unable to proceed to prosecution for the crime against their cats under current law for reasons often related to evidence. Whilst it is, for example, an offence under the Animal Welfare Act 2006 to cause unnecessary suffering the particular evidential difficulty with offences committed using air weapons is: ascertaining the shooter’s identity and proving that the shooter committed the offence. Typically, pellets become lodged in the cat’s body, its brain, eyes, spine or vital organs. A cat will then leave the scene and, as cats do, it will either crawl away to hide or die in a concealed and secluded spot. Alternatively, it will try to conceal its injury from its owner. Concealing injuries is a behaviour which has evolved in cats to protect themselves from predators. As a consequence, many such injuries are not apparent and often go undetected. Some injuries from pellets eventually prove fatal or, by chance, they come to light if the cat has an x-ray. Because of the delayed nature in detecting airgun pellets in cats this also makes it harder to establish when and where (public or private land) the shooting took place.

We welcome this proposed scheme for better regulation and enforcement of air weapons. We would hope that a licensing scheme would result in fewer such crimes by restricting licences to those that have legitimate reason for them. Our view is that prevention is preferable to prosecution (or lack of prosecution). We also hear cases where people are living in a locality where they fear for the safety of their pets and that this can affect a person or community’s general sense of ease and feeling of public safety.

14. Is there sufficient provision, or sufficient capacity to provide, suitable numbers of air weapons clubs across all areas of Scotland for use by registered air weapons owners/users?
We cannot comment on the sufficiency of provision of shooting clubs in Scotland other than to comment that we assume that shooting within the confines of a club, and presumably under supervision, might be less likely to cause death or injury to cats or other animals.

15. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for personal/recreational use?

Cats Protection is concerned that cats may on occasions be shot by those with airguns for personal or “recreational” reasons (perhaps by a person with a dislike of cats, or because of a neighbourly dispute about a cat that goes onto neighbouring property, for example in their garden). We have had reports of neighbourly disputes of this kind resulting in one neighbour allegedly shooting the others’ cat. This is a difficulty when cats by nature are roaming creatures.

We welcome the proposal that an applicant for an airgun licence will need to fulfil the “good reason” test. We hope this will deter applications for certificates from those who would knowingly misuse airguns towards cats or other animals. Where an airgun is used illegally, without a licence and without a legitimate reason for possessing and using it we understand the Bill, for the first time, will allow the police to remove the weapon(s). Removal should serve to reduce further offences and fear of offences amongst the public.

16. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those aged 14 to 17 who use air weapons?

No comment

The Bill is vague on the question of “pest control” If this is a “good reason” for a licence, the term “pest control” needs to be included in the Bill and defined so that it is clear what species are classed as pests and when and where they can be controlled and by whom.

18. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for competitive sporting purposes?

No comment

19. Is it equitable for those applying for an air weapons certificate to pay a fee which cannot be refundable irrespective of whether a certificate is granted or not?

No comment

20. Will the air weapons licensing system have a positive or negative impact on other areas of the public sector in Scotland (eg. The work of local government, public agencies etc.)?

No comment
21. What, if any, might the unintended consequences of introducing an air weapons licensing system in Scotland be?

There may be those that decide to acquire and use an airgun without licence. In those instances a clear offence can be proven if they are reported for using the gun without licence and we’d support provisions to remove the weapon in those cases. See our comments at Q15.

22. Do you have any other comments to make on air weapons licensing aspects of the Bill?

Injuries and fatalities to cats from airgun attacks are sadly all too often reported in the press and also directly to Cats Protection both in Scotland and across the UK. We are not aware of any official statistics recording airgun attacks on cats and other animals in Scotland (or elsewhere in the UK.) We do not know if the police record investigations into reported airgun attacks on cats or on other animals and if so whether they have statistics of reported incidents?

Since 1 June 2014 to 21 September 2014 (16 weeks) Cats Protection has been keeping our own statistics. We have recorded 69 cases of cats being shot with an airgun in the UK (either reported in the press or reported direct to Cats Protection). 69 cases equates to an average of over 4 per week. These numbers are likely to understate the problem as many more airgun incidents go unreported.

22% of these cases resulted in the death of the cat.

We very much welcome the proposals within this Bill to tighten up the law on the licensing of airguns in Scotland and very much hope that the Bill provisions are not weakened in any respect as the Bill progresses.

13% (9) of the 69 cases we have logged were in Scotland (75% (52) in England, 6% (4) in Wales, 6% (4) in Northern Ireland)

In a recent Cats Protection public survey for the UK 98% of respondents agreed with the need for tighter regulations for the ownership of airguns.

The Committee may find it helpful to read some case studies of very recently reported airgun attacks. These illustrate the impact attacks and injuries have on the cat, its owner and often the family. It is of note that often it is not known if the cats were shot on private or publicly owned land. The examples do show the difficulties in identifying the person who shot the cats. None of the cases resulted in any kind of prosecution due to a lack of evidence. We suggest this strongly supports tightening of legislation to ensure that airguns are only licensed to those who can demonstrate good reason and we strongly support the onus being on the applicant to show good reason.
Fizz – Renfrew, Aug 2014
Seven-month-old Fizz managed to drag herself to her home this August with a serious wound to her leg. An examination by vets revealed she had been shot by an airgun. Her thigh bone was shattered and vets were forced to remove one of her back legs. Fizz’s owner said “Aside from the obvious pain, Fizz has been left traumatized. This has been very upsetting for the whole family and we are disgusted that someone could do this. There have been no leads as to who shot Fizz but we are still hoping some information will come to light.”

Sylvester – Inverness, Aug 2014
Two-year-old Sylvester had to be put down after a pellet was found lodged in his chest near his heart. The vet decided that Sylvester would not survive an operation to remove the pellet. It is believed that the projectile could have been there for as much as three weeks before it was discovered. Owner said “We noticed that he was off his food and he started to have problems with his breathing. We took him to the vet who gave him an x-ray and that’s when they found the pellet. I just can’t understand why anyone would do this to a defenceless cat. It’s so cruel.”

Miz – Prestwick, Mar 2014 (CP incident)
Cats Protection adopted cat Miz returned home in March 2014 very distressed and would not let his owner touch his shoulder. She rushed him to the out of hours vet and an x-ray showed an airgun pellet lodged in him. said “thankfully there was no bone damage as he was quite a muscular cat and the muscle protected the bone”. The pellet was left in situ so as not to cause Miz more distress but he had to take painkillers and antibiotics for three weeks before he was back to more like himself.

Molly – South Ayrshire, May 2014 (CP incident)
Molly was taken to the emergency vets where an x-ray showed she had been shot in the chest but luckily the pellet didn’t enter her thoracic cavity. Molly survived the ordeal.

Case studies outside Scotland
Tino – Morpeth May 14 (CP incident)
Twelve-year-old Tino was already blind in one eye and had suffered a broken hind leg from an airgun pellet three years previously. In May this year he came home one morning vomiting and not wanting to be picked up. Tino’s owner took him to the vet where a scan showed an airgun pellet lodged in his stomach. The pellet had gone through his bowel and kidney, so the kindest decision was to put him to sleep. said “I was absolutely devastated”. Police talked to neighbours and looked at some CCTV footage but there was nothing of help. I have two other cats so I am worried about letting them out.”

Sooty – Manchester, Sep 2014
Eight-month-old Sooty is being treated by vets after being shot in the spine near his home. The pellet hit the right side of his spine and has left him paralysed. The plan is to nurse him for the next few days and hope that the bruising and swelling subside and he starts to recover nerve function. If not, he may have to be put to sleep. Owner said “We’re devastated. I’m shocked and my five grandchildren are really upset.” Ruth bought Sooty for her four-year-old grandson who is profoundly deaf.

43. Removal of requirement to retain metal on-site - what impact will the proposal to remove the retention of metal requirement have on the enforcement of the licensing regime and prevention of criminal activities?

None

44. Forms of payment - what is your view on the proposal to go 'cashless' and is there merit in considering whether metal dealers could be allowed to operate using cash for only very small transactions, which could be limited to a certain number per month?

In rural areas there are a lot of small transactions from private households (under £10.00), which due to the administration costs involved with the “cashless” payments make them to be worthless to process, which could stop the idea of recycling these materials, which could then lead them to be fly tipped.
45. Forms of identification and record keeping:

In line with the Scrap Metal Dealers Act 2013, the Bill adds additional record keeping requirements to a metal dealer’s licence including recording the means by which a seller's name and address was verified and retaining a copy of the document, and the method of payment and a copy of the payment document. The Bill will also require a metal dealer to record information in books with serially numbered pages or by means of an electronic device, and to keep separate records at each place of business. Such information and documents are to be kept for three rather than the current two years.

How important is it that the record keeping requirements reflect those in the Scrap Metal Dealers Act 2013, and do you agree with the Scottish Government that the proposed record keeping requirements are not unduly burdensome?

Record keeping is very important, and obviously we want to assure the identity of the seller. What worries us is that the itinerant dealer will not be policed or have to enforce the same requirements, and then they have the ability to source materials away from the fixed licensed sites. There needs to be clear definitions on what to use for identifying the seller of the metal and the recording of it, so everyone uses the same process.
46. Mandatory and discretionary licensing requirements:

The Scottish Ministers can impose mandatory licensing requirements, such as those included in the Bill relating to record keeping and the identification of customers. In addition, local authorities can also attach discretionary requirements to licences in their areas.

Does the Bill get the balance right between mandatory and discretionary licensing requirements? Should the Bill include other mandatory conditions for obtaining a metal dealer's licence, such as installing CCTV at metal dealers' premises or in relation to labelling of metal and ‘forensic coding’?

Everyone throughout the country should have the same conditions, and not be left to the discretion of a local council to implement discretionary requirements. Perhaps it could be policed if a site is caught breaking licensing conditions they could be struck of after 3 misdemeanours.

NB- a few other points we would like to raise on the bill

Date of Processing of Metal – there is a an amendment calling for the dealer to record the date on which metal is processed – such a requirement is totally unpractible and unworkable in any yard in the country.
Methods of Payment – method of payment and record keeping should be CLEARLY defined so we know exactly what is acceptable.
Metal Definition – This needs to be clearly defined, so anybody dealing with metal comes under the new act, as your Act does not include car breakers, demolition companies, waste management companies, who all have the ability to buy metal in their day-to-day basis.
Metal Dealer definition – You need to define who is actually a metal dealer, as previously stated car breakers, waste management companies and demolition companies can deal with metal and do not come under the Act at the present time.
Powers of Search & Seizure – We consider the existing powers vested in police officers under Section 60(1)© of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 to enter and search premises occupied by a metal dealer without warrant to be draconian, particularly in the light of the levelling of playing field for regulation of all metal dealers through the removal of the exemption warrant system.

I find it frustrating, that having sat in several consultation meetings with colleagues at the Scottish Parliament and explained the potential pitfalls and problems following the changes in the English law, that we can still see similar problems occurring in the Scottish Bill, and it appears that it is only there to appease the general public, and not deal with the actual problem.

In order for something to be considered an airgun it would need to be a lethal barrelled weapon so while the bill has set the power level at 1 joule until they reach a power level of a lethal barrelled weapon they are not airguns.

Replica firearms including airsoft are dealt with by the Violent Crime Reduction Act

It regulates and grants exemptions for films, sporting use and so forth and may be a reserved matter.

Paintball and Airsoft should be granted a specific exemption in the bill as they're sport's enjoyed by many people.

The bill also plans to put airgun sound suppressors under the licence as well. Whether such powers are devolved and the extra costs to license such accessories should also be looked at.

Fees should be refunded if a licence isn't given and accurate compensation should be dealt if people need to surrender their guns.

The main thrust for air gun regulation came after a child died by being shot in Easterhouse, a deprived area in Glasgow. Both the victims parents and the shooter had been charged on separate occasions for drugs offenses. The air rifle wasn't found and it was also claimed to have been made more powerful.

The reason I bring these details to your attention is that air gun crimes have been falling yet this bill is to be brought in for the sole benefit of problem areas at the expense of the rest of the country. The restrictions on drugs doesn't seem to have had an effect so why would air gun licensing? The air gun was never found so it may have been an illegal firearm already.

A consultation in 2013 found that the majority of the replies were opposed to the licensing of airguns for a variety of reasons. A few of the minority of those supporting the proposals were from animal rights organisations relying on emotive arguments to support the licence plans. I find it rather hypocritical seeing as dogs have killed more children in recent times and cats have killed more wildlife and peoples pets inside their gardens than air guns, yet there is no calls for more responsible pet ownership.

There are some unintended consequences to consider.

Air guns help take care of small scale pest control. Without it people may ignore a problem until it spreads or gets big enough for professionals to deal with. The other options may be to use traps or poison which could affect other animals or pets.

Other incidents I have heard about were swans getting shot however I had also heard that people were hunting Swans to eat. With the rise of food banks and in light of the attempts by the DWP to deny the public their basic needs it's not beyond the realms of possibility that some people are trying to hunt for food. Something that's a far more serious subject than an ill thought out licensing law which does little else than grant the government and licensing boards more unneeded powers at the expense of the public's freedoms.

51. The Bill specifies that a venue hosting sexual entertainment on three occasions or less within a 12 month period would not be treated as a sexual entertainment venue: does this have any unintended consequences?

The Institute notes from its broad experience in relation to licensing jurisdictions in England and Wales that the Scottish proposal is broadly equivalent to that which is already in force south of the border. It seems odd therefore that the Scottish proposal would create a cap on the exception to the licence requirement where there are three or less occasions of central entertainment in premises within a twelve month period where the equivalent provision under the English and Welsh legislation is for twelve occasions. The Institute would therefore ask the Scottish Government what evidence it has that imposing a cap of three is or is not more appropriate than a cap of twelve.
52. Local licensing authorities will be able to set the number of sexual entertainment venues in their area to below the existing level, or zero: are there any advantages or disadvantages to this approach?

The Institute remains concerned that the proposed sexual entertainment venue regime does not adequately deal with the request for grandfather rights. This creates uncertainty for business in that the political make-up of the council may change from time to time and the ruling powers at a local authority may elect to have a change of heart as to the zero cap in relation to sexual entertainment venue premises. This could mean that a premises operating under a cap of say two or three premises and has had its licence renewed without issues suddenly finding its licence automatically revoked as a result of the change to the cap because of the political vote of the local authority.

53. The Bill relies mainly on the existing licensing regime for sex shops as set out in section 44 and Schedule 2 of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 (application, notification, objections and representations, revocation of licences etc., enforcement and appeals): is this mechanism adequate for the licensing of sexual entertainment venues - if not, please explain why?

No comment

54. Are there any barriers to licensing authorities operating the new licensing regime?

The Institute notes that historically licensing boards in Scotland have dealt with licensing of sexual entertainment venue premises through the alcohol licensing regime and therefore have the institutional knowledge on premises of this nature. The Institute takes the view that licensing boards will be the correct authority to deal with sexual entertainment venue premises licensing due to this experience and not the licensing committee which is a function of the council.

28. In what ways will the Bill’s provisions on alcohol licensing allow for reductions in crime and the preservation of public order?

29. Are there any other measures which should be taken to assist in the reduction of crime and the preservation of public order?

30. In what ways will the provisions in the Bill enhance the licensing objectives set out in the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005?
31. In what ways will the re-introduction of the “fit and proper person” test assist with the implementation of the licensing objectives set out in the 2005 act?

The remit of police Scotland is currently very restricted when reporting on an applicant. This will allow them to bring other relevant matters to the attention of the board. Some guidance as to what matters would be considered “relevant” would be helpful. There should also require to be evidence to back this up.

32. Have there been any unintended consequences arising from the 2005 Act, for example, in rural areas or the economic regeneration of areas?

33. Which, if any, types of spent relevant offences should be required to be disclosed and what do you think the benefits of disclosure will be?

I suspect that there may be human rights implications here, especially following the recent Supreme Court case R v Secretary of State for the home Department and another [2014] UKSC 35 in which five justices unanimously held that exceptions to the general rule that a person is entitled not to disclose “spent” convictions or cautions was against Article 8.

34. Do you have any other comments to make on the alcohol licensing aspects of the Bill?

Many opportunities have been missed to tidy up parts of the legislation that those involved in running licensed businesses are finding unduly complex, uncertain or unworkable.

Consolidation – it would have been nice to have a consolidating piece of legislation given the significant amendments already implemented since the 2005 Act came in to force.
Provisional variations – there is still no provision for a provisional variation. Timescales surrounding a variation remain unclear. It is not sensible to carry out work which would be in breach of your existing licence and would require reversed if the variation were to be refused. However, technically as soon as a variation application is granted, there is a breach of licence as the licence will not reflect the actual position. How long does the licence holder then have to complete the work in terms of the variation? We are currently relying on the good grace and common sense of boards and LSO’s etc.

Site only provisional licences – There is no facility to apply for a provisional licence at an early stage without submission of highly detailed plans (that are likely to require amendment and a subsequent variation). This was available under the 1976 Act and it would be helpful to see it return.

Transfer – we are still having to rely on the common sense and co-operation of boards and clerks (and at times their section 135 discretion!) when dealing with transfers in absent tenant situations, company dissolution and more. Timescales can also be problematic. The current systems under s33 and s34 do not sit comfortably with many transactions involving licensed premises sale, purchase, lease etc. Especially where a variation is also sought.

4. Taxi and Private Hire Car Licensing

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

35. What benefits should the licensing of taxis and private hire cars deliver for customers?

The licensing system should ensure that taxis and private hire car vehicles are suitable and safe for the carriage of passengers and, in relation to taxis, that fares are consistently applied as permitted under the act. The power of local licensing authorities to determine the type of vehicles which are suitable enables them to promote equality for disabled persons (as Renfrewshire have done) and potentially to encourage greener forms of travel. To date, these matters have been left to the discretion of local licensing authorities, which autonomy we support, although the absence of legislation on vehicle standards can leave a local licensing authority open to litigation.

36. In what ways do customers, providers of taxi/private hire car services and local authorities benefit from the two-tier licensing regime for taxis and private hire cars?

We are aware that there have been suggestions that there should be only one category of hire car rather than the current two tier system. There is some benefit from the current system from the viewpoint of licensing authorities in that certain vehicles may be approved as suitable for use as taxis, particularly with a view to accessibility. If the distinction were to be removed, the policy in Renfrewshire that vehicles used as taxis be wheelchair accessible with no such automatic requirement for private hire cars (which contains a mixture of saloon vehicles and wheelchair accessible multiperson vehicles) may have to be amended and it may be harder to cater for the mixed needs of the public if the distinction were to be removed. Resolving issues of this type may cause some upheaval for local licensing authorities and potentially also for the travelling public.
37. The Government states that a radical overhaul of the current two-tier licensing regime would “clearly require a very high level of resource and would cause significant disruption for the trade, local authorities, the police and ultimately the travelling public”. What are your views on this and would the potential costs and disruptions outweigh any potential benefits of a unified system?

Reference is made to answer 36 above. In addition, we would comment that there would clearly have to be carefully considered transitional provisions before such an overhaul could occur. In addition, in our local authority area, there may be difficulties with the licence conditions during transition given that we have licence conditions we have approved for taxis which do not apply to private hire cars. Further, there may be confusion among the public, at least in the period after such an overhaul, as to the extent to which the fares charged by hire cars would be controlled under a new regime as well as whether a vehicle would be entitled to ply for hire. The current two tier system is at least understood by the majority of the general public at present.

38. Do the changes made by sections 60 (overprovision of private hire car licences) and 61 (testing of private hire car drivers) of the Bill strike the right balance in terms of introducing greater consistency while maintaining justifiable differences?

Reference is made to Answer 23, above. While we understand that the Scottish Government may not have used the same test for a quantitative restriction for private hire cars as already applies to taxis on the basis that measurement of taxi provision at ranks is possible unlike the position with private hire cars (which require to be pre-booked), we have concerns that “overprovision” may be difficult to measure. We do have concerns also that this may be a prohibitive cost for local licensing authorities, especially with two different tests having to be satisfied, and we have concerns as noted above in relation to private hire car licences effectively acquiring a financial value. We think consideration is required as to whether the proposed section would improve the service offered to the travelling public. We do think a policy introduced by a local licensing authority on the strength of Clause 60 of the Bill may be well received by licensed private hire car operators and drivers in enabling them to make a living and that, accordingly, there may be a benefit in reducing illegal trading by those drivers.
39. Do you have any views on the section 62 provisions bringing vehicles contracted for exclusive use for 24 or more hours within the licensing regime for taxis and private hire cars, and should any exemptions be included in the Bill?

We welcome this provision as it is currently open to abuse and difficult to enforce where drivers claim the vehicle is being used for exclusive hire. However, we also consider that the development of taxi apps may result in increased numbers of vehicles carrying passengers for hire and that the licensing system should therefore be strengthened to ensure that adequate electronic records are made available to the Police and Civic Licensing Standards Officers to ensure that vehicles are being booked legitimately.

6. Scrap Metal Dealer Licensing

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

40. Taking the proposals in sections 63 to 66 of the Bill together, how will they have the desired effect of strengthening the metal dealers' licensing regime to the extent that metal theft and related criminal activity is reduced?

We believe the proposals, as far as they go, will help strengthen the Metal Dealer licensing regime in Scotland. Amongst other things, they will do this by making the relevant businesses more visible, making it easier to distinguish legal operators from illegal, their transactions more transparent and establishing a basis for audit. It will also make it easier to identify who is supplying/receiving materials. However, legislation on its own is not sufficient to drive compliance, and it is absolutely essential that a robust compliance/enforcement programme is implemented.

41. In your view, could the Bill be further strengthened in any way, for example, by including an accreditation scheme for metal dealers?
We believe the most effective way to ensure that the legislation regulating Metal Dealers in Scotland results in a reduction in illegal activities is to:

1. Ensure that it applies equally to all relevant parties and activities, irrespective of size/scale. The definition of a metal dealer needs to include, like the SMDA13, vehicle dismantlers and motor salvage operators. Furthermore, it should apply to all persons carrying out such a trade, irrespective of the scale of operation – it is naïve to think that those operating ‘above or below the radar’ have no significant involvement in metal theft. Similarly, the definition of scrap metal must include ‘end of life vehicles’ (ELVs, scrap cars).

2. Focus particular on itinerant collectors and those receiving metal from them. And, like SMDA13, on those businesses most likely to handle ELVs (salvage operators, bodyshops, garages etc.)

3. Ensure legislation can be fully and properly implemented in an achievable timescale. At the time of writing, 12 months after the introduction of legislation in England & Wales, it would appear that SMDA13 licenses have still not been issued by a large number of English & Welsh local authorities.

4. Integrates (as best as possible) ‘seamlessly’ with the existing English & Welsh systems so as to provide a level playing field for all operators in the UK as a whole, avoiding localised market distortions (both within Scotland and the UK as a whole). We understand that ‘metal crime’ very quickly started migrating ‘north of the border’ as a result of the difficulties in obtaining ‘cash’ in England following implementation of SMDA13.

5. Forms the basis upon which the industry can be regulated in practice, by (for example) ensuring that license fees properly reflect the ‘depth’ of required compliance audits. Since October 2013 we have seen a 10-fold range of local authority fees, without any justification for such a variance. It would appear, at one extreme, a local authority levying a 3-year fee of £150, has undertaken no significant background checks on applicants and/or is not undertaking the necessary compliance checks; and at the other extreme a local authority levying a 3-year fee of £1500+ (single site) maybe using this as a means of raising revenue.

6. Ensuring that the responsibilities of the Police, local authorities and SEPA are clearly defined, and that all parties have an understanding of the industry they are regulating (which was not the case in England).
7. Co-ordinates with the activities of other Government bodies operating in this area, particularly the Police & SEPA, ensuring that licenses are only issued to appropriate (‘suitable/ fit & proper’) applicants in the first place, and that ‘intelligence’ is shared between Government bodies/ departments in order to identify non-compliance & eliminate illegality. Handling ‘scrap metal’ is a waste operation and requires from the EA/ NRW/ SEPA an Environmental Permit or Exemption (if site based), and/ or a Waste Carriers Licence. Licenses should not be issued to site-based operators in the absence of these.

8. Make publicly available on-line a register of SMD registrations that can be of practical use by the public and industry alike in identifying legal & illegal operators. The SMDA13 public register is maintained by the Environment Agency, based on information provided by local authorities. Data suggests that in September 2014 many local authorities were not represented on the public register, meaning that 1 year after SMDA13 became law, the public were still largely unable to distinguish legal & illegal operators. This public register should also allow scrap metal yards to be distinguished from vehicle dismantlers, salvage operators etc.

42. Removal of exemption warrant - do you wish to comment on the proposal to remove the exemption warrant system?

Removal of the Exemption Warrant is essential for the correct operation of this legislation. Experience suggests that the ‘size’ of a ‘scrap metal’ business cannot be used as a measure to judge compliance – it is not unknown for the commercial ‘performance’ pressures exerted on local depots of national companies to lead to the temptation to ‘cut corners’.

43. Removal of requirement to retain metal on-site - what impact will the proposal to remove the retention of metal requirement have on the enforcement of the licensing regime and prevention of criminal activities?

This requirement does not exist in England & Wales. We have no practical experience of this issue upon which to make a judgment, but it can easily be envisaged that this might cause significant practical problems for operators. However, in terms of compliance, we would ask whether this is judged, by the ‘Scottish Authorities’ to have been of significant use to date in combating ‘metal crime’?
44. Forms of payment - what is your view on the proposal to go 'cashless' and is there merit in considering whether metal dealers could be allowed to operate using cash for only very small transactions, which could be limited to a certain number per month?

We support the cashless payment proposals. There must be no exceptions to this. Cashless payment systems became established very quickly in England & Wales following the introduction of SMDA13. In this respect, the vehicle dismantling & salvage industry was probably well ahead of the scrap metal industry, in that cheque & BACS payments for vehicle purchases were already established & had been widely used for many years. The scrap metal industry also widely used cheque & BACS payment methods for account customers. Our view is that cash payments at scrap yards should be regarded with suspicion.

It may also be worth pointing out that some companies sought to reduce the impact of cashless trading upon sellers of scrap metal by introducing cheque-cashing facilities on site.

The ban on cash payments for scrap cars introduced as a result of SMDA13 has resulted in a shift in emphasis by unscrupulous (particularly itinerant) operators (of which there remain many) to cash payments for ‘used vehicles’ (which are then delivered to scrap yards).

Many vehicle dismantlers and salvage agents that sell spare parts and vehicles from their site quite legitimately receive payment from customers in cash (as well, of course, as credit/debit card & cheque). As such, the presence of ‘cash’ on site is not necessarily indicative of criminal activities. However, all payments should be both receipted and accounted for.

Currently in the UK about 1.2 million Certificates or Notifications of Destruction are issued annually. But analyses of data on ‘active vehicles’ for the last 10-15 years suggests that 600,000-800,000 vehicles go missing every year. These vehicles are dismantled illegally in the UK or, increasingly, exported overseas. In recent years there has been a dramatic increase in these activities, facilitated both by the ease with which large quantities of vehicles can be obtained and of transporting vehicles/vehicle parts overseas, but also the ability to sell vehicle parts anonymously on public auction sites (such as eBay, Gumtree etc.) and the very low risk of being ‘apprehended’. These operations are based on cash.
45. Forms of identification and record keeping:

In line with the Scrap Metal Dealers Act 2013, the Bill adds additional record keeping requirements to a metal dealer’s licence including recording the means by which a seller’s name and address was verified and retaining a copy of the document, and the method of payment and a copy of the payment document. The Bill will also require a metal dealer to record information in books with serially numbered pages or by means of an electronic device, and to keep separate records at each place of business. Such information and documents are to be kept for three rather than the current two years.

How important is it that the record keeping requirements reflect those in the Scrap Metal Dealers Act 2013, and do you agree with the Scottish Government that the proposed record keeping requirements are not unduly burdensome?

As previously stated, we believe that Scottish Scrap Metal Dealer legislation should reflect that of SMDA13 as closely as possible, so as to avoid distortion in the market place. But we also fundamentally agree that there should be an absolute requirement to keep proper records – including details of what was purchased from whom and when. Under the Motor Salvage Operator Registration scheme which was introduced in England in 2003, MSOs were already required to keep the records detailed in SMDA13. Therefore this posed no particular problem for these businesses. In relation to vehicles, there is already a long-established document that accompanies each vehicle transaction – the V5C registration document. But SMDA13 made no mention of this important document.
46. Mandatory and discretionary licensing requirements:

The Scottish Ministers can impose mandatory licensing requirements, such as those included in the Bill relating to record keeping and the identification of customers. In addition, local authorities can also attach discretionary requirements to licences in their areas.

Does the Bill get the balance right between mandatory and discretionary licensing requirements? Should the Bill include other mandatory conditions for obtaining a metal dealer's licence, such as installing CCTV at metal dealers' premises or in relation to labelling of metal and 'forensic coding'?

Some of our previous comments/observations apply to this question. We do not believe that there is a need for accreditation or installation of specific equipment such as CCTV. This potentially just adds cost to those naturally inclined to comply, and in the absence of rigorous enforcement serves further to undermine legitimate business.

We have also made previous comment about the huge variations in performance of & fee levied by individual local government authorities. This also applies to ‘interpretation’ of requirements by local authorities.

Anything that contributes towards ‘smoothing out’ local anomalies should be encouraged.

Submission from the Motor Vehicle Dismantlers’ Association

These comments are provided by the Motor Vehicle Dismantler’s Association of Great Britain (MVDA), the Trade Association for professional UK vehicle recyclers (dismantlers and salvage agents).

The MVDA was formed in 1943 and represents the interests of approximately 200 UK vehicle recyclers and associated companies. MVDA members are typically small and medium sized enterprises (SMEs), usually family owned businesses. Our role is to provide help and guidance to members, and to represent their interests to Government, industry and consumers.

The MVDA fully supports initiatives that seek to detect and deter vehicle crime, and to protect the public from unfair, dangerous and illegal practices.

We are grateful for this opportunity to comment on legislation relating to Scrap Metal Dealers contained in the Air Weapons & Licensing (Scotland) Bill.

23. Is the current Scottish licensing regime, as set out in the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 and the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005, fit for purpose?
As a Licensing Board, our responses are focused upon the liquor licensing regime and the liquor licensing provisions of the new Bill. We have a number of concerns about the current liquor licensing regime. We are concerned that the provisions allowing refusal of an application or allowing steps to be taken in relation to a licence on review, with their reference to the licensing objectives, are difficult for local licensing Boards to apply in practice. This is particularly so given the key decisions of the Court of Session in Brightcrew and LidL. The Bill would, in our view, have been an opportunity to address these issues. While we welcome the fit and proper person test being introduced to the 2005 Act, we consider the addition of the words “having regard to the licensing objectives” in this context unnecessary and likely to give rise to litigation where Boards seek to regulate in the public interest. We think the different formulations throughout the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 in relation to the licensing objectives, for example “necessary or appropriate for...”, “having regard to...” and “would be inconsistent with”, makes for complexity in interpretation.

We consider that revised statutory guidance is long overdue. The current guidance has already been shown to be deficient in relation particularly to excluded premises, specifically garage forecourts. Meantime, Boards require to formulate policy statements on issues such as overprovision in the absence of useful guidance. Given that Boards have a duty to have regard to the Guidance, it is important that the Guidance is useful and represents the current legal position.

We note that the new Bill does not address the difficulties around clubs’ licences despite these featuring prominently in a recent consultation. We consider there should be additional restrictions on the operation of members’ clubs and that breach of the provisions of a club constitution should in particular become a breach of licence allowing a Board to review the licence. The privileges allowed to clubs under licensing legislation are in place due to the nature of these organisations. In the absence of licensing controls to ensure that they are operating properly within their own constitution the provisions surrounding club licensing are open to abuse. It is suggested that the constitution itself should not physically form part of a licence, but that the same end could be achieved by introducing mandatory conditions for these organisations’ premises that (a) the club must comply with the terms of its Constitution as shall apply at any given time and (b) that a copy of the Constitution must be provided with applications for a licence and then within 14 days of any change being made to that Constitution, to both the Board and the police. This would ensure the provisions were incorporated in the licence without unduly increasing administration and unnecessarily requiring applications for minor variation upon changes being made. See Paper Apart for the remainder of this Answer

We also consider that the legislation should be more explicit that only a registered club should be able to lodge an application for an occasional licence for its own premises, given the relaxation to allow their premises to be subject of an occasional licence under Regulation 3 of The...
24. Should a licensing system seek to regulate individual behaviour or communities of space (eg. ‘city space’ etc.)?

We consider that it is essential that licensing regulates individual behaviour to ensure that the licensing objectives are met, but also that it should regulate localities, as it already does with overprovision statements.

25. In what way should the licensing system in Scotland interact with the support the land use planning system, community planning and regeneration?

It is recognised that alcohol problems present considerable challenges to all community planning partners and initiatives take place in relation to addiction and offending. We consider that the licensing system should allow local licensing boards discretion to decide what is best for the areas they serve and that the liquor licensing system should allow them to assist in delivering community planning objectives including the building of more prosperous and safer communities. We have no comment to make on the land use planning system, other than that existing legislation and case law recognise that licensing regimes are not in place to regulate matters covered under other legislation.

26. How does the licensing system in Scotland assist with the delivery of sustainable development and economic balanced areas?

With the exception of overprovision policies, which in any event require to seek to promote the licensing objectives, it is difficult in our view to see how existing liquor licensing legislation directly assists with sustainable development and economic balanced areas.
27. In what way does the licensing system in Scotland support health and planning, addressing health inequalities and public health wellbeing outcomes?

The liquor licensing system in our view seeks to achieve this through statements of licensing policy which must seek to promote the licensing objectives and the grounds for refusal of applications which include protecting and improving public health.
4. Alcohol Licensing

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

28. In what ways will the Bill’s provisions on alcohol licensing allow for reductions in crime and the preservation of public order?

We welcome the re-introduction of the “fit and proper” test, although we think its formulation with reference to the licensing objectives is unnecessary and is likely to be the subject of litigation to clarify what it means. We think the move to a fit and proper test may allow Boards to refuse licences more easily where there are concerns over members of the licensed trade involved in criminality and we welcome the additional powers of police and Licensing Standards Officers to comment on these matters. However, we also have concerns that this test, as it relates to reviews, may only be used in relation to the more serious cases, given that revocation of a licence is the only option available to a Board where it is established.

The rules around supply of alcohol for consumption in public by children and young persons are also likely to assist in reducing crime and preserving public order.

29. Are there any other measures which should be taken to assist in the reduction of crime and the preservation of public order?
Reference is made to Answer 23. We consider that the grounds of refusal and review should be more robust, with the issues raised by Brightcrew and Lidl being addressed in legislation to ensure Boards have more effective powers to deal with- and impose a sanction upon- those premises where poor practices are evident. The new fit and proper person test, with revocation the only available step, may only be used only in the more serious cases. We consider that the issues identified in relation to clubs, if rectified as suggested at Answer 23, may be of some assistance in relation to maintaining public order.

30. In what ways will the provisions in the Bill enhance the licensing objectives set out in the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005?

We welcome the extension of the fifth licensing objective to cover young persons as well as children. This should enable this licensing objective to be engaged in relation to reviews based on test purchases.

31. In what ways will the re-introduction of the “fit and proper person” test assist with the implementation of the licensing objectives set out in the 2005 act?
It is to be hoped that this will be effective in ensuring that only those who ought to have a licence obtain one or remain licensed. However, we have some concerns by the addition of the words “having regard to the licensing objectives” throughout these provisions. We think this will be open to interpretation, particularly in light of Brightcrew, and that the effect and extent of the provisions may not be clear until there has been litigation on this point. We do have concerns that the provisions may not be fully utilised given that the only penalty available in the event of the new test being established is that of revocation. In cases of moderate seriousness particularly, the difficulties created by the LidL decision remain and leave Boards to identify suitable steps to achieve some “forward-looking” purpose.

32. Have there been any unintended consequences arising from the 2005 Act, for example, in rural areas or the economic regeneration of areas?

We are not aware of any specific unintended consequences in our area.

33. Which, if any, types of spent relevant offences should be required to be disclosed and what do you think the benefits of disclosure will be?

Given that the relevant legislation sets out at length the offences considered “relevant” under the Act, we think this matter should be left to the discretion of local Licensing Boards. While the Bill seeks to delete the current provision excluding spent convictions, it is probable, unless further exclusions are made from the scope of the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974, that a Board will in any event have to consider whether the interests of justice require disclosure of spent convictions, having regard to the age, nature and seriousness of these matters.

34. Do you have any other comments to make on the alcohol licensing aspects of the Bill?
We do think that the provisions around transfers in section 33 and, particularly, 34 of the 2005 Act, could also be simplified by adding some new provisions to the Bill. The provisions of section 28 of the 2005 Act around licences ceasing to have effect 28 days from an “event”, particularly insolvency, mean that on a strict reading a licence may come to an end and be unable to be transferred prior to an insolvency practitioner being appointed by the Accountant in Bankruptcy, causing unintended consequences. It is unclear why the dissolution ground can only apply to a person other than an “individual, partnership or company” and this can lead to situations where a premises licence may cease to have effect, simply as no-one will realistically be able to trade under the previous licence again, so that a new licence has to be sought.
Renfrewshire Licensing Board
Paper Apart for Response in relation to Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill

Continuation of Response to Question 23... We also consider that the legislation should be more explicit that only a registered club should be able to lodge an application for an occasional licence for its own premises, given the relaxation to allow their premises to be subject of an occasional licence under Regulation 3 of The Licensing (Clubs) (Scotland) Regulations 2007, which does not apply to other licensed premises.

We would also identify further areas for reform in liquor licensing-

(a) We consider the provisions in relation to insolvency to be confused. Insolvency is presently a ground under section 28 upon which a licence ceases to have effect unless a transfer application is made timeously by a prescribed person. However, it is not a ground for refusal of either a premises or occasional licence, which means that a person who has lost a licence under section 28 could possibly apply for a new licence for the same premises. It is unclear why this should be the case.

(b) We are aware that Boards and practitioners alike have had to improvise as to the meaning of the words “ceased to be used for the sale of alcohol” in section 28. The Act does not specify what happens when there is a temporary cessation in trading from any premises. Similarly, there is no provision as to what happens when premises are destroyed and rebuilt. We think there could be more clarity around these provisions.

UKLPG represents the LPG industry throughout the UK. LPG (Liquefied Petroleum Gas – also known as propane and butane) is sold in portable cylinders, most being made of steel with brass fittings. As such many are misappropriated. In recent years the LPG industry has replaced 400,000 cylinders per annum, whilst only scrapping 200,000 suggesting that 200,000 are misappropriated each year, finding their way into metal scrap yards or illegally exported.

LPG cylinders in almost all cases in the UK belong to the gas supplying company who provide the cylinder to the users under contractual arrangements, in most cases involving a payment of a deposit. Handling of cylinders therefore by SMDs or others who seek to misappropriate them has been of growing concern to the industry. As such it has worked closely with police forces throughout the UK, assisting direct action and sharing intelligence. UKLPG sits on the Association of Chief Police Officers Metal theft Working Group.

Since the introduction of cashless trading in England and Wales, and the further requirements of the Scrap Metal Dealers Act 2013, police report fewer incidents of cylinders found in scrap metal sites suggesting the combined provisions are working. UKLPG would suggest that provisions in Scotland reflect those now introduced in England and Wales.

UKLPG therefore welcomes the provisions proposed for Scotland, in particular the introduction of cashless trading, the repeal of the exemption warrants and the requirement for improved record keeping for both fixed SMDs and itinerant dealers.

41. In your view, could the Bill be further strengthened in any way, for example, by including an accreditation scheme for metal dealers?
So long as an accreditation scheme is not used to circumvent the improved legal provisions, then any action that improves the way in which Scrap Metal Dealers operate within the sphere of public interest would be welcomed. It may be that accreditation, based on quality and best practice, is for the industry itself rather than the authorities.

42. Removal of exemption warrant - do you wish to comment on the proposal to remove the exemption warrant system?

UKLPG welcomes the removal of exemption warrant system, as we believe this both simplifies and strengthens monitoring and enforcement leaving no doubt that all SMDs operate under the same conditions.

43. Removal of requirement to retain metal on-site - what impact will the proposal to remove the retention of metal requirement have on the enforcement of the licensing regime and prevention of criminal activities?

We support a fully cashless regime and believe that opening the door via “very small transactions” could quickly lead to abuse and would be tougher to police. Questions arise in what constitutes a “very small transaction” and how would thresholds be set (metal weight/amount of cash)? Without any requirement to keep the metal on site how could anyone prove that, say, 5 small transactions were not actually one larger transaction for which cash was paid?

Gas cylinders can illicitly change hands for a small rounded cash consideration (equal to bank note denominations) and so allowing cash transactions in any form may make gas cylinders even more appealing to those trading in illicit goods. We urge the Committee to stand firm and ban all cash trading so ensuring similar conditions throughout the UK and reduce any risk of trade moving from England to Scotland to exploit this potential loophole.

45. Forms of identification and record keeping:

In line with the Scrap Metal Dealers Act 2013, the Bill adds additional record keeping requirements to a metal dealer’s licence including recording the means by which a seller’s name and address was verified and retaining a copy of the document, and the method of payment and a copy of the payment document. The Bill will also require a metal dealer to record information in books with serially numbered pages or by means of an electronic device, and to keep separate records at each place of business. Such information and documents are to be kept for three rather than the current two years.

How important is it that the record keeping requirements reflect those in the Scrap Metal Dealers Act 2013, and do you agree with the Scottish Government that the proposed record keeping requirements are not unduly burdensome?
UKLPG believes it is important that record keeping requirements reflect those in the Scrap Metal Dealers Act of 2013. Gas cylinders are sold and returned throughout the UK, and with a number of member companies trading both in Scotland and England, consistency in legislative requirements in the case of SMDs would be supported.

Stolen gas cylinders, because of their portability, can be illicitly traded anywhere in the UK so requiring consistent record keeping would help any UK wide investigation by police or joint authorities.

We do not believe the record keeping proposed is unduly onerous – we have not heard of any comment that it has been un-manageable in England and Wales, and evidence suggest that the Act has resulted in fewer metal thefts.

46. Mandatory and discretionary licensing requirements:

The Scottish Ministers can impose mandatory licensing requirements, such as those included in the Bill relating to record keeping and the identification of customers. In addition, local authorities can also attach discretionary requirements to licences in their areas.

Does the Bill get the balance right between mandatory and discretionary licensing requirements? Should the Bill include other mandatory conditions for obtaining a metal dealer’s licence, such as installing CCTV at metal dealers’ premises or in relation to labelling of metal and ‘forensic coding’?

50. What are the consequences of operating the new licensing regime using the definitions set out at section 68 of the Bill?

- 'sexual entertainment venue'
- 'audience'
- 'financial gain'
- 'organiser'
- 'premises'
- 'sexual entertainment', and
- 'display of nudity'

The Association
1. considers that if adult entertainment venues must be re-defined as sexual entertainment venues and require to be so licensed the administration of that licensing should be carried out by licensing boards to prevent dual licensing and conflict between differing licensing regimes
2. is concerned that the definition for adult entertainment venue in the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 is different from the definition of sexual entertainment venue which could lead to difficulties of interpretation
3. has no comment to make on the term “audience”
4. has no comment to make on the term “financial gain”
5. has no comment to make on the term organiser
6. has no comment to make on the term “premises”
7. the association has no comment to make relating to the definition of “sexual entertainment” however wish it noted that members believe the entertainment provided within their premises does not fall within the definition of “sexual entertainment” as the purpose of the entertainment provided within the adult entertainment venues belonging to members is such as to entertain customers by way of exotic dance and performance and not to sexually stimulate members of an audience. Further the Association questions how the term “sexual stimulation” can be determined.
8. has no comment to make on the term “display of nudity”

51. The Bill specifies that a venue hosting sexual entertainment on three occasions or less within a 12 month period would not be treated as a sexual entertainment venue: does this have any unintended consequences?

The Association
1. is concerned that this proposal would encourage the very criminality the Scottish Government seeks to prevent by permitting this type of entertainment to potentially take place in unlicensed venues where performers and customers might be subject to harm
2. that the Scottish Government is failing to deal with crimes and offences of a sexual nature which take place in private dwellings – vis the recent report by Police Scotland on prostitution and human trafficking
3. that the Scottish Government is basing its proposals for licensing of “sexual entertainment” on a false premise that current adult entertainment venues are venues which are run in such a manner that performers and customers are at risk. This premise is flawed as was demonstrated in the Scottish Government’s own report Working Group on Adult Entertainment which reported in 2005. Adult entertainment venues are amongst the best run establishments in Scotland as evidenced by the complete lack of crimes reported or convictions made relating to the running of these premises.

52. Local licensing authorities will be able to set the number of sexual entertainment venues in their area to below the existing level, or zero: are there any advantages or disadvantages to this approach?

The Association considers this to be a flawed proposal which if implemented would result in the closure of some 20 venues in Scotland and the loss of some 1500 jobs. The Association believes that a “grandfather rights” mechanism should be set up to protect the current well run businesses. The Association believes that if current dedicated ‘adult entertainment “venues are to be closed due to this process it should be for the licensing authorities to demonstrate what harm or criminality which would be prevented or was required to be tackled before the decision was taken to close existing businesses.

53. The Bill relies mainly on the existing licensing regime for sex shops as set out in section 44 and Schedule 2 of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 (application, notification, objections and representations, revocation of licences etc., enforcement and appeals): is this mechanism adequate for the licensing of sexual entertainment venues - if not, please explain why?

The Association believes that the licensing of sexual entertainment venues should be carried out by Licensing Boards and not local authority licensing committees to prevent conflict of regimes and dual licensing.

54. Are there any barriers to licensing authorities operating the new licensing regime?

As above the potential for conflicting regimes is high and the proposal does not meet with the terms of the Scottish Government’s desire for better regulation.

55. Civic Licensing

Do you have any other comments to make on the civic licensing aspects of the Bill?

The Association has no other comments to make on the Bill.

23. Is the current Scottish licensing regime, as set out in the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 and the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005, fit for purpose?

We believe the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 is fit for purpose. It is important that there is consistent application and enforcement of the Act.

24. Should a licensing system seek to regulate individual behaviour or communities of space (eg. ‘city space’ etc.)?

We consider that a licensing system inevitably will have an impact on both individual behaviour and that of the wider community.

25. In what way should the licensing system in Scotland interact with the support the land use planning system, community planning and regeneration?

We have no evidence to suggest whether or not it does.
26. How does the licensing system in Scotland assist with the delivery of sustainable development and economic balanced areas?

Refer to answer to Q25.

27. In what way does the licensing system in Scotland support health and planning, addressing health inequalities and public health wellbeing outcomes?

The licensing system is not designed to, nor have the intention of supporting the listed criteria.

Protecting public health is one of the objectives under the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005. Those subject to its requirement have a role to play in promoting responsible consumption of alcoholic beverages.
4. Alcohol Licensing

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

28. In what ways will the Bill’s provisions on alcohol licensing allow for reductions in crime and the preservation of public order?

We believe that a number of additional measures contained in the Bill will support the licensing objectives as set out in the 2005 Act.

We are supportive of the aim of the new offence of supplying alcohol to children or young people for consumption in a public place, as set out in the Policy Memorandum, to tackle outdoor drinking dens which consist of small groups of people below and above the legal purchase age. However, it is important that the provision is designed in a way that does not result in unwelcome and unintended consequences; for example the criminalisation of parents that serve alcohol to their children at family picnics. Guidance to police and licensing boards on this issue will be important.

The ‘fit and proper person’ provisions will also make a contribution.

29. Are there any other measures which should be taken to assist in the reduction of crime and the preservation of public order?

In Scotland we have a comprehensive licensing regime; the Bill makes further adjustments and enhancements to the Act which we believe will make a contribution to reducing crime and preserving public order.

We believe the biggest contribution to addressing this issue is consistent and effective enforcement of the provisions of the current Act.

30. In what ways will the provisions in the Bill enhance the licensing objectives set out in the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005?
31. In what ways will the re-introduction of the “fit and proper person” test assist with the implementation of the licensing objectives set out in the 2005 act?

The re-introduction of the ‘fit and proper person’ test has the potential to contribute towards implementation of all the licensing objectives.

In our response to the consultation on Further Options for Alcohol Licensing we supported inclusion of a definition of ‘fit and proper’. We note in the letter dated 1 September from Scottish Government officials have set out a range of regimes which use the ‘fit and proper’ test and we can see the benefit it will provide in allowing Licensing Boards to consider a broad range of information in making their decisions. However, that does not preclude developing a definition that would support consistency in its interpretation and application.

32. Have there been any unintended consequences arising from the 2005 Act, for example, in rural areas or the economic regeneration of areas?

33. Which, if any, types of spent relevant offences should be required to be disclosed and what do you think the benefits of disclosure will be?
34. Do you have any other comments to make on the alcohol licensing aspects of the Bill?

Overprovision

Distillery Visitor Centres (DVCs) are major tourist attractions. They attract more than 1.3 million visitors a year and contribute £34 million in value to the local economy. They promote not only Scotch Whisky and Scotland, but many other local products.

The Bill will provide Boards with powers to assess overprovision for entire Board Areas.

We are concerned this has the potential to negatively impact on the development and creation of new DVCs.

It would appear unfair that a distillery within a Board’s area could not develop or build a new DVC because there was blanket over provision ruling applying to the whole of the Board’s area. In other words a DVC in rural environment being impacted because the number of licenses premises in a local town or other part of the Board’s area, especially as most alcohol sales from DVCs are to tourist and visitors from outwith the area.

Section 57: Personal Licences: grant, duration and renewal

We support the proposal to address the current situation which prevents a licence holder who has their licence revoked for failing to undertake refresher training, from reapplying for a licence within 5 years.

23. Is the current Scottish licensing regime, as set out in the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 and the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005, fit for purpose?

Accountability for Licensing Boards is lacking. In addition to the requirement that licensing boards produce an annual financial report (Section 55) measures we would like to see brought forward include:

- A statutory duty on licensing boards to promote the licensing objectives
- A statutory duty on licensing boards to record, collate and report on a comprehensive licensing data set.
- A statutory duty on licensing boards to produce an annual report, including outlining how they have complied with their Statement of Licensing Policy, including details of decisions made that are contrary to the Statement of Licensing Policy giving clear reasons why such decisions were made.
- A requirement for the Scottish Government to regularly review and update the statutory guidance for licensing boards.
- Retaining the requirement for overprovision assessments to take account of the number and capacity of licensed premises, supplemented with a permissive ability to also take account of licensed hours, numbers of members’ clubs and occasional licences.

24. Should a licensing system seek to regulate individual behaviour or communities of space (eg. ‘city space’ etc.)?
We would support a whole population approach as this has been found to be more effective than measures which seek to regulate individual behaviour.

The prevention paradox highlighted by Poikolainen et al (2007)\(^1\) identified the top 10% of heaviest drinkers in their national sample and then compared their outcomes to the remaining 90% of drinkers. This study clearly identified that targeting the heaviest drinkers in a population is unlikely to reduce the associated health burden of alcohol-related harms as the small risk multiplied by a larger population can produce more cases than a greater risk multiplied by a much smaller population.

25. In what way should the licensing system in Scotland interact with the support the land use planning system, community planning and regeneration?

The current licensing system in Scotland does not support the land use planning system, community planning and regeneration. When alcohol has been identified as a Single Outcome Agreement (SOA) priority it is vital that Licensing Boards recognise this and make the connection. The licensing system should also be aligned to and compliment community planning priorities and strategies.

26. How does the licensing system in Scotland assist with the delivery of sustainable development and economic balanced areas?

Too much consideration is being given to the "alleged" economic argument to the detriment of the evidenced harms to health submitted by health.

There is no objective to promote the economic development of an area but this is often a prime consideration for licensing boards. There is ample evidence to confirm the harms to physical health and the negative social impacts of alcohol. Licensing Board members should concentrate on their prime function – which is the promotion of the five licensing objectives and the licensing of premises or persons for the sale of alcohol.

27. In what way does the licensing system in Scotland support health and planning, addressing health inequalities and public health wellbeing outcomes?

In principle the licensing system in Scotland is there to support health and planning, addressing health inequalities and public health and wellbeing outcomes but our experience is that in practice this does not happen.

We feel that if Licensing Boards were held to account for producing outcomes for the 5 Licensing Objectives they would be less inclined to discount the health evidence,
4. Alcohol Licensing

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

28. In what ways will the Bill’s provisions on alcohol licensing allow for reductions in crime and the preservation of public order?

The bill has more focus on crime and the preservation of public order and has missed the opportunity to highlight the benefits of promoting and improving public health.

We object to the change in wording under section 54(2)(b) and would suggest that “licensing boards must have regard to the number and capacity and licensed hours of ……”

29. Are there any other measures which should be taken to assist in the reduction of crime and the preservation of public order?

As documented in Q23 we would stress the need for annual reporting from all Licensing Boards using a common format across Scotland.

Data collection in relation to alcohol sales would also help inform figures for volume of sales in specific localities and provide baseline data for estimated consumption.

30. In what ways will the provisions in the Bill enhance the licensing objectives set out in the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005?
We welcome
- the inclusion of 16 and 17 year olds by the act and the impact this will have on the licensing objective of protecting children from harm, and
- the clarity around the overprovision statement.

Hopefully comments made in response to question 23 can also be considered as these would certainly enhance outcome reporting and monitoring in relation to the licensing objectives.

31. In what ways will the re-introduction of the “fit and proper person” test assist with the implementation of the licensing objectives set out in the 2005 act?

The re-introduction of the “fit and proper person” statement is welcome but will need to be accompanied with a clear definition of what this means. How will this be measured?

32. Have there been any unintended consequences arising from the 2005 Act, for example, in rural areas or the economic regeneration of areas?

Legal representatives are more prepared to give reasons why applications should be exceptions to the Statement of Licensing Policy when there is an over provision statement and are concentrating on economic and community planning arguments to make their cases.

33. Which, if any, types of spent relevant offences should be required to be disclosed and what do you think the benefits of disclosure will be?
34. Do you have any other comments to make on the alcohol licensing aspects of the Bill?

It would be helpful if Licensing Boards were given more guidance on:
- The conduct of hearings
- Irresponsible drinks promotions
- The public health objective
- How to assess overprovision, including how to measure capacity
- Any new, relevant legislation that is implemented.

This guidance should also be reviewed and updated regularly.

We approve of the changes identified in section 42 which would align the licensing policy period to election of councillors for local government areas and the introduction of the new criminal offence – the purchase or attempted purchase of alcohol for or on behalf of a child or young person.

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

50. What are the consequences of operating the new licensing regime using the definitions set out at section 68 of the Bill?

- 'sexual entertainment venue'
- 'audience'
- 'financial gain'
- 'organiser'
- 'premises'
- 'sexual entertainment', and
- 'display of nudity'

Theses venues are for adult entertainment and a customer choosing to enter such venues. It cannot be assumed that all adults see dancing as 'sexual entertainment'.

51. The Bill specifies that a venue hosting sexual entertainment on three occasions or less within a 12 month period would not be treated as a sexual entertainment venue: does this have any unintended consequences?

There is no way in which it can be monitored that a venue would have less then 3 occasions of sexual entertainment. An adult entertainment venue should be licenced at all times.
52. Local licensing authorities will be able to set the number of sexual entertainment venues in their area to below the existing level, or zero: are there any advantages or disadvantages to this approach?

Yes there are disadvantages as Edinburgh and Glasgow may then have very different rules and guidance. This is confusing for both customers and staff who may visit or work in two cities. An authority which controls alcohol licensing should not have authority on these venues and decisions.

53. The Bill relies mainly on the existing licensing regime for sex shops as set out in section 44 and Schedule 2 of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 (application, notification, objections and representations, revocation of licences etc., enforcement and appeals): is this mechanism adequate for the licensing of sexual entertainment venues - if not, please explain why?

54. Are there any barriers to licensing authorities operating the new licensing regime?

Yes. There are well run and well established adult entertainment venues who have their place in a society where people have the right to choose what they find ‘entertaining’.
55. Civic Licensing

Do you have any other comments to make on the civic licensing aspects of the Bill?

I have a member of family who works in a lap dancing club and I know she is not a sex slave or a prostitute. I think it is ridiculous what you are trying to do. I ask you to think again about closing lap dancing clubs as they do no harm customers or staff who choose to work there. Many staff are happy in the environment and women should be free to choose their job. We do not want Scotland to regress.

1. Air Weapons Licensing

You may respond to all the questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

13. In what ways will the creation of an air weapons licensing system in Scotland contribute to preserving public order and safety, reducing crime and advancing public health policy?
Whilst the majority of air weapon owners are responsible, accidents continue to happen. In Scotland the number of offences and injuries has been falling, but as a percentage of firearms offences and injuries they have been increasing since 2010. Around half of these injuries occur to youngsters under the age of 20.

Whilst fatalities in Scotland from air weapons are fortunately very few, within the UK there can be one or two fatalities a year. Other regions of the UK have from time to time followed legislation developed in one of the other member countries, and well crafted legislation in Scotland could become a model for other regions and hence save lives.

Research undertaken at Abertay University has looked at the penetration of air weapon pellets into various materials and pellets can penetrate 10-15 cm into ballistic gel models. Turkish researchers have shown similar results with 8 cm penetration into skin stimulant-ballistic gel models with air weapons below 16 J. Pellets striking bone embedded in gel can deform and may fragment, causing multiple injury tracks. Whilst real life situations are complex due to clothing, skin, muscle, and bone, the evidence so far suggests that air weapon pellets have the potential to penetrate vital organs, and there are published accounts in the literature of accidental and deliberate shootings that confirm the injuries and fatalities that can occur.

One problem with any weapon is that it may be perceived as 'safe' if there are no restrictions on it. It is difficult to propose a safe limit for air weapons, and statistics from the USA show that there are around 600 cases a year of people reporting to emergency rooms with injuries from paintballs, although this figure is far short of the 20,000 reporting with injuries from air weapons. The limit of 1 Joule for needing a certificate will therefore exempt many paintball and airsoft activities, but it should not therefore be assumed that no injury could occur.

The Bill alludes to the Firearms Act 1968 but it may be worth stating the upper limits that a certificate will cover i.e. 6 and 12 foot pounds (8.2 and 16.3 Joules)

The aim of this legislation therefore needs to be to limit access to air weapons for potentially irresponsible users whilst causing minimum disruption to those who have legitimate uses for air weapons for vermin control or as a hobby.

14. Is there sufficient provision, or sufficient capacity to provide, suitable numbers of air weapons clubs across all areas of Scotland for use by registered air weapons owners/users?
15. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for personal/recreational use?

16. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those aged 14 to 17 who use air weapons?

18. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for competitive sporting purposes?

19. Is it equitable for those applying for an air weapons certificate to pay a fee which cannot be refundable irrespective of whether a certificate is granted or not?

20. Will the air weapons licensing system have a positive or negative impact on other areas of the public sector in Scotland (eg. The work of local government, public agencies etc.)?

21. What, if any, might the unintended consequences of introducing an air weapons licensing system in Scotland be?

23. Is the current Scottish licensing regime, as set out in the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 and the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005, fit for purpose?
Local Government and Regeneration Committee – Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill

No. We note that the principal policy objectives of this Bill are “to strengthen and improve aspects of locally led alcohol and civic government licensing in order to preserve public order and safety, reduce crime, and to advance public health”.

As the independent Scottish charity taking action to reduce the harm caused by tobacco use we will focus on the need to advance public health through adequately regulating the supply of tobacco. Our submission highlights what we feel is a large and unwarranted gap in the existing licensing regime – an anomaly which this Bill is well placed to address.

That there is a comprehensive licensing regime regulating who is able to sell alcohol and how they are able to do so is well known. There are also licensing schemes in place to govern a range of other activities, such as having people staying in a caravan on your land, felling trees, exhibiting performing animals and placing tables or chairs on the pavement outside your premises (full details are available from www.gov.uk/licence-finder).

It is a failure in the current licensing regime that the supply of the product which is far and away the greatest cause of preventable ill health and death is not subject to such restrictions. Everyone is legally entitled to sell tobacco – and while many retailers voluntarily restrict this to over-18s, there are no required skills, training or qualifications.

Tobacco has been a priority area for health improvement under successive Scottish administrations. Recently we have seen legislation to remove retail tobacco displays and to ban unstaffed vending machines. We have comprehensive legislation to prohibit tobacco advertising and of course a ban on smoking in enclosed public areas. Yet at the same time the sale of tobacco remains a very open and liberal market.

The Scottish Government has set a key national outcome that we will live longer, healthier lives and has adopted an ambitious target of making Scotland free from tobacco by 2034. Yet the ubiquity of supply presents tobacco as a normal, everyday consumer product, just as the tobacco companies wish us to see it. We know that growing up in an environment where tobacco use is the norm makes children more likely to take up smoking themselves.

A pregnant smoker is at higher risk of having her baby born too early and with an abnormally low birth weight. A woman who smokes during or after pregnancy increases her infant’s risk of death from Sudden Infant Death Syndrome (SIDS). At a societal level, nearly two thirds of smokers start before they are 18 and most now indicate that they want to stop. The smoking rate in the poorest communities is 4-5 times higher than in the richest, making smoking a huge cause and effect of health inequalities.

The Scottish Government has set a key national outcome that we will live longer, healthier lives and has adopted an ambitious target of making Scotland free from tobacco by 2034. Yet the ubiquity of supply presents tobacco as a normal, everyday consumer product, just as the tobacco companies wish us to see it. We know that growing up in an environment where tobacco use is the norm makes children more likely to take up smoking themselves.

The new alcohol licensing scheme explicitly introduced a new policy objective “to protect and improve public health”. We propose that extending licensing arrangements to cover sales of tobacco would provide a significant opportunity to pursue the improvement of public health through enabling the setting of local health goals and regulating the supply of tobacco accordingly and generating an enforcement regime with real teeth, helping to reduce the supply of tobacco to young people and tackling the problem of illicit tobacco.

In considering whether a licensing scheme could make a significant contribution to regulating the supply of a harmful product, we ask the Committee to consider whether it would back removing the requirement of a license to sell alcohol, allowing anyone to do so. We suggest that such a move would make the regulation of alcohol in support of public health goals more difficult, and hence that this is not something the Committee would be likely to support.

We would be happy to develop these ideas in oral presentation to the Committee.
24. Should a licensing system seek to regulate individual behaviour or communities of space (eg. ‘city space’ etc.)?

25. In what way should the licensing system in Scotland interact with the support the land use planning system, community planning and regeneration?

26. How does the licensing system in Scotland assist with the delivery of sustainable development and economic balanced areas?

27. In what way does the licensing system in Scotland support health and planning, addressing health inequalities and public health wellbeing outcomes?
Submission Name: Scottish Saltires Modern Pentathlon

12. Do you have any other comments on the impact of the proposals contained in the Bill relation to Scottish Government objectives?

As an organisation we feel that the Bill should aim for a light regulatory touch with minimum cost when it impacts on bona fide sport clubs such as Scottish Saltires Modern Pentathlon and Scottish Tetrathlon. This will help limit potential detrimental effects this Bill might have on the various Scottish Government objectives and initiatives in Scottish Sport such as: "Girls on the Move" (75% of our participants are girls) and "Giving Young People a Sporting Chance"
1. Air Weapons Licensing

You may respond to all the questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

13. In what ways will the creation of an air weapons licensing system in Scotland contribute to preserving public order and safety, reducing crime and advancing public health policy?

| We don’t think it will. |

Forcing young children to have to shoot at existing club premises where the number of shooters using airguns will increase dramatically if the bill is passed, will place them in a more heavily lead contaminated environment, this would be counter to public health policies.

In addition our members are taught to be extremely safety conscious and look after their pistols responsibly as they are given training by Scottish Saltires MPC and Scottish PC Tetrathlon Range Officers. Scottish Saltires MPC and Scottish Tetrathlon work hand in hand in training at all levels. 90% of our members start the sport of Modern Pentathlon through Scottish Tetrathlon.

14. Is there sufficient provision, or sufficient capacity to provide, suitable numbers of air weapons clubs across all areas of Scotland for use by registered air weapons owners/ users?
There is not currently sufficient provision of air weapons clubs across all areas of Scotland. Many members of Scottish Saltires MPC are not in an area that can support a traditional club due to geography.

Members currently train with Scottish Saltires MPC and Scottish Tetrathlon in various locations and practice on private land without incurring the cost of being members of an Air Weapon Club. If the bill was passed and Scottish Saltires MPC and Scottish Tetrathlon (under the auspice of Pony Club) were to become an approved air weapon club which uses multiple premises across Scotland this would provide sufficient capacity. By virtue of Schedule 1 Exemption 1 Scottish Saltires MPC and Scottish Tetrathlon members would be able to train with Scottish Saltires MPC and Scottish Tetrathlon at various premises and on private land without requiring individual certificates. Schedule 1 Exemption 1 would need to be slightly amended to reflect this.

As many of our members are under 14 years of age Scottish Saltires MPC request that Schedule 1 Exemption 1 be amended to allow a parent/guardian/adult over 21 be allowed to supervise both training and competitions.

15. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for personal/recreational use?
If each of our members were to require an air weapons certificate it will add cost and bureaucracy to a sport/organisation which is well controlled and teaches young people responsibility and respect. If all our members were required to go through the time consuming and costly process of both obtaining a licence and joining an additional club, our members would be unlikely to take up the sport and may also choose to leave the sport.

If passed as is, members will not be able to repair their air weapons either at their own homes or during a competition without the presence of a registered firearms dealer. There are not sufficient firearms dealers to service this requirement and they will add additional cost to enter this sport. Scottish Saltires MPC has proved to be, along with Scottish Tetrathlon, the grass roots organisation for many young athletes who have gone on to become elite athletes in modern pentathlon.

We currently have 70 members regularly competing approx 75% are girls and 70% are under 14 years of age.

Many Scots have gone on to compete at elite level, representing GB and part of the World Class program. Currently competing are 2012 World Champion and 2012 Olympian Mhairi Spence who is from Farr near Inverness, Inverurie’s. Freyja Prentice, reserve athlete for London 2012, junior individual medal winner at World and European level. Joanna Muir from Castle Douglas spent time on top of the world junior ranking list this year. Aberdeen’s Eilidh Prise has won individual youth world and European medals and started 2014 on top of the youth world ranking. Maili McKenzie from Dumfries represented GB at junior world and European championships this year. Mhairi, Freyja, Jo and Eilidh are part of a group of 7 women on the GB world class program on Podium and Podium Potential which is clearly dominated by Scots women. They all started at grass roots level through Scottish Tetrathlon, moving onto Pentathlon as a result of the high standard of performance they showed in Scottish Tetrathlon.

Airgun shooting is a sport accessible to all ages and disabilities. Scottish Saltires MPC has members who have shown so much talent in the shooting phase of Pentathlon they have gone on to represent Scotland at International Junior shooting competitions. This bill will deter people starting recreationally due to the bureaucracy and so stop the development of competitive shooters at all levels.
16. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those aged 14 to 17 who use air weapons?

The majority of our members are under 17 and as such the air weapons licensing systems would have a huge effect on them. If however we were allowed to become an approved air weapon club and therefore exempt from individual licences this would work for our organisation.

Each person will require an air weapons certificate which will add cost and bureaucracy.

They will not be able to repair their weapons without a registered firearms dealer, again adding cost and time. In addition as they are 14-17 they will probably be unable to drive and therefore find it difficult to access a firearms dealer especially in the more remote areas of Scotland.

18. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for competitive sporting purposes?
All competitors require a licence incurring cost and bureaucracy. This would require event and visitor permits. This would be totally untenable for our sport as we often have more than 20 visitors attending our competitions and training events which run monthly. Having tried and failed to get visitor permits to take across to Northern Ireland we know how difficult and impractical such a requirement is.

In 2013 the Irish Pentathlon team came over to Scotland to compete against Scottish Saltires. All competitors were youth's and gained invaluable experience from competing at this level against another nation. The Scottish youths took a convincing win which gave the sport a boost and encouraged participation. This event would be impossible under the current proposals in this bill.

If Scottish Saltires MPC were to become an approved air weapons club as requested previously, according to our interpretation of Schedule 1 section 1b(i) we would not require an event or visitor licence which would allow us to continue to run our Schedule 1 section 1b(i) we would not require an event or visitor licence which would allow us to continue to run our competitions which are only open to and attended by our members.

19. Is it equitable for those applying for an air weapons certificate to pay a fee which cannot be refundable irrespective of whether a certificate is granted or not?

We do not agree that a fee should be payable for unsuccessful applications.

20. Will the air weapons licensing system have a positive or negative impact on other areas of the public sector in Scotland (eg. The work of local government, public agencies etc.)?

We think that the air weapons licensing system will have a negative effect on the public sector in Scotland. Given that the Firearms teams are already over stretched, resourcing this requirement for licensing of air weapons, clubs, permits will place unprecedented demand on already slim resources.
21. What, if any, might the unintended consequences of introducing an air weapons licensing system in Scotland be?

We believe that in making it difficult or costly to run our events (run, shoot, swim, fence and ride) people will choose not to put themselves through the difficulty of obtaining an air weapons certificate, a visitors permit or joining an additional club, nor to pay the additional costs we will need to charge at competitions to take account of the cost of obtaining event permits. This will mean that our grass roots organisation that currently has up to 70 children from 8-25 competing monthly will no longer exist. In the future we will not have the next generation of Modern Pentathlete or Air Pistol Olympians as they will have no foundation.

The risk of introducing a requirement for an airgun license may encourage applicants to go the full hog and apply for a shotgun/firearms certificate that will thereby increase the number of more high powered/more lethal weapon ownership.

22. Do you have any other comments to make on air weapons licensing aspects of the Bill?

We respect the bill and are keen to work with it. However as it is currently drafted it would be unworkable for us. If however Scottish Saltires MPC and Scottish Tetrathlon were to become an approved Air Weapons Club with multiple premises for training and competitions accross Scotland and allowing all our members and visitors to use air weapons without holding individual certificates, as detailed above, this would allow them to work within the bill and the continuation of our sport along with the added benefit of a pipeline of elite athletes into Modern Pentathlon and the sport of Air Pistol Shooting to follow in our footsteps.

Allow Scottish Saltires MPC to become an approved air weapons club.

Allow all members within Scottish Saltires MPC NOT to require an air weapons certificate, but that Scottish Saltires MPC will hold the air weapons certificate for all weapons used.

Allow Scottish Saltires MPC Qualified Range Officer to repair, transfer or sell air weapons.

Allow anyone visiting from England, Northern Ireland or Wales to be exempt from visitors permits.
Do not limit the size of visiting groups.

3. General Licensing Issues

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

23. Is the current Scottish licensing regime, as set out in the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 and the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005, fit for purpose?

The Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 and the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 require updating in various areas. The current procedures for advertising in local newspapers etc should be updated to permit technology based options e.g use of e-mail/advertise on the Council website.

24. Should a licensing system seek to regulate individual behaviour or communities of space (eg. ‘city space’ etc.)?

This is a concept that could be considered if the licence is of a personal nature. At present, there is adequate regulation in respect of land/buildings.

25. In what way should the licensing system in Scotland interact with the support the land use planning system, community planning and regeneration?

The civic licensing system in Scotland can interact so far as it can assist with land use, if the licence relates to land use. There should be an element of caution applied to ensure that there is no “over regulation” which may stifle regeneration.
26. How does the licensing system in Scotland assist with the delivery of sustainable development and economic balanced areas?

The civic licensing system in Scotland can assist as it grants licences for those wishing to carry out economic activities.

27. In what way does the licensing system in Scotland support health and planning, addressing health inequalities and public health wellbeing outcomes?

Presently, the civic licensing system does not directly address the above issue. There may be an indirect effect.
4. Alcohol Licensing

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

28. In what ways will the Bill’s provisions on alcohol licensing allow for reductions in crime and the preservation of public order?

29. Are there any other measures which should be taken to assist in the reduction of crime and the preservation of public order?

30. In what ways will the provisions in the Bill enhance the licensing objectives set out in the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005?
31. In what ways will the re-introduction of the “fit and proper person” test assist with the implementation of the licensing objectives set out in the 2005 act?

32. Have there been any unintended consequences arising from the 2005 Act, for example, in rural areas or the economic regeneration of areas?

33. Which, if any, types of spent relevant offences should be required to be disclosed and what do you think the benefits of disclosure will be?

34. Do you have any other comments to make on the alcohol licensing aspects of the Bill?
5. Taxi and Private Hire Car Licensing

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

35. What benefits should the licensing of taxis and private hire cars deliver for customers?

- Safety
- Accessibility
- Value for Money

36. In what ways do customers, providers of taxi/private hire car services and local authorities benefit from the two-tier licensing regime for taxis and private hire cars?

There is no obvious benefit for customers and/or the local authority

37. The Government states that a radical overhaul of the current two-tier licensing regime would “clearly require a very high level of resource and would cause significant disruption for the trade, local authorities, the police and ultimately the travelling public”. What are your views on this and would the potential costs and disruptions outweigh any potential benefits of a unified system?
There may be initial disruption in terms of the administration / resourcing a overhaul/ the trade activities. However, a 1 tier system is an efficient outcome as it would streamline legislation and processes. There is also a beneficial practical effect on the public for hiring a taxi and perhaps an economic benefit.

38. Do the changes made by sections 60 (overprovision of private hire car licences) and 61 (testing of private hire car drivers) of the Bill strike the right balance in terms of introducing greater consistency while maintaining justifiable differences?

The above provisions in traduce consistency and get rid of unjustifiable differences.

39. Do you have any views on the section 62 provisions bringing vehicles contracted for exclusive use for 24 or more hours within the licensing regime for taxis and private hire cars, and should any exemptions be included in the Bill?

This is a proposal that would be welcomed (in terms of licensing) but may put a further strain on resourcing.
6. Scrap Metal Dealer Licensing

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

40. Taking the proposals in sections 63 to 66 of the Bill together, how will they have the desired effect of strengthening the metal dealers' licensing regime to the extent that metal theft and related criminal activity is reduced?

The above proposals are consistent and should reduce criminal activity by targeting all metal dealers, regardless of the turnover.

41. In your view, could the Bill be further strengthened in any way, for example, by including an accreditation scheme for metal dealers?

If so, this should not fall within the remit of the licensing authority. If there is a separate accreditation scheme it should be enforced by another body to ensure objectivity and remove a “dual” role for the licensing authority.

42. Removal of exemption warrant - do you wish to comment on the proposal to remove the exemption warrant system?

This is a proposal that would be supported.
43. Removal of requirement to retain metal on-site - what impact will the proposal to remove the retention of metal requirement have on the enforcement of the licensing regime and prevention of criminal activities?

This requirement may not be needed if there are other processes to deal with related criminal activity. However, this is difficult to assess without input from Police Scotland.

44. Forms of payment - what is your view on the proposal to go 'cashless' and is there merit in considering whether metal dealers could be allowed to operate using cash for only very small transactions, which could be limited to a certain number per month?

There is merit on this proposal but it depends on the practical effect of it on the metal dealers.
45. Forms of identification and record keeping:

In line with the Scrap Metal Dealers Act 2013, the Bill adds additional record keeping requirements to a metal dealer's licence including recording the means by which a seller's name and address was verified and retaining a copy of the document, and the method of payment and a copy of the payment document. The Bill will also require a metal dealer to record information in books with serially numbered pages or by means of an electronic device, and to keep separate records at each place of business. Such information and documents are to be kept for three rather than the current two years.

How important is it that the record keeping requirements reflect those in the Scrap Metal Dealers Act 2013, and do you agree with the Scottish Government that the proposed record keeping requirements are not unduly burdensome?

It is a welcome proposal if monitoring criminal activity. It may be viewed as prejudicial if it is not applied to other licences. Consistency should be sought.
46. Mandatory and discretionary licensing requirements:

The Scottish Ministers can impose mandatory licensing requirements, such as those included in the Bill relating to record keeping and the identification of customers. In addition, local authorities can also attach discretionary requirements to licences in their areas.

Does the Bill get the balance right between mandatory and discretionary licensing requirements? Should the Bill include other mandatory conditions for obtaining a metal dealer's licence, such as installing CCTV at metal dealers' premises or in relation to labelling of metal and 'forensic coding'?

See previous answer. Consistency is required. There will be the potential for complaint if this licence is perceived as being treated differently from others and/or imposing requirements which others do not.
7. Civic Licensing – Theatre Licensing

You may respond to all the questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

47. Will there be any impacts during the transitional period between ending the current theatre licence and starting the public entertainment licence?

Only issue is ensuring that the public is aware of it – there should be as much publicity as possible.

48. Are there additional costs or resource implications on theatres or licensing authorities?

There may be an immediate resource the transition period but long term benefits should negate this.

49. How should licensing authorities integrate their current fee charging structure into their public entertainment regime?

This should be effected in the usual manner.
8. Civic Licensing – Sexual Entertainment Venues

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

50. What are the consequences of operating the new licensing regime using the definitions set out at section 68 of the Bill?

- 'sexual entertainment venue'
- 'audience'
- 'financial gain'
- 'organiser'
- 'premises'
- 'sexual entertainment', and
- 'display of nudity'

Statutory definitions will always allow the possibility of legal loopholes being found or created, and thereafter exploited. The better and more complete the definition, the smaller the opportunity for such opportunities, hopefully.

51. The Bill specifies that a venue hosting sexual entertainment on three occasions or less within a 12 month period would not be treated as a sexual entertainment venue: does this have any unintended consequences?

This will potentially give the opportunity for a venue to avoid the licensing regime while still having lucrative activities, albeit only three times a year. The likelihood however seems somewhat small.
52. Local licensing authorities will be able to set the number of sexual entertainment venues in their area to below the existing level, or zero: are there any advantages or disadvantages to this approach?

It would allow a Council to impose/operate a zero tolerance policy if they wish without consideration of individual applications. This may leave authorities open to allegations of bias against such activities or stifling trade of such a nature.

53. The Bill relies mainly on the existing licensing regime for sex shops as set out in section 44 and Schedule 2 of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 (application, notification, objections and representations, revocation of licences etc., enforcement and appeals): is this mechanism adequate for the licensing of sexual entertainment venues - if not, please explain why?

The regime mirrors that in place for other licences in terms of Schedule 1 in most respects. Subject to general comments elsewhere regarding the need for some updating and adaption to modern practices, this system should remain adequate.

54. Are there any barriers to licensing authorities operating the new licensing regime?

The potential for objections from applicants will always remain, but this should not generally be considered to be a barrier to the regime being operated.
55. Civic Licensing

Do you have any other comments to make on the civic licensing aspects of the Bill?

No.

2. Air Weapons Licensing

You may respond to all the questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

13. In what ways will the creation of an air weapons licensing system in Scotland contribute to preserving public order and safety, reducing crime and advancing public health policy?

We don't think it will, as there are sufficient laws in place already to deal with those misusing airguns. Further legislation will not stop criminals being criminals!

We would assume that over stretched police resources having to take the time to process tens of thousands of applications from airgun users may put a strain on their ability to keep up with the ownership and suitability of shotgun and firearm certificate holders and be unavailable for reactive police duties

It will initially increase crime by way of criminalising many airgun owners who benignly fail to apply for a certificate or visitors permit.

There is a risk, that the increased use of airgun pellets(lead) in club premises may increase participants exposure to a more heavily lead contaminated environment – this would be counter to public health policies.

14. Is there sufficient provision, or sufficient capacity to provide, suitable numbers of air weapons clubs across all areas of Scotland for use by registered air weapons owners/users?
There is currently a significant shortage of club premises where there would be sufficient range time and space available for airgun sessions. Current approved clubs cater for several target shooting disciplines, mainly .22 and due to the difference in distances of each discipline they cannot be shot concurrently. Given the lack of club premises in many parts of Scotland, consideration of the time taken to increase the number of approved premises must be factored in, especially as planning application may prove to be a slow process. The right to shoot safely on private property with the landowner’s permission should be retained as current legislation already allows for prosecution if the “missile” is not retained within the landowner’s own boundaries. This existing law could be more frequently applied to those abusing their airguns without further impact on the responsible shooters.

15. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for personal/recreational use?
Without doubt the proposed legislation will eventually reduce the number of people using airguns and whilst this may eventually reduce the number of guns in circulation it will impact only on those who do use airguns responsibly, as the associated cost and bureaucracy will make many leave the sport or not even start, but will probably have little significant impact on those wishing to abuse airgun use.

Given we are a "United Kingdom" with no border controls it will be all too easy for those wishing to use airguns inappropriately to acquire them in south and bring them "unaccounted for" into Scotland, whilst those law abiding citizens wishing to come to Scotland for competition and training will have to apply for a permit and so in all likelihood will just not come, to the detriment of the sport and the Scottish economy.

Airgun shooting is a sport accessible to all ages and many disabilities. The elite sportsmen and women in target shooting, started as recreational shooters, learning respect and responsibility for all guns, very often at a young age, starting off with low powered guns i.e. air rifles and pistols, before being allowed to graduate to more high powered firearms. The reduction in a recreational shooting fraternity due to this bureaucracy will narrow the pool of potential talent that may well provide the next Scottish Olympic or Commonwealth medallists in all shooting disciplines and Modern Pentathlon.

The proposed legislation appears to require all repairs and testing of airguns to be carried out by a registered firearms dealer, which means basic running repairs cannot be done onsite at home, at a competition or during practice/training by owners and coaches who are more than capable, without incurring delays and dealership costs. This means at a practical level many coaching sessions and competitions will not be able to run as there are insufficient RFDs available/interested to service the need.

This section of the document may be better if referring to “significant modifications need to be carried out by a registered firearms dealer.”

16. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those aged 14 to 17 who use air weapons?
Local Government and Regeneration Committee – Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill

As an organisation we are involved and follow youngsters shooting performances at Scottish Tetrathlon events with a view to talent spotting. These youngsters start shooting air pistols from 8 years old in many farm barns etc under the supervision of knowledgeable adults, so premises licencing and airgun certification will be another hurdle for both parents and the youngsters and may well be the straw that breaks, so they never even give it a go/start. Currently Scottish Tetrathlon set up their shooting ranges in sport centre gyms and the like, where they can cater for over 100 competitors/day. Currently there are really no permanent club premises that can accommodate these events so premises licencing will have a devastating effect on this sport and therefore all the youngsters concerned, unless Scottish Tetrathlon is granted ongoing event licences that may cover all their competition and training ranges.

Currently air pistol shooting among the youth is flourishing - the Scottish Junior Pistol squad only recently formed, has performed amazingly well already, bringing home 2 bronze and 2 silver medals from a Junior International match at Bisley attended by approximately 175 competitors all shooting airguns. 1 junior boy came 2nd at the British 10m air pistol Championships and won gold in the Junior Rapid Fire championships. These results bode well for the future of competitive air pistol shooting in Scotland and this deserves not to be strangled just as it is starting!

They will not be able to repair their weapons without a registered firearms dealer, again adding cost and time. In addition as they are 14-17 they will probably be unable to drive and therefore find it difficult to access a firearms dealer especially in the more remote areas of Scotland, this then leads to how the gun is to be transported – possibly through Royal Mail/couriers and so giving untold numbers of uncertificated people access to the guns being transported!

17. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for commercial/professional reasons (for example: for pest control; as part of the tourist/hunting season; as part of fairs, paintballing centre, entertainment sector etc.)?

Not applicable to our organisation

18. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for competitive sporting purposes?
Once at the level where they are shooting competitively we feel sure the individuals will readily comply re obtaining an airgun certificate, however our concern is for the future of the sport as we feel there will be significant resistance/apathy to either the cost or hassle of obtaining a certificate by potential newcomers to the sport and their parents.

Pistol shooting in particular is only just starting to recover from the post Dunblane legislation with regard to number participation. The risk of this legislation further stigmatising a bone fide Commonwealth and Olympic sport justifies a light hand, making it easy for newcomers to the sport being covered by club/event licences and then being eased through the certification system by virtue of being a member of an approved club/association.

Visitors permits having to be granted for those attending competitions may well, as previously mentioned, deter them from entering Scottish competitions, meaning our elite athletes lack meaningful competition on home soil. We feel that carrying an invitation and acceptance letter to an event in Scotland involving airguns should suffice. The police authorities may then have the power to check with the event organiser that any individual non-certified "visitor "is indeed a registered competitor so negating the need for a permit.

19. Is it equitable for those applying for an air weapons certificate to pay a fee which cannot be refundable irrespective of whether a certificate is granted or not?

We believe that a minimum, administration only fee should be payable for unsuccessful applications so long as the applicant is given a just reason for the failure of the application and that if it is due to a mere technical error in the paperwork, that it is waived.

20. Will the air weapons licensing system have a positive or negative impact on other areas of the public sector in Scotland (eg. The work of local government, public agencies etc.)?

We think that the air weapons licensing system will have a negative effect on the public sector in Scotland. Given that the Firearms teams are already over stretched, resourcing this requirement for licensing of air weapons, clubs, permits will place unprecedented demand on already slim resources.

Whilst we feel sympathy for police when faced with criminals who may “flaunt” an airgun, we believe the legislation should be aimed more specifically at that level.
and not impact quite so much on the responsible airgun fraternity.

21. What, if any, might the unintended consequences of introducing an air weapons licensing system in Scotland be?

The risk of introducing a requirement for an airgun certificate may encourage applicants to go the full hog and apply for a shotgun/firearms certificate that will thereby increase the number of more high powered weapon ownership and so the number of those guns in circulation.

We do not believe that it is the aim of this legislation, but very much fear that more people will swap low powered airguns for something more powerful.

The number of girls in sport will also decline as within Scotland our junior development squad is now dominated by girls, coming mainly through Scottish Tetrathlon. Some who acknowledge they will never be elite runners/swimmers/pentathletes, but still have the interest to continue with a sport that they have enjoyed and will help their personal as well as sporting development in so many ways.

22. Do you have any other comments to make on air weapons licensing aspects of the Bill?

We respect the bill and are keen to try and work with it. However as it is currently drafted it will strangle the grass roots development of sporting talent. We therefore seek amendments to ensure the bill can be angled more towards penalising the minority misusing airguns by having them banned from owning any potential weapon, rather than wasting police time investigating the majority.

With no border controls in place, anyone visiting from England, Northern Ireland or Wales should be exempt from visitors’ permits.
Personally I would rather use the term airgun rather than air weapon as the definition of weapon in:

Oxford dictionary is

A thing designed or used for inflicting bodily harm or physical damage

Collins Dictionary;

1. an object or instrument used in fighting

Using emotive words such as "weapon" therefore has a negative impact on our sport.
Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill
The Scottish Parliament Local Government and Regeneration Committee - Call for Evidence

The Law Society of Scotland’s response
September 2014
Introduction

The Law Society of Scotland aims to lead and support a successful and respected Scottish legal profession. Not only do we act in the interests of our solicitor members but we also have a clear responsibility to work in the public interest. That is why we actively engage and seek to assist in the legislative and public policy decision making processes.

The Society’s Licensing Law Sub-Committee (the Sub-Committee) welcomes the opportunity to respond to the Scottish Parliament’s Local Government and Regeneration Committee’s call for evidence upon the general principles of the Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill (the Bill) and has the following general comments to make.

General Comments

The Sub-Committee refers to paragraph 13 of the policy memorandum accompanying the Bill and has commented extensively on the consultation exercises across the existing licensing regime as follows.

1: Consultation paper- Further Options for Alcohol Licensing – March 2013

2: Taxi and Private Hire Car Licensing – Proposals for change - March 2013

3: Proposal for Licensing Air Weapons in Scotland - March 2013

4: Scottish Government Consultation on Licensing of Metal Dealers – July 2013

5: Consultation on Regulation on Sexual Entertainment Venues – September 2013.
The Sub-Committee has engaged extensively with both Scottish Government and Scottish Parliament in respect of the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 and its significant amendments in terms of the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Act 2010, the Alcohol Etc. (Scotland) Act 2010 and the Alcohol (Minimum Pricing) (Scotland) Act 2012.

The Sub-Committee is a member of the National Licensing Advisory Group at present coordinated by Scottish Government, and welcomes the opportunity to help shape the licensing framework for the benefit of all licensing stakeholders and the public in general.

The Sub-Committee welcomes the introduction of this Bill and in particular welcomes the principal policy objectives which are to strengthen and improve aspects of locally led alcohol and civic government licensing in order to preserve public order and safety, reduce crime and to advance public health.

With particular reference to Part 2 of the Bill (Alcohol Licensing), the Sub-Committee refers to the following difficulties with regard to the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 encountered by both Licensing Boards and the licensed trade which have been highlighted to Scottish Government previously, but not addressed in the Bill.

The difficulties which the Sub-Committee welcomes the opportunity to comment upon at this stage are as follows:-

Transfer of Premises Licence (Sections 33 and 34) of the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005

The Sub-Committee believes that Section 33 (Transfer on Application of Licence Holder) does not always take account of business requirements. Section 34 allows the transfer application to be made by the transferee but only in certain prescribed circumstances.
The Sub-Committee notes that one of those circumstances is set out at Section 34 (3)(d) of the 2005 Act whereby the business is to be transferred. This ignores the situation where a tenant disappears leaving premises closed for some time. It cannot be held that business is being transferred, there being no business left to transfer. The Sub-Committee questions who may make the application in those circumstances.

From a practical point of view, Licensing Boards are having to take the view that the licence has not in fact come to an end and can be resurrected.

Due to these practical difficulties in transferring the licence where a tenant has simply left the premises, many landlords have decided to hold licences in their own names.

This, the Sub-Committee believes, is because of a concern that the tenant will simply surrender the licence. It raises, however, the practical issue of a landlord not being in a position to comply fully with the terms of the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 where the landlord lets the premises to a third party and has limited control over the business carried on in the premises.

Also, the 2005 Act does not provide for consent to transfer nor does it provide for a situation where such a consent cannot be obtained although “consents” of this nature are frequently required by Licensing Boards. The Sub-Committee refers again to the situation where the licence holder, in particular a tenant, either disappears or refuses to co-operate.

The Sub-Committee makes specific reference to Section 25 of the Licensing (Scotland) Act 1976 where there was certainty of knowing when an application would be processed. The Act was amended in terms of Section 25A by the introduction of the temporary transfer which allowed the transfer of a licence to coincide with the transfer of ownership or a new tenancy. Unlike the 1976 Act, there is now a lack of certainty as to when an application will be processed and it can be extremely difficult to co-ordinate the conveyancing with the date of transfer leading to issues with the legality of the sale of alcohol due to administrative issues. It is the Sub-Committee’s understanding that it’s due in certain circumstances to the goodwill of Licensing Board clerks that these issues are avoided.
The current lack of certainty with regard to transfer causes significant problems in commercial property transactions, especially in transactions which may involve a number of licensed premises in different Licensing Board or licensing division areas.

In contrast, the Sub-Committee notes that in England and Wales, the terms of the Licensing Act 2003 and in particular Sections 42-46, give effect to a transfer being made by any person who can apply for a Premises Licence and also for immediate effect of the transfer in terms of Section 43 of that Act. There is specific provision for consent to transfer but the Licensing Authority has power to grant the transfer where the applicant can show he has taken all reasonable steps to obtain a consent.

In all the circumstances, the Sub-Committee suggests that the following amendments could be made to the 2005 Act:-

- Section 33 should be amended to provide that any legal person who may become the holder of a Premises Licence may make an application to have the licence transferred.
- Section 34 should be amended to remove the reference to a business transfer.
- Provisions should be made to allow an application for a Premises Licence which has ceased to have effect because of non-compliance with any time limit to be reinstated. Such an application should be competent at the instance of any party who may competently hold a Premises Licence, including a proposed transferee, and should be capable of being made along with the transfer application.
- Transfer applications should be permitted to take effect from a date to be specified with the parties to the transfer, along the lines of the old temporary transfer system under the Licensing (Scotland) Act 1976 or Section 43 of the Licensing Act 2003 which applies to England and Wales.
- The introduction of statutory provisions regarding consent to transfer and to regulate the process where such consent cannot be obtained.
- Introduction of procedure whereby a Premises Licence which has ceased to have effect can be reinstated. While the Sub-Committee appreciates that a time scale would require to be put in place, it suggests that a Licensing Board should have discretion on cause shown to extend such a period to cover exceptional cases.
Where the proposed transferee is not the same person as the current Premises Licence Holder or Designated Premises Manager, intimation of a transfer application should be made to the current Premises Licence Holder and the Designated Premises Manager. Boards could have sufficient discretion to determine when a transfer should be effected if no consent is obtainable and that specific criteria or regulations should be avoided as they often fail to meet unexpected circumstances as is demonstrated above.

Lack of Site Only Application for Premises Licence

The Sub-Committee notes that a site only Provisional Premises Licence is not permitted in terms of Section 45 of the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005.

Detailed information currently required for a layout plan and the operating plan will not yet have been decided at the early pre-construction stage, yet the requirements for a Provisional Premises Licence Application are identical to those for applying for a full Premises Licence, apart from there being no need to specify a Designated Premises Manager and the requirement under Section 50 being simply for a Provisional Planning Certificate. As a consequence, a developer may incur significant time and expense in the preparation of the Provisional Premises Licence Application with there being no guarantee of a grant. Also, from a practical point of view, it is highly unlikely that both the layout plan and the operating plan will remain unchanged throughout the development of a project, resulting in more expense for variations of both layout plan and operating plan at the confirmation stage. Accordingly, if an application for a Provisional Premises Licence is refused, then the applicant has incurred significant expense unnecessarily.

The Sub-Committee refers again to the Licensing (Scotland) Act 1976 and in particular Section 26 (2) of that Act.
While the Sub-Committee recognises that that particular procedure was criticised in that it was considered by Licensing Boards and those who were entitled to object or pass comment on such an application, notably the Police, being given to little information. In order to meet this criticism, the Sub-Committee respectfully suggests that certain specified information, being the types of matters of most concern to Licensing Boards should be provided by the applicant. Before the licence comes in to effect, the full confirmation procedure, including production of a full layout plan and operating plan will require to be produced.

The Sub-Committee therefore suggests that once the Board has affirmed the application, then any changes to the premises identified by the various council departments acting under their statutory duties should, insofar as they are minor changes, be accepted by the Board.

Surrender of licence

The Sub-Committee refers to Section 28 of Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005.

This is a new provision in that, in terms of the 1976 Act, there was no specific provision for the surrender of a licence. The Sub-Committee recognises that there are obligations incumbent upon a Premises Licence Holder, not least the requirement to pay an annual fee, and it is accordingly appropriate that there should be a means of renouncing those obligations.

The Sub-Committee refers specifically to the practical issues which can and do arise where premises are owned by someone other than the licence holder. The 2005 Act recognises that parties other than the Premises Licence Holder can be “an interested party” albeit the relevant section of the Act (Section 147) (5) is not yet in force. In any event, the 2005 Act offers no safeguards for such an interested party, in particular a landlord.

From a practical point of view a number of licensing practitioners have encountered the situation where a disgruntled tenant being the premises licence holder has surrendered a licence and disappeared.
It was also noted that some premises licence holding companies can be dissolved without the landlord ever being aware. Also, the Sub-Committee is aware of some situations where the tenant has simply disappeared.

It is for the above reasons that many landlords insist on holding the licence in their own names. They cannot exercise appropriate supervision of the premises on a day to day basis.

It has come to the attention of some Sub-Committee members that this is a preferred option to the very significant financial loss which a landlord faces if his tenant surrenders the premises licence.

On the basis that it is expected of a responsible licence holder to be aware of what goes on in the premises for which it holds the licence but because of this difficulty with the legislation at present, that is often not the case in many leased premises.

The Sub-Committee respectfully suggests the following:-

- Provision should be made, similar to Section 50 of the Licensing Act 2003 applicable to England and Wales, to allow reinstatement of a licence following a surrender.
- Provision should be made for any party having an interest in licensed premises to note that interest with the Licensing Board and to be notified in the event of a proposed surrender of the licence or of circumstances which might affect the premises licence such as a premises licence review or non-payment of the statutory fee. Furthermore, the landlord should be in a position to be represented before a Board to explain why the licence should not be surrendered.
- The Licensing Board should have discretion to waive a time limit on cause shown in the interests of justice.
Air Weapons Licensing

13. In what ways will the creation of an air weapons licensing system in Scotland contribute to preserving public order and safety, reducing crime and advancing public health policy?

The Sub-Committee believes that whether an air weapons licensing system in Scotland will contribute to preserving public order and safety, and reducing crime and advancing public health policy clearly remains to be seen.

It outlines the practical issues with regard to the system proposed whereby air weapons, unlike shotguns, do not have a serial number and are therefore untraceable. The Sub-Committee also notes that on the basis that a single air weapon certificate should cover all weapons held by an individual, there should be a narration of the number and type of weapons held otherwise the police will not know how many air weapons are in fact in circulation and/or if weapons have been disposed of to a third party by a certificate holder. In essence, the air weapons licensing scheme as set out at Part 1 of the Bill, licenses the applicant without any attempt to correlate this to the weapon. Furthermore, the Sub-Committee notes that the certificate will not require to be presented in order to purchase ammunition.

On the basis that pellets can only be fired from air weapons once (albeit darts may be capable of re-use), the Sub-Committee anticipates that air weapons in circulation which remain unlicensed will eventually run out of ammunition. Accordingly, the issue of the regulation of the purchase of air weapon ammunition should therefore be considered.
14. Is there sufficient provision, or sufficient capacity to provide, suitable numbers of air weapons clubs across all areas of Scotland for use by registered air weapons owners/users?

The Sub-Committee has no particular comment. It believes that air weapons clubs are better placed to answer.

15. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for personal/recreational use?

The Sub-Committee notes the terms of Section 5 (1) of the Bill.

In particular, the Chief Constable may only grant or renew an air weapon certificate if satisfied that the applicant (c) has a good reason for using, possessing, purchasing or acquiring an air weapon.

The Sub-Committee believes that, rather than imposing this condition, the Chief Constable is much better placed to consider the applicant’s reason for having an air weapon on a case by case basis. In particular, it is noted that specific conditions of use are not applied to shotgun certificates under the current legislation. The Sub-Committee believes that this should also be the case in relation to the licensing of air weapons and that the police are best placed to consider whether any offences have occurred such as the reckless discharge of a firearm.

The Sub-Committee also believes that this provision may have the unintended consequence of discouraging those who have a legitimate use for an air weapon from applying for an air weapon certificate.
16. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those aged 14 to 17 who use air weapons?

The Sub-Committee is satisfied with the provisions at Section 7 of the Bill (special requirements and conditions for young persons) and in particular that a parent or guardian of the applicant must consent in the prescribed form and manner to the applicant making the application.

17. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for commercial/professional reasons (for example: for pest control; as part of the tourist/hunting season; as part of fairs, paintballing centre, entertainment sector etc.)?

The Sub-Committee refers to the permits at Sections 12-17 of the Bill.

In particular, the Sub-Committee is content with this system on the basis that they are time limited and the costs of obtaining such a permit should be relatively low.

The Sub-Committee notes the provisions at Section 17 of the Bill (Event permits) but considers that consideration could be given to the grant of a permanent competition certificate for those who visit Scotland regularly to shoot in competitions.

18. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for competitive sporting purposes?

The Sub-Committee refers to its comments at 17 above.
19. Is it equitable for those applying for an air weapons certificate to pay a fee which cannot be refundable irrespective of whether a certificate is granted or not?

The Sub-Committee has no particular view on this provision but believes that any licensing scheme should be cost neutral.

20. Will the air weapons licensing system have a positive or negative impact on other areas of the public sector in Scotland (eg. The work of local government, public agencies etc.)?

The Committee is not in a position to comment. It believes that the agencies referred to in question 20 are better placed to answer.

21. What, if any, might the unintended consequences of introducing an air weapons licensing system in Scotland be?

The Sub-Committee refers to its comments at question 13.

The Sub-Committee notes that there are at present some 500,000 air weapons in circulation in Scotland which cannot be properly traced.

The Sub-Committee is concerned that there may be the potential for a large number of air weapons to be sold off or indeed just given away before the provisions at Part 1 of the Bill come into force as opposed to weapons simply being handed into the police with the resultant effect that many of these weapons may end up in the wrong hands. Some form of minor compensation for surrendering air weapons to the police may counter this potential issue.
22. Do you have any other comments to make on air weapons licensing aspects of the Bill?

The Sub-Committee believes that a suitable transitional period should be put in place in order to allow the giving up of air weapons by those who have no intention ever to apply for a certificate.

With particular reference to Section 11 (1) (a) of the Bill the Sub-Committee suggests that this should read “can no longer be permitted to possess” on the basis that the air weapon certificate is granted by the Chief Constable in terms of Section 5 (1) (d) of the Bill if satisfied that the applicant “can be permitted to possess an air weapon”.

Similarly in Section 11 (2) (a) (i) of the Bill, the Sub-Committee suggests that this should read “is no longer a fit person” on the basis that the air weapon certificate is granted by the Chief Constable in terms of Section 5 (1) (a) of the Bill if satisfied that the applicant “is fit to be entrusted with an air weapon”.

The Sub-Committee also notes the terms of Section 25 (1) of the Bill and questions the requirement for a face to face sale with an individual in Great Britain who may well be outwith this jurisdiction.

General Licensing Issues

23. Is the current Scottish licensing regime, as set out in the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 and the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005, fit for purpose?

The Sub-Committee is of the view that there are a number of serious issues with regard to the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 which is not fit for purpose.

In particular, the Sub-Committee refers to its previous general comments.
24. Should a licensing system seek to regulate individual behaviour or communities of space (eg. ‘city space’ etc.)?

Neither a Licensing Board nor a Licensing Committee can of course go beyond the scope of the legislation and consider what may be regarded as societal issues.

The Sub-Committee believes that it is instead, for each Board or Licensing Committee to regulate properly the licensing system within its jurisdiction.

25. In what way should the licensing system in Scotland interact with the support the land use planning system, community planning and regeneration?

The Sub-Committee believes that the licensing system in Scotland already interacts with the Land Use Planning System, Community Planning and Regeneration although sustainable growth and regeneration are not statutory considerations for Licensing Boards.

The Sub-Committee, however, makes particular reference to Section 50 of the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 where a premises licence application other than a provisional premises licence application must be accompanied by a planning certificate, a building standards certificate and a food hygiene certificate.

It should be noted that a Provisional Premises Licence Application must be accompanied by a Provisional Planning Certificate in respect of the subject premises.
26. How does the licensing system in Scotland assist with the delivery of sustainable development and economic balanced areas?

The Sub-Committee has no information with regard to the way a licensing system can assist with the delivery of sustainable development and economic balanced areas but does note that in times of the recent economic downturn, increased regulation without addressing the more practical issues such as the provision of licensed premises for the tourist trade etc. in rural parts of the country can be problematic. With particular reference to its response at question 25, the Sub-Committee believes further that commercial requirements and business need should be considered by Licensing Committees and Boards in addition to current criteria.

27. In what way does the licensing system in Scotland support health and planning, addressing health inequalities and public health wellbeing outcomes?

The Sub-Committee has no information with regard to how the licensing system in Scotland supports health and planning addressing health and inequalities and public health well-being. It suggests that evidence should be ingathered in order to consider this.

The Sub-Committee does note, however, that unlike the Licensing Act 2003 applicable to England and Wales, Section 4 of the Licensing Scotland Act 2005 has an additional licensing objective at Section 4 (d) of “protecting and improving public health”. The Sub-Committee notes that a Licensing Board has a duty in terms of the Act to notify the relevant Health Board of a premises licence application.

Whether the licensing system has supported health and planning, addressing health and equalities and public health wellbeing outcomes or not, the Sub-Committee fully supports any initiative, statutory or otherwise, which results in the responsible retailing and consumption of alcohol in Scotland.
Alcohol Licensing

28. In what ways will the Bill’s provisions on alcohol licensing allow for reductions in crime and the preservation of public order?

The Sub-Committee notes the reintroduction of the fit and proper test in which it will comment in detail later and considers that the Bill should ensure that Boards and committees charged with determining applications should require to consider relevant evidenced objections and representations. Otherwise, it is not in a position to address this particular question.

29. Are there any other measures which should be taken to assist in the reduction of crime and the preservation of public order?

The Sub-Committee has no comment other than the fact that Boards, in determining premises licence applications, must always have regard to the licensing objectives and should consider relevant, evidenced submissions.

30. In what ways will the provisions in the Bill enhance the licensing objectives set out in the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005?

On the basis that the five licensing objectives at Section 4 of the 2005 Act have been evidenced as operating successfully, the Sub-Committee questions in what way the Bill can enhance these objectives.

31. In what ways will the re-introduction of the “fit and proper person” test assist with the implementation of the licensing objectives set out in the 2005 act?

The Sub-Committee has no concluded view as to whether the re-introduction of the “fit and proper person” test as outlined at Sections 43 - 48 of the Bill will assist with the implementation of the licensing objectives set out in the 2005 Act.
The Sub-Committee notes with concern, however, that a reintroduction of this test may result in objections being made either without evidence or upon facts which are not connected to the running of the premises and also based on allegations as opposed to relevant matters which have either been admitted or proved and resulted in conviction.

The Sub-Committee notes that the 2005 Act was implemented in order to bring in new tests based on e.g. the passing of exams, the training of staff and also relevant convictions and the five licensing objectives as referred to above.

The Sub-Committee does note however, that consideration could be given to such introduction on the basis that it will strengthen the Board’s ability to exclude unsuitable persons from becoming the holders of premises or personal licenses but only if the fit and proper test is properly applied with regard to the rules of natural justice.

In this respect, the Sub-Committee notes that, regarding the fitness and propriety test to a Section 33 transfer of a licence, the Bill, in terms of Section 44 introduces additional powers to the Chief Constable to provide any information in a relation to either the transferee or where the transferee is neither an individual nor a council, a connected person, that the Chief Constable considers may be relevant to consideration by the Board of the application.

The Sub-Committee is concerned with regard to the potential for the Chief Constable to be in a position to make such information available to the Board on the basis of what he considers relevant.

The Sub-Committee believes that the relevancy of information should of course be a matter for the Board and any matters to be brought to the Board should be properly evidenced and directly related to a ground upon which an application may be refused.
The Sub-Committee identifies a practical issue whereby some form of “preliminary plea” may require to be considered by the Board to the effect to that the information being brought by the Chief Constable is not relevant or properly evidenced.

The Sub-Committee also identifies a number of drafting issues with regard to Section 44 (2) (d) of the Bill which inserts Section 33 (11) into the 2005 Act and allows Boards to refuse a premises licence on the basis that the transferee is not a fit and proper person to be the holder of a premises licence.

The Sub-Committee notes that there is no reference to a connected person upon whom a Chief Constable can bring information before the Board.

The Sub-Committee refers to Section 45 of the Bill and again, with reference to a review of the premises licence, notes that there is no reference to a connected person.

The Sub-Committee is concerned that Boards will be able to take this decision on the basis merely of a summary of information.

In the interests of justice, no review should take place without the actual information provided by the applicant being before the Board in reviewing the premises licence.

On the basis that the fitness and propriety of a connected person becomes a ground for review of premises licence, the Sub-Committee suggests that Section 45 (4) (b) of the Bill which inserts Section 39 (2) (a) of the 2005 Act is amended whereby the Board has a discretion in revoking the licence. For example, one director (connected person) of a company may be considered not to be a fit and proper person, but he or she may be one of a number of several directors who are to be considered acceptable.

The Sub-Committee notes the terms of Section 46 of the Bill and in particular Section 46 (2) which inserts Section 73 (5) of the 2005 Act.
The Sub-Committee reiterates its concerns that the Chief Constable may provide to the Board any information in relation to the applicant that the Chief Constable considers may be relevant.

In all the circumstances, while the reintroduction of the “fit and proper person test” may assist with the implementation of the licensing objectives, the Sub-Committee is concerned with regard to the specific provisions at Sections 42 - 48 of the Bill.

32. Have there been any unintended consequences arising from the 2005 Act, for example, in rural areas or the economic regeneration of areas?

The Sub-Committee refers to its general comments.

Particularly, the Sub-Committee is concerned that the significant cost of a premises application in rural areas has discouraged applications.

33. Which, if any, types of spent relevant offences should be required to be disclosed and what do you think the benefits of disclosure will be?

The Sub-Committee is concerned that section 51 of the Bill repeals Section 129 (4) of the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 in that Licensing Boards will now be entitled to take into account spent convictions.

While the Sub-Committee accepts that there will always be certain types of licence such as taxi and private hire driver licences whereby spent convictions should quite properly be taken into account, it questions the requirement for this provision albeit it will be a matter for the Board to consider each case on its own merits.

In particular, The Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974 was enacted in order to allow people to move on with their lives and not have to disclose what may be a relatively minor offence from some stage from their past.
While it is recognised that there must be certain exceptions as referred to above, the Sub-Committee questions whether this is appropriate with regard to both premises and personal licence applications and questions whether there has been any evidence presented to Scottish Government that the current system has been criticised as a result of Licensing Boards not being able to take spent convictions into account.

34. Do you have any other comments to make on the alcohol licensing aspects of the Bill?

The Sub-Committee refers to its general comments.

The Sub-Committee would also like to highlight the following practical issues it has identified in terms of Part 2 of the Bill

Section 52 - Offences of supplying alcohol to a child or young person

The Sub-Committee notes that it is now to be an offence to buy or attempt to buy alcohol on behalf of a child or for a child or to give alcohol (or otherwise make it available) to a child.

While the Sub-Committee welcomes this provision, it notes that a child or young person is to be excluded from this offence.

On the basis that it may be considered more likely that a child or young person would supply alcohol to a child, the Sub-Committee questions the intent of this exception.

Section 54 - Overprovision

The Sub-Committee notes that a Board is entitled to take into account the whole of the Board’s area as a locality as in terms of Section 54(2) of the Bill which amends Sections 7 (2) of the 2005 Act.
The Sub-Committee considers this an unnecessary amendment as Boards have always had such an ability.

The Sub-Committee also notes that Section 7 of the 2005 Act is being amended whereby Boards’ mandatory requirement to “have regard to the number and capacity of licensed premises in the locality” is now being changed to a discretionary requirement to have regard to “ (among other things) the number, capacity and licensed hours of licensed premises is in locality.

The Sub-Committee questions the ability of Boards to consider “licensed hours” in considering overprovision.

By way of example, many licensed premises have their licensed hours determined in terms of their operating plans but may well choose not to operate those hours at all times.

The Sub-Committee is aware of circumstances where certain Boards have already prepared overprovision statements in their licensing policies which have resulted in no new premises licences being granted on the grounds of overprovision yet certain premises do not operate either to their full capacity or to their licensed hours.

The Sub-Committee has in the past taken a view that there is no “duty to trade” and, against this background, considers that Boards may be proceeding on misleading information.

The Sub-Committee also welcomes clarity as to what is meant by “among other things” as referred to at Section 54(2)(b)(ii)(a) of the Bill.
Section 55 - Duties to Licensing Boards to Produce Annual Financial Reports

The Sub-Committee, while welcoming this provision, believes that this will place an even greater burden on Licensing Boards and may raise costs to the licensed trade. The Sub-Committee believes that an accounting mechanism, having regard to the “costs recovery only” requirements in the Provision of Services Regulations 1999 has to be considered. In all the circumstances, there has to be transparency as to what happens in the event of a Board having either a surplus or a deficit.

Section 56 - Interested Parties

The Sub-Committee, although noting that the obligation upon the premises licence holder to notify a Board not later than one month after a person becomes or ceases to be an interested party in relation to the licensed premises has never really been enacted, welcomes this provision.

The Sub-Committee was concerned that the provision was so wide-ranging as to be unworkable.

Section 57- Personal Licences: Grant, Duration and Renewal

The Sub-Committee welcomes these provisions on the basis that the longer time limits for making applications for renewal should ease the pressure on Licensing Boards.

Section 58 - Processing and deemed the grant of applications

While the Sub-Committee welcomes these provisions it questions the reference to nine months on the basis that this seems to be an inordinately long period.

The Sub-Committee notes that in terms of the Licensing (Scotland) Act 1976 and its quarterly Boards, applications could be processed and considered within 36 days.
The Sub-Committee questions how this sits with the time limits for certain applications as provided for in The Licensing (Procedure) (Scotland) Regulations 2007 (SSI 2007/453) and questions whether a nine month period would be compliant with Provision of Services Regulations 1999.

The Sub-Committee is concerned that the 9 month period only applies to “relevant applications” once determined as such.

The Sub-Committee highlights the practical issues at present and, with particular reference to confirmation of licence, a confirmation application should not begin to be processed until such time as the Section 50 certificates from the various departments of the local authority have been obtained.

This has the practical effect of premises being a position to trade but for the fact that they have to await this confirmation process. As a consequence premises can sit empty for a considerable period of time until confirmation.

The Sub-Committee suggests that confirmation should be automatic once the Board has obtained the Section 50 certificates. This process could be similar to minor variation to change a Premises Manager which can come into effect immediately if requested.

The Sub-Committee suggests that different time scales could be applied in determining different types of applications.

Taxi and Private Hire Car Licensing

35. What benefits should the licensing of taxis and private hire cars deliver for customers?

The benefits of the licensing of taxis and private hire cars for customers will only become apparent once the Bill has been enacted and sufficient time has been allowed to assess its impact.
However, at this stage, the Sub-Committee notes a marked difference in the limitation policy for taxi licences.

The Sub-Committee notes from Section 60 of the Bill that Section 10 of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 is to be amended in that the grant of a private hire car licence may be refused if a licensing authority is satisfied that this would result in overprovision of private hire car services in the locality.

This is of course a different threshold than the threshold in place for taxi licences which is a higher threshold in terms of Section 10(3) of the 1982 Act, namely a taxi licence may be refused by a licensing authority for the purpose of limiting the number of taxis in respect of which licences are granted by them, but only if they are satisfied that there is no significant demand for the services of taxis in their area which is unmet.

The Sub-Committee accordingly anticipates that licensing authorities may find it difficult to deal with this distinction.

The unmet demand test is a blanket “no new licence” position, whereas an overprovision test contains a “rebuttable presumption” and therefore new licences can be issued by exception.

36. In what ways do customers, providers of taxi/private hire car services and local authorities benefit from the two-tier licensing regime for taxis and private hire cars?

The Sub-Committee is not in a position to answer this question. It believes those representing consumer interests are better placed to answer.
37. The Government states that a radical overhaul of the current two-tier licensing regime would “clearly require a very high level of resource and would cause significant disruption for the trade, local authorities, the police and ultimately the travelling public”. What are your views on this and would the potential costs and disruptions outweigh any potential benefits of a unified system?

The Sub-Committee believes that the impact of this move will vary from local authority to local authority as some local authorities are met with more applications for private hire car than taxi licences and vice versa.

Accordingly this may not be too much of an issue in some rural areas where there is a tendency to apply for private hire car.

The Sub-Committee believes that the cities are to be distinguished to such an extent that a taxi licence, as a result of the limitation policy can have the effect of giving it a value.

Accordingly, the Sub-Committee anticipates some difficulties with this proposed change.

38. Do the changes made by sections 60 (overprovision of private hire car licences) and 61 (testing of private hire car drivers) of the Bill strike the right balance in terms of introducing greater consistency while maintaining justifiable differences?

The Sub-Committee has no view on this matter but notes that the same “knowledge test” will now be applied to private hire car drivers albeit a different limitation policy will be in place.

The Sub-Committee suggests that licensing authorities are better placed to consider whether Sections 60 and 61 strike the right balance in terms of introducing greater consistency while maintaining justifiable differences.
39. Do you have any views on the section 62 provisions bringing vehicles contracted for exclusive use for 24 or more hours within the licensing regime for taxis and private hire cars, and should any exemptions be included in the Bill?

The Sub-Committee has no view on Section 62 provisions, but notes that if vehicles being used for carrying passengers under a contract for its exclusive hire for a period for not less than 24 hours are to be brought the licensing regime then consideration must be given to licensing the driver as well as the vehicle.

Scrap Metal Dealer Licensing

40. Taking the proposals in Sections 63 to 66 of the Bill together, how will they have the desired effect of strengthening the metal dealers’ licensing regime to the extent that metal theft and related criminal activity is reduced?

The Sub-Committee welcomes the removal of exemption warrants for certain metal dealers. It is anticipated that this will have the desired effect on strengthening the metal dealers’ licensing regime in order to reduce metal theft and related criminal activity. In particular, the Sub-Committee notes that the theft of metal from railway lines in particular together with the untold inconvenience to the public as well as the potential for danger to both the public and offenders is a matter which requires to be addressed.

41. In your view, could the Bill be further strengthened in any way, for example, by including an accreditation scheme for metal dealers?

The Sub-Committee has no view on this matter.

It believes that licensing authorities are better placed to comment.
42. Removal of exemption warrant - do you wish to comment on the proposal to remove the exemption warrant system?

The Sub-Committee refers to its comments at 40 above.

43. Removal of requirement to retain metal on-site - what impact will the proposal to remove the retention of metal requirement have on the enforcement of the licensing regime and prevention of criminal activities?

It is anticipated that the repeal of Section 31 as provided for in terms of Section 64 of the Bill will have the desired effect of prevention of criminal activities.

In particular, the Sub-Committee notes that many dealers turn around metal very quickly in order to respond to fast changing prices and international metal markets and they are also constrained physically by the limitations of their premises as to how much metal they can store and process for 48 hours.

The Sub-Committee further notes this difficulty against the background of the SEPA licence requirements which places a limit on how much can be stored on a metal dealer’s premises.

44. Forms of payment - what is your view on the proposal to go 'cashless' and is there merit in considering whether metal dealers could be allowed to operate using cash for only very small transactions, which could be limited to a certain number per month?

The Sub-Committee welcomes the provisions of Section 65 of the Bill which inserts a new Section 33A into the 1982 Act whereby in terms of Section 33A(3), if a metal dealer or an itinerant metal dealer pays for metal otherwise than in accordance with Sub-Section 1 (cheque or electronic transfer) the dealer and each of the persons listed in Sub-Section 4 (the metal dealer or anyone acting on his behalf) commits an offence.
The Sub-Committee considers this most welcome initiative in order to combat metal theft.

45. Forms of identification and record keeping:-

In line with the Scrap Metal Dealers Act 2013, the Bill adds additional record keeping requirements to a metal dealer's licence including recording the means by which a seller's name and address was verified and retaining a copy of the document, and the method of payment and a copy of the payment document. The Bill will also require a metal dealer to record information in books with serially numbered pages or by means of an electronic device, and to keep separate records at each place of business. Such information and documents are to be kept for three rather than the current two years.

How important is it that the record keeping requirements reflect those in the Scrap Metal Dealers Act 2013, and do you agree with the Scottish Government that the proposed record keeping requirements are not unduly burdensome?

The Sub-Committee notes the terms of the new Section 33 B of the 1982 Act as inserted by Section 66 of the Bill.

The Sub-Committee notes, however, that metal dealers are already licensed by the Scottish Environmental Protection Agency (SEPA) and, on the basis that it is Scottish Government’s intention to avoid placing an unduly burdensome or bureaucratic requirement on the trade then this proposal would have the trade having to record the same information twice or require information that adds little to the information already required by SEPA.
46. Mandatory and discretionary licensing requirements:

The Scottish Ministers can impose mandatory licensing requirements, such as those included in the Bill relating to record keeping and the identification of customers. In addition, local authorities can also attach discretionary requirements to licences in their areas.

Does the Bill get the balance right between mandatory and discretionary licensing requirements? Should the Bill include other mandatory conditions for obtaining a metal dealer's licence, such as installing CCTV at metal dealers' premises or in relation to labelling of metal and 'forensic coding'?

The Sub-Committee has no particular view on this matter other than the mandatory conditions of the Bill should strike the correct balance between the legitimate trade of metal dealing and the combating of metal theft.

Civic Licensing – Theatre Licensing

47. Will there be any impacts during the transitional period between ending the current theatre licence and starting the public entertainment licence?

The Sub-Committee welcomes the incorporation of theatre licences in terms of the Theatres Act 1968 into the public entertainment licence regime as provided for at Section 41 of the 1982 Act and would indeed welcome further reform in this area by way of incorporation of licences in terms of the Cinemas Act 1985 to be incorporated into public entertainment licences.

With particular reference to the transition period, the Sub-Committee believes that a fair period of time should be afforded and that a last lodging date for Theatres Act Licences should be provided for.
48. Are there additional costs or resource implications on theatres or licensing authorities?

The Sub-Committee further notes that there is a marked difference between the cost of application for a theatre licence which can be as little as £50.00 and a public entertainment licence which can be considerably higher.

Standing the level of the fee, the Sub-committee believes that regard has to be had to the recent case of Hemming and Others v the Lord Mayor and Citizens of Westminster [2013] EWCA Civ 5912 in which it was held that fees charged by Westminster Council were incorrectly calculated after the European Services Directive became effective and accordingly “charges which a Council imposes on applicants/ licences under an authorisation scheme must be proportionate and reasonable under the circumstances to the fees or costs payable under the provisions of the scheme.

Furthermore, the fees must not exceed the costs of administering the process.

The Sub-Committee questions whether consideration has been given to the interplay between the alcohol licensing regime and exemptions to public entertainment licensing. A number of theatre premises in Scotland will operate with an alcohol licence. The 1982 Act exempts alcohol licensed premises from requiring a public entertainment licence. If the stated aim is to replace the theatre licence with a public entertainment licence, then there is a question as to how that would capture those theatres who have alcohol licences, which under the terms of the Act would be exempt. The Sub-Committee notes that this anomaly is dealt with in England and Wales by having theatre as a form of regulated entertainment in terms of a premises licence; with no separate public entertainment or theatre licence required.
If enacted, the net result will be that the majority of theatre premises will be left requiring only their existing alcohol licence and no other licence (unless the theatre operated without an alcohol licence in which case a public entertainment licence would be needed where a local authority has resolved to license theatre as a form of public entertainment). The Sub-Committee suggests that further consideration be given to this issue.

Separately, the Sub-Committee believes that this issue also brings into focus the question of whether a late hours catering licence in terms of Section 42 of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 is required in respect of premises in respect of which a premises licence has been granted in terms of Section 26 of the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 and welcomes clarification in this regard.

49. How should licensing authorities integrate their current fee charging structure into their public entertainment regime?

The Sub-Committee refers to its comments above.

Civic Licensing – Sexual Entertainment Venues

50. What are the consequences of operating the new licensing regime using the definitions set out at section 68 of the Bill?

- 'sexual entertainment venue'
- 'audience'
- 'financial gain'
- 'organiser'
- 'premises'
- 'sexual entertainment', and
- 'display of nudity'
The Sub-Committee notes that Scottish Government’s has taken the view that, in licensing Sexual Entertainment Venues, they consider that there is a “regulation gap” as a result of the judgement in the case of Brightcrew Ltd v The City of Glasgow Licensing Board [2011] CSIH 46.

While the Sub-Committee holds no unanimous view as to whether the Brightcrew decision led to the “regulation gap” referred to above, it suggests that the Licensing Board should administer sexual entertainment venues as opposed to the Licensing Authority. The Sub-Committee therefore suggests that the Licensing Board could regulate numbers by way of its overprovision statement which could be amended to take into account there being no sexual entertainment venues. On the basis of premises already operating as a sexual entertainment venue, a Licensing Board could grant a licence for a sexual entertainment venue in terms of Section 68 of the Bill subject to taking into account the “regulation gap”.

Otherwise, if in terms of Section 68 of the Bill, sexual entertainment venues are to be licensed by the Licensing Authority, the Sub-Committee believes that this could lead to a curious and anomalous situation whereby a Licensing Board grants a premises licence in respect of premises providing adult entertainment all in terms of Section 23 of the 2005 Act, yet the Licensing Authority refuses a licence for sexual entertainment in respect of the same premises where that Authority has resolved in terms of Schedule 2 of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 to have effect in their area in relation to such venues.

The Sub-Committee is particularly concerned with the terms of Section 45 B (6A) of the 1982 Act as inserted by Section 68 of the Bill whereby a local authority may refuse an application for the grant or renewal of a licence despite the fact that a premises licence under Part 3 of the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 is in effect in relation to the premises, vehicle, vessel or stall into which the application relates.
The Sub-Committee anticipates that this provision will be particularly problematic where the Licensing Board has already granted a premises licence and the Licensing Authority thereafter resolves in terms of Schedule 2 (9) Sub-Paragraph (5) (c) of the 1982 Act as amended by Section 45 (B) (1) to fix “nil” as the appropriate number of sexual entertainment venues.

The Sub-Committee remains concerned that a double licensing system of the nature proposed in the Bill could lead to confusion and conflict between licensing regimes which will be brought into effect as a result of this amendment.

51. The Bill specifies that a venue hosting sexual entertainment on three occasions or less within a 12 month period would not be treated as a sexual entertainment venue: does this have any unintended consequences?

The Sub-Committee believes that the provisions at Section 45A (9) of the Bill will have the resultant effect of a Licensing Authority having no means of prohibiting such sexual entertainment on the basis that such sexual entertainment has not been provided on more than three previous occasions which fall wholly or partly within the period of 12 months. It may well be that a Licensing Authority that has set its desired number of sexual entertainment venues for localities in their area as nil.

The Sub-Committee believes that this has the unintended consequence of such activity not being subject to the new regime on the basis that it has only been provided for once or twice a year as opposed to it being provided throughout the year.

52. Local licensing authorities will be able to set the number of sexual entertainment venues in their area to below the existing level, or zero: are there any advantages or disadvantages to this approach?

The Sub-Committee refers to its comments at Question 50 above.
53. The Bill relies mainly on the existing licensing regime for sex shops as set out in Section 44 and Schedule 2 of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 (application, notification, objections and representations, revocation of licences etc., enforcement and appeals): is this mechanism adequate for the licensing of sexual entertainment venues - if not, please explain why?

The Sub-Committee has no particular view on the existing licensing regime for sex shops being made applicable to sexual entertainment venues.

The Sub-Committee again refers to its comments at Question 50 above.

54. Are there any barriers to licensing authorities operating the new licensing regime?

The Sub-Committee refers to its comments at Question 50 above and believes that this new scheme should be operated by Licensing Boards as opposed to Licensing Authorities.

55. Civic Licensing

Do you have any other comments to make on the civic licensing aspects of the Bill?

The Sub-Committee refers to Section 69 of the Bill.

It is concerned that the six month period within which a decision on a licence applied for in terms of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 is being in effect extended from six months to nine months.

Accordingly, the Sub-Committee reiterates its comments made with regard to Section 58 above.

50. What are the consequences of operating the new licensing regime using the definitions set out at section 68 of the Bill?

- ‘sexual entertainment venue’
- ‘audience’
- ‘financial gain’
- ‘organiser’
- ‘premises’
- ‘sexual entertainment’, and
- ‘display of nudity’

The venues are for adult entertainment not necessarily ‘sexual entertainment venue’. One also cannot assume there will be ‘displays of nudity’ in common areas. Many groups of customers go for stag nights for entertainment not necessarily lap dancing.

51. The Bill specifies that a venue hosting sexual entertainment on three occasions or less within a 12 month period would not be treated as a sexual entertainment venue: does this have any unintended consequences?
Adult entertainment venues should be licensed.

52. Local licensing authorities will be able to set the number of sexual entertainment venues in their area to below the existing level, or zero: are there any advantages or disadvantages to this approach?

Local licensing authorities should not have the authority to set number of venues. One it will cause discrepancies city to city and two local licensing authorities do not have knowledge of such establishments.

53. The Bill relies mainly on the existing licensing regime for sex shops as set out in section 44 and Schedule 2 of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 (application, notification, objections and representations, revocation of licences etc., enforcement and appeals): is this mechanism adequate for the licensing of sexual entertainment venues - if not, please explain why?

54. Are there any barriers to licensing authorities operating the new licensing regime?
These venues cause no harm to anyone. Freedom of choice.

55. Civic Licensing

Do you have any other comments to make on the civic licensing aspects of the Bill?

I completely disagree with the intention to close lap dancing venues and putting through this bill. I work in the hospitality industry and many friends do also and I can say at times I feel more like a slave than my friends who work in lap dancing clubs. Staff in many other professions e.g. cleaners, nurses and others on minimum wage should be the people you are worried about. If this continues pubs will soon close and only virgins will be allowed to get married. Perhaps education on lap dancing and these venues would suit better than assumptions and prejudice.

3. General Licensing Issues

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in.
(Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

23. Is the current Scottish licensing regime, as set out in the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 and the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005, fit for purpose?

City of Edinburgh Licensing Board makes comment only in respect of the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005.
The Act has generally allowed a flexible approach to Boards to deal with alcohol issues within their areas. However court decisions such as Brightcrew and Lidl have demonstrated that the current legislation does restrict the ability of Boards to deal with issues arising from licensed premises in their areas in the manner they would consider appropriate to address those issues. The statutory guidance which was prepared in 2006 before the Act came into force and which Boards require to have regard to has not been revised since then and does not have regard to operational issues which have arisen with the Act or recent case law. Further specific issues are detailed in the responses to alcohol licensing questions below.

24. Should a licensing system seek to regulate individual behaviour or communities of space (eg. ‘city space’ etc.)?

Alcohol licensing requires to regulate both individual behaviour and communities of space as set out in the five licensing objectives which underpin all decisions made by Licensing Boards in terms of the 2005 Act.
25. In what way should the licensing system in Scotland interact with the support the land use planning system, community planning and regeneration?

There is no reference to regeneration in the 2005 legislation and in particular the licensing objectives.

All applicants for new premises licences must have obtained planning permission prior to submitting an application under the 2005 Act. There is no interaction with the planning regime beyond this in the Act which specifically limits the Boards powers to address issues where another regulatory regime exists to deal with such issues.

Statements of Licensing Policy allows an opportunity for consultation with local communities and also for Boards to take account of Community Planning when considering the terms of their Statements.

Interaction and support with community planning processes by Boards is however required to take place against the backdrop of the 2005 Act which sets out the statutory framework for administration of the liquor licensing system by Boards. The licensing system should afford sufficient flexibility to allow Boards’ discretion to address local issues.

26. How does the licensing system in Scotland assist with the delivery of sustainable development and economic balanced areas?

Given the comments above in respect of the statutory framework under which Boards operate there are limited opportunities to assist with sustainable development and economic balanced areas although the Board does seek to promote both where possible in terms of its Licensing Policy Statement.

27. In what way does the licensing system in Scotland support health and planning, addressing health inequalities and public health wellbeing outcomes?
The 2005 Act includes the specific licensing objective of protecting and improving public health and Health Boards are now statutory consultees in respect of premise and variation applications made under the 2005 Act. Boards can have regard to information from Health Boards and other partners when framing their Policy Statements particularly in relation to overprovision. A representative from the local Health Board also has a statutory place on the local Licensing Forum. These are significant changes from the previous alcohol licensing legislation which took no specific account of health issues.
4. Alcohol Licensing

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

28. In what ways will the Bill’s provisions on alcohol licensing allow for reductions in crime and the preservation of public order?

The reintroduction of the “fit and proper” test in the Bill is welcomed as allowing for a reduction in crime and the preservation of public order. However, whilst the proposal is that this ground may be considered in relation to premises licences applications and reviews, transfers and personal licence applications there is no reference to occasional licence applications. It is suggested that both in the interests of consistency and overall effectiveness of the provision that occasional licence applications should be included.

The amendment of the legislation to allow spent convictions to be considered in respect of applicants is also welcomed.

The introduction of an offence in respect of supplying alcohol to children or young persons for consumption in a public place will also allow for a reduction in crime and the preservation of public order if enforced effectively.

The inclusion of young persons within the licensing objective which was previously limited to protecting children from harm rectifies an anomaly which has been present in the Act since its introduction and will allow Boards an opportunity to address matters of concern in relation to young persons and the sale of alcohol.

29. Are there any other measures which should be taken to assist in the reduction of crime and the preservation of public order?

See answer to No 29 above – extending the fit and proper test to occasional licences.

The removal of defined “relevant offences” would also assist as this would mean any offence could be capable of being taken into account when considering an application.
30. In what ways will the provisions in the Bill enhance the licensing objectives set out in the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005?

For the reasons outlined above the Bill does seek to enhance the licensing objectives particularly in relation to the objectives of preventing crime and disorder and protecting children and young persons. However, the opportunity has not been taken to place greater control on the operation of clubs which enjoy less restrictions than other premises as suggested in the previous alcohol licensing consultation which proposed incorporating the constitution of clubs into the premises licence and allowing the breach of a club constitution in relation to the sale of alcohol to become a breach of licence allowing the Board to review the licence. This Board also suggested that a mandatory condition could be introduced to tighten up the regulation of members clubs by requiring amendments to their constitutions to be notified and preventing amendments that breach the Licensing (Clubs) (Scotland) Regulations 2007/76 and thus ensuring clubs were not becoming primarily commercial operations.

31. In what ways will the re-introduction of the “fit and proper person” test assist with the implementation of the licensing objectives set out in the 2005 act?

This will allow for a more in depth examination of all the relevant facts surrounding an applicant including whether the person making an application is “fronting” for another. There is a concern that linking the test to the licensing objectives rather than as a stand alone ground of refusal similar to that found in other regulatory regimes may restrict the use of the provision.

32. Have there been any unintended consequences arising from the 2005 Act, for example, in rural areas or the economic regeneration of areas?
The Board is aware that the cost implications of obtaining and maintaining a premises licence have resulted in some cases in smaller outlets where alcohol sales were a low percentage of overall turnover giving up licences.

Separately economic considerations are not encompassed within the licensing objectives which the Board are required to have regard to when considering licence applications.

The provisions of the Act in relation to personal licences, particularly in relation to mandatory refresher training and the automatic revocation of licences if such training is not undertaken within five years of the date of the personal licence being issued, have resulted in widespread concern for Boards and licence holders alike. Boards should be given discretion to decide whether the ultimate sanction of revocation is necessary having regard to the licensing objectives as in other situations where licence holders have breached conditions of licence or acted inconsistently with the licensing objectives.

33. Which, if any, types of spent relevant offences should be required to be disclosed and what do you think the benefits of disclosure will be?

See answer 29 above.

Councils as Licensing Authorities are already able to consider any spent convictions where they are satisfied it is in the interests of justice to do so and it is appropriate that Licensing Boards are in a similar position to have as full information available to them as possible when making decisions on applications.

34. Do you have any other comments to make on the alcohol licensing aspects of the Bill?

The issue of occasional licences with a fee of £10 being used as a substitute for making full premises licence applications has not yet been addressed. A more restricted definition of occasional licence should be provided to ensure that such licences are only available for specific “occasions”. Whilst not specifically contained in the licensing aspects of the Bill it is suggested that the exemption from the requirement to obtain a Public Entertainment licence if an alcohol licence is in place should be removed as an occasional licence to sell alcohol should not be used to licence large events where the sale of alcohol is ancillary to the public entertainment taking place.

54. Are there any barriers to licensing authorities operating the new licensing regime?

City of Edinburgh Licensing Board responded to the previous consultation on Sexual Entertainment licensing by offering the view that the licensing of such entertainment could be dealt with by Licensing Boards. In light of the proposals within the Bill to create a new licensing regime to be administered by Councils, consideration will require to be given to ensuring that the new regulations will be aligned to the existing overlapping provisions of the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 e.g mandatory conditions for late night premises.

- 'sexual entertainment venue'

So many of the terms have negative connotations and are assumptive.

51. The Bill specifies that a venue hosting sexual entertainment on three occasions or less within a 12 month period would not be treated as a sexual entertainment venue: does this have any unintended consequences?

How can it possibly be monitored? I feel this would be abused.

Loss of jobs, loss of revenue, therefore, loss of tax paid and empty units within the city.
55. Civic Licensing

Do you have any other comments to make on the civic licensing aspects of the Bill?

Firstly I must make clear that I do not have issue with anyone who works in the sex industry. I do, however, have issue with the Scottish parliament making assumptions that because I choose to work in a lap dancing club I am a sex worker and now work in the sex industry. I am a single parent and I freely choose to work in a lap dancing club, no one made me do it. It is strange that in 2014 we remember the Great war that was fought to give us freedom and choice and even more freedom and choice for women you are now taking that away. It also find it appalling that you will vote on a subject you know nothing about and have not actually spoke to the people who work in the industry. I am sure that if the Scottish parliament were to decide to shut down the car sales industry they would consult with staff in the factories etc and people from the industry. I think the SNP should be ashamed of themselves for branding us sex slaves and low life’s who do not deserve a say. It is obviously assumed our jobs are unimportant and that we do not have the right to have a job in the industry we choose to work in.

51. The Bill specifies that a venue hosting sexual entertainment on three occasions or less within a 12 month period would not be treated as a sexual entertainment venue: does this have any unintended consequences?

See comments below on Clause 68, para. (f).
52. Local licensing authorities will be able to set the number of sexual entertainment venues in their area to below the existing level, or zero: are there any advantages or disadvantages to this approach?

See comments below on Clause 68, para. (i).

53. The Bill relies mainly on the existing licensing regime for sex shops as set out in section 44 and Schedule 2 of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 (application, notification, objections and representations, revocation of licences etc., enforcement and appeals): is this mechanism adequate for the licensing of sexual entertainment venues - if not, please explain why?

There has not been a recent occasion to use the existing provisions in North Ayrshire, but they appear to be adequate.

54. Are there any barriers to licensing authorities operating the new licensing regime?

No
55. Civic Licensing

Do you have any other comments to make on the civic licensing aspects of the Bill?

See paper apart.
This response relates only to the Licensing Parts:

2. Alcohol Licensing [41-59]
3. Civic Licensing [60-73]

and not to Part 1 on Air Weapons [1-40].

General Comment

1. Although there are some good points in the Bill, there is an opportunity to do more. The Bill fails to address matters which have previously been brought to the Scottish Government's attention. This Bill follows:

   Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 (asp 16)
   Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Act 2010 (asp 13)
   Alcohol etc. (Scotland) Act 2010 (asp 18)
   Alcohol (Minimum Pricing) (Scotland) Act 2012 (asp 4)

i.e. it is the fifth piece of legislation affecting licensing in ten years. It is disappointing that these matters are again overlooked. Some of the comments made regarding the present Bill are much the same as the comments made in response to consultation about earlier proposals (e.g. the proposed new system to license 'Sexual Entertainment Venues'), yet the Bill appears little different from those earlier proposals and does not appear to have taken account of the earlier comments.

2. The Bill fails to introduce a statutory ouster clause for challenges to Licensing Policy Statements, meaning that such policies are always open to challenge based on the limited set of facts of a particular case, ignoring the wider policy objectives.

3. The 2005 Act should be amended so as to address the issues raised by Brightcrew Ltd. v The City of Glasgow Licensing Board, [2011] CSIH 46 (e.g. by repealing [27(7)(c)], which presently prohibits Boards from imposing any licensing condition which "relates to a matter (such as planning, building control or food hygiene) which is regulated under another enactment", and which appears to overlap with [27(9)(b)] ). The list of 'relevant' offences to which Boards are required to consider include many enactments which have no or little relevance to the sale of alcohol.
Part 2 - Alcohol Licensing [41-59]

Cl. 41 - extension of the 'protecting children' L.O. from under-16s to under-18s.

A good change. In general, the distinction between ‘children’ and ‘young people’ is confusing for laymen, who often use ‘children’ to describe everyone under 18.

Is a corresponding extension of the Forum proposed (Sch. 2, Para. 2(6)(d))?

Cl. 42 LPS periods

It is desirable to link the LPS to the life of Councils. Even if there is some change of membership after an election, there are likely to be some ‘old’ members, so the Policy is not inevitably irrelevant. The ‘new’ Board can introduce a Supplementary LPS, at least to address some points (it is unlikely that the new Board will want to replace the whole LPS).

Cl. 43 - fit and proper

(a) Why is this not being extended to ask whether an applicant for an Occasional Licence is 'fit and proper'?

(b) Is the addition of the word 'otherwise' sufficient to remove the duplication caused by the introduction of 'fit and proper' and the retention of 'inconsistency with the Crime and Disorder licensing objective' as a potential ground for refusal?

Cl. 44 - 'fit and proper' in transfer

(a) If the Police can give "any information in relation to [the Transferee or a Connected Person] that the Chief Constable considers may be relevant", what is the point of the distinction between those offences which are 'relevant' and those which are not?

(b) Sch. 1, Para. 10(2)(e) should be corrected - the fitness of the Applicant is not the issue in a [33] Transfer. It is the fitness of the proposed Transferee that matters.

Cl. 45(4)(b) - referring to a 'fit and proper' review
Introduces [39(2A)]:

"Where, at a review hearing in relation to any premises licence, the Licensing Board are satisfied that the ground for review specified in section 36(3)(za) is established, the Board must revoke the licence."

This provision is unnecessary. It is already the case that if a Review is upheld the Board may (not 'must') take certain 'steps' under [39].

In a Review, there are 2 stages:

1. is a 'Ground for Review' in [36(3)] established?

2. If not, that is the end of the Review. If so, the Board goes on to consider what 'steps' should follow (revocation etc.). The existing [39(1)] is "...as the Board considers necessary or appropriate for the purposes of any of the Licensing Objectives." It is the Board's opinion that counts, not anyone else's - why should 'fit and proper' be different?

The word 'must':

(a) is not consistent with the view that there is a discretion to take no action. Suppose that the Police make a Review Application because the PLH or PM is not 'fit and proper', but by the time the case reaches the Board there has been a change of personnel or the licence has been transferred. The Review would not be likely to be dismissed as frivolous under [36(6)], but there would be no 'steps' either;

(b) is unnecessary - in the more common case where the person in question is still involved with the Premises, it's hardly likely that a Board would say "he is not 'fit and proper', but we won't do anything about it."

If the person complained about was the PM the Board might vary the licence so as to remove him, or suspend the licence. In both variation and suspension the Board has a power under [40] to recall the earlier order - if the Board imposed variation/suspension but the problem identified by the Police was later remedied by a change in personnel, the PLH might invite the Board to lift the order. If the licence had been revoked the Board could do nothing - the PLH would have to re-apply for a licence, and his Premises would be closed until the next meeting of the Board.

Cl. 46 - 'fit and proper' and Personal Licences

Similar issue with to Cl. 44 ('fit and proper' in transfers)
Cl. 46(3) - Notification of Personal Licence application to Licensing Standards Officer

What is this provision intended to achieve? What is the LSO supposed to do when she gets Notice?

The introduction by the Bill of 'fit and proper' suggests that the LSO is to do what the Police used to do under the previous legislation - interview prospective Licensees or Nominees (managers). However, the analogy is false: there are many more Personal Licences under the 2005 Act than there were Licensees or Section 11 Nominees under the 1976 Act (e.g. we have around 400 Premises but 1,755 Personal Licence Holders).

Whoever asks, the questions would be related to what the Applicant said he proposed to do, e.g. "what experience do you have in the licensed trade? Are you planning to manage Premises yourself?". There are different expectations of Premises Managers, e.g., if two Applicants say:

1. "I've never worked in a pub before, but I'll only be working shifts as part of the bar staff"

2. "I've never worked in a pub before, but I want to be the Manager of [Premises]" they will both get a 10 year licence, renewable forever. Under the 1976 Act, the 'fit and proper' status of the person could be reviewed every 3 years. Is it proposed that the Board should review every Personal Licence every 10 years? (Cl. 46(5) involves the LSO in renewal as well as grant).

Issues:

(a) What if the Applicant is assessed today as 'fit and proper', on the basis of what he says are his immediate plans, but later a Premises Licence is varied to show that he is the Premises Manager? His 'fit and proper' would not automatically be re-assessed, as the nomination is effected as a 'Minor Variation', so the Board is legally obliged to grant it without inquiry (this could happen any time - the vetting is only supposed to be repeated at 10-year intervals, as Cl. 46(5) extends the new [73A] to a Personal Licence Renewal Application):

(i) If he is nominated for Premises in the same area where his Personal Licence was granted, the Board might know how his 'fit and proper' status was previously assessed, but
(ii) a lot of people with 'foreign' Personal Licences work in our area - how would we know what was the basis of his 'home' Licensing Board's assessment that he was 'fit and proper'?

It might be said that it would be for the Police, later, to act if they discovered that Premises were in charge of a person who was not 'fit and proper', and seek a Review, but that is not an instant procedure and there would be no guarantee that an unfit person could not run a pub: is prevention not better than cure?

(b) What if such experience as he has is running a shop, and the LSO concludes that is indeed suitable to be a Premises Manager of an off-sales, but he later wants to run a pub? He couldn't be questioned then, because he would already have a Personal Licence;

(c) Is his experience to be taken into account in judging whether or not his Licensing Qualification is 'appropriate'? (2005 Act, Sch. 1, Para. 4(1)(d)). The terms 'appropriate licensing qualification' is defined in Para. 4(2), but only in relation to Premises Managers. For Personal Licences generally, all that applicants require is a 'licensing qualification', and it does not matter, at the time of application, whether it refers to 'on-sales' or 'off-sales';

(d) What record is to be kept of a 'fit and proper' assessment? There is no National Personal Licence Database. Is the assessment to be endorsed on the Licence? Can a future employer learn it?

Is there to be any way of the Licence-Holder challenging it? Say the Applicant seeks a Personal Licence and is assessed today as 'fit and proper' to work behind a bar, but years later he fails to get a new job as a Premises Manager, because in his perception:

(i) he has now acquired years of experience and is well-suited to the job; but

(ii) the Board has effectively granted him a second-class licence.

Would he have any redress? Could he demand that the LSO re-assess him?

(e) is the Board to have the power to refuse a Minor Variation? If so, the existing [31], giving PM variations immediate effect, would have to be qualified.

2005 Act [72(1)]:

"Any individual aged 18 years or more may apply for a Personal Licence to—"
(a) if the individual is ordinarily resident in the area of any Licensing Board, that Board, or

(b) in any other case, any Licensing Board.”

The Scottish Government has instructed that all Boards can deal with Applications regardless of residence, although if that had been Parliament’s intention then the provision would be different - if it was intended that a person in Scotland could apply to any Board he pleased, [72(1)] would be much shorter because it would not refer to ordinary residence at all - it would omit the whole of (a) and most of (b).

The phrase "in any other case" means that there is a distinction between (a) and not-(a):

(a) If a person lives in Scotland, he must apply to his local Board.

(b) If he lives outside Scotland, he doesn’t have a local Board, so he can apply to any Board.

Whoever asks 'fit and proper' questions (either the LSO or local Police), he is being asked to comment on people who might have no intention to manage premises. If it is to remain the case that a person can apply to whichever Board he pleases, it means that someone will have to comment on Applications relating to Premises in other Board areas (for example, about 13% of our Premises Managers hold Personal Licences granted elsewhere in Scotland - major supermarkets and other retailers move their managers about the country - How would we know what assessment had been made elsewhere, and conversely how would another Board know what assessment was made of a North Ayrshire licence-holder?

If there is to be a ‘fit and proper’ assessment, it should apply only to prospective new Premises Managers, and not to Personal Licence Holders generally.

If the workload of Boards is to be substantially increased, could the £50 prescribed fee be reviewed?

There is no equivalent vetting for Transferees. Who, if anyone, is expected to interview Transferees to assess their ‘fit and proper’?

Cl. 49 - re procedure where Licensing Board receive notice of conviction in relation to a premises licence

This is a welcome change but it does not go far enough.
The Bill might be:

“(7A) If both -

(a) the Licensing Board receive from the Chief Constable a notice under subsection (4)(b) which does not include a recommendation under subsection (5), and

(b) any one or more of the circumstances in Sub-section (7B) exist, the Licensing Board must decide -

(a) to make a Premises Licence Review Proposal in respect of the Premises Licence, or

(b) to take no further action in relation to the Notice.

(7B) the conditions referred to in Subsection (7A) are -

(a) any offence confirmed by the Notice relates to Licensed Premises within the Board's area; or

(b) any offence confirmed by the Notice relates to a person working or who has worked in Licensed Premises within the Board's area; or

(c) any conviction confirmed by the Notice was imposed by a Court having jurisdiction within any part of the Board's area.”

In (b) "a person working or who has worked": it would not be enough to use the present tense "working", as this would suggest that a conviction is only significant if the person remains in employment on the day of the Board Meeting - a PLH might avoid Board scrutiny by simply dismissing the employee before the Board has occasion to make a decision.

In (c) - "a Court having jurisdiction": there are in fact no longer any criminal courts within North Ayrshire, as both the Sheriff Court and the Justice of the Peace Court sit at Kilmarnock (East Ayrshire). The phrase would cover the High Court, so a conviction which was serious enough to merit prosecution in the High Court would be significant, regardless of the location of the Premises.

Cl. 50- re procedure where Licensing Board receive notice of conviction in relation to a Personal Licence

See note for Cl.49.
Cl. 51 - Relevant offences and foreign offences: spent convictions

(a) A welcome change. The Board might be surprised to be told by their adviser that they could not do now, as a Licensing Board, what they were able to do last week as the Licensing Committee.

Boards are supposed to honour the Licensing Objectives, but the original Act removed from the Board a source of information which:

(a) it had under the 1976 Act, and

(b) still has in every other licensing scheme.

Prior to the 2005 Act a Board could look at ‘spent’ convictions if satisfied that ‘justice cannot be done’ otherwise (Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974 [7(3)]).

For the avoidance of doubt add:

"The proceedings of a Licensing Board are “Proceedings Before A Judicial Authority” for the purposes of the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974."

(this express enactment might not be necessary, given that the definition in 1974 Act [4(6)] might well cover the Board anyway, but it would do no harm to express it).

(b) Why not dis-apply ROA altogether, so the Licensing Authority can look at old convictions without even thinking about the ‘justice cannot be done’ question (ROA [7(3)])?

This has already been done for Drivers of Taxis and PHCs, and Landlord Registration - The Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974 (Exclusions and Exceptions) (Scotland) Order 2013, No. 50. This consolidates amendments previously made by Scottish Minsters - why expand the scope in one context (LR: S.S.I. 2006-194) but narrow it in another (the original 2005 Act)? Is the public interest in regulating the sale of alcohol not as important as it is with hire-car drivers and landlords? If exceptions were thought appropriate in some licensing, why not all of them?

Cl. 52 - Offences of supplying alcohol to a child or young person

(a) Why do these offences apply only to people of 18 or over? By granting under-18s immunity, drinkers would engage youngsters to buy drink for them, knowing that the youngsters could not be charged.
(b) the recipient in [104A] is a 'child'. If the only difference for 'Young person' recipients is be an exception for meals, is there a need for a separate [104B]?

(c) In the North Ayrshire Licensing Board response to the "Further Options" consultation, in answer to Q.2 ("Do you agree that it should be illegal for adults to supply alcohol to an under 18 for consumption in a public place?") North Ayrshire Licensing Board replied:

"The prohibition should not simply be against adults. If an under-18 has already acquired alcohol – perhaps no ‘agency’ sale has taken place – he might have obtained alcohol at home – he might in fact supply it to another under-18. Consider the situation where a group are passing round a bottle – why should it be criminal if the oldest gives the bottle to the youngest, but not vice versa?"

(d) The definition of "public place" has part (c) ("any place to which the public do not have access but to which the young person unlawfully gains access"). This should be extended to include trespassing children.

(e) The position of 'knowingly' In the new [104B....] renders the word redundant. The question is not whether the buyer 'knows' of the purchase (who accidentally buys something?). The target of the provision is surely the buyer who knows or has reasonable belief that the drink he is buying is likely to be supplied to or consumed by someone under-age?

Cl. 53 - Meaning of “alcohol”: inclusion of angostura bitters

No comments.

Cl. 54 - Overprovision

There is no objection to Cl. 54(2)(a) but Cl. 54(2)(b) should not be enacted:

(a) The extension of the Assessment to "Licensed Hours" would not achieve anything significant. Given that nearly all comparable premises have policy hours, so are open for much the same length of time, what would be the point of collecting hours data? The most common deviation from Policy concerns shorter, not longer, hours. This is a legacy of the Transition. To preserve 'grandfather rights' some small off-sales did not ask for the full 10.00 am. to 10.00 p.m. on Sunday (although both [65] and North Ayrshire Licensing Board Policy would allow this), so their Sunday licensed hours reflect the 1976 Act Permitted Hours. There are few Premises like this now, since most have varied their hours to seek the full period, and of course newer Premises were never troubled by 'grandfather rights' considerations, so sought the full period from the start.

(b) this would be a huge data-capture task. It would require every single Operating Plan to be checked.

Cl. 55 - Duty of Licensing Boards to produce annual financial report

(a) This creates additional work for a Board and Council Finance Departments. The same staff, whether legally-qualified or not, deal with all licensing - both alcohol licensing and every other kind of licence (e.g. under the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982). Income and expenditure is not separately accounted for, so any financial statement would depend on estimates.

(b) Cl. 55(3)(b) is objectionable for the same reason as [146(3)] in the original Act - "Henry VIII Clauses". The executive should not be entitled to alter primary legislation. There is not even affirmative resolution procedure, so unless the Parliament itself takes the initiative to annul the Minister's order, the Act itself can be amended.

Cl. 56 - Interested parties

The 2005 Act provision was inserted by the CJL(S)A 2010, never commenced, and is now to be repealed.

According to Para. 109 of the Policy Memorandum, the Bill effects:

"Removal of the requirement for a premises licence holder to notify a change in interested parties and removal a premises manager from the definition of interested party;"

However, the Bill does not achieve this. The Explanatory Notes are closer to the Bill:

"169. It also amends the definition of an interested party at section 147(5) by permitting that a premises manager can be an interested party. This has the effect of allowing the premises manager to be subject to vicarious liability for offences under s141B."

The 2005 Act's interpretation provision currently includes [147(5)]:

“(5) For the purposes of this Act, a person is an Interested Party in relation to Licensed Premises if the person is not the Holder of the Premises Licence nor the Premises Manager in respect of the Premises but—

(a) has an interest in the Premises as an owner or tenant, or

(b) has management and control over the Premises or the business carried on on the Premises.”

Clause 56(5) of the Bill is:

"In section 147(5) (interpretation), in the opening words, the words “nor the premises manager” are repealed."

A PM would be a person having "management and control over the Premises", so would still be an "Interested Party". Is the intention to make the PM an Interested Party or not?

Cl. 57(2) - removal of 5-year bar after revocation caused by lack of training

(a) If enacted, 2005 Act [74(3)(c)] will read:

"(c) no Personal Licence previously held by the Applicant has been Revoked under any provision of this Act other than section 87(3) within the period of 5 years ending with the day on which the Application was received."

So it might mean that holders who had lost their Licences in December 2014 (after failing to meet the refresher training deadline) might re-apply much earlier than the 5 years.

One of the situations where a person might miss the deadline is where he has booked a place on the refresher course in good time, but for some reason (e.g. illness) misses the scheduled sitting. He might in fact sit the course shortly before the 3 month period expires, and not have a Certificate until after the period has expired. He might have sat the course and obtained a Certificate, but simply overlooked the need to show the Board his Certificate until he was too late.

If the Clause is enacted and then commenced by Order, he might re-apply immediately. Should the Board accept a 'refresher' certificate instead of the usual 'grant' certificate? Following the rules strictly it should not, but is that consistent with the presumed purpose of the training?

In relation to “Scottish Certificate for Personal Licence Holders at SCQF Level 6” the SCPLH website states that "as of the 1st August 2013 ... only certificates presented with the above codes are based upon the new National Standard."

The strictly-correct response might come as a surprise to someone who has done what the Personal Licence (Training) (Scotland) Regulations 2013-261 required, having obtained a "Scottish Certificate for Personal Licence Holders (Refresher) at SCQF Level 6". Is the content of the 'refresher' course so significantly different from the course that people seeking 'grants' usually take? The trade press frequently comments adversely on the utility of refresher training anyway, but how would it look if someone actually gets a recent qualification but is then told "it's not good enough"?

(b) The provision should also state "regardless of the date of that Revocation and whether or not it occurred before the commencement of this Sub-section"

Otherwise this new provision might not help those people who lost their licences in 2014. The provision would not be commenced before 2015, and it would not be presumed to have retroactive effect.

Cl. 57(3) - renewal warning period

The proposal is to extend the period prior to expiry that the Board has to give warning from 3 months to 9 months.

Of itself, this is a good change. If there is to be a warning period then a longer period is better than a shorter period, to minimise the defects in the 2005 Act which were highlighted in the North Ayrshire Licensing Board response to the 'Further Options' Consultation in February 2013 (Q. 52 “further suggestions”, responses (7) to (10)) but which the Bill fails to address (see comments on Cl. 57(4) below).

However, the point of the Board needing to alert a Holder could be questioned - it is his Licence, so he has responsibility for keeping it safe, not the Board - why should Boards spend time and money to tell him what he should do anyway? Recorded Delivery letters cost £1.50 postage, hundreds of letters would be needed, and we have found from the recent 'training refresher' alerts under [87(2)] that some letters sent out are in fact returned undelivered because Licence-Holders have failed in their legal duty to update the Board when changing address.

Cl. 57(4) - Personal Licence Renewal procedure

The legislation has always used the terms 'grant', 'issue' and 'have effect' indifferently. They are not the same thing, and the difference is particularly obvious because of the way that the 2005 was commenced: hundreds of Personal Licences came 'into effect' on Transition Day in 2009, but they were not in fact 'issued' until weeks or months later. Hundreds of Personal Licences in our Board area alone are treated as dated from 1 September 2009, and the same aggregation will occur around September 2019 and in 10-year intervals after.

At present, Holders who wish to renew must lodge their renewal applications in the period of 2 months beginning 3 months before the expiry date of the Licence. The Bill proposes to extend the 'window' to a period of 9 months, starting 12 months before expiry. That amendment is better than nothing, but fails to address the real problem.

The 2005 Act continues to omit a 'deemed continuation' provision (unlike the legislation for Taxis, PHCs and many other activities: Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982, Sch. 1, Paras. 8(5,6)). Experience of the 1982 Act shows that many people leave it until a day or two before their licences are due to expire that they apply for renewal. They are safe to do that, but a Personal Licence Holder who does that will still become unlicensed, because he would have missed the 'window'. If a Personal Licence holder tendered a Renewal Application a day before expiry, the Board would have to refuse even to accept it for processing - if it was outside the window, it would be incompetent - even if he had a recent training certificate and his application was otherwise in order. There are likely to be the sort of concerns in 2019 which happened about refresher training in 2014.

Since there is no 'deemed continuation' provision, even a Personal Licence Holder who lodges his renewal application within the 'window' faces becoming unlicensed. Under the Bill, he can lodge up to 3 months before expiry. What if he lodges in good time but there are adverse comments from the Police (or, under the Bill, about 'fit and proper'), so the case is put on a Board agenda, and the next available Board is not until after the Licence has expired?

Why not abolish the 'window' altogether? If a person chooses to lodge before expiry, and risk effectively losing the period of overlap if his new Licence happens to be granted before the old one is due to expire, why can't he?

If a Premises Manager loses his Personal Licence, there is a breach of the Mandatory Condition in 2005 Act, Sch. 3, Para. 4(1)(b). The '6 week period of grace' allowed by [54] is not available to the Premises, since the expiry of the Personal Licence is not any of the 'events' listed in [54(2)]:

(a) "the Premises Manager ceases to work at the Premises"

This has not happened. It might be a condition of employment that the employee actually have a Personal Licence, but if the employer dismisses him
Should there not be an addition so as to read “the Premises Manager ceases to work at the Premises in that capacity”? An employer faced with the difficulty of his employee X ceasing to hold a Personal Licence, and hence being unable to continue acting as PM, might appoint another employee who held a live Personal Licence, Y, but meanwhile X would probably continue to work on the Premises, albeit no longer as PM.

(b) “the Premises Manager becomes incapable for any reason of acting as Premises Manager”

He has not become 'incapable', if that is construed as a reference to the Adults with Incapacity (S) Act - compare 'event' (c)(ii) in [28] re individuals who hold Premises Licences and become 'incapable'.

The alternative view depends on accepting that the same word has different meanings in different parts of the Act. Accepting that a lack of a Personal Licence leads to a breach of a Mandatory Condition, he is not 'incapable' of acting as PM - the PLH is in breach of a condition of his Licence, but the PM could only be said to be doing something wrong if, while he continues to act as PM, the Premises sell alcohol. The [1(1)] offence is committed, because although the sale is “under” a Licence, the sale is not “in accordance with” it. However, if the PLH acknowledges that the PM is no longer in a position to authorise sales, the PM would not face prosecution unless he personally had conducted the sale. Since he would remain capable of doing everything else the Premises did apart from selling alcohol (e.g. in a restaurant, taking orders and serving food) he could not be described as 'incapable'.

(c) “the Premises Manager dies”

He's not dead.

(d) “the Personal Licence held by the Premises Manager is Revoked or Suspended”

The Personal Licence has been neither Revoked nor Suspended: it has expired naturally, due to the passage of time.

Even if one of the 'events' had occurred, it would not be enough for the PLH to lodge a Variation seeking to re-appoint the same person as PM, since the Variation Application which should follow should seek “to substitute another individual as the Premises Manager” [54(4)(b)].

If the proposed new PM does not already hold a Personal Licence, there is a substantial chance that the Variation Application would not be granted, since there would be no guarantee that he would in fact have a Personal Licence at the point where the Board would be in a position to determine the Variation Application (if the proposed new PM does not already have a Personal Licence, an 'immediate effect' Variation under [31] would not be entertained).

Many Personal Licences are dealt with under delegated powers, so the Application for the new Licence might well be processed only a few weeks after the old Licence expired, but what if a Board Hearing was necessary (e.g. if there is a Conviction or if the Board has information suggesting that the Applicant might not be 'fit and proper')?

Suggested amendment

The legislation should be amended to state that the date of grant is the date of the Board decision, and the decision should have effect from then, regardless of the date of issue of any licence, decision notice or other document. This suggestion applies to Premises Licences as well as Personal Licences.

The difference has been recognised in one context. The Scottish Executive recognised that not all Personal Licences would in fact be 'issued' before Transition Day, as the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 (Transitional Provisions) Order 2009 No. 277 was not made until 23 July 2009, only 5 weeks before Transition Day, creating the 2-month "Deemed Personal Licence" for Premises Managers. The Order went to the Subordinate Legislation Committee on Transition Day itself, 1 September 2009.

The Licensing (Transitional and Saving Provisions) (Scotland) Order 2007 No. 454, Article 23 stated that all Personal Licences 'issued' before 1st September 2009 were deemed to commence then. No provision was made at all for Licences issued later, although in fact many Licences were issued afterwards.

The TSO referred only to the duration provision of the 2005 Act - [77] (the date from which the 10 year life of the Licence is counted) - and said nothing at all about the separate provisions as to refresher training - [87].

The practice of all Boards involved with the Northgate computer system is to count every Personal Licence from 1 September 2009, regardless of date of issue. This was a pragmatic approach - around Transition every Board was concentrating on getting Premises Licences and Premises Managers' Personal Licences granted and issued, so some Personal Licences were not in fact 'issued' until months after the Transition.

When in 2014 the Board sent out training reminder letters (showing the Board's belief that certain dates applied) no licence-holder responded to dispute the dates, but (because of the way that the legislation is expressed) the possibility cannot be excluded that someone whose Licence has been revoked due to lack of training might then say:

"my Licence was not issued until November 2009, so the deadline was altered accordingly, so the Board was wrong to tell the Police that my Licence had been revoked"

He might have to accept that his Licence commenced in November 2009, so that he himself had acted illegally before then, but he could admit that with impunity since there would be no chance of him being prosecuted for something 10 years before:

(a) the prosecution would be time-barred - the 'trafficking' offence (2005 Act, [1(4)]) can only be prosecuted summarily, and therefore the 6-month time-bar applies (Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995, [136]).

(b) how would the Procurator Fiscal prove in 2014 that the licence-holder sold alcohol in 2009?

Cl. 58(2) - new duties to acknowledge applications etc.

These provisions are unnecessary and would require the Board to generate more paperwork.

(a) New [134ZA] "Duty to acknowledge applications" - Applicants already get a covering letter or a receipt for their payment. Our www already gives the dates of Boards and 'last-lodging' dates. The staff at the counter tell people that either the case is delegated or it will go to the next Board. Why do they need to do anything else?

(b) The new [134ZA(4)] is also unnecessary. The Bill would oblige Boards to issue a notice that an application fails to meet the prescribed requirements. More needless paperwork. What already happens is that the office staff telephone, email or write to the Applicant saying what is needed. If the failure is not remedied, the whole Application is returned and the Applicant is told it is being rejected as incompetent. This system works, so why change it?

(c) New [134ZB] "Period for determination of applications" - North Ayrshire has no need for a deemed grant period: Applications are either:

(i) granted as soon as possible, after any relevant period for objections etc. has expired (under a wide-ranging Scheme of Delegations) or
(ii) placed before the earliest available Board meeting.

I doubt if any Application has ever taken as long as three months to be determined, let alone nine, except in the cases where the Board has continued a case until a future meeting.

(d) New [134ZC] "Deemed grant of applications"

(5): "The thing applied for is to have effect for the duration of the period stated in the application (subject to any limits imposed by this Act)."

How can this be applied to Applications for Premises Licences and many other 'relevant applications' which do not state a proposed duration - the Applicant doubtless will want a permanent grant, transfer or variation?

Cl. 59 ("Form etc. of communications under the 2005 Act")

Is there something missing here, perhaps a reference to electronic communications?

Part 3 - Civic Licensing [60-73]

Cl. 60 ("Refusal to grant private hire car licences on grounds of overprovision")

(a) What is the need for this?

The number of PHCs has fallen in recent years: in North Ayrshire

<table>

The criterion is 'overprovision'. It is not 'unmet demand' as in the existing limit for Taxis - [10(3)].

We have never had any representations from the public that "there are too many PHCs". It is hard to envisage North Ayrshire Council ever using the proposed power.
(b) What are the Objectives which OVP is supposed to promote?

In the alcohol licensing system, the OVP concept is related to the 'protecting and improving public health' Licensing Objective, one of five objectives in the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005, [4].

In contrast, the CG(S)A 1982 has no formal 'objectives'. Something might be derived from the existing grounds for refusal (Sch. 1, Para. 5(3)):

(a) the licence-holder or manager is not a 'fit and proper person', or

(b) the vehicle or premises is not suitable for the proposed use.

In alcohol licensing, if the Scottish Parliament was asked how it had enabled Boards to promote the PHLO, it could point to the provisions about:

Overprovision (a potential reason for refusing a new Premises Licence)

The Mandatory Licence Conditions on "Irresponsible Drinks Promotions" and price variations.

If a similar question was asked about the CG(S)A, Parliament would point to the existing provisions for vetting of applicants and vehicles.

If 'fit and proper' and suitability are indeed CG(S)A 'objectives', then the question might be asked "how is a limit on PHCs supposed to promote them?"

The creation of overprovision, without first creating objectives, puts the cart before the horse.

(c) How would 'overprovision' be assessed?

PHCs are mobile. At the moment each vehicle can operate throughout the length and breadth of the Council area. Although the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 has a similar provision to the Bill's 1982 Act [3B], allowing the Council to determine 'localities', the 2005 Act removes this discretion from Boards with "Moving Premises": the OVP "locality" is deemed to be the whole Board area: [126(8)(9)]. The existing Taxi limit is based on dividing the Council area into Zones, and restricting a specific vehicle to only one Zone. Although the Bill's [3B] allows a 'whole area' approach, that is not consistent with the 2005 Act.

When Boards reviewed their Licensing Policy Statements, the Health Board was able to provide a vast amount of statistical evidence as to the perceived links between the consumption of alcohol and a wide range of adverse health indicators (such as alcohol-related hospital admissions). The Police and Fire Authorities could also provide data on the link between alcohol consumption and crime or the incidence of fire-related injury. Therefore the Licensing Board, when conducting the mandatory 'Overprovision Assessment', could make a rational decision on where in its area there was OVP.

(d) Overprovision is anti-competitive

In alcohol licensing, Overprovision can be invoked by health bodies and Community Councils, but it might also be invoked by a trade competitor to prevent another trader entering the market. One Council's [10(3)] policy led to a cycle of appeals, in which the Council was involved in a three-way dispute between a would-be operator and a Taxi trade body, which was eventually described by one Inner House judge as "a sorry saga" (Renfrewshire Council v. (1) Davies and (2) Paisley and Glasgow Airport Taxis Ltd., [2005] CSIH 17).

Why should Councils be embroiled in competition disputes about PHCs?

The Bill should provide that if a Licensing Authority does not found on either the Taxi or the PHC limit, or having adopted one later ceases to apply it, its failure to have one should not be open to court question. Otherwise there could be judicial review at the instance of existing operators.

(e) Overprovision is not consistent with the EU Services Directive

The Directive is implemented by "The Provision of Services Regulations" S.I. 2009-2999. Reg. 22 prohibits a "Competent Authority" from making access to, or the exercise of, a Service activity subject to certain requirements, unless specified conditions are met.

One of the prohibited requirements is:

"quantitative or territorial restrictions, in particular in the form of limits fixed according to population or of a minimum geographical distance between persons providing the Service" (Reg. 22(2)(a)).

The conditions for restrictions include:

(a) necessity (an overriding reason relating to the public interest) and

(b) proportionality (the requirements must not go beyond what is necessary to attain the objective).
What is the "overriding reason relating to the public interest"? What "objective" is being attained, so that "proportionality" can be assessed? At present, PHCs can operate freely throughout the Council's area: how would the public interest be promoted if this changed, and they were restricted to Zones? There are few Taxi Stances in rural areas. At the moment, a member of the public who lives outside one of the urban areas phones for a PHC. How would his transport choices be increased if the PHCs he used to call were not tied to a single zone?

(f) Overprovision would create an unregulated market

Experience with the existing limit on Taxi numbers suggests a problem might arise if a similar limit was applied to PHCs.

There is a restricted supply of Taxi Licences, and so Licences have a value (Councils are not told 'officially', but we understand that 'plates' change hands for thousands of pounds).

The 1982 Act contains no provision for transfer. There is therefore a difference between the form and the substance:

In form: a licence-holder (X) goes into partnership with a person (Y), and produces a pro forma document to evidence it. He requests the Council to amend his licence to show that it is now held by the partnership. After a year, X resigns, leaving the licence with the remaining partner Y.

In substance: X has sold his licence to Y. Within a year, and possibly immediately, Y alone will operate the taxi.

This procedure is unregulated. While no doubt there are many perfectly legitimate commercial transactions, the possibility of money-laundering cannot be excluded. Since there is no formal transfer, the Police are not automatically involved. The Police would only be informed if Y was not already a licence-holder himself.

At present, there is no limit on the number of PHCs, so the Licences have no value. A person wanting to join the trade does not have to find someone with one of the scarce licences and raise the funds to buy the licence (where do the funds come from?).

Whereas the Services Directive prevents a Council from being discriminatory in issuing licences (Reg. 22(3)(a), there is no such protection for a party to a private transaction.

(g) who would pay?
The current cost of a [10(3)] survey for Taxis is about £13,000. Councils can pass this cost on to the trade, on the basis that it is in their interest to pay about £60 per licence for evidence to maintain their monopoly.

Could Councils do the same with PHC-OVP Assessment surveys, or would they have to bear the cost themselves? Unless trade bodies are prepared to accept that the proposed policy is protectionist, the Council would be left with the bill.

(h) Unification

Not a matter raised in the present Bill, but the possibility of replacing the present Taxi/PHC division with a single type of hire car has been mooted. If that ever happens, the time and money expended on separate limits for Taxis and PHCs will have been wasted.

Cl. 61 - Testing of private hire car drivers

North Ayrshire Council would be unlikely to use this new power - North Ayrshire Council does not even have a 'knowledge' test for Taxi Drivers, so why have one for PHC Drivers?

Cl. 62 - Exemptions from requirements of sections 10 to 21 of 1982 Act

(a) Repealing the '24-hour contract hire' exemption would be a good move as it could be used to facilitate avoidance. Local operators provide vehicles and drivers (both of which might be unlicensed) for contracts carrying patients to and from hospitals, or moving hospital staff between sites. These vehicles are carrying the public, but the Council might not have checked that they are roadworthy and properly insured. If a car is stopped carrying a passenger, and the driver asserts that he is simply fulfilling a contract, there is no quick way for the Police or the Council officer to verify that.

(b) What application of the new Regulation-making power is envisaged? What are the issues in England and Wales referred to by Delegated Powers Memorandum, Para. 36?

Para. 37 is:

"An example would be where a service is providing some kind of transport as an ancillary part of the wider service where the transport aspect is not the main focus."

What is meant by this?
Cls. 63-66 (various provisions re metal dealers)

The Council has no comment crime-prevention measures, except to point out that the repeal of the Metal Dealers’ Exemption Warrants has the advantage that it removes the need for the Council to deal with an Auditor's Certificate every 3 years and issue a Warrant. Since the trader does not have a Licence, there is no fee, so this work is done for free.

Cl. 67 - Licensing of theatres

The move from the Theatres Act 1968 to the 1982 Act is welcome.

Cl. 68 - Licensing of sexual entertainment venues

(a) The definition of 'sexual entertainment' (1982 Act [45A(3)]) covers the same ground that the alcohol licensing legislation already covers:

“‘adult entertainment’ means any form of entertainment which—

(a) involves a person performing an act of an erotic or sexually explicit nature; and

(b) is provided wholly or mainly for the sexual gratification or titillation of the audience.”

(The Licensing Conditions (Late Opening Premises) (Scotland) Regulations 2007, No. 336.) Those Regulations apply extra mandatory conditions to Premises Licences for late night venues.

There is no point in duplicating definitions given that the same Premises might both sell alcohol and provide SE.

The proposed amendment to the 1982 Act might simply refer to Adult Entertainment as defined in the Regulations. The Regulations might in turn be amended so that (b) in the definition might refer to ‘the audience or any part of the audience, including a single person’.

The 1982 Act should make clear that the provision of SE at any time is covered, lest there be any suggestion that, since the Regulations themselves are directed after 1.00 a.m., the SE rules also apply only to late night Premises.
(b) If the above definition is adopted, there would be no need for a separate definition of "display of nudity". [45A(4)] defines this separately for "woman" and "man", the latter excluding nipples. Instead of separately providing for men and women, allow for the fact that some people are Transgendered. The person who employed a male-to-female transsexual to display her nipples might claim that the performer was "really a man", especially if she had not registered a new gender under the Gender Recognition Act 2004.

(c) The new [45A(5)] is "Sexual entertainment is provided if (and only if) it is provided (or allowed to be provided) by or on behalf of the organiser." What if the owner of the venue tries to distance himself from the event by saying that all he is doing is providing a venue where customers may act (like 'karaoke') or supposedly 'self-employed' performers operate?

(d) The new [45A(7)(b)] entitles Scottish Ministers to exclude specified places from being SEV. Suppose that the Council has already decided that the appropriate number of SEVs is nil. By re-classifying, the Ministers have overruled the Council. Suppose the Council has already dealt with an Application for specific Premises, and has refused it. If an Order is then made reclassifying them (e.g. saying that the activities are not SE after all), the Premises can operate even though local Members have said they should not. The Delegated Powers Memorandum, Para. 49 indicates that the power would be used to exempt Premises which Ministers thought should not be covered by the new system. If local Members have already applied their minds to a specific proposal, why should Ministers be able to overrule them?

(e) The same comment applies to the further Order-making power in the new [45A(11)].

(f) The new [45A(9)] allows the unlicensed use of Premises for up to 3 times in a year. Exemptions are inconsistent with the idea that the Council can resolve, in advance, that there should be no SE in any locality. If there was an exemption, the public and Councillors might discover that, despite the Council having prohibited SE, it was happening anyway.

(g) The new [45B] allows the Council to Resolve to adopt SE licensing. However, the mere fact that the Council is considering such a Resolution - even it is likely that there will be a NIL limit - might attract Press coverage saying that the Council is 'allowing lap-dancing'. Would it not be better to have the Act provide that all SE is prohibited unless the individual Council has resolved to adopt a licensing scheme, in which case particular Premises may only operate under and in accordance with a Licence specifically granted by the Council?

(h) At present, the grounds for refusal of a Sex Shop (Sch. 2, Para. 9(5)) are (briefly)

(a) the Applicant is unsuitable;

(b) the business would be carried on for someone who would himself be refused;

(c) the number of Sex Shops in the locality is equal to or exceeds the number which the Council consider is appropriate for that locality (which could be nil – Para. 9(6))

(d) the Licence would be inappropriate having regard to the locality’s character.

The proposed 1982 Act, Sch. 2, Para. 9(5A) renders it difficult for a Council to rely on (c). The new provision is:

"For the purposes of sub-paragraph (5)(c), a local authority must—

(a) from time to time determine the appropriate number of sexual entertainment venues for their area and for each relevant locality, and

(b) publicise the determination in such manner as they consider appropriate."

Therefore, if the Council adopted a licensing scheme, it would also have to carry out a survey (like the 'overprovision assessment' from the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005) and review it. How would residents of a locality be likely to react if they were told:

"The Council has decided that your area is suitable for a SEV. There’s no application yet, and there may never be, but if there is the Council will probably grant it (assuming the Applicant is suitable)?

Is there not an overlap between the locality provision in (c) and the character provision in (d)?

If the Council has already Resolved under [45] to allow such licensing, it could be said that the issue of principle has been dealt with already. However, while the broad issue of principle has been decided, it is still for the Committee to consider the particular locality; the Committee could still be consistent with the ‘somewhere’ Resolution by saying
‘there might be sex shops somewhere in the Council area’

‘there will be no sex shop/SEV here.’

(i) ‘relevant locality’: Unlike other 'locality' provisions, where the Board or Council can determine for itself what localities there should be, the 1982 Act excludes discretion, as Para. 9(7) is:

"In this Paragraph “the relevant locality” means—

(a) in relation to premises, the locality where they are situated; and

(b) in relation to a vehicle, vessel or stall, any locality where it is desired to use it as a sex shop."

What should be the sequence of events? - The locality depends on the particular application, but localities must also be assessed prior to there being any application.

Cl. 69 - Deemed grant of applications

The new [3(4B)] is:

"A variation of the terms of a licence deemed to have been granted under subsection (4) is to have effect for the remaining period of the licence."

The 1982 Act allows for three alterations to a Licence, not one:

(a) Notification of material change (including change of Day-to-Day Manager): Para. 9(1) and 9(3)

(b) Consent for Alterations: Para. 9(2) (called in North Ayrshire Council ‘Amendment’)

(c) Variation (Para. 10)

The word "variation" only covers (c). The list in (5B) would have to include (b).

Similarly the list in [45C(9)] would have to include Sch. 2, Para. 14(2).
Cl. 70.- Procedure for hearings

This is all unnecessary. Licensing Authorities have been holding hearings under the 1982 Act without the need for external instruction for 30 years, and the Courts have not been flooded with Appellants alleging 'breach of natural justice'.

The 'Further Options' Consultation asked (Q.31):

"Should the Scottish Government provide additional guidance or regulation for Licensing Boards on the conduct of hearings and why?"

North Ayrshire Licensing Board replied:

"No. Each Board has its own priorities, so it would be impossible to lay down a single procedure. Provided that all Boards afford all parties a fair hearing, the details should be left to the Boards."

Comments on the new Sch. 1, Para. 18A (similar comments can be made of the new Sch. 2, Para 24A re Sex Shops and SEVs):

(a) (notices): The Act already specifies that certain notice must be given to Applicants etc..

(b) ("rules of evidence"): In licensing it makes no sense to talk of "rules of evidence". Committees are not Courts, and do not put witnesses on oath:

"7. The scope of the discretion conferred on the Committee by para 11 of Schedule 1 to the 1982 Act is wide. They are entitled to proceed on any type of material which has a bearing on the question which they have to decide, and it is for them to decide on its sufficiency and quality, and the appropriate weight to be given to it. Accordingly, it was for the Committee to decide whether to proceed on the basis of the information provided by the Chief Constable's representative. The fact that the information included hearsay evidence did not impinge on that discretion."

Inner House in Ferguson v Dundee City Council [2006] ScotCS CSIH 51 (emphasis added)

The Bill's phrase looks as though it was copied from the unused enabling power in Licensing (S) Act 2005 [133(3)(b)]. That power has never been used and probably never will be, given that the reason for it (the Stated Case Appeal procedure) was abandoned.
It is very rare for a Board to hear 'evidence', in the sense of testimony - Boards deal with ex parte statements. This 2005 Act provision can be explained by the appeal system originally envisaged by the 2005 Act (Stated Case) which was based on the model of an appeal from a summary criminal Court. It was superseded by CJL(S)A 2010, which returned to a Summary Application procedure as used in the 1976 Act and other licensing legislation. The Summary Application Rules do not prescribe forms of evidence to be used in court (and would not be expected to, given that procedural rules would not be expected to alter the general law of evidence).

(c) (representation): the Convenor can already make a decision as to whether or not the person who attends the hearing, if not the party, is suitably authorised.

(d) (timing): The Act already specifies a schedule.

(e) (expenses): Licensing Authorities have never had the power to award expenses, except that the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 entitled a Board to award expenses against an Objector or Review Applicant whose complaint was deemed "frivolous or vexatious" [22(6)-(8), 36(6)-(8)], although neither provision states how the fees are to be calculated - the tables of fees for court actions or solicitors have no application. How would these new fees be assessed?

Cl. 71 - Conditions for Part 3 licences

(Part 3 means Sex Shops and SEVs). No comment.

Cl. 72 - Civic licensing standards officers

There is no objection to this, but the question can be asked "What does this provision add to the existing law?"

Many Councils already have an officer who can exercise the existing powers of an "Authorised Officer of the Licensing Authority" under [5, 11]. The existing officer will already, as part of his job, mediate, supply information, and endeavour to secure compliance with licence conditions - much as a "Licensing Standards Officer" under the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 would do. If there is a case to bring to the Committee, he can already bring it. If it is not envisaged that the new CLSO should be a different person from the existing AALO, what is the point of this provision?
Cl. 73 - Electronic communications under the 1982 Act

A welcome provision.

(a) See comment to Cl. 69: the list in Para. 16A(1) omits applications under Paras. 9(2) and 10.

(b) There should be a provision that if a person has used electronic communication to make an Application etc., then he is deemed to have consented to the Licensing Authority also using such means to communicate with him at any time thereafter at the same email address.

(c) Delete (4)(b). Requests for Statements of Reasons are either made orally at the time or by email, neither indicating the consent of the party to receive S/R by email. I send S/R by email saying 'I would not propose to send a hard copy, but will do so if you say you cannot read it.” No-one has asked for a hard copy. If (4)(b) is enacted I’d have to go back to old-fashioned letters.

(d) The proposed presumption of delivery in Para. 16A(7) is the second working day after the day on which it was sent. Why not assume that electronic communications arrive on the same day? e.g. Ordinary Cause Rule 15.2(3)(a)(i) says that personal intimation or fax transmission of a Motion is effective "on the day of transmission or delivery where it is given before 5.00 p.m. on any day”.

Cls. 74-79

Part 4 (General) - no comments.

Other Matters

Other matters might be considered for inclusion in the Bill. Some of these suggestions were made in the response to the ‘Further Options’ Consultation but were not progressed.

1. The training requirements for Board Members

The Parliament might consider repealing the requirement for repeated training in Sch. 1, Para. 11(2)(b):
"(b) if the member is re-elected, the period of 3 months beginning with the day on which the member is re-elected."

Why should a Member who has already been trained be re-trained just because he is re-elected? At present, Members who were on the Board before the Local Government election must be re-trained, even if:

(a) they have been on the Board for years, or

(b) they were trained after the last significant amendment to Licensing Law (1st October 2011), (having been elected to fill a vacancy).

Repeated training is unnecessary and is a waste of time and money.

The Parliament might consider removing the obligation of re-training where the Member was part of the previous Board. If ‘old’ Members are to be retrained, perhaps the requirement might be linked to the individual dates of their election: the newest Member of the North Ayrshire Board had been trained in early 2010: what advantage was there in him being unable to sit after the 2012 election (given that he and the other Members were properly trained the day before the election of the new Board but none of them could act the day after the election).

After the local elections in May 2012, all the Boards in Scotland were elected in accordance with 2005 Act, Sch. 1, Para. 2. On the election of the new Board, the previous Board ceased to exist: Para. 4(1)(a)(ii). Each member required to be trained within 3 months, whether he was truly a new Member or he was on the previous Board (Para. 11(2)), and he was not to take part in any proceedings of the Board until he had produced to the Clerk evidence of training: Para. 11(3).

This meant that the new Board could not transact any business until a quorum of Members were trained. Since every Board in Scotland would be seeking training places at much the same time, there was a possibility that there might be some Boards unable to transact the non-delegable Para. 10(2) business for a period of time.

This absence of a Board would have undesirable consequences:

(a) Licence Applicants might be unable to get the grant or Major Variation of Premises Licences, or where hearings were necessary, the grant of Transfers, Occasional Licences, Extended Hours, or Personal Licences;

(b) Review Applicants would be unable to have hearings;

(c) the Police would be unable to seek a Closure Order under [97].
Also, given Para. 11(4), Members, whether newly-elected or re-elected, would cease to part of the Board three months after election. There is the possibility that a Member might not acquire the qualification in time, e.g. because he might have to resit an examination or a training course cannot be arranged in time. The North Ayrshire Board has 10 Members so it could have found after 3 months of existence that it failed to have the quorum of 5 prescribed by Para. 12(1), and there would be no point in the untrained Members then being trained since they would require to re-elected by the Council, and their training would only count if it post-dated their re-election.

Would it be possible to allow a temporary Board to operate for (say) 6 months after the election of the new Board, consisting of such Members who had been on the 'old' Board and were therefore suitably qualified, or for the quorum for all meetings happening in the first 6 months of the 'new' Board to be lower than would otherwise be expected?

This issue was raised by the 'Further Options' Consultation (Q.50) and North Ayrshire Licensing Board replied:

"No. We were aware of the risk but fortunately all our Members obtained training qualifications at the first sitting, so we had no quorum problem. Had this not happened hardship could have occurred. The 'new' Board was elected at the Council’s First Statutory Meeting on 16 May 2012. Until such time as a quorum was qualified, it could not transact business.

The 'old' Board was of course no longer available, so even though those Members had been qualified, they could not sit.

Since all ‘new’ Members were qualified, the next Board dealt with:

(a) 6 Review Applications (4 from the Police making various crime and disorder complaints, one a noise complaint from a neighbour, and a Section 44 Review following a conviction),

(b) 7 non-minor-variations

(c) 3 Premises Licence Grants (2 ‘full’, 1 provisional)

(d) 1 Personal Licence Application

(e) 1 Occasional Licence Application.

Had there been no Board, none of this could have been dealt with for weeks or months. If the Police had wanted a Closure Order there would have been no Board to grant it.
Our Board has 10 members. The quorum is 5. 3 of the 10 were Members of the pre-election Board. 7 were newly-elected.

It might have helped if Members who had been on the pre-election Board did not have to requalify. They were qualified on 15 May but not 16 May, so they could not transact business – how was the public interest served?

It also cost the Council money in paying for training people who were already trained."

2. Supplementary Licensing Policy Statement

Amend the requirement to re-publicise fully any proposal for a Supplementary LPS.

The existing structure is cumbersome and has never been used in North Ayrshire. Therefore the only changes to LPS are at the 3-yearly review. If the life of a LPS is to be increased to 4 years to match Council elections, there might be more occasions to draft a Supplementary LPS in the interval.

At present, when the Board intends to make any change to its LPS, no matter how minor, the whole consultation process must be repeated, e.g. for its current LPS North Ayrshire consulted with numerous bodies:

(a) Local Licensing Forum
(b) NHS Ayrshire & Arran
(c) Chief Constable
(d) Fire & Rescue
(e) All Community Councils in North Ayrshire
(f) Community Justice Authority
(g) Alcohol and Drug Partnership
(h) The Council's Senior Manager Building Standards
(i) The Council's Senior Environmental Health & Trading Standards Manager

In addition, a Public Notice summarising the purpose of the LPS and inviting comments was published on the Board's website. The Board had few representations, all from bodies and none from the general public.

Would it not be sufficient if the Board published, on its website, a notice:

(a) setting out the proposed changes,
(b) stating a period for representations, and
(c) stating that if there were no representations within that period the LPS would be held as so modified (it would then be re-published on the website), but if there were any representations these would be considered at a Meeting and the Board would then decide what modification, if any, was appropriate to its LPS.

3. Errors

(a) Correct typo: "identified" is spelled "indentified" in both of the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Act's ASB provisions [22(2A), 24A(1)];

(b) Correct typo: "ground for review" is rendered as "ground of review" in [2005 Act 36(5)(b), 37(4)(b)];

(c) Amend [29(4)]. The intent was to apply some of the procedures for Granting Premises Licences to 'Major' Variations (there is no formal title for these, and they are simply not 'Minor Variations'). The provisions applied are:

- [21(1)] - Board to notify neighbours etc.
- [21(2)] - Board must supply copy Application to those persons.
- [22] - Objections and Representations

However CJL(S)A 2010 [183(2)] amended the 2005 Act in two ways:

1. the Police were entitled to make ASB representations - new [22(2A)];
2. the Board was also given a power itself to request an ASB Report from the Chief Constable - [24A].

However, power (2) relates only to the original Premises Licence application, and not a later Variation application.

4. Private Proceedings

Amend 2005 Act, Sch. 1, Para. 12 so as to increase the number of situations where the Board may act in private:

(a) where a party to the proceedings requests a private hearing;

(b) where the Board resolves otherwise, using procedures similar to Schedule 7A to the Local Government (Scotland) Act 1973
(c) where the Board carries out the preliminary consideration of whether or not to make a [37] Proposal (If a Proposal is made, the later hearing will of course be in public).

The Further Options Consultation asked (Q.33)

"Should Board meetings be held in public, in their entirety?"

North Ayrshire Licensing Board replied:

"No. In most cases the situation should remain that proceedings, other than deliberation, should be in public, but an exception might be made:

(a) where a party to the proceedings requests a private hearing;

(b) where the Board resolves otherwise, using procedures similar to Schedule 7A to the Local Government (Scotland) Act 1973.

Examples:

(a) the Police brought a review against Premises and narrated numerous incidents. This was followed by a newspaper story with the headline 'Pub was worst in Ayrshire'. The Licence-holder contended that many of the complaints had nothing to do with her, e.g. she herself was the victim of vandalism and racial abuse. While the Board did impose sanctions, it recognised that while the Police had concerns (the headline summarised their view), it did not follow that the licence-holder was wholly at fault. Therefore the sanctions were not as serious as a reader of the newspaper headline might expect.

(b) An applicant for a Personal Licence had a conviction for a sexual offence involving his daughters. His lawyer requested a private hearing, and when it was explained that this was not possible he withdrew the Application rather than publicise the conviction. If he had not done so, not only would he be identified, but there would be a risk the victims would be identified.

In both cases, a public hearing could be freely reported in the Press."

Suggestion (c) arises from later experience. The preliminary discussion takes place in public, at a meeting of the Board, but our practice is deliberately to omit a Report from the Agenda and instead ask the Convenor to introduce as 'Any Other Business' a Briefing Note which is handed out to Members only. The Briefing Note sets out the information which the Clerk thinks may lead to the conclusions that a "ground for review" exists, and that a public Review hearing should later take place. That way the Members know what the circumstances are but the Press do not: if the Report was public from the start, the Board might decide to take no action, but nonetheless the alleged circumstances might be reported.

5. Amend the Premises Licence 'terminating events' [28]

Include among the terminating events the PLH's loss of the right to occupy the Premises. Although it is clear that this would have been the consequence under earlier legislation, the argument has been advanced that the 2005 Act provides a comprehensive code and that the earlier caselaw has been superseded.

6. Vice-Convenor

The 2005 Act does not recognise the office of Vice-Convenor, but many Boards have one. Amend Sch. 1, Para. 6 so that the Vice-Convenor can act in the absence of the Convenor, without a Para. 6(5) election.

7. Consolidation

This is a general comment about the style of legislation, not only in the licensing field, where piece-meal changes are repeatedly made.

One of the criticisms of the 1976 Act was that it had accumulated so many amendments that it was difficult to follow. The 1976 Act lasted 30 years, and the 2005 Act's complexity has surpassed that in under 10 years.

It is not easy to comment on Bills. If practitioners who use the legislation daily have difficulty following the law, what hope have the general public?

For example:

(a) Cl. 46(4):

"In section 74 (determination of personal licence application)—

(a) in subsection (2), after paragraph (c) insert—

(b) subsection (5A) insert—

“(5AA) If— ..."
Why repeatedly amend an Act - why not repeal and re-enact? The original subsection (5) was in the 2005 Act. Subsections (5A) and (5B) were inserted by CJL(S)A 2010. The Bill inserts (5AA) between them.

(b) Bill, Schedule 2, Para. 4(2):

"4(2) In Schedule 1 (licensing: further provisions as to the general system)—

(a) in paragraph 5—

(i) the sub-paragraph (2A) which was inserted by section 172(6)(d) of the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Act 2010 is renumbered as sub-paragraph (2ZA),"

This is an amendment of an amendment.

8. Transfer

One of the 'trigger' events for [34] transfer of a Premises Licence is where:

"the Premises Licence Holder, being an individual— ... becomes incapable within the meaning of section 1(6) of the Adults with Incapacity (Scotland) Act 2000 (asp 4)." [34(3)(a)(ii)]

This provision is unworkable and should be repealed.

The person who can apply is (see The Licence Transfer (Prescribed Persons) (Scotland) Regulations 2007 No. 34, Reg. 4.):

(a) any person with Power of Attorney by the Licence Holder; or

(b) any person authorised to act on behalf of the Licence Holder by virtue of the 2000 Act.

(1) It is not stated whether (b) means only a "Financial Guardian" or includes "Welfare Guardian", or even a hospital manager (The Reg: simply says "any person authorised to act on behalf of the Licence Holder by virtue of the [Act]";)

(2) In practice the Guardian/Manager would rarely be able to apply: the 28 day period available for Transfer runs from when the Licence Holder became incapable, and so that period will have expired long before the Guardianship proceedings are concluded with an appointment. It would be necessary for the Applicant for Guardianship to seek an early interim appointment, and even then the 28 days is likely to have expired long before anyone even lodges the Guardianship application with the Court, since it would not be lodged until the Applicant has obtained suitable medical evidence.

9. Disabled Access and Facilities Statement

In the 2005 Act [20(6)] was introduced by CJL(S)A 2010 but has never been commenced. An Applicant for a Premises Licence would be required to lodge a DAFS.

(a) is the provision ever likely to be commenced?

(b) if so, what if anything should a Board do with a DAFS:

   (i) if the Applicant says 'I do not comply with the DDA and never will'?

   (ii) if the Applicant said, at Application, that he would provide such-and-such facilities within 3 months, but then failed to do so.

The Scottish Government said in correspondence:

“There are no further provisions in the 2005 Act detailing what a Licensing Board should do with such a statement or what impact the statement should have on the determination of the application. ...

The statement is intended to inform the public as to the nature of the disabled facilities at the Premises - it has no bearing on the obligations of the applicant under the Equality Act 2010.

The amended section 20(2) does not require an applicant to confirm whether or not they are in compliance with disability discrimination legislation. There is no requirement in the amended section 20(2) for an applicant to make any commitment to provide disabled facilities at some point in the future. I would remind you that under section 27(7)(c) Licensing Boards may not impose conditions that relate to a matter which is regulated under another enactment.”

So what is the provision for?

10. Relevant Offences

The suggestion that it would be too difficult to remove the concept of 'relevant' convictions from the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 is mistaken. On the contrary, it would be simple. Apart from replacing the many uses of the phrase, the S.S.I. could be revoked.

(a) The 2005 Act's approach has been rendered redundant by the introduction of 'fit and proper': if any information is relevant to the 'fit and proper' question, why should it matter whether a conviction is 'relevant' or not?

(b) Even under the existing law if a conviction is not 'relevant' it might still be the basis of a "Refusal Recommendation":

- Premises Licence Application - [24(8)] (although there is a narrow 'window')
- Transfer Application - [33(7)]
- Personal Licence Application - [73(4)]

There is no Refusal Recommendation available where the Police confirm a conviction under [44]: if the conviction was 'relevant' their notice will be followed by a [37] Review Proposal, so the absence of a specific recommendation power would not be a serious omission, but if the offence is not 'relevant' in the first place then there will be no notice.

(c) The concentration on convictions means that the Board does not have access to the information which a Licensing Committee would have. For example, where there has been a non-court disposal. Suppose the Procurator Fiscal tells a suspected offender:

"I am satisfied that the circumstances reported merit prosecution, but I am giving you the opportunity to discharge your liability to prosecution if you pay £x" (a 'Fiscal Fine' or Conditional Offer under Criminal Procedure (S) Act 1995 [302]), and the offender pays £x.

That is not a conviction, yet a Licensing Authority under CG(S)A 1982 would be quite entitled to infer that the allegation had been admitted and proved. Why can't the Board do this?

(d) See comments above about the possibility of 'rules of evidence' and the reference to the Ferguson case (re Bill Clause 70).

Once it is accepted that any information, even uncorroborated hearsay from an anonymous witness, has the potential to carry weight, then it ceases to be a matter for any Court: the attribution of weight to factors for and against is for the Licensing Authority. There are many cases supporting this view, e.g.

Ranachan v Renfrew District Council, 1991 SLT 625 [2D]
Latif v Motherwell District Licensing Board, 1994 SLT 414 [1D]
Middleton v Dundee City Council, 2001 SLT 287 [ED]
Mejury v Renfrewshire Council, 2001 SC 426 [ED]

It might well be commented that uncorroborated hearsay from an anonymous witness should carry little weight, but that is a question for the Licensing Authority. The question of law "is this conviction 'relevant' ?" should be unimportant.

(e) The Scottish Parliament itself has already accepted the idea that uncorroborated hearsay from an anonymous witness can be taken into account. See Licensing (S) Act 2005, [22(2A)]:

“The appropriate Chief Constable may, under subsection (1)(b), make representations concerning a Premises Licence application by giving to the Licensing Board a report detailing—

(a) any cases of antisocial behaviour identified by constables as having taken place on, or in the vicinity of, the Premises,

(b) any complaints or other representations made to constables concerning antisocial behaviour on, or in the vicinity of, the Premises.”

The Board in (b) would be hearing information given to Police officers by unidentified members of the public - for all the officers knew, the "complaints or other representations" might be made maliciously, and there would be no way of the Board determining who made the representations or of assessing their credibility and reliability. The same might be said of the informants who give the Police 'intelligence'.

(f) Although the licence-holder and the convicting court are obliged to report convictions to the Board, the Police do not even have the right to do so, although they are the most reliable source of information for Boards, both:

(1) because they are likely to do it at all, and

(2) when they do their information will probably be accurate.

Licence-holders often fail to report convictions, whether due to ignorance or intentionally, and Courts almost never do (the only occasion when North Ayrshire received notice was in a case where it happened that the Assessor in the Court was himself a former Board solicitor).

(g) The Act's approach rests on a Scottish Statutory Instrument from 2007 which has never been updated: The Licensing (Relevant Offences) (Scotland)
Regulations 2007 No. 513. It would always be difficult to compile and maintain a comprehensive list of enactments, since new ones are made all the time, but this difficult task has not been attempted and the deficiencies of the existing SSI are simply increasing with time. The Police in practice report everything as 'relevant' anyway. The SSI consists of a seemingly random sample of statutes with inexplicable inconsistencies and omissions. Sometimes whole Acts are included as 'relevant', sometimes only a few sections (omitting other provisions).

Examples:

(1) Offences against the Police

Offences of assaulting or obstructing officers were prosecuted under the Police (S) Act 1967 [41], and are now charged under the Police and Fire Reform (Scotland) Act 2012 ([90(1)] assault Police or staff; [90(2)] resist, obstruct or hinder Police or staff). Neither is listed as 'relevant'.

(2) Statutory Offences based on Common Law crimes

If a statutory offence appears in the Regs. and that statute has since been repealed and replaced, then on ordinary interpretation rules the ‘new’ offence would also be ‘relevant’.

However, this does not apply when a common law crime is duplicated by a statute, e.g. Breach of the Peace at common law is ‘relevant’ (Schedule, Para. 48(a)). Circumstances which would once have led to a BOP charge are now often prosecuted under Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Act 2010 [38] ("Threatening or abusive behaviour"). The statutory offence is not ‘relevant’ - the Regs. have not been amended to cover the 2010 Act.

Reg. 2(b) does not help. This only applies to a statutory offence where the statute has since been repealed. A statutory offence would only be relevant if

(i) imprisonment followed (Reg. 2(d)), or

(ii) it was an offence “inferring personal violence” (Para. 1) - maybe Police assault would count, but resisting arrest is doubtful.

(iii) it was a “sexual offence” (Para. 2). Some things which might have once have been charged as common law "Breach of the Peace" are now specific statutory offences, and are defined as ‘sexual offences’, e.g. the ‘peeping tom’ in Raffaelli v. Heatly, 1949 S.L.T. 284; 1949 J.C. 101 might now by prosecuted under Sexual Offences (Scotland) Act 2009, [9] (voyeurism), [26] (voyeurism towards a young child), or [36] (voyeurism towards an older child).

(3) Breach of Bail and other offences against 'administration of justice'
Although some common law 'administration of justice' offences are listed in Para. 47:

(c) attempting to pervert the course of justice;

(d) attempting to defeat the ends of justice;

(f) contempt of court;

there are no references to the comparable statutes:

- failing to answer an undertaking given to Police on release from custody (commonly used for minor crimes - effectively a promise to attend Court) - Criminal Procedure (S) Act 1995 [22]; and

- breaking bail by not appearing in Court, e.g. Bail (S) Act 1980 [3(1)(a)], replaced by Criminal Procedure (S) Act 1995 [27(1)(a)].

Since these are not 'relevant offences', the equivalent in England and Wales ("Failure to surrender to custody at appointed time") would not be admissible as 'foreign offences'.

Particular provisions of the Schedule to the SSI

"6. An offence under section 1 of the Trade Descriptions Act 1968 (c. 29) (false trade description of goods) in circumstances where the goods in question are or include alcohol."

(a) Wouldn't offences not involving alcohol be equally concerning to a Board? Put shortly, the conviction shows the person is dishonest. What he was selling does not matter. Why should he not be regarded as 'not fit and proper'?

(b) How would a Board know what the 'goods is question' were, as this would not be noted on an ordinary schedule of previous convictions? The Police letter might repeat the details of the Charge, but even that is not guaranteed. If the Police themselves institute proceedings, e.g. by charging assault, they will probably have a record of the particulars - who, where, when, what - but sometimes the Police themselves cannot say due to the lapse in time.

With many offences the Police themselves are not the Reporting Authority so they might have no information beyond the bare S.C.R.O. details.
Without details, how can anyone determine that the case related to alcohol (Paras. 6, 30, 32) or (Para. 19(a)) Public Entertainment Licence? Surely the Licensee would have to be given the benefit of the doubt?

(c) Not listed are breaches of Regs made under the Food Safety Act 1990: The General Food Regulations 2004/3279; see Regulation (EC) No. 178/2002. Art. 18 of the EC Regs. makes it illegal to refill a lot-marked bottle (as this prevents traceability: all bottles are lot-marked).

"19. An offence under any of the following provisions of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 (c. 45)–

(a) section 7 (offences), so far as relating to public entertainment licences under section 41;"

Why only PELs? Similar comment to Para. 6.

"19(g) section 57 (being in or on buildings etc. with intent to commit theft);"

Section 58 (so-called 'KT' or the old 'Powers' offence - 'known thief in possession of tools') is omitted, yet it is even greater evidence of dishonesty than Section 57: the person is a repeat offender.

"28. An offence under any of the following provisions of the Road Traffic Act 1988 (c. 52)–

(a) section 3A (causing death by careless driving while under the influence of drink or drugs);

(b) section 4 (driving etc. a vehicle when under the influence of drink or drugs);

(c) section 5 (driving etc. a vehicle with alcohol concentration above prescribed limit);

(d) section 178 (taking motor vehicle without authority, etc.)."
1. Dangerous and careless driving [1 - 3] - should Boards overlook serious criminal offences such as causing death by careless driving because the offender was not drunk?

2. Refusing to give a drinking and driving specimen [6-7] is perhaps more serious than actually being over the limit - typically being committed by drivers who are both over the limit and who are trying to obstruct the Police by refusing a test (common law ‘attempting to pervert’ is relevant, but the statutory equivalent is not).

3. failure to have MOT, licence or insurance [47, 87, 143]; and

4. failing to report accidents [170] (although ‘attempting to pervert’ is relevant)

Are many of these not an indication that the offender is dishonest and regards compliance with the law as of little consequence? Where a Licensing Authority formed such a conclusion, and accordingly held that a Taxi Driver was not ‘fit and proper’, the Inner House did not interfere (Middleton v Dundee City Council, 2001 SLT 287).

30. An offence under either of the following provisions of the Food Safety Act 1990 (c. 16) in circumstances where the food in question is or includes alcohol—

(a) section 14 (selling food or drink not of the nature, substance or quality demanded);

(b) section 15 (falsely describing or presenting food or drink).

See comments (a) & (b) re Para. 6.

32. An offence under section 92(1) or (2) of the Trade Marks Act 1994 (c. 26) (unauthorised use of trade mark, etc. in relation to goods) in circumstances where the goods in question are or include alcohol.

See comments (a) & (b) re Para. 6.

33. An offence under any of the following provisions of the Criminal Law (Consolidation) (Scotland) Act 1995 (c. 39)—

(d) section 47 (prohibition of the carrying of offensive weapons);

(e) section 49 (offence of having in public place article with blade or point);
(f) section 49A (offence of having article with blade or point (or offensive weapon) on school premises).

What about obstructing a Police search for such weapons - surely as objectionable as the possession offence itself? The offence of obstructing a drugs search is considered 'relevant': [23] MDA 1971 (listed in Paragraph 9(f)).

43. An offence under section 46 of the Gambling Act 2005 (c. 19) (invitation to gamble).

[46] creates various offence of causing or permitting a child or young person to gamble, or sending him info or adverts about gambling. However the principal unlicensed gambling offences in [33] and [37] of the GA 2005 are not 'relevant'.

47. [Common Law crimes] (g) prison breaking.

Is this ever prosecuted at Common Law? The offence under the Prisons Act 1952 [49] (being 'unlawfully at large') is not listed.

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

50. What are the consequences of operating the new licensing regime using the definitions set out at section 68 of the Bill?

- 'sexual entertainment venue'
- 'audience'
- 'financial gain'
- 'organiser'
- 'premises'
- 'sexual entertainment', and
- 'display of nudity'

51. The Bill specifies that a venue hosting sexual entertainment on three occasions or less within a 12 month period would not be treated as a sexual entertainment venue: does this have any unintended consequences?

We note the position of violence against women groups, who wish to see an end to the existence of sexual entertainment venues. It is the view of AFS that sexual entertainment and the sale of alcohol should be licensed separately, but we would like to see more robust regulation of sexual entertainment venues as a step towards their elimination. We do not agree with proposals to exempt venues hosting sexual entertainment on three or fewer occasions within a 12 month period from licensing requirements. If activity causes sufficient harm so as to require to be licensed, the number of times that activity occurs should not be relevant.

1 Consultation on Regulation of Sexual Entertainment - Summary of Responses, Scottish Government, 2014
52. Local licensing authorities will be able to set the number of sexual entertainment venues in their area to below the existing level, or zero: are there any advantages or disadvantages to this approach?

53. The Bill relies mainly on the existing licensing regime for sex shops as set out in section 44 and Schedule 2 of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 (application, notification, objections and representations, revocation of licences etc., enforcement and appeals): is this mechanism adequate for the licensing of sexual entertainment venues - if not, please explain why?

54. Are there any barriers to licensing authorities operating the new licensing regime?
Alcohol Focus Scotland supports the proposal to separately licence sexual entertainment and the sale of alcohol. This will increase the regulatory requirements on sexual entertainment venues that sell alcohol. Sexual entertainment activities and the sale and consumption of alcohol each pose specific risks to society. It is therefore justifiable and appropriate that premises that offer both the sale of alcohol and sexual entertainment are subject to more extensive regulation than premises that sell alcohol alone.

We welcome the Scottish Government’s acknowledgement of the need to ensure the sexual entertainment and alcohol licensing systems are consistent. It is crucial that these systems are appropriately coordinated and that licensing boards are still informed by applicants and licence holders that sexual entertainment is to be provided on a licensed premises. A separate licensing scheme for sexual entertainment should not erode the responsibility of a licensing board to consider the general and specific risks of selling alcohol in a venue that offers sexual entertainment and to impose measures to minimise risk. For example, whilst alcohol does not cause domestic violence, evidence suggests that it can be a contributory factor. Evidence also indicates that controlling the availability of alcohol can limit and minimise alcohol-related problems, including violence. It is therefore legitimate for a licensing board, in seeking to promote the licensing objectives, to consider the imposition of additional conditions on licensed premises that offer sexual entertainment to reduce the risk of alcohol-related violence within the premises and outwith. Such conditions could include, inter alia, reduced licensed hours, restrictions on all promotional activity involving alcohol, and the use of CCTV.

2 Scottish Government letter to Local Government and Regeneration Committee, 1 September 2014, qu. 68
Background of White Ribbon Scotland

The White Ribbon Campaign is an international movement to engage men in tackling violence against women, which began in Canada in 1991. The movement now exists in over 60 countries across the world and an informal steering group was formed in Scotland in 2006 to oversee White Ribbon campaigning, with White Ribbon Scotland registered as a Scottish Charity in 2010. We work with non-perpetrating men to tackle violence against women. We stress that although not all men are perpetrators, we live in a society where women do not have the same equality as men and, as a consequence of this inequality, are victims of gendered violence. The White Ribbon Scotland campaign seeks to engage with men and boys to tackle violence against women by challenging the gender inequality which underpins it. Since 2010, White Ribbon Scotland has campaigned nationally and locally, delivering training in partnership with local authorities, statutory agencies and in schools to raise awareness of the prevalence and nature of men’s violence against women, challenge sexist attitudes, reconsider men’s own behaviours and promote healthy masculinity. Over 2200 members of the public have taken the online pledge to never commit, condone or remain silent about violence against women.

Summary on our position

Sexual Entertainment Venues (SEVs) should not exist in a Scotland free of violence against women, and regulation on behalf of the state condones their existence. Lap dancing is a form of commercial sexual exploitation and therefore a form of violence against women. This is recognised by both the White Ribbon Scotland Campaign and Scottish Government therefore SEVs, which predominantly host lap-dancing and related activities, provide a forum for the perpetration of violence against women first and foremost. Furthermore the prevalence of such establishments are a result of gender inequality, the root cause of violence against women. SEVs normalise and legitimise the objectification and commodification of women, therefore perpetuating gender inequality.

If SEVs are to exist then regulation would be a means of harm reduction. We are therefore in favour of a new system which regulates SEVs, rather than the current system which consider sexual entertainment as an aspect of alcohol licensing.

Q1: Should sexual entertainment and the sale of alcohol be licensed separately? If so, what impact, if any, would a parallel regime for sexual entertainment venues have on alcohol licensing?

Yes, there should be separate licenses. Currently parallel licenses exist elsewhere, for example a cinema require license to show films (Cinemas Act 1985) and a license to sell alcohol (2005 Act). If there is to be licensing of sexual entertainment venues it is important that specific safeguards are to be maintained as a condition of the license.
Q2: Do you agree that sexual entertainment premises should be licensed separately from other forms of public entertainment?

Yes. By licensing SEVs in the same way as cafes, cinemas or restaurants etc scant consideration is given to the human harm involved. By using current licensing procedures it would contribute to the normalisation of commercial sexual exploitation which contributes to the concept that women are objects to be bought and sold. A clear distinction in licensing policy is necessary to fully take into account the potential harm caused to those exploited, and would allow for mechanisms which could analyse and subsequently challenge demand for SEVs.

Q3: Is the definition of an audience as ‘an audience of one’ appropriate?

Yes, if it refers to a performance where only one person is present. This would be the case with private dances, performed in a booth or other private place within the premises. In such a situation it seems difficult to ensure the immediate safety of women in SEVs, and also creates an opportunity where pressure can be exerted for a woman to provide sexual services.

Q4: Is the definition of sexual entertainment sufficiently clear? Are additional measures required to protect the position of artistic performances including, for example, exotic dancing?

Specific reference should be made to ‘nudity or partial nudity’. There have been cases where venues have exploited the language to avoid licensing conditions by encouraging women to wear see-through clothing, or revealing clothing such as g-strings.

There are no additional measures required to protect artistic performances.

Q5: Are there any other venues which should be exempt?

No, there are no other venues which should be exempt.

Q6: Is it appropriate that premises that are used for sexual entertainment on less than three occasions per year should be exempt from licensing?

No. Sexual entertainment should require a license before it can take place, regardless of the main purpose of the venue.

Q7: Is it appropriate that local authorities be allowed to decide that there should be no sexual entertainment venues in their area?

Yes. Considering a purpose of the proposed regulation would be to uphold local authorities’ right to exercise control and to serve their communities, there should be no limits in this regard. Having powers to set the limit of SEVs at ‘zero’ would be the only way that Local...
Consultation on the Regulation of Sexual Entertainment Venues

Authorities could prevent their existence, and in doing so prevent this form of violence against women from taking place within their areas.

Q8: Does the approach detailed above offer an adequate regulatory regime to provide control of sexual entertainment and provide local licensing authorities with the powers to determine the nature of the activities they wish to allow in their areas?

No. Local authorities should have the power to set the amount of venues to be licensed and to determine the activities that take place if a venue is granted a license. This regulatory framework does allow for this; however it is unlikely that sexual entertainment can be controlled purely through regulation. The existence of such establishments create an atmosphere which depicts women in a negative way and women who live or work near lap dancing clubs have reported harassment and verbal abuse by men who visit the clubs.

Q9: Are there any other issues which Scottish Ministers should take into account in considering possible legislation to provide for the licensing of sexual entertainment venues?

Yes. In relation to our position stated above the licensing of sexual entertainment venues contradicts the commitments within the national violence against women framework, Safer Lives: Changed Lives (2009). The foreword states that ‘We must continue to move forward and to take whatever action is necessary to achieve our ultimate aim; to create a Scotland in which violence against women no longer exists.’ Through regulating this ‘industry’ the state is legitimizing commercial sexual exploitation, and with it a prevalent form of violence against women.

In relation to the work of the White Ribbon Scotland Campaign it is crucial that men understand gender inequality to be a root cause of violence against women. There can be resistance when presenting commercial sexual exploitation as ‘violence against women’ due to the disparity between physical violence and exploitation. Both violence and exploitation are forms of abuse, whether committed by the individual or by the state, and this should certainly be at the forefront of any discussion of licensing of sexual entertainment venues.

8. Do you consider that the Bill has any implications for meeting Scotland’s climate change commitments? Please explain.

9. Do you consider that the Bill has any implications for meeting Scotland’s equality and/or human rights commitments? Please explain.

10. Do you consider that the Bill has any implications for preventative spending and/or public services reform? Please explain.
Alcohol licensing has the potential to prevent alcohol related harm. The system of alcohol licensing is used to mitigate the risks of harm associated with alcohol consumption by managing and controlling the availability of alcohol. We know that alcohol does lead to significant harm in Scotland. Empirical evidence shows that increasing access to alcohol, through more outlets and longer trading hours, is linked to a range of alcohol-related harms; the increased availability of alcohol has been linked to increased rates of harm.

Overall, the weight of evidence supports the conclusion that restrictions on the availability of alcohol can contribute to a reduction in alcohol-related problems. Investment in improving the effectiveness of the alcohol licensing system, particular in improving the pursuit of the licensing objectives, therefore has the potential to reduce the potential costs of alcohol-related harm that arise in other public services and the wider economy.

11. Do you consider that the Bill has any implications in relation to European Union issues? Please explain.

13. In what ways will the creation of an air weapons licensing system in Scotland contribute to preserving public order and safety, reducing crime and advancing public health policy?

14. Is there sufficient provision, or sufficient capacity to provide, suitable numbers of air weapons clubs across all areas of Scotland for use by registered air weapons owners/users?

15. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for personal/recreational use?
16. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those aged 14 to 17 who use air weapons?

17. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for commercial/professional reasons (for example: for pest control; as part of the tourist/hunting season; as part of fairs, paintballing centre, entertainment sector etc.)?

18. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for competitive sporting purposes?

19. Is it equitable for those applying for an air weapons certificate to pay a fee which cannot be refundable irrespective of whether a certificate is granted or not?
20. Will the air weapons licensing system have a positive or negative impact on other areas of the public sector in Scotland (eg. The work of local government, public agencies etc.)?

21. What, if any, might the unintended consequences of introducing an air weapons licensing system in Scotland be?

22. Do you have any other comments to make on air weapons licensing aspects of the Bill?

(Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

23. Is the current Scottish licensing regime, as set out in the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 and the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005, fit for purpose?

Overall, the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 set out to be a policy-led system for alcohol licensing and, in principle, has the potential to create a robust alcohol licensing system in Scotland. However, the act does not appear to be interpreted consistently across the local licensing boards. For example the ‘typing’ of licensed premises is somewhat objectively decided (e.g. night club versus on-sales without entertainment) and this can have an impact on the opening hours granted.

Furthermore, although difficult, it would be helpful to have more detailed guidance on the assessment and definition of alcohol license overprovision.

Locally there also appears to be differences of understanding and interpretations as to what each of the licensing objectives means, this is especially the case when it comes to protecting and improving public health. For example in one area, we have been told by the licensing board that before alcohol related harm can be considered there has to be evidence that it is connected to a specific premises. Whereas in another they consider the totality and capacity of premises when considering their duty to protect and improve public health.

Although the licensing objectives do not include an objective to promote the economy, alcohol applications are often considered in terms of the economic benefits they could bring to a local area.

24. Should a licensing system seek to regulate individual behaviour or communities of space (eg. ‘city space’ etc.)?

The licensing system should seek to regulate communities of space. Such an approach is consistent with the Scottish Government’s alcohol strategy, Changing Scotland’s Relationship with Alcohol: A Framework for Action, central to which is a ‘whole population approach’ to reducing alcohol harm, with alcohol policies aimed at the whole population rather than only dependent drinkers.

Whole population measures are important because despite a recent decline, alcohol consumption in the UK remains at historically high levels. A range of factors are likely to have contributed to this, but the interplay between the increased affordability, availability and promotion of alcohol provides a large part of the explanation. Restricting the sale of alcohol through the licensing system recognises that people’s behaviour is influenced by their environment. Physical environments can enable or constrain drinking behaviour, and a key means of supporting behaviour change is to change these environmental factors.

Communities of space can be regulated in terms of the licensing board’s oversight of the availability of alcohol in the community and their ability to reduce this availability through the refusal of license applications. Licensing boards when considering applications can consider the current availability of premises, in terms of number in a defined geography and across their board area, also the type, capacity and opening hours of those premises.

25. In what way should the licensing system in Scotland interact with the support the land use planning system, community planning and regeneration?

1 BBPA Statistical Handbook 2007
Alcohol licensing boards act completely independently of the rest of the local authority structure. As such all applications are considered on their own merit and the impact this may have on other agendas is not considered. This is how the act requires the licensing boards to function and as such if they were to start to consider other factors the current act would need to be amended accordingly.

Licensing decisions are therefore not currently informed by other council or partnership strategies but this would be helpful.

It is important that the licensing system in Scotland does not operate in a silo when making decisions about alcohol. There needs to be close interaction between alcohol licensing and community planning. Local authorities have Single Outcome Agreements with priorities that focus on addressing alcohol and drug use, and creating positive, healthy local environments for their citizens. It is critical that the alcohol licensing system in the local areas is recognised by all stakeholders, including the licensing board itself, to be a key component of this wider agenda, and that the licensing board’s policy statement complements the community planning strategy.

26. How does the licensing system in Scotland assist with the delivery of sustainable development and economic balanced areas?

Again with respect to the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 regulation of the availability of alcohol in local communities will reduce the economic impact of alcohol related harm not only in terms of hospital admissions years of potentially economically productive life lost but also in terms of sickness absence rates in the local economy and crime and disorder costs.

27. In what way does the licensing system in Scotland support health and planning, addressing health inequalities and public health wellbeing outcomes?
Alcohol licensing should work to improve health and wellbeing and reduce inequalities by regulating the availability of alcohol to reduce alcohol-related harm.

However, the principle of alcohol availability and the impact this has on consumption is not one generally accepted or understood by many local licensing board members. In addition immediate economic considerations often take precedence over the licensing objectives which if achieved would improve health and reduce inequalities.

[Text box]
31. In what ways will the re-introduction of the “fit and proper person” test assist with the implementation of the licensing objectives set out in the 2005 act?

32. Have there been any unintended consequences arising from the 2005 Act, for example, in rural areas or the economic regeneration of areas?

33. Which, if any, types of spent relevant offences should be required to be disclosed and what do you think the benefits of disclosure will be?

34. Do you have any other comments to make on the alcohol licensing aspects of the Bill?

We are concerned at the removal of the obligation placed on the board to consider the number and capacity of licensed premises in assessment of overprovision (Section 54) of the new Bill. We would argue that the existing level of alcohol availability in terms of number and capacity of licensed premises in a given locality is important evidence for consideration of overprovision in conjunction with information on levels of alcohol related harm. There is good evidence of an association between... outlet density and alcohol-related harm. Routine collection of this information may facilitate further understanding of this relationship.

In addition under Section 7 subsection 3 of the 2005 Act it may be useful to require that boards consider the level of alcohol related harm in their locality in their assessment of overprovision.

36. In what ways do customers, providers of taxi/private hire car services and local authorities benefit from the two-tier licensing regime for taxis and private hire cars?

37. The Government states that a radical overhaul of the current two-tier licensing regime would “clearly require a very high level of resource and would cause significant disruption for the trade, local authorities, the police and ultimately the travelling public”. What are your views on this and would the potential costs and disruptions outweigh any
38. Do the changes made by sections 60 (overprovision of private hire car licences) and 61 (testing of private hire car drivers) of the Bill strike the right balance in terms of introducing greater consistency while maintaining justifiable differences?

42. Removal of exemption warrant - do you wish to comment on the proposal to remove the exemption warrant system?

[Text box for response]
43. Removal of requirement to retain metal on-site - what impact will the proposal to remove the retention of metal requirement have on the enforcement of the licensing regime and prevention of criminal activities?

44. Forms of payment - what is your view on the proposal to go 'cashless' and is there merit in considering whether metal dealers could be allowed to operate using cash for only very small transactions, which could be limited to a certain number per month?
45. Forms of identification and record keeping:

In line with the Scrap Metal Dealers Act 2013, the Bill adds additional record keeping requirements to a metal dealer’s licence including recording the means by which a seller’s name and address was verified and retaining a copy of the document, and the method of payment and a copy of the payment document. The Bill will also require a metal dealer to record information in books with serially numbered pages or by means of an electronic device, and to keep separate records at each place of business. Such information and documents are to be kept for three rather than the current two years.

How important is it that the record keeping requirements reflect those in the Scrap Metal Dealers Act 2013, and do you agree with the Scottish Government that the proposed record keeping requirements are not unduly burdensome?
46. Mandatory and discretionary licensing requirements:

The Scottish Ministers can impose mandatory licensing requirements, such as those included in the Bill relating to record keeping and the identification of customers. In addition, local authorities can also attach discretionary requirements to licences in their areas.

Does the Bill get the balance right between mandatory and discretionary licensing requirements? Should the Bill include other mandatory conditions for obtaining a metal dealer’s licence, such as installing CCTV at metal dealers’ premises or in relation to labelling of metal and ‘forensic coding’?

Local Government and Regeneration Committee's Call for Evidence on the Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill

Joint response from the Wine and Spirit Trade Association and the Scottish Retail Consortium
About the WSTA and the SRC

The Wine and Spirit Trade Association (WSTA) is the UK organisation for the wine and spirit industry representing over 340 companies producing, importing, exporting, transporting and selling wines and spirits. Our members include retailers who between them are responsible for thousands of licences in Scotland. We work with our members to promote the responsible production, marketing and sale of alcohol.

The Scottish Retail Consortium (SRC) is the lead trade association for retailers operating in Scotland and has been representing the retail sector since the Scottish Parliament’s inception in 1999. The SRC membership accounts for over 80 per cent of the retail sector, comprising retailers large and small, selling food and non-food and operating on the high street, in rural communities, out of town and online.

Our members have been in the vanguard of tackling underage sales including supporting the criminalisation of proxy purchasing. As part of the WSTA’s Retail of Alcohol Standards Group (RASG), retailers have pioneered the voluntary introduction of Challenge 21 and subsequently Challenge 25 initiatives and implemented these policies in stores long before legislation required it. These policies have been effective in preventing underage sales.

Our members also recognise the need for joined up working on this important issue. Community Alcohol Partnerships (CAP), created by RASG and supported by the Scottish Government through the Scottish Government Alcohol Industry Partnership (SGAIP) operate in local areas, bring together retailers, local authorities, police and schools to tackle specific problems with underage sales, proxy purchasing and alcohol related crime. Scotland’s first flagship CAP in East Edinburgh was launched in July 2013 by the Cabinet Secretary for Justice.

Through the SGAIP, the SRC in partnership with the Scottish Government has spearheaded the establishment of a multi-stakeholder National Licensing Advisory Group. The Advisory Group aims to act as a driver for greater consistency, better regulatory practice, greater efficiency and cost effectiveness in the licensing system in Scotland whilst also focusing efforts in promoting the licensing objectives and outcomes in the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 (“the 2005 Act”).

The industry also provides funding for Drinkaware to develop campaigns and education programmes to encourage responsibility and shift attitudes about the acceptability of drunkenness. The £100m ‘Why let good times’ campaign targeted at 18-25 year olds is just one example.

In addition, the industry has helped to champion a range of other initiatives aimed at reducing alcohol harm by working in partnership with Government and local authorities such as the Public Health Responsibility Deal, and Best Bar None. Through the Responsibility Deal, the industry has agreed to remove 1 billion units of alcohol from the market by 2015 and ensure 80% of alcohol products have appropriate health labels. Although these pledges were initiated through Westminster, they are supported by retailers and producers throughout the UK, including in Scotland. It is initiatives like these, that seek to engage with business rather than prohibit, which have been proven to have a positive impact in tackling alcohol misuse.
General comments

The WSTA and the SRC welcome the opportunity to respond to the call for evidence from the Local Government and Regeneration Committee on the Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill.

We recognise that there are areas in Scotland where alcohol misuse is a problem and are determined to play a positive role with Government and others in tackling alcohol-related harm. We support locally targeted partnership schemes, that are properly evaluated and evidence based, and work closely with our members to ensure that alcohol is sold and marketed responsibly, a responsibility our members take incredibly seriously. It is our view that whole of population approaches, whether introduced at a national or local level, are unlikely to effectively target those who misuse alcohol.

We also represent an industry that provides significant employment in Scotland – with well over 100,000 people involved in the retail of food and drink, from rural areas to town centres, and helps to boost economic growth in Scotland. It is therefore important that licensing laws not only uphold the licensing objectives but that it doesn’t unfairly restrict businesses and add unnecessary administrative burdens.

We would therefore echo the sentiment of the policy memorandum which notes: “Alcohol licensing is not, however intended to prohibit responsible consumption nor to undermine the economic interests of the alcohol trade.”

There are many aspects of the draft Bill, which we welcome, particularly the proposals which seek to address a number of anomalies and inconsistencies of the current licensing regime. However, we remain concerned that aspects of licensing law remain overly complex, poorly understood and that the Government has focused on introducing new laws rather than ensuring that existing regulations operate effectively.

While we welcome many proposals contained in the Bill, we believe that further consideration needs to be given to bringing forward a consolidated Act. Since the introduction of the 2005 Licensing Act, there have been four licensing Bills in five years, creating additional burdens for businesses and a further layer of complexity to the licensing regime. Many aspects of the existing licensing regime do not articulate well with the Scottish Government’s Better Regulation agenda: that regulations should be proportionate, consistent, accountable, transparent and targeted. A consolidated Act would go some way to simplifying the licensing regime and bringing it more in line with the five principles of Better Regulation.

So too would a review of licensing laws which impede the responsible sale of alcohol. For example, the multi-buy ban and the requirement for separate alcohol areas significantly limit retailers’ ability to responsibly promote food with alcohol sales. For instance, the ability to promote locally sourced food and drink like locally sourced whisky and haggis to coincide with national celebrations like Burns Night. The restrictions also mean smaller retailers are often forced to sell alcohol in impractical or unsuitable areas, which can lead to a greater likelihood of theft and restrict the way their business operates. One area where we would like to see greater flexibility is the amount of space that retailers are permitted to sell alcohol. Often stores will wish to amend their layouts to take account of seasonal changes in consumer demand or a need to make their stores more accessible for store users. This may mean that at a time of year when they sell less alcohol and would ordinarily seek to amend their shop layout they are unable to do so. If there was greater flexibility for retailers to be able to amend defined alcohol areas then this would allow them to make better use of their shop space.
Another frustration reported by retailers is a final alcohol licence being reliant on sign-off from all other regulations. Recently, a member store was unable to sell alcohol for two days while waiting for sign-off for their bakery sink. While they were able to still bake bread they were unable to sell alcohol, which is surely an unintended consequence?

We have also sought to raise concerns about aspects of the proposed Bill such as re-introducing a fit and proper person test and widening the definition of overprovision, which could damage the trade. It is our view that these proposals, as they stand, are unnecessary, poorly defined and will only add another layer of complexity to the licensing regime, without protecting the licensing objectives.

A further aspect of the current alcohol licensing system which would benefit from urgent attention is the need for updated guidance. The current guidance is no longer considered fit for purpose, which makes it enormously difficult for anyone with an interest in licensing to adequately interpret licensing law. Ensuring that there is consistent, well-defined guidance would help to provide some much needed consistency to the licensing system.

We would be willing to appear before the Committee.

Licensing objectives

41 Protecting young persons from harm

Our members agree that there needs to be robust laws governing the sale of alcohol to young people and a concerted effort is needed to prevent underage drinking and associated alcohol-related harm in Scotland. Retailers have made significant progress in tackling underage sales, through the voluntary introduction of Challenge 25, which is now mandatory across Scotland, and the development of age verification schemes. A recent review of Challenge 25, Rising to the Challenge, found that 86% of 18-24 year olds have heard of Challenge 25 and 79% understood its purpose. However, as underage sales have fallen, there has been a worrying increase in rates of proxy purchasing, whereby friends and family purchase alcohol for young people.

Our members therefore support the introduction of a new offence regarding the unsupervised supply of alcohol to a child or young person in a public place and the widening of the definition of a young person, which is designed to crack-down on so-called ‘drinking dens’.

We are however conscious that tougher laws on underage sales alone are unlikely to sufficiently address the rise in proxy purchasing. This is because proxy purchasing, by its nature, is very difficult to police. Therefore, greater partnership working to address the root causes of underage drinking is vital, which is why our members support the introduction of Community Alcohol Partnerships in Scotland. CAPs are designed to tackle underage drinking in local communities, through co-operative working between alcohol retailers/licensees and local stakeholders such as Police and Councils. In some areas, CAPs have reduced alcohol-related ant-social behaviour amongst young people by up to 40%.

Statements of licensing policy

42 Licensing policy periods

The proposal to bring the time period of local licensing statements into line with local authority elections and to extend the duration of licensing policy statements is a sensible amendment, which we support. However, it should be pointed out that for many Boards, reviewing existing policy statements is simply a box ticking exercise, calling into question the need and worth of licensing policy statements for many areas.

Fit and proper person test

In our response to the Further Options for Alcohol Licensing consultation we pointed out that there is already a robust licence review process, which negates the need to re-introduce a fit and proper test. We also sought a clear definition of ‘fit and proper’ and raised concerns about how objectivity would be achieved? It is our view that these questions have not been properly addressed and without adequate safeguards in place the re-introduction of a fit and proper test could have the potential to be misused or abused by Local Boards. While we appreciate it is difficult to accurately define what a fit and proper test should include, allowing Boards to interpret the definition as they see fit is subjective and undesirable and does not fit with the Better Regulation principles.

There are also concerns, across the trade, that the introduction of a fit and proper test could significantly increase administrative burdens on retailers. Therefore it is very difficult for us to support the proposal to introduce a fit and proper test without appropriate safeguards in place.

43 Premises licence application: ground for refusal

As it stands the grounds for refusal based on a fit and proper test are poorly defined - a point which has been rightly identified by the Committee. While we support the ability of Boards to be able to consider relevant information that may deem a person unfit to hold a licence, there is little direction about what can be considered ‘relevant’ and the current definition is far too broad.

44 Application to transfer premises licence: ground for refusal

Whilst we support the need for Boards to be able to appropriately screen the suitability of licence holders when transferring premises licences, basing this on an ill-defined fit and proper test is undesirable.

45 Ground for review of premises licence

Again, we have concerns that the grounds for a review of a premises licence based on a fit and proper test are far too subjective

46 Personal licence applications and renewals: ground for refusal

As with section 45.

47 Personal licence holders: procedure on receipt of notice of conviction

As with section 45.

48 Personal licence holders: conduct inconsistent with the licensing objectives

As with section 45.

Relevant offences and foreign offences

49 Premises licences: procedure in relation to relevant offences or foreign offences
We support the Chief Constable having appropriate discretion to decide whether a hearing is necessary and believe this proposal will limit unnecessary hearings and help to create a more streamlined process.

50 Personal licences: procedure in relation to relevant offences or foreign offences

As with section 49, we support the proposal to streamline the review process and provide the Chief Constable and Boards with wider discretionary powers, in situations where it wouldn’t be appropriate to hold a licence review.

52 Offences of supplying alcohol to a child or young person

As noted above, we support the proposal to introduce an offence for supplying alcohol to a young person. In our response to the Further Options for Alcohol consultation response we sought further details on these proposals to assess the potential ramifications for licence holders and are satisfied that the Government has provided these details. We also highlighted that the current law allows parents and caregivers to set a responsible drinking example by purchasing a 16 or 17 year old a glass of wine or beer to accompany their meal. We welcome the proposal to retain this aspect of the law which will reduce the risk of criminalising responsible licence holders.

Miscellaneous

53 Meaning of “alcohol”: inclusion of angostura bitters

We support this amendment following the change in definition of angostura bitters.

54 Overprovision

We have a number of concerns about the proposal to allow an entire Board area to be considered an area of overprovision. The fundamental principle of licensing is that each application should be determined on its own merits. The licensing regime is not intended to prohibit responsible consumption or undermine the economic interests of the alcohol trade, it is difficult to argue that overprovision doesn’t prohibit both.

The suggestion in the policy memorandum that Boards are “wary of making use of overprovision for fear of legal challenge” is a fallacy: Licence holders would only ever mount a legal challenge if they felt a Board had misused its powers. After all judicial review is an inherent and cherished part of any fair democratic system.

Local Authorities already have the powers to define an area as overprovided for but this needs to be evidence based. The proposal to allow an entire area to be considered overprovided for would alter the onus of proof so licence holders have to prove that a Board area isn’t over-provided for.

Overprovision also fails to deal with the root causes of alcohol misuse. It would be implausible to argue that consumers don’t travel across boundaries that could be considered overprovided, for example from Glasgow to East Renfrewshire to undertake grocery shopping. In addition, overprovision fails to differentiate between a prospective licensee that is a responsible retailer while doing nothing to clamp down on existing licences that may be deemed irresponsible.

The proposal could also have the effect of preventing new businesses from entering the market and lead to a restriction on the rights and freedoms of new businesses against incumbent business in the areas assessed as having ‘overprovision’. There have been many notable cases of investment opportunities for retailers that have fallen through because a licence wasn’t available in that area. This is a double punishment for responsible consumers who would also be restricted from purchasing a wider range of goods offered by retailers such as fresh fruit and vegetables. It is worth noting that alcohol sales typically make up a very small proportion of total sales for supermarkets.

There is little evidence to suggest that new businesses entering the market would lead to increased consumption or an increase in anti-social behaviour and crime. Given that alcohol consumption and alcohol-related crime in Scotland is falling this proposal will have the impact of restricting trade whilst doing little to impact upon the licensing objectives of improving public health or reducing crime and anti-social behaviour.

55 Duty of Licensing Boards to produce annual financial report

The requirement for Licensing Boards to produce annual financial reports is a welcome proposal. It will increase accountability and is a first step towards operating on a cost recovery principle, as prescribed by the 2005 Act and 2009 EU Services Directive.

57 Personal licences: grant, duration and renewal

We welcome the proposal to amend the current anomaly which prevents licence holders who have their licence revoked for failing to undertake refresher training, from reapplying for a licence within 5 years. Given that many people’s livelihoods depend on the ability to hold a personal licence it was an erroneous aspect of the licensing regime, which was unfair and discriminatory, and we welcome the Government’s decision to rectify this irregularity.

We also support the decision to extend the period in which personal licence holders may apply to renew their licence to 9 months, beginning 12 months before the expiry date of the licence.

58 Processing and deemed grant of applications

This is a welcome proposal which we hope will go some way in addressing the inconsistency of processing times for premises applications, which can be costly for businesses.

1. Equalities, Climate Change and other Scottish Government objectives

You may respond to all the questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

8. Do you consider that the Bill has any implications for meeting Scotland’s climate change commitments? Please explain.

Airgun shooting has no detrimental effect on the Climate

9. Do you consider that the Bill has any implications for meeting Scotland’s equality and/or human rights commitments? Please explain.

The requirement to pay for and be subject to Police vetting. The added burden and stress on law abiding citizens. The loss to the public through the cost of compensation and the administration of surrender, is disproportionate to the benefit to the public.

It does not address the criminal use of air weapons. It does curtail the harmless use of air weapons

The only and similar, use of such measures was at the time of intense anti-terrorist activity in Ulster and so this is implying that we treat the people of Scotland as potential terrorists

10. Do you consider that the Bill has any implications for preventative spending and/or public services reform? Please explain.

The cost of compensation for weapons plus the administration of the surrender disposal then the expense of the licensing system is an avoidable expense
11. Do you consider that the Bill has any implications in relation to European Union issues? Please explain.

This bill would be a new base starting point the classification of controlled weapons and has been rejected by other countries of the EU

12. Do you have any other comments on the impact of the proposals contained in the Bill relation to Scottish Government objectives?

The Government objective of reducing the Criminal use of firearms will not be served well by licensing and may be seen as just another useless gesture and will potentially become a discredit as such
2. Air Weapons Licensing

You may respond to all the questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

13. In what ways will the creation of an air weapons licensing system in Scotland contribute to preserving public order and safety, reducing crime and advancing public health policy?

The law abiding citizen will comply, but that will not demonstrate any benefit, but they will be made a criminal for some simple non-criminal deed which will become criminal by this bill. e.g. forgetting to renew his licence.

14. Is there sufficient provision, or sufficient capacity to provide, suitable numbers of air weapons clubs across all areas of Scotland for use by registered air weapons owners/ users?

The Dunblane legacy has been difficult for pistol shooters in Scotland. We carry an association with one of the biggest and worst criminal acts in living memory and politically pistol shooting has suffered. I have personally represented Scotland at four Commonwealth Games and never ever received financial support from Scotland. Rifle and Shotgun has thrived but, no money is no provision.

15. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for personal/recreational use?

This will be another threat to the law abiding individual. We already have sensible restrictions on where and how we shoot, age related conditions on permission to posses, own, use and store. Licensing is just going to be another cost and inhibitor.
16. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those aged 14 to 17 who use air weapons?

Shooting is a discrete activity largely for security reasons, and attracting young people into the sport is mainly by invitation and demonstration. It would not be practicable if the novice had to have a licence before they could try the sport. 14 to 17 year olds are already subject to restrictions which are workable.

17. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for commercial/professional reasons (for example: for pest control; as part of the tourist/hunting season; as part of fairs, paintballing centre, entertainment sector etc.)?

It will just another cost for the enjoyment of the above identified activities.

18. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for competitive sporting purposes?

As above

19. Is it equitable for those applying for an air weapons certificate to pay a fee which cannot be refundable irrespective of whether a certificate is granted or not?
Only if they are rejected for criminal history

20. Will the air weapons licensing system have a positive or negative impact on other areas of the public sector in Scotland (e.g. The work of local government, public agencies etc.)?

It will add cost to the already overstressed budget of the Police and Government agencies.

No positive effect for government other than propaganda.

21. What, if any, might the unintended consequences of introducing an air weapons licensing system in Scotland be?

It will diminish the opportunities of people who do not have the in-built attributes of muscular or athletic sport and the disabled, to enter and enjoy a sport that particularly suites them. Any size, any shape and any age can compete.

22. Do you have any other comments to make on air weapons licensing aspects of the Bill?

Other than to criminalise some good people who have no intention to behave in a criminal fashion this bill will not reduce unlawful and criminal harm.

I am very supportive of government objectives regarding criminal behaviour and as a retired Police officer I believe we have very adequate powers to achieve those objectives.

10. Do you consider that the Bill has any implications for preventative spending and/or public services reform? Please explain.

11. Do you consider that the Bill has any implications in relation to European Union issues? Please explain.

Licensing can cause difficulties in relation to the Services Directive. The directive aims to ensure that businesses within the EU can easily obtain online the necessary permits or permissions to trade elsewhere in the EU. While we appreciate some progress made, in our view, there is still more that could be done to improve such processes, not just for businesses outwith Scotland but more importantly for those wishing to trade in a different local authority area.

12. Do you have any other comments on the impact of the proposals contained in the Bill relation to Scottish Government objectives?

There are elements of the Bill that arguably introduce unnecessary costs or processes for businesses. This would not be in line with the Scottish Government’s approach to better regulation and a supportive business environment, as set out in the government’s economic strategy.
2. Air Weapons Licensing

You may respond to all the questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

13. In what ways will the creation of an air weapons licensing system in Scotland contribute to preserving public order and safety, reducing crime and advancing public health policy?

17. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for commercial/professional reasons (for example: for pest control; as part of the tourist/hunting season; as part of fairs, paintballing centre, entertainment sector etc.)?

18. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for competitive sporting purposes?

21. What, if any, might the unintended consequences of introducing an air weapons licensing system in Scotland be?

22. Do you have any other comments to make on air weapons licensing aspects of the Bill?

The introduction of a certificate scheme is intended to reduce the threat posed by irresponsible use of air weapons. However, it seems reasonable to suggest that the overwhelming majority of air gun owners represent little or no threat to public safety. Consequently, requiring the majority to complete an application process, (which is likely to be costly in terms of time and resources for both applicants and Police Scotland) does not appear to be particularly well targeted legislation.

While the Scottish Government has indicated that it would seek to reduce some duplication by shortening the process for individuals already holding a shotgun/firearm certificate, there is potentially scope to reduce the process further, or perhaps integrate it with the existing shotgun certificate process. Regulation which is targeted and proportionate is more likely to be effective.

Lastly, the Scottish Government may need to consider how to approach enforcement in relation to air weapons purchased online from sellers outwith Scotland.
3. General Licensing Issues

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

23. Is the current Scottish licensing regime, as set out in the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 and the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005, fit for purpose?

FSB Scotland has made a number of comments about regulation, particularly licensing and its impact on small businesses. We have frequently cited problems with civic licensing (from the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982) and questioned whether some of the licensing provisions in the Act, and how they are interpreted by local authorities, remain appropriate. For example, we question whether certain commercial activity still needs to be licensed (window cleaners require a licence but cleaners in your home do not) while second hand bookshops and vintage clothes shops also require a licence in certain areas.

Furthermore, as new types of business emerge, especially in the retail and leisure sector, (e.g. outdoor activities), local authorities respond in different ways, often using the ‘catch all’ Public Entertainment Licence as a means of regulation. While new activities may have been added to such regimes, the conditions and processes attached may not have been updated for some time, thereby leading many businesses (posing a very low risk) to believe that such processes are overly-bureaucratic and unnecessary.

The potential to introduce national standards and systems, as a result of the Regulatory Reform (Scotland) Act 2014, could reduce inconsistency across Scotland. However, it does not address whether certain activities should still be regulated and, if so, how best to regulate.

While a review of the Act was conducted ten years ago and some limited changes introduced, we are disappointed that no consultation opportunity was offered on wider issues of civic licensing (other than those specific aspects in the Bill e.g. metal dealers and taxis) in preparation for this Bill.

Lastly, in relation to liquor licensing, we are aware of a number of concerns about certain practical aspects of the 2005 Act. We have further noted concerns, from both local authority and trade representatives, that the Bill as introduced does not address a number of these difficulties. We are not best placed to comment on some of the technical details but it would be disappointing if an opportunity to ‘fix’ legislation were missed.
24. Should a licensing system seek to regulate individual behaviour or communities of space (eg. ‘city space’ etc.)?

25. In what way should the licensing system in Scotland interact with the support the land use planning system, community planning and regeneration?

26. How does the licensing system in Scotland assist with the delivery of sustainable development and economic balanced areas?

27. In what way does the licensing system in Scotland support health and planning, addressing health inequalities and public health wellbeing outcomes?
4. Alcohol Licensing

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

28. In what ways will the Bill’s provisions on alcohol licensing allow for reductions in crime and the preservation of public order?

29. Are there any other measures which should be taken to assist in the reduction of crime and the preservation of public order?

30. In what ways will the provisions in the Bill enhance the licensing objectives set out in the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005?
31. In what ways will the re-introduction of the “fit and proper person” test assist with the implementation of the licensing objectives set out in the 2005 act?

32. Have there been any unintended consequences arising from the 2005 Act, for example, in rural areas or the economic regeneration of areas?

The number of licensed premises in Scotland has reduced and while this may, in part, be linked to economic conditions, the increasing complexity of the licensing system may also be a factor. Some FSB members have told us that the level of complexity and cost (e.g. the cost of architectural plans/drawings of properties in addition to the application fee) means it is not worth applying for a licence for premises in which alcohol is incidental to the business. This might include, for example, a small gift shop selling miniatures, or a B&B wishing to serve a dram to guests.

33. Which, if any, types of spent relevant offences should be required to be disclosed and what do you think the benefits of disclosure will be?

34. Do you have any other comments to make on the alcohol licensing aspects of the Bill?
5. Taxi and Private Hire Car Licensing

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

35. What benefits should the licensing of taxis and private hire cars deliver for customers?

36. In what ways do customers, providers of taxi/private hire car services and local authorities benefit from the two-tier licensing regime for taxis and private hire cars?

37. The Government states that a radical overhaul of the current two-tier licensing regime would “clearly require a very high level of resource and would cause significant disruption for the trade, local authorities, the police and ultimately the travelling public”. What are your views on this and would the potential costs and disruptions outweigh any potential benefits of a unified system?

It is worth noting that a wide range of vehicles and businesses may currently be licensed under the private hire regime e.g. ‘party’ vehicles, courtesy buses, and chauffeur services. Accordingly, a more flexible approach than that afforded by the taxi licensing regime is perhaps appropriate. This would justify the maintenance of two regimes.

38. Do the changes made by sections 60 (overprovision of private hire car licences) and 61 (testing of private hire car drivers) of the Bill strike the right balance in terms of introducing greater consistency while maintaining justifiable differences?

39. Do you have any views on the section 62 provisions bringing vehicles contracted for exclusive use for 24 or more hours within the licensing regime for taxis and private hire cars, and should any exemptions be included in the Bill?

We are unclear about the impact of this proposal on existing small businesses and, as noted in the BRIA, it is difficult to ascertain the number of businesses or individuals likely to be affected. However, if exemptions are considered, it is worth noting that the exemption should apply to the activity and not the ownership of the vehicle. For example, it would be unfair to require a small business delivering a contract in a rural area to be licensed, but exempt a similar vehicle and contract run by a not-for-profit organisation.
6. Scrap Metal Dealer Licensing

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

40. Taking the proposals in sections 63 to 66 of the Bill together, how will they have the desired effect of strengthening the metal dealers' licensing regime to the extent that metal theft and related criminal activity is reduced?

41. In your view, could the Bill be further strengthened in any way, for example, by including an accreditation scheme for metal dealers?

42. Removal of exemption warrant - do you wish to comment on the proposal to remove the exemption warrant system?
43. Removal of requirement to retain metal on-site - what impact will the proposal to remove the retention of metal requirement have on the enforcement of the licensing regime and prevention of criminal activities?

44. Forms of payment - what is your view on the proposal to go 'cashless' and is there merit in considering whether metal dealers could be allowed to operate using cash for only very small transactions, which could be limited to a certain number per month?
45. Forms of identification and record keeping:

In line with the Scrap Metal Dealers Act 2013, the Bill adds additional record keeping requirements to a metal dealer's licence including recording the means by which a seller's name and address was verified and retaining a copy of the document, and the method of payment and a copy of the payment document. The Bill will also require a metal dealer to record information in books with serially numbered pages or by means of an electronic device, and to keep separate records at each place of business. Such information and documents are to be kept for three rather than the current two years.

How important is it that the record keeping requirements reflect those in the Scrap Metal Dealers Act 2013, and do you agree with the Scottish Government that the proposed record keeping requirements are not unduly burdensome?
46. Mandatory and discretionary licensing requirements:

The Scottish Ministers can impose mandatory licensing requirements, such as those included in the Bill relating to record keeping and the identification of customers. In addition, local authorities can also attach discretionary requirements to licences in their areas.

Does the Bill get the balance right between mandatory and discretionary licensing requirements? Should the Bill include other mandatory conditions for obtaining a metal dealer’s licence, such as installing CCTV at metal dealers’ premises or in relation to labelling of metal and ‘forensic coding’?

It is worth noting that, in line with new provisions in the Regulatory Reform (Scotland) Act 2014, avoiding an inconsistent pattern of additional local conditions would keep the regime simpler and easier to enforce.
7. Civic Licensing – Theatre Licensing

You may respond to all the questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

47. Will there be any impacts during the transitional period between ending the current theatre licence and starting the public entertainment licence?

48. Are there additional costs or resource implications on theatres or licensing authorities?

49. How should licensing authorities integrate their current fee charging structure into their public entertainment regime?
8. Civic Licensing – Sexual Entertainment Venues

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

50. What are the consequences of operating the new licensing regime using the definitions set out at section 68 of the Bill?

- 'sexual entertainment venue'
- 'audience'
- 'financial gain'
- 'organiser'
- 'premises'
- 'sexual entertainment', and
- 'display of nudity'

51. The Bill specifies that a venue hosting sexual entertainment on three occasions or less within a 12 month period would not be treated as a sexual entertainment venue: does this have any unintended consequences?

It is possible that some small venues, such as pubs, clubs or halls, may be defined as sexual entertainment venues due to the 3-event restriction. This may occur in venues where burlesque or ‘stripograms’ perform from time to time.
52. Local licensing authorities will be able to set the number of sexual entertainment venues in their area to below the existing level, or zero: are there any advantages or disadvantages to this approach?

It may be worth considering whether grandfather rights for existing businesses would be appropriate, or whether a period of transition should be required following a decision to set a zero limit. This would seem reasonable when discussing the potential to close, perhaps overnight, hitherto legitimate businesses.

53. The Bill relies mainly on the existing licensing regime for sex shops as set out in section 44 and Schedule 2 of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 (application, notification, objections and representations, revocation of licences etc., enforcement and appeals): is this mechanism adequate for the licensing of sexual entertainment venues - if not, please explain why?

54. Are there any barriers to licensing authorities operating the new licensing regime?
55. Civic Licensing

Do you have any other comments to make on the civic licensing aspects of the Bill?

We are disappointed by the lack of consultation (beyond a question in the consultation on taxis) on the requirement to appoint a civic licensing standards officer in each local authority area. As far as we are aware, there has been no wider discussion with business representatives about advice, support or enforcement in relation to civic licensing. Discussion has been restricted to local authorities.

We are not clear how the remit of such enforcement officers will differ from existing environmental health and trading standards officers. Furthermore, it is unclear whether local authorities will simply re-title an existing post, or whether this will be a new post.

Under either scenario, it is highly likely that additional costs will be created which will be passed on to civic licence holders. As outlined above, we are not convinced that further increasing the fees for businesses operating in low-risk areas, and unlikely to benefit from any additional service, is justified.

3. General Licensing Issues

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

23. Is the current Scottish licensing regime, as set out in the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 and the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005, fit for purpose?

We are of the view that there are adequate powers available to Boards and the police under the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 and would not wish to see further restrictions and changes to the Act. We also are of the view that there should be consistency across Board areas in respect of fees, and also in terms of enforcement across the country by Police Scotland.

24. Should a licensing system seek to regulate individual behaviour or communities of space (eg. ‘city space’ etc.)?

25. In what way should the licensing system in Scotland interact with the support the land use planning system, community planning and regeneration?
26. How does the licensing system in Scotland assist with the delivery of sustainable development and economic balanced areas?

27. In what way does the licensing system in Scotland support health and planning, addressing health inequalities and public health wellbeing outcomes?
4. Alcohol Licensing

28. In what ways will the Bill’s provisions on alcohol licensing allow for reductions in crime and the preservation of public order?

29. Are there any other measures which should be taken to assist in the reduction of crime and the preservation of public order?

30. In what ways will the provisions in the Bill enhance the licensing objectives set out in the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005?
31. In what ways will the re-introduction of the “fit and proper person” test assist with the implementation of the licensing objectives set out in the 2005 act?

We agree with the principle behind the reintroduction of the fit and proper person test. However, we feel that the definition of what constitutes a ‘fit and proper person’ should be tightened within the legislation, to ensure it is clear and does not allow inconsistent interpretation across licensing board areas.

32. Have there been any unintended consequences arising from the 2005 Act, for example, in rural areas or the economic regeneration of areas?

33. Which, if any, types of spent relevant offences should be required to be disclosed and what do you think the benefits of disclosure will be?

34. Do you have any other comments to make on the alcohol licensing aspects of the Bill?
Licensing Policy length will be equated to elections, with new policies required within 18 months of local elections.
We support this principle.

Overprovision- this allows in essence for Licensing Boards to determine whole of licensing Board area as an overprovision locality. It also allows for Boards to have regard to (amongst other things) the number, capacity and licensed hours of licensed premises in the locality.

We are of the view that overprovision areas should be tightly defined and only designated where there is clear evidence of an oversupply of licensed premises. We would caution that allowing for entire Board areas to be defined as ‘overprovided’ could lead to rural or suburban areas being caught where there is little evidence that there is a problem. This will lead to uncertainty and potential legal challenge.

New duty of Licensing Boards to produce annual financial report.
We agree with this principle, allowing greater transparency. Also, where it is demonstrated that income from licence fees has gone beyond cost recovery, licence fees should be reduced accordingly.

Revocation of a personal licence for failure to undertake training requirements does not have to result in a 5 year ban for applying for a personal licence.
We strongly agree with this principle.

Licensing Board must remind personal licence holder 9 months (previously 3) prior to the licence expiring of need to renew licence and renewal window to be period of 9 months beginning 12 months before expiry date.
We agree with this principle.

Duty to be placed on Licensing Boards to acknowledge certain applications. Licensing Boards must determine relevant applications meeting prescribed requirements within 9 months. Failure to do so means the application is deemed granted (with no conditions permitted to be added).
We agree with this principle.
Official Response

SUBJECT: Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill - Stage One Call for Evidence REQUESTED BY: Local Government and Regeneration Committee, Scottish Parliament
REFERENCE: OR-2014/09
DATE: 29 September 2014
SUBMITTED BY: David Bradwell, Scottish Churches Parliamentary Officer

Preamble

This is a joint submission is made on behalf of:

- The Baptist Union of Scotland
- The Catholic Parliamentary Office
- The Church of Scotland, Church and Society Council
- The Methodist Church
- The Salvation Army
- The Scottish Churches Anti-Human Trafficking Group
- The Scottish Episcopal Church, Mission and Ministry Board
- The United Free Church of Scotland, Church and Society Committee
- The United Reformed Church, Synod of Scotland Church and Society Committee

Response

1. Thank you for the invitation to contribute to the scrutiny of these proposals. Our main interest in this Bill relates to Section 68 and the regulation of Sexual Entertainment Venues. A joint response to the Scottish Government consultation was made by the Baptist Union of Scotland, the Church of Scotland, the Free Church of Scotland, the Methodist Church, the Salvation Army, the Scottish Episcopal Church and the United Reformed Church, which can be found here: http://www.actsparl.org/media/159989/or-ecu-sexualentertainmentvenues-sept13.pdf

2. We have opted not to respond directly to the questions posed in the Call for Evidence as our concerns are of a general nature and restricted to only one part of the Bill. The points we wish to make broadly relate to questions 9, 50, 51 and 52 of the Call for Evidence.

3. The Churches support the establishment of a separate licensing regime for sexual entertainment venues in the terms set out in the Bill. The nature of sexual entertainment is significantly different from other forms of public entertainment. It is, therefore, entirely appropriate that it should be the subject of separate licensing from other forms of public entertainment.

4. Churches acknowledge that sexual entertainment is a legal activity; we are of the view that it should be well regulated to allow for communities’ views to be taken into consideration. Our main concern is that we believe that sexual entertainment demeans the human person as it presents the body as a commodity; this is in contradiction to the principles of love, humanity and justice which we share with many people in Scotland.

5. The potential for sexual entertainment to be a driver for violence against women, in all its forms, and as a stimulus for human trafficking, are real and contemporary issues which the churches and wider society continue to struggle with; there are clear implications for human rights and equality issues. Regulation alone can only achieve so much, we are also committed to working to change attitudes and behaviours by providing information and improving understanding of the human condition. Our work in this area includes the advocacy and awareness-raising work carried out by the Scottish Churches Anti-Human Trafficking Group.

6. The Churches agree with the creation of a new power for local authorities to determine the appropriate number of sexual entertainment venues in their area, and that this can be set at zero. This mirrors a ‘no casino’ power that local authorities have under the Gambling Act 2005. Local authorities should be required to consult widely in the formation of a policy statement and in reviews of existing policy.

7. We do not support the exemption from licensing for venues which only have fewer than four sexual entertainments in any one year period. The Government have not explained the rationale for this proposal and we have concerns that it simply allows for the continuation of sexual entertainment activity which is unregulated. We should like to hear from the Government, from local authorities, the police and groups working with victims of human trafficking and to combat violence against women if they believe that this is wise, and what evidence they have to back this up; we would urge the Committee to consider exploring this question in particular. We have a broader concern that this exemption could completely undermine a local authority’s decision not to have any sexual entertainment venues if performers could work different clubs, bars, pubs and other places to get around the wishes of the locally elected authority.

8. The argument to regulate sexual entertainment venues is compelling and therefore all venues providing sexual entertainment should be licensed. The issue of strip-o-grams is of concern because they may be encountered by members of the public in venues which do not normally provide sexual entertainment, e.g. when booked to attend a restaurant or bar by a hen or stag party. In the proposed Section 68 (3) we firmly believe that this is a form of sexual entertainment and should, therefore be subject to regulation. We also have a concern for members of staff who might not wish to view or be part of a sexual entertainment performance taking place in an unregulated venue for conscience reasons; a supplementary question we have is what protection and information are employees being offered?

3. General Licensing Issues

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

23. Is the current Scottish licensing regime, as set out in the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 and the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005, fit for purpose?

24. Should a licensing system seek to regulate individual behaviour or communities of space (e.g. ‘city space’ etc.)?

25. In what way should the licensing system in Scotland interact with the support the land use planning system, community planning and regeneration?
26. How does the licensing system in Scotland assist with the delivery of sustainable development and economic balanced areas?

27. In what way does the licensing system in Scotland support health and planning, addressing health inequalities and public health wellbeing outcomes?
The Licensing system gives the opportunity for Licensing Boards to take into account the health inequalities of a local area and the impact that alcohol has on the public health as a part of its Licensing Policy. Boards are also obliged to carry out an assessment of overprovision and develop a Policy Statement which sets out how it will respond to applications in areas which it has identified as “over-provided”. However assessments of overprovision are complex pieces of work and can have a significant impact on a local area. For many areas alcohol is a cross cutting issues which has an impact on levels of violence, acquisitive crime, poor health and outcomes for children. Currently there are few requirements for the Licensing Board to involve local experts in the development of Licensing Policy. This can lead to Boards developing a policy which does not reflect local concerns about the availability of alcohol.

The accountability arrangements of Boards do not reflect the drive towards more local planning. This can undermine local approaches to reducing alcohol related harm. Currently Scottish Ministers may issue guidance to Licensing Boards as to the exercise of their functions under this Act; and it requires that each Licensing Board must, in the exercise of their functions under this Act, have regard to the guidance. Where a Licensing Board decides not to follow the guidance, the Board must give the Scottish Ministers notice of the decision together with a statement of the reasons. Current guidance was developed before the introduction of the current act in 2009 and has not been updated.

Either the current accountability arrangements need to be developed to reflect the needs of local areas or existing guidance should be used to improve the accountability of Boards.

As further evidence Boards are not currently held accountable for the publication of equality impact assessments to accompany their Policy statements.
4. Alcohol Licensing

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

28. In what ways will the Bill’s provisions on alcohol licensing allow for reductions in crime and the preservation of public order?

29. Are there any other measures which should be taken to assist in the reduction of crime and the preservation of public order?

30. In what ways will the provisions in the Bill enhance the licensing objectives set out in the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005?

The Bill may enhance the Licensing Objectives. However consideration should be given to Boards producing an annual report setting out how their work has delivered the 5 Licensing Objectives. This is not an unreasonable requirement of a locally accountable body responsible for important local decision-making.
31. In what ways will the re-introduction of the “fit and proper person” test assist with the implementation of the licensing objectives set out in the 2005 act?

32. Have there been any unintended consequences arising from the 2005 Act, for example, in rural areas or the economic regeneration of areas?

33. Which, if any, types of spent relevant offences should be required to be disclosed and what do you think the benefits of disclosure will be?

34. Do you have any other comments to make on the alcohol licensing aspects of the Bill?

6. Civic Licensing – Sexual Entertainment Venues

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

50. What are the consequences of operating the new licensing regime using the definitions set out at section 68 of the Bill?

- 'sexual entertainment venue'
- 'audience'
- 'financial gain'
- 'organiser'
- 'premises'
- 'sexual entertainment', and
- 'display of nudity'

Scottish Borders VAWP felt that the definitions will provide Civic Government Committees with a clear understanding of what is described as ‘sexual entertainment venue’ for making decisions. However, members are unclear if it states in legislation that any staff member working in SEV should be 18 years and over. This should be made apparent.

Mandatory training to support implementation of the Bill should be made available to Civic Government Committees and also organisers to ensure there is an understanding of the impact any licence award will make on the local community and also issues such as commercial sexual exploitation.

Guidance and standards should also be developed for venues/organisers to protect staff against exploitation.

A consequence from the definitions set out under the new licensing regime would be that current premises operating (of which there are approximately 20 across Scotland), will be required to apply for a licence and will be under a double licence regime.
51. The Bill specifies that a venue hosting sexual entertainment on three occasions or less within a 12 month period would not be treated as a sexual entertainment venue: does this have any unintended consequences?

Scottish Borders VAWP felt that by having an exception (three or less) will still allow venues to host sexual entertainment as described by the definition. By allowing venues to host sexual entertainment can potentially desensitize this type of entertainment. Questions were also raised about who would potentially monitor if premises were stating they were having three or less to ensure this was not breached. An additional consequence may be that an organisers could move around venues providing sexual entertainment in a number of different venues.

52. Local licensing authorities will be able to set the number of sexual entertainment venues in their area to below the existing level, or zero: are there any advantages or disadvantages to this approach?

The advantages will allow local areas to decide whether to take a zero level or not. This will require them to consult and negotiate with local communities and therefore communities will be able to have a say on whether they feel sexual entertainment should be available in their local areas. By having a licence regime above zero will allow for communities and stakeholder to object.

By having a zero level will also reduce administrative resources required currently for licensing. This will also reduce the potential for lobbying by local businesses to apply for licenses.

By having an agreed level set by Local Licensing authorities will also provide a clear message to communities on their views of sexual entertainment.

Local Licensing authorities should have system in place to review the number of sexual entertainment venues agreed in consultation with communities.

53. The Bill relies mainly on the existing licensing regime for sex shops as set out in section 44 and Schedule 2 of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 (application, notification, objections and representations, revocation of licences etc., enforcement and appeals): is this mechanism adequate for the licensing of sexual entertainment venues - if not, please explain why?

Yes by using existing licensing regime should offer adequate regulation of sexual entertainment venues but does require training for committees to fully understand the consequences of potential for commercial sexual exploitation through sexual entertainment venues.

54. Are there any barriers to licensing authorities operating the new licensing regime?

Financial costs to local authorities.

55. Civic Licensing

Do you have any other comments to make on the civic licensing aspects of the Bill?
Response from Spittal Street Womens Clinic on Section 68 (Licensing of sexual entertainment venues) of the Air weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill

Spittal Street Womens Clinic is a joint initiative between NHS Lothian’s Harm Reduction Team, Chalmers Centre and Sacro’s Another Way service. We offer a range of sexual health services, health promotion and direct referrals to other related services such as Sacro’s Another Way to women involved in the commercial sex industry and/or women who use substances.

As an NHS Organisation we hope the Bill on sexual entertainment will safeguard and improve the physical and psychological health of women providing sexual entertainment and have gender based violence prevention as a key objective.

We have read the relevant section of the Bill and have some general suggestions and more specific comments as outlined below.

1. We feel ‘sexual entertainment’ requires further definition.
2. As well as the number of sexual entertainment venues we believe the Bill should address the density of venues within a city. Having several sexual entertainment venues within close proximity encourages disrespectful behaviour and gender based violence to women both within and out with the venues.
3. Regular inspections of premises by environmental health, police and NHS should be part of the licence agreement and included in the Bill.
4. Could the licence include a requirement of the owners to allow the NHS and associated services access to the venues? Social welfare, housing, and mental health are common problems in women involved in sexual entertainment and we believe services such as ours could improve the health and well being of these women.
5. The Bill could include strict guidance on how dances take place to ensure no contact. Currently we feel it is inadequate to ensure the safety of women.
6. The Bill does not mention payment that women receive and any regulation regarding this.

With regards to specific points in the Bill;

7. We have concerns regarding the regulation of point 45A (9) (no sexual entertainment licence required if entertainment takes place 3 times or less per year). We feel that ‘allowing’ 3 sexual entertainment events to take place a year may lead to abuse of the bill and that all public sexual entertainment episodes should have to have a licence.
8. With regards to section 45B (1A). We feel that allowing under 18s to work at or be permitted to sexual entertainment venues is not acceptable. Although no sexual activity would be taking place we feel that there would be opportunity for exploitation and coercion of potentially vulnerable adolescents and cannot see a benefit in allowing under 18s into such venues in the first place.
Thank you for your reply. Firstly apologies for this late submission, I only noticed that this was coming up when I saw it on the Holyrood website today. I am a long time user of firearms, a former examiner for the Deer Management Qualifications and have served on the Board of the former Grampian Police. I have a continuing interest in the licensing of firearms and a wish to see the process made more efficient and more effective.

There are a number of points relevant to this issue that I would wish to make to the Committee. The licensing of air guns could very easily become a nightmare from an administrative point of view.

Most air guns do not have a serial number so to license them it will be necessary to have them engraved with a discrete number. How is this going to be done and who pays for it? Presumably the owner.

The firearms licencing departments in most police areas have been greatly reduced in capacity so unless there is a substantial increase in the number of knowledgeable persons available to cope with the new licencing system it could easily degenerate into the sort of debacle we have seen recently with the Passport Office. The emphasis there is on 'knowledgeable'.

I presume the air guns will be added to the existing Shogun systems already in use, is the software capable of handling such an increase in volume?

If people wish to give up an air gun will there be compensation paid?

From the point of view of increasing efficiency and reducing administration, there will be many air guns held by people who already have either a Firearms Certificate or a Shotgun Certificate. Given the relative power of those firearms there should be no need to scrutinise the holders for possession of an air gun.

In the above cases it would save a huge amount of time and effort if the air gun was simply added to either the existing FAC or SGC.

While on the subject of FAC and SGC, for the future it would seem reasonable to combine these, most run concurrently anyway. If a person owns a firearm and has been deemed suitable to hold such, there should be no bar to them also holding a shotgun or an air gun. Combining them on one certificate would also seem to be a sensible way of reducing paperwork. Alternatively totally eliminating paperwork by issuing a card instead of a paper certificate would greatly reduce cost and improve efficiency.

There is a huge potential here for either producing the greatest 'fankle' seen in a long time, or starting down a path of increasing efficiency and better customer service.

I would welcome the opportunity to make these points to the Committee in person.

Yours sincerely,
M J Raeburn

3. General Licensing Issues

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

23. Is the current Scottish licensing regime, as set out in the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 and the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005, fit for purpose?

The Board agrees that the 2005 Act is, by large, fit for purpose however is of the view that a review of the mechanics contained with the Act is required. Such a review would hopefully resolve the practical difficulties that the Board and stakeholders face on a daily basis. The Board believes that the Act is generally successful in its strategic aims and allows the Board to successfully promote the licensing objectives, subject to the limitations discussed below. However, there are a number of technical problems with the Act’s provisions which places unnecessary strain upon both the Board and stakeholders.

24. Should a licensing system seek to regulate individual behaviour or communities of space (eg. ‘city space’ etc.)?

25. In what way should the licensing system in Scotland interact with the support the land use planning system, community planning and regeneration?
Both the Licensing Authority and the Licensing Board have a concern that a specific focus upon the above objectives will detract from the primary purpose of the licensing regime, i.e. to uphold the licensing objectives whether they be the ones set down in the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 or implied, i.e. the 1982 Act. Ultimately, licensing regimes are concerned with determining whether the application is compatible with the aims of the specific licensing regime.

The Authority and Board would respectfully submit that in order to ensure public confidence in the licensing regime, that they should remain free from statutory obligations to consider the above matters.

Furthermore, both the Licensing Authority and the Board are aware of a body of case law that dictates that they cannot consider planning matters when considering licensing applications.

26. How does the licensing system in Scotland assist with the delivery of sustainable development and economic balanced areas?

27. In what way does the licensing system in Scotland support health and planning, addressing health inequalities and public health wellbeing outcomes?
The Board recognises that one of the five licensing objectives is protecting and improving public health. Therefore, the Board considers matters of public health in relation to various applications and as part of its policy statement.

As the Scottish Government is aware, the NHS can make representations/objections to applications that come before the Board. For the Board to be able to take cognisance of the medical evidence it must be directly relevant and relatable to the premises. The Board does appreciate that this is a significant challenge and recognises the work carried out by the NHS to date. However, the Board is keen to see evidence that presents a direct correlation between alcohol consumption in an area and one or more specific premises.

As part of the Board’s consultation for its 2013-2016 policy statement, it held evidence sessions where various stakeholders were given an opportunity to address the Board on matters of import to them. The Board were delighted to have representatives from Alcohol Focus, Greater Glasgow and Clyde Health Board and the Community Area Partnership attend and address the Board on matters relating to public health. The Board took account of the evidence led by these stakeholders when formulating its policy statement.

The Board would submit that this is the appropriate level of interface between the licensing regime and health outcomes, i.e. stakeholders have an opportunity to submit evidence at a specific stage of the licensing process or through evidence gathering at a policy creation stage and then the licensing body gives this the weight it determines appropriate in the context of the licensing objectives.
4. Alcohol Licensing

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

28. In what ways will the Bill’s provisions on alcohol licensing allow for reductions in crime and the preservation of public order?
The Board is of the view that while the Scottish Government, through the Bill and its supporting documentation sets out a clear desire to ensure that Boards can effectively combat crime and disorder, it falls short in providing the necessary tools in order to enable it to do so.

While the Board welcome the inclusion of the “fit and proper person” test, it is concerned that it will be unable to fully address issues relating to crime and disorder unless amendments are made to the Act to address the limitations and constraints arising from the decision in Brightcrew v- City of Glasgow Licensing Board [2011] CSIH 46. Further, the Board is concerned, if the test is implemented as currently drafted, there will be mismatch in expectation between the police and the Board. The police will doubtless expect the Board to take a robust approach in cases where the Board is still constrained by Brightcrew type considerations.

In short, if the Board is not explicitly given the ability to deal with issues it considers to be of relevance to one or more of the licensing objectives but do not necessarily flow directly from the sale of alcohol, the Board considers that it will be unable to fully tackle issues relating to crime and public disorder, and therefore unable always able to act in the public interest.

Further in relation to the “fit and proper person” test, the Board would welcome the extension of the test to anyone involved in the management of the business or otherwise derives a benefit from it. This would assist in compensating for the removal of interested parties from the 2005 Act.

The Board welcomes the move to allow it to consider spent convictions and recognises that it may be a valuable tool in protecting both the public and the trade. In doing so, the Board suggests that in order to provide certainty, the applicant should be required to disclose all spent convictions for relevant offences. This would allow the Board to come to an informed view as to what weight to attribute to the spent convictions and allows patterns of behaviour to be seen. However, the Board would suggest that clarification should be provided as to this provision’s interface with the approach set out in O'Doherty v Renfrewshire Council (1998 S.L.T. 327) whereby a Committee had to be satisfied that it was necessary to take account of the spent convictions in the interests of justice.

Further, the Board strongly agrees with the introduction of the “fit and proper person” test in relation to the transfer of premises licences. However, the Board is concerned by the ability of the police to provide “any information” that they consider relevant to a transfer application. The Board notes that this is far wider than the matters that the Chief Constable is permitted to bring to the attention of the Board in the case of a premises licence. Therefore, there this requirement is, in the Board’s view, lacking in specification. This may present the Board with a difficulty in dealing with irrelevant information while being under pressure to act in the public interest. The Board does not believe there is a need to place transfer type applications under greater scrutiny than new applications and suggests the provisions within section 23 of the 2005 Act are mirrored here in respect of transfer applications.
29. Are there any other measures which should be taken to assist in the reduction of crime and the preservation of public order?

Yes, if the Scottish Government wishes the Board to take action on matters that relate to the reduction of crime and preservation of public order that do not relate just to the sale of alcohol, then the Scottish Government should legislate to allow the Board, in certain circumstances, to consider matters that are not solely connected to the sale of alcohol.

Such a change in the legislation would then allow the Board to deal with their concerns relating to crime and disorder without having to consider whether it relates to the sale of alcohol.

Further, the Board notes that the 2005 Act is concerned solely with the regulation of the sale of alcohol and does not extend to the supply of alcohol. The Board’s evidence sessions held in preparation of its latest Policy Statement identified concerns relating to the supply of alcohol by “dial a booze” type businesses. The Board is powerless to regulate these types of activities and to deal with any concerns despite a common misperception that the Board has a locus. Therefore, the Board would suggest that the purpose of the Act be amended so to include certain activities relating to the supply of alcohol and provide either the police or the Board with powers to manage and regulate such operations.

In the Board’s view, the occasional licence system should be reviewed. The Board notes that such licences can be applied for by personal and premises licence holders, and voluntary organisations. The Board is aware that personal and premises licence holders are subjected to the licensing regime to ensure that they are suitable holders of a licence however voluntary organisations are effectively unchecked. The Board has a concern in relation to voluntary organisations that are granted occasional licences without being subject to the Board’s full scrutiny. Therefore, the Board would suggest that voluntary organisations are subject to a “fit and proper person” test. It may also be beneficial to introduce a definition of a voluntary organisation.

Further, the Board notes that the 2005 Act does not provide for mandatory late night conditions to be attached to occasional licences. Therefore, you can have a situation where a non nightclub premises can effectively trade as a nightclub by virtue of an occasional licence. Such premises would not have the benefit of the Board’s mandatory conditions such as a drugs policy etc.
30. In what ways will the provisions in the Bill enhance the licensing objectives set out in the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005?

The Board considers that the inclusion of young persons in the licensing objection of Protecting Children from Harm was a critical omission from the Act and welcomes the proposal to amend the objective.

The Board is also supportive of the creation of a new criminal offence in relation to supplying alcohol to a child or young person.

31. In what ways will the re-introduction of the “fit and proper person” test assist with the implementation of the licensing objectives set out in the 2005 act?
The Board strongly supports the proposal to introduce a ground for refusal that the applicant is not, in the opinion of the Board, a fit and proper person to hold a licence, for premises licences, reviews, transfers and personal licences. Although legislative changes brought about by the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Act 2010 were intended to address this issue through wider use of the licensing objectives, the courts have consistently refused to extend their application beyond matters directly relating to the sale of alcohol following on from the decision in Brightcrew – v- City of Glasgow Licensing Board.

The Board is routinely faced with submissions that criminal conduct on the part of an applicant or a licence holder which is not connected with the sale of alcohol or does not take place in licensed premises, should not be a matter for the Board, no matter how abhorrent the nature of the conduct. It is of serious concern to the Board that these submissions have found favour in the courts.

While the Board acknowledge the approach which has been taken by the courts, it believes that as a body of elected members it has a greater duty to members of the public to ensure that their safety is not compromised by the granting of licences to individuals who have displayed violent, predatory or otherwise serious criminal behaviour. Decisions to refuse licences to such individuals are not taken with any moral judgement in mind, only an overriding desire to ensure that the safety of the public is protected, which in the Board’s view is the very purpose of any licensing system.

While the Board is supportive of the re-introduction of the “fit and proper person” test, it is of the view that the test, as currently drafted, will have limited impact. The Board believes that as the test is firstly qualified by the reference to the licensing objectives and secondly it must be contextualised within the Brightcrew framework, it will not allow the Board to consider matters that it cannot already deal with by way of the present licensing objectives related grounds for refusal.

Given the above issues, the Board calls upon the Scottish Government to put it beyond doubt that the Board is entitled to regulate other activities taking place on the premises, in addition to the regulation of the sale of alcohol as per the preamble of the Act, and that the application of the licensing objectives are also similarly extended. The Board believes that freeing the “fit and proper person” test from the jurisprudence of Brightcrew is essential in order to provide for the safety of members of the public and to protect the integrity of the licensed trade itself.
32. Have there been any unintended consequences arising from the 2005 Act, for example, in rural areas or the economic regeneration of areas?
As noted in Q29, the Board sees the lack of control on occasional licences as an issue. The Board believes that the low cost of entry and ease of use has led to the proliferation of occasional licences. While the Board is aware that the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Act 2010 amended the 2005 Act to allow ministers to introduce a limit on the number of occasional licences. To date no such limit has been introduced. The Board would therefore, suggest that the Scottish Government introduce such a limit.

Further, the Board is aware that an occasional licence being granted eliminates the need for a public entertainment licence. This can mean that large scale events such as pop concerts can be licensed under an occasional licence which in terms of the decision in Brightcrew can only be regulated in terms of the sale of alcohol. The Board notes that this may be best cured by an amendment to the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 however it does have concerns with situations where a licence holder could hold events without being subject to the checks and balances contained within the 1982 regime. This issue is further exasperated by the fact that the Board cannot impose any conditions upon an occasional licence that are not connected to the sale of alcohol.

The Board has a concern with the applicability of the Act’s transfer provisions in the event of insolvency. The Board notes that the dissolution of a company does not trigger the cease to have effect provisions contained within section 28 of the 2005 Act. Therefore, the Board and applicants are placed in a position of having to deal with licences that are held by the Queens and Lord Treasurers Remembrancer. The Board would suggest that the dissolution of a company should be dealt with by way of the cease to have effect provisions and there allow a section 34 transfer to take place.

Generally there needs to be greater clarity around the meaning of cease to have effect as this appears to be left to the discretion of individual Boards.

Recent events connected to refresher training has highlighted to the Board that there is no expiry date placed upon the personal licence holder’s initial training as the time limit only applies to the date of the licence. Therefore, a personal licence holder could surrender their licence and apply for a new licence making reference to their initial training. This training could be five years old. The Board is of the view that the 2005 Act does not allow it to refuse a personal licence in these circumstances. Furthermore, there is no provision to prevent a personal licence holder from completing their refresher training within days/weeks of their initial training and then merely notifying the Board at the appropriate time. The Board would suggest that this undermines the purpose of the refresher training which is to ensure that staff have an up to date knowledge of the law. The Board would suggest that firstly an expiry date is placed upon the training and secondly that a requirement be put in place so that the refresher training must be carried out within a set period prior to the five year interval.
33. Which, if any, types of spent relevant offences should be required to be disclosed and what do you think the benefits of disclosure will be?

The Board is of the view that if spent convictions are to be disclosed, then the applicant should be required to disclose all spent convictions for relevant offences. It is only through full disclosure that the Board could come to a view as to what weight it should attach to the convictions, i.e. do the spent convictions demonstrate that there is a pattern of behaviour that is of concern to the Board?

The principal benefit of such disclosure is that the Board would be able to determine whether the applicant has spent convictions which are of a serious nature in terms of the licensing objectives.

34. Do you have any other comments to make on the alcohol licensing aspects of the Bill?

The Board is of the view that section 7 does not prevent a “locality” from being defined as the entire Board area, should a Board wish to do so. As such, no amendment is considered necessary.

If licensed hours are introduced into the equation then the pool of comparative premises that the Board can have regard to may be reduced. Following on from decisions in Tesco Stores Limited v City of Glasgow Licensing Board, the Board is of the view that the current ground for refusal on the basis of overprovision is working reasonably well.

Further, the Board believes that clarification is required in respect of the insertion of the words “among other things”. The Board considers that the Scottish Government would need to issues guidance as to the factors that the Board should consider in respect of these “other things”.

In relation to guidance, the Board notes that section 142 of the 2005 Act allows the Scottish Ministers to issue guidance to Boards as to the exercise of their statutory functions. The Board notes that the Scottish Ministers have not updated the Guidance since it was first published in 2007. The Board is routinely faced with submissions that refer to this statutory guidance. This statutory guidance, by virtue of the passage of time and subsequent amendments to the 2005 Act, is out of date. Therefore, the Board would suggest that the Scottish Ministers issue updated guidance or alternatively, repeal the 2007 guidance.

The Board considers that a comprehensive review of all procedural aspects of the licensing system is required having regard to the principles of better regulation and the legal obligations placed on Licensing Boards under the EU Services Directive. For example, the processes relating to the processing of applications for transfer, major variation, occasional licences and extended hours should be streamlined and improved.

The Board would also wish consideration to be given to allowing greater flexibility for delegation of certain matters and for it to be able to determine which matters should be subject to a minor variation in order to reduce the volume of uncontentious major variations.

The Board also considers that with the plethora of legislation amending the 2005 Act, there is a need for a consolidated single piece of legislation to be produced in order to improve accessibility to the licensing process in relation to both members of the trade and members of the public.

23. Is the current Scottish licensing regime, as set out in the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 and the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005, fit for purpose?

Glasgow City Council’s Licensing Authority (“the Licensing Authority”) respectfully suggests that the 1982 Act is not fit for purpose. The Authority notes that the Act is over 30 years old and while it has been updated by various provisions, the Authority is of the view that the underlying structure of the Act requires to be updated and refreshed. The most straightforward way of achieving this is through a new consolidated act.

The Authority would also suggest that consideration should be given to converting the 1982 Act into an objective based regime and allowing the Authority to have regard to these objectives when determining applications. Such objectives would allow the Authority to tackle issues that are fundamental to the licensing regime where those issues fall out with the scope of the fit and proper person test. Such objectives would also help guide the formation of the Authority’s policies.

The Authority also has specific concerns relating to the 1982 Act’s compatibility with the European Union Service Directive, enforcement and fees.

24. Should a licensing system seek to regulate individual behaviour or communities of space (eg. ‘city space’ etc.)?
While the Licensing Authority believes that the priority of the licensing regime should be the regulation of the activity, it does see the merit in regulating communities of space however, the focus should be upon determining whether the activity is safe. Regard should also be had to the suitability of the individual / origination behind that activity, i.e. it is a fit and proper person.

The Authority would welcome the Scottish Government consulting on innovative proposals relating to the licensing of open spaces. However, any proposal should allow the licensing authority to retain the ability to regulate the type of activity that is taking place at the open space.

25. In what way should the licensing system in Scotland interact with the support the land use planning system, community planning and regeneration?

Both the Licensing Authority and the Licensing Board have a concern that a specific focus upon the above objectives may potentially detract from the primary purpose of the licensing regime, i.e. to uphold the licensing objectives whether they be the ones set down in the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 or implied, i.e. the 1982 Act. Ultimately, licensing regimes are concerned with determining whether the application is compatible with the aims of the licensing regime.

The Authority and Board would respectfully submit that in order to ensure public confidence in the licensing regime, that they should remain free from statutory obligations to consider the above matters.

Furthermore, both the Licensing Authority and the Board are aware of a body of case law that dictates that they cannot consider planning matters when considering licensing applications.
26. How does the licensing system in Scotland assist with the delivery of sustainable development and economic balanced areas?

As above.

27. In what way does the licensing system in Scotland support health and planning, addressing health inequalities and public health wellbeing outcomes?

As above.
4. Taxi and Private Hire Car Licensing

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

35. What benefits should the licensing of taxis and private hire cars deliver for customers?
The Licensing Authority considers the primary objective of the licensing regime to be the protection of public safety.

The Authority is of the view that the licensing of Booking Offices is an essential part of the licensing regime of taxis and PHCs. This licence type is important in ensuring that the public can travel safely and that bookings are evidenced and recorded. However, in keeping with its view of the importance of public safety, the Authority would suggest that the exemption where a booking office licence is not required where there are less than 3 cars is removed. It is the Licensing Authority’s experience that, from time to time, operators who claim this exemption do in fact have more than 3 cars. The Authority is of the view that all operators should require a booking office licence. It is hoped that this would help to improve general accountability.

The Authority would also suggest that the Booking Office concept helps protect the public against rogue operators. The Authority has concerns that suspended drivers or drivers with expired licences are able to continue to trade by utilising a mobile phone from which they take bookings. By virtue of not being subject to the standard conditions of a Booking Office licence, the licensing and enforcement authorities cannot evidence illegal activity. Furthermore, this mobile phone may be located out with the licensing authority’s area.

In preparing for the near future, the Authority would suggest that the Scottish Government examine the interface between the Booking Office legislation and app based booking systems. The legislation should be amended to ensure that any future booking systems are delivered in a way that public safety is protected and that both licensing and enforcement authorities have access to the information that they require to effectively regulate the trade.

Furthermore, the Authority is aware that the licensing regime could be further improved to ensure that it meets the needs of the Authority, the trade and customers. In meeting these needs the Authority would suggest that transfer provisions are introduced into the 1982 Act. The Authority considers this to be a serious deficiency in the Act and while the Authority works around these constraints, it is of the view that proper transfer provisions would be a great help.

The Authority also welcomes the Scottish Government’s commitment to modernising the provisions of the 1982 Act in respect of taxis and PHCs. In keeping with this, the Authority hopes that the Scottish Government examines developments in both the United States and European countries in relation to online taxi booking apps. Such apps will doubtless be introduced to Scotland in the near future and the Authority would suggest that the Government begins to consider whether these apps would require any legislative amendments.
36. In what ways do customers, providers of taxi/private hire car services and local authorities benefit from the two-tier licensing regime for taxis and private hire cars?

As noted above, the Licensing Authority is of the view that the primary objective of licensing taxis/PHCs is public safety. All stakeholders benefit from a licensing regime focused on this objective, whether it being the Authority knowing that drivers are fit and proper persons or the trade knowing that the public have faith in securing a safe journey home. In meeting this objective, the Licensing Authority is of the view that the two-tier licensing regime for taxis and private hire cars is vital. It is only through restricting private hire cars (PHCs) to saloon like models and prohibiting them taking “there and then hires” that the public can be confident that the vehicle they flag down on the road is indeed a genuine taxi. Any move to remove this differentiation, in the Authority’s view, will compromise public safety by creating uncertainty in the public’s mind.

The Licensing Authority is of the view that this two tiered approach offers other benefits, for example the PHC regime offers a lowers the barrier of entry to potential applicants given that an applicant can use their own vehicle. PHCs also offer a less expensive option to customers given the price differential.

37. The Government states that a radical overhaul of the current two-tier licensing regime would “clearly require a very high level of resource and would cause significant disruption for the trade, local authorities, the police and ultimately the travelling public”. What are your views on this and would the potential costs and disruptions outweigh any potential benefits of a unified system?
The Licensing Authority agrees with the Scottish Government contention that any such overhaul would cause large scale disruption. In the event that the Authority is required to radically alter its two existing forms of licensing for these activities then the Authority has concerns ranging from the need to update its IT systems to needing to overhaul the signage used by PHCs and taxis.

The Authority would submit that it is not merely a case of updating its existing policies but would involve extensive research and consultation to ensure that public safety is maintained. This would doubtless lead to new signage being required and therefore it would need be developed and contracts agreed for its supply. Furthermore, the Licensing Authority is under contractual obligations in relation to the supply of the current signage. This contract must be honoured unless the Licensing Authority wishes to suffer severe financial penalties.

Further, the Authority would suggest that there would be a need to embark on a large-scale education campaign of the public. The focus of this campaign would be on educating the public as to what is a safe vehicle to hail on a public carriageway.

As well as engagement with the public, there would need to significant retraining of both taxi and PHC drivers to ensure that they are aware of their new role and responsibilities.

All of the above will require the Authority to expend significant resources to achieve. In short, any change to the two tier licensing regime would, in the Licensing Authority’s view, require a substantial lead in period – two years or more.

38. Do the changes made by sections 60 (overprovision of private hire car licences) and 61 (testing of private hire car drivers) of the Bill strike the right balance in terms of introducing greater consistency while maintaining justifiable differences?
The Licensing Authority is concerned that the Scottish Government’s proposal to require the testing of PHC drivers erodes the difference between PHC and taxi drivers. The Authority understands that taxi drivers are tested as they are subject to “there and then hires” and therefore do not have an opportunity to research a route. However, PHC drivers by the very nature of being pre-booked, have the opportunity to make investigations into how to reach a destination. Therefore, by imposing the same requirement on PHC drivers, it creates an impression that they are trained to an equivalent standard. In short, the Licensing Authority respectfully submits that it sees no reason to impose this requirement upon PHC drivers.

In relation to the proposal to introduce the ground of refusal on the grounds of overprovision, the Licensing Authority would suggest that firstly there is no need for such a ground of refusal and secondly, the difficulty in determining if such overprovision exists makes it impractical for the Licensing Authority to adopt such a policy.

The Licensing Authority is of the view that overprovision of PHCs is best left to the regulation of the marketplace. If there are too many PHCs then the number of drivers required will decrease and therefore the demand for licences will lessen. In the Licensing Authority’s experience, most applicants have an indication of whether employment is available thereby, suggesting that there is a need for drivers. Further, the Licensing Authority is not aware of any evidence to suggest that there is an overprovision of PHCs or that such an overprovision is causing an issue.

Furthermore, determining the provision of PHCs is a very different matter from determining the provision of taxis. Unlike taxis, PHCs do not congregate at ranks and therefore an assessment developed by a specialist third party would be required and it likely that ongoing assessments would require to be carried out by this party to keep the data up to date and relevant. The Licensing Authority would respectfully submit that such a process is unnecessary given its view that overprovision of PHCs is not an issue of import.

The Licensing Authority is also concerned that the implementation of this ground of refusal would lead to a value being attributed to a PHC licence. This, in the Authority’s view, would lead to the creation of a cartel like structure. The relative ease of obtaining a licence helps encourage individuals to apply for a licence and therefore gives the Authority an opportunity to vet applicants. If it became known that the supply of licences was effectively at an end, the Authority would be concerned that this would lead to an increase in unlicensed trading.
39. Do you have any views on the section 62 provisions bringing vehicles contracted for exclusive use for 24 or more hours within the licensing regime for taxis and private hire cars, and should any exemptions be included in the Bill?

The Licensing Authority has no specific comment to make in relation to this matter however, would suggest that the Scottish Government considers the matter of vehicles that are hired out for the transport of passengers that do not fall within the definition of taxi/PHC, e.g. limousines and party buses. It is suggested that the licensing of these activities would help secure public safety and drive up standards.

6. Scrap Metal Dealer Licensing

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

40. Taking the proposals in sections 63 to 66 of the Bill together, how will they have the desired effect of strengthening the metal dealers' licensing regime to the extent that metal theft and related criminal activity is reduced?

The Licensing Authority has for some time been concerned with the extent of metal theft at both a local and national level. The Authority’s concern was reflected in its previous consultation response in relation to this matter and it therefore welcomes the Scottish Government proposal to remove the exemption warrant system, the requirements relating to recordkeeping and the imposition of cashless payments. It believes that the introduction of such measures can help build a more robust licensing regime that will assist in preventing the easy disposal of stolen metal through metal dealer premises, many of which are currently under no duty to maintain records or carry out reasonable enquiries as to the source of the metal.

Furthermore, the Licensing Authority recognises that this is not a uniquely Scottish problem and believes it is one that should be tackled on a UK wide basis. It notes that many of proposals within the Bill reflect those contained within the English and Wales’ Scrap Metal Dealers Act 2013, e.g. cashless transactions. As such, the Licensing Authority urges the Scottish Government to adopt these measures. Such a consistent approach will, hopefully, prevent Scotland being targeted by metal thieves who are deterred by the measures in place in England and Wales.

41. In your view, could the Bill be further strengthened in any way, for example, by including an accreditation scheme for metal dealers?
While the Licensing Authority recognises that the vast majority of metal dealers operate within the law and appreciate the difficulty they face in distinguishing legitimate scrap metal from that which is stolen, it does however have concerns as to metal dealers who facilitate metal theft. The Authority believes that an accreditation system can help tackle this culture by improving the standards of the metal dealing industry.

42. Removal of exemption warrant - do you wish to comment on the proposal to remove the exemption warrant system?

The Licensing Authority is strongly supportive of the proposal to remove that the exemption warrant system.

The Authority can see no justification for continuing to provide for an exemption to the licensing requirements based upon turnover. No other licensed activity has such an exemption and it is unclear what the rationale would be for maintaining an exemption in the future to allow any metal dealer the opportunity to remain outwith regulatory control.

43. Removal of requirement to retain metal on-site - what impact will the proposal to remove the retention of metal requirement have on the enforcement of the licensing regime and prevention of criminal activities?
The Licensing Authority is of the view that the retention of metal requirements should be removed as it recognises that such requirements may not be reasonably practical due to the Metal Dealer’s need to turn scrap metal round quickly and also the requirements of the SEPA Licence in respect of its storage.

The Authority notes that its Trading Standards officers are of the view that once metal has been received and processed by a metal dealer, it is difficult to determine and trace its origin. As such, the retention of metal requirements serves little practical purpose and its aims are best served by robust record keeping requirements.

44. Forms of payment - what is your view on the proposal to go 'cashless' and is there merit in considering whether metal dealers could be allowed to operate using cash for only very small transactions, which could be limited to a certain number per month?

The Licensing Authority is supportive of a cashless payment system being applied in respect of all metal and itinerant dealers as the prohibition on cash transactions for the disposal of metal will, hopefully, assist in reducing the likelihood of stolen metal being disposed off through licensed businesses.

The Authority suggests that any exception to the cashless system will only serve to expose the system to abuse. The most straightforward solution is to ban cash payments entirely. Any deviation from the cashless payment system will expose the system to circumvention and thus undermine its purpose.

This, once again, ties in with the Authority’s belief that it is important to view the Licensing Regime in respect of metal dealers on a UK wide basis. It is noted that England and Wales have adopted a cashless payment system and the Licensing Authority would suggest that it is important that Scotland follow suit to ensure that metal thieves are not attracted north of the border to take advantage of cash payments.
45. Forms of identification and record keeping:

In line with the Scrap Metal Dealers Act 2013, the Bill adds additional record keeping requirements to a metal dealer's licence including recording the means by which a seller's name and address was verified and retaining a copy of the document, and the method of payment and a copy of the payment document. The Bill will also require a metal dealer to record information in books with serially numbered pages or by means of an electronic device, and to keep separate records at each place of business. Such information and documents are to be kept for three rather than the current two years.

How important is it that the record keeping requirements reflect those in the Scrap Metal Dealers Act 2013, and do you agree with the Scottish Government that the proposed record keeping requirements are not unduly burdensome?
As the Licensing Authority has stated throughout this document, it is of the view that only by presenting a united front with England and Wales, can metal theft be deterred and combated. And while it does not wish to impose burdensome requirements upon scrap metal dealers however, if Scotland were to adopt more liberal record keeping requirements than England and Wales then the Licensing Authority would be concerned that "regime shopping" would take place whereby organised crime would be attracted to Scotland. This would be due to a perception that it is easier to dispose of stolen scrap metal.

46. Mandatory and discretionary licensing requirements:

The Scottish Ministers can impose mandatory licensing requirements, such as those included in the Bill relating to record keeping and the identification of customers. In addition, local authorities can also attach discretionary requirements to licences in their areas.

Does the Bill get the balance right between mandatory and discretionary licensing requirements? Should the Bill include other mandatory conditions for obtaining a metal dealer's licence, such as installing CCTV at metal dealers' premises or in relation to labelling of metal and "forensic coding"?
While this Licensing Authority does advocate a universally robust approach to the licensing of Metal Dealers, it does recognise the need to allow licensing authorities to attach additional local conditions to reflect the uniqueness and challenges of their own local area. However, at a national level there should be a suitably robust, mandatory scheme which provides for consistency across all licensing authority areas.

With specific reference to the conditions highlighted in the Scottish Government’s above question, the Authority is of the view that these should form mandatory conditions as they are represent the basic standard of crime prevention that should be expected from metal dealers. A failure to impose these basic standards exposes the dealer and therefore the entire supply chain to organised crime. It is the Licensing Authority’s view that mandatory conditions should seek to protect the supply chain from organised crime and therefore a minimum standard should be imposed.
7. Civic Licensing – Theatre Licensing

You may respond to all the questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

47. Will there be any impacts during the transitional period between ending the current theatre licence and starting the public entertainment licence?

While the Licensing Authority welcomes the repeal of the Theatres Act 1968 and the introduction of theatres into the public entertainment licence, the Authority would draw the Scottish Government’s attention to the need for the Authority’s present resolution to be amended. As the Government will be aware, the process to amend could take up to nine months.

The Authority would also suggest that consideration is given to the repeal of the Cinemas Act 1985 and the incorporation of cinemas into the public entertainment licence regime. The Authority notes that England and Wales have both seen the repeal of the 1985 Act.

48. Are there additional costs or resource implications on theatres or licensing authorities?

As outlined above the Licensing Authority is of the view that its current public entertainment resolution will need to be amended. The lapse in time between the repeal of the 1968 Act and the amendment of the resolution will create real practical difficulties for existing theatres. Therefore, the Licensing Authority suggests that the Scottish Government amend the Bill so to provide for the automatic conversion of existing licences to Public Entertainment Licences. A failure to do so will doubtless impact upon existing theatres’ finances.

49. How should licensing authorities integrate their current fee charging structure into their public entertainment regime?
The Licensing Authority assumes that as the licensing of theatres is being incorporated into the public entertainment licence and therefore is then part of the 1982 Act then it will be subject to the charging structure of the said Act.

Name/Organisation: Glasgow City Council

8. Civic Licensing – Sexual Entertainment Venues

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

50. What are the consequences of operating the new licensing regime using the definitions set out at section 68 of the Bill?

- 'sexual entertainment venue'
- 'audience'
- ‘financial gain’
- 'organiser'
- 'premises'
- 'sexual entertainment', and
- 'display of nudity'
Financial gain
The Licensing Authority is concerned that by linking the performance to financial gain this will provide an avenue for venues to argue that performances do not generate any such gain where such an activity is auxiliary to a primary activity, i.e. the sale of alcohol or that the event is free to enter. It is suggested that financial gain is expanded to include where such entertainment is provided auxiliary to another activity where there is a financial gain.

Further, the Authority is concerned that by connecting “financial gain” to the organiser then there may be an argument by the licence holder that the entertainment is done for the financial gain of a self employed performer.

Premises
It is suggested that for the avoidance of doubt, the definition should include reference to private member clubs.

Display of nudity and live performance
In the view of this Authority, the terms “display of nudity” and “live performance” require to be further defined. It is submitted that the aforementioned terms are interlinked and that without clear definition, the term “live performance” is subjective to the reader. It would appear to the Authority that as drafted the definition turns upon the performer’s state of dress. Clear definition is therefore required in order to avoid potential issues regarding interpretation from arising once introduced.

51. The Bill specifies that a venue hosting sexual entertainment on three occasions or less within a 12 month period would not be treated as a sexual entertainment venue: does this have any unintended consequences?
In the view of the Licensing Authority, no such cap should be placed on premises that are used for sexual entertainment. The Authority is of the view that to do so would be contrary to the premise behind the introduction of the proposed licensing provisions and the overarching principles of the 1982 Act, i.e. the preservation of public order and safety and the prevention of crime. It is also the view of this Authority that the potential for criminality can exist during one performance or one hundred performances in a SEV and the number of performances does not reduce that risk. Likewise, the potential for public order and public safety to be compromised can exist during one performance in a SEV or many. SEVs should therefore always be subject to the requisite licensing regime.

Further, in the view of this Licensing Authority, if a cap were to be introduced, it would be extremely difficult to monitor in practice which SEVs had fulfilled their quota of three performances and which had not.

52. Local licensing authorities will be able to set the number of sexual entertainment venues in their area to below the existing level, or zero: are there any advantages or disadvantages to this approach?

Whilst the Licensing Authority acknowledges Glasgow City Council’s policy on violence against women and is acutely aware of the risk of criminality and criminal activities such as exploitation, prostitution and trafficking that can be associated with SEVs, it recognises that these venues currently form part of Glasgow’s economy. This Authority is of the view that the ability to introduce a policy setting a cap at zero should be made available to Local Authorities. Transitional provisions for existing premises would need to be considered and the Authority requests that the Scottish Government explicitly states whether such premises benefit from “grandfather rights”. It is important that there is clarity as to whether these premises’ right to trade can be removed. The Authority would suggest that there is the possibility of extensive litigation taking place in the event that a licensing authority, if it decides to set the level of SEVs at zero, refuses to grant an existing SEV a licence. However, the Authority stands by its view that it is important that Local Authorities have this discretion.

53. The Bill relies mainly on the existing licensing regime for sex shops as set out in section 44 and Schedule 2 of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 (application, notification, objections and representations, revocation of licences etc., enforcement and appeals): is this mechanism adequate for the licensing of sexual entertainment venues - if not, please explain why?

The Licensing Authority is of the view that the 1982 Act is in need of a refresh and that the inclusion of the licensing of SEVs further stretches the Act. However, the Authority is satisfied that the proposed amendments to establish the licensing regime, is a positive move.

The Authority notes that section 45B(5A)(a) of the Bill states that “from time to time” a local authority must determine the appropriate number of SEVs. The Authority suggests that clarification is required as to what factors the Authority can consider in arriving at the appropriate number of SEV and how often it should carry out a review or what should trigger a review of the number of SEVs.

The Authority suggests that detailed consideration requires to be given to the possible introduction of a national mandatory set of conditions for licence holders of a SEV. It is the view of this Authority that such a set of conditions would go some way to establishing a coherent position on the protection of performers in SEVs. This would be particularly useful when dealing with SEV operators running a chain of establishments in different Local Authority areas. Further conditions should include detailed provision regarding the use and operation of CCTV equipment within SEVs as well as the provision of CCTV tapes and equipment to authorised officers of Local Authorities and the police upon request. Conditions regarding advertising and the distribution of promotional materials should also be contained in such a set of conditions as should the impact of such venues upon children and young persons. A condition requiring each SEV to maintain a list of their performers should also be considered.

In the further view of this Licensing Authority, crucial to the operation of a successful SEV licensing regime are transitional provisions for existing premises as well as detailed enforcement provisions. In order to assist with the regulation of SEVs and to help ensure the protection of performers, members of the public in attendance at the SEV and to reduce the risk of criminality, detailed enforcement provisions akin to those provided in Part 3A of the Bill should be introduced, i.e. Civic Licensing Standards Officers. Transfer provisions for which there is no current provision contained within the 1982 Act should also be considered.
54. Are there any barriers to licensing authorities operating the new licensing regime?

The Licensing Authority welcomes the clarity offered by section 45B(6A) of the Bill namely, that a local authority may refuse an application for the grant or renewal of a licence even if the premises has a licence by virtue of a premises licence under the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005.

However, the Licensing Authority would suggest that, for the avoidance of doubt, the above section should be amended to reflect the fact that the presence of any other licence does not prevent the Licensing Authority from refusing an application, i.e. a public entertainment licence.

The Licensing Authority would also welcome clarity from the Scottish Government as to whether sexual entertainment venues that are currently licensed under the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 should be subject to any quasi-grandfather rights in the determination of their applications for SEV Licences. Clear guidance from the Scottish Government would be helpful in ensuring that the Licensing Authority is not embroiled in expensive litigation.

55. Civic Licensing

Do you have any other comments to make on the civic licensing aspects of the Bill?
The Licensing Authority welcomes the creation of the Civic Licensing Standards Officer. However, the Licensing Authority does suggest that the enforcement triggers in the 1982 Act should be revisited with a process analogous to the review system in the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005. Such a process would allow for the CLSOs to intervene and work with licence holders in an educational role.

In keeping with the above matter, the Authority would further suggest that it should have the power to revoke licences under the 1982 Act as opposed to merely suspending the licence for the unexpired portion of it. If a matter is serious enough for the Authority to suspend a licence for the unexpired portion, then it follows that the licence should simply be revoked. This would tie in with the above suggest that a review procedure is put in place.

As referred to in previous answers, the Licensing Authority is of the view that licensing objectives should be introduced in relation to civic licensing, e.g. public disorder and public safety. The introduction of such objectives, would allow the Licensing Authority to make decisions to uphold the licensing objectives that may fall out with the fit and proper person test. Furthermore, such licensing objectives would help inform the drafting of policies.

The Licensing Authority welcomes the introduction of provisions that will enable Local Authorities and Licensing Board to comply with certain aspects of the EU Services Directive that was transposed into UK law in early 2010. Whilst the Authority is supportive of these provisions it notes that further work is required before licensing legislation can be considered fully compliant with EU law – particularly in relation to application fees and licence durations.

By way of example Schedule 2 of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 requires applicants for Sex Shops (and future Sexual Entertainment Venues) to have been resident in the UK for at least 6 months. This is patently at odds with the Directive’s objective of furthering cross-board service provision.
Local Government and Regeneration Committee: Call for Evidence on the Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill

1. COSLA would like to offer the following observations in response to the Local Government and Regeneration Committee’s call for evidence on the Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill.

2. The Bill was considered by the Community Well-Being Executive Group which generally welcomed the intent and content. Several aspects of the Bill are discussed in detail below.

COSLA Vision
3. The single focus of COSLA and local authorities is to improve outcomes for communities. Local government is at the heart of the government’s focus on prevention, service integration and “place”, effective reform and strong local services are more important now than ever. National governance should enhance the ability of local government to achieve this as effectively as possible and deliver those benefits to communities thorough:
   - Empowering local democracy
   - Integration not centralisation led by community planning
   - Focus on outcomes not inputs
   - Local democracy needs to be at the heart of improvement and accountability

Air Weapons
4. COSLA have no concern over the proposal to require licenses for air weapons, provided that sufficient time is given to individuals to apply for licenses and the charge is proportionate. There is however a question as to whether licensing air weapons will deliver the outcome desired, as the main misuse of air weapons is generally from those under 18 this misuse may not be prevented as it is the parents who will hold the license and those under 18 may continue to have access.

Alcohol Licensing
5. COSLA welcomes the return of the “fit and proper person” test in relation to alcohol licensing along with the clarity provided by the changes to how Boards can consider potential overprovision in their areas as this will help in protecting and improving public health, addressing some of the concerns raised around the risk to Boards of legal challenge.

6. There are some concerns that the introduction of a duty for Boards to publish a financial report may be administratively difficult for local authorities depending on current accounting procedures. COSLA does recognise that this increases the transparency and would provide evidence for any future fee increases.

7. COSLA agrees that the requirement for Boards to publish a policy statement within 18 months of a local government election, lasting up to 5 years will result in the policy statements better reflecting the current views of the Licensing Boards.

Submission Number: 133
8. COSLA would also request that this Bill is used as an opportunity to make an amendment to the functions of a Licensing Standards Officer (LSO) as defined in the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 to explicitly make it clear that local authorities can give LSO’s additional functions if they see fit. This would be used to facilitate LSO’s enforcing the Gambling Act (2005), which due to drafting errors, has not been possible in Scotland as it would enable LSO’s to be authorised officers for the purpose of gambling enforcement using the Advice Note which was published by the Gambling Commission. The issue of gambling in Scotland is of concern to both local and national government and we therefore hope that the Scottish Government will support an amendment of this nature to enable enforcement of the Gambling Act in Scotland.

Civic Licensing

Taxis and Private Hire Cars

9. COSLA welcomes the power to refuse to grant private hire car licenses on the grounds of overprovision where a local authority choses to do so and the extension of taxi driver testing to include private hire car drivers.

10. The removal of the contract exemptions to the licensing and regulation of taxis and private hire cars has received a mixed response from local authorities. Those that support the felt that it was necessary to ensure the quality of the service and those who it is provide it. However, those opposed, generally rural councils, felt that bringing contracts into the regime would disincentivise or prevent current providers from continuing to operate, leaving a gap in market or driving up costs. It is therefore requested that the Committee consider giving local authorities the flexibility to decide whether they feel contracts should be exempt within their own areas.

Sexual Entertainment Venues

11. Licensing and regulation is an important work stream in COSLA’s anti-human trafficking work and we welcome the creation of a separate licensing framework for sexual entertainment venues. This new framework gives local authorities proper powers to effectively regulate lap dancing clubs, tackle forced prostitution and minimise the potential for trafficking in human beings.

12. COSLA welcomes the ability of local authorities to determine the number of sexual entertainment venues permitted in their local area, including the power to set the number to zero. We view this as a major advantage in the regulation of such premises and for local decision-making and accountability in Scotland more widely.

13. By giving local licensing authorities capacity to consider local conditions and manage the total number of permitted venues, councils will be able to act on community preference and develop a position that reflects local attitudes. COSLA supports this flexibility which gives autonomy to local councils and supports local democracy.

14. Additionally having oversight of sexual entertainment venues will allow local authorities to regulate more effectively and promote standards that help protect the safety of those working in these establishments. It will also give strength to local authorities’ response to human trafficking with better opportunity to identify exploitative practices.

15. However, COSLA is concerned that the exemption for venues that host sexual entertainment three occasions or less per year will create a loophole and allow organisers to evade licensing by using multiple venues. Trafficking is transitory in nature, often with victims moved from place to place for the purpose of sexual exploitation. This exemption would allow for this occur, unchallenged and is unhelpful in Scotland’s strategic response to human trafficking. COSLA would therefore request that this concession be removed or that local authorities are able to set a lower number of occasions that trigger the requirement for a license if they chose.

Civic Licensing Standards Officer
16. Several Local Authorities have shown support for this proposal due to the success of the Licensing Standards Officer role, however there is the potential that this new role may require some restructuring of current posts with potential cost implications for local authorities. Moreover, although the Bill states these posts are to be funded through license fees this may be difficult to calculate and any increase in fees is likely to affect SME's more. This has resulted in several local authorities objecting the new role. Presently the enforcement of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act is managed across various regulatory services, including Trading Standards and Environmental Health where appropriate, it is suggested that this role should not be mandatory for local authorities.

17. In summary, although COSLA are broadly supportive of the main aims of the Bill we have some concerns around the proposal to remove contract exemptions for licensing of taxies and private hire cars and the introduction of a mandatory Civic Licensing Standards Officer, we feel that both of these should be optional for local authorities so they can best reflect local circumstances and structures.

18. COSLA also request than the opportunity be taken to amend the functions of Licensing Standards Officers to facilitate the enforcement of the Gambling Act in Scotland, this will assist local authority in addressing some of the concerns around problem gambling in communities.
Evidence to the Scottish Parliament’s Local Government and Regeneration Committee:
Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill

Introduction

SSE welcomes the opportunity to respond to the Committee’s call for evidence. SSE is a UK-listed utility and the broadest-based energy company in the UK. SSE is involved in the generation, transmission, distribution and supply of electricity, in the production, storage, distribution and supply of gas, and in other energy services.

SSE, through its electricity distribution and transmission division, Scottish and Southern Energy Power Distribution, owns and operates both the distribution and transmission networks in the north of Scotland and owns and operates the electricity distribution network in central southern England. Across its networks SSEPD own over 100,000 electricity substations and over 130,000km of overhead lines. Through SSE’s renewables division, SSE Renewables, SSE own over 800 onshore turbines and associated infrastructure.

This response predominately relates to SSE’s network businesses, where it has experienced higher instances of metal theft, but should also be considered relevant for its generation assets throughout Scotland.

General comments

SSE strongly supports the Scottish Government’s proposals to better regulate the scrap metal industry which in turn is hoped will help reduce metal theft in Scotland.

Metal theft from electricity networks and generation sites is not just illegal, but is extremely dangerous and irresponsible. It places the lives of the general public, the culprit and engineering staff at risk, not to mention the disruption it causes to homes and businesses who could find themselves without power as a result.

Since the introduction last year of similar metal theft legislation in England and Wales, intelligence suggests that there has been a shift in offending into Scotland. This can take the form of those perpetrating the thefts moving north of the border, or alternatively, committing the crime in England and Wales and disposing of the stolen metal Scotland.

SSE therefore fully supports the earliest possible implementation of this legislation, in as robust a form as possible.

In particular, SSE believes the removal of exemption warrants, tightening of record keeping and customer identification procedures will help significantly deter metal theft and the critical element for the success of the Bill is the removal of cash payments, which SSE strongly supports.

Specific comments on the draft legislation are provided below under the relevant heading for each section of the draft Bill.
Section 63 — Removal of exemption warrants for certain metal dealers
SSE supports proposals to remove the exemption warrants for metal dealers which will introduce and ensure consistency in the transaction and processing of scrap metal across Scotland.

Section 64 — Abolition of requirement to retain metal for 48 hours
Whilst SSE is broadly supportive of the draft legislation as currently drafted, it does have concerns about the proposal to remove the requirement for metal to be retained on site for 48 hours. SSE recognises that despite the best intentions of the legislation it will be extremely difficult to fully prevent future metal theft in Scotland and for this reason, SSE believe it is essential to maintain the existing 48 hour period to help trace and subsequently recover stolen metal before it is processed.

Section 65 — Acceptable forms of payment for metal
SSE believes the proposals to ensure all transactions are ‘cashless’ will greatly assist in helping reduce the transaction of stolen metal within Scotland’s scrap metal industry. However, SSE would recommend the committee looks to learn lessons from the introduction of similar legislation in England and Wales, when very quickly after the introduction of the legislation a number of scrap metal dealers set up parallel business which would cash cheques on site, effectively allowing the ‘cashless’ transaction regulation to be bypassed. SSE would therefore recommend provisions are included within the legislation to prevent this type of activity being replicated in Scotland and to achieve this objective SSE would suggest restricting payment for scrap metal to ‘electronic bank transfers’.

Section 66 — Metal dealers and itinerant metal dealers: records
SSE strongly supports the requirement for greater record keeping which it believes will be crucial to the success of future metal theft prosecutions and will also act as a further deterrent to help prevent future metal theft. SSE believes that the collation and administration of, for example, ID documents used in transactions, is critical to the success of the Bill. SSE believes that the responsibility of identifying customers’ lies firmly with the scrap metal dealer’s to ensure a legitimate supply of materials to their business. This ‘Know Your Customer’ principle should be in the form of a nationally recognised photographic identification, such as a passport or driving licence.

Additional comments

There are a number of other areas which SSE believes the Committee and Scottish Government should consider to help reduce metal theft in Scotland further.

Accreditation scheme
SSE would support the introduction of a Scrap Metal Dealers accreditation scheme. SSE believe this would be a critical step in building faith in the industry in a similar manner to the Achilles financial scheme, which allows customers to conduct business in the knowledge that there is a vastly reduced possibility of criminal activity.

Prosecution and penalties
Whilst the Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill does not include specific provisions regarding the penalties for metal theft SSE believe that utilising the Criminal Procedure Scotland Act 1995 as the basis of prosecution and sentencing does not provide the courts with appropriate sentencing powers. It is SSE’s belief that the maximum available penalties do not reflect the seriousness of the crimes being committed. SSE would therefore recommend the Scottish Government considers increasing the maximum powers available to the courts, which SSE believes would result in a major impact in reducing offending.

Definition
SSE feels the definition of a “dealer” is too specific, in that the requirement to “buy and sell” would preclude, for example, itinerant collectors. SSE therefore believes the Bill would benefit from a broader definition with individual exemptions applied for those falling out of the scope.

Licences / accreditations
Scrap Metal Dealers should be obliged to display licences and accreditations prominently within their premises in a similar vein to a company’s obligation to display public liability notices.

Conclusion
SSE strongly supports the Scottish Government’s intention to better regulate the scrap metal industry in Scotland to help reduce what is a serious, disruptive and extremely dangerous crime and is grateful for the opportunity to contribute to the Committee’s scrutiny of the Bill.

1. Air Weapons Licensing

You may respond to all the questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

13. In what ways will the creation of an air weapons licensing system in Scotland contribute to preserving public order and safety, reducing crime and advancing public health policy?

The criminal use of air weapons can have a devastating effect on those who are victims of that criminality. Criminals have used air weapons to kill and injure people. Pets and wildlife are also targeted by those who use air weapons irresponsibly. Property is also damaged.

It would appear that the contents of the Bill, as it relates to air weapons, is to ensure that those who should not have air weapons will not be authorised to possess them. Applicants will require to be deemed fit to be entrusted with an air weapon and have a good reason for the possession of an air weapon. They will only be permitted to possess an air weapon if their possession of such an air weapon will not pose a danger to the safety of the public or the peace. These tests are already carried out in relation to current firearm certification procedures and assist in minimising the risks associated with irresponsible firearm ownership.

Albeit crime in relation to the misuse of air weapons has fallen in recent years to very low levels, it is anticipated that crime relating the misuse of air weapons will fall further if these weapons are removed from those who are unfit to be entrusted with such weapons. Conversely however, with the introduction of a licensing regime, it will be expected that offences in relation to non certification will outweigh considerably the current crimes, such as reckless discharge of a firearm, as those who have not complied with the legislation are discovered and reported.

With an expected reduction in air weapons availability and the criminalisation of non certification, it would be expected that less people will be injured as a result of the criminal use of air weapons.

14. Is there sufficient provision, or sufficient capacity to provide, suitable numbers of air weapons clubs across all areas of Scotland for use by...
There are already a number of firearm ranges and clubs in Scotland. They are generally well run and comply with the relevant legislation. There has been no police involvement in the licensing of non certificated air weapon ranges. At this time ownership numbers for air weapons are unknown and therefore Police Scotland are not able to provide an assessment on capacity.

15. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for personal/recreational use?

Those who wish to own air weapons will require to have an Air Weapon Certificate (AWC). To acquire such a certificate, application will require to be made to the Chief Constable and a number of checks will be conducted on each application such as the presence of a criminal history or other adverse knowledge. There will be a fee set for the progression of an application. The air weapon will require to be securely stored. People who have a good reason to possess such a weapon will be free to continue their responsible use of it. That said, should the police come into possession of information that a person no longer has a good reason to possess an air weapon or that person is assessed as being a danger to the public safety or the peace, the AWC would be revoked by the Chief Constable. This will be an incentive for continued responsible air weapon ownership.

16. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those aged 14 to 17 who use air weapons?
It is widely recognised that air weapons are very often the first step towards responsible gun ownership and use within the shooting community. There are approximately 60,000 certificates holders in Scotland, the vast majority of who are law abiding citizens who value their access to guns and conduct themselves in a manner commensurate with this responsibility.

Currently a person aged 14 to 17 can borrow an air weapon and ammunition and use an air weapon, without supervision, on private premises where they have permission to use it.

The Bill sets out in Section 7 the conditions which would require to be adhered to when an AWC is issued to a person under 18. Assuming that the Chief Constable attached all of the conditions within Subsection 5 to an AWC, it is suggested that this would hinder the use of air weapons by young people for legitimate reasons. By way of example, a 17 year old student shooting rats with an air weapon in a factory for a friend would be contravening the proposed legislation.

17. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for commercial/professional reasons (for example: for pest control; as part of the tourist/hunting season; as part of fairs, paintballing centre, entertainment sector etc.)?

Apart from requiring an AWC, or visitors permit for those outwith Scotland, there will be little impact upon an individual using an air weapon for business or recreational use. There are, however, some bureaucratic implications in respect of the recording and notifying of the movement of air weapons. These are;

Section 24 – Restrictions on transactions involving air weapons. This section generally reflects Section 3 of the Firearms Act 1968 which deals with Registered Firearms Dealers (RFD). The use of with word transfer, which is subsequently defined as ‘includes let on hire, give, lend and part with possession’ is included in both Section 3 of the 1968 Act and Section 24 of the Bill. A consequence of this is that potentially an individual transferring air weapons could fall under the terms of a dealer and require to be registered as such.

In respect of Section 26 of the Bill, what is the purpose of notifying the Chief Officer of police within 48 hours? This will increase the bureaucratic burden on both the police and the RFD.
18. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for competitive sporting purposes?

Apart from the requirement to obtain an AWC, target shooting, in the appropriate circumstances, would be a good reason.

19. Is it equitable for those applying for an air weapons certificate to pay a fee which cannot be refundable irrespective of whether a certificate is granted or not?

There is a cost to the administration of firearms licensing and the proposals contained in the Bill. It is widely accepted that the cost of administering the current firearms licensing system is not covered by the fees charged and the public purse picks up the difference. The firearms licensing fees have not increased since January 2001.

Police Scotland considers that the 1968 Act, which allows for the full refund of a fee should the application be refused, is an anomaly. In the vast majority of current circumstances, when there are no fit to be entrusted queries or medial matters to be considered, the processing work is straightforward. It appears counterintuitive, when considerable investigative resources are deployed to obtain information which allows the Chief Constable to make an informed decision in respect of refusing an application, that the fee should be returned given the vastly increased costs to the public purse.

It may be considered that an applicant applying for an AWC is paying for the process to take place rather than the actual certificate itself. Conversely, it is not equitable, from the perspective of public funds for a person not to pay for the increased public work when anomalies, which the applicant will likely be aware of, are discovered.

20. Will the air weapons licensing system have a positive or negative impact on other areas of the public sector in Scotland (eg. The work of local government, public agencies etc.)?
The system is solely administered by Police Scotland. Enquiries will likely be required, in a minority of cases, with health professionals in an effort to ascertain medical information. The scale of this cannot be assessed at this time.

21. What, if any, might the unintended consequences of introducing an air weapons licensing system in Scotland be?

Due to the tests involved, there may be an increased application rate for Firearms Certificates under the terms of the 1968 Act as the same tests apply in respect of fitness and good reason.

22. Do you have any other comments to make on air weapons licensing aspects of the Bill?

It is vitally important, from a processing perspective to balance the monthly demand of applications on the police. Section 8 of the Bill states that an AWC shall last for five years. There are a number of Sections thereafter, Section 9 (2) by way of example where the proposed legislation allows for a certificate holder to align their AWC to conclude with their Firearm or Shot Gun Certificate, which may be of a period of less than five years.

In order to smooth the demand, Police Scotland would wish, that for the first AWC only, that the Chief Constable can decide the length of the Certificate. Accepting that there will be a wave of new applications when the legislation is enacted, the current proposals would mean that the same wave is replicated at five year intervals thereafter, causing undue pressure on the police to manage the resources to satisfy the demand. Alternatively, should the Chief Constable have the ability to vary the length of the first certificate, this brings with it the ability to thereafter smooth the demand, allowing for a more efficient and effective service. At the renewal of the first certificates they would revert to five years. This has the effect of stabilising the numbers of AWCs which require to be processed each month thereafter and allows for the effective planning of resources to meet the monthly demand.

It is also to be noted that there is no budgetary provision within Police Scotland to deal with this legislation. Costs will be incurred in the handing in of air weapons, the bureaucratic processes involved in dealing with AWCs and the subsequent management of them. Costs will also be incurred in the provisions of prosecution evidence such as ballistics reports and the criminal justice impact upon reporting individuals for contraventions of the legislation.
3. General Licensing Issues

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

23. Is the current Scottish licensing regime, as set out in the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 and the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005, fit for purpose?

1. Both the LSA 2005 and CGSA 1982 are open to interpretation which has culminated in variations in application of legislation by regulatory authorities across Scotland. An example (LSA 2005) would be where the licence holder is a limited company that has subsequently been dissolved. Legal interpretation on that subject can vary considerably and there remains conflicting views on what action a licensing Board can take. Revised guidance and greater clarity would better inform the application of either act.

2. The CGSA 1982 would benefit from revision, in line with developing business practices, such as Internet taxi bookings, and legislation since enacted (serious organised crime).

3. Neither Act allows regulatory authorities to impose a punitive sanction.

24. Should a licensing system seek to regulate individual behaviour or communities of space (eg. ‘city space’ etc.)?
Yes – Individual behaviour should be regulated and where standards have fallen and/or there is a breach in legislation it is entirely reasonable to hold a licence holder/member of staff to account for any omission or action on their part.

Evidence of conduct, past and present, should also form part of the determination as to whether a licence is granted in the first instance. This would ensure that an individual who may pose a risk to the public is not granted a licence, or in the case of those linked with SOC and criminality, are not legitimised by an inability to regulate and take account of individual behaviour, conduct and associations.

In the absence of individual accountability there would be no incentive to comply with legislation or locally determined policies. This could potentially impinge on regulatory authorities and statutory partner’s ability to ensure standards are met and public safety maintained.

25. In what way should the licensing system in Scotland interact with the support the land use planning system, community planning and regeneration?

Economic growth and regeneration is a priority for every Local Authority and community across Scotland. Regulated and licensable activity will obviously form a considerable part of this. However, economic growth linked to the sale and supply of alcohol should be carefully considered and full cognisance should be taken of the potential wider societal impact.

A holistic approach to the grant of licences, with an emphasis on partnership working and consultation with planning departments; community planning; ADPs, economic regeneration agencies as well as local communities, has the potential to develop a more sustainable and better informed approach to Licensing, representative of local needs and demographics, and plan for the short, medium to longer term growth.

The LSA 2005 presently requires the Licensing Board to produce an over provision policy and to consult with key stakeholders in this process. Through this process there is the potential to develop an overprovision policy that supports expansion of licensed premises in, for instance, city centre areas and/or conversely limit the expansion of licensable activity in areas where there is an evidenced link between overprovision and associated alcohol related offending, vulnerability and health related harm.
26. How does the licensing system in Scotland assist with the delivery of sustainable development and economic balanced areas?

The licensing system affords an opportunity to regulate licensable activity, ensuring there are appropriate checks and safeguards in place and accountability where there has been any legislative breach. However there is also the potential, through considered regulation, to influence the sustainable development of local economies tailored to local requirements.

In terms of the LSA 2005 Licensing Boards are required to include a statement as to the extent to which it considers there to be overprovision of licensed premises and can implement local policies that govern how many pub; club; restaurant and off sale licenses they will grant a licence in a given area. In considering an overprovision policy they must consult with key stakeholders, such as police, health, trade, community and any other persons the Board thinks fit.

Through this consultative approach the grant of a licence, i.e. what type of premises, capacity, existing provision etc would be fully considered by a number of interested stakeholders, balancing economic growth against potential harm.

Developing a local economy on the sale and supply of alcohol may not be socially or economically viable or indeed sustainable and may cause more by way of socio-economic damage that the employment etc it creates.

Overprovision of licensed premises can increase accessibility and availability and, due to competitive pressures, can deflate the retail price of alcohol. Market elements should also be considered when developing local economic and overprovision policies, neither of which are mutually exclusive.

In terms of legislative provision, overprovision policies can substantially influence the economic buoyancy or otherwise, of a locality area and can be extremely positive or negative in terms of health, income generation and deprivation. However regulatory authorities are limited as to what policies they can implement. For instance, there are no legislative powers for overprovision in terms of CGSA 1982 or in areas such as Gambling. As such, an area can, in theory, have an unlimited number of Tanning Salons or Betting establishments.
27. In what way does the licensing system in Scotland support health and planning, addressing health inequalities and public health wellbeing outcomes?

As stated above in terms of the LSA 2005 Licensing Boards are required to include a statement as to the extent to which it considers there to be overprovision of licensed premises and can implement local policies that govern how many pub; club; restaurant and off sale licenses they will grant a licence in a given area. In considering if there is overprovision they must consult with key stakeholders, such as police, health, trade, community and any other persons the Board thinks fit.

Through this consultative approach the grant of a licence, i.e. what type of premises, capacity, existing provision etc would be fully considered by a number of interested stakeholders, taking full consideration of the potential impact on local communities’ health and welfare.

This approach has the potential to positively impact on health related harm linked with alcohol abuse in areas of high deprivation, or where there exists evidence of over selling, over consumption with related offending and vulnerability.

In addition, effective regulation of premises that over sell alcohol and operate against the licensing objectives and legislation, has the potential to improve public health.
4. Alcohol Licensing

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in.
(Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

28. In what ways will the Bill’s provisions on alcohol licensing allow for reductions in crime and the preservation of public order?

1. Amending the licensing objectives to include young persons will potentially enable Licensing Boards (LB) and Police Scotland (PS) to more effectively tackle the sale and supply of alcohol to young persons, associated victimisation and offending.

2. The introduction of Fit and Proper brings Liquor Licensing in line with the CGSA 1982, and allows LB and PS to consider bad character and previous conduct in addition to convictions. However there are limitations in that fit and proper will still be intrinsically linked to the licensing objectives. This may potentially limit the ability to effectively target those linked to and actively involved in SOCG. In applying a fit and proper test to premises licence applicants/holders and connected persons affords comment on more than relevant convictions and fewer limitations as to comments on conduct. It would be advantageous if sec184(2) Criminal Justice and Licensing Scotland Act.2010 or sec 40 (a) LSA 2005 as amended by sec 184 was commenced. This would provide an opportunity to provide comment on interested parties, particularly those linked with SOCG.

3. Extending overprovision to whole areas will potentially facilitate a more holistic approach to the grant of licences, recognising the potential impact on neighbouring communities (particularly where transient populations will be affected).

4. The repeal of section 129 (4) will allow spent convictions to be notified to the LB, better informing the decision making process linked to the licensing objectives. In addition this will further inform if an applicant meets the criteria of fit and proper.

5. The repeal of section 40 A (1) (b) and (2), albeit to date has never been committed, will impinge of PS’s ability to tackle interested parties, such as lease holder, who may be connected or actively involved in SOCG activity. Clarity is sought as to whether the definition of connected person extends to interested parties.
29. Are there any other measures which should be taken to assist in the reduction of crime and the preservation of public order?

Fit and proper - Is there an onus on an individual to prove that he/she is fit and proper?

There is no prescribed definition to determine the criteria for fit and proper, or otherwise. However it is anticipated that being overly prescriptive would potentially be counterproductive.

However financial transparency provides an indication of links with SOCG and it is anticipated that PS would potentially make comment in relation to this when responding to a LB re an applicant’s suitability.

30. In what ways will the provisions in the Bill enhance the licensing objectives set out in the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005?

Including 16-17 year olds within the licensing objectives will enable LBs and PS to more effectively address the sale and supply of alcohol to 16 and 17 year olds. In addition extended the provisions of the Act to include the supply of alcohol to a child or young persons will enable PS to tackle agent purchase. The provisions in the Bill are however limited to public space. As such there is the potential for an adult to supply a young person within a domestic setting, such as drinking dens.

31. In what ways will the re-introduction of the “fit and proper person” test assist with the implementation of the licensing objectives set out in the 2005 act?

Fit and proper test will allow PS to comment on conduct and information held, and potentially spent convictions, better informing the Board when considering whether to approve or refuse a licence.

32. Have there been any unintended consequences arising from the 2005 Act, for example, in rural areas or the economic regeneration of
33. Which, if any, types of spent relevant offences should be required to be disclosed and what do you think the benefits of disclosure will be?

Sexual offences
Crimes of violence
Crimes of dishonesty

Disclosure would better inform the LB’s decision whether to grant/refuse a licence.

34. Do you have any other comments to make on the alcohol licensing aspects of the Bill?

Overprovision –

PS welcome the extension of overprovision to whole areas. However there are inherent limitations within the Act that could thwart the application and enforcement of an overprovision policy.

Home deliveries effectively extend the period in which alcohol can be delivered, i.e. any time except between midnight and 6am. This has the potential to increase availability, accessibility and thereby overprovision (vicariously extending “operating” or terminal hours). The sale, supply and delivery of alcohol should be brought in line with core off sales licensed hours, namely 10 am to 10pm. This would remove any inconsistencies across Scotland and would not be dependant on LB’s policies, including overprovision.

In addition if a LB determines an overprovision policy in a given area that includes home deliveries, a neighbouring Board may not take a similar position. This has the potential to undermine what the Licensing Board set out to achieve.
5. Taxi and Private Hire Car Licensing

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

35. What benefits should the licensing of taxis and private hire cars deliver for customers?

The Licensing of taxis and private hire cars should ensure that customers have a level of comfort around the suitability of the drivers and condition of vehicles used in this industry.

The licensing regime ensures that legitimate business thrives and provides opportunity to prevent organised crime groups from gaining a foothold in this industry.

36. In what ways do customers, providers of taxi/private hire car services and local authorities benefit from the two-tier licensing regime for taxis and private hire cars?

No View

37. The Government states that a radical overhaul of the current two-tier licensing regime would “clearly require a very high level of resource and would cause significant disruption for the trade, local authorities, the police and ultimately the travelling public”. What are your views on this and would the potential costs and disruptions outweigh any potential benefits of a unified system?
From a police perspective the same scrutiny and application of legislation is applied in respect of both taxi types.

38. Do the changes made by sections 60 (overprovision of private hire car licences) and 61 (testing of private hire car drivers) of the Bill strike the right balance in terms of introducing greater consistency while maintaining justifiable differences?

No view.

39. Do you have any views on the section 62 provisions bringing vehicles contracted for exclusive use for 24 or more hours within the licensing regime for taxis and private hire cars, and should any exemptions be included in the Bill?

No view.

6. Scrap Metal Dealer Licensing

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

40. Taking the proposals in sections 63 to 66 of the Bill together, how will they have the desired effect of strengthening the metal dealers’ licensing regime to the extent that metal theft and related criminal activity is reduced?

It is anticipated that the proposed amendments, as outlined in the Bill, will improve current business practices and allow this industry to be more effectively regulated, deterring criminals and opportunists who seek to exploit current legislative gaps.

Greater controls over payment methods, record keeping, identity checks and record keeping will certainly benefit legitimate enterprise. Furthermore the removal of exemption warrants ensures that all metal dealers, including those who trade in precious/semi precious metals, will now be licensed, affording greater scrutiny and compliance.
41. In your view, could the Bill be further strengthened in any way, for example, by including an accreditation scheme for metal dealers? The following considerations may further improve industry regulation and deter criminal/opportunist exploitation:

1. Standardised conditions, such as CCTV standards;
2. The potential repeal of sec 31 places restrictions on LAs ability to effectively regulate all metal dealers. Local authorities should have the ability, and associated powers, to make addition requirements, such as determine the retention period for holding metal prior to disposal. This is particularly valid for crime prevention purposes in relation to the trade in precious/semi precious metals;
3. Stipulating requirement for photographic ID and address verification (such as utility bill, council tax);
4. Licence must be stored on the premises and produced to a constable immediately on request;
5. Every individual should hold a personal licence, allowing accountability and appropriate action to be taken, in addition to fulfilling training requirement.

42. Removal of exemption warrant - do you wish to comment on the proposal to remove the exemption warrant system?

Police Scotland supports the proposal to remove the exemption warrant system. This will enhance crime prevention and disruption activity and allow the police to enter and inspect metal dealers at any time.

The current exemption system is potentially open to exploitation. For instance, a company can technically circumvent control under CGSA 1982, particularly umbrella companies who obtain a franchise under a global name whereby the total income exceeds the required exemption figure but individually would fall below this amount.

Removal of the exemption would place all businesses under the same legislative requirements and standards.

43. Removal of requirement to retain metal on-site - what impact will the proposal to remove the retention of metal requirement have on the enforcement of the licensing regime and prevention of criminal activities?

A retention period of 48 hrs should be mandatory, not include Saturday or Sundays, and all metal purchases should be stored on site. This permits police powers to enter and inspect for the purpose of crime prevention and investigation (where there has been an allegation of theft/reset), especially where a business trades in precious/semi precious metals.

44. Forms of payment - what is your view on the proposal to go 'cashless' and is there merit in considering whether metal dealers could be allowed to operate using cash for only very small transactions, which could be limited to a certain number per month?

No minimum amount should be cashless and cash payments would still cause issues within this industry. The opportunity to exploit cash loop holes could potentially increase with the addition of minimum cash payment, i.e. for those unscrupulous traders, payment for a larger, more valuable item could be made by a number of small cash payment transactions, and would also encourage low level offending.

In addition, linked activity, such as cheque cashing facilities sub let on a premise, should be legislated for, reducing the opportunity and real potential for cash to remain part of day to day business.
45. Forms of identification and record keeping:

In line with the Scrap Metal Dealers Act 2013, the Bill adds additional record keeping requirements to a metal dealer's licence including recording the means by which a seller's name and address was verified and retaining a copy of the document, and the method of payment and a copy of the payment document. The Bill will also require a metal dealer to record information in books with serially numbered pages or by means of an electronic device, and to keep separate records at each place of business. Such information and documents are to be kept for three rather than the current two years.

How important is it that the record keeping requirements reflect those in the Scrap Metal Dealers Act 2013, and do you agree with the Scottish Government that the proposed record keeping requirements are not unduly burdensome?

The proposed record keeping requirements are not unduly burdensome; however there remain concerns regarding what proof of identification is taken and how it is recorded.

Photographic identification and proof of address (such as utility bill, council tax) should be the industry standard.

Retaining records on data systems can lend itself to data manipulation and concealment and the preferred option would be hard copy back up records or hard copy receipts with serial numbers.

Records should be retained for three years.
46. Mandatory and discretionary licensing requirements:

The Scottish Ministers can impose mandatory licensing requirements, such as those included in the Bill relating to record keeping and the identification of customers. In addition, local authorities can also attach discretionary requirements to licences in their areas.

Does the Bill get the balance right between mandatory and discretionary licensing requirements? Should the Bill include other mandatory conditions for obtaining a metal dealer’s licence, such as installing CCTV at metal dealers’ premises or in relation to labelling of metal and ‘forensic coding’?

CCTV should be a standard and mandatory condition, to the satisfaction of the Chief Constable, otherwise standards may vary across Scotland. Labelling metal and forensic coding will also account for the provenance of any transaction and make it more traceable.
7. Civic Licensing – Sexual Entertainment Venues

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

50. What are the consequences of operating the new licensing regime using the definitions set out at section 68 of the Bill?

- 'sexual entertainment venue'
- 'audience'
- 'financial gain'
- 'organiser'
- 'premises'
- 'sexual entertainment', and
- 'display of nudity'
Sexual Entertainment Licence

If enacted there will be a dual licensing for sexual entertainment venues and (alcohol) licensed premises, however this could address the subsequent developments in case law (namely Brightcrew) that has restricted LB’s capability to specifically address issues within licensed premises relating to the sale and supply of alcohol only and not any other activity ongoing on those premises. It may be necessary for a premises licence’s operating plan to make reference to the sexual entertainment however it would be for the SEV licence to regulate how that activity is carried out.

The conditions sought on any SEV licence may need to make reference to the alcohol licence and vice versa and any issues encountered would technically be dealt with by two separate bodies within the Local Authority (Liquor licensing board and the Regulatory Functions committee.) Whilst there is a need for dual licence arrangements, there may be technical difficulties encountered with separating the requirements of the two issuing authorities and there may be a need to ensure that terminal times for both licences are commensurate and that ‘activities’ licensed by the Local Authority only take place within mutually licensed times. There may be separate inspection regimes for both licences held and the Scottish Government needs to ensure that the powers conferred to Local Authority Officers are cross transferable. Typically the Local Authority licensing Standards Officer (LSO) works in tandem with civic enforcement officers, however their respective ‘powers’ of entry and inspection will require to be the same in order to overcome potential legal challenge.

In the event of a suspension or revocation of an alcohol licence, there needs to be a consideration that licensed activities may still continue, where alcohol is not sold, but “bring your own bottle” could technically continue within the premises until a hearing by the other committee can be concluded.

Audience

An audience of one should be applied. Many premises regularly referred to as ‘lap dancing’ venues operate private booths that facilitate titillation on a one to one basis.

Local Authorities should not be given the opportunity to decide whether they wish a regulatory regime for sexual entertainment venues, they should be required to have one. Given the diverse approach regarding local authorities management of SEV’s under public entertainment or alcohol licences there should be little discretion in any new regulatory regime.
Furthermore, national consideration as to what does and does not define adult entertainment needs to be established (as the legislation covering licensing is a national statute and should not be subject to regionalisation). It is clear that any developments may be subject to litigation and we may find further complications in case law, with different interpretations of local authority policy being tested in appeal courts with contrasting outcomes (see Tesco v Aberdeen and Glasgow) Ministers should consider comprehensive mandatory conditions in order to ensure a consistency of approach across the entire country rather than leaving the majority of conditions within the discretion of Local authorities to appoint local conditions. A policy document along similar lines to the Home Office Sexual Entertainment Venues Guidance for England and Wales would also be welcomed.

Advertising including flyers / bill posters /online advertising for any licensed premises shall not portray any sexualised image, nakedness of any figure or any other image that any reasonable person would find inappropriate etc., or alternatively, any promotional advert shall consist of text only, the only advertising image being permissible being any commercial logo of the licence holder. Any advertisement will clearly indicate the licence number of the premises.

In line with other aspects of the Civic Gov legislation, SG should strongly consider that ‘individuals’ taking part in a performance or working within the venue as a performer (whether for payment or not) shall apply for and be granted a personal licence and be licensed by the Local Authority, in addition to the venue being licensed. This will enable greater protection to performers /patrons as well as deter human trafficking which this area has allegedly occurred previously. A ‘personal licence’ will ensure participants are:

- fit and proper
- have a right to work in UK
- identity confirmed
- permit cross reference with other Local Authority data sets

This will ensure that the same protections are in place as taxi drivers, window cleaners etc.

Recommended mandatory conditions that provide consistency re the following would also be welcome:

1. External Appearance of the Premises and Public Displays of Information
2. Control of Entry to the Premises

3. Conduct of performers and Rules relating to performances of sexual entertainment and nudity permitted

4. The protection of performers and the prevention of crime on the premises

5. Record Keeping and Management

6. CCTV

51. The Bill specifies that a venue hosting sexual entertainment on three occasions or less within a 12 month period would not be treated as a sexual entertainment venue: does this have any unintended consequences?

A similar system to occasional licences for alcohol should be prescribed for premises wishing to only operate on one or two occasions. There is also the potential that this may be open to exploitation by performers (such as touring production) who may conduct a performance for one night only, but may perform on town and cities on consecutive nights across the country.

52. Local licensing authorities will be able to set the number of sexual entertainment venues in their area to below the existing level, or zero: are there any advantages or disadvantages to this approach?
Local Authorities should be allowed to decide how many premises are allowed in a given area including a figure of zero. However, they should be required to publish a policy for sexual entertainment venues outlining their rationale for each element of the policy.

Each local authority should have a requirement to produce a ‘Statement of SEV’ policy, which will provide the evidential basis underpinning their policy. Any presumption of rebuttal will be open to challenge and may potentially be counter productive / open to protest unless it is published with a statement of reasons and with transparency. Local Authorities that seek to grant SEV licences should include detail of any areas where applications are acceptable/tolerated and where provision of a SEV would not be permissible (e.g. within radius of schools, vulnerable locations etc) This will also inform the community / local residents of what can be expected within an area.

Any policy decision to remove Adult entertainment from a local authority area will require transitional arrangements within a reasonable time frame.

53. The Bill relies mainly on the existing licensing regime for sex shops as set out in section 44 and Schedule 2 of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 (application, notification, objections and representations, revocation of licences etc., enforcement and appeals): is this mechanism adequate for the licensing of sexual entertainment venues - if not, please explain why?

See response to Q 50.

54. Are there any barriers to licensing authorities operating the new licensing regime?

40. Taking the proposals in sections 63 to 66 of the Bill together, how will they have the desired effect of strengthening the metal dealers' licensing regime to the extent that metal theft and related criminal activity is reduced?

Network Rail, along with a wide coalition of companies across the economy, has been campaigning for several years to tackle metal theft. We welcome the proposed tightening of the law in Scotland.

Broadly we believe that the law in Scotland should be as close as possible under Scottish law to that passed recently for England and Wales, to minimise any attempts to take advantage of differing legislation either by organised crime groups which are able to coordinate and understand the law and exploit this or opportunistic thieves. These amendments will help to achieve this outcome.

41. In your view, could the Bill be further strengthened in any way, for example, by including an accreditation scheme for metal dealers?

While we would support an accreditation scheme, but this should not be seen as an alternative to legislation.

As has been pointed out elsewhere, the definition of a dealer and itinerant dealer contains a requirement that they “buy and sell metal”. This does not take into account parts of the market, such as itinerant dealers, who collect metal door to door. We would recommend that the definitions underpinning the legislation capture all metal dealing.

We would support the proposals from the British Transport Police and Police Scotland to introduce a national register of metal dealers (including itinerant metal dealers) which could be accessed by enforcement agencies.

42. Removal of exemption warrant - do you wish to comment on the proposal to remove the exemption warrant system?
43. Removal of requirement to retain metal on-site - what impact will the proposal to remove the retention of metal requirement have on the enforcement of the licensing regime and prevention of criminal activities?

We support the view that retaining metal for a period of 48 hours will be of assistance to law enforcement and should have a limited impact on trade.

44. Forms of payment - what is your view on the proposal to go 'cashless' and is there merit in considering whether metal dealers could be allowed to operate using cash for only very small transactions, which could be limited to a certain number per month?

Network Rail supports the proposal to have a "cash-less" system and does not agree that there would be merit in allowing any transactions, no matter how small, to be carried out by cash. On the contrary, with the cash ban in place in England and Wales allowing cash sales in small volume would simply present a loophole for cross-border sales of stolen metal and undermine efforts to tackle thefts in Scotland.
45. Forms of identification and record keeping:

In line with the Scrap Metal Dealers Act 2013, the Bill adds additional record keeping requirements to a metal dealer’s licence including recording the means by which a seller’s name and address was verified and retaining a copy of the document, and the method of payment and a copy of the payment document. The Bill will also require a metal dealer to record information in books with serially numbered pages or by means of an electronic device, and to keep separate records at each place of business. Such information and documents are to be kept for three rather than the current two years.

How important is it that the record keeping requirements reflect those in the Scrap Metal Dealers Act 2013, and do you agree with the Scottish Government that the proposed record keeping requirements are not unduly burdensome?
All dealers should face the same requirements. These should be proportionate but also sufficiently rigorous to strongly discourage dealers from risking dealing in stolen metal.

With the change in the law in England and Wales, the requirements for records in Scotland should aim to be as close as possible under Scottish law to eliminate any potential for criminals to take advantage of laxer rules on one side of the border, and of course to not unduly burden dealers on one side or the other of the border.

The period for retaining records should be long enough to provide evidence of regular breaches of the law. The law in England and Wales requires records to be kept for three years, which seems enough to detect patterns of wrongdoing but not unduly burdensome for businesses.

In addition, Network Rail considers that record keeping requirements which reflect those in the Scrap Metal Dealers Act 2013 would be preferable to having two potentially different record-keeping systems as many businesses and organisations, including Network Rail, operate both within Scotland and in England and Wales. Therefore, having a common system will lead to more consistency in the records being kept which may make it easier to track metal which has moved from one country to another.

46. Mandatory and discretionary licensing requirements:

The Scottish Ministers can impose mandatory licensing requirements, such as those included in the Bill relating to record keeping and the identification of customers. In addition, local authorities can also attach discretionary requirements to licences in their areas.

Does the Bill get the balance right between mandatory and discretionary licensing requirements? Should the Bill include other mandatory conditions for obtaining a metal dealer's licence, such as installing CCTV at metal dealers' premises or in relation to labelling of metal and 'forensic coding'?

All mandatory conditions should be consistent with those contained within the Scrap Metal Dealers Act 2013.

1. Air Weapons Licensing

You may respond to all the questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

13. In what ways will the creation of an air weapons licensing system in Scotland contribute to preserving public order and safety, reducing crime and advancing public health policy?

I do not believe it will contribute in any significantly positive way. Adequate laws already exist to ensure that persons misusing airguns are prosecuted and punished without there being any need for more legislation.

Since the introduction of the VCR Act firearms crime has fallen substantially. This is due to the vast majority of airgun users being responsible and law-abiding individuals.

Remember that licensing did nothing prevent the massacres that took place at Hungerford, Dunblane, and more recently in Cumbria. In each case the weapons used were all legally owned and licensed.

Public health may in fact suffer as a result of a reduction in the numbers of pest species such as rats and pigeons that are killed by airgun users under the General License.

14. Is there sufficient provision, or sufficient capacity to provide, suitable numbers of air weapons clubs across all areas of Scotland for use by registered air weapons owners/users?

Most certainly not, especially in more rural areas.

In my own personal case an each-way journey of 97 miles is required to visit my nearest airgun club at Strathpeffer.

15. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for personal/recreational use?
Many airgun owners practice their sport in their back gardens shooting at paper targets. This is a very safe activity that does not require regulation.

Under the proposed scheme this activity may become criminalised.

It should be noted here that the new scheme only applies to sub-12ft/lb equivalent airguns. More powerful airguns are already covered under the existing firearms licensing scheme.

16. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those aged 14 to 17 who use air weapons?

The scheme may discourage the numbers of young people taking up the sport.

As the recent Commonwealth Games in Glasgow demonstrated, shooting is a popular sport.

Introducing young people to airguns is a good way to teach them respect and safe handling practices for all firearms.

17. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for commercial/professional reasons (for example: for pest control; as part of the tourist/hunting season; as part of fairs, paintballing centre, entertainment sector etc.)?

Pest control professions will no doubt seek and obtain the necessary registration however a substantial amount of the pest control that takes place in Scotland is done by amateur shooters using airguns.

If this is caused to stop then a substantial increase in the number of pest species will be the result along with the knock-on effect on crop damage and public health.

18. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for competitive sporting purposes?
Professional sporting persons will no doubt carry on as at present, albeit with additional cost, however it is the recreational sports person who will suffer as a result of potentially being deprived of their principle practice area – their gardens. The details of the scheme are very vague in this area, failing to denote the size of land that it would permit shooting to take place upon.

I, for instance, own an acre of land that surrounds my home. Would this be considered to be a garden and thus outlawed for shooting?

This would be despite the fact that I practice safe pest control on it as it is also used for the grazing of chickens and pigs, as well as for cultivation.

19. Is it equitable for those applying for an air weapons certificate to pay a fee which cannot be refundable irrespective of whether a certificate is granted or not?

No. Under the present shotgun certificate scheme if a license is not granted then the fee is returned. I can see no reason why this should be otherwise for an airgun licensing scheme.

20. Will the air weapons licensing system have a positive or negative impact on other areas of the public sector in Scotland (eg. The work of local government, public agencies etc.)?

The scheme would have a significant negative impact upon the police force whose job it would be to process each application for an airgun license.

As was noted earlier, gun crime in Scotland has fallen considerably in recent years and so this would appear to place an unnecessary burden upon our already over-stretched police service.

21. What, if any, might the unintended consequences of introducing an air weapons licensing system in Scotland be?
Many airgun users may decide that the additional cost and inconvenience are sufficient for them to decide to obtain a shotgun certificate instead. This would result in there being substantially more true firearms in private ownership than presently.

The introduction of this scheme could (and probably would) force a large number of people to give up their sport leading to a glut of airguns appearing on the market for sale. This would in turn drive down the market prices leading to a significant financial loss for many people. It would seem only fair that they would seek compensation from the Scottish Government for this loss.

22. Do you have any other comments to make on air weapons licensing aspects of the Bill?

I believe the proposed bill is being introduced not in the interests of reducing crime – this has already fallen considerably in recent years – but more for political reasons: a desire by the Justice Minister to ‘be seen to be doing something’, particularly in the wake of the tragic death of Andrew Morton.

There has been no evidence presented to show that licensing of airguns will have any detectable impact upon the small number of incidents that are still taking place.

4. Alcohol Licensing

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

28. In what ways will the Bill’s provisions on alcohol licensing allow for reductions in crime and the preservation of public order?

The creation of new offences of giving, or making available, alcohol to a child or young person for consumption in a public place is welcomed by the Forum and will be a useful tool in ensuring alcohol is consumed in a responsible and appropriate manner.

It is foreseen that this change will increase public reassurance and will have a positive effect on younger generations.

29. Are there any other measures which should be taken to assist in the reduction of crime and the preservation of public order?

Currently anyone can apply for a license in Midlothian even if they have no link to the area. This created challenges for crime and disorder as the Council granting the license application doesn’t necessarily have an interest in the area in which the license will be used. For example individuals from Edinburgh may apply for a license in Midlothian to speed up the process.

It is suggested that a different approach should be put in place to ensure local ownership and responsibility. Which would assist Licensing Board’s across Scotland to ensure only “fit and proper” people are granted licences. One method of this would be for a local licensing Board to only accept applications from those who live or work in the area.

30. In what ways will the provisions in the Bill enhance the licensing objectives set out in the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005?
Amendment of the duration of a licensing policy statement to align with the term of Local Government elections is a positive change. This will allow the Council’s licensing Policy to align with the Single Midlothian Plan ensuring greater streamlining of key objectives.

31. In what ways will the re-introduction of the “fit and proper person” test assist with the implementation of the licensing objectives set out in the 2005 act?

Ensuring those who are granted licenses are ‘fit and proper persons’ will impact positively on the way premises are run. This will assist with achieving community safety objectives and support economic development; both have relevance to crime and antisocial behaviour through cost of crime to local economy.

32. Have there been any unintended consequences arising from the 2005 Act, for example, in rural areas or the economic regeneration of areas?

There have been discussions in relation to the level of local supply and demand for more licensed premises and the economic impact this has. This has to be demonstrated.

33. Which, if any, types of spent relevant offences should be required to be disclosed and what do you think the benefits of disclosure will be?
34. Do you have any other comments to make on the alcohol licensing aspects of the Bill?

8. Do you consider that the Bill has any implications for meeting Scotland’s climate change commitments? Please explain.

9. Do you consider that the Bill has any implications for meeting Scotland’s equality and/or human rights commitments? Please explain.

The clauses on the regulation of Sexual Entertainment Venues has implication for minority sexual rights. EU Court of Human Rights cases have been interpreted to suggest that there is a right to buy and sell sexual entertainment and/or products (see Belfast City Council v. Miss Behavin’ Ltd (Northern Ireland) [2007] UKHL 19 (25 April 2007) and that licensing must not impinge on freedom of sexual expression unless there is a clear justification for doing so in terms of the municipal or civil interest. This implies there is a duty for local authorities implementing the licensing system to be mindful of the rights of individuals to view or provide sexual entertainment, both of which are lawful activities. This may be particularly important in the context of venues targeting LGBT audiences, though the general principle should be the same when considering the rights of all adults to consume or perform Sexual Entertainment: unless there is a clear justification for preventing this happening, particularly in terms of preventing crime and disorder; securing public safety; preventing public nuisance; protecting children from harm; and protecting and improving public health, refusal of licenses for sexual entertainment venues might be deemed as unreasonable in the terms of human rights. Regulation must always be proportionate and reasonable, and mindful of impacts on different social groups, even if large sections of the community find the behaviour of such groups objectionable or immoral.

10. Do you consider that the Bill has any implications for preventative spending and/or public services reform? Please explain.
11. Do you consider that the Bill has any implications in relation to European Union issues? Please explain.
As (9) above. EU Human Rights cases suggest the burden must be on the governmental (municipal) power to justify its regulation of businesses in clear terms in cases where that regulation appears to impinge on freedom of expression.

The danger of introducing a separate licensing system is that it may appear contrary to the 2009 EU services directive if it appears that particular commercial premises are being subject to regulation that is disproportionate. If the introduction of a licensing system for sexual entertainment were read as in any way introducing ‘unnecessary or excessively complex and burdensome procedures, the duplication of procedures…the arbitrary use of powers by the competent authorities’ or ‘disproportionate fees and penalties’ it would be seen as contrary to section 45 of the 2009 EU Services Directive and could be prone to legal challenge on this basis. Any system of licensing of sexual entertainment must be proportionate and non-discriminatory against sex businesses given the regulation of sexual behavior and personal liberties is only justified when this regulation serves another governmental objective which is rational and reasonable (e.g. the protection of children or the improvement of public health). These principles are underlined in Belfast City Council (Appellants) v. Miss Behavin’ Limited (Respondents) (Northern Ireland) (2007), where it was established that certain human rights to expression and rights to use of land can be overridden when it serves other stated governmental goals. Here, the onus is nonetheless on the government concerned to clearly state the goals which the regulatory act is designed to meet. It is also relevant here to note Hemming v Westminster City Council (2013), which ruled that fees must be proportionate and reasonable, and cannot be justified with reference to the operation of a licensing regime, only the cost of an individual application.

In sum, if a new licensing regime is introduced, its intentions and objectives must be clearly stated; its procedures must be clear and any licence fee must be proportionate with the work undertaken to process an application and not in any way designed to discourage applications of this type. If such safeguards are not taken there is a risk that regulation will be challenged via European courts or with reference to EU Human Rights legislation.

6. Civic Licensing – Sexual Entertainment Venues

You may respond to all questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

50. What are the consequences of operating the new licensing regime using the definitions set out at section 68 of the Bill?

- ‘sexual entertainment venue'
- ‘audience'
- ‘financial gain'
- ‘organiser'
- ‘premises'
- ‘sexual entertainment', and
- ‘display of nudity'
These definitions are relatively clear. However, the definitions as currently offered might extend to However, contrary to the above, it may be worth noting that a number of premises may also fall into the definition of an SEV which have not been considered to be the object of regulation by those drawing up these guidelines. Three instances may be highlighted:

Gay saunas or encounter venues: if a man pays a fee to enter a (gay) male sauna, and then another man strips off in front of him with the intention of sexually stimulating him, there is both nudity, an audience, and financial gain on behalf of the premise owner. Likewise, in some gay clubs there are dark rooms and dance floors where customers may strip with the intention of exciting and stimulating others around them. In Lambeth there are a number of venues of this type licensed as SEVs.

Massage parlour: when a customer pays for a massage, and the masseur performs in a naked or semi-naked state, this may fall within the remit of the definition as currently given. This is problematic given the ambiguous nature of brothels and massage parlours in Scottish law – while brothels are of course illegal, licensed massage parlours are known to be spaces where sex is negotiated between consenting adults for a fee. In such spaces, sexual entertainment could be said to be performed for an audience (albeit, an ‘audience of one’). No premises of this type have been licensed as SEVs in England & Wales though very many could be interpreted as falling into the category as defined.

Swinger’s clubs: there may be swinging venues or sex party venues where organisers charge visitors a fee to attend, and where consenting adults strip to sexually stimulate others. These may fall under the definition of an SEV as currently defined: at present just one club in England & Wales of this type has been licensed (La Chambre, Sheffield).

It should be noted that some of these spaces will not be licensed for the sale of alcohol, but this does not mean that they should escape the remit of the need for licensing as outlined in the Bill. The consequences of introducing licensing must require local authorities to consider if such premises exist in the locale, as regarding such premises as outwith the law is potentially legally unreasonable.

Section 45b could be modified to clarify that the licensing of Sexual Entertainment Venues is in no way related to alcohol licensing; at the moment it implies that the granting of a licence for Sexual Entertainment should not be influenced by the refusal or granting of an alcohol licence. This is presumably relevant in the context of Brightcrew Ltd v City of Glasgow Licensing Board [2011] CSIH 46 in which it was determined that liquor licensing boards should have no say over matters incidental to alcohol sales.

The point is more fundamental: sexual entertainment licensing relates to premises that might not previously have been within the ambit of licensing per se. The meaning of 45(A) clause 11 is pivotal here given Scottish ministers will be able to exempt some displays of nudity from the licensing regime, but this power needs to be carefully deployed.
51. The Bill specifies that a venue hosting sexual entertainment on three occasions or less within a 12 month period would not be treated as a sexual entertainment venue: does this have any unintended consequences?

The justification for this is not clear, and differs from England & Wales. However, this would require any premise providing more than 3 days of sexual entertainment to seek a licence, which will mean that venues providing monthly striptease will need a licence, which is not the case in England & Wales.

On the basis of my research, I would suggest that any venue that offers sexual entertainment less than once a month is unlikely to be perceived by the public as a sexual entertainment venue.

52. Local licensing authorities will be able to set the number of sexual entertainment venues in their area to below the existing level, or zero: are there any advantages or disadvantages to this approach?
The thrust of the proposed legislation, which mirrors that in England & Wales, suggests that this is the case, with case law suggesting that local authorities are able to make judgments about where is, and where is not, a suitable locality based on their interpretation of the contingencies of individual situations. R (KVP ENT LTD) v South Bucks DC (2013) and R (Alistair Lockwood-Thomson) v Oxford CC (2013) both imply that the discretion available to licensing committees/boards is considerable indeed: this means they can rule a locality inappropriate on the basis of their interpretation of the current and future uses of land. While the decision must be rational and reasonable in light of the facts of the case, it does not appear that licensing committees or boards have to be strictly guided by the weight of local objections, and may overrule or discount objections made by other relevant authorities, including the police. In England and Wales, licences of this type have been granted contrary to the advice of police, and in some cases contrary to the advice of licensing officers. Equally, licenses have been refused by local authorities where there have been no objections or evidence of criminality or poor management.

My analysis of the licensing of SEVs in England and Wales hence leads me to the conclusion that the relevant authority may be accused of exercising an arbitrary power – with no right of appeal – unless any decision is justified clearly in relation to governmental and licensing objectives: to avoid any accusations of unfair and discriminatory decision making the onus is on the local authority to advertise clearly that an application has been made; to solicit the opinions of local people and provide opportunities for representations to be received and to provide as much guidance to applicants as is possible prior to application as to what relevant considerations might be in a given case. Clearly, stipulating a nil limit is defensible within the law, but the presumption of a nil limit without careful consideration of possible locations where an SEV might be permissible would appear to be prejudicial towards this type of business. Considering each case on its merits would appear to be more appropriate than setting a de facto nil limit at the outset for the area under the jurisdiction of the local authority.

53. The Bill relies mainly on the existing licensing regime for sex shops as set out in section 44 and Schedule 2 of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 (application, notification, objections and representations, revocation of licences etc., enforcement and appeals): is this mechanism adequate for the licensing of sexual entertainment venues - if not, please explain why?

The procedures are clear and defensible. There have been few cases in Scotland which suggest that the procedures for licensing sex shops have not been fit for purpose.

54. Are there any barriers to licensing authorities operating the new licensing regime?

The requirement that local authorities must ‘from time to time’ determine the appropriate number of SEVs appropriate to their area and each relevant locality is a vague requirement which does not specify how often this must occur, and the extent to which this must reflect local opinion (e.g. must there be consultation?) In the absence of such determinations, local authorities should endeavour to consider each case on its merits. In a legal sense, it seems legally unreasonable to specify a nil limit for a local authority area without considering all possible localities in which SEVs might be sited. This requires local authorities to specify relevant localities at the outset if they decide to go down this route, and demonstrate that all are unsuitable. Without such justification, nil limits will prove difficult to uphold.

The effect of clothing on air rifle pellet penetration depth into 10% ballistic gelatine

Jonathan Thomson, School of Science, Engineering & Technology
Abertay University, Bell Street, Dundee, DD1 1HG

Introduction

Air weapons have been present throughout history in a variety of forms, from blow pipes to air rifles. In Britain, there has been interest to introduce legislation in order to control these weapons as far back as the sixteenth century.

While they do have a range of genuine uses, from hunting and pest control to sport; the police in Scotland in 2012-13, recorded 171 offences in which an air rifle was alleged to have been involved. These crimes include intimidation and vandalism, however, as many people regard air rifles as toys, air weapons are commonly misused, which results in injuries and even fatalities.

This project was carried out in order to determine whether or not common items of clothing (a t-shirt, fleece and jacket) could reduce the penetration depth of two different air rifle pellet types; a rounded tip (superdome) and a flat head (hobby) (figure 1), at three different ranges (10, 15 and 20 yards) from a wound that could prove fatal, to a wound which would only inflict a minor injury.

Method

10% blocks of ballistic gelatine were prepared using Fluka® type 1 ballistic ordinance gelatine powder.

6 penetration depths for both pellet types at all 3 ranges were obtained and averaged in order to collect control data.

6 penetration depths were then obtained for both pellet types at all 3 ranges from gelatine blocks encased in a t-shirt, a fleece and a jacket. These values were then compared to the control penetration values in order to deduce the decrease in penetration and if this would be enough in order to avoid a fatal wound.

Results & Discussion

The penetration depths achieved by the superdome pellet at all three ranges were deep enough to reach vital organs and could result in a fatal wound (figure 2).

The penetration depths achieved by the hobby pellets, although slightly less than the superdome pellets, still obtained a depth great enough to reach vital organs (figure 3).

The clothing was specifically chosen as all three garments had a different weave. The t-shirt and jacket were both 100% cotton, but the jacket had a much tighter weave, which resulted in a much tougher feel to the fabric. The fleece was 100% polyester with a very loose knit weave, but the fabric was far thicker than the other two items of clothing.

As shown in Figure 4, the t-shirt resulted in far less penetration for both pellet types

The fleece provided less protection than the t-shirt, even though it was made from a thicker material. This was due to the looser weave of the polyester, which allows the fabric to breath, compared to the t-shirt.

As can be seen from figure 4 and 5, the effect of the clothing increased as the range increased. This effect was observed across all of the clothing types.

The jacket proved to be the most effective and was only penetrated 4 times; twice by each pellet, out of a total of 36 shots. Both of these penetrations occurred at 10 yards and the maximum depth achieved was 3cm.

Conclusion

Items of clothing do provide the protection that can reduce the penetration depth of an air rifle pellet from that of a fatal wound, to a minor or non-life threatening injury. Several factors must be accounted for though, such as air rifle power, pellet shape and weight and clothing type. The weave of the fabric being a major contributor to the protective force given, over the thickness of the fabric.

Damage Caused to Organs and Clothing by Air Rifle Pellets

Kirsty Wark, School of Contemporary Sciences, University of Abertay Dundee, Bell Street, Dundee DD1 1HG

Introduction
On average there is one fatality in the UK every year from air weapon related incidents. As recent as April and May this year air weapon attacks have occurred. This has caused some concern and debates within our society. It has been known in the area of firearms that different types of bullets can cause damage patterns and can effect the velocity and power of the bullet type. This investigation was carried out to understand the effects of four different pellet types that are commonly used with air weapons. The interaction of these pellet types were studied in ovine organs and clothing materials.

Methods
The results of the damage caused to both the organs and clothing were recorded using a microscope with an infinity corrected eyepiece and captured as an image simultaneously. The use of a CT Scanner was also employed in this investigation to visualise the pellet track through the particular organs used.

Aims
The aims of this investigation were to:
- Determine the damage patterns of the four different pellet types in organs
- Determine the damage patterns of four different pellet types on clothing items
- Investigate the effect of distance on the different pellet design path in gelatine
- Investigate the effect of distance (10 yards, 20 yards and 30 yards) on four pellet types and the damage patterns produced

Results & Discussion
Due to the four different pellet designs it was expected that they would produce different energies and velocities. Therefore the these parameters were measured using a chronograph machine. The results of the energy (ft/lbs.) and velocity (m/s) are shown in figures 2 and 3.

The four pellet types flat, round, hollow point and pointed can be seen in figure 1 and each pellet is calibre .177 but compose a different design.

From figure 2 it can be seen that the round and pointed pellets have the same energies and that the hollow point and flat pellets have similar energies depending on the item of clothing used this reduction was possible. I would like to give a special thank you to Kathleen Milne for taking the time to assist me in this project.

The hollow point and flat pellets only differ by 0.4 Ft/lbs. However figure 3 shows that the flat, pointed and hollow point pellets have similar velocities and that round pellet has significantly less velocity (25 m/s) than pointed pellet which is peculiar as they have the same energies.

From figure 2 the round and pointed pellets would be expected to travel the furthest distance in gelatine and the hollow point pellet to travel the least distance. The next part of the investigation was to investigate the interaction between pellet type and organ type. Each pellet type was fired into an organ which was set in gelatine and compared to the results showed that:

For the ovine lung the round and pointed pellets would enter and exit the lung tissue at each distance whereas as the flat and hollow point pellets would become embedded within the tissue at 20 and 30 yards. Figure 4 shows the track of a round pellet as it enters and exits the lung tissue at 10 yards.

Figure 5 Damage patterns at 10 yards on lung tissue (a) hollow point, (b) pointed, (c) round and (d) flat

Another experiment was carried out into the damage pattern produced in clothing material from the four different pellet types. These can be seen in figure 6 (a) it shows that the pattern from hollow point pellet is rectangular with fibres curling out of the damaged area. The pointed (b) and round (c) pellets have similar damage patterns to each other. Flat pellet damage is that of a large star like formation with threads curling back from the material. This damage pattern is similar to clothing damage produced by bullets fired from firearms.

Figure 6 Damage patterns at 10 yards with 100% cotton t-shirt (a) hollow point, (b) pointed, (c) round and (d) flat

What was also discovered in this experiment was that clothing material could reduce the distance of the pellets travelled depending on the item of clothing used this reduction was increased when the firing distance was increased.

Conclusion
In conclusion, the power and velocity harnessed by an air pellet is dependent on the pellet type used. The pellet type along with organ type can determine how the pellet travels through the organ and the damage produced.

Air pellets produce puncture like damage patterns. The pellet type has been proven to produce characteristic damage patterns in both organ tissue and clothing material. The effect of distance also has an effect on the damage pattern obtained. These patterns can be useful in order to determine in air weapon incidents what pellet may have been used and what distance the pellet has been fired from.

The Use of CT Scanning to Investigate Damage Caused by Air Rifle Pellets
Dr G Wightman, P Dello Sterpaio, R. Cochrane, R. Gray and M. Linton, University of Abertay
Time to Take Stock, 8 June 2012, The Royal Armouries, Leeds

Introduction
Statistics show that offences and injuries caused by air weapons are declining, although air weapons still remain the main source of firearms offences and are a significant source of injuries. [1,2]. Whilst many injuries are minor there has been on average one fatality a year from air weapons. In order to better understand the potential damage that may be caused by these low powered weapons research has been carried out at the University of Abertay.

Initial work looked at pellet penetration into ballistic gelatine and has been previously reported [3]. Subsequent studies have used Computed Tomography (CT) Scanning to study damage caused by air pellets.

Computed Tomography (CT) Scanning
CT scanning uses x-rays to penetrate into materials that are opaque to visible light. However, this produces a 2-dimensional image from a 3-dimensional object. Whilst this can be useful in many cases, as figure 1 shows, this can be misleading.

As can be seen, if objects have different thicknesses or different densities they may produce identical images when viewed in one direction. However, if these 4 arrangements were irradiated at a different angle they would be distinguishable due to the different absorptivities. CT scanning utilises computer power to take a number of 2-D images and combine them into a 3-D ‘object’, or different densities they may produce identical images when viewed in one direction.

Investigation of Pellet Impact on Biological Materials
In all these studies animal materials were obtained from an abattoir and were cast in ballistic gelatine. Whilst this has a limitation due to the natural degradation of the tissue, it allows a simulation to be made with readily obtainable materials and with minimal mess. The CT scan allowed the virtual ‘object’ produced to be rotated and examined from various perspectives.

The initial study looked at the impact of pellets on bone using a cow femur and this has been reported [3]. An example is shown in figure 3a. Good definition was obtained due to the density differences between gelatine, bone and the pellets. In subsequent work soft tissues have been examined using pig heart, pig lung and pig muscle. Here differentiation of the tissue from the gelatine was difficult due to their similar properties. Lung gave the best differentiation due to the entrained air. Figure 3b illustrates the 3D images formed whilst figures 4a and 4b show sections through the tissue.

Investigation of Pellet Impact on Construction Materials
Another area of investigation has been the damage caused by air rifle pellets on plywood, plaster board and brick. One area of interest was the damage that might be caused if the pellet first passed through flesh, and sections of ballistic gelatine were placed before the target to simulate potential flesh wounds.

As expected, pellets were stopped by brick but penetrated plywood and plasterboard. The stopping power of multiple layers of plywood and plasterboard was greater if the boards were in contact with each other, presumably by restricting flexing or crushing of the material.

The use of CT scanning allows the shape and dimensions of the damage to be determined. Figure 5a shows the hole generated in a piece of plasterboard with the irregular shape of the entry and exit. The volume can be determined and was 1070 mm³. By contrast the incomplete penetration produced a hole only 84 mm³ in size.

Conclusions and Future Work
CT scanning is a useful tool in examining the damage caused by air weapon pellets. However, the differentiation of soft tissues in ballistic gelatine is difficult and needs further study. The magnitude of the void produced also needs to be related to the energy loss on impact and this will be the next phase of the study.

The Damage Caused by Air Rifle Pellets When Fired at Porcine Organ Tissue

Michael Linton, School of Contemporary Sciences, University of Abertay, Bell Street, Dundee DD1 1HG

Introduction

For a number of years air rifles and air weapons have been considered as toys, and it is thought that they are relatively harmless. Over the last 10 years throughout the UK, thousands of injuries and deaths have been recorded due to the misuse of air weapons. Currently it is not necessary to obtain a firearms license for the use of an air rifle, as long as the weapon does not possess a muzzle energy of greater than 12ft-lbs or 16 joules of energy. At present, the Scottish government have created a bill which if passed will make it illegal to possess an air rifle without an appropriate license. Westminster parliament have refused to change the laws on air rifles as it would cost too much in compensation. The average person does not know the extent of damage an air rifle pellet can cause. Although an air rifle fire pellets and not bullets they still possess the power to kill.

A pellet contains no gunpowder or explosive and is moved by a gaseous 200°Cx USB micro. Pressure from the barrel propels an air rifle pellet forward. This is the main reason why people see these weapons as toys as the pellet contains no explosive. As can be seen in figure 1, a pellet is very small and is not shaped like a normal bullet, but it has no casing and no explosive area. The aim of this project is to show the amount of damage an air rifle with a muzzle energy of less than 12ft-lbs or 16 joules of energy can cause when fired at gelatine and porcine organ tissue. A number of techniques will be applied to show the amount external and internal damage caused to each organ type. This will be done by a number of analyses including depth of penetration, CT scanning, photographing the entry and exit points and also photographing the deformation of the pellets once they impacted skin, gelatine and organ tissue.

Methods

A number of gelatines were created, some of the gelatines contained organs from pigs. Three types of simulation skin were utilized to further simulate a section of human skin. The gelatines were fired at from distances of 5 and 10 meters. Then a number of analyses were carried out. The analyses carried out were the depth of penetration, CT scanning the gelatine and tissue to assess the amount of internal damage caused. Pictures were then taken of the entry and exit points. Then using a 200 x USB microscope pictures were taken of each of the pellets fired, to measure the amount of deformation which was caused after impact.

Results and Discussion

Once the gelatines were fired upon, the gelatines were then taken to the lab for analysis. The depths of penetrations were recorded using a ruler and the measurements were taken from the point of impact to the tip of each pellet. The pellets fired at the calibration gelatines and the pellets fired at the gelatine containing organs penetrated the same, which was expected as the gelatine is said to be a simulation for human organ tissue. When the simulation skin was attached to the front of the calibration gelatine and fire upon some of the depths of penetrations changed. The chicken skin proved useless as it did not effect the depth of penetration. The pig skin and cow skin did effect the depth of penetration and the results for the cow skin were as follows;

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Pellet type</th>
<th>Depth of penetration cm</th>

<td>Rounded</td>
</tr>
<tr>

</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

As can be seen from figure 2 the cow skin has been affected the penetration as the penetration is now 10% less than the blank calibration gelatine. The pig skin stopped the pellets fully and did not allow any penetration and from that information it can be said that pig skin is not a suitable simulation for human skin. The gelatines were scanned before and after shooting to show the amount of internal damage caused. Once the CT scans were taken the images were viewed and analysed on special software called Imagej. This software could calculate the width of the entry and exit points and can also calculate the volume of internal damage caused by the pellets.

The pig skin is much harder than the material of the pellet, the pellet is rounder than the repair which is much harder than the material. From the results it can be seen that air rifles pose the power to kill or severely injure. Every year the NHS has to treat people who have been injured as a result of the misuse of air rifles. The information shows that the current laws for the use of air rifles not only in Scotland but in the UK are outdated and need to be amended quickly to prevent or minimise the amount of accidents that can happen by the misuse of air rifles.

</table>

The information collected by Imagej which is shown above in figure 4, shows that the entry point is smaller than the exit point for both pellet 1 (Rounded) and pellet 2 (Pointed). The total volume of the damaged section is much larger for the rounded. This is because the pointed pellet has a smaller surface area than the rounded pellet. The rounded pellet has a flatter face which causes more tearing than the sharper more aerodynamic pointed pellet. The rounded pellet caused more damage in all three organs types. The density of the organ determines how much damage that was caused, hence the softer organ exhibited more damage.

Once the CT scans were analysed the next step was to remove the gelatine from the organs and photograph the damage at both entry and exit points. Below is the photographs that were taken for the liver tissue.

The last stage in the analysis was the pellet deformation. The photographs taken for this section showed no or little damage to the pellets, this was because the pellets are a much harder material than the ballistic gelatine, skin and organ tissue. If the pellet was to come into contact with a material which was much harder than the material of the pellet, the pellet would deform.

Conclusions

The depths of penetration showed that a pellet can penetrate deep into human internal tissue. The cow skin is the closest simulation to human skin as it did not affect the depth of penetration but it did not completely stop the pellet. The pellet still penetrated deep enough to cause a lot of damage. The only way to identify how close a simulation the cow skin was, would be to compare it to real human skin. From the results from both photography and CT scanning, it was seen that the rounded pellet causes more damage than the pointed pellet, this was due to the rounded pellet having a flatter, larger face. From the results it can be seen that air rifles possess the power to kill or severely injure. Every year the NHS has to treat people who have been injured as a result of the misuse of air rifles. This information shows that the current laws for the use of air rifles not only in Scotland but in the UK are outdated and need to be amended quickly to prevent or minimise the amount of accidents that can happen by the misuse of air rifles.

Effects of Air Rifle Pellets on Porcine Organ Tissue

Rebecca Cochrane, School of Contemporary Sciences, University of Abertay Dundee, Bell Street, Dundee DD1 1HG

Introduction
Air rifles were intended to be used for sporting and hunting purposes; however they have also been used as weapons to inflict damage and injury or even death.

This research project aims to investigate the level of tissue damage on a series of porcine organ types which have been moulded into ballistic gelatine and fired with .22 calibre rounded and pointed air rifle pellets. The project will also study whether or not ballistic gelatine is a suitable simulant of organ tissue. The penetration depth, pellet track and wounds of each sample will be observed in detail using CAT scanning and three-dimensional imaging software as analysis tools. The use of chemical compounds to alter the density allows radiographic imaging of the organ tissue and gelatine blocks to be performed. The penetration depths of various pellet types and any pellet deformation will also be investigated.

Materials and Methods
Leg, lung and heart porcine organ tissue was moulded into a 10% solution of pig skin gelatine. The blocks were then fired with .22 calibre pointed and rounded air rifle pellets. CT scanning was then performed on the gelatine blocks which allowed isolation of the air rifle pellets and pellet tracks. The level of tissue devastation was then recorded by examining the entry and exit wounds.

Results & Discussion: Imaging

When scanning the organ tissue and gelatine blocks no differentiation between the two substrates was possible. For this reason barium compounds were utilised. After applying the barium compounds, the lung and leg tissue were identified in the gelatine.

Results & Discussion: Analysis

(a) Leg Tissue (b) Lung Tissue

Using the 2D radiographic images 3D images were created.

Although the 3D images illustrate the organ tissue and gelatine blocks very well, the pellet tracks cannot be easily observed. For this reason the gelatine was removed from each of the organ tissues and the entry and exit wounds were examined.

The kinetic energy values of the pellets leaving the muzzle of the weapon were calculated. The resulting figures indicated that the round nose pellet had a higher energy value than the pointed pellet. This can be attributed to the heavier weight of the round nose pellet. Examination of the pellets showed no damage after impact.

Conclusion
The organ tissue and gelatine blocks demonstrated that the pointed pellet yielded a larger depth of penetration compared to the round nose pellet. When the gelatine was removed from the organ tissue the softer lung tissue exhibited larger entry and exit wounds compared to the leg and heart tissue which is composed mainly of muscular tissue. The calibration gelatine blocks and organ tissue gelatine blocks yielded varying penetration depths, indicating the gelatine is not a suitable simulant of organ tissue.

Introduction

Air Weapons? The one firearm the government fails to see for the danger it is. The effects of firearms are continually reported in scientific journals, results achieved through continuous research, the news and from the voice of the family who loses a loved one! However, air weapons of below a certain power, although as dangerous as any firearm up close, has yet to be licensed. Every year, countless people are exposed to some form of firearm offense and a lot of these offenses include air weapons. This project looks at whether or not it is possible for a pellet to fully penetrate a person with enough kinetic energy remaining, once having exited the body, to then terminate and embed upon impact the surface of a construction material. Several experimental variables were investigated including, construction material, distance from the air rifle and distance between gelatine and the construction material.

Methodology

At the University of Abertay Dundee laboratory the construction materials were measured and cut into the appropriate size. Ordnance gelatine supplied by the company Gelita for this project was mixed and placed into moulds for solidifying. After 48 hours the gels were cut to size ready for firing. When attending the firing range at Tayside Police HQ, chronographic values where obtained from the air rifles and the ft/lbs and kinetic energy where calculated for each air rifle as seen in Table 1. When shooting at the construction materials, firstly no gelatine was placed before to see what happened to the material with direct impact contact. The gelatine was then placed in front of the materials at distances of 0.1 and 1.5cm to see the difference in impact damage. All samples where sent for CT.

Results

All the sections of construction material were measured manually for width, length and depth/height, with photographs and notes of any observed damage to the materials taken. The plasterboard which was the weakest of the materials tested showed a large volume of material displacement after shooting for both 5 and 20 metres. The plywood, although not as weak to compression forces as the plasterboard also experienced a movement of material mainly shown as splintering.

sample and a brick sample with no gelatine at 20 metres. In both 3D images the damage to the construction material is highlighted as a different colour. With the 3D image it can be seen clearly the damage in to the brick sample. However, the damage that was caused to the brick was not were would have been expected as it is to the side of the pellet, which can be seen as a dark shadow on the scan rather than perpendicular.

The sections of construction material tested were scanned using a Computed Tomography (CT) scanner after being shot to observe any structural changes and achieve a more accurate volume of missing material via volume rendering. Figures 3 and 4 show 3-Dimensional images produced for a plasterboard

Conclusions

From the visual analysis and manual measurements taken from the construction materials it is possible to conclude that an air rifle with the power of above 8.87KJ can cause damage to construction materials as dense as brick even at a distance of 20 metres. With the CAT scans it was possible to visualise and accurately calculate the total amount of damage with volume rendering for the construction materials. Although time constraints meant not all the materials could be scanned it was possible to do enough to show that the plasterboard succumbed to the compression forces the most and that the brick was damaged to an extent.

The Behaviour of Air Rifle Pellets in Ballistic Gel
Dr Graham Wightman, University of Abertay

Introduction
Although air weapons are considerably lower in power than other firearms, there is increasing concern that serious injuries can result from their misuse. The present study was therefore carried out to improve understanding of the terminal ballistic behaviour of air rifle pellets. Pellets were fired into ballistic gel under a variety of conditions, and the pellets penetrated further than anticipated from their low cross sectional density. Test firings were also carried out firing pellets into ballistic gel that contained sections of animal bone. Computed tomography (CT) and visual observation were employed to record the interactions.

Background
Extensive research has been conducted on various aspects of firearms, but much less work has been carried out into air weapons. The public perception is that airguns are less hazardous because the projectile has much lower energy: However, most firearms offences within the UK are by air weapons. The majority of these are lesser offences such as vandalism, and minor assault but a number of incidents occur with serious or fatal outcomes. This study was therefore carried out to develop understanding of the behaviour of air pellets.

Experimental Method
Details of the study are given in reference [1]. Four air rifles were used to deliver different power and various variables were examined. In another phase of the study a section from a cow femur was placed in the gel with one face at a predetermined depth and angle to the line of firing. After firing the gel was photographed before the pellets were removed. For 15 of the bone samples, the specimen was taken for examination by computed tomography (CT) scanning before removing the pellets from the gel. CT scanning uses x-rays to take a series of 2-D image 'slices' through the object and these are combined by computer to produce a 3-D image.

Behaviour of Pellets in Ballistic Gel
Most authors use a 10% gel but in the present study this did not give the expected stopping distances. Based on Jussila’s work [2] it had been anticipated that pellets would come to rest within 80 mm, but pellets penetrated further and rebounded off the plastic base of the knife holder (figure 1). A detailed study was therefore carried out of gel properties and their effect on air pellet behaviour. The effect of variables such as Bloom strength, gel concentration, firing distance, air rifle power, and pellet shape were all examined and the effect of these variables were as expected. Figures 2 and 3 indicate the effect of gel concentration, power and range on penetration.

Fig 1. Pellet tracks in gel contained in a knife holder

Fig 2. Penetration

CT Scanning of Bone in Gel
CT scanning showed potential as a tool for examining pellet damage. The Bone appeared to be undamaged, and showed no evidence of density change due to compaction, although some scans may show evidence of 'wipe' of lead from the pellet. The pellets were severely deformed on impact. If the pellet strikes the bone at an angle, less energy is absorbed by the impact and the pellet fragments can ricochet and cause further damage.

One advantage of CT scanning is the ability to differentiate different materials and to filter out the bone, thus allowing examination of the pellets in situ by rotating the image in 3 dimensions. Figures 4 and 5 present 2-D images to demonstrate this.

Fig 4 Bone & pellet

Fig 5 Bone filtered from scan

Interaction of Pellet with Bone
The length of the pellet tracks in the gel were measured, and the dimensions of the pellet fragments were recorded. As expected, the deeper the bone is mounted in the gelatin, the less damage is caused to the pellet. It would be expected that a deeper depth of gelatin would slow down the pellet and absorb the energy from the pellets, resulting in lower impact energy. Most damage to the pellet occurs with the smaller angles (direct impact) rather than the larger angles (oblique impact) where the pellet is deflected. Consequently, the distance travelled after impact depends on the angle of incidence.

Fig 6 Impact of pellet. Fig 7 Pellet damage

When a pellet approaches the corner or edge of the bone in a straight line, it sometimes seems to curve in towards the bone at a distance of about 5mm from the bone, as seen in figure 6. The cause is unknown, but may be due to the gel being less elastic due to the nearby presence of the bone.

Energy on Impact
Estimates of the energy losses for each part of the pellet flight were made in order to determine the energy loss on impact with the bone. It was assumed that the pellet experienced a constant retarding force from the gel as the gel yielded, but further studies are required to confirm this and to examine the effect of the impulse at phase boundaries.

Conclusions
Air rifle pellet penetration in ballistic gel under various conditions has been examined, and CT scanning has been used to examine the impact on bone. The dissipation of energy during impact has been discussed.

1. Air Weapons Licensing

You may respond to all the questions or only those you have a specific interest in. (Text boxes have no word limit, they will increase in size accordingly).

13. In what ways will the creation of an air weapons licensing system in Scotland contribute to preserving public order and safety, reducing crime and advancing public health policy?

See Below

14. Is there sufficient provision, or sufficient capacity to provide, suitable numbers of air weapons clubs across all areas of Scotland for use by registered air weapons owners/ users?

See 22

15. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for personal/recreational use?

See 22
16. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those aged 14 to 17 who use air weapons?

We are of the view that the encouragement of youngsters to shoot and take up an interest in the sport should not be given priority over the need for public safety and that the provisions in the system are appropriate.

17. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for commercial/professional reasons (for example: for pest control; as part of the tourist/hunting season; as part of fairs, paintballing centre, entertainment sector etc.)?

See 22

18. How will the air weapons licensing system affect those using air weapons for competitive sporting purposes?

See 22

19. Is it equitable for those applying for an air weapons certificate to pay a fee which cannot be refundable irrespective of whether a certificate is granted or not?
Yes, it is perfectly equitable for all those applying to pay a non-refundable fee. This would help to ensure that only genuine applications are made. The costs of the licensing process, including those for failed applications, should not be borne by the taxpayer.

20. Will the air weapons licensing system have a positive or negative impact on other areas of the public sector in Scotland (eg. The work of local government, public agencies etc.)?

If the licensing process is suitably funded then there should be no negative impact. Misuse of air weapons often results in damage to premises and vehicles used by the public as well as injury to workers such as bin men, postmen and firefighters. Restricting the availability of air weapons should reduce these occurrences and the costs involved.

21. What, if any, might the unintended consequences of introducing an air weapons licensing system in Scotland be?

None that would affect its aim to improve public safety.

22. Do you have any other comments to make on air weapons licensing aspects of the Bill?

For those with a genuine professional need or sporting interest there may be some initial inconvenience and small expense, but this should be balanced against the elimination of irresponsible, careless and unnecessary airgun use, of which serious shooters presumably disapprove. For professionals the costs of licensing could be offset against tax. There will no doubt be more impact of those involved in other shooting activities such as plinking, but as some of these activities cause genuine alarm among other members of the public those concerned might need to consider adapting the interests and undertake an activity with less potential risk to their neighbours and fellow citizens.
Anything that reduces the bureaucracy of the licensing process would be helpful. Gun Control Network believes that those with a firearms or shotgun certificate should not be expected to go through the full licensing process.

It will be essential for the registration process to backed up by a suitably-funded media campaign to guarantee full public awareness. There should also be provision for a hand-in of all the guns of those who do not wish to be part of the licensing system.

GUN CONTROL NETWORK

Air Weapons Licensing

13. In what ways will the creation of an air weapons licensing system in Scotland contribute to preserving public order and safety, reducing crime and advancing public health policy?

Gun Control Network believes that it is anomalous for one category of gun to be exempt from licensing on the basis of its mechanism of firing. This fails to take sufficient account of the dangers posed by air weapons. They cause serious and even fatal injuries to humans, they maim and kill wildlife and domestic animals, they are used to threaten and intimidate (made worse by the promotion of some air pistols, for example, being modelled on handguns and advertised as looking like the “real thing”) and cause damage to property, all of which impact on the wellbeing of the public. Air weapons are generally lower-powered than other firearms, but while many of the injuries from pellets are of a less serious nature than those caused by other guns, airguns are nevertheless capable of inflicting life-changing injuries including blindness. At present, however, the lack of licensing continues to result in these weapons being treated too casually, and there is still a tendency to regard them simply as boys’ toys. This has lead to a careless and reckless attitude among some owners. Licensing would provide the strongest possible indicator to all potential users that these are dangerous objects with the potential to cause harm and stress to their fellow citizens.

We have been heartened by the fall in airgun crime over recent years and are sure that the provisions in the Violent Crime Reduction Act have contributed to this, which highlights the fact that gun control works. Nevertheless offences involving air weapons still make up the largest proportion of gun offences. The 2012-13 statistics on firearm offences in Scotland show that one of the two attempted murders involved an air weapon, 43 of the 65 incidents in which someone was injured involved an air weapon and of the 194 instances when a gun was fired 132 of these involved an air weapon.

In a report published by the Home Office in February 2014 on Recorded Firearms Offences for 2012-13 in England and Wales, where the legislation is currently the same as in Scotland i.e. no licensing for most air weapons, the authors commented that it is likely that “air weapon offences largely do not come to the attention of police unless they are fired” and so it is likely that the total is in fact an underestimate of the actual number of offences. Gun Control Network often receives details of airgun misuse from members of the public, not least from pet owners describing incidents involving their animals, and notes reports of attacks on wildlife, especially birds, and this anecdotal information also leads us to believe that the extent of airgun misuse is significantly greater than indicated by the Recorded Offences.

Furthermore whilst the majority of offences with air weapons relate to criminal damage, they can, as the authors of the Home Office report acknowledge, also cause serious injury and sometimes fatalities. It is noted in the report that when air weapons are used in offences regarded as causing violence to people these are more likely to cause injury then when a non-air weapon is used. During 2013 a South Yorkshire man was killed with an airgun and the offender subsequently convicted of manslaughter, and a couple from east London died in a murder-suicide committed by the husband with an air rifle. There have been a number of other fatalities over recent years, the victims often children and young people - GCN knows of at least 15 who were shot by other children and young people who often had access to an unsecured airgun. At the time this submission was being compiled an 11-year-old boy in County Durham was shot in the head with an airgun while watching a football match. The reports of the shooting were accompanied by a shocking picture of the victim with a .22 pellet lodged close to his eye - he could easily have been blinded and said himself that he was lucky to be alive.

It is clear from the many press reports of air weapon incidents which Gun Control Network has compiled over the years that the view that the majority of the offences are caused by “criminals” is misleading. Although some criminals do use airguns to threaten, the reports show that a large number of the more serious incidents are the result of reckless and careless behaviour by people, who otherwise would not be considered criminals but have used their weapons irresponsibly. It also appears that the problems are not confined to young people, as the perpetrators and victims span a wide age range.

One of the main responsibilities of any government is to ensure the safety of the public. Clearly a balance has to be struck between this prime responsibility and the wishes of some citizens to undertake activities, including hobbies and sport, with dangerous objects. The Scottish Government’s proposals would not prevent those with a genuine interest in using air weapons from continuing to shoot but would make certain that ownership and use are treated with the appropriate degree of seriousness. It therefore strikes the right balance. Although there might be initial difficulties in ensuring that all owners comply with licensing, the need for a licence for all future purchases should result in the pool of air weapons, especially those held by casual owners, diminishing. This reduction would be greatly enhanced by a well-publicised amnesty. Whilst there may be an initial increase in offences as a result of non-compliance with the licensing process, the long term impact will be to discourage those whose casual use of airguns has contributed to the problem of gun crime with an eventual further fall. Licensing provides a means of demonstrating that air weapons are indeed dangerous objects. The knowledge that the Scottish Government views the problem to be serious enough to tighten legislation has no doubt already had an impact, but it is essential that the measure is now followed through. Gun Control Network is in no doubt that this is a significant piece of public safety legislation.
THE, Government at Westminster, introduced a new piece of legislation in to law on Dec 2012 stopping the payment of cash, for the purchase of scrap metal. However this piece of legislation; was ill thought out it was rushed through parliament not to reduce theft, but to find a way to apply a new tax.

Everyone is entitled to be paid cash, cheques, or cards have no legal standing; whereas A Bank note is legal tender!

THE END RESULT WAS A COMPLETE HASH.

There was great stories going about that hundreds of millions of pound of stolen metal both ferrous/nonferrous being sold to Scrap merchants, if the Police and that includes transport police new of this flagellant breach of the law why was none of these scrap merchants brought to book, I honestly thought that Grimes brothers/Hans Christian Anderson, had risen from the grave, Lord Oliver Henley endorsed the Police statement of the amount that was stolen; why did he not ask the question, why was this material not recovered, and what happened to the convictions, now the new rules allow scrap merchants to dispose of the scrap metal immediately; they have removed the part where all metal that where bought must be tagged and remain for fourteen days before they could be disposed of.

The Scottish governments, questionnaire on should the Scrap metal merchants, pay cash for the materials they have purchased, or should payment be made by cheque, or debit card.

Unfortunately this was not thought out properly, Cheques and debit cards are only good if you have cash in the account, people who have to receive payment can demand cash, that is their right, but if the government wish to dispense with cash as a means of payment, they will require to pass a law in parliament, to dispense with the coin off the realm.

If the government is determined to implement this legislation, to reduce and curb the theft of metal; or is it a means to collect more tax, remember tax has already been paid when said material was first purchased; that is the real question.

To reduce the theft, one must control the way scrap metal is disposed off. You must separate the waste management licence, from the scrap metal brokers licence; since the inception of the waste management licence, theft of metal has increased, any one can apply for a waste carriers licence, or a recycling licence, there is no control, unlike the Brokers licence, there is a curtail on your trading hours Monday to Saturday 7am 5pm Sat 7am 12noon. All mater is logged with the type, weight, name of seller, car registration, time and what was paid, and they must sign, for the cash payment, the material must be retained in the brokers care for fourteen days, this is how its always been, the police come in and sign the book, if material has been stolen, the police can ask for a copy of the tape from the cctv.

What is required is a league table, in three divisions.
Small, 0/5,00000 pounds turnover

Medium, 5,00000, 3,000000 pounds turnover

Large, 10,000000 +, pounds, excluding V A T

Those in the 10million pound bracket would have the most to lose,

Those in the 10million bracket, who pass the criteria, under the new set-up would be nominated would be afford the position of recommended Government preferred buyer of scrap metal from local authorities, former nationalised industries and government contractors.

The holders of waste carriers, and recycling licences issued by S E P A, D E F R A. Would be excluded from the purchase of buying scrap material. They would be curtailed to recycling and the carriage, of waste, they would be under the control of S E P A

New rules and conditions would need to be introduced, including severe fines and jail time, any convictions, would result of losing their licence to trade in the purchasing of scrap and the confiscation of their yards and machinery. This may sound harsh but needs must.

The regions, for purchasing scrap metal would be divided into areas like Lothian’s, Border, Strathclyde, Central, ECT,

All this can be discussed to set the rules cost of new licences the people who would determine, the new conditions and cost would be invited to take part, and PHS it would also discourage the money laundering, from rogue traders

This proposal would curtail the transfer of stolen materials; in fact it would reduce the stolen metal by 90%, this is only part of the proposal we can discuss this in greater detail later.

Introduction to Uber

Uber is a smartphone app that allows customers to book a private hire vehicle or taxi at the touch of a button within a matter of minutes. Riders download the app from the iTunes, Android or Windows app store, create an account with their personal and credit card information, and then can see the nearest available drivers and their ETA to their desired pickup location.

Uber launched in the UK in 2012 in London, and is now in Manchester and Leeds with plans to expand further in 2015. Uber is fully compliant with the private hire and taxi legislation in the UK and the safety of our passengers and drivers is our number one priority.

Uber brings a number of clear benefits to the UK market:

- More choice for consumers and drivers;
- Technology brings increased efficiency that allows lower fares - drivers can earn more by being more productive, while consumers pay less;
- More flexibility for drivers to run their own businesses. That means they can work for Uber when they want and on a non-exclusive basis;
- We equip drivers with real time data on demand, so they can make more money and serve our customers more effectively.

Our conviction is clearly shared by our hundreds of thousands of riders here in the UK who now take millions of trips with Uber every month. Over the coming months we want to continue to do more to create jobs and help reduce congestion and deliver cleaner, safer streets in the UK’s major cities.

Passenger and driver safety is our first concern for Uber in every market in which we operate. To ensure we provides the safest and most reliable ride in town, Uber employs various mechanisms, which are catered to the city in which it operates.
Rider safety

- Professionally licensed: In the UK, every Uber driver holds a private hire driver and vehicle license from the licensing authority (which includes an extended criminal records check). Uber itself are licensed private hire operators in every jurisdiction we operate in and have formally applied in both Glasgow and Edinburgh.
- Insurance: No matter the Uber service (uberX, uberXL, UberEXEC, UberLUX, UberTAXI), from the moment a rider is picked up to the moment they are dropped off, their ride is covered by commercial liability insurance. Uber ensures each partner driver maintains the requisite cover.
- Driver profile: Safety starts before a passenger gets in the car. Once a rider has requested a ride, he or she is passed their driver’s name, photo, registration and vehicle type, so they can be 100% sure they are getting in the right car, with the right driver, and both are licensed and insured.
- No street hailing: The Uber app pinpoints a rider’s location, allowing for true door to door service, allowing riders to wait comfortably in their home, office, or other pick up location until their car has arrived.
- Share a live map of progress: Riders also have the option to “share their ETA” allowing family members or anyone of their choosing to follow their ride in real time to ensure a transparent and safe arrival.
- Anonymous ratings: After every trip, riders are asked to anonymously rate their driver on a scale of 1 to 5, adding trust and improved quality of service, and providing us with real time feedback on driver performance. Drivers work hard to keep their ratings high and know that the Uber culture of accountability goes both ways (drivers rate riders too).

Driver safety

- Anonymous ratings: Driver feedback is important too. Just as riders have the opportunity of anonymous rating, so do our partner drivers. We take a zero tolerance approach to any rider behaviour that makes drivers concerned for their own safety, their vehicle safety or is in any way abusive toward drivers or in violation of the terms of service.
- No random pick ups: Before their first trip, Uber riders are required to create an account with their personal information. Rides can only be requested through the app, meaning drivers know whom they are picking up in advance and there is a detailed record of every trip.
- Fully cashless: Fares are charged automatically to the rider’s credit card so a driver never has the risk of carrying cash or fear of being robbed.

As the Committee heard in its hearing on 21st January 2015, Uber currently offers a range of five services to passengers in London. Firstly, uberX is the low-cost option for fast and reliable service. This option seats up to four people and the majority of these vehicles are Toyota Prius’. uberXL offers a larger service, seating up to 6 passengers in London, and up to 8 in Manchester. UberEXEC is the next level up, offering up to four people discreet executive quality. Beyond this, UberLUX is the high-end offering from Uber offering ultimate luxury and style. Crucially, each of these options involves a professional driver with a private-hire license and commercial insurance. Finally, understanding the critical role that black cabs play in the London market, Uber offers UberTAXI. This service allows customers to access this iconic, knowledgeable and versatile service through the use of an app.

Importantly, in contrast to the evidence the Committee received on the 21st January 2015, we are entirely transparent about the various options available to our customers.

In 2014, Uber’s London operations underwent the largest ever compliance inspection by TfL with over 22,000 documents inspected and were found to be compliant with existing legislation. The use of technology has helped to provide greater transparency and a greater incentive for the industry to assure its own compliance with the industry’s regulations.

Why Uber is submitting evidence

In the UK, every single independent Uber partner-driver and their vehicle is licensed and regulated by the local regulator as a private hire or taxi driver. Therefore, we have a significant interest in the shaping of future taxi and private hire vehicle legislation.

Uber is committed to understanding and engaging on the key issues for taxi and private hire passengers in the UK, whilst also remaining in close contact with all relevant stakeholders as Uber develops its role in the taxi and private hire vehicle market.

We believe the Uber platform adds significant value to the transportation sector. The addition of our new technology and choice is contributing to the ongoing debates and questions regarding how best to shape regulation in the sector. We are keen to work with the Local Government and Regeneration Committee, Government and stakeholders to make sure that people in Scotland get the best value, most efficient and safest service they possibly can.

We believe to best plan for the future, it is imperative that the Committee hear from the entirety of the Taxi and Private Hire Vehicle industry, especially as we enter a period of exciting growth.

Structure of response

Our response to the Committee sets out our thoughts on the Bill’s primary Taxi and Private Hire Vehicle issues, using the examples of Uber’s existing business in the UK. The response is structured around two main questions from the online form:

“What benefits should the licensing of taxis and private hire cars deliver for customers?”

“Do the changes made by sections 60 (overprovision of private hire car licences) and 61 (testing of private hire car drivers) of the Bill strike the right balance in terms of introducing greater consistency while maintaining justifiable differences?”
This written document also addresses a number of points raised in the 21st January 2015 hearing. However, Uber will also be on hand throughout this process to help the Committee answer any questions it may have.

“What benefits should the licensing of taxis and private hire cars deliver for customers?”

Uber believes that the Scottish Government should use this Bill as an opportunity to begin to move the market towards a firmer long term footing, and ensure that consumer waiting times - especially at night - are kept to a safe, low level. In particular, the Committee should be encouraging:

- Wider adoption of mobile internet technologies by all market players to improve the user experience and as the basis for more efficient operational management. This will enable a sustained high level of weekday service while ensuring drivers achieve the activity levels that they desire (whether they work fulltime or part-time);
- Encourage the emergence of services that promise a larger pool of drivers and mobility options at times of peak demand. Here passengers, and in particular vulnerable ones, will be the main winners as faster pickups mean greater safety.
- The emergence of pooling services with their attendant environmental, congestion and consumer benefits. Uber is at the forefront of all of these developments, and is of course ready and willing to assist the NTA as they work through the exciting new opportunities for consumers and for drivers.

Uber is complementary to public transportation, and offers an effective solution to the “last mile” problem, when the final destination is not near a bus / train / tube station.

Data collected indicates that Uber is a transportation solution that people want to use not only in the city centre, but also in more distant neighborhoods and the airport. Uber can also offer a mobility alternative to neighbourhoods that are currently underserved by transportation solutions.

With the necessary liquidity, Uber could position itself as a reliable and complementary addition to Scotland’s mobility solutions (train, metro, bus, bicycle, etc.), thereby reducing the need to own a private vehicle.

The map below shows the coverage of Uber journeys in London. 40% of these rides begin or end in areas of the city traditionally characterised as being ‘underserved’ by public transport. These trips may link families; customers with local businesses, nightlife, or entertainment options; make airport trips more affordable by cutting out the need to pay daily parking fees, and facilitate public transport access.
Map showing Uber trip coverage of London.

Uber provides consumers with a reliable option that complements existing public and private transportation options. Metro and light rail can provide frequent, speedy, and convenient service across an urban area, but they only go so far. Uber ensures that no matter when or where someone needs a ride home, they can get one.

Indeed, Uber helps solve this “last mile” problem in areas beyond the reach of existing mass transit networks, offering residents a reliable connection that feeds them into public transportation networks.
This promotes the use of the buses, trams, and other public transit options for those heading out for a night on the town by removing the calculation of whether the same public transport option will definitely be reliable or even operating for the return trip—particularly late at night. At the same time, these benefits also ensure public transit becomes a more viable alternative for commuters, resulting in fewer cars being driven into the core of London. This is more than merely intuitive or anecdotal. Uber’s trip data for the last quarter of 2014 demonstrates that nearly three-quarters of Uber rides in London are “one-way trips,” meaning that riders completed their start or return journey using another transportation option.

Across the world, the taxi and private hire market is becoming increasingly competitive and innovative as the distinctions between taxis and private hire blur. Rather than rely on an enforced monopoly, every company has to compete on price and the quality of its service. Uber has tested many different business models across the 54 countries we operate in. As described in the Introduction to Uber, London is a great example of this – Uber now offers a range of services through uberX, uberXL, UberEXEC, UberLUX and UberTAXI. Beyond our model, in London,
Kabbee allows you to compare the prices from thousands of minicabs, whilst Hailo, ubuCabs or GetTaxi allow you to book a black cab through your iPhone. Furthermore, the Addison Lee app allows you to book one of its 4,500 minicabs, whilst greentomato allows you to use a hybrid. All these technologies provide the potential for a significant expansion of the market, allowing many more people to be able to afford to use taxis regularly. As such, platforms such as Uber must be seen as additive, not abstractive, to a market where greater choice will benefit both the customers and the drivers.

“Do the changes made by sections 60 (overprovision of private hire car licenses) and 61 (testing of private hire car drivers) of the Bill strike the right balance in terms of introducing greater consistency while maintaining justifiable differences?”

Proposals to grant licensing authorities the power to refuse private hire car licences on grounds of overprovision is potentially severely detrimental to the interests of consumers in Scotland. The concept of quotas of taxis in jurisdictions limits choice for passengers, effectively guarantees that services are over-priced and does not allow different providers to compete on the basis of quality of service.

Quotas have been criticised and discredited by every competent and unbiased authority that has examined the issue. In 2003, the Office of Fair Trading published the results of an inquiry into the regulation of taxis and minicabs in the country. Its conclusions were:

- Quantity restrictions, where used by local authorities, should be removed;
- Quality and safety regulation should be proportionate to public policy goals, so as to avoid them become an implicit barrier to market entry
- Price flexibility should be permitted, even while regulated fare caps remain necessary to protect vulnerable groups.

More recently, in 2007 the OECD undertook arguably the most thorough cross-country analysis of the history and impact of taxi regulation.1 The key findings of the report were:

- Entry restrictions are unjustified: ‘Restrictions on entry to the taxi industry constitute an unjustified restriction on competition. Regulatory capture frequently means that these restrictions lead to large transfers from consumers to producers, economic distortions and associated deadweight losses.’
- Entry restrictions do not benefit drivers OR consumers: ‘Although entry restrictions are often justified on equity grounds there is no evidence that drivers fare better in restricted markets. On the other hand, higher prices and lower availability disproportionately affect low-income consumers of taxi services.
- Market reforms work: ‘Increasing numbers of OECD countries have removed or loosened supply restrictions on taxis. The results of these reforms have been strongly positive, with reduced waiting times, increased consumer satisfaction and, in many cases, falling prices being observed.’

- Reforms should be carried out quickly: ‘In highly restricted taxi markets, immediate implementation of an open entry policy is likely to be politically challenging. However, adopting staged approaches delays the achievement of reform benefits and poses major practical risks that reform will be stalled or reversed. Immediate reforms have been completed successfully in some highly restricted markets.’

Supportive, innovation-friendly regulation is important: ‘Removing entry restrictions does not imply removing quality based regulation. Indeed, supportive regulation is a precondition for fully achieving the potential benefits of adopting an open entry policy. That said, remaining regulatory arrangements must not unduly inhibit the development of innovative service offers and industry models.’

This vision of a ‘Supportive Regulatory Environment’ that is friendly to innovation has been set out by the OECD in great detail. This environment focuses on removing unnecessary restrictions on competition while maintaining quality regulation in the following areas:

- No entry restrictions: entry restrictions ‘constitute an unjustified restriction on competition’;
- Positive conduct regulation: sanctions against ‘refusals of short trips, “no shows” and other forms of poor driver behavior’;
- Vehicle standards: age or testing regimes;
- Driver standards: ‘typically…a “fit and proper person” test, designed to ensure passenger safety’;
- Facilitating innovation: ‘…for example, if price regulation is to be retained (see below) care must be taken to ensure that it does not inhibit the development of premium services or, on the other hand, of shared ride arrangements’.

Not only does the concept of overprovision not deliver the intended benefits for consumers, it raises the barriers to entry for drivers, effectively preventing the sector from growing and creating jobs.

In January 2014, Edinburgh City Council released a transport analysis of the trends seen between the 2001 and the 2011 Census. Edinburgh has seen both a rising proportion of households who do not own a car, and a declining proportion of people who drive to work. Nearly 40% of households in Edinburgh do not own or have access to their own car or van – well above the Scottish average of 34% and exceeded only by Glasgow (51%) and Dundee (42%). The number of Edinburgh households without a car (over 89,000) is higher than at any time since the 1970s.3

Uber’s technology and the possibility to get a car on demand has introduced an enormous efficiency on the market (where before, the supply was unable to meet the existing demand), allowing:

---

Drivers to complete more trips per hour and hence increasing their income.

Lowering the price for users.

Uber is a complementary transportation solution at a price point that enables regular usage. We have seen in other cities that POP has the potential to drastically reduce the role of private cars in cities, and thereby reduce urban pollution and congestion.

Services like Uber - and our competitors - also lay the groundwork for a future of much greater sharing of transportation within cities. Uber effectively optimises the utilisation of capital and resources - light transportation users who stop or reduce the use of a private car could reallocate their capital / resources previously dedicated to their private vehicle. But for further innovation to succeed, market liquidity is vital.

A move to allow for limitations to the number of licenses in different local authorities as per Section 60 of the Bill could be extremely damaging to both the growing number of consumers and the drivers involved. Rather, the Scottish Government should foster an environment that encourages choice and competition to the benefit of both passengers and drivers.

With this in mind, it is also our belief that Section 61 of the Bill is an unnecessary burden on private hire drivers, which has the potential to limit the choice and competition in the market. With the advent of technology, drivers are able to deliver an efficient service to their customer without the need to have passed a test. Whilst there will always be a place for the knowledge gained by a taxi driver, the option should be available to driver and passenger alike in a competitive market.

21st January 2015 Hearing and other notable points

Safety

Whilst we stated the safety aspects of appropriate licensing earlier in this submission, we would like to repeat here that Uber is committed to the highest safety standards. We understand the fundamental importance of safety to our customers and drivers so we ensure that our technology goes above and beyond in terms of public safety.

Furthermore, we give passengers the opportunity to give honest feedback about the Uber driver taking them to their destination. Drivers that do not consistently keep our customers happy, foster an environment in which the customer feels safe, and get good ratings are removed from our service.

As a whole, technology is making us safer and deterring crime. In the 1990s, immobilisers, smart keys and vehicle tracking helped to deter vehicle theft.\(^4\) Car crime fell from 4.3mn thefts in 1993 to fewer than 1.1mn in 2011.\(^5\)

Today, new ‘kill switches’ or biometric protection such as the iPhone’s TouchID can help to deter the new wave of smartphone theft – but much more important than property crime is the potential impact of tech on personal safety. One paper from 2012 found a strong negative correlation between mobile phones and violent crime in America.\(^6\)

Uber’s entry into the Chicago market saw crimes in taxi-cabs fall by 20%.\(^7\) The persistent communication and opt-in GPS tracking offered by today’s phones offer greater security and protection, while ensuring privacy is not breached without our consent.

Uber is also proven to reduce drink driving in cities. A new report conducted in partnership with Mothers Against Drunk Driving (MADD) reveals that when empowered with more transportation options like Uber, people are making better choices that save lives. In California, Uber's home state and largest market, drunk-driving crashes fell by 60 per month among drivers under 30 in the markets where Uber operates following the launch of uberX. That’s an estimated total of 1,800 crashes prevented since July 2012.

Platforms like Uber lead to little incentive for taxi touting. Indeed, the Uber app automatically pinpoints your location to provide true door-to-door service meaning the customer can remain safe indoors until a driver arrives. Through the app, your driver profile (including his name, license plate number, photo, and rating) will appear upon request of a car, meaning the customer knows exactly who is picking them up. Furthermore, passengers are asked to provide feedback following their journey meaning Uber drivers are entirely accountable for their levels of service.

Accessing quick, efficient services at the click of a button

With an increasingly connected world, passengers demand things to be faster, better and cheaper. At Uber, we believe that our app offers passengers this opportunity.

Our riders not only like the convenience of having us at the touch of a button, but it also delivers for them the speed with which they are used to accessing other services such as online shopping with next day delivery, or instant film viewing online. Indeed, on average in central London, Uber’s Estimated Time of Arrival (ETA) is just over three minutes.

We also offer value to our customers, who can have fantastic, affordable and easy ways to get places, simply on their phone. From low-cost to luxury cars we offer affordable choices for passengers with varying budgets and requirements.

Fares and Payment Options

Uber is a supply and demand service that provides a range of options based on a customer’s travelling needs. In particular, Uber is proud to be opening up a private hire service to people who could not previously afford this through access to uberX. In an article for the London Evening Standard, Lucy Tobin wrote that: “The fact is, for those without a corporate expense account or a banker’s salary, or who happen not to live in central London but still need to get home late, the new minicab apps are making it much cheaper and easier to do so”. In extreme cases of peak demand,

\(^7\) Uber’s Impact on Taxi Crime in Chicago, 2014, http://blog.uber.com/chicagotaxicrime
Uber’s prices flux and react to the market and are fully transparent with the customer.

Accessibility

In his evidence, Dr Cooper raised the issue of accessibility for disabled passengers. Uber is constantly taking steps to increase broader disability mobility and is confident that our technology will prove a great benefit.

For example, we are ensuring that we offer a range of services that are accessible to all passengers in London; and the addition of the black taxi onto the Uber platform directly provides a wheelchair accessible vehicle option for Londoners. Moreover, the ability to access a black cab direct through the Uber app – rather than hailing in the street – is a safe and reliable option for wheelchair users.

Our technology has allowed us to tremendously increase mobility for our riders with disabilities, and we continue to work hard on features to accommodate all riders’ needs. We use all available resources to make Uber the most user-friendly product to those with disabilities.

Notably, our VoiceOver iOS compatibility means that the Uber app provides a safe transportation option for the visually impaired community that is adaptable to their needs. From booking the ride, to selecting the vehicle and rating the driver – everything can be done using the iPhone’s Siri function. Meanwhile, service animals are always welcome in all Uber vehicles.

Furthermore, for the deaf or hard of hearing, assistive technology such as visible and vibrating alerts can help users to navigate the Uber app. With various text prompts and visual features, audio is not needed for full functionality of the Uber app.

Importantly, whilst there was a discussion of monopolies in the hearing, in many cities, Uber has been shown to be additive to the taxi and private hire vehicle market, not abstractive. The choice and competition that our platform brings to the market is not therefore detrimental to the options that are already available for disabled passengers.

Addressing environmental concerns

Uber is also committed to doing its part for the environment and is having a positive impact. Uber already has over 5,000 hybrid vehicles on its platform in London, driving between 2,000 - 3,000 miles per month. Also, as addressed above, due to more efficient booking systems, Uber drivers spend less time driving around with no passengers in the car, ensuring better asset utilisation. This is an area where new data will be collected as Uber develops its offering in London, and we are of course keen to keep the Committee updated on this.

Conclusion

Uber welcomes the opportunity to engage with the Local Government and Regeneration Committee’s consultation into the Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill.
Whilst the Bill itself is a wide-ranging piece of legislation, there are a number of issues relating to taxi and private hire provision in Scotland which are of direct concern to Uber. Notably, we call upon the Government to foster an environment that encourages choice and competition in the market in the interests of consumers and drivers.

Given the depth of discussion regarding Uber in previous oral sessions, we would appreciate the opportunity to provide more detail on our plans for Scotland in person before the Committee.
Introduction

The Gambling Commission (the Commission) offers this briefing note to the Local Government and Regeneration Committee (the Committee) on the Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill to assist further in their consideration of the powers of Licensing Standards Officers (LSOs).

The subject of the powers of LSOs is raised in COSLA’s submission to the Committee at section 8. (Submission number 133).

The Commission’s submission is written in order to provide background and context to COSLA’s note in order that the Committee is provided with the opportunity to give the proposal informed consideration.

The Commission considers that COSLA’s proposal in regard to the powers of LSOs is helpful and provides the most efficient means currently available to correct a drafting error in the Gambling Act 2005 (the Gambling Act).

The Commission is able to provide further explanatory detail should the Committee consider that helpful.

Background

The Gambling Act has three licensing objectives:

- preventing gambling being a source of crime and disorder
- ensuring gambling is conducted in an open and fair way
- protecting children and vulnerable people from being harmed or exploited by gambling

The Gambling Act created a co-regulatory structure for the licensing and regulation of gambling\(^1\). The responsibility is shared between the Commission and licensing authorities. In Scotland licensing authorities are licensing boards constituted under section 1 of the Licensing (Scotland) Act 1976. (Now replaced by the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005.)

The system is financed, in general terms, by means of fees paid by operators. The Commission receives fees in relation to operator licences and licensing authorities receive fees for premises licences and other local gambling permissions.

In Scotland the fee structure for premises licences is set by Scottish Government. (In England and Wales an upper limit is set by the Department of Culture Media and Sport.)

The fees received by licensing authorities are set in order to meet the cost of licensing, inspection and enforcement.

\(^1\) Further details of the different responsibilities is included at Appendix1
Broadly speaking the division of responsibilities for regulation is that the Commission takes responsibility for issues which have a greater impact or risk at a regional, national or GB-wide level. Licensing authorities are best positioned to manage matters which are more localised in impact. (For example ensuring gambling premises comply with the codes of practice, including matters related to social responsibility.)

The understanding of how best to make this shared regulatory structure work effectively, ensuring for example that there is a clear appreciation as to who is best positioned to act in any given situation involving non compliance or illegality, has evolved a great deal since the Gambling Act was introduced. (Although for reasons set out below the current situation in Scotland has unfortunately not developed in the same way.)

Scotland, the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 and LSOs

There are three classes of persons who have powers of entry (and a range of other authorisations) under the Act. They are, in general terms, Commission enforcement officers, constables and ‘authorised persons’. This latter category is the one from which licensing authorities obtain the relevant permissions for staff to undertake inspection, compliance and enforcement activities.

LSOs are appointed in Scotland under the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 (the Licensing Act) and have a range of functions under the legislation. For example supervising compliance with the requirements of the Act and inspecting and reviewing premises.

However at section 304 (2) of the Gambling Act, (a section which empowers licensing officers in England and Wales), it refers to ‘officers’ of licensing authorities. Scottish Licensing Boards do not have employees or officers as such. Consequently our understanding, and this is a view shared by COSLA and LSOs, is that the enforcement powers under the Gambling Act cannot be exercised ‘as of right’ by a LSO.

The Commission developed an Advice Note\(^2\) (July 2013) on this matter, as COSLA’s submission to your Committee notes. This sets out our understanding of how, using other legislation, LSOs or others, might be able to act as ‘authorised persons’ under the Gambling Act.

Due to the original drafting error Licensing Boards and LSOs remain unsure as to the extent of their powers and have therefore felt unable to engage in gambling regulation to any extent across Scotland.

Our ‘Licensing authority statistics 1 April 2009 – 31 March 2014\(^3\), an annual compilation of licensing authority gambling related activity, demonstrates that activity in Scotland remains low in comparison to that in England and Wales.

\(^3\) http://www.gamblingcommission.gov.uk/Licensing-authorities/Information-for-licensing-authorities/Licensing-authority-returns.aspx
AS COSLA’s submission indicates, the Bill currently under consideration may provide an opportunity to clarify the power of LSOs in relation to gambling regulation. This would enable them to take on the important public protection role in gambling that they currently fulfil in relation to alcohol.

Appendix 1

The Gambling Commission

The Commission was set up under the Gambling Act to regulate commercial gambling in Great Britain. The Act came fully into force on 1 September 2007. The Commission is an independent non-departmental public body (NDPB) sponsored by the Department for Culture, Media and Sport (DCMS).

The Commission regulates commercial gambling in Great Britain, including:

- arcades (excluding unlicensed Family Entertainment Centres)
- betting
- bingo
- casinos
- gaming machine manufacturers and suppliers
- gambling software providers
- lottery operators and external lottery managers (excluding small society lotteries)
- British based remote gambling operators
- The National Lottery

The Commission does not regulate spread betting, this is the responsibility of the Financial Conduct Authority.

 Licensing Authorities

Licensing authorities have a range of specific responsibilities, including the following:

- licensing and regulating premises for gambling activities
- considering and granting notices given for the temporary use of premises for gambling
- granting permits for gaming and gaming machines in clubs and miners’ welfare institutes
- regulating gaming and gaming machines in alcohol licensed premises
- granting permits to family entertainment centres for the use of certain lower stake (category D) gaming machines
- granting permits for prize gaming
- considering and granting occasional use notice for betting at tracks
- registering small society lotteries

Written submission from the Scottish Taxi Federation

First, I would like to thank the Chairman and the LGR committee for providing The Scottish Taxi Federation with the opportunity to give oral evidence at the meeting on 21st January 2015, and;

Second, this supplementary written evidence, is submitted for the committee’s consideration primarily because our previous submission was based solely in response to the four issues raised by the video released by the LGR committee.

This submission addresses and gives clarity to our position in regard to the proposed additions to the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982, as outlined in section 3, Civic Licensing, of The Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill 2014, as they affect the Scottish licensed taxi and private hire car trades.

Refusal to grant private hire car Licences on grounds of over provision

The Scottish Taxi Federation does not oppose the principle of providing Licensing Authorities with this option. However, we are most concerned with the assertion contained within the Governments Financial memorandum, which makes it clear that the Government expect, but cannot quantify, that it is likely there will be an increase in court challenges following any decision by a Licensing Authority to refuse an application for a private hire car licence on the grounds of over provision. The Memorandum goes on to say that this should not be a concern for Licensing authorities as any costs incurred by the authority in this regard can be recovered from licence fees.

It is the position of the Scottish Taxi Federation that the adoption of a policy that is tantamount to a laissez-faire approach, is a sign of abrogation of responsibility and fails to provide a benchmarking standard which in effect abandons the trade and requires further costs to be borne by our members. It is our considered opinion that the adoption of any such policy is at best irresponsible. That said the Scottish Taxi Federation is fully supportive of a position that would avoid Licensing Authorities the cost of expensive court challenges, but to simply pass this on to others is not, in our view, the answer.

In its original submission to the Governments consultation paper, the STF suggested that the burden of proof, in terms of proving there exists an under provision, should rest firmly with the applicant. While we understand that this suggestion may court controversy, it remains our contention that a responsible applicant will have undertaken all due diligence in meeting the legal requirements of the application process and will also have researched an associated business plan. Not only would this result in a fully comprehensive application. more importantly, it would dissuade spurious and speculative applications in the first instance.

As stated, our position may be controversial, but it is our belief that it is more acceptable than the adoption of a position that could leave the licensed trade facing higher costs in fees, that can only be recouped by increased tariffs that passed on to the end user, the hiring public.

Testing of private hire car drivers

The Scottish Taxi Federation welcomes training regimes which may include such as, disability awareness, general customer awareness, dispute resolution, knowledge of conditions of licence, the highway code etc. However, we feel that to require private hire drivers to undergo a test of their knowledge of their licensing area, will prove to be an additional burden that Licensing Authorities may well be able to do without. In addition, by the nature of their advance booking criteria, private hire drivers are aware in advance of the passengers intended destination and as a consequence, they are in a position to take advantage of technology such as satellite navigation systems. It is this very essence that separates the private hire car driver from the taxi driver. Many PHC drivers restrict their operation to specific areas that do not entail City wide travel. Additionally, they do not use fully adapted vehicles for the conveyance/carriage of passengers with a disability. Given the nature of their role in transport provision and taking full account of the requirement of advance booking, the stance taken by the STF remains that PHC drivers need not undergo testing in topographical knowledge.

Additionally it is our position that many private hire drivers, take up this employment with a view to graduating to a full taxi drivers licence status once they have gained sufficient knowledge and confidence to take the taxi drivers test. Thus, private hire drivers in essence help to generate a continuous flow of drivers into the taxi industry and provide the second tier service the public have come to expect from the private hire industry. It is our assertion that if this interim passage through the private hire ranks is closed, then the taxi industry in the longer term may well suffer from a shortage of drivers.

Exemptions from sections 10 to 21 of the Civic Goverment (Scotland) Act 1982

The STF fully supports removal of the exemption from the Licensing regime that is currently enjoyed by those who use section 22 (c) to gain such exemption. As it currently stands, this section of the Act is being used to facilitate the hiring of drivers and vehicles that do not then require to come under the scrutiny that licensed operators and drivers require to face. This is not conducive to best practice and in our opinion compromises public safety.

Two Tier Vs one tier licensing System

This subject was introduced during the scrutiny of those giving evidence to the LGR committee on 21st January 2015, and as Secretary of the Federation I am bound to say this aspect of discussion came as something of a surprise. Indeed it was even suggested at one point that taxis should perhaps not be involved in the provision of services which may be considered as work for private hire cars only. This suggestion is as erroneous as it is incredulous and demonstrates either a distinct lack of knowledge of legislation, regulation and the actual working practices of the taxi trade or a total disregard of said procedures and legislation.
To fully answer this question, it needs to be recognised that taxis, or as they were formally called, hackney carriages, have been plying their trade since before the days of the Hansom Cab. Private hire cars on the other hand only came into being following the advent of the 1982 Act, which created a two-tier licensing system. It was clearly appreciated by the Government responsible for the drafting of the ’82 Act, that taxis had been plying their trade or many years, both on the basis of there and then hires and also by dint of two-way radio connections, now referred to as the private hire element. This aspect was fully recognised and accepted by the Government at that time and the Act catered for the taxi industry to continue in this dual role. In addition to this recognised factor, at the same time the decision to restrict the private hire car element to the role of being hired by the practice of advance booking only was arrived at.

It is the opinion of the STF, that time and circumstance have conspired to prove that this decision was not only correct, but that it would also provide the public with an alternative service not available at that time. This has stood the test of time, proving to be just as fit for purpose now as it was in 1982.

The Scottish Taxi Federation strongly believes that the two-tier system of operation should continue as it has been well proven since 1982, that the public would not wish this choice to be denied them. It is equally clear that most licensing areas in Scotland would be unable to cope with the additional taxis that would populate their streets if a one-tier system were to be invoked.

In this regard it may be worth considering the potential situation in Glasgow or Edinburgh for example, if within a short space of time either City were be faced with having to cope with some 3000 to 5000 taxis driving through their streets looking for work. Taxi rank spaces in all areas in Scotland are at a premium, with Glasgow in particular, able only to provide spaces for some 330 taxis. Would the other newly created taxis simply cruise the streets adding to the already poor City centre environment, congestion and pollution problem?

In addition to the foregoing, it must also be taken into consideration that many of the incumbents in the taxi section will have invested heavily in their businesses and may well struggle in this new environment to meet their commitments, ultimately going to the wall.

In this type of scenario would the Government the be prepared to consider compensation?

There is clearly a need to consider all of the ramifications attached to making such a monumental change that switching to a single tier licensing regime for taxis would mean to all concerned. It is the position of the Scottish Taxi Federation that the current two-tier system is fit for purpose, meets environmental and social requirements, provides fully for the traveling public and the taxi and phc trades alike.

I trust the additional evidence contained in this submission will prove to be helpful to the LGR committee.
TAXI APPS, IMPACTS AND THREATS
James M. Cooper

1.0  Context, Background and introduction

This paper addresses the issues around taxi apps, a new(ish) technology synonymous with the development of the smartphone, impacts and issues arising. After a sluggish initial move into the taxi market, most likely reflecting (perceived) barriers to entry, development has been rapid. New entrants appear regularly and in number, with a few with sufficient market capitalization, size and velocity to become dominant. Market players such as Hallo, Uber and, to a lesser extent, TaxiMagic, have achieved a sustainable market share. Other players may achieve home market dominance, such as the Hail-a-Cab app in Houston, USA; regional market recognition, e-cab in Europe; or brand allegiance such as (any of) Yellowcab apps across the USA. Local, regional and international size and distinctions reflecting both the market reach of any player, and the sometimes significant regulatory differences across different geographies. The latter point, that no one city looks like or regulates in exactly the same way, has both acted as a barrier (to most), and an opportunity (for some), on which more later.

The taxi app has created significant differences in opinion, application and outcome, best described as market disruption, an issue that fundamentally changes the market in which it operates. Here then we need to consider a discussion that does not simply refer to the concept of taxi transport, but its ancillary markets: the booking technology and the platforms on which these products are offered, and alternatives to the traditional licensed vehicle. In short the ‘taxi’ product has changed and will continue to change to reflect the issues of marketing, app technology and access (to the market). Moreover, as the apps themselves cross traditional licensing distinctions, their development will necessarily impact on the regulatory and control mechanisms in place. This does not suggest that all such ‘incursions’ across regulatory boundaries are legal, with many arguing that they are not, but rather identifies the fact that the app, at best, challenges the distinctions historically applied to the taxi market and, at worst, allows for widespread illegal operation. The role of the new entrant app company, associated public and political opinion is critical in the success of this route to market, and brings with it significant and fundamentally opposing views.

Not that this form of change is new, simply the platform and, to some extent, the speed. The latter will be important as we discuss the (apparent) inability of the regulator to control the development and potentially illegal operation of the new entrants, whether as a result of vastly differing responses (cycles), ineffective regulation, regulatory capture and/or political maneuvering, of which more later. We also need identify the exponential growth of the operating platforms themselves, based around the ownership of smartphones, and the relatively late entry of taxi apps amongst transportation apps. Effectively many in the traditional taxi industry responded late, responded slowly, and responded badly. In fact, it may be suggested the traditional taxi industry is still at least 2 years behind the market leaders in app technologies - positively prehistoric in app development terms. This also is a significant issue.

2.0 A brief history of the app, market entry and market equilibrium

Let us be clear, the taxi app offers and requires a significant change in the market. New apps can offer the consumer a better product, one that is easier to use, and one that offers a better service - particularly where the app reduces or removes some of the barriers to quality. This is an intentionally aggressive statement and is unlikely to please the traditional industry, but we need to account for, even realize for the first time, the nature of the new product and the significant benefits associated with it. In short service quality levels associated with app use are (or appear to be) different and better. A taxi company offering the same services as they did pre-app are not competitive to the app generation, however good their product was prior to app competition. More on quality and barriers to quality later.

Apps themselves have developed rapidly in the period since about 2008. Prior to this date apps served a limited purpose, had limited reach, and small numbers of users. Indeed it may be helpful to define generations of apps, and note the effective life of each:

1st Generation: Taxi Listing Service (electronic phone book)
2nd Generation: App to dispatch (including White label)
3rd Generation: App to driver, traditional taxi
4th Generation: App to driver, other license categories (including unlicensed)
5th Generation: Cross platform app, user multi choice - blurs regulatory boundaries
6th Generation: Price Comparison (not yet in wide use)

Here then a fundamental difference in the speed of development, and therefore the need to control for a new set of impacts if such controls are deemed necessary. Apps emerging at a frequency of a new generation of app in around 8 months, compared to a major regulatory shift possibly once in every 80 years! In short the regulatory process is poorly equipped to deal with the speed of change resulting from apps. Effective regulation, a need to consider and address negatives in the interest of the public and the need to assess and develop, falls considerably behind the speed of ‘innovation’ leading to the accusation of ‘regulatory capture’ or simply that of incompetence and irrelevance of traditional control. The accusation of incompetence leveled against regulatory authority is not limited to app protagonists alone, but may also be a comment on the part of the traditional industry under pressure. It is not clear whether such a ‘perfect storm’ is actually in the interest of the traditional industry.

3.0 Entry to the market / Market Regulation

Conflict between market participants, market regulators and city authorities arises around a number of focal points. The entry of apps is, and continues to be, new, with constant re-invention, clever avoidance of constraints, and smart moves to obtain public support and discredit opposition in equal measure. The new entrant is nothing if not intelligent. App companies may also use administrative structures to their advantage, leading to the accusation of political maneuvering, and sometimes of ‘dirty tricks’. Moreover, as the challenge to regulation may span across differing administrative authorities, including differing authorities in the same location, responses are rarely coordinated, and often contradictory. The issue is of particular relevance in locations where traditional taxis are licensed by a city or county, whilst limousines are licensed by the state.
A further issue relates to the forms of technologies being used. Apps are technology led, achieving what is possible on the back of the smartphone itself, but also market oriented, in that the technologies satisfy a desire for innovation to an extent that was not present before. Differing speeds of response, and differing approaches to regulation, have also contributed to a confused market, where few responses are applied evenly across the board, and many too late. The opportunity to label any innovation as ‘technology’ rather than ‘transport’ also plays into the (lack of) control being applied.

To the technology company, the (short) 5 years in development represent a multiplicity of app lifetimes, allowing for technology companies to appear mature, even unassailable. While regulators struggle to accommodate, adapt or oppose the change wrought by the new technology. Here also the politicking of the newcomers as effective lobbyists in their own right. Fighting, exposing and ridiculing become ‘fair’ trade practices and with great effect given that many regulatory decisions are half political to start with, the power of the argument, short term and biased it may be, but effective and free market. Why regulate for an old industry when you have a better more effective new one? It is possible even to suggest a political class ready and willing to venture to the market knows best, small government or the ‘dead hand’ of the regulator, in preference to the tried and tested methods of the past. Technologies, politics and effective advocacy have converged to create the circumstances for a radically different local transport market. Not all of this is bad for (some) intending passengers, indeed the masterstroke may actually have been to have polarised the market response to those that love and those that hate the new entrant, as by default those that hate, hate all, including the bits that might actually be good. An approach that appears clever, as a marketing tool, but questionable as to whether this is really appropriate to the future of the small vehicle for hire market?

4.0 Market Threats

Notwithstanding the potential accusation of analysis falling into the hate (or love) camp, an evaluation of the market is appropriate, indeed now necessary. In this section we consider the potential changes that follow from the development of the taxi app, and the nature of that change. Two threats appear to be exercised frequently:

- That the traditional taxi will no longer have a role / that the taxi will be left with all of the trips that a new entrant does not wish to take,
- That the regulating authority is no longer appropriate / fit for purpose / is guilty (victim) of regulatory capture

Both have some merit, as the new entrant will, in line with classic economic principles, seek to maximize profit by capturing business, of which some will be from existing operators. This is true, of course, in any new market entrant whether focused on a taxi app, or other form of company, but is especially true in the instance of app developments as these provide an easy route to market without many of the hurdles faced by the traditional taxi company. Some arguments are made in relation to market take, that the total numbers of trips remains static, while the newcomer removes from existing supplier, but this is not fully represented in statistical analysis. A more likely scenario is that the market moves to a new point of equilibrium, with some growth in demand, but a lack of growth in the traditional taxi sector. In short the market may have grown to a new equilibrium point, but the traditional taxi supplier is seeing erosion of market share, a loss of business, or both.

Moreover, as the market becomes saturated at the new point of equilibrium, the only method of growth becomes market take from other suppliers - distinct parallels of this exist in the market for cellphones. In addition, as the supply of vehicles has grown, the market for drivers becomes disputed, with examples of driver shortages quoted in a number of US cities.

It can also be noted that, as the app itself does not necessarily fall into an existing regulatory category, the app based supplier can access (has accessed) a variety of vehicle types crossing traditional operational and legislative boundaries. The offset between regulations, entry in to an unknown no-mans' land, becomes an effective tool to avoid regulation whilst appearing to be victim of 'regulatory ambiguity'.

The same opportunity is more limited in the case of the traditional taxi supplier, limited by existing investments, often significant, in the traditional taxi supply model. Investments including operational base, licenses or medallion purchases, and compliance with the regulated requirements of the taxi sector. The existing, legal and paid up regulated taxi industry has done no more than comply with the enforced regulations pertaining to their sector, making the plaintiff cry for a 'level playing field', both reasonable and understandable on detailed inspection; though many reviews, surface level journalism and political response may fail to identify with this position. The more aggressive a response is on the part of the traditional taxi industry, the more they appear to fall into a trap set to make them appear hostile, unmoving or un-moveable. The most aggressive, the accusation of 'dirty-tricks' made by the traditional industry of the new entrant also appears the most likely to backfire.

The difference both in starting point and (apparent) compliance with the law, or lack thereof, has resulted in a very negative view on the part of the traditional trade of the new market entrants. Accusations of a lack of a level playing field are common place amongst traditional operators who, having invested in a given set of legal requirements, find their opposition avoiding, ignoring, or openly opposing the regulatory status quo. Indeed it is often observed that the new market entrants have become particularly professional in turning traditional market complaints to their own advantage, stylizing the traditional market players as unable to accept change, unable to move with the technologies. Indeed the accusations when reflected back on the traditional taxi industry present an almost Luddite view of a traditional industry bent on destroying rather than embracing the new technologies now available, whether this is an accurate portrayal or not.

Nor is the regulatory community immune to attack, with new entrants placing severe strains on the licensing authorities, forcing decisions on entry, permission to operate, and fundamental changes in regulations that have applied to the taxi industry over decades and centuries. Of these the most effective accusation appears around the concept of 'regulatory capture'. Effectively the accusation that a regulator has moved from the role of protecting the public - a legitimate and honorable role, to protecting the industry - without regard to what is appropriate and in the public interest. The accusation, and any defense offered by the regulator may result in the perception of a truth, placing the regulator in the same position as the traditional operator, being defensive, and apparently seeking to prevent rather than empower new technologies, a situation that may be stylized by the new entrant as opposition to advancement, in the case of the strict regulator; and as regulatory ambiguity, where regulator responses are slow and/or thoughtful. Neither particularly helpful to the regulator seeking to define a proper regulatory response and potentially the death of the regulator themselves.
5.0 Market Opportunity

Having identified threats, it is also legitimate to address opportunities. Without question the app provides a significant benefit to many users, although not all. Access to services through smartphones has become commonplace and there appears no possibility that this will diminish. Indeed, the speed of market growth, addressed in many technology articles, suggests an almost unlimited future for the smartphone and its use, to the extent that the discussion should not only address the potential development of the app, but also the next generations of the smartphone and the increased opportunities these will offer.

That said, the discussion related to the taxi app considers the potential of current and next generation apps. Opportunities include those that facilitate access, rather than facilitate booking of taxis, with a new generation of vehicle types, and significant new life entering previously exclusive and often underused vehicle categories. Passenger benefits include:

- Rapid expansion in the number of vehicles available, often addressing market issues in night time supply
- Increased choice between vehicle types, reflecting differing qualities of vehicles and different price options
- New vehicle types including instant vehicle rental (eg: Car2Go etc.) and for profit rideshare\(^2\) (now often referred to as Transportation Network Companies - TNCs).

Consumer choice is expanded, prices become variable, as many non-taxi taxi like vehicles are not controlled for price; and quality choices, including the perception of quality, become important. Reliability, or perceived lack of reliability, will also play a part in the decision of the consumer. In short the market has shifted, and a new equilibrium will follow. New entrants have an inherent benefit of sitting outside the traditional licensing structure, unencumbered by existing costs, and able to offer new service types with apparent impunity, and with support of many friends and extremely effective marketing and lobbying teams.

Many benefits exist, most can be applied, but the long term interests of the traveling public remain appropriate and must be achieved. The market benefit of today should not be at the expense of the service in the future, nor at the expense of those communities unable or unwilling to access services by app. The latter also including accessible services, opening up a significant discussion on the general lack of equitable accessibility in app based provision.

6.0 Political Aspects and compliance issues

Further argument relates to the route to market chosen by some app developers. In developing this argument we need to highlight the nature of a regulatory body within an administrative and political structure, to an extent that has not been explored in preceding analysis.

\(^2\) The term 'rideshare' is separately defined in the USA and largely inaccurate for application to apps such as Lyft, Sidecar etc. (collectively TNCs). Its use in existing literature to define new entrant apps supporting private car hire is largely a result of a lack of a more appropriate term. The use of the term 'for profit rideshare' in this text is intended to highlight the concept of TNC type vehicles using a term that has been applied in previous literature.
To be effective regulation has to perform a function in the public interest. The setting of regulations and their oversight will typically fall to regulators, commissions or police departments, the latter in a small number of cases. The commissions in turn define regulations that (appear to) serve the public interest. Most commissions have a political element, in that they are tied to a mayoral or city function associated. Moreover, as the decisions made within the commissions have a city policy element they may also have to pass through a city vote. Prior to apps this process was largely perfunctory, taxis neither inviting nor receiving significant attention, with the possible exception of a period of deregulation in the 1980s.

Since the initial development of apps this has changed, with some app technology companies identifying the political element in the existing process as a method of applying pressure / stating an argument in a way that had not been developed to the same extent in the past. The system by which regulations had always been scrutinized became a powerful tool to influence the passage of a code, or indeed to prevent it. The intervention at city level has grown rapidly to an area of significant expertise and lobbying.

Accusations are also made regarding the potential manipulation of the process by intervention into the performance of surveys and analysis. In this accusation the mail bases, personal contacts or simply well known websites available to technologies are used to influence the numbers of responses made from a pro-technology respondent group. This may include responses made by individuals with an interest in the technology rather than the city or location undertaking the analysis. A similar influence is less likely from a less technical party, effectively one without an app in widespread use. Some evidence of biased samples can be seen in some studies.

6.1 Effective Regulation

To what extent regulation continues to be possible, desirable, even legal, will become a significant area of discussion. With the advancement of lobby groups for the new technologies, the regulator has come as much in the firing line as the traditional operator. Indeed some literature seeks to paint the two as complicit.

At this point a small health warning is necessary. The extent to which the reader will agree with the following will really depend on their own perceptions, but in reading this, please consider what regulation actually is intended to achieve. The regulator does not have a role to oppose or limit development, rather to ensure it occurs without impacting negatively on the public. Moreover, while one group may be lining up to endorse the new product, not all users will. The new technologies work well and are a significant improvement for some, even for many, but may also result in loss of accessible service, and a denigration of the industry that may impact over time. Arguments related to the legality and use of ‘Dirty Tricks’ should be taken seriously every bit as much as the counter argument of regulatory capture. Both equate an abuse of a system, and both should be investigated.

So how should regulators respond. Indeed what responses are open to them?

Here we take a sideways step and suggest we look again at the fundamental reasons why we regulate in the first place. Possibly a major exercise that appears out of proportion to the scale of the problem, as it appears now. But necessary never-the-less. Certainty of purpose is an effective baseline from which to regulate, and adapt. Lack of clarity, regulation at the permission of any one group, even regulatory capture, fails to deliver, and will fail when placed under intense and repeated pressure. Here then in steps:

- Do we regulate well, and why. Have the fundamental reasons for regulation changed, and can we justify the approach we have adopted.
- Do we analysis on the basis of fact, or simply the appearance of assessment. Are the facts and data presented actually accurate and do we ask the right questions?
- To what extent are the decisions based on fact, rather than rhetoric, and how have authorities acted to remove overt political pressure
- If the new market paradigm is visible, in our authority or elsewhere, is the form of regulation identified in preceding steps going to remain fit for purpose, and can we justify it sufficiently well.

The approaches to assessment, control and quality of data will need to be updated as well as the measures used to deliver services in the public interest. In exactly the same way as in the existing taxi industry, what has worked to date, and appeared to work well, will not be good enough in the future. New technologies and new entrants have changed the market, it is imperative that the regulation, control and delivery of services move as a result. Failure to do so, will result in failure in the traditional market, however remote that may currently appear.

6.2 Effective Legality

Throughout the analysis thus far, we have alluded to, but not directly confronted legalities of operation or approach. While this has many variances in opinion, the questions remain and are legitimate. Here too we need to acknowledge the legislated authority of the regulator to develop and enforce law. It is not, should not and can not be the role of the individual passenger to ensure all aspects of the service they are using is legal, that is the legitimate and correct role of the regulator. Bluntly put, the passenger has neither the time nor the competence to ensure that the vehicle they use is insured, has passed safety inspection or that the driver has knowledge and required testing. These are all roles of the regulators. Moreover, it would appear inappropriate to permit or delegate this responsibility to the company providing the service, whether they call themselves a transportation or a technology company, or indeed anything else for that matter. The conflict of interest in a supplier of services also being the certification agency is simply to great.

We also need to identify the the areas where legality is challenged. This appears to relate, at present, to:

- Presence of (appropriate) Insurance
- Avowance of regulated requirements
- Inability to supply to all, including accessible

7.0 Impacts of market change, short and long term

- Duty of regulator to the public for sustainable services in the taxi market
- Use of market capture
- Reduction in effectiveness of traditional trade and negatives arising therefrom
- Poor and minority communities
Supplementary written response from the British Metals Recycling Association (BMRA)

BMRA responded to the Local Government and Regeneration Committee’s invitation to provide evidence ahead of the committee’s scrutiny of the Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill. BMRA would like to submit some further evidence that builds on our original submission and on subsequent discussions with members of the committee.

We believe that it could prove very difficult to amend the Bill in its existing form in order to produce a clearly understood, modern piece of legislation. We have attempted to demonstrate this by annexing an amended form of wording to this submission.

Major Issues

Cash trading

We welcome any measures that will deter metal theft by removing opportunities for the anonymous disposal of stolen material for cash. However, this has to be on the basis that the AWLS Bill will minimise the creation of new unfair competitive opportunities for those operating on the margins of the licensing regime at the expense of compliant dealers.

The AWLS Bill seeks to ban cash payments using virtually identical text to the Scrap Metal Dealers Act 2013 (England & Wales), but contains significant weaknesses relating to the licensing regime itself that would provide readily-exploitable loopholes for unscrupulous operators.

See proposed clause 12 in annexe 1.

Date of processing

S33B(4)(b) of the CGSA (as amended) calls for a dealer to record the date on which metal is processed, including its description and weight prior to the processing operation.

Such a requirement will be difficult in a typical metal recycling facility where material is continually received and sorted for processing in economical quantities. Compliance with the requirement would require the batching of all material through processes that are intrinsically continuous. This would require a substantial increase in the land allocated and licensed by SEPA for the purpose of metal recycling and would threaten the economic viability of many Scottish businesses.

See proposed clauses 13 and 14 in annexe 1.

Register of licences

It appears that responsibility to maintain registers of metal dealers remains with each licensing authority (CGSA Schedule 1, para 14 refers), although a mobile collector’s licence will remain valid for collections anywhere in Scotland (CGSA S 32(2) refers).

Local registers may be appropriate for the other activities regulated by the CGSA. However, the collection and sale of scrap metal, particularly by a mobile collector, frequently involves collections and transportation throughout multiple local authority jurisdictions. That means enforcement agencies may have to access and consult registers for distant local authorities in order to establish whether an individual or a business is licensed.

Failure to set up a national register of metal dealers, potentially managed by SEPA who already maintain registers of all these businesses in on one form or other, would constitute a lost opportunity to assist enforcement agencies in the detection and prosecution of metal theft and breaches of the CGSA. A national register also enables citizens to satisfy themselves that they are dealing with a licensed buyer of scrap

See proposed clause 7 in annexe 1.

Production of licences

We can find no requirement for a metal dealer or mobile collector to display a copy of a licence.

CGSA S5(4) allows a person who may be carrying on an activity which requires licensing five days to produce the licence. We consider that placing an obligation on metal dealers to display copies of their licence on their premises, and for mobile collectors to display their license/s on their collection vehicles, would be a useful measure to assist enforcement agencies in identifying illegal dealers.

See proposed clause 10 in annexe 1.

Verification of identity

CGSA (as amended) S33B(5)(c) says that a dealer must “keep a copy of any document produced by a person to verify that person’s name and address”. However, we cannot find any requirement placed on a dealer to verify the identity of a person supplying or receiving metal for recycling (‡ see below under “Methods of payment”). If such a requirement is introduced it is essential that the person whose identity is to be verified, and the form of acceptable documents, is set out clearly and unambiguously.

See proposed clause 11 in annexe 1.

Methods of payment

Electronic transfer definitions and associated record-keeping requirements are very poorly defined in the AWLS Bill. Examples include:

- no exclusion for barter transactions (payment in kind). This omission offers up the opportunity for those wishing to circumvent the proposed prohibition on buying scrap metal for cash by exchanging scrap metal for another commodity on which such a prohibition does not exist. “Payment in kind” is not an uncommon industry practice and this could be significant loophole.

- no definition of the type of permissible electronic transfer enabling the use of cash cards without any “know your customer” checks

See proposed clause 12 in annexe 1.
Metal dealer definition

The Bill’s definitions of a metal dealer and an itinerant metal dealer in the CGSA S37 are not changed by the AWLS Bill and require a person both to buy and to sell metal before they qualify.

One significant implication is that a mobile collector who collects from households without making payment for the items or materials he collects would not require a licence, and would thus remain outside the scope of the AWLS Bill. Furthermore, there is scope for a person collecting general waste and other materials, but actually earning a substantial proportion of his income from separating out and selling scrap metal, to escape the licensing regime. Similarly, skip hire operators and demolition contractors generating a substantial amount of their revenue from sale of scrap metal could escape the definition and need for licensing. Furthermore car breakers are not covered by the definition, a situation exacerbated by the absence of a definition of scrap metal.

We note that CGSA S37(2) excludes manufacturers’ buying of scrap for manufacture of other articles from the definition of metal dealer, providing scope for creative interpretation of both “manufacture” and “other articles” to evade licensing. For example, a metal dealer who has a small furnace for the manufacture of aluminium ingot would fall outside the scope of the AWLS Bill. We believe that the AWLS Bill should be amended to capture “all persons carrying out a business consisting of buying or selling scrap metal”, with some specific exemptions for manufacturers disposing of their own surplus materials or offcuts. A clear and comprehensive definition of metal dealer, to include vehicle dismantlers and other businesses generating a significant proportion of their income from sale of scrap metal is essential.

See proposed clauses 1 & 17 (4) in annexe 1.

Powers of Search and Seizure

We consider the existing powers vested in police officers under Section 60(1)(c) of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 to enter and search premises occupied by a metal dealer without warrant to be draconian, particularly in the light of the levelling of playing field for regulation of all metal dealers through the removal of the exemption warrant system. The AWLS Bill provides an opportunity to regularize the situation by removing specific additional powers in respect of metal dealers’ premises and vehicles.

General

The definitions relating to metal dealing in CGSA S37 are weak. Crucially they do not define scrap metal, and many measures that apply to a mobile collectors and site operators are listed separately, thus complicating the structure of the document and providing scope for confusion.

We have not dealt here with the repeal of certain provisions of the CGSA that would be needed if some or all of these proposals were adopted.
BMRA proposed revisions to the scrap metal dealers section of the Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill

BMRA has given serious consideration as to how the existing Metal Dealers clauses of the Bill could be amended to provide effective legislation to control those aspects of the trade in metal for recycling that are of concern to legislators, the police, the legitimate industry and the victims of metal theft. We have concluded that the current Bill Part 3 Clauses 63 to 66 along with the proposed amendments to the Civic Government Act 33B to 33D could not be successfully improved and that a redraft of the appropriate clauses of the Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill would be an appropriate solution.

The following text leans heavily on the Scrap Metal Dealers’ Act 2013, but seeks to reduce some confusion arising from the framing of that Act, and also to extract definitions into a single section.

We have generally not tried to insert or amend cross-references to other legislation that may apply in Scotland, however references are made that may not apply in Scotland. Where these are recognised they are marked [………..?].

Proposed Text

The Licence

1. Requirement for licence to carry on business as scrap metal dealer
   (1) No person may carry on business as a scrap metal dealer unless authorised by a licence under this Act (a “scrap metal licence”).
   (2) See section 17(4) for the meaning of “carry on business as a scrap metal dealer”.
   (3) A person who carries on business as a scrap metal dealer in breach of subsection (1) is guilty of an offence and is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding level …….

2. Form and effect of licence
   (1) A scrap metal licence is to be issued by a local authority [Sect 17(10) refers].
   (2) A licence must be one of the following types—
      (a) a site licence, or
      (b) an mobile collector’s licence.
   (3) A site licence authorises the licensee to carry on business at any site in the authority’s area which is identified in the licence, including collection and delivery of scrap metal in connection with business at the licensed site.
   (4) A site licence must—
      (a) name the licensee,
      (b) name the authority,
      (c) Include a unique serial number for scrap metal licences issued by that authority,
      (d) identify all the sites in the authority’s area at which the licensee is authorised to carry on business,
      (e) state the date on which the licence is due to expire.
   (5) A mobile collector’s licence authorises the licensee to carry on business as a mobile collector in the authority’s area.
   (6) A mobile collector’s licence authorises scrap metal collection activities by one natural person only (“the licensee”).
(7) A mobile collector’s licence must—
(a) name the licensee (sub section (6) refers),
(b) include a photographic image of the licensee’s face (sub section (6) refers).
(c) name the authority,
(d) include a unique serial number for scrap metal licences issued by that authority, and
(e) state the date on which the licence is due to expire.

(8) A licence is to be in a form which—
(a) complies with subsection (4) or (7), and
(b) enables the licensee to comply with section 10 (display of licence).

(9) Ministers may by order prescribe further requirements as to the form and content of licences.

(10) A person may hold more than one licence issued by different local authorities, but may not hold more than one licence issued by any one authority.

3. Issue of licence

(1) A local authority must not issue or renew a scrap metal licence unless it is satisfied that the applicant is a suitable person to carry on business as a scrap metal dealer.

(2) In determining whether the applicant is a suitable person, the authority may have regard to any information which it considers to be relevant, including in particular—
(a) whether the applicant has been convicted of any relevant offence;
(b) whether the applicant has been the subject of any relevant enforcement action;
(c) any previous refusal of an application for the issue or renewal of a scrap metal licence (and the reasons for the refusal);
(d) any previous revocation of a scrap metal licence (and the reasons for the revocation);

(3) In determining whether a company is a suitable person to carry on business as a scrap metal dealer, a local authority is to have regard, in particular, to whether any of the following is a suitable person—
(a) any director of the company;
(b) any secretary of the company;
(c) any shadow director of the company (that is to say, any person in accordance with whose directions or instructions the directors of the company are accustomed to act).

(4) In determining whether a partnership is a suitable person to carry on business as a scrap metal dealer, a local authority is to have regard, in particular, to whether each of the partners is a suitable person.

(5) The authority may consult other persons regarding the suitability of an applicant, including in particular—
(a) any other local authority;
(b) the Scottish Environment Protection Agency;
(c) an officer of a police force.

4. Revocation of licence

(1) The authority may revoke a scrap metal licence if it is satisfied that the licensee does not carry on business at any of the sites identified in the licence.

(2) The authority may revoke a licence if it is no longer satisfied that the licensee is a suitable person to carry on business as a scrap metal dealer.

(3) A revocation under this section comes into effect when no appeal under paragraph 9 of Schedule 1 is possible in relation to the revocation or variation, or when any such appeal is finally determined or withdrawn.
(4) In this section “the authority” means the local authority which issued the licence.

5. Further provision about licences

Schedule 1 (which makes further provision about licences) has effect.

6. Supply of information by authority

(1) This section applies to information which has been supplied to a local authority under this Act and relates to a scrap metal licence or to an application for or relating to a licence.

(2) The local authority must supply any such information to any of the following persons who requests it for purposes relating to this Act—
   (a) any other local authority;
   (b) the Scottish Environment Protection Agency;
   (c) an officer of a police force.

(3) This section does not limit any other power the authority has to supply that information.

7. Register of licences

(1) The Scottish Environment Protection Agency must maintain a register of scrap metal licences issued by authorities in Scotland.

(2) Each entry in the register must record—
   (a) the name of the authority which issued the licence,
   (b) the unique serial number for scrap metal licences issued by that authority,
   (c) the name of the licensee,
   (d) any trading name of the licensee,
   (e) the address of any site identified in the licence,
   (f) the type of licence, and
   (g) the date on which the licence is due to expire.

(3) The registers are to be open for inspection to the public.

(4) The Scottish Environment Protection Agency may combine its register with any other register maintained by it.

8. Notification requirements

(1) An applicant for a scrap metal licence, or for the renewal or variation of a licence, must notify the authority to which the application was made of any changes which materially affect the accuracy of the information which the applicant has provided in connection with the application.

(2) A licensee who is not carrying on business as a scrap metal dealer in the area of the authority which issued the licence must notify the authority of that fact.

(3) Notification under subsection (2) must be given within 28 days of the beginning of the period in which the licensee is not carrying on business in that area while licensed.

(4) If a licensee carries on business under a trading name, the licensee must notify the authority which issued the licence of any change to that name.

(5) Notification under subsection (4) must be given within 28 days of the change occurring.

(6) An authority must notify the Scottish Environment Protection Agency of—
   (a) any notification given to the authority under subsection (2) or (4);
   (b) any variation made by the authority under paragraph 3 of Schedule 1 (variation of type of licence or matters set out in licence), and
   (c) any revocation by the authority of a licence.

(7) Notification under subsection (6) must be given within 28 days of the notification, variation or revocation in question.
Where an authority notifies the Scottish Environment Protection Agency under subsection (6), the Scottish Environment Protection Agency must amend the register under section 7 accordingly.

An applicant or licensee who fails to comply with this section is guilty of an offence and is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding level ..............

It is a defence for a person charged with an offence under this section to prove that the person took all reasonable steps to avoid committing the offence.

Closed of unlicensed sites

Schedule 2 (which makes provision for the closure of sites at which a scrap metal business is being carried on without a licence) has effect.

Display of licence

(1) A scrap metal dealer who holds a site licence must display a copy of the licence at each site identified in the licence.

(a) The copy must be displayed in a prominent place in an area accessible to the public.

(2) A scrap metal dealer who holds a mobile collector’s licence must display a copy of the licence on any vehicle that is being used in the course of the dealer’s business.

(a) The copy must be displayed in a manner which enables it easily to be read by a person outside the vehicle.

(3) A scrap metal dealer who fails to comply with this section is guilty of an offence and is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding level ..............

Conduct of business

Verification of supplier’s identity

(1) A scrap metal dealer must not receive scrap metal from a person without verifying the person’s full name and address.

(2) That verification must be by reference to documents, data or other information obtained from a reliable and independent source.

(3) Ministers may prescribe in regulations—

(a) documents, data or other information which are sufficient for the purpose of subsection (2);

(b) documents, data or other information which are not sufficient for that purpose.

(4) If a scrap metal dealer receives scrap metal in breach of subsection (1), each of the following is guilty of an offence—

(a) the scrap metal dealer;

(b) if the metal is received at a site, the site manager;

(c) any person who, under arrangements made by a person within paragraph (a) or (b), has responsibility for verifying the name and address.

(5) It is a defence for a person within subsection (4)(a) or (4)(b) who is charged with an offence under subsection (4) to prove that the person—

(a) made arrangements to ensure that the metal was not received in breach of subsection (1), and

(b) took all reasonable steps to ensure that those arrangements were complied with.

(6) A person guilty of an offence under subsection (4) is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding level ..............

(7) A person who, on delivering scrap metal to a scrap metal dealer, gives a false name or false address is guilty of an offence and is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding level ..............
12. Offence of buying scrap metal for cash etc

(1) A scrap metal dealer must not pay for scrap metal except—
   (a) by a cheque which under section 81A of the Bills of Exchange Act 1882
       [Scotland?] is not transferable, or
   (b) by an electronic transfer of funds (authorised by credit or debit card or otherwise).

(2) Ministers may by order amend subsection (1) to permit other methods of payment.

(3) Payment in kind (with goods or services) is not permitted.

(4) If a scrap metal dealer pays for scrap metal in breach of subsection (1), each of the following is guilty of an offence—
     (a) the scrap metal dealer;
     (b) if the payment is made at a site, the site manager;
     (c) any person who makes the payment acting for the dealer.
     (d) any person who receives the cash payment from the scrap metal dealer.

(5) It is a defence for a person within subsection (4)(a) or (4)(b) who is charged with an offence under this section to prove that the person—
     (a) made arrangements to ensure that the payment was not made in breach of subsection (1), and
     (b) took all reasonable steps to ensure that those arrangements were complied with.

(6) A person guilty of an offence under this section is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding level ...............

13. Records: receipt of metal

(1) This section applies if a scrap metal dealer receives any scrap metal in the course of the dealer’s business.

(2) The dealer must record the following information—
   (a) the description of the metal, including its type, form and weight
   (b) the date and time of its receipt;
   (c) if the metal is delivered in or on a vehicle, the registration mark (within the meaning of section 23 of the Vehicle Excise and Registration Act 1994 [Scotland?]) of the vehicle;
   (d) the full name and address of the person from whom the metal is received

(3) The dealer must keep a copy of any documents used to verify the name and address of the person from whom the metal is received, and must cross-refer the record of the transaction to the relevant copy.

(4) If the dealer pays for the metal by cheque, the dealer must keep a copy of the cheque.

(5) If the dealer pays for the metal by electronic transfer—
    (a) the dealer must keep the receipt identifying the transfer, or
    (b) if no receipt identifying the transfer was obtained, the dealer must record particulars identifying the transfer.

14. Records: disposal of metal

(1) This section applies if a scrap metal dealer disposes of any scrap metal in the course of the dealer’s business.

(2) For these purposes metal is disposed of—
    (a) whether or not it is in the same form in which it was received;
    (b) whether or not the disposal is to another person;

(3) Where the disposal is in the course of business under a site licence or an mobile collectors licence, the dealer must record the following information—
(a) the description of the metal, including its type (or types if mixed), form and weight;
(b) the date and time of its disposal;
(c) if the disposal is to another person, the full name and address of that person;
(d) if the dealer receives payment for the metal (whether by way of sale or exchange), the price or other consideration received.

15. Records: supplementary
(1) The dealer must keep the information and other records mentioned in sections 13(2), 13(5) and 14(3) for a period of 3 years beginning with the day on which the metal is received or (as the case may be) disposed of.
(2) If a scrap metal dealer fails to fulfil a requirement under section 13 or 14, or this section, each of the following is guilty of an offence—
(a) the scrap metal dealer;
(b) any person who, under arrangements made by the licensee has responsibility for fulfilling the requirement.
(3) It is a defence for a person within subsection (2)(a) or (2)(b) who is charged with an offence under this section to prove that the person—
(a) made arrangements to ensure that the requirement was fulfilled, and
(b) took all reasonable steps to ensure that those arrangements were complied with. A person guilty of an offence under this section is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding level.....

Supplementary

16. Offences by bodies corporate
(1) Where an offence under this Act is committed by a body corporate and is proved—
(a) to have been committed with the consent or connivance of a director, manager, secretary or other similar officer, or
(b) to be attributable to any neglect on the part of any such person, the individual as well as the body corporate is guilty of the offence and is liable to be proceeded against and punished accordingly.
(2) Where the affairs of a body corporate are managed by its members, subsection (1) applies in relation to the acts and omissions of a member in connection with that management as if the member were a director of the body corporate.

Definitions

17. Interpretation and definitions
(1) “metal” means any metal (including any precious metal) and any alloy of any metals, whether old or new and includes manufactured articles, whether old or new, made wholly or partly of metal, of any of the materials commonly known as hard metal or of cemented or sintered metallic carbides;
(2) “Scrap metal” includes—
(a) any old, waste or discarded metal or metallic material, and
(b) any product, article or assembly which is made from or contains metal and is broken, worn out or regarded by its last holder as having reached the end of its useful life.
(3) The Secretary of State may by order amend the definition of “scrap metal” for the purposes of this Act.
“scrap metal dealer” means a person who carries on a business, whether or not authorised by a licence,
(a) which consists wholly or partly in buying or selling scrap metal, whether or not the metal is sold in the form in which it was bought, or
(b) as a motor salvage operator (so far as that does not fall within paragraph (a)).
(c) “mobile collector” means a scrap metal dealer who—
(d) carries on business as a scrap metal dealer otherwise than at a site, and
(i) regularly engages, in the course of that business, in collecting waste materials and old, broken, worn out or defaced articles by means of visits from door to door.
(e) For the purposes of subsection (a), a person who manufactures articles is not to be regarded as selling scrap metal if that person sells scrap metal only as a by-product of manufacturing articles or as surplus materials not required for manufacturing them.

“site manager” means a natural person named in a site licence as a site manager or proposed to be so named in a site licence application.
(a) For the purposes of subsection (4)(b), a person carries on business as a motor salvage operator if the person carries on a business which consists—
(i) wholly or partly in recovering salvageable parts from motor vehicles for re-use or sale and subsequently selling or otherwise disposing of the rest of the vehicle for scrap,
(ii) wholly or mainly in buying written-off vehicles and subsequently repairing and reselling them,
(iii) wholly or mainly in buying or selling motor vehicles which are to be the subject (whether immediately or on a subsequent re-sale) of any of the activities mentioned in sub-paragraphs (i) and (ii), or

“site” means any premises used in the course of carrying on business as a scrap metal dealer (whether or not metal is kept there).

“licensed site” means a site identified in a scrap metal licence.

“premises” includes any land or other place (whether enclosed or not).

“metal store” means a place where metal is received or kept in the course of a metal dealer’s business;

“local authority” means needs a proper definition that will cover the designated licensing authorities for the purposes of scrap metal licensing in Scotland.

“relevant offence” and “relevant enforcement action” mean an offence or enforcement action which is prescribed for the purposes of this legislation in regulations made by Ministers.

“Officer of a police force” includes a constable of the British Transport Police Force.

“processing”, in relation to metal, includes melting down and any process whereby the composition or form of the metal or of any article which is made of the metal is altered so as to make it substantially less identifiable than before the process, and “process” and “processed” shall be construed accordingly.

“trading name” means a name, other than that stated in the licence under section 2(4)(a) or 2(7)(a) under which a licensee carries on business as a scrap metal dealer.

For the purposes of Section 11, the person whose identity is to be verified may be:
(a) the a natural person making delivery and,
(b) in the case of scrap metal received from a business, the corporate entity supplying the scrap metal.

all references to keeping copies or records of transactions may refer equally to paper or electronic copies.
(17) For the purposes of sub-sections 13(2)(a) and 14(3)(a) the “description of the metal” should be proportionate, that is to say the level of detailed description expected for items in bulk loads will be less comprehensive than for single items.

18. Consequential amendments

(1) The following are repealed—

(a) [Relevant sections of the CG(S)A + XXX?]
SCHEDULES
SCHEDULE 1
FURTHER PROVISION ABOUT LICENCES

Term of licence

1. (1) A licence expires at the end of the period of 3 years beginning with the day on which it is issued.
   (2) But if an application to renew a licence is received before the licence expires, the licence continues in effect and—
       (a) if the application is withdrawn, the licence expires at the end of the day on which the application is withdrawn;
       (b) if the application is refused, the licence expires when no appeal under paragraph 9 is possible in relation to the refusal or any such appeal is finally determined or withdrawn;
       (c) if the licence is renewed, it expires at the end of the period of 3 years beginning with the day on which it is renewed or (if renewed more than once) the day on which it is last renewed.
   (3) Sub-paragraphs (1) and (2) are subject to section 4 (revocation of licence).

Applications

2. (1) A licence is to be issued or renewed on an application, which must be accompanied by—
       (a) if the applicant is a natural person, the full name, date of birth and usual place of residence of the applicant,
       (b) if the applicant is a company, the name and registered number of the applicant and the address of the applicant's registered office,
       (c) if the applicant is a partnership, the full name, date of birth and usual place of residence of each partner,
       (d) any proposed trading name,
       (e) the telephone number and e-mail address (if any) of the applicant,
       (f) the address of any site in the area of any other local authority at which the applicant carries on business as a scrap metal dealer or proposes to do so,
       (g) details of any relevant environmental permit or registration in relation to the applicant,
       (h) details of any other scrap metal licence issued (whether or not by the local authority) to the applicant within the period of 3 years ending with the date of the application,
       (i) details of any conviction of the applicant for a relevant offence, or any relevant enforcement action taken against the applicant.
   (2) If the application relates to a site licence, it must also be accompanied by—
       (a) the address of each site proposed to be identified in the licence (or, in the case of an application to renew, of each site identified in the licence whose renewal is sought), and
(b) the full name, date of birth and usual place of residence of each person proposed to be named in the licence as a site manager (other than the applicant).

(3) If the application relates to a site licence, the references in sub-paragraph (1)(g), (1)(h) and (1)(i) to the applicant are to be read as including any person proposed to be named in the licence as a site manager.

(4) The Secretary of State may by order amend sub-paragraph (1) or (2) to alter the requirements as to what information must accompany an application.

Variation of licence

3.

(1) A local authority may, on an application, vary a licence by changing it from one type to the other.

(2) If there is a change in any of the matters mentioned in section 2(4)(a), 2(4)(b), 2(7)(a) or 2(7)(c), or sub-paragraph 2(1) of this schedule, the licensee must make an application to vary the licence accordingly.

(3) But the power to amend the name of the licensee does not include the power to transfer the licence from one person to another.

(4) An application under this paragraph—

(5) is to be made to the authority which issued the licence, and

(6) must contain particulars of the changes to be made to the licence.

(7) A licensee who fails to comply with sub-paragraph (2) is guilty of an offence and is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding level ………

(8) It is a defence for a person charged with an offence under this paragraph to prove that the person took all reasonable steps to avoid committing the offence.

Further information

(1) The local authority may request (either when the application is made or later) that the applicant provide such further information as the authority considers relevant for the purpose of considering the application.

(2) If an applicant fails to provide information requested under sub-paragraph (1), the authority may decline to proceed with the application.

Offence of making false statement

5. An applicant who in an application or in response to a request under paragraph 4(1)—

(1) makes a statement knowing it be false in a material particular, or

(2) recklessly makes a statement which is false in a material particular, is guilty of an offence and is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding level ……..

Licence Fees

6.

(1) An application must be accompanied by a fee set by the authority.

(2) In setting a fee under this paragraph, the authority must have regard to any guidance issued from time to time by Ministers

Right to make representations
7.
(1) If a local authority proposes—
  (a) to refuse an application made under paragraph 2 or 3, or
  (b) to revoke or vary a licence under section 4, the authority must give the applicant or licensee a notice which sets out what the authority proposes to do and the reasons for it.

(2) In this paragraph and paragraph 8 the applicant or licensee is referred to as “A”.

(3) A notice under sub-paragraph (1) must also state that, within the period specified in the notice, A may either—
  (a) make representations about the proposal, or
  (b) inform the authority that A wishes to do so.

(4) The period specified in the notice must be not less than 14 days beginning with the date on which the notice is given to A.

(5) The authority may refuse the application, or revoke or vary the licence under section 4 if—
  (a) within the period specified in the notice, A informs the authority that A does not wish to make representations, or
  (b) the period specified in the notice expires and A has neither made representations nor informed the authority that A wishes to do so.

(6) If, within the period specified in the notice, A informs the authority that A wishes to make representations, the authority—
  (a) must allow A a further reasonable period to make representations, and
  (b) may refuse the application, or revoke or vary the licence under section 4 if A fails to make representations within that period.

(7) If A makes representations (either within the period specified in the notice under sub-paragraph (1) or within the further period under sub-paragraph (6)), the authority must consider the representations.

(8) If A informs the authority that A wishes to make oral representations, the authority must give A the opportunity of appearing before, and being heard by, a person appointed by the authority.

(1) If the authority refuses the application, or revokes or varies the licence under section 4, it must give A a notice setting out the decision and the reasons for it.

(2) A notice under this paragraph must also state—
  (a) that A may appeal under paragraph 9 against the decision,
  (b) the time within which such an appeal may be brought, and
  (c) in the case of a revocation or variation under section 4, the date on which the revocation or variation is to take effect.

Appeals

9.
(1) An applicant may appeal to a magistrates’ court [Scotland?] against the refusal of an application made under paragraph 2 or 3.

(2) A licensee may appeal to a magistrates’ court [Scotland?] against the revocation or variation of a licence under section 4.
(3) An appeal under this paragraph is to be made within the period of 21 days beginning with the day on which notice of the decision to refuse the application, to include the condition, or to revoke or vary the licence under section 4, was given.

(4) The procedure on an appeal under this paragraph is to be by way of complaint for an order and in accordance with the ...........[Scotland?].

(5) For the purposes of the time limit for making an appeal under this paragraph, the making of the complaint is to be treated as the making of the appeal.

(6) On an appeal under this paragraph, the court [Scotland?] may—
(a) confirm, vary or reverse the authority’s decision, and
(b) give such directions as it considers appropriate having regard to the provisions of this Act.

(7) The authority must comply with any directions given by the court [Scotland?] under sub-paragraph (6).

(8) But the authority need not comply with any such directions—
(a) until the time for making an application under......... [Scotland?] (application by way of case stated) has passed, or
(b) if such an application is made, until the application is finally determined or withdrawn.
SCHEDULE 2
CLOSURE OF UNLICENSED SITES

Interpretation
1. (1) For the purposes of this Schedule, a person has an interest in premises if the person is the owner, leaseholder or occupier of the premises.
(2) In the case of a local authority, the powers conferred by this Schedule are exercisable only in relation to premises in the authority’s area; and “the local authority”, in relation any premises, is to read accordingly.

Closure notice
2. (1) This paragraph applies if a constable or the local authority is satisfied—
(a) that premises are being used by a scrap metal dealer in the course of business, and
(b) that the premises are not a licensed site.
(2) But this paragraph does not apply if the premises are residential premises.
(3) The constable or authority may issue a notice (a “closure notice”) which—
(a) states that the constable or authority is satisfied as mentioned in sub-paragraph (1),
(b) gives the reasons for that,
(c) states that the constable or authority may apply to the court for a closure order (see paragraphs 4 and 5), and
(d) specifies the steps which may be taken to ensure that the alleged use of the premises ceases.
(4) The constable or authority must give the closure notice to—
(a) the person who appears to the constable or authority to be the site manager of the premises, and
(b) any person (other than the person in paragraph (a)) who appears to the constable or authority to be a director, manager or other officer of the business in question.
(5) The constable or authority may also give the notice to any person who has an interest in the premises.
(6) Sub-paragraph (7) applies where—
(a) a person occupies another part of any building or structure of which the premises form part, and
(b) the constable or authority reasonably believes, at the time of giving the notice under sub-paragraph (4), that the person’s access to that other part would be impeded if a closure order were made in respect of the premises.
(7) The constable or authority must give the notice to that person.

Cancellation of closure notice
3. (1) A closure notice may be cancelled by a notice (a “cancellation notice”) issued by a constable or the local authority.
(2) A cancellation notice takes effect when it is given to any one of the persons to whom the closure notice was given.
(3) The cancellation notice must also be given to any other person to whom the closure notice was given.

Application for closure order
4.
Where a closure notice has been given under paragraph 2(4), a constable or the local authority may make a complaint to a justice of the peace [Scotland?] for a closure order (see paragraph 5).

A complaint under this paragraph may not be made—
(a) less than 7 days after the date on which the closure notice was given, or
(b) more than 6 months after that date.

A complaint under this paragraph may not be made if the constable or authority is satisfied that—
(a) the premises are not (or are no longer) being used by a scrap metal dealer in the course of business, and
(b) there is no reasonable likelihood that the premises will be so used in the future.

Where a complaint has been made under this paragraph, the justice [Scotland?] may issue a summons to answer to the complaint.

The summons must be directed to any person to whom the closure notice was given under paragraph 2(4).

If a summons is issued under sub-paragraph (4), notice of the date, time and place at which the complaint will be heard must be given to all the persons to whom the closure notice was given under paragraph 2(5) and 2(7).

The procedure on a complaint under this paragraph is to be in accordance with the Magistrates’ Courts Act 1980 [Scotland?].

Closure order

This paragraph applies if, on hearing a complaint under paragraph 4, the court is satisfied that the closure notice was given under paragraph 2(4) and that—
(a) the premises continue to be used by a scrap metal dealer in the course of business, or
(b) there is a reasonable likelihood that the premises will be so used in the future.

The court may make such order as it considers appropriate for the closure of the premises (a “closure order”).

A closure order may, in particular, require—
(a) that the premises be closed immediately to the public and remain closed until a constable or the local authority makes a certificate under paragraph 6;
(b) that the use of the premises by a scrap metal dealer in the course of business be discontinued immediately;
(c) that any defendant pay into court such sum as the court determines and that the sum will not be released by the court to that person until the other requirements of the order are met.

A closure order including a requirement mentioned in sub-paragraph (3)(a) may, in particular, include such conditions as the court considers appropriate relating to—
(a) the admission of persons onto the premises;
(b) the access by persons to another part of any building or other structure of which the premises form part.

A closure order may include such provision as the court considers appropriate for dealing with the consequences if the order should cease to have effect under paragraph 6.

As soon as practicable after a closure order is made, the complainant must fix a copy of it in a conspicuous position on the premises in respect of which it was made.

A sum which has been ordered to be paid into court under a closure order is to be paid to the designated officer for the court.

Termination of closure order by certificate of constable or authority
6. (1) This paragraph applies where—
(a) a closure order has been made, but
(b) a constable or the local authority is satisfied that the need for the order has ceased.

(2) The constable or authority may make a certificate to that effect.

(3) The closure order ceases to have effect when the certificate is made.

(4) If the closure order includes a requirement under paragraph 5(3)(c), any sum paid into court under the order is to be released by the court to the defendant (whether or not the court has made provision to that effect under paragraph 5(4)(a)).

(5) As soon as practicable after making a certificate, the constable or authority must—
(a) give a copy of it to any person against whom the closure order was made,
(b) give a copy of it to the designated officer for the court which made the order, and
(c) fix a copy of it in a conspicuous position on the premises in respect of which the order was made.

(6) The constable or authority must give a copy of the certificate to any person who requests one.

Discharge of closure order by court
7. (1) Any of the following persons may make a complaint to a justice of the peace [Scotland?] for an order that a closure order be discharged (a “discharge order”)—
(a) any person to whom the relevant closure notice was given under paragraph 2;
(b) any person who has an interest in the premises but to whom the closure notice was not given.

(2) The court may not make a discharge order unless it is satisfied that there is no longer a need for the closure order.

(3) Where a complaint has been made under this paragraph, the justice [Scotland?] may issue a summons directed to—
(a) such constable as the justice considers appropriate, or
(b) the local authority,
requiring that person to appear before the magistrates’ court [Scotland?] to answer to the complaint.

(4) If a summons is issued under sub-paragraph (3), notice of the date, time and place at which the complaint will be heard must be given to all the persons to whom the closure notice was given under paragraph 2 (other than the complainant).

(5) The procedure on a complaint under this paragraph is to be in accordance with the Magistrates’ Courts Act 1980 [Scotland?].

Appeals
8. (1) An appeal may be made to the Crown Court against—
(a) a closure order;
(b) a decision not to make a closure order;
(c) a discharge order;
(d) a decision not to make a discharge order.

(2) Any appeal under this paragraph must be made before the end of the period of 21 days beginning with the day on which the order or the decision in question was made.

(3) An appeal under this paragraph against a closure order or a decision not to make a discharge order may be made by—
(a) any person to whom the relevant closure notice was given under paragraph 2;
(b) any person who has an interest in the premises but to whom the closure notice was not given.

(4) An appeal under this paragraph against a decision not to make a closure order or against a discharge order may be made by a constable or (as the case may be) the local authority.

(5) On an appeal under this paragraph the Crown Court may make such order as it considers appropriate.

Enforcement of closure order

9.

(1) A person is guilty of an offence if the person, without reasonable excuse,—
(a) permits premises to be open in contravention of a closure order, or
(b) otherwise fails to comply with, or does an act in contravention of, a closure order.

(2) If a closure order has been made in respect of any premises, a constable or an authorised person may (if necessary using reasonable force)—
(a) enter the premises at any reasonable time, and
(b) having entered the premises, do anything reasonably necessary for the purpose of securing compliance with the order.

(3) Sub-paragraph (4) applies if a constable or an authorised person (“the officer”) seeks to exercise powers under this paragraph in relation to any premises.

(4) If the owner, occupier or other person in charge of the premises requires the officer to produce—
(a) evidence of the officer’s identity, or
(b) evidence of the officer’s authority to exercise those powers, the officer must produce that evidence.

(5) A person who intentionally obstructs a constable or an authorised person in the exercise of powers under this paragraph is guilty of an offence.

(6) A person guilty of an offence under this paragraph is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding [level 5 on the standard scale in England & Wales].

(7) In this paragraph “an authorised person” is a person authorised for the purposes of this paragraph by the local authority.

Table 2: Applications for Itinerant Metal Dealer’s Licence since 2007

Prior to 2010 the last application for Itinerant Dealer was received in 1995.

There are 34 individuals that currently hold an Itinerant Metal Dealer’s Licence issued by the Council.

Metal Dealers’ Exemption Warrant

Since 1984 the Council has received 106 Applications for Metal Dealers’ Exemption Warrants under section 29 of the 1982 Act.

Supplementary written submission from Scottish Business Resilience Centre

As requested, I include some case studies on metal theft in Scotland—

Incident at Shieldhall Glasgow, November 2011. Thieves attempted to steal 2 x 132,000 volt cables from a tunnel under the dual carriageway that runs parallel to the M8. Thieves set fire to the cables in the hope of fusing them. The knock on effect was as follows:

- Power loss to 50,000 houses
- M8 was closed for 4 hours creating a four mile tailback stretching passed Glasgow airport
- Areas within the Southern and General Hospital lost power
- 20 trains were cancelled or delayed due to a junction box being knocked out
- Fire Fighters were unable to fight this fire due to the extreme heat within the tunnel and the possibility of residual charge within the cable
- The road above the tunnel actually melted due to the heat, road was closed for months as there was a debate about who was responsible for it.
- A total of 16 appliances, 90 personnel attended this incident which lasted 22 hours
- Initial cost of incident was put at over £3 million

In 2014, thieves stole four meters of cable from an electrical substation in Gourock. This resulted in loss of power to 280 houses. Due to the power surge four individual house fires were reported. One person was treated for smoke inhalation.

In 2012, an incident occurred at a category B listed building. The first crews to attend this fire reported quantities of stripped cable on the floors where the fire began.

- Giving a grand total of 685 personnel utilised throughout incident
  - 175 Police officers were utilised throughout the duration of this incident, including 2 chief inspectors, 6 inspectors, 12 sergeants, 137 constables and 18 control staff
  - 510 Fire and Rescue Service personnel were utilised, and there were 99 fire appliance movements to the incident during the course of the fire-fighting activities
- All surrounding properties including 90 residential flats were evacuated
- The entire incident lasted 51 hours from when the first emergency call was received
- Overall cost reported at £19 million
During the last few years, a number of incidents occurred involving the theft of dry riser outlets used for delivering water to upper levels during a fire in multi-storey buildings. Valves were stolen from 20-storey blocks in Kestrel Road and Lincoln Avenue, each containing 114 flats, and two 24-storey blocks in Kirkton Avenue, with 138 flats in each.

- One month after the thefts were spotted, fire-fighters tackled a blaze on the 19th floor of one of the Kirkton Avenue block, in which a female resident needed hospital treatment.

- Similar incidents have also occurred—
  - In 2012, 6 outlets were stolen from Kennishead Ave, Pollok
  - In 2013, 17 risers were stolen from Govan
  - In 2013, risers also stolen from Kings Court in Aberdeen
  - In November 2014, dry riser outlets stolen from multi-storey block in Cumbernauld

- Following these incidents, scrap metal sites were visited to raise awareness of the thefts, which resulted in a number of items being recovered.

- The British Metals Recycling Association (BMRA) also has a website to alert scrap metal dealers to certain stolen items.

One fatality in North Lanarkshire, in 2013, as a result of attempted theft of live overhead cables.

Section 34 offences: The Environmental Protection Act 1990 (as amended)

The proposed penalty provisions for Scrap Metal Dealers licensing are comparable with the penalties for ‘duty of care’ offences in section 34 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 (as amended).

The section 34 duty of care requirements are in some respects similar to the proposed requirements of the Scrap Metal Dealers licensing system. For example, section 34 includes a record keeping requirement where transfers of waste between parties must be recorded on a written transfer note. That written record must, amongst other things, include the identity of the persons involved, the date, time and place of transfer, and a description of the waste. Transfer notes must be retained for 2 years.

The penalty for failing to comply with the duty of care requirements (section 34 (6), EPA 1990) is as follows -

Any person who fails to comply with the duty imposed by subsection (1), (1A) or (2A) above or with any requirement imposed under subsection (5) above shall be liable —

(a) on summary conviction, to a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum; and
(b) on conviction on indictment, to a fine

The statutory maximum is the same as that proposed for the Scrap Metal Dealers licensing system: £5,000.

Section 33 Offences: The Environmental Protection Act 1990 (as amended)

By contrast, the penalties for failing to obtain a waste management licence (section 33 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 as amended) are much higher. Waste management licensing conditions can be used to impose technical standards for storage (e.g. containment or impermeable surfacing), operating restrictions (e.g. that all end of life vehicles must be depolluted), as well as record keeping requirements.

A person who commits an offence under this section is liable —

(a) on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 6 months or a fine not exceeding £40,000 or both;
(b) on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years or a fine or both.

It is SEPA’s view that the requirements associated with waste management licences are more onerous than the proposed Scrap Metal Dealer requirements and that the difference in the level of penalty is understandable.
THE Government at Westminster, introduced a new piece of legislation in to law on Dec 2012 stopping the payment of cash, for the purchase of scrap metal. However this piece of legislation; was ill though out it was rushed through parliament not to reduce theft, but to find a way to apply a new tax.

Every one is entitled to be paid cash, cheques, or cards have no legal standing; whereas A Bank note is legal tender!

THE END RESULT WAS A COMPLETE HASH.

There was great stories going about that hundreds of millions of pound of stolen metal both ferrous/nonferrous being sold to Scrap merchants, if the Police and that includes transport police new of this flagellant breach of the law why was none of these scrap merchants brought to book, I honestly thought that Grimes brothers/Hans Christian Anderson, had risen from the grave, Lord Oliver Henley endorsed the Police statement of the amount that was stolen; why did he not ask the question, why was this material not recovered, and what happened to the convictions, now the new rules allow scrap merchants to dispose of the scrap metal immediately, they have removed the part where all metal that where bought must be tagged and remain for fourteen days before they could be disposed of.

The Scottish governments, questionnaire on should the Scrap metal merchants, pay cash for the materials they have purchased, or should payment be made by cheque, or debit card.

Unfortunately this was not thought out properly, Cheques and debit cards are only good if you have cash in the account, people who have to receive payment can demand cash, that is their right, but if the government wish to dispense with cash as a means of payment, they will require to pass a law in parliament, to dispense with the coin off the realm.

If the government is determined to implement this legislation, to reduce and curb the theft of metal; or is it a means to collect more tax, remember tax has already been paid when said material was first purchased; that is the real question.

To reduce the theft, one must control the way scrap metal is disposed off. You must separate the waste management licence, from the scrap metal brokers licence; since the inception of the waste management licence, theft of metal has increased, any one can apply for a waste carriers licence, or a recycling licence, there is no control, unlike the Brokers licence, there is a curtail on your trading hours Monday to Saturday 7am 5pm Sat 7am 12noon. All mater is logged with the type, weight, name of seller, car registration, time and what was paid, and they must sign, for the cash payment, the material must be retained in the brokers care for fourteen days, this is how its always been, the police come in and sign the book, if material has been stolen, the police can ask for a copy of the tape from the cctv.

What is required is a league table, in three divisions
Small, 0/5,00000 pounds turnover

Medium, 5,00000, 3,000000 pounds turnover

Large, 10,000000 +, pounds, excluding V A T

Those in the 10million pound bracket would have the most to lose,

Those in the 10million bracket, who pass the criteria, under the new set-up would be nominated would be afford the position of recommended Government preferred buyer of scrap metal from local authorities, former nationalised industries and government contractors.

The holders of waste carriers, and recycling licences issued by S E P A, D E F R A. Would be excluded from the purchase of buying scrap material. They would be curtailed to recycling and the carriage, of waste, they would be under the control of S E P A

New rules and conditions would need to be introduced, including severe fines and jail time, any convictions, would result of losing their licence to trade in the purchasing of scrap and the confiscation of their yards and machinery. This may sound harsh but needs must.

The regions, for purchasing scrap metal would be divided into areas like Lothian's, Border, Strathclyde, Central, ECT,

All this can be discussed to set the rules cost of new licences the people who would determine, the new conditions and cost would be invited to take part, and PHS it would also discourage the money laundering, from rogue traders

This proposal would curtail the transfer of stolen materials; in fact it would reduce the stolen metal by 90%, this is only part of the proposal we can discuss this in greater detail later.

Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill
Local Government and Regeneration Committee

I refer to the above Bill and the issue of fees for licenses which was discussed during the evidence session on 3 December 2014.

During questioning there was discussion around the fee level that might be set for an application for an air weapons license. Subsequently the Committee became aware the Home Office had issued a consultation document on proposals to increase firearm license fees. The Committee have noted the proposed increases along with the suggestion the revised fee levels are set to achieve full cost recovery for the police albeit at such time as a new online system comes into force.

The Committee have requested I write to you to obtain the views of Police Scotland in relation to the Home Office consultation and in particular your views as to whether the proposed new levels will achieve their aim in Scotland relating to full cost recovery.

I would be grateful to receive your views in this regard and given the timetable we are working to on the Bill it would be helpful if I could have these by 12th January 2015.
I am copying this letter to Aileen Bearhop in the Scottish Government as the Committee would also welcome the Government’s views on the above.

Yours sincerely

Dear Mr Cullum

Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill
Local Government and Regeneration Committee

I refer to your letter of 19 December 2014 in relation to the fees for Air Weapon Certificates and the recent consultation issued by the Home Office in respect of wider firearms fees.

It is the position of Police Scotland that a fee increase is well overdue, the last increase being in 2001. Police Scotland welcome an increase, but recognise that the proposed fees for Firearm and Shot Gun Certificates and other associated certificates remain under the true cost of firearms licensing to the police at this time. You may be aware that the initial work completed by the Association of Chief Police Officers for England and Wales, using an activity based costing approach, suggested that the true cost to the police of a grant of a Firearm or Shot Gun Certificate was £189.

The increase in fees is a step in the right direction, and it should remain under review until the fees reflect a full cost recovery basis, whilst the police on a UK wide basis continue to work on becoming more cost efficient by utilising such measures as e-commerce. E-commerce reflects the application process for a UK passport, where an applicant will apply for a Firearm or Shot Gun Certificate online. You will understand that the fees which are proposed by the UK Government are directly linked to the roll out of e-commerce, which is intended to be piloted in a number of English forces this year. Whilst Police Scotland is committed to the principle of e-commerce, with the introduction of i6 imminent it is not considered appropriate to introduce e-commerce at this time.

As you will understand, the Home Office consultation related to Firearm and Shot Gun Certification and the more intrusive enquiries required for these proportionately more lethal firearms. We assessed, in December 2013, that the cost to Police Scotland in carrying out proportionate checks in respect of air weapon certification would be approximately £85 per application.

It is the view of Police Scotland that once a fee has been reached that reflects full cost recovery, the fee should be index linked, to prevent the shooting communities and the police ending up in a similar to position to where we are today.

I trust this will assist in advising your considerations.

Yours sincerely

Supplementary written submission from the Institute of Licensing

I refer to my attendance at the evidence session on 10 December 2014 in connection with the Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill, on behalf of the Institute of Licensing. The Committee will recall that I was asked to present further written evidence in connection with the three technical areas I sought to discuss; namely:

The Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 ("the 2005 Act")

- Transfers of Licences
- The option to have a "site only" provisional licence
- The status of a surrendered licence

Transfers of Licences

The provisions for transfers of licences are found in s.33 and s.34 of the 2005 Act. The provisions do not adequately deal with the reality of licensing practice and are in dire need of revision. As I said at the evidence session, if there was one aspect of the 2005 Act which every clerk and private practice solicitor and licensing practitioner would wish to see fixed it is this. The difficulties caused by the drafting in s.33 and s.34 are as follows:

The Act does not deal with dissolution of companies. As the Act is silent on this matter, the position of a licence held by a dissolved company is far from acceptable. In some areas this can involve having to seek a restoration of the company to the company register which requires a formal process in the sheriff court which can take many months and thus negate the business which may be trying to carry on at the premises. It may well be the case that company "A" holds the licence but company "B" is trading the venue. In such circumstances company B or the individual is left without a livelihood. A licence held by a dissolved company cannot, on the face of it, be transferred at all. Some licensing boards are willing to treat the licence as bona vacantia but this requires dealing with the QLTR who demand a significant payment to consent to allow the licence to be transferred. The Act should be amended to recognise dissolution, and provide a mechanism to deal with it such as allowing a person who has a right to occupy the premises transfer the licence absent any letter of consent.

The Act bears no relation to Scots property law or conveyancing: the purchase and sale or leasing of licensed premises is firmly embedded in Scots property law. The Act does not reflect common practice such as the completion of sales taking place dependent on the grant of a transfer of a licence. This can cause chaos when considering large corporate or commercial deals involving a large number of premises where transfer processing times vary across Scotland and it is impossible to agree on one "date" for the sale to complete, the "hive down" to occur, or whatever corporate/commercial transaction is being pursued. These difficulties are manifestly worse when the deal relates to properties in England as well as Scotland, such as a company buying pubs on both sides of the border. In many cases management companies or vehicles can be used and they end up being licence holders for a long period of time even though they do not operate the premises; this exposes them to liability and can jeopardise the commercial deal as a whole.
The Act does not provide for an interim or deemed grant: much of the issues over conveyancing could be fixed if the Act could allow a transfer to be "deemed granted" upon lodgement, pending final decision. This used to be the case under the Licensing (Scotland) Act 1976 where there was a two-stage "temporary" and "permanent" transfer; allowing the temporary transfer to take effect immediately whilst the permanent was considered. This is also the case in the English Licensing Act 2003 which provides for a transfer to take effect on lodgement of the application (s.43, Licensing Act 2003)

The Act is overly prescriptive in whom can apply: the Act lays down certain circumstances where only certain parties can make an application. This includes a simple case of where the "business" is to transfer (s.34(3)(d). However, if the premises is not trading for whatever reason, is there in fact a "business" to transfer? Some licensing boards refuse to accept transfers where the business is not a "going concern". This is overly prescriptive and the Act does not explain what is meant by the "business" transferring. The answer to this is to allow ANY PERSON to make the application provided they can demonstrate they have a right to occupy the premises. Again we would draw your attention to the provisions of the English licensing system and sections 42 and 43 of the 2003 Act.

The 28 day deadline for lodgement is overly prescriptive: the Act imposes a 28 day deadline for the lodgement of transfers under certain circumstances ie when the licence holder dies, becomes mentally incapable or declared insolvent. This time period does not adequately reflect the reality of the timing particularly in relation to insolvencies. It is common for an insolvency practitioner to be appointed sometime well after the initial declaration of insolvency. The 28 days is already running at this point before the insolvency practitioner is even aware of it. 28 days might also be deemed to be too short notice for a family member dealing with a death or a person declared incapable. If the 28 days passes without an application being lodged, the licence "ceases to have effect" (see below re surrender). This quite often means a trading business and the jobs and livelihoods that the business represents is closed down because the licence is "lost".

The Act does not deal with certain types of insolvency: as mentioned above, the Act requires a transfer to be lodged within 28 days of the licence holder being declared insolvent. The only person who can apply for the licence is the appointed insolvency practitioner. But the Act does not cover every single type of insolvency.

The Act does not make it clear who is liable: who is liable for licensing offences where a transfer is pending? The Act does not deal with this. The outgoing owner may still be on the licence and therefore liable; yet he may no longer be involved in the premises. It is very common because of the issues noted above for a conveyancing transaction to settle meaning party A has no legal involvement in premises at all; yet because the transfer of the licence to party B has not been approved, party A could still be liable for criminal offences, be cited to hearings and so on.
Provisional "Site Only" Applications

The 2005 Act does not allow a process which I referred to as a "site only" provisional licence. Provisional licences are sought where premises are yet to be built or under construction. Provisional licences must be accompanied by the same level of detail as full licences. This causes difficulties because having to lodge layout plans for a premises which may not even be built is not easy. It means that applicants are lodging fictitious plans just to get the application in the system. Applicants and developers need commercial certainty of knowing a licence will be granted before a multi-million pound investment crystalises and a premises is built. You cannot have a 5 story hotel, for example, being built without knowing the licence is secured. Applications therefore need to be lodged very early in the process. It is not easy for developers and applicants to secure funding from lenders or capital venture funds and so on unless the commercial certainty of the licence is secured. Yet the Act requires the same level of detail for a provisional licence as it does for a full licence.

The Institute of Licensing therefore suggests the Parliament should re-introduce the old "site only" provisional licence route. Under s.26(2) of the Licensing (Scotland) Act 1976 it was perfectly competent to have a new licence application lodged but without the full detail of layout. Planning would not be jeopardised because planning permission needs to be in place even where a provisional licence is lodged. A certificate from the planners must be lodged with any new licence application. The use of "site only" applications worked for 30 years under the 1976 Act without falling into disrepute. The licensing board would still see the general location of the premises, they would still see the operating plan detailing matters such as trading hours, activities, description of the premises, and so on. In our submission the "site only" provisional licence would be the exact same existing 2005 Act process but without having to lodge a detailed layout plan.

Surrendered Licences

Section 28 of the 2005 Act says that a licence which has been surrendered "ceases to have effect". But that Act does not state what that means. Is it irretrievably gone, or is it in the ether, capable of being brought back to life? Under the 1976 Act the licences could be brought back to life by way of a transfer application. It would be useful to have the 2005 Act allow this to occur. Licences can be surrendered out of spite. There are numerous examples of this across Scotland; where in a landlord/tenant relationship the tenant holds the licence and surrenders the licence to spite the landlord following a fall-out over unpaid rent or any other dispute they may be having. This leaves the landlord with a public house or other type of premises with no licence and the only way back is to apply for a new one. But that is no mean feat as grandfather rights would no longer apply meaning the premises would be subject to modern building regulations and in some cases might not be capable of getting a licence back due to the exorbitant cost of works. Take a Scottish castle or large country house which is licensed. If that licence were surrendered it may be very difficult for that premises to meet current regulations and therefore no new licence could be granted. In addition to this, the premises may be situated in an overprovision zone meaning they are faced with a rebuttable presumption against getting the licence back, and just because the premises held a licence before does not mean a new one will be granted. And all this because the licence was surrendered out of spite.

Under the 1976 Act it was accepted that a surrendered licence could be re-activated via a transfer: see Tong v Glasgow District Licensing Board 1992 GWD 19-1125 Sh Ct. That is what the Institute would prefer to see occur under the 2005 Act.

In Summary

In respect of all three of these technical issues, the Institute is aware that the Law Society of Scotland Licensing Sub-committee has offered to draft provisions and submit these drafts to Parliament for consideration. The Sub-committee is a body representative of both local authority clerks and private practice solicitors. The Institute strongly suggests that Parliament invite the Sub-committee to provide the proposed drafting to cure the various defects which are noted above.

Can I offer my thanks again to the Local Government and Regeneration Committee for their willingness to allow me to raise these concerns on behalf of the Institute, and licensing practitioners generally. If further evidence is required either by way of written submission or in person at the Parliament I will be happy to make myself available.

By email

Dear Mr Stewart,

Thank you for the opportunity to give oral evidence on the current Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill (Dec 17, 2014).

As discussed at the evidence session, I enclose examples of good and bad practice in the current licensing regime and the implications for the functioning of the system. In assessing practice Alcohol Focus Scotland has applied accepted principles of good practice for public bodies\footnote{Public Bodies: A Guide for Departments, Chapter 8: Policy – Openness and Accountability. Cabinet Office, 2006. \url{https://www.gov.uk/government/uploads/system/uploads/attachment_data/file/80085/PublicBodiesGuide2006_8_policy_openness_0.pdf}}. The following has largely been drawn from work carried out by Alcohol Focus Scotland, supplemented with specific enquires made in response to your request.

The following areas have been covered:

1. Accountability and transparency
2. Working with stakeholders

If you require any further information from us please do not hesitate to get in touch.

Yours sincerely

Dr Deborah Shipton
Alcohol Focus Scotland

Summary

Accountability and transparency

Although licensing boards must seek to promote the licensing objectives (s.6.3(a)) there is no mechanism in statute that defines how licensing boards should report on their performance against their policy; the represents a significant accountability and transparency deficit.

Existing mechanisms to ensure accountability and transparency - such as publishing of policy statements and data - are not consistently adhered to, calling for more robust measures hold licensing boards to account.

The use of evidence in policy development has increased, although it still remains limited in overprovision assessments.

Working with stakeholders

There is growing engagement and participation of some stakeholders - largely health and police- in the licensing process.

There is less evidence of feedback from licensing boards to stakeholders.

Legislation to strengthen the reporting mechanisms - such as a statutory requirement on licensing boards to annually report on their performance, including summary licensing data – would begin to address the current accountability deficit and would support continued and improved engagement of stakeholders.

1. Accountability/transparency

There are three main accountability mechanisms with respect to the licensing board:

- Licensing boards are formally accountable to Scottish ministers.
- Local licensing forums have an “oversight” role.
- In any healthy democracy the broader stakeholders in any process should have access to the necessary information to be able to hold the main actor to account. In alcohol licensing the main stakeholders are the community, police, health, social work and the trade.

[In addition, all licensing board decisions are open to legal challenge, however, in practice this is not a not an accessible means of accountability for most stakeholders]

For the above mechanisms to function effectively it is crucial that the necessary information is made available by licensing boards in an accessible way.

The Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 stipulates that the following are published:

- A statement of their policy (s.6)
- An overprovision statement (s.7)

---

2 The Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 states that “Where a Licensing Board decides not to follow any guidance issued under subsection (1), the Board must give the Scottish Ministers notice of the decision together with a statement of the reasons for it.” (S.142). When asked at the Scottish Licencing Law & Practice conference 08/11/13, no clerks reported ever given such notice when departing from the Guidance.

3 The Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 states that “Forums must keep under review the operation of this Act in the Forum’s area and, in particular, the exercise by the relevant Licensing Board of their functions” (S.11).
However, there is considerable variability in how effectively licensing boards comply with these requirements.

Policy and overprovision statements:

The policy statements and overprovision statements are key documents that inform interested parties of how licensing boards will exercise their discretionary powers. Six months after the deadline for publishing the policy statement and overprovision statement 25 of the possible 40 policy statements (from the licensing boards and divisions) were published and only 19 of these had overprovision statements. Alcohol Focus Scotland is unaware of any action being taken as a result of Boards not publishing policy statements or overprovision statements, suggesting a significant accountability deficit.

A review of the published licencing policy statements\(^5\) and overprovision statements for the period 2013-2016 identified some good and bad practice in the statements. For the majority of policies the evidence base for the policy approach was not demonstrated; with limited assessment of the harms associated with the licensing objectives. Four policy statements (Glasgow, Aberdeen, Dumfries and Galloway and Highlands) stood out for use of evidence to support the policy direction. Similarly, for the overprovision policy there was limited use of evidence to support the position taken. Without clear evidence supporting policy and overprovision statements decisions would be open to legal challenge. Details of good and bad practice in other aspects of the policies (presentation and readability, children’s’ access, occasional licences, etc.) can be found in the report.

Public register of information:

Using standard on-line searching mechanisms Alcohol Focus Scotland was able to locate only 16 publicly available registers of licensing data covering 19 of the 40 licensing board areas and divisions. The register for South Ayrshire\(^6\) is an example of an easily locatable register in an accessible format with good searchable functions. For most premises licences in the South Ayrshire register there is a map, details on the type of premises (on- or off-sales), details and dates of variations to the licence, and a layout plan of the property. However, other online registers provide details only of the premises’ name and location, which provides little meaningful information to stakeholders. Not all registers are available online, for example, the register for Angus is only “available for inspection by contacting the Licensing Section”; this is likely to have significant implications for the accessibility of this information.

However, even the best of the published registers falls short of allowing any effective oversight of the process; many published registers provide insufficient primary information and none of the registers provide the summary information necessary to monitor the functioning of the licensing board’s practice over time. As an illustrative example, although details of occasional licences are included in many of the published registers, the lack of summary data means that currently it is not possible to determine trends in granting occasional licences over time.

Monitoring of performance

Although licensing boards must seek to promote the licensing objectives (s.6.3(a)) there is no mechanism in statute that defines how a licensing board should report on their performance against their policy and as far as we are aware none of the licensing boards undertake such monitoring. There are a number of areas of licensing boards’ practice that are relevant to the effective functioning of the process and, as such, are important areas to be monitored:

- Developing and monitoring performance indicators that relate to the 5 licensing objectives
- Decisions and reasoning behind decisions
- Reasons for reviews & processes that initiate a review
- Local conditions placed on licences
- Summary information on licences – personal, premises and occasional (e.g. total number, the type (large supermarkets, convenience stores, pubs, clubs, restaurants etc.), capacity; new licences granted each year: total number, type, capacity, if in an over-provision area; licensed hours: standard operating hours granted, seasonal variations, extended hours granted; objections: total number made, category of objector (police, public health, community, public, etc.) and final decision; extended hours granted each quarter/year; number of occasional licences granted (including information on capacity and hours), hours and for what reasons)
- Details of licensing boards’ meeting practices that promote accessibility and inclusiveness
- Processes to support community and other stakeholders to be involved.

A non-exhaustive review of meeting minutes (Forum meetings and joint Board & Forum meetings) was conducted by Alcohol Focus Scotland. Although examples of effective monitoring were not found, the following provides some illustrative examples of how current practice can be built on to improve the monitoring of licensing boards’ functions:

- Aberdeen City Forum made a recommendation for their licensing board to develop a “reporting framework which demonstrates how the implementation of the policy will promote the five licensing objectives” and provided a template for the reporting framework that clearly links to the five licensing objectives (February 2013). To date the licensing board has not taken forward this reporting framework.
- Glasgow licensing board reported on their “key indicators used to measure performance in administering the Act” (meeting minutes Dec 9th 2014). The indicators are administrative indicators (e.g. the time taken to process application) rather than policy and performance related. However, extending the indicators set to include information related to the five licensing objectives would begin to create an effective monitoring system.
- Fife and Highlands: these two licensing boards regularly provide updates of their decisions to their local licensing forum. Currently these updates are limited in the areas covered and as such do not provide an opportunity to monitor the regime. However, expanding the content of their updates would provide a better monitoring process.

Accountability and transparency - relevance for legislation: the above highlights examples of where existing legislation is not adhered to with respect to the provision of both policy statements and data, with no evidence of any action being taken. The full functioning of the licensing regimen is therefore compromised without effective accountability or transparency processes in place. Examples of seeds of some monitoring practices have been evidenced. It is widely recognised that annually reporting is the main vehicles by which public bodies should inform parliament and the public about their activities and expenditure. Legislation to strengthen the reporting mechanisms - such as annual reporting of progress against policy statements – would begin to address the current accountability deficit.

2. Working with stakeholders and Forums

Development of robust policy statements, overprovision statements and the broader operation of the licensing regime is dependent on a constructive relationship between the licensing boards (board members and the clerk) and both statutory and non-statutory consultees. Opportunities for interaction between Boards and stakeholders include: informal and formal consultations and evidence gathering; the annual joint meeting between the local licensing forum and the licensing board; interactions with stakeholders around objecting or supporting specific applications; and the work of the License Standards Officer.

Consultation with stakeholders:

A review of the various consultation methods used for the development of the 2013-2016 licensing board policy statements identified that licensing boards adopted a variety of consultation processes to gather evidence from partners. Most Boards circulated draft polices and invited open comment, some Boards provided more structure, for example, through the use of questionnaires to guide the submissions. More extensive and varied processes tended to result in the most responses from stakeholders. Some Boards adopted multi-phased approach, and at least one Board conducted oral evidence sessions. Details of the Glasgow City consultation are provided for illustrative purposes:

- The Glasgow City licensing board carried out a pre-consultation exercise, which involved gathering information via questionnaires on specific areas of policy, followed by 12 face to face evidence sessions with responding individuals and organisations. The draft policy was then developed and consulted on, receiving 42 responses. Site visits of all proposed overprovision areas were conducted by licensing board members. Overall, this approach resulted in relatively high engagement in comparison to other parts of Scotland.

Although most policy statements reported that the licensing board gave due consideration to views of consultees very few Boards demonstrated, within their policy statements, how the information gathered through the various consultation processes was used to inform the policy development. However, Glasgow City and North Ayrshire did refer to the views of the consultees in their policy.

Stakeholders providing evidence to licensing boards:

Significant capacity building activity by Alcohol Focus Scotland and others was carried out in 2012/13 to foster closer working relationships and greater understanding between licensing personnel and public health practitioners. Since the 2010 licensing policy stakeholders - such as police and health - have increased engagement and participation in the licensing process in Scotland. Some illustrative examples of where licensing board areas have sought and/or received information from stakeholders for their policy development is described below:

• In 2013 Renfrewshire licensing board consulted on their policy statement and received 13 formal responses, including from fire services, police, the Forum, community groups, health and trade. Drawing on these responses the licensing board produced a paper on potential overprovision areas for further consultation, seeking input from both statutory and non-statutory partners.

• NHS Grampian Public Health, with some support from the Aberdeen City ADP, made a submission to the Aberdeen City Council Licensing Board, providing additional information in support of potential areas of overprovision in relation to on and off sales. This information was subsequently used by the licensing board when it came to finalise its Statement of Licensing Policy.

• In 2013 NHS Highland presented the licensing board with three options for an overprovision policy supported by comprehensive evidence including data on the cost of alcohol harm, alcohol related crime, house fires, alcohol consumption, behaviour, hospitalisations and mortality together with information on access to alcohol, geographical variation within the Highlands and public opinion. After consultation with wider stakeholders the licensing board adopted NHS Highlands primary recommendation for their overprovision policy.

• In Edinburgh a small task group was formed from across the Alcohol and Drug Partnership to produce a report on alcohol related harm across the city. This included data on alcohol related crime, hospital and morbidity levels, alcohol related fires, numbers of licensees by licence type. Where possible this was presented by intermediate zones (smaller geographies) to help identify areas of the city with higher levels of both alcohol related harm and alcohol provision. The report also included some recommendations for the Forum and Board to consider. Although the licensing board opted not declare any areas overprovided - instead identifying 7 areas of “serious and special concern” - it remains that significant efforts were made by stakeholders.

Relationship between licensing boards and local licensing forums:

The evaluation of the Licensing Act 2005 conducted by NHS Health Scotland\(^\text{10}\) identified problems with the Forums working relationship with Boards (pg 41). Some License Standards Officers reported that some Boards “took little cognisance of Forums” or “had very little contact with them”. With Forums currently the only body with an oversight role it is imperative that there are effective working relations between Boards and Forums.

Partnership working - relevance for legislation: The effective functioning and monitoring of the licensing process is dependent on constructive and productive working relationships between all stakeholders involved. Participation of stakeholders in the process has increased and there are examples of good practice. However, there is less consistency in Boards feeding back to stakeholders or evidencing their policy directions and no evidence of licensing boards effectively reporting on their performance. Effective feedback to stakeholders is crucial for their continued engagement in the process. Legislation to strengthen the reporting mechanisms by Boards would support continued and improved engagement of the broader stakeholders.

Supplementary written submission from the British Transport Police

First of all – we have not asked all Local Authorities, so do not have the completely definitive picture, but:

Local Government Association state that, although the staff that deal with the Scrap Metal Dealers Act 2013 are not the same as those who deal with fly-tipping issues, the latter is very high on local authorities agendas, so they would have expected it to have come up if the Act had caused problems – so no central awareness of any linking factors.

Local authorities in the Midlands were approached to ascertain if they had any historical, anecdotal or statistical data linking the two and none had any evidence of an increase due to the Act.
CORRESPONDENCE TO THE LOCAL GOVERNMENT AND REGENERATION COMMITTEE

Correspondence from the Scottish Government, 6 February 2015

The Committee wrote to all 14 NHS Boards in Scotland on 12 January 2015 regarding the alcohol licensing provisions contained at Part 2 of the Bill. During evidence sessions, there was some debate around the extent to which Health Boards seek to interact with licensing boards when the latter are considering applications.

Correspondence from Assistant Chief Constable Nelson Telfer, Police Scotland, following the Committee meeting on 29 January 2015, 23 February 2015

Correspondence from the Scottish Government regarding written evidence, 23 January 2015
Dear David

Thank you for your letter of 19 January asking for clarification of a number of points in relation to the Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill. I take your questions in turn.

Air Weapons

- “Notwithstanding paragraph 51 of the Policy Memorandum, additional clarification is sought of the Scottish Government’s rationale for 14 – 17 year olds being subject to special requirements and conditions and also whether there are any statutory impediments to setting the age limit lower? The Committee are somewhat exercised generally around age limits compounded by prospective changes to the voting age.”

Section 7 of the Bill places additional requirements on 14 to 17 year olds granted an air weapon certificate. Specifically, under-18s are prohibited from buying or otherwise owning an air weapon, and can only be granted an air weapon certificate for a limited range of purposes. This is consistent with the existing Firearms Act 1968, which prevents under-18s from buying any firearm (including shotguns and air weapons), and restricts the reasons for which an under-18 may be granted a firearm or shotgun certificate. The 1968 Act in turn follows the EU Weapons Directive 91/477/EEC, which states that member states should not allow under-18s to buy firearms, or to acquire them except for a limited range of purposes. The list of conditions at section 7(5) of the Bill is broadly consistent with the purposes authorised by the Directive.

The EU Directive does not apply to air weapons and there is therefore no statutory impediment to setting a lower age limit for air weapon certificates. However, the Scottish Government believes that, where potentially lethal firearms are concerned, it is appropriate to maintain consistency with the approach in Great Britain and the
The current lack of a ‘fit and proper person’ test has been criticised by the police, Licensing Boards and those within the alcohol trade.

- The Policy Memorandum envisages that licensing boards may be able to consider police intelligence when applying the fit and proper test. The Committee has been told that licensing boards must operate according to the principles of natural justice – which would include giving an applicant/licensee the opportunity to see and respond to any evidence, and may require information to be rejected if it does not meet certain evidential standards. Does the Scottish Government agree with this position? Can you provide examples of the types of police intelligence the Scottish Government envisages licensing boards will be able to take into account?"

The Scottish Government would agree with the view that a Licensing Board must operate according to the principles of natural justice. It would be the view of the Scottish Government that the existing legislation is compliant with the principles of natural justice and the amendments proposed in the Bill do not alter this. For example, the consideration of premises licence must be determined at a hearing and such a hearing must take place at a meeting of a Licensing Board. Where the police make representations concerning a premises licence application, the Board must give a copy to the applicant (s.22(3)(a)). Thereafter, at the hearing, the applicant or their legal representative will have the opportunity to dispute any of the information provided to the Board as they see fit. Similarly, where there is to be a review hearing of a premises licence, s.38(3) provides that the Board must provide the licence holder with notice of the hearing and a copy of the premises licence review proposal or application. As per the previous example, at the review hearing the applicant or their legal representative will have the opportunity to dispute any of the information provided to the Board as they see fit.

It is for the Board to determine the weight that it places upon the evidence placed before it and their decision would be open to appeal.

The term police intelligence is broad and potentially misleading. It can, for example, include incidents witnessed by a police officer or reports received in an area. We understand that the police are currently considering best practice in relation to the presentation of intelligence to Boards. This process will be informed by Board practice and case law.

Metal Dealers

- “The Committee understands that only a person (“a metal dealer) who ‘buys and sells’ metal would require to be licensed under the Bill and that this would allow itinerant dealers who collect metal without paying for it and then sell it, to operate without a licence. It would also exclude other people who deal in scrap metal, such as demolition contractors who sell on metal recovered from their building work. Could you explain the thinking behind the decision taken to define a metal dealer in this way and what might the Scottish Government position be on widening the definition to someone who ‘buys or sells’ metal?”

The Bill currently before the Committee does not define metal dealers or itinerant metal dealers. In both circumstances the definition, and thereby those regulated by the licensing regime, is provided in s.37 of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982. Instead the provision in the Bill, with regards to metal dealers, are intended to modernise and strengthen the regulatory regime of those currently defined as metal dealers or itinerant metal dealers.

That said, the Scottish Government is aware of the arguments that expanding the definition of a dealer to include those at the periphery who come into possession of metal and then sell it, may assist enforcement. We are considering the implications of widening the definition of metal dealers and itinerant metal dealers. We are conscious that a wider definition may give rise to a new risk that the licensing requirement is wider than envisaged and may inadvertently capture people who are not in any sense scrap metal dealers e.g. a plumber who acquires metal when replacing piping and then sells it. Finally, it is perhaps worth noting that demolition contractors and mobile collectors who do not offer payment (i.e. they sell but do not buy metal) do not seem obvious outlets for stolen metal.

- “The Committee has heard that itinerant dealers currently evade the requirement for a metal dealer’s licence on the basis they have a waste carriers or a waste management licence. Can you respond to this suggestion and clarify the differences between the scrap metal and waste licensing requirements?”

Metal dealers operate under a dual licensing requirement, with two licences that run in parallel with separate objectives. The metal dealers licence is aimed at classically civic licensing objectives i.e. preventing crime and disorder, preventing nuisance, protecting public safety. The waste carriers licence is geared toward environmental protection and safe carriage and disposal of waste. If an individual is conducting activities that fall within the licensable activity under both licences then they require two licences. It would not be permissible for an individual with only a waste carrier’s licence to buy and sell metal by arguing that the metal was only waste.

- “The Committee has been advised it can be difficult for licensing authorities to maintain oversight of itinerant dealers that are licensed by that authority but operate elsewhere across Scotland. Presumably, the system would also allow itinerants to bypass any additional requirements imposed by a single licensing authority and still operate in other areas. The Committee notes that itinerant dealers operating in England and Wales are required to hold a licence from each local authority in which they operate. How does the Scottish Government respond to the points above, how does it anticipate local authorities will monitor the operation of itinerant dealers when working outwith the local area and would it consider changing the current arrangements to require itinerants to hold a licence for each authority area in which they operate? Or to obtain a national licence?”

Any licensing system balances effective regulation against disproportionate administrative burden. In the case of itinerant metal dealers, the Parliament, in passing the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982, felt that the balance fell in allowing an itinerant dealer to work nationally as opposed to having to seek up to 32 different licences to operate across local authority boundaries.

We accept that enforcement may be strengthened by limiting the scope of a licence. That said, we would not regard it as an insuperable problem. If an individual comes to the attention of either a licensing authority or the Police then they can check the position with the issuing authority.

- “A number of organisations have suggested the Bill should require metal dealers to display their licence, which would assist enforcement. Such a provision is included in the 2013 UK Act. Why has the Scottish Government not included such a provision in the Bill and would it consider doing so?”
We are considering the merits of this suggestion. However, it is currently the view of the Scottish Government that such a requirement could be delivered by existing secondary powers and does not require provision to be made for this in the Bill.

- “Metal dealers have indicated that the requirement to record the date when scrap metal is processed could be problematic. This is because metal is sorted and consolidated with other similar material. How does the Scottish Government respond to these comments?”

The Scottish Government sees the force of these arguments and will consider bringing forward an amendment at Stage 2.

Public Entertainment Venues

- “Concerns have been raised about the amount of time necessary before a local government resolution in relation to a public entertainment licence can come into force. Does the Scottish Government consider there is a case for reducing the current requirements from nine months?”

The Scottish Government is open to suggestions for an alternative period. Nevertheless, we are conscious that that a period of reasonable duration is required between a decision to expand a licensing requirement and the requirement coming into force. In some circumstances it would be the case that a business would be licensed for the first time and it is reasonable that they have time to apply for a licence and also to make any changes to their operations that may be required as a condition of the licence.

Sexual Entertainment Venues

- “There is concern some venues may claim that, as the performers are self-employed, there is no financial gain to the venue. This even although the Bill provides for a sexual entertainment venue licence to be required where there is direct or indirect financial gain. Local authorities have raised concern that the requirement for any sort of financial gain could lead to protracted legal action. Does the Scottish Government consider the definition currently takes this into account?”

Yes. The Scottish Government notes the evidence offered to the Committee in Oral evidence on 14 January from Professor Hubbard. He said,

‘The provisions clearly refer to direct or indirect financial gain. There has been no case in England in which anybody has challenged the idea that somebody providing free striptease entertainment may not be benefiting indirectly from increased patronage, which results in increased alcohol sales. I think that the definition is adequate in that sense.’

The Scottish Government shares that view and is also of the view that the same principle of ‘indirect gain’ would apply to someone facilitating self-employed performers.
“There is confusion amongst stakeholders as to what sort of venue might be captured by the definition of a sexual entertainment venue, in particular, private members’ clubs, massage parlours, gay saunas etc. Is it the Scottish Government’s intention to include these premises within the licensing regime and if not which premises does it intend to exclude under inserted 45A(7)(b)?”

The Scottish Government has no specific list of premises that would be excluded under 45A(7)(b) but it is conscious that such a power may be necessary if the concerns raised in evidence by the Federation of Scottish Theatre arose i.e. theatrical performances found themselves subject to licensing.

In respect of the types of venue raised in the question, if they meet the licensing definition in terms of the activities conducted on the premises and the need for financial gain, then the Scottish Government is content for them to be licensed. We note that nothing in the licensing regime would serve to permit or mitigate illegal activity if offences are being committed e.g. brothel keeping, trading in prostitution or use of premises for unlawful intercourse.

“What is the Scottish Government’s rationale behind setting the age of 18 years under which a person should not undertake employed duties at a time when sexual entertainment is being provided?”

The Scottish Government believes there is a clear public interest in young people not working within the premises of a sexual entertainment venue when sexual entertainment is being provided. The age limit seemed appropriate given the nature of the entertainment. This is in line with age limits in respect of related activity such as the age when alcohol can be purchased or sold unsupervised.

“What is the Scottish Government’s view on whether Licensing Boards or Licensing Committees are best placed to implement the sexual entertainment venues licensing regime and the reasons to support the view expressed?”

We consider that the Local Authority (Licensing Committee) is best placed to regulate sexual entertainment venues as the licence is a civic licence regulated under the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982. Licensing Boards are responsible for alcohol licensing under the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005. In terms of the regime set out in the Bill, sexual entertainment venues would be in a position comparable to theatres, cinemas, concert venues and others who may find themselves needing both an alcohol premises licence as well as a civic licence.

Wider licensing matters

- “The Brightcrew case – arguably – prevents licensing boards exerting control over types of entertainment beyond sexual entertainment which might appear in a licensed premises’ operating plan – e.g. music and, if the Bill becomes law, theatre. Why should the law be strengthened in relation to sexual and theatre entertainment but not in these other areas?”

The Brightcrew case arguably does not create any new legal principles but rather restates the principles set out in the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005. The Act permits a Licensing Board to regulate the sale of alcohol and premises on which the alcohol is sold and any other purpose connected to the sale of alcohol. This provides some of the rationale for establishing a new licensing regime for sexual entertainment venues (indeed the Brightcrew case highlighted the limitations faced by Licensing Boards in this area). That said, we believe that a Board can adequately deal with a variety of matters that are conducted on the premises that can more closely be held to be connected to the sale of alcohol and it would not be helpful to Boards or licence holders to create a raft of new licences.

- “On a similar vein could the Scottish Government comment on suggestions that the use of occasional licenses can in some circumstances avoid more stringent tests being applied.”

As the Committee is aware, the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 sets out the legislative process for applying for an occasional licence. The occasional licence is a licence which covers a premises other than a premises that holds a premises licence, and can be made by a premises licence holder, a personal licence holder or a voluntary organisation. It can only have a period of not more than 14 days. There are limits on the number of occasional licences that a voluntary organisation may apply for. The 2005 Act also lays down conditions to attach to occasional licences. Generally speaking, the conditions replicate those for full premises licences.

The licence is for covering events that, by their very nature, could be infrequent and last for only a short space of time.

The Committee will wish to be aware that upon receipt of an occasional licence application the Licensing Board must give notice of it to the appropriate Chief Constable and the LSO. Any person may object to the occasional licence application. Grounds for refusal are effectively the same as that for premises licenses, with the exception of overprovision.

- “Has the Scottish Government given any consideration to the consolidation of licences more generally, for example, cinema licences with public entertainment licences?”

Sections 1 to 3 and 5 to 16 of the Cinemas Act 1985 are reserved under B5 of the Schedule of the Scotland Act 1998. It would be outwith the competence of the Scottish Parliament to legislate on the contents of these sections, which are primarily relating to the licensing of premises for the use of film exhibition.

We would consider it desirable for greater consolidation of licensing to occur where appropriate. In the case of theatre licensing there was considerable feeling from theatrical groups that regulation was burdensome which is why the Bill proposes that the licensing of theatres should be carried out under the public entertainment licensing provisions of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982.

- “Is there consistency across the various licensing regimes as to what is considered minor and major variations to licences and how these are dealt with by the licensing authorities?”

Under the alcohol licensing regime set out in the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005, as amended, the premises licence includes a large volume of information. This includes the application form, as well as the operating plan and layout plan. It is an offence to trade not in accordance with the premises licence. Therefore, if the licence holder intends to operate in a manner which deviates from the details originally approved, then a variation is required. Such variations can be classed as either minor or major variations.

Variations which are considered minor are set out at section 29(6) of the 2005 Act, and further minor variations are provided for in The Licensing (Minor Variations) (Scotland) Regulations 2011. Minor variations must be granted by the Licensing Board for a small fee. If a variation is not a minor variation then it will be a major variation. Major variations are subject to section 21(1), 21(2) and section 22, that is the requirement to notify neighbours, health board and police, with it being open to anyone to lodge an objection. All major variations must be considered by the Board at a hearing.

There are separate arrangements under the civic licensing regimes within the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982. For Part II licences, Schedule 1, para 9 covers the notification of changes and alterations, and para 10 covers the variation and suspension of licences. Sex shops are contained with Part III of the Act and Schedule 2, paras 14 and 15 refer.

There are no existing plans for reform in this area either in respect of alcohol or civic licensing. There are no existing plans for reform in this area, although we would particularly welcome views from stakeholders about the current list of specified minor variations if they are concerned that issues that should be subject to a full hearing under the alcohol licensing regime are being treated as minor variations.

I hope this assists the Committee’s deliberations and I apologise for missing your deadline for responding.

Quentin Fisher
Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill Team Leader
Letter to NHS Boards

Dear Chief Executive

The Local Government and Regeneration Committee is currently taking evidence at stage 1 of the Air Weapons and Licensing Bill. In particular they have been considering the alcohol licensing provisions contained at Part 2 of the Bill.

At the Committee meeting on 17 December the committee heard from health professionals, a member of a drug and alcohol partnership as well as a licensing board solicitor. There was some debate during the meeting around the extent to which Health Boards seek to interact with licensing boards when the latter are considering applications. This relates in particular to the provision of information to licensing boards on local health concerns which links into the licensing objections and potential overprovision within areas.

The Committee have asked that all Health Boards be contacted to advise the extent of their relationship with their local licensing boards, how much information they provide license boards and the extent to which local health concerns linked to alcohol are brought to the attention of the licensing board.

I would be grateful if you could provide this information for each license board within your Health Board area. The Committee would also welcome any comment you might wish to make on the extent to which the information you provide, if any, is in your opinion influencing licensing decisions.

I am afraid the Committee require this information no later than 31 January to allow them to complete scrutiny of the provisions in the Bill.

Many thanks

David Cullum
Clerk
Local Government and Regeneration Committee

Written response from NHS Ayrshire & Arran

Thank you for your recent enquiry, made on behalf of the Local Government and Regeneration Committee, requesting the following information:

- The extent of NHS Ayrshire & Arran’s relationship with our local licensing boards;
- How much information we provide to licensing boards;
- The extent to which alcohol-related health harms are brought to the attention of the licensing board;
- The extent to which the information provided to licensing boards is in our judgement influencing licensing decisions.

Primary, secondary and tertiary prevention of alcohol-related harm is strategically led in NHS Ayrshire & Arran by our three Alcohol and Drug Partnerships (ADPs), one covering each of our partner local authority populations (North, East and South Ayrshire). Our three ADPs at present jointly fund a senior pan-Ayrshire public health post. This has enabled a sustained focus on working within our local licensing systems to: raise awareness of the association between alcohol availability, consumption and harm in the population; advocate for a reduction of alcohol availability in the population; and support licensing boards in achieving their objective to protect and improve population health.

The remit of this role includes reviewing all\(^1\) alcohol licence applications submitted to North, East and South Ayrshire licensing boards. Each application is assessed in terms of its relative potential to increase the availability of alcohol, and so alcohol-related harm, in the population. Where the application is judged to increase availability in an area with high levels of alcohol-related harm, a representation in writing and through attendance at the licensing board meeting is made to this effect. Routinely published information on alcohol-related mortality and hospital admission rates are provided as part of these representations. This post also enables us to link to our three alcohol licensing boards through representation on the Alcohol Licensing Fora of North, East and South Ayrshire.

In addition, the post-holder annually convenes a meeting of the three licensing clerks. This provides a more informal opportunity to consider the health intelligence licensing boards require to achieve their objective of protecting and improving public health.

Finally, as part of the consultation for their 2013-2016 Licensing Policy Statements, each licensing board requested health intelligence to inform their assessment of overprovision. In response, reports were compiled and submitted by our Alcohol and Drug Partnerships, including: a brief review of the evidence of what works to reduce alcohol-related health and social harm; data relevant to the five licensing objectives (including geographical mapping of harms to highlight areas of particular concern); and public consultation findings.

\(^1\) Occasional licenses are not notified to health as there is no mandatory requirement that licensing boards consult on these.
The extent to which the provision of the above information is influencing the decision-making of licensing boards is difficult to assess. The association between the availability of alcohol in the population and average harm levels is not a readily apparent concept. Board members have made comments which reveal an individual level perspective which does not appear to appreciate the impact of increased availability on consumption and harm at a population level (e.g. “How will the refusal of this off-license application stop Jane Smith from buying alcohol from other licensed premises in her area?”). There also appears to be a tension between a desire amongst board members to embrace opportunities for economic regeneration and the five licensing objectives they are tasked with achieving. The balance in this tension will inevitably be influenced, amongst other things, by the values and opinions of individual board members. What can objectively be stated in response to this question is, that despite advocacy for the reduction of availability in areas with high levels of alcohol related harm, 92% of alcohol licences applied for in East Ayrshire in 2014 were granted, with a corresponding figure of 100% in South Ayrshire. The percentage of applications granted in North Ayrshire in 2014, where they have declared the area as overprovided, was slightly lower at 80%.
Written response from NHS Borders

1. Extent of relationship with local licensing boards:

NHS Borders is represented on the Local Licensing Forum which has responsibility to:

- review the operation of the Act in their area and the exercise of the Licensing Board’s functions, and
- advise and make recommendations on matters they see appropriate

It is also a requirement for Licensing Boards to notify Health Boards of all applications and major variations (excluding occasional licences). The Alcohol & Drugs Partnership (ADP) Support Team on behalf of NHS Borders scrutinises the application and variations making comments on applications where applicable. Representatives from Public Health (Director of Public Health/ADP Support Team) will then make representations concerning any application put before it. This can include the requesting the Board to consider applying certain conditions to the licence.

NHS Borders are also a consultee on the Licensing Board Policy Statement including the overprovision statement and work with the ADP to provide commentary.

2. How much information is provided to Licensing Boards: NHS Borders provides data to the ADP who drafted on behalf of the Local Licensing Forum the ‘Alcohol Profile’ (2013/14 update has recently been circulated to Licensing Board members). This aims to collectively present information from a range of stakeholders including NHS on alcohol both locally and nationally to help support policy development and decision making. The Licensing Board chair is also a member of the ADP.

3. Extent to which local health concerns linked to alcohol are brought to the attention of the licensing board: recent formal agreement of processes to scrutinise applications and variations alongside available data through the Alcohol Profile has allowed a representation to be made to the Licensing Board on the 19th December 2014. This included recommendations which were taken on board by Licensing Board and a requirement put in place for this to be implemented.
Written response from NHS Dumfries & Galloway

NHS D&G has recently prepared a report for the Council’s Licensing Board on overprovision. Whilst the report was welcomed the evidence presented was not fully accepted by Elected Members and the conclusions regarding overprovision are not being acted upon in areas of greatest concern. We do work closely with Licensing staff on a range of licensing issues including a –reduce the strength ‘campaign with local off-licenses; tackling street drinking and advising on new applications. Please let me know if further information is required.
Written response from NHS Eileanan Siar

Further to your request to provide information on the extent of the relationship between the Health Board and the Licensing Board and linked matters, I am pleased to furnish the following information:

Western Isles Health Board and Western Isles Licensing Board

The Western Isles is one of the smaller licensing board areas, serving a total population of around 26,000. There are both on and off sales licensed premises and the Health Board receives statutory consultations on licensing applications. With a small population and limited number of premises, the number of licenses granted as new or reviewed is very low and therefore interaction between the two bodies is relatively low. The major relationship between the Health Board and Licensing Board in recent years has been through the Outer Hebrides Alcohol and Drug Partnership, of which both the Chief Executive of the Health Board and Chairman of the Licensing Board are members. The ADP has led on the activities with the Licensing Board around the ‘proof of age’ and appropriate selling of alcohol. The Licensing Board’s approach to specific issues such as overprovision, with which the Health Board is in agreement, and the Health Board, through its membership of the Local Licensing Forum, provided information for the revision of the licensing policy statement 2013-2016.

The new Director of Public Health is developing the relationship between the Health Board and the Licensing Board and is bringing the current health information to the Board’s attention. At present there are no specific concerns from the Health Board for the Licensing Board in terms of applications for new licenses or for licence extensions.
Written response from NHS Fife

NHS Fife has a standard response to the question from the Licensing Board about the health aspects within licensing applications. There is no formal over-provision policy in Fife so we are unable to comment on individual applications.

Dr Hannah, Deputy Director of Public Health, currently chairs the Fife Licensing Forum and the Forum receives a copy of the minutes of the Fife Licensing Board meeting. The Forum has also had a joint meeting with the Board which will now go ahead on an annual basis and the over-provision policy will remain a top agenda item.

The Board is supposed to be considering local data on licenses and alcohol-related harm as part of its over-provision policy. They have a copy of a recent study by Public Health into over-provision and more recent updates from the ADP but still no signs of an over-provision policy.

Some five years ago, the Board members were given a presentation on mapping data from the ADP, the Police and the Council to assist in the formulation of an overprovision policy. While Councillors showed interest, nothing was taken forward and so it remains.

Overprovision is a concept more suitable for planning policy than licensing policy these days as the supermarkets have completely changed the face of the supply of alcohol over the last twenty years.

Relations between the Forum and Board are much improved from where they were 3 years ago and the Forum continues to provide a reasonable and consistent line of advice to the Board on Licensing matters.”
Interaction with Licensing Boards

Within NHS Forth Valley area we have relationships with three Licensing Fora – one in each of the three Local Authority areas, i.e. Stirling, Falkirk and Clackmannanshire.

The input to these Fora varies. The Health Board provides information on alcohol related statistics to the related statistics to the Licensing Fora which informs the Licensing Boards.

Public Health receives some information on licensing applications and has made representation at the Licensing Board to raise objections on the grounds of overprovision. This has met with little success in influencing the approval process in the face of legal challenge.

Although the supply of alcohol appears to exceed a health amount for the local population, we have found it challenging to win the case that an individual premises license should be refused.
Written response from NHS Greater Glasgow and Clyde

I am responding to your request for information for the Local Government and Regeneration Committee. The Committee has asked about the extent of NHS Greater Glasgow and Clyde’s relationship with local licensing boards including how much information we provide to licensing boards and the extent to which local health concerns linked to alcohol are brought to the attention of licensing boards.

NHS Greater Glasgow and Clyde includes 6 licensing boards and our response is similar for all of them.

Renfrewshire

In Renfrewshire the Licensing clerk sends the Community Health Partnership (CHP) all major variations and new licenses to comment on. The Alcohol and Drugs Partnership officer and the CHP Head of Planning and Health Improvement reply to any that they have concerns about – either with an objection (if it clearly contravenes the Licensing Policy), or with conditional recommendations (if we have concerns about e.g. access for children). The response always quotes the relevant evidence and statistics for the particular area the applications refers to and is copied to the Police. The CHP is invited to all Licensing Boards where they have responded to any applications. Their experience recently has been that all of our comments and objections have been ignored. They had a few successes a few years ago, but there have been some recent applications granted which sit firmly in the overprovision area and have had both police and health objections.

The current Renfrewshire Licensing Policy has a very small town centre overprovision area, and when the policy was reviewed last November (2013), the CHP submitted a significant response asking for the current area to be slightly extended and for the policy to designate an overprovision area for off sales only in some of the peripheral areas to Paisley. The CHP gave evidence about the link between availability of alcohol and health and submitted additional information about domestic violence, crime, fire, etc. The CHP response was endorsed by the ADP and Alcohol Forum. The Board decided to deal with overprovision separately, and are consulting now (a year later). The CHP has submitted the same request, and has updated the information – consultation closes 16th January.

The NHS has presented the health and wellbeing survey results to both the Licensing Forum and a joint meeting of the Forum and the Board.

Inverclyde

Licensing Boards in Inverclyde are held quarterly with additional meetings called as and when required. All new and major variations are sent to the Community Health and Care Partnership (CHCP) for consultation and a response if appropriate. Objections are made on a very individualised basis and usually an objection is only made if the application is for a new off license as opposed to a new restaurant or variation in hours etc. The response from the NHS tends to be short, factual and states the data in relation to the geographical data zone area that the licensing application is within. Available health data related to alcohol related brain damage; admissions and death is used. Any other information is included if it is thought to be of benefit to highlight e.g. proximity to schools if it is for an off sales licence. For new restaurant applications or major variations, recommendations tend to be made rather than objections and may include information relation to data zones and the health data as above. A recommendation that only a small percentage of the floor space (e.g. 10%) is available for alcohol display has been utilised more recently.

This short evidential approach to objections was taken following advice from the Licensing Clerk. Whilst attendance by an NHS representative at the Licensing Board has not been particularly successful in persuading the members to object to an application, it has helped build a better relationship and understanding from both the NHS and the elected members on the roles both have, which has proved beneficial.

Police Scotland and the NHS representative previously used to discuss each application where one or both organisations had evidence to support an objection prior to its submission, which was useful to ensure they were not contradicting each other. However a change in Police personnel has unfortunately meant this hasn’t continued. Occasionally the CHCP has been contacted for information by local community members who are planning to put in an objection to an application.

In addition to the Licensing Board interaction, the NHS previously chaired the Inverclyde Licensing Forum and was able to use this role to help influence the Board through provision of reports to the Board on Overprovision (which subsequently led to an Overprovision area being determined at the most recent Policy review) and reviewing the Children and Young People’s Policy.

East Renfrewshire

Over the last three years East Renfrewshire (ER) Community Health and Care Partnership (CHCP), on behalf of NHS Greater Glasgow and Clyde Director of Public Health (DPH) has been working to build and strengthen our relationship with ER Licensing Board, and its members.

Several key activities have facilitated this:

- Work with Licensing, ADP and Police Scotland colleagues to provide a review of alcohol and crime related data and make recommendations based on this on the extent of overprovision locally. This information is reviewed and updated regularly.

- Standardising the process in which licensing applications received by the CHCP and DPH, are considered in light of health and crime related data and other evidence available, and any objections submitted are reviewed on a case by case basis.

- Any health objections noted are submitted in writing and priority given to the invitation to attend in person to speak to any objection at the relevant local licensing board meeting.

- The NHS does not object to every application, each is assessed on an individual basis.
• Any objection on the basis of local health concerns is supported by the most current evidence as cited in the above local review, which also included a community public and licence trade consultation.

• From experience and feedback the information provided is focussed, and cited against the licensing objectives of protecting and improving public health and protecting children from harm.

• Each objection is assessed based on the quality and best available information supplied in the application.

• The relationship with ER Licensing Board has been strengthened as a result of all of the above to date and is important to acknowledge in any local partnership work.

With regards to influencing local licensing decisions in ER there have none upheld to date.

What is worth noting is that there have been a few examples where local applications being granted, have been subject to amendments being requested and further evidence being requested.

This is with particular reference to protecting children from harm and the health concerns raised highlighting this.

East Dunbartonshire

The CHP, through the Head of Planning and Health Improvement, influenced shaped and informed the development of a East Dunbartonshire Overprovision statement and policy through the undertaking of a specific community consultation and questionnaire, seeking local residents knowledge and views to the availability of alcohol within distinct geographies across East Dunbartonshire. This feedback was collated with other partners data to provide a comprehensive review to local alcohol provision/ overprovision. Further, the Licence Board receives reports summarising local data, trends and attitudes to alcohol and alcohol consumption identified within local Health and Wellbeing surveys.

The CHP liaises closely with senior colleagues within East Dunbartonshire Council, The National Police and Fire and Rescue Services to share insight and to develop a consistent approach to the public health and safety implications of a Licence application. The Head of Planning and Health Improvement considers and responds accordingly to Licence applications, alongside attending Licence Board meeting and appeals to offer expert health and public health insight to a specific application.

Glasgow

The Glasgow City CHP appointed a dedicated Health Improvement post was created in April 2013 until April 2017 to provide information, objections and representations to the City of Glasgow Licensing Board. Prior to this post being created there were only a limited number of representations provided to the Board regarding individual licensing applications and these were limited to the early days of the 2005 Act.
Therefore, within Glasgow City the role of the NHS in providing representations is in its infancy.

The Glasgow City Licensing Forum includes representatives from health, including the Director of Public Health. The Forum was constructive in advising the Board on its overprovision policy and worked in conjunction with health, police and other bodies in its creation. In particular, local statistics relating to alcohol related emergency hospital admissions were used in the creation of the overprovision policy.

Since October 2014, 4 representations/objections have been made by the NHS based on the licensing objectives of Protecting and Improving Public Health and Protecting Children from Harm.

A letter of representation/objection contains health related information relating to the intermediate data zone where the premises are located. Long term health effects including alcohol related deaths and emergency hospital admissions are provided with a comparison to Glasgow City and national figures. All objections are related to a licensing objective and are augmented, wherever possible, with local and national research evidence.

Glasgow City Licensing Board receives a high volume of applications and variations (many within the city centre) and it is not thought appropriate for all to receive a health representation/objection. Thereby, there is a system in place to decide which applications are responded to. The NHS will always, in future, object to an application if the premises are cited within a designated overprovision area or an area deemed by licensing policy to be ‘of concern’. The NHS will also object to new applications within an area where there are significant levels of alcohol related health harm or where other concerns are noted within the application, for example a premises providing off-licence sales wishing to be located near a school.

West Dunbartonshire

In November 2012, West Dunbartonshire Licensing Board requested support from West Dunbartonshire ADP to collate and translate a range of data to support the development of the Licensing Policy Statement 2013 – 2016.

A working group, led by West Dunbartonshire ADP with support from Police Scotland, Licensing Standards Officers, WDCHCP Health Improvement Team, Scottish Fire and Rescue Service, NHS GG&C Public Health and Alcohol Focus Scotland (AFS) was established to collate, analyse and report health, crime, fire and environmental data relevant to the objectives of the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005, in particular:

- Protecting and Improving Public Health
- Protecting Children from Harm

Statistical evidence used in the development of the previous (2010 – 2013) Licensing Policy Statement was used as the baseline and the impact of alcohol on the area as a whole and by Intermediate Data Zone (IDZ) was assessed.
The final report “Liquor Licensing in West Dunbartonshire - Overprovision: What does the evidence say?” was presented to the Licensing Board by Keith Redpath (Chair, West Dunbartonshire ADP) and Gail McClymont (Superintendent, Police Scotland).

In November 2013, West Dunbartonshire Licensing Board ratified its updated Licensing Policy Statement. The overprovision statement within the policy makes reference to the evidence provided and concludes that there is overprovision of public houses, nightclubs, off-sales and local convenience stores and supermarkets in 17 sub-localities (all except one) of West Dunbartonshire. However, the overprovision statement also contains the following:

“The Board recognises the positive health benefits associated with increased employment opportunities as a factor that applicants may use in support of their application and a factor that may in appropriate circumstances rebut such a presumption. In particular the Board will expect to be addressed on the benefits of granting the application in terms of each licensing objective.”

In 2014, the ADP Lead Officer and the Deputy Clerk to the Licensing Board were invited by Public Health England to the Home Office to share information regarding the overprovision work carried out in West Dunbartonshire.

In order to inform the 2016-2019 Licensing Board Policy Statement it has been agreed that work on gathering the data and statistics should begin in mid-2015.

As a response to the statutory requirement for health representatives to be notified of premises license applications (as introduced in the Alcohol etc. (Scotland) Act 2010) a senior officer from the Community Health and Care Partnership (CHCP) was identified as the individual responsible for signing off comments in response to individual applications.

In addition a sub-group of the ADP was established in 2010, with specific responsibility for reviewing and commenting on individual licensing applications. Membership of that subgroup consists of the Head of Mental Health, Addiction Services and Learning Disabilities (Chair), ADP Lead Officer (Vice Chair), the Joint Manager, West Dunbartonshire Addiction Services, the Health Improvement Lead with responsibility for Alcohol and a Consultant in Public Health Medicine (NHS GG&C).

The sub-group reviews applications and where necessary meets to discuss these and a formal response is submitted to the Clerk of the Licensing Board. The response indicates clearly whether or not an objection is being raised. In these instances, evidence of alcohol related harm e.g. Alcohol Related Deaths, Hospital Discharges, Alcohol Related Mental Health Hospital Discharges and Incidences of Alcohol Related Brain Damage for the specific locality is summarised.

A representative, usually the Chair or Vice Chair of the Sub Group, attends Board meetings to present objections to the licensing board. The ADP receives information regarding applications and their individual outcomes.
This approach enables elected members on the Licensing Board to make more informed decisions regarding individual applications. As a result of the information provided there has been a positive response from the Elected Members of the Licensing Board, particularly in relation to their raised awareness and appreciation of how health issues impact on the wider population of West Dunbartonshire. The ADP is currently reviewing how the information regarding the impact on the health of the local population affects the outcome of applications. This will be fed back to the ADP at a meeting in early 2015.

A recent interim review has indicated that during the period March 2014 to date a total of 21 applications were received. Of that total:

- 5 objections, on the grounds of Protecting and Improving Public Health and Protecting Children from Harm were submitted
- Of these, 2 applications were subsequently refused, 1 was withdrawn and 2 were granted.

The remaining 16 applications were not objected to, however information in relation to the health effects of alcohol for each individual data zone was provided for noting; this has meant that the majority of granted applications were for restaurants and Elected Members of the Licensing Board used this information to stipulate additional "conditions of grant"; these included:

- a reduction in hours when alcohol could be sold
- a commitment not to sell high alc vol beers
- stipulating that children and young people need to be accompanied by an adult and be expected to vacate the premises, except when they are present for a specific function, by 10.00pm
- one organisation volunteering to exclude children from the premises by 8.00pm, and
- larger organisations offering to provide licensing specific training for smaller (local) organisations.

The Head of Mental Health, Addiction and Learning Disabilities and the ADP Lead Officer are members of the West Dunbartonshire Licensing Forum. The relationships between the Forum, Board and ADP have been highlighted as an example of best practice and have led to the receipt of a CoSLA award in 2013.

Some notable issues relating to health representations;

As per the 2005 Act, the NHS is a statutory consultee. However, the Licensing Board is not duty bound to provide the NHS with the same level of information as other consultees (with the exception of community councils). The Board is only required by law to provide the NHS with a summary of the licensing application. This can cause issues as the NHS does not have full and ready access to information such as the operating plan and other crucial aspects of the application.
Similarly, at Board Meetings, the NHS are required to speak to their representation as per any other objector and unlike other statutory consultees (again, with the exception of community councils). It is acknowledged that this is perhaps due to the limited extent to which the NHS has offered representations in the past but we consider that the opinion of health could be given greater credibility in line with other consultees. The current situation appears to create a system where the NHS is not an equal partner in the licensing process.

Regarding health evidence within the current regime, the NHS is limited in the types of information it can provide and it is difficult to provide health statistics based purely on overprovision. The NHS deals with health information based on population level health and with licensing boards concerning themselves with individual premises it can be difficult to establish a connection. With regard to areas designated as overprovided for within licensing policy, it has been experienced that the Board can still move to grant an application despite firm health evidence. Also, academic research on outlet density and related health harm can also prove difficult as very little, if any, research proves causality and it is unlikely that ‘correlation’ alone would stand up to legal probate. Therefore, it can prove difficult to ascertain which aspects of health evidence boards might find useful.
Written response from NHS Lanarkshire

Background

At the Committee meeting on 17th December the Committee heard from health professionals, a member of an Alcohol and Drug Partnership (ADP) as well as a licensing board solicitor. There was some debate during the meeting around the extent to which Health Boards seek to interact with licensing boards when the latter are considering applications. This relates in particular to the provision of information to licensing boards on local health concerns which links into the licensing objections and potential overprovision within areas.

The Committee have asked that all Health Boards be contacted to advise 1) the extent of their relationship with their local licensing boards, 2) how much information they provide to license boards 3) the extent to which local health concerns linked to alcohol are brought to the attention of the licensing board and 4) the extent to which the information you provide, if any, is in your opinion influencing licensing decisions.

The extent of NHS Lanarkshire’s relationship with their local licensing boards

There are five licensing authorities in Lanarkshire: a board in North Lanarkshire and four divisions of the South Lanarkshire board: Clydesdale; East Kilbride; Hamilton and Rutherglen/Cambuslang. The extent of the relationship to date with the two licensing boards within Lanarkshire has its roots primarily in the relationship of the existing five licensing forums that feed into the respective boards. The forums must consist of no more than 20 members, and should include one member of the Council’s Licensing Standards Office and one further member must be a representative of the Chief Constable, Strathclyde Police for the Forum’s area, thereby leaving a maximum of 18 places to be filled. The respective Councils must seek to ensure as far as possible that the membership of the Forums are representative of the interests of persons or descriptions of person who have a general interest in the undernoted areas: - holder of premises licences and personal licences; persons having functions relating to health, education or social work; young people and persons resident within the Forum’s area.

The Licensing Forums are required to meet on at least four occasions per annum and in addition meet with their relevant Licensing Board. The Licensing Boards liaise with the Executive Director of Corporate Services in relation to the discharge of their duties and act as facilitator between the Board and the Forums. Where the Licensing Board decides not to follow the advice or recommendations of the Forum, reasons for that decision must be given to the Forums.

Within Lanarkshire there is robust relationship within each of the five forums and this has taken much effort at relationship building to help the forum members understand their role, the licensing objectives and their sphere of influence particularly in relation to the public health objective. What has been recognised is the need for there to be a stronger representation and capacity from a health perspective to attend the board meetings when applications are being considered. This ideally needs to be done in conjunction with Police Scotland and initial discussions to work in this way have been undertaken. There are time and capacity issues however in undertaking this task. We are currently considering how this can be done on a locality basis with several health representatives rather than just the one individual as applications/board meetings can come forward on a regular basis and from five different forum areas.

How much information we provide license boards

A number of reports have been prepared and presented to all licensing boards and forums:

Alcohol: The Facts in Lanarkshire

This report was prepared in September 2012¹ as a starting point to understand better the alcohol-related issues across Lanarkshire that licensing boards and forums may be able to influence through policy and decision-making. It was written by Dr Harpreet Kohli, Director of Public Health, NHS Lanarkshire. This report aimed to provide a Lanarkshire perspective on alcohol-related issues in relation to the five licensing objectives, noting that 'protecting children from harm' forms part of the other objectives. The report is not an exhaustive list of alcohol-related information but there is evidence that alcohol plays a significant part within these objectives. Councils are required to establish local licensing forum(s) for their area under the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005. Forums keep the operation of the licensing system in their area under review to give advice and recommendations to licensing boards. The report also stressed that while this does not include reviewing or offering advice or recommendations in relation to any particular application or case before boards, boards have a duty to have regard to the forums’ views and must offer reasons on occasions where it takes decisions against the advice of the forum. This report was subsequently presented to each of the licensing boards within Lanarkshire and their respective licensing forums.

Action on overprovision in alcohol licensing: experiences from ADPs & Public Health

This report² provides a summary of research carried out by Dr. Niamh Fitzgerald, Lecturer in Alcohol Studies at the University of Stirling which was commissioned by the Lanarkshire Alcohol & Drug Partnership. The research sought to describe the perspective of Alcohol and Drug Partnerships, public health representatives and other stakeholders who have experience in this work. Its focus is on how to take forward actions to robustly identify, raise awareness of, and build support for licensing policy that recognises overprovision where relevant.

The findings from the research are intended to inform NHS Lanarkshire, who are at an early stage in this work, about the best ways to approach the issue of possible overprovision of licensed premises. All five licensing boards have received copies of the report and had opportunities to discuss the implications, particularly in view of the policy statements on overprovision.

Re-thinking alcohol licensing

This report was written by Petrina MacNaughton and Dr Evelyn Gillan, (Alcohol Focus Scotland, SHAAP) with input from members of the expert group on public health and licensing and was shared with all 4 licensing boards. It explains the new legislation that came into effect in 2009 and the introduction of objectives together with a duty to formulate a statement of licensing policy that requires the commitment of the licensing boards as well as support of local authorities and other public agencies as well as the engagement of local communities.

Licensing Resource Toolkit

These are a range of resources that Alcohol Focus Scotland developed to facilitate and support good licensing practice. The toolkit aims to provide guidance on key areas of the new approach to licensing and promotion of the licensing objectives. There are three factsheets that cover evidence gathering, assessing overprovision and writing a statement of licensing policy and all four licensing boards in Lanarkshire have been provided access to these documents.

The extent to which local health concerns linked to alcohol are brought to the attention of the licensing boards

As highlighted above, this is primarily done through the respective forums however it has been noted for some time that there needs to be greater efforts from the health board (working in particular with Police Scotland) to provide robust evidence when considering new licensing applications in relation to the public health objective as well as the other four licensing objectives. This is still communicated via the licensing forums and this is a cause of frustration as the respective forums believe they have little influence over this, despite the fact that in more recent times the forums are grasping the importance of providing evidence based on licensing objectives rather than stating

4 Using evidence to support policy and decision-making:

Statements of licensing policy - Using policy to guide licensing decisions

Developing an effective overprovision policy:
http://www.naadp.com/resources/site1/general/factsheet%203%20overprovision.pdf subjective views. This has to do with the effort that has gone into relationship building with forums to get them to trust “health” inputs to the forum.

It has been recognised for some time that in Lanarkshire there is a need to gather the views of public and local communities as an important part of the process of influencing licensing board members and decisions in relation to the public health objectives. This was one of the main reasons for the Lanarkshire ADP financing the attached research into overprovision. Ongoing work to date includes collaboratively working with communities using community development approaches such as participatory appraisal and/or asset mapping.

The Director of public Health also convened a meeting to which all four Board members and forum members were invited to discuss the contents and implications of Alcohol: the facts in Lanarkshire and he has offered to meet with Board members as and when necessary or requested to do so. There has however been no further uptake of this offer to date other than the initial meeting to discuss, Alcohol, the facts in Lanarkshire.

The extent to which the information we provide influences licensing decisions.

Information provided by Police Scotland has influenced licensing decisions and there is still the belief that, if there were strong representation at Board meetings when applications are being considered, this would have a greater influence. This requires long term significant effort from senior health board representatives or other health leads to further develop and establish links with board convenors and clerks and to continually discuss issues in relation to the public health objectives.
Written response from NHS Lothian

Thank you for the opportunity to contribute to the Committee’s deliberations. I am replying on behalf of NHS Lothian. I note that you are interested in the extent of the Board’s relationship with their local licensing boards, how much information they provide license boards and the extent to which local health concerns linked to alcohol are brought to the attention of the licensing board.

NHS Lothian has four licensing boards in its area – City of Edinburgh, East Lothian, Midlothian and West Lothian. NHS Lothian has had extensive and sustained input into the Edinburgh Licensing Board and at times extensive input into the other three boards.

While we welcomed becoming a statutory consultee, this was a new area for detailed public health involvement and it has taken a little while to understand the way the licensing system operates and how best to contribute. The five licensing principles remain a very strong statement of the public interest. However there has been a significant learning curve to be able to contribute to this work and it is to some extent unsurprising if progress has been patchy. Licensing is its own, very legalistic world and health considerations have not previously been so prominent in the consideration of boards.

Licensing Forums

We have also tried to cover the four licensing forums and support their work with inputs and suggestions for other presentations to assist their deliberations. The best Forums engage the community councils who can be powerful advocates for the public interest. For instance, the Edinburgh Licensing Forum has a good mix of diverse trade, community reps and statutory representatives.

However, it is difficult for a Forum to scrutinise the work of its Licensing Board when there is such a dearth of data. It is very hard to extract meaningful statistics and trends from licensing boards. Evaluating changes in licensing policy is very difficult. The proposal for an annual report may help to overcome this issue, particularly if the Scottish Government put a minimum dataset into guidance for Boards. Currently, for instance it’s not easy for a Forum to tell if the number of offsales in their board area has increased or decreased or stayed the same. Boards and Forums are further hampered by not having access to aggregate sales data for their area. It is essential that Boards and Forums have a clear idea of the amount of consumption of alcohol in their area. The Health Board can’t supply this data. Rather than relying on estimates which do not go down to even local authority level, a Board could receive on a confidential basis annual sales data from each licensed premises and therefore have a reasonable proxy for the amount being consumed in their area, perhaps broken down by locality. No indicator will be perfect but this will be closer than using self reported surveys of alcohol use. Otherwise all attempts to control the effects of alcohol are hampered by a lack of specific, local information on consumption.

Local Alcohol and Drug Partnerships have also had a very helpful input, particularly in the coordination of evidence from the various partners and also in Edinburgh around engaging with other interested parties such as economic development.
City of Edinburgh.

I routinely attend the City of Edinburgh Board on behalf of NHS Lothian and we have objected to 39 applications in the three years from December 2011 to December 2014, mainly focusing on new off-sales applications on the basis that 70% of alcohol sales are through off sales in Scotland. NHS Lothian has contributed significantly to the last two Licensing Board policies and in particular to the debates about overprovision. Four years ago NHS Lothian contributed substantially to the statistical and evidential input into assessment of areas of overprovision including an analysis of the licensing board’s data geographically to help inform the debate. At that time the Edinburgh Licensing Board was interested in declaring the whole of Edinburgh as overprovided for off-sales. This led to the Licensing Board at that time to turn down three applications for off-sales (see case study). However, the policy was somewhat equivocal about the position and did not formally declare the overprovision, merely that it was minded to but recognised that the Act did not give a specific power to declare a whole area as overprovided for, only a locality or localities.

Case Study

On the 19th March 2012, Edinburgh Licensing Board adopted a revised statement of licensing Policy incorporating a new policy on the overprovision of off-sales licenses. At their following meeting on the 23rd April 2012 three applications for off-sales licenses in the City were turned down with reference to this policy. One of these applications was from one of the big four supermarkets for a provisional license for a new ‘convenience’ supermarket in the city centre in an area where there is a comparatively high density of off sales outlets and where residents are affected by alcohol related harm (as evidenced by the rate of alcohol related hospital admissions).

This decision was taken to appeal in the Sherriff Court by the applicant. Legal opinion was sought by the Licensing Board which cast doubt on the legal strength of the wording of the Board’s Policy and its reasons for refusal (The statement of reasons). Subsequently, all parties agreed to the decision being ‘remitted’ (sent) back by the Sheriff Court to the Licensing Board for re-consideration. The Court did not provide a judgment on the Policy or the decision.

Meanwhile in May 2012 local government elections took place and this led to a change in Convenor and in the membership of the Board. The remitted decision was inherited by this newly constituted Licensing Board and, at their first meeting, after hearing representations from all parties involved, the license was granted, reversing the decision of the previous Licensing Board. At subsequent meetings the other two licenses that had been refused were also granted.

East Lothian

NHS Lothian has had input into both the Licensing Board when considering its policy and also in the Licensing Forum. The Alcohol and Drugs Partnership that covers East Lothian led on a report of statistics and evidence to which NHS Lothian contributed. This assisted the licensing board in declaring the whole of East Lothian overprovided for. At the moment NHS Lothian is looking to provide more permanent input since a key staff member moved on.

Midlothian

NHS Lothian contributed to the development of a report on overprovision which has led to the licensing board declaring Dalkeith Town Centre as overprovided for. NHS Lothian has submitted its first objection to an application in January 2015. We also attend and contribute to the Licensing Forum in Midlothian.

West Lothian

Public Health have presented to the Licensing Board on two occasions in the last 4 years around the issue of availability and health harms in West Lothian. The Alcohol and Drug Partnership coordinated a very detailed consideration of the overprovision issue under the previous board but this did not lead to any change in the policy locally. NHS Lothian has not objected to any specific applications yet in West Lothian. The Forum has been active in West Lothian and NHS Lothian colleagues have been contributing to its deliberations, including chairing the Forum latterly.

Overprovision

I would like to end with a consideration of the assessment of overprovision as this has dominated much of our interactions with licensing boards. At the heart of this debate has been a consideration of what board members, Clerks, legal representatives and objectors consider as evidence.

The Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 – Section 142: guidance for licensing boards and local authorities was published by the Scottish Government in April 2007. Section 3 covers overprovision. Since the guidance was published Boards have grappled with the issue of overprovision and found it quite difficult to come to a satisfactory conclusion, although a number of Boards have come to a variety of conclusions, including locally in Midlothian and East Lothian.

One of the reasons for the difficulties that some boards have experienced in this area is that the wording of the guidance is problematic and to some extent contradictory in relation to the burden of proof that it suggests is required to make a declaration of overprovision in a locality or localities in a Board area.

The burden of proof is defined as the obligation to prove one’s assertion. There are two standards in legal cases, one for civil cases and one for criminal cases. At paragraph 47 it states that a “dependable causal link” needs to be “forged between the evidence and the operation of licensed premises in a locality”. This wording appears to confer a high burden of proof on the objector, perhaps as high as ‘beyond reasonable doubt’ which is the standard in criminal cases.

Paragraph 48 states that “consideration should be given as to whether aggregated information and evidence from a number of sources points compellingly towards a particular conclusion”. It might be argued that “compellingly” is closer to a notion of the civil burden of proof – on the balance of probabilities.
Epidemiology has been defined as the science and practice which describes and explains disease patterns in populations. It is very much concerned with analysing patterns scientifically and understanding the causes of disease and ill health. Establishing causation is a central concern, not for its own sake but so that action can be taken to protect and promote health and prevent harm. Epidemiology provides information for action.

The notion of the balance of probabilities sits well with public health notions of causality and the levels of evidence on which to base action to promote and protect health. In public health we aspire to ascribe causality on the basis of a careful judgment against a framework of guiding questions. Over the years helpful criteria have been put together to aid the judgment as to whether an observed association is most likely to be based on cause and effect. What is the strength and consistency of the association? How specific is it? Are we sure which comes first? Is there a dose-response curve? Is there a biologically plausible explanation? Do experiments such as ending the exposure result in a change in the situation. Are there similar situations that provide an analogy?

It cannot be emphasised enough however that these helpful questions are just that and cannot remove the element of judgment from a decision. Proof is defined as the evidence establishing a fact or the truth of a statement. But in all areas of policy making we hardly ever have overwhelming evidence of the effectiveness of interventions. Correlation is not causation but it is important to investigate a correlation and look to evidence from other areas and countries to come to a judgment.

There has clearly been a variation in the degree to which some Licensing Boards are prepared to come to a judgment and this has coloured the success and to some extent the level of engagement of health in licensing. Given how long effective tobacco control has taken, it would be unreasonable perhaps to expect overnight success in a relatively new area such as licensing. But it is also clear that licensing has a very important part to play in promoting and improving public health.

Written response from NHS Orkney

A consultation was carried out by the licensing board in 2012 and despite what was felt to be a convincing argument that the health of people was being impacted by overprovision in Kirkwall the outcome that was reached was that there was no overprovision in Orkney.

A change in the relationship between the Health Board and Licensing Board has occurred following a meeting in October 2014 that was held to launch our Community Action plan on Alcohol. At that meeting detailed health data on the effects of alcohol on the health of local people was shared and this had a great impact on members of Licensing who attended. They are now acknowledging that there is a significant problem with alcohol locally. This is a substantial step-change as up until then there had appeared to be a reluctance by the Licensing Board to consider that there was an issue with alcohol in Orkney.

In Orkney there is interaction between the Health Board and Licensing via the Public Health department and also the ADP. The Director of Public Health is invited to Licensing Board meetings.

The Public Health Manager and Substance Misuse Development Officer for the ADP attend the Licensing Forum meetings.

Objections to licensing requests are submitted to the Licensing Board if it is felt that there are public health issues.

Currently the law on overprovision is not clear and Licensing Boards as a result are hesitant to refuse licences on the grounds of overprovision for fear of legal action being taken. Tightening of the definition of overprovision would clarify matters and give Licensing Boards more confidence in their decision making.
Written response from NHS Tayside

Angus Licensing Board

NHS Tayside has very little direct interaction with Angus Licensing Board. Early work to describe the extent of alcohol provision and alcohol related social harm is being built on by the collaboration of an NHS Tayside Information Analyst with Angus ADP colleagues so that data from Local Authority, Police and Health can be used to scope out the extent of alcohol related harm to health and to society. NHS Tayside has responded to individual requests for health information in relation to specific applications to the Licensing Board.

Dundee City Council

NHS Tayside, in collaboration with community planning partners, completed a comprehensive assessment of alcohol related harm in the City and a statement on licensing over provision. Dundee City Licensing Board have since made a statement to the effect that the city is overprovided for in terms of licensed premises and so there is an onus on applications to show that the granting of a new licence would not contribute to over provision. NHS Tayside colleagues have been present in person to support objections to the granting of new licences.

Information to the Licencing Board regarding individual applications is contained in a letter (at ANNEXE A) and includes specific alcohol related harm information relevant to that area within the city.

It is the experience of members of the Licencing Forum that attendance in person adds weight to the objection.

Perth and Kinross Council

NHS Tayside has participated in the ADP initiated and chaired Alcohol Scoping Meetings over recent months and has, with the input of community planning partners, completed a report outlining the health and social harms and describing the alcohol provisions within Perth and Kinross. Public Health has participated in the Alcohol Licensing Forum and as yet not attended a Licensing Board.

Overall, it is encouraging that community planning partners in each of the three local authority areas are keen to address the issues of health and social harm related to alcohol. NHS Tayside remains committed to working with the Licensing Forum within each area and building on the work already ongoing.

Dear ____________

Re: Application for Premises Licence at ________________

We are writing on behalf of ____________ to register our objection to the above application for a premises licence. The basis for this objection is that granting a licence for this premise will not promote the Licensing Objectives, namely:

- Preventing crime and disorder
- Securing public safety
- Preventing public nuisance
- Protecting and improving public health
- Protecting children from harm

In particular this premises lie within ___________ area. Evidence presented within the Dundee City ADP Assessment of Overprovision Report indicates that in this area ________ (enter any specific relevant information regarding evidence of health or social harm). In addition this particular application includes ______ (enter any specific information in regard to concerns e.g. children on premises, late opening hours etc).

It is well recognised that access to and availability of alcohol is linked to increased consumption and consequent health and social harm to individuals and communities.

The Dundee Licensing Board has recently taken a commendable position as part of its Licensing Policy and declared the whole City (with the exception of the central waterfront) overprovided for all alcohol premises. This means the Board has adopted a position of ‘rebuttable presumption’ against awarding any premises licenses, with the onus being on applicants to prove their specific application will not contribute to overprovision situation.

Given that no credible evidence has been provided to demonstrate that this specific application would not contribute to overprovision, we would urge the Licensing Board to refuse this application.

Yours sincerely

Interaction between NHS Boards and the local Licensing Boards

NHS Shetland

Sarah Taylor, the DPH in Shetland is a member of the local Licensing Forum, and feed in via that through into the Licensing Board. She works directly with colleagues in Environmental Health and Legal Services in the Shetland Islands Council who support the Licensing Board. She noted that she had fed into the recent updating of Shetland's Licensing Policy through those routes.

NHS Highland

Liz Smart, CPH in Highland covers this remit. She noted that 'Alcohol Focus' had published a report about licensing and the overprovision statements; this provides a good summary of the work in Highland.

(see http://www.alcohol-focus-scotland.org.uk/campaigns/controlling-availability.aspx)

She views the biggest challenge to effective public health input is that the Highland Licensing Board always give consideration to the local economy (on sales in particular) rather than take on the boarder public health issues.

NHS Grampian

Chris Littlejohn, CPH in Grampian covers this remit. He commented that Aberdeen City Licensing Board had declared over-provision of off-licenses across the city (excepting restaurants; and two specified, more rural localities outwith the city proper), and over-provision of on-licenses in two defined areas of the city centre. The Board's Statement of Licensing Policy (SLP) for 2013/16 identified that Health Board information was used in reaching this decision. The Health Board routinely submits objections to Aberdeen City alcohol licensing board where applications are in breach of the SLP, with around 50% of objections being upheld by a decision to refuse a license.

Similar information did not influence Aberdeenshire's three licensing boards, or Moray's licensing board, in the same way, as they all declared no over-provision. The public health led Alcohol Licensing strategic group agreed that the opportunity cost of the time and resource required to submit objections in the face of licensing boards' explicit rejection of any link between outlet density and harm was too great (plus the pragmatic fact that their SLPs provide limited grounds on which to object), so we do not routinely submit objections to the other Boards.

General he reports positive relationships with all the Licensing Forums across Grampian. In Aberdeenshire, they report developing working relationships with the Boards' legal teams, and with local Forum support we have had alcohol-related mortality and hospitalisation data included in their annual reports this year.

Dear Mr Wixted

LOCAL GOVERNMENT AND REGENERATION COMMITTEE
AIR WEAPONS AND LICENSING (SCOTLAND) BILL

I refer to the Committee’s meeting of 29 January 2015 and its consideration of the above noted Bill when Police Scotland was requested to provide some additional information following the evidence session.

In pursuit of the request, I would offer the following information:

Registered Clubs

The Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005, brought Members Clubs within the licensing mainstream and now require a Premises or Occasional Licence to permit the sale and supply of alcohol. However there remain a few anomalies in the licensing regime specifically pertaining to prescribed Members Clubs, such as:

- Members Clubs are not included in an assessment of overprovision and cannot be refused a Premises Licence or variation on those grounds;
- There is no requirement to have a DPM; and,
- There is no requirement to have the sale and supply of alcohol authorised by a personal licence holder (also applies where an occasional licence is in effect).

This creates a potential situation where Members Clubs can use Occasional Licences to circumvent obtaining a Premises Licence and the statutory safeguards that this would place on them by the 2005 Act for the responsible sale or supply of alcohol, by applying for multiple Occasional Licences to cover extended periods or not necessarily having them managed by a properly qualified person.

It would be advantageous if these legislative loopholes were addressed, ensuring that Members Clubs were subject to the same regulation as other licensed premises.
Occasional Licences

An application for an Occasional Licence in respect of unlicensed premises may be made by the holder of a premises or personal licence or by a person representing a ‘voluntary’ organisation. The term “voluntary organisation” has never been defined and it would be helpful if this was clarified, as otherwise there may be room for dispute as to the types of organisation entitled to make an application.

In some cases, use of Occasional Licences under the 2005 Act has enabled situations where this type of licence has been used as a substitute for a Premises Licence or even for a Public Entertainment Licence (PEL).

This can result in a position where organisers for large scale events, such as music festivals where alcohol can be sold, are able to apply for an Occasional Licence and circumvent the requirement for a PEL. A PEL ensures appropriate safeguards are in place regarding the operation of such events. Furthermore, in light of the “Bright Crew” decision, Licensing Board’s can only challenge issues directly concerning the sale and supply of alcohol. An Occasional Licence for a large event would not provide sufficient scope to address other safety related issues that occur, unless a PEL was in place.

In addition the use of Occasional Licences is open to potential exploitation; for instance, where the applicant is associated with, or linked to, organised crime, or is believed to be sympathetic towards proscribed organisations within the UK. Such applications are not common place; however there have been applications made from Members Clubs under the auspices of fundraising events, i.e. for a charity, which coincides with football fixtures or other noticeable religious or “cultural” events.

Often there is little information provided by the applicant to confirm who they are fundraising for, as this is not a legislative requirement or required to be completed on the application. Whilst this in itself is not indicative of dubious fund raising activity, there may be circumstances where police held intelligence would present some concern.

Taxis and Private Hire Vehicles/ Booking Office Licences

Sec 21(1) of the Civic Government Scotland Act makes it an offence for a private hire car driver to pick up passengers in an area for which they do not have a licence. Furthermore, an operator and booking office is only permitted to use taxi or private hire cars licensed by the authority in whose area it operates and cannot use those licensed by an adjacent authority.

Following an extensive police enquiry regarding a particularly problematic booking office, a report was submitted to a Local Authority Regulatory Committee regarding a Private Hire Car Booking Office operating outwith the conditions of licence. Their website listed various telephone numbers which detailed numbers outwith their licensed area of operation and the practice of accepting bookings for journeys that commenced and concluded outwith their conditions of licence was specifically confirmed. Following the hearing, their licence was suspended, however this is now subject to appeal.

This practice is not unique and there remain ongoing issues where booking offices have taken hires, via phone or on-line, with the journey commencing and ending in another Local Authority area for which they are not licensed to operate.
Given some of the work that is taking place to introduce Civic Enforcement Officers across Scotland, this is perhaps an area of business that could be considered suitable for that role.

UBER

The Local Government & Regeneration Committee (LGRC) raised a related issue whereby taxi companies were using mobile phone applications (apps), to receive, accept and allocate Private Hire Car (PHC) bookings and made specific reference to UBER.

UBER is an American based company, founded circa 2009 and backed by Google, and operates a Taxi/Private Hire app service in over 50 countries with a global turnover in excess of $40 billion. The company has attracted considerable interest and publicity in the media where there have been numerous reports that have generated concern specifically regarding their alleged use of unlicensed drivers.

Media reports claim that UBER has been banned from operating in many countries including some EU states, such as France and Germany. In the UK, UBER currently operates in London, Manchester and Leeds. At present there is insufficient information to substantiate the claims documented in the media, given that different licensing regimes exist within both a UK and worldwide context.

It would also appear that much of the concern surrounding this company stems from Taxi and PHC drivers who are naturally apprehensive as to the competitive nature of UBER and the potential threat to their livelihood.

UBER has recently made application to Glasgow and Edinburgh, as well as in Bristol and Newcastle, for booking office licences in each respective city. The Chief Constable’s primary concern is public safety and dialogue is currently ongoing to obtain assurances that UBER will operate within the confines of the Civic Government Scotland Act 1982 and Local Authority imposed conditions.

If so satisfied, then any subsequent breach of conditions or offending would be addressed, as they would with existing operator or booking offices, and a report submitted to the relevant regulatory authority for consideration and disposal.

Sexual Entertainment Venues

Sexual Entertainment Venues (SEV) can be licensed in terms of the Licensing Scotland Act 2005 if they wish to provide for the sale or supply of alcohol. Licences are granted in accordance with the submission of an operating plan. An operating plan details what activities are to take place on the premises where alcohol will be sold for consumption. Police Scotland will monitor such premises to ensure they are complying with the requirements of the 2005 Act and respond to any allegations of criminality.

Sexual Entertainment Venues have reputedly been associated with criminality and concerns have been raised from third parties regarding potential exploitation issues. However, most of the information regarding SEV’s is anecdotal. Police Scotland relies on intelligence gathering to establish whether there may be criminality involved and then can take appropriate action. Furthermore, issues relating to the operation of a SEV which have come to the attention of the police, have also encountered difficulties when making representation to Licensing Boards when not directly related to the sale and supply of alcohol (Brightcrew).

I trust the foregoing is helpful, should any further information be required, or should you wish to discuss any aspect of this matter in more detail, then Police Scotland would be pleased to assist and Chief Inspector Morag Stewart of the Licensing and Violence Reduction Division will facilitate any requests. Chief Inspector Morag Stewart can be contacted by e-mail on morag.stewart@scotland.pnn.police.uk or by telephone 0141 532 2424.

Yours sincerely

Supplementary written submission from the Scottish Government Bill Team

We have studied the responses to your call for evidence and continue to follow the evidence gathering sessions held by the Local Government and Regeneration Committee with considerable interest. While evidence has, of course, been provided in respect of the provisions of the Bill, much has also been said about a wide range of issues that are not included within the Bill. In respect of alcohol licensing, we have been clear that the proposals in the Bill are intended to improve the existing system but that they do not comprise a radical overhaul.

The alcohol licensing regime is particularly complex and the range of stakeholders is wide. It is therefore important that any changes are carefully considered in the round to avoid unintended adverse consequences. We believe that the proposals relating to provisional ‘site only’ applications and surrendered licences have the potential to undermine facets of the existing regime and would not be widely supported by other licensing stakeholders. Licensing Boards need to be in possession of full and accurate information to inform their determination of overprovision and make decisions about individual licences.

However, we continue to consider the concerns raised in relation to the existing law on transfers of alcohol premises licences. We note that in the evidence gathering session on 19th November, Fiona Stewart on behalf of the local authority licensing clerks in the SOLAR Licensing Subcommittee, while sharing many of the concerns about the existing legislation’s approach to transfers, flagged that clerks were likely to have different views on how to resolve them.

It remains our intention that the alcohol licensing regime operates effectively to meet the aspirations of the various stakeholders and legitimate interests.

Remit and membership

Remit:

1. The remit of the Delegated Powers and Law Reform Committee is to consider and report on—
   (a) any—
   (i) subordinate legislation laid before the Parliament or requiring the consent of the Parliament under section 9 of the Public Bodies Act 2011;
   (ii) [deleted]
   (iii) pension or grants motion as described in Rule 8.11A.1; and, in particular, to determine whether the attention of the Parliament should be drawn to any of the matters mentioned in Rule 10.3.1;
   (b) proposed powers to make subordinate legislation in particular Bills or other proposed legislation;
   (c) general questions relating to powers to make subordinate legislation;
   (d) whether any proposed delegated powers in particular Bills or other legislation should be expressed as a power to make subordinate legislation;
   (e) any failure to lay an instrument in accordance with section 28(2), 30(2) or 31 of the 2010 Act; and
   (f) proposed changes to the procedure to which subordinate legislation laid before the Parliament is subject.
   (g) any Scottish Law Commission Bill as defined in Rule 9.17A.1; and
   (h) any draft proposal for a Scottish Law Commission Bill as defined in that Rule.

5th Report, 2015 (Session 4)

Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill at stage 1

The Committee reports to the Parliament as follows—

1. At its meetings on 25 November, 16 December 2014 and 20 January 2015 the Delegated Powers and Law Reform Committee considered the delegated powers provisions in the Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill at stage 1 (“the Bill”)\(^1\). The Committee submits this report to the lead committee for the Bill under Rule 9.6.2 of Standing Orders.

2. The Scottish Government provided the Parliament with a memorandum on the delegated powers provisions in the Bill (“the DPM”)\(^2\).

OVERVIEW OF BILL

3. This Government Bill was introduced on 14 May 2014, by Kenny MacAskill MSP. The lead committee is the Local Government and Regeneration Committee. Stage 1 of the Bill is to be completed by 3 April 2015.

4. Broadly, Part 1 of the Bill aims to protect public safety by creating a new licensing regime for air weapons. Parts 2 and 3 aim to strengthen and improve aspects of locally led alcohol and civic government licensing, to preserve public order and safety, reduce crime, and to advance public health. A number of the provisions in Parts 2 and 3 are directed at improving the efficiency of the operation of the licensing regimes, aiming to contribute to creation of a better regulatory environment for business.

5. Alongside the regulation of air weapons, the Bill amends the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 (‘the 2005 Act’, licensing alcohol) and the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 (‘the 1982 Act’, covering other local licensing regimes). The provisions include, in outline:

\(^1\) Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill [as introduced] available here: http://www.scottish.parliament.uk/S4_Bills/Air%20Weapons%20and%20Licensing%20(Scotland)%20Bill/b49s4-introd.pdf%20Bill/b49s4-introd.pdf)

\(^2\) Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill Delegated Powers Memorandum available here: http://www.scottish.parliament.uk/S4_Bills/Air_Weapons_DPM.pdf
• Giving local authorities the power to regulate sexual entertainment venues in their areas, with the aim that both performers and customers benefit from a safe, regulated environment;

• Closing a loophole which allows adults to supply under-18s with alcohol for consumption in a public place;

• Extending the breadth of information available to Licensing Boards, with the aim of enabling them to make better alcohol licensing decisions;

• Removing an exemption from licensing for metal dealers with a larger turnover; banning cash payments for metal by metal dealers or itinerant metal dealers; Removing the mandatory requirement that metal dealers should not process metal for 48 hours after receiving it;

• Allowing licensing authorities to refuse private hire car licences on the basis of over-provision, and to require testing of private hire car drivers. The Bill will also remove an exemption from licensing for hire cars used on contract;

• The creation of a new role - the ‘Civic Licensing Standards Officer’ - with specific functions to provide information and guidance, check compliance, provide mediation and take appropriate action on perceived breaches of conditions to a licence provided under the 1982 Act.

DELEGATED POWERS PROVISIONS

6. The Committee considered each of the delegated powers in the Bill. At its first consideration of the Bill, the Committee determined that it did not need to draw the attention of the Parliament to the delegated powers in the following provisions:

• Section 2(4) – Requirement for air weapon certificate
• Section 8(3) – Duration of air weapon certificate
• Section 20(3) – Duration of approval of an air weapon club
• Section 39 – Guidance
• Section 55 (inserting section 9A(6) and (7) of the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005) – Duty of Licensing Boards to produce annual financial report
• Section 59 – Form etc. of communications under the 2005 Act
• Section 62(4) – Power to specify further exemptions to the licensing regime for taxis and private hire cars
• Section 65 – Acceptable forms of payment for metal
• Section 66(3) (inserting section 33B(6) of the 1982 Act) – Power to make provision about metal dealers’ records
7. At its meeting of 25 November, the Committee agreed to write to the Scottish Government to raise questions on the remaining delegated powers in the Bill. This correspondence is reproduced at the Annex.

8. In light of the written responses received, the Committee agreed that it was content with the following delegated powers and did not need to comment on them further:

- Section 36(1) – Power to prescribe fees
- Section 71 (inserting sections 45D and 45E of the 1982 Act) – Mandatory and standard licensing conditions

Recommendations

9. The Committee’s comments, and where appropriate, recommendations on the remaining delegated powers in the Bill are detailed below.

Section 37(1) – Power to make further provision

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Power conferred on:</th>
<th>Scottish Ministers</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Power exercisable by:</td>
<td>Regulations</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Parliamentary procedure:</td>
<td>Negative Procedure</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Provision

10. Section 37 enables the Scottish Ministers to make further provision for the purposes of Part 1. In particular, this enables further provision for the application and approvals process for air weapon certificates, police permits, visitor permits, event permits, or club approvals. This includes prescribing the mandatory conditions that will attach to certificates, permits, or air weapon club approvals.

11. Various other provisions state that such matters may be “prescribed”, which refers to prescription by regulations under this section. This applies at sections 4(1), 6(1), 7(2), 13(9), 14(2), 15(1), 17(6), and 18(2) and (4).

Comment

12. The Delegated Powers Memorandum explains that this power is broadly framed, to allow the “administrative minutiae” of the air weapons regime to be set out in secondary legislation. This will include, for example, setting out application forms for certificates, permits, and air weapon club approvals, setting out the standard format for these certificates, permits and approvals, and information that must accompany applications. Regulations may also set out details such as mandatory conditions to be attached to all air weapon certificates, permits and club approvals.
13. The Committee asked the Scottish Government for explanation of how this general power to make further provision for the purposes of Part 1 relates to the general ancillary powers contained in sections 75 and 76. The Committee asked what provision this power to make further provision could enable, that would not be enabled by those ancillary powers in section 75 and 76.

14. The Scottish Government responded that while this power to make further provision will enable specific matters to be prescribed as set out in sections 4(1) and 6(1) for example, section 37(2) indicates what further provision might be made using the power. For example, to prescribe the form and contents of certificates, permits and approvals under Part 1 of the bill, and the conditions that may be attached. Again for example, further provision might be made in due course to enable on-line applications.

15. The Committee accepts that the Scottish Ministers may require a power to make further provision on the matters which are set out in section 37(2)(a) and (b). That is, about the application processes under Part 1, and in relation to the certificates, permits and approvals of air weapon clubs under Part 1.

16. However the Government’s aim underlying section 37 appears (in the scheme of things) to be quite defined. It is to specify the application processes, and more provision for certificates, permits and approvals. The Committee considers that the proposal for a broad power to make any further provision for the purposes of Part 1 of the bill, combined with the ancillary powers to make provision that may be supplemental, incidental or consequential to that further provision, extends the powers to an uncertain scope. The Committee doubts whether such a broad power to make further provision is required to achieve the objective of setting out the application, certificate, permit and approval processes in regulations.

17. The Committee accepts therefore that the power may be required in principle to set out further provision for the application, certificate, permit and approval processes under Part 1 of the Bill. Such provision is set out in section 37(2)(a) and (b).

18. However, the aim of section 37 as explained in the Delegated Powers Memorandum is to enable the “administrative minutiae” of those processes to be set out in regulations. The Committee considers that it should be sufficient (to achieve that objective) to specify what types of provision are enabled - without a broad power to make any further provision for the purposes of Part 1. That specification appears to be achieved by sections 4(1), 6(1), 7(2), 13(9), 14(2), 15(1), 17(6), 18(2) and (4), and 37(2)(a) and (b) of the bill.

19. The Committee therefore invites the Scottish Government to amend the bill to remove the broad power to make any further provision, while keeping the specification of those types of provision which are enabled. If the Government considers that, as a result of removing the broad power, more types of provision would need to be specified beyond all those set out across sections 4(1) to 37(2), then these should be proposed by amendment.
Section 68(3) – Power to specify premises that are not sexual entertainment venues

Power conferred on: Scottish Ministers
Power exercisable by: Order
Parliamentary procedure: Negative

Section 68(3) – Power to provide for descriptions of performances or descriptions of displays of nudity which are not to be treated as sexual entertainment

Power conferred on: Scottish Ministers
Power exercisable by: Order
Parliamentary procedure: Negative

Provisions
20. These powers are considered together, as raising a similar issue.

21. Section 68 creates a new licensing regime for sexual entertainment venues (by adding section 45A to the 1982 Act). Section 45A(2) to (7) define what is meant by a “sexual entertainment venue”. This is any premises at which sexual entertainment is provided before a live audience for (or with a view to) the financial gain of the organiser.

22. Definitions are also supplied of ‘audience’, ‘financial gain’, ‘organiser’, ‘premises’, ‘sexual entertainment’ itself, and ‘display of nudity’. (“Any live display of nudity” is used within the definition of sexual entertainment – new section 45A(3)).

23. “Premises” for these purposes includes any vehicle, vessel or stall, but not any private dwelling to which the public is not admitted.

24. “Sexual entertainment” means “(a) any live performance, or (b) any live display of nudity, which is of such a nature that, ignoring financial gain, it must reasonably be assumed to be provided solely or principally for the purpose of sexually stimulating any member of the audience (whether by verbal or other means).”

25. “Performance” for these purposes is not further defined. “Display of nudity” is defined in new section 45A(4).

26. Sex shops are specifically not “sexual entertainment venues” as they are separately licensable under the 1982 Act (new section 45A(7)(a)).

27. The power at new section 45A(7)(b) allows the Ministers to prescribe other types of premises that are not sexual entertainment venues. New section 45A(11) of the 1982 Act allows the Ministers to prescribe descriptions of performances or “displays of nudity” that are not to be treated as “sexual entertainment” for the purposes of the licensing regime.
Comment

28. The Committee asked for an explanation why it has been considered appropriate for those powers to be drawn broadly to enable the exemption of any premises, or descriptions of performance or display of nudity, as may be specified by order, and why the powers could not be drawn more narrowly to define the “very limited circumstances” (or range of performances or displays) that might potentially be exempted. The Committee also asked why it was not possible to avoid the need for this power by using more appropriate or clearer definitions in the new section 45A of the 1982 Act, to remove the possibility that certain types of performance or display could inadvertently be caught within the licensing regime.

29. The response to the Committee has explained that the number of premises that are expected to be subject to the new licensing regime is very limited – around 20 across Scotland. It is not expected that the power to exempt particular types of premises would either be extensively used or required beyond “very limited circumstances”. It has been considered that the exact circumstances where an exemption might arise in future are hard to define, in advance of the scheme becoming fully operational. It has also been explained to the Committee that the Scottish Government would be most concerned if theatrical and other forms of artistic performance were caught by the provisions.

30. The Committee notes that the proposed powers of exemption are drawn in a “blanket” form, which technically enables other types of premises or performance to be exempted in future from the new licensing regime – beyond the types of artistic/theatrical performance which the Scottish Government envisages might require exemption, and sex shops which are separately regulated.

31. The Committee also notes, however, that policy considerations underlie how these powers are drawn. The Scottish Government’s response to the Committee has indicated that the precise nature of the types of premises or performance which might be exempted in future has not yet been proposed or identified. They are expected only to be identified once the proposed new licensing scheme has become fully operational. The Committee therefore reports on these powers, as follows.

32. The power in the new section 45A(7)(b) enables the Ministers to prescribe other types of premises, that are not sexual entertainment venues (apart from sex shops which are separately regulated). The new section 45A(11) of the 1982 Act also allows the Ministers to prescribe descriptions of performances or “displays of nudity” that are not to be treated as “sexual entertainment” for the purposes of the licensing regime.

33. The Committee has a concern that these powers may be drawn more broadly than may be required. The powers enable the exemption from licensing of any other premises (apart from sex shops), or descriptions of performance or displays of nudity. The Scottish Government has explained however that the policy intention is to possibly exempt a very limited range and number of premises, performance or display, which might include some types of theatrical or artistic performance. The intention is only to exempt a very limited range and number of premises, etc., if it transpires that they are inadvertently included within the licensing regime. The Scottish Government has explained to the Committee however that policy considerations underlie the approach taken. In particular the precise exemptions that could be required may only become apparent once the new regime is fully operational.

34. The Committee therefore draws the Government’s response on these powers (reproduced in the Annex to this report) to the attention of the Local Government and Regeneration Committee.

Provision

35. The new section 45B of the 1982 Act would require a resolution by a local authority for sexual entertainment venue licensing to have effect in their area. (That is, by applying schedule 2 of that Act as modified by section 45B to their area.) This confers power on the local authority, though not in a form of subordinate legislation. A resolution would not have effect until a specified date (which cannot be less than 1 year after the resolution is passed). It must be publicised either electronically or in a local newspaper.

36. The section also allows a local authority to determine an appropriate number of sexual entertainment venues for their area. The appropriate number so determined must be publicised then the determination must be publicised in a manner considered appropriate by the local authority.

37. Section 45B also provides that local authorities (in carrying out functions conferred by the section), must have regard to any guidance issued by the Ministers.

38. In relation to the powers in the new section 45B of the 1982 Act (inserted by section 68(3) of the Bill), the Committee is content with the powers conferred on each local authority to issue resolutions and determinations in relation to sexual entertainment venues.

39. The Committee considers, in relation to the new section 45B(7), that the Bill should provide that any guidance issued by the Scottish Ministers to local authorities must be published, and a copy laid before the Parliament on issue.

Section 76 – Ancillary provision

<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Power exercisable by:</td>
<td>Regulations</td>
</tr>

Parliamentary procedure: Affirmative where regulations textually amend primary legislation, otherwise negative

40. Section 76 confers powers to make ancillary provisions in “stand alone” regulations. The Scottish Ministers may make incidental, supplementary, consequential, transitional, transitory or saving provision, as the Ministers consider necessary or expedient for the purposes of, or in consequence of, or for giving full effect to any provision of the Act or any provision made under it.

41. The Committee queried why those additional words (in italics above) are appropriate, and can be justified by the Scottish Government as properly being added within the ancillary provision.

42. The Scottish Government in its response has indicated that the wording is considered to reflect the fact that a number of enabling powers are proposed in the Bill, to enable the detail of the regulatory schemes to be set out in subordinate legislation. The wording aims to “allow the flexibility of picking up any necessary ancillary provision that might be identified after the main set of regulations has been made”.

43. The Committee notes initially that those additional words are very unusual in bill ancillary powers. Certain recent bills which contain regulatory powers of potentially wider scope than this bill contain ancillary powers which do not have these words – for instance, the Public Services Reform (Scotland) Act 2010 and the Regulatory Reform (Scotland) Act 2014.

44. The precise effect of the additional words is not wholly clear to the Committee. It appears to the Committee that they could have the effect that ancillary provisions (including supplemental provisions) would be enabled on two levels. First, ancillary provision by regulation is enabled for the purposes of any provision in the Bill. Second, ancillary provision is enabled for the purposes of any provision made in secondary legislation under the Bill. As for example it is proposed in section 37 that regulations could make any further provision for the purposes of Part 1, it appears to the Committee that there may be doubt as to what is enabled by ancillary powers which are for the purposes of, or to give full effect to, such further provision made in regulations. The ancillary power seems to be of uncertain scope, and seems to be potentially very broad.

45. If, on the other hand, the additional words have no further effect on the ancillary powers, then in the Committee’s view it is undesirable that the wording should differ from the comparable ancillary provisions in other bills as mentioned above. The Committee considers that the Scottish Government has not justified why the additional wording in italics should be added for this particular bill.

46. Section 76(1) confers power to make incidental, supplementary, consequential, transitional, transitory or saving provision, as the Ministers consider necessary or expedient for the purposes of, or in consequence of, or for giving full effect to any provision of the Act or any provision made under it. The Committee notes that those words in italics are unusual, in comparison with recent Acts containing a comparable number of regulatory powers, or powers of potentially wider scope than contained in this bill. (See for example, the ancillary powers in the Public Services Reform (Scotland) Act 2010, the Regulatory Reform (Scotland) Act 2014, and the Reservoirs (Scotland) Act 2011).

47. The Committee considers that the Scottish Government has not sufficiently justified why those words in italics should be added within the ancillary powers in this particular bill. It therefore invites the Scottish Government to remove these words by amendment at Stage 2.
ANNEX

Correspondence with the Scottish Government—

On 25 November 2014, the Delegated Powers and Law Reform Committee wrote to the Scottish Government as follows:

Section 36(1) – Power to prescribe fees
Power conferred on: Scottish Ministers
Power exercisable by: Regulations
Parliamentary procedure: Negative Procedure

1. Section 36(1) allows Ministers to make provision for the charging of fees by the chief constable in respect of applications under Part 1 of the Bill, and otherwise in respect of the performance of functions by the chief constable under Part 1.

2. The Committee notes that Sections 32 and 35 of the Firearms Act 1968 initially specified the fee levels payable for the grant, renewal, variation etc. of a firearm certificate or shot gun certificate, or for registration as a firearms dealer, though fees are variable by order.

3. The Committee therefore asks the Scottish Government why a comparable approach is not taken, to specify on the face of the Bill the initial fee levels proposed for an application for air weapon certificate and other functions chargeable by the chief constable in connection with the air weapon licensing regime?

Section 37(1) – Power to make further provision

Power conferred on: Scottish Ministers
Power exercisable by: Regulations
Parliamentary procedure: Negative Procedure

4. Section 37 enables the Scottish Ministers to make further provision for the purposes of Part 1. In particular, this enables further provision for the application and approvals process for air weapon certificates, police permits, visitor permits, event permits, or club approvals. This includes prescribing the mandatory conditions that will attach to certificates, permits, or air weapon club approvals.

5. Specific matters may be prescribed by regulations under section 37(1), as provided for in sections 4(1), 6(1), 7(2), 13(9), 14(2), 15(1), 17(6), 18(2) and (4). Beyond that, section 37(1) enables any further provision for the purposes of Part 1 of the Bill.

6. The Committee asks the Scottish Government what is enabled by that power to make further provision, which would not (in the absence of such power) be enabled by the ancillary powers to make incidental, supplementary or consequential provisions in sections 75 and 76? How might this power be used, beyond prescribing those matters which are set out in those sections 4(1) to 18(4)?
Section 68(3) – Power to specify premises that are not sexual entertainment venues

Power conferred on: Scottish Ministers
Power exercisable by: Order
Parliamentary procedure: Negative

7. Section 68 creates a new licensing regime for sexual entertainment venues by adding section 45A to the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 (“the 1982 Act”) Section 45A(2) to (7) define what is meant by a “sexual entertainment venue”.

8. The power in section 68(3) of the bill (which adds new section 45A(7)(b) of the 1982 Act) enables the Scottish Ministers to prescribe other types of premises which would not be “sexual entertainment venues.

9. The Delegated Powers Memorandum explains that this power is intended to have a very narrow focus and would be used in very limited circumstances, if sexual entertainment venues are inadvertently caught within the licensing regime in section 68.

10. The Committee therefore asks the Scottish Government:

- Why it has been considered appropriate for this power to be drawn broadly to enable the exemption of any other premises as specified by order? Why could it not be drawn more narrowly to define the “very limited circumstances” (or range of premises) which might potentially be exempted, and

- Why is it not possible to avoid the need for this power by using more appropriate or clearer definitions in the new section 45A of the 1982 Act, to remove the possibility that certain types of venue or premises could inadvertently be caught within the licensing regime? In general terms, what might be inadvertently included?

Section 68(3) – Power to provide for descriptions of performances or descriptions of displays of nudity which are not to be treated as sexual entertainment

Power conferred on: Scottish Ministers
Power exercisable by: Order
Parliamentary procedure: Negative

11. New section 45A(11) of the 1982 Act allows the Ministers to prescribe descriptions of performances or “displays of nudity” that are not to be treated as “sexual entertainment” for the purposes of the licensing regime.

12. The Delegated Powers Memorandum explains that this power is also intended to have a very narrow focus and would be used in very limited... circumstances, if certain types of performance are inadvertently caught within the licensing regime in section 68.

13. The Committee asks Scottish Government:

- Why has it been considered appropriate for this power to be drawn broadly to enable the exemption of any descriptions of performances or descriptions of displays of nudity, as specified by order? Why could it not be drawn more narrowly to define the “very limited circumstances” (or range of performances or displays) which might potentially be exempted, and

- Why is it not possible to avoid the need for this power by using more appropriate or clearer definitions in the new section 45A of the 1982 Act, to remove the possibility that certain types of performance or display could inadvertently be caught within the licensing regime? In general terms, what might be inadvertently included?

Section 68 (inserting section 45B of the 1982 Act) – Licensing of sexual entertainment venues- local authority powers

- Power conferred on: a local authority
- Power exercisable by: Resolution/ determination
- Parliamentary procedure: None, but published

- Power conferred on: Scottish Ministers
- Power exercisable by: Guidance
- Procedure: None

14. The new section 45B of the 1982 Act confers powers by resolution upon a local authority, for sexual entertainment venue licensing to have effect in their area. The authority may resolve that Schedule 2 of the 1982 Act (as modified by section 45B) is to have effect in their area. The section also confers power on a local authority to determine an appropriate number of sexual entertainment venues for their area, which determination must be publicised by the local authority.

15. Section 45B also provides that local authorities (in carrying out functions conferred by the section), must have regard to any guidance issued by the Ministers.

16. The Committee asks the Scottish Government:

- Why those powers are appropriate, and why it is appropriate for them to be exercised by means of published resolution and determination,

- Why the power of Ministers to issue guidance is appropriate, and why there appears to be no provision for the guidance to be published but a resolution or determination by a local authority under the section would be published?
Section 71 (inserting sections 45D and 45E of the 1982 Act) – Mandatory and standard licensing conditions

Power conferred on: Scottish Ministers (for mandatory conditions)
Power exercisable by: Order
Parliamentary procedure: Affirmative Procedure

Power conferred on: a local authority (for standard conditions)
Exercisable by: Determination
Procedure: None, but published

17. Section 71 (inserting section 45D of the 1982 Act) allows the Ministers to set mandatory conditions that would apply to all licences issued under Part 3 of the 1982 Act. This includes the regime for sexual entertainment venues (inserted by section 69), and sex shops.

18. By inserting section 45E of the 1982 Act, Section 71 also confers a power on a local authority to determine standard conditions to which such licences are to be subject. Any such conditions must be published, and they must be consistent with any mandatory conditions set by Ministers.

19. The Committee asks the Scottish Government:

- Why has it been considered appropriate that any mandatory conditions set in regulations under section 37 in relation to an air weapons certificate or permit should be subject to Parliamentary scrutiny by the negative procedure, but any mandatory conditions set by regulations in relation to sex shops and sexual entertainment venues would be subject to scrutiny by the affirmative procedure?

- Why the powers conferred on a local authority in section 71 (inserting section 45E of the 1982 Act) are appropriate, and why it would be appropriately exercised by informal, published determination?

Section 76 – Ancillary provision

Power conferred on: Scottish Ministers
Power exercisable by: Regulations
Parliamentary procedure: Affirmative where regulations textually amend primary legislation, otherwise negative

20. Section 76(1) confers power to make incidental, supplementary, consequential, transitional, transitory or saving provision, as the Ministers consider necessary or expedient for the purposes of, or in consequence of, or for giving full effect to any provision of the Act or any provision made under it. The words ‘or any provision made under it’ expand the scope of the ancillary powers and are unusual, in comparison with recent Acts containing a comparable number of delegated powers, or powers of potentially wider scope than contained in this bill.
21. The Committee therefore asks the Scottish Government why, for this particular bill, that proposed expansion of the ancillary powers has been considered to be necessary?

On 3 December 2014, the Scottish Government responded as follows:

Section 36(1) – Power to prescribe fees

1. “The Committee notes that Sections 32 and 35 of the Firearms Act 1968 initially specified the fee levels payable for the grant, renewal, variation etc. of a firearm certificate or shot gun certificate, or for registration as a firearms dealer, though fees are variable by order. The Committee therefore asks the Scottish Government why a comparable approach is not taken, to specify on the face of the Bill the initial fee levels proposed for an application for air weapon certificate and other functions chargeable by the chief constable in connection with the air weapon licensing regime.”

2. When the Firearms Act 1968 was introduced it created a licensing regime with a limited range of fees, and it was common at that time to set fees on the face of primary legislation. In the intervening 46 years the legislation has been amended and expanded in various ways, and a number of new fees have been introduced. For example, rifle club approvals, visitor permits and museum authorities have all been introduced and all attract a fee. Opportunities to reduce fees in certain circumstances, such as the coterminous grant of firearm and shotgun certificates, have also been created.

3. The Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill seeks to create a new tariff of fees which broadly matches the existing fees regime. In line with more modern practice, the Scottish Government considers it appropriate to set those fees in secondary legislation. This provides the flexibility to adjust the fees as required, while striking a balance between ensuring sufficient parliamentary scrutiny and making the most effective use of valuable parliamentary resources. As stated in the Delegated Powers Memorandum at paragraph 22, fees are typically set in secondary legislation subject to the negative procedure, for example fees set under section 25 of the Marine (Scotland) Act 2010 or section 136 of the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005. In addition to this general approach, the Bill was drafted and introduced at a time of uncertainty with regard to possible changes to the existing firearms regime. On 27 November 2014 the Home Office published a consultation paper setting out a new tariff of proposed fees. This consultation, and consideration of the outcomes, will proceed in parallel with the progress of the Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill and its outcome is likely to impact on decisions by Scottish Ministers as to the level of fees to be set for air weapons matters. This again means that it would be more appropriate to set the initial fee levels in secondary legislation.

Section 37(1) – Power to make further provision

- “The Committee asks the Scottish Government what is enabled by that power to make further provision, which would not (in the absence of such power) be enabled by the ancillary powers to make incidental, supplementary or consequential provisions in sections 75 and 76? How might this power be used, beyond prescribing those matters which are set out in those sections 4(1) to 18(4)?”

5. As paragraph 24 of the Delegated Powers Memorandum to the Bill notes, section 37(1) is a broadly framed power that allows the Scottish Ministers to make the provision required to flesh out the air weapons licensing regime. Beyond prescribing specific matters for the purposes of sections 4(1), 6(1), 7(2), 14(2), 15(1), and 18(4), section 37(2) indicates what further provision might be made using this power (for example prescribing the form and content of certificates, permits and approvals granted under Part 1 and the conditions which may be attached).

6. The intention is to use these powers to set out the detail of the processes and procedures which will underpin the licensing regime, and to update these as licensing practices evolve to become more efficient. For instance, it is envisaged that firearms licensing processes generally will, in due course, move to allow for applications to be made and processed on-line, along with the associated payments of fees etc. While development is at an early stage, the powers set out in section 37 would enable the Scottish Ministers to specify requirements without the need for new primary legislation.

7. The Scottish Government considers it appropriate to provide for this power within the context of Part 1 of the Bill as it is specific to air weapons regulation. This makes it clearer for users of the legislation, and those affected by it, that the licensing regime will be underpinned by further regulatory provision. This broadly mirrors the approach taken in the existing firearms legislation where such regulatory detail is set out in the Firearms Rules 1998 as amended (with which many of those affected by Part 1 will be familiar). Regulations made under section 37 are likely to follow the Firearms Rules closely. They will, however, be subject to the negative procedure, whereas the Firearms Rules are set by the Secretary of State without being subject to any formal parliamentary procedure.

8. By contrast, the powers provided in sections 75 and 76 apply for the purposes of the whole Bill. Although section 75(1) provides for the Scottish Ministers to make ancillary provision, it is not a stand-alone power. It allows incidental, supplementary and consequential etc. provision to be made in connection with the exercise of a particular regulation-making power under the Bill, like section 37. Given the breadth of the power in section 37(1), the incidental and supplementary aspects of section 75(1) may be less significant than for other delegated powers under Part 1 (for example, section 2(4)). However, it is envisaged that it will enable the Scottish Ministers to make ancillary provision to deal with, say, any missed consequential amendments. Where any ancillary provision for the purposes of (or in consequence of) Part 1 requires to modify an enactment, the Scottish Ministers may exercise the general stand-alone power in section 76.
Section 68(3) – Power to specify premises that are not sexual entertainment venues,

- “Why it has been considered appropriate for this power to be drawn broadly to enable the exemption of any other premises as specified by order? Why could it not be drawn more narrowly to define the “very limited circumstances” (or range of premises) which might potentially be exempted, and

- Why is it not possible to avoid the need for this power by using more appropriate or clearer definitions in the new section 45A of the 1982 Act, to remove the possibility that certain types of venue or premises could inadvertently be caught within the licensing regime? In general terms, what might be inadvertently included? “

Section 68(3) – Power to provide for descriptions of performances or descriptions of displays of nudity which are not to be treated as sexual entertainment

- “Why has it been considered appropriate for this power to be drawn broadly to enable the exemption of any descriptions of performances or descriptions of displays of nudity, as specified by order? Why could it not be drawn more narrowly to define the “very limited circumstances” (or range of performances or displays) which might potentially be exempted, and

- Why is it not possible to avoid the need for this power by using more appropriate or clearer definitions in the new section 45A of the 1982 Act, to remove the possibility that certain types of performance or display could inadvertently be caught within the licensing regime? In general terms, what might be inadvertently included? “

9. The Scottish Government anticipates that the number of premises that will be subject to licensing is very limited – approximately 20 across Scotland. We do not expect the power to exempt particular types of premises to be either extensively used or required beyond ‘very limited circumstances’. The exact circumstances where such an occurrence might arise are hard to define in advance of the scheme becoming fully operational with licensing authorities actually using the regime and making decisions and businesses responding to the new environment in terms of how they conduct business.

10. In general, we would be most concerned if theatrical and other forms of artistic performance were caught by the legislation. Whilst we feel the current definitions mean this is unlikely, a delegated power to create specific exemptions provides reassurance that emerging problems can be dealt with. To achieve this, a power is taken to exclude certain types of premises from licensing and similarly to exclude particular displays of nudity.
Section 68 – Licensing of sexual entertainment venues – local authority powers

- “Why those powers are appropriate, and why it is appropriate for them to be exercised by means of published resolution and determination,

- Why the power of Ministers to issue guidance is appropriate, and why there appears to be no provision for the guidance to be published but a resolution or determination by a local authority under the section would be published?”

11. The Committee also asked about the new section 45B of the 1982 Act which confers powers by resolution upon a local authority, for sexual entertainment venue licensing to have effect in their area. The authority may resolve that Schedule 2 of the 1982 Act (as modified by section 45B) is to have effect in their area. The section also confers power on a local authority to determine an appropriate number of sexual entertainment venues for their area, which determination must be publicised by the local authority.

12. The overarching view of the Scottish Government is that licensing is best dealt with locally. Many of the civic licensing regimes from window cleaner licensing to second hand dealer licensing requires a positive decision by the local authority that licensing is appropriate for their area. Additionally, broad discretion is provided so that they can determine the conditions under which licensing takes place with reference to providing exclusions and exemptions. In that spirit, the new regime provides maximum discretion to local licensing authorities to make the decisions that are right for their area, including a broad power to control overall numbers of sexual entertainment venues by setting a ‘desirable number’ that would limit proliferation and over provision. In terms of consistency with other civic licensing regimes and in the interests of transparency it is required that these decisions are made by resolution of the council and that they are published. It is reasonable that steps are required to ensure that businesses affected by licensing should be made aware of licensing requirements.

13. The Scottish Government anticipates that guidance will be necessary to assist in the transition to the new licensing regime. In accordance with current practice, any guidance would be drawn to the attention of licensing clerks and to Parliament and would be published on the Scottish Government website.

Section 71 – mandatory and standard licensing conditions

- “Why has it been considered appropriate that any mandatory conditions set in regulations under section 37 in relation to an air weapons certificate or permit should be subject to Parliamentary scrutiny by the negative procedure, but any mandatory conditions set by regulations in relation to sex shops and sexual entertainment venues would be subject to scrutiny by the affirmative procedure?

- Why the powers conferred on a local authority in section 71 (inserting section 45E of the 1982 Act) are appropriate, and why it would be appropriately exercised by informal, published determination?”
14. Mandatory conditions for air weapon certificates, which will be set out in regulations made under section 37, are likely to be purely administrative. By way of example, the mandatory conditions for a section 1 firearms certificate issued under the Firearms Act 1968 require the certificate holder to: sign the certificate in ink; inform the police of any theft, loss or destruction of firearms or ammunition; inform the police if they change address; and store and use the firearms and ammunition securely. Mandatory conditions on air weapon certificates are likely to follow this model. Changes to these mandatory conditions are likely to be similarly administrative and functional, and it would not be the best use of Parliament’s time to consider such minor, detailed amendments.

15. Under section 71 mandatory conditions may be prescribed by order for Part 3 licences (sex shops and sexual entertainment venues) of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982. Any such order would be subject to the affirmative procedure. This is primarily because there already exists in 1982 Act sections 3A and 3B. These sections are replicated by 45D and 45E inserted by section 71. The existing sections permit Scottish Ministers to by order prescribe mandatory conditions for Part 2 licences under the 1982 Act. Such an order is to be subject to affirmative procedure. Therefore section 71 has likewise adopted the requirement for affirmative procedure to ensure that there is consistency throughout the 1982 Act with regards to similar provisions related to Part 2 and Part 3 licences.

16. The power provided in 45E to allow local authorities to determine standard conditions for Part 3 licences (sex shops and sexual entertainment venues) is appropriate in that it offers local licensing authorities the means to conveniently impose a standard condition across all similar premises throughout its areas rather than having to individually vary the conditions on a case by case basis for each such premise. This power replicates that existing in section 3B of the 1982 Act, which is applicable in respect of Part 2 licences. It is considered that the local authority is best placed to determine how details of standard conditions applicable to particular licence types should be publicised and disseminated.

Section 76 – ancillary provision

- “The Committee therefore asks the Scottish Government why, for this particular bill, that proposed expansion of the ancillary powers has been considered to be necessary?”

17. The scope of this power is broad in reflection of the fact that the Bill confers a number of enabling powers to enable the detail of the regulatory schemes to be set out in subordinate legislation. Given this, it is considered necessary that we have sufficient flexibility to develop over time the detail of the various regulatory regimes. It is important to bear in mind that the section 76(1) power is a stand-alone power, unlike section 75(1) (b) which only allows ancillary provision to be included in substantive regulations under a particular power. Therefore section 76(1) allows the flexibility of picking up any necessary ancillary provision that might be identified after the main set of regulations has been made.
Finance Committee

Report on Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill

The Committee reports to the lead committee as follows—

Introduction

1. The Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill ("the Bill") was introduced on 14 May 2014. Its Financial Memorandum (FM) can be found at page 41 of the accompanying Explanatory Notes.

2. The Committee received 14 responses to its call for evidence on the FM, around half of which were from local authorities and licensing boards. Responses were also received from organisations representing air weapons users and vendors and from the Scottish Taxi Federation.

3. At its meeting on 4 February the Committee took evidence from the Scottish Government Bill Team. The Official Report of the evidence session is available here: http://www.scottish.parliament.uk/parliamentarybusiness/CurrentCommittees/29824.aspx

The Financial Memorandum

4. The FM states that—

“The purpose of the Bill is to protect public safety by creating a new licensing regime for air weapons and to improve aspects of locally led alcohol and civic government licensing in order to preserve public order and safety, reduce crime, and to advance public health. It will give local communities the power to regulate sexual entertainment venues in their areas.”

5. In oral evidence the Bill Team suggested that—

“Any additional costs associated with the bill should be read against the wider cost to society of the activities that are regulated or, indeed, the risks associated with the regulated behaviour.”¹

6. The FM sets out the Bill’s estimated financial implications under the following headings—

¹ Scottish Parliament Finance Committee, Official Report, 4 February 2015, Col 23
Part 1 – Air Weapons

Part 2 – Alcohol

Part 3 – Civic Licensing
  o Taxis and private hire cars
  o Metal dealers
  o Public entertainment venues
  o Sexual entertainment venues
  o Miscellaneous and general.

Potential for Legal Challenges

7. Beyond providing comments on specific parts of the Bill, several respondents highlighted the potential for legal challenges and the FM’s expectation that any additional costs would be recouped through the charging of fees in written evidence.

8. Dumfries and Galloway Licensing Boards (DGLB) for example, stated that—

   “Licensing authorities should feel confident in their decisions; they should not be put in a position of feeling the need not to make a decision on the grounds that an appeal is likely and that defending the appeal would impact on operational budgets. This situation could arise with:-

   • the introduction of overprovision of Private Hire Vehicles;
   • withdrawal of the exemption for “contract” vehicles;
   • the introduction of the giant Metal Dealers into the licensing system by withdrawal of Exemption Certificates;
   • pressure to start Public Entertainment licensing to cover theatres and for amenity including other forms of entertainment.”

9. In response to suggestions from the Committee that “the cost of appeals had not been properly factored in,” the Bill Team stated that whilst the possibility of an appeal existed, the likelihood of it being successful was “a different matter” which could, like the costs of an appeal, “be ascertained only on a case-by-case basis.”

10. The Committee acknowledges the difficulty in providing concrete estimates of costs resulting from potential appeals but emphasises that Standing Orders require FMs to provide best estimates of costs, their timescales and margins of uncertainty.

Part 1 – Air Weapons

11. The Bill introduces a licensing regime for air weapons which will be administered by Police Scotland. The FM states that “there will be a long lead in time for full commencement” to ensure maximum awareness of the legislative changes and to allow for unlicensed air weapons to be handed in before their possession becomes a criminal offence. Those who hand in unlicensed air weapons will not be entitled to compensation.

---

2 Scottish Parliament Finance Committee, Official Report, 4 February 2015, Col 32

12. The FM states that this part of the Bill is broadly based on the licensing of more powerful weapons through the Firearms Act and emphasises that, as such, “much of the infrastructure, knowledge and experience required” is already in place. As the licensing authority, the majority of costs relating to setting-up and maintaining the licensing service are expected to fall on Police Scotland.

13. The FM anticipates that certain central costs will fall on the Scottish administration in two broad areas. The first relates to the provision of funding to help meet initial set-up costs whilst the second relates to informing the public about the new regime.

Applications and fees

14. The Bill provides for Police Scotland to charge a fee when an application is made in order to help offset the costs. The fee will be charged regardless of whether the application is successful or not and the sums payable will be set out in secondary legislation.

15. The BASC noted that the Government supported the notion that “fees would be payable regardless of whether or not a certificate is granted.” The BASC did not support this approach, noting that it was not currently the case with regard to applications for firearms or shotgun certificates.

16. SARPA also disagreed with this proposal and recommended that “there should either be no fee or a very low fee to encourage maximum participation and it should be no more than £20.”

17. A table setting out possible fees for individual applications is provided after paragraph 104 of the FM. It contains examples of fees “set at or close to” current firearms fee levels as well as indicative fee levels based on the estimated costs of processing applications. The table indicates possible fees of £50 or £85 respectively in relation to the granting of airgun certificates.

18. The FM assumes a total of 500,000 air weapons in Scotland as the basis for its estimates but considers that the number of new applications in the first year will be significantly lower than this figure. The underlying reasons for this assumption include the likelihood that a considerable number of air weapons are likely to be inoperative or unused and that significant numbers of those who do use them will possess more than one air weapon and/or already hold certificates for more powerful firearms. The FM uses totals of ten, twenty and thirty thousand new applications as the basis for its estimates and describes the rationale behind its assumptions and estimates in paragraphs 46 to 54.

19. The Scottish Air Rifle and Pistol Association (SARPA) agreed that there could be around 500,000 air weapons in Scotland but suggested that in the first licensing round—

“given the number of farms and smallholdings who would own airguns as their primary pest control option, we would expect that a more realistic total licence number would be between 100,000 and 150,000 inclusive of the estimated 40,000 who also hold firearms certificates at the moment."

20. When asked to expand upon the FM’s figures in oral evidence, the Bill Team explained that they related to “brand-new applicants to the system who do not have more powerful weapons.” The Bill Team also pointed out that certificates did not relate to single air weapons but that “one, two or any number” could be held on a single certificate.³

21. The FM states that the Government proposes that the new system “will not be unduly burdensome.” As such, Police Scotland is not expected to require additional staff (over and above those already employed to service the current firearms licensing regime) in order to process new applications although the FM acknowledges that there are likely to be “peaks and troughs” in the cycle.

22. The FM expects that “extensive, detailed background checks and home visits will be necessary only in a very small proportion of cases” and assumes that only 2% of applications would require a more detailed process including a home visit whilst 98% would follow the standard process. On average, the FM suggests that the cost of processing a new air weapons application would be around £85.55.

23. On this basis the FM estimates the total processing costs for new applications to be £855,500, £1,711,000 and £2,566,500 respectively over the range of ten, twenty and thirty thousand new applications. However, it states that these costs “would be spread across the normal five-year licensing period” and provides a table which sets out the estimated annual profile of application costs over the five years from 2015-16 to 2020-21.

24. The FM also estimates that there would be 40,000 applications over the same period for coterminous certificates covering both air weapons and more powerful firearms. The additional costs are estimated at £10 per application which, it is anticipated, would be fully recovered.

25. The British Association for Shooting and Conservation (BASC) accepted that the cost of processing applications from existing certificate holders would be “greatly reduced” as the authorities would already hold much of the required information. However, it pointed out that this did not mean that the “good reason” would be known or that the applicant would automatically satisfy the criteria for an air weapons license, meaning the processing of such applications might not be as straightforward as suggested by the FM.

26. SARPA stated that it felt the FM “may have vastly underestimated the true full cost of processing applications and renewals for certificate applications.”

27. The BASC stated in its response to the Government’s original consultation that “the cost that will be associated with the introduction of an air weapon licensing scheme will be very high” and that it would be “hugely disruptive to the already overstretched Firearms Licensing administrations in Scotland.”

³ Scottish Parliament Finance Committee, Official Report, 4 February 2015, Col 28
28. The BASC went on to state that “the recommendations that we made relating to the financial costs have largely been ignored and the assumption that most applications for an air weapon certificate (98%) will be dealt with without the need for further inquiry is, we feel, misleading.”

29. Expanding on this, the BASC stated—

“The assumption is made that 98% of applications will only require 1.2 hours of processing by administrative staff, with no enquiry officer involvement. Given that there is a “good reason” requirement for obtaining an air weapon certificate we find it hard to believe that 98% of those applying for a certificate will be able to provide a “good reason” that will be processed (and confirmed) within 1.2 hours and will not require enquiry officer investigation.”

30. The BASC pointed out that a large proportion (perhaps 50%) of applicants would give informal target shooting in their own gardens as their good reason. However, the Policy Memorandum stated that “Ministers do not believe that target shooting in such an environment (in gardens or other urban of highly populated settings) should generally be acceptable unless the applicant can satisfy the Chief Constable as to the safety and other arrangements in place to ensure that shooting can be carried out without risk to the public”.

31. On that basis, the BASC suggested that up to 50% of applications would require a “detailed process including home visit” as opposed to the 2% estimated in the FM. It went on to state that—

“This would result in the average cost of each application rising to £118.90, an increase of almost 40%. This would mean that the cost, spread over five years, for 10,000 applications would be £1,189,000 and for 30,000 applications £3,567,000.”

32. SARPA agreed with the BASC that the assumption that most applications would be dealt with without the need for further inquiry was “unrealistic” as it expected that site visits would be required in a significant proportion of cases. It also suggested that—

“Until the requirements for good reason and level of checks are clearly explained we doubt the estimated costs are truly reflective of the full financial burden.”

33. The Gun Trade Association (GTA) drew attention to what it saw as “unanswered questions concerning the definition of ‘fit person’, ‘good reason’, ‘conditions’ and further legislative queries”, stating that “until these are answered, the GTA feels that the estimated costs and savings set out in the Financial Memorandum are unable to be verified.”

34. When asked to expand on the basis for its figures the Bill Team stated that there were an estimated 60,000 to 65,000 existing certificate holders for other types of firearms and it was expected that many of them would also have air weapons. As “many of the security issues” would already have been looked at in licensing those holders…a large number of people would already be taken out of the system.”
35. The Bill Team further stated that there would be “a relatively light touch” for new applicants and Police Scotland had told the Government that a “disclosure-style arrangement, under which they will check an applicant’s basic criminal history should suffice for the majority of applicants.”

36. On that basis, the Bill Team confirmed that, whilst there may be some variance as the legislation took effect, Police Scotland was of the view that “2 per cent is the right level for a full home visit and security check.”

37. The lead committee may wish to seek further detail of how the FM’s expected number of home visits corresponds to the BASC’s suggestion that a large proportion of applicants’ “good reason” will be informal target shooting in their gardens.

38. The Bill Team also explained that the figure of £85.55 for processing a new air weapons licence application had been based on figures used by the Home Office and the Association of Chief Police Officers. The Bill Team further noted that the BASC had been part of the working group that agreed those figures and suggested that there was “a generally accepted basis for the background workings behind the figures.” However, the Bill Team did confirm that the figures would be reviewed “later in the year as we start to look at fee levels.”

Enforcement

39. The FM states that “it is not the intention that Police Scotland should pursue unlicensed air weapons as a significant new priority”. As such, it states that “prosecutions for licensing offences are therefore likely, in the majority of cases, to be pursued in parallel with other offences.”

40. The FM states that “the estimated maximum additional enforcement, testing and reporting costs” to be incurred by Police Scotland would amount to £90,000 per annum (an estimated 500 cases per year at £180 per case).

41. The BASC questioned whether this figure implied that the Police expected to seize 500 weapons as a result of non-compliance and asked how this figure corresponded to FM’s suggestion that the courts might have to deal with between 50 and 100 new summary cases per year and between two and five solemn proceedings.

42. In response to this query, the Bill Team explained that it was likely that the police may find air weapons in the course of investigating other crimes or complaints. Under the new legislation, the police would be able to seize and test air weapons “as part and parcel of another investigation.” Therefore—

“The figure of 500 tests relates to the number of air weapons that could be taken in such investigations but there might be only 50 to 100 brand-new prosecutions simply for an air weapons licensing offence.”

6 Scottish Parliament Finance Committee, Official Report, 4 February 2015, Col 26
7 Scottish Parliament Finance Committee, Official Report, 4 February 2015, Col 28
43. The BASC noted that the FM did not appear to identify any possible costs arising from appeals against refusals to grant a certificate or revocation of one. The Bill Team acknowledged this omission in oral evidence and undertook to look at the issue “and, perhaps, revisit it”. However, the Bill Team did confirm that whilst it was difficult to estimate the number of appeals, the proposed “light-touch system” along with the “very small” number of refusals under the existing firearms regime led it to expect there would not be many.

44. The lead committee may wish to invite the Cabinet Secretary to confirm whether the Government intends to revisit the issue of possible costs arising from appeals.

Shooting clubs

45. The Bill sets out a framework for the inspection and approval of shooting clubs’ premises which will be supplemented by detailed guidance. The FM states that a fee to help meet the costs of the approval process will be payable by the club but expects the overall impact of this to be “very small”.

46. The GTA stated that—

“There will certainly be extra costs associated with the Bill, in particular with requirements from secondary legislation on issues such as security, storage, club memberships, the setting up of clubs, events and recreational facilities. Until the Bill, is finalised, no costs for these issues can be estimated.”

47. SARPA highlighted the potential increase in costs for airgun clubs and suggested that many would have to move from small, low cost sites to larger commercial sites in order to fulfil the necessary criteria and accommodate the expected increase in membership.

48. SARPA highlighted its “genuine concern” that additional costs might result in some clubs being forced to close if they could not afford to upscale and improve their facilities to cope with demand from “private shooters forced to join clubs to maintain their right to shoot.”

49. When asked whether it was likely to be the case that law-abiding citizens might grudgingly pay the licence fee, whilst those at whom the Bill was mainly targeted would not bother to do so, with the result that the Bill would only impact adversely on shooting clubs and their members, the Bill Team agreed that there would be an impact on such clubs. However, whilst the fee had yet to be set, it was expected to be “a relatively small price compared with the cost of a club or with the amount that somebody pays for some other interest.”

Compensation

50. SARPA also noted that some enthusiasts whose license applications were refused may be forced to surrender what is currently legally held (and sometimes expensive) equipment but may not receive any compensation for doing so.

9 Scottish Parliament Finance Committee, Official Report, 4 February 2015, Col 27
51. When asked whether the absence of compensation might make it less likely that air weapons would be handed in, the Bill Team explained that its expectation was that there would be a high number of low-value weapons in lofts or “at the back of people’s garages.” As the legislation did not amount to a ban on air weapons and people would be free to sell them on privately the policy position was that compensation would not be provided.

Part 2 – Alcohol Licensing

52. The Bill contains nineteen separate provisions in relation to alcohol licensing and the FM states that “their overall financial impact is likely to be close to neutral.”

53. The FM states that the Bill will “provide Licensing Boards with powers to consider a broader range of information when making licensing decisions” including the reintroduction of a “fit and proper” test in relation to the issue or continued holding of a premises or a personal licence. The FM also states that the Government’s intention is to make the system self-funding and the Bill will require Licensing Boards to be transparent about their costs “to demonstrate that the fees they set are based upon cost recovery.”

54. The FM states that “local authorities will continue to bear the costs of administering the licensing process, and they recoup their costs through the licensing fees.” The FM notes that “Licensing Boards are empowered to set their own fees as long as they do not exceed the maximum limits.”

55. However, West Dunbartonshire Council (WDC) stated that its calculations showed that it was—

“unable to recoup its costs. The legislation sets a maximum fee which licensing boards can charge and, even though ours is charging the maximum fee, we incur an annual deficit of almost £89,000. West Dunbartonshire Licensing Board is in fact only able to recover 52.8% of the expenditure to administer the licensing regime. It is therefore very misleading to suggest that licensing boards have the power to ensure that licensing is self-funding.”

56. The FM notes that the recent Review of Alcohol Licensing Fees carefully considered issues relating to fees “but determined that there was insufficient information to determine whether Licensing Boards were recovering their costs, or making a surplus/deficit”. As such it was not possible for the review to make firm recommendations on the level of fees and it recommended instead that Licensing Boards be put under a statutory duty to report on their income and expenditure.” The Bill requires the publication of an annual financial report and the FM states that any additional costs arising from this “should be minimal.”

57. South Ayrshire Council (SAC) questioned the form and purpose of such reports and stated that it was “not wholly accurate” to say that fees are based on cost recovery—

“In our view a significant level of cross-subsidy exists within the licensing fee structure, where some aspects generate a surplus of income while others bear a net cost. This would become clear in the publication of an annual financial report."

58. WDC suggested that such reports might be beneficial to it in publicising the deficit it incurred. Noting that expenditure might be calculated differently by different local authorities, WDC suggested that—

“It would be helpful if the Scottish Government was to publish guidance for licensing boards (and councils for civic licensing) that sets out the wide range of costs that boards and councils should be recovering e.g. employee costs (incl. national insurance and superannuation), managerial costs, legal and committee administration costs, overheads and central support costs.”

59. COSLA also commented on the reports, stating—

“There are some concerns that the introduction of a duty for Boards to publish a financial report may be administratively difficult for local authorities depending on current accounting procedures. COSLA does recognise that this increases the transparency and would provide evidence for any future fee increases.”

60. In oral evidence, the Bill Team explained that—

“The idea was to finesse and improve the existing legislation, not to impose substantial additional burdens on licensing boards. On that basis, we felt that it was reasonable to say that the costs would be broadly neutral.”

61. The Bill Team went on to state that it would be “sympathetic to the idea of amending the existing limits on the licensing fees,” but had undertaken “detailed work in reviewing them and got scant response from the local authorities”

62. On that basis, the Bill Team felt that the Government did not currently have enough evidence on which to increase fee levels.

63. However, the Bill Team explained that—

“Inserting a statutory duty on local authorities to report on their income and expenditure will give us a basis on which to understand all the local authorities’ costs—in relation to both expenditure and time—in order to allow the fees to be increased, if that is felt to be appropriate.”

64. SAC also expressed “particular concerns” that the fee for occasional licenses had not been reviewed, stating that the current fee was insufficient to cover the cost of work involved in processing a licence application.

65. In response to this point, the Bill Team confirmed that its fees review had found the current occasional licence fee limit of £10 to be insufficient. It further confirmed that as the current fee level was set by secondary legislation and was outwith the scope of the Bill, “we feel that we can increase the occasional licence fee without extensive further work, and fairly soon.”

66. The FM states that it is difficult to estimate any additional costs for Licensing Boards as a result of the “fit and proper person” test because “it largely depends on the manner in which they deploy these powers within the exercise of their existing functions.” However, the FM anticipates that “any additional cost is likely to be minimal.”

67. DGLB stated that the Bill’s proposals appear to foster better use of resources, “at least at first flush”. However, it went on to draw attention to a number of issues relating to the revocation of personal licences which, it considered, would lead to increased uncertainty and the potential for more hearings and appeals resulting in the need for additional resources. In particular, the Board suggested that “drawing on the licensing objectives within the ‘fit and proper person’ criterion would likely lead to complicated and lengthy appeals.”

68. Commenting on the potential for appeals against decisions made under the “fit and proper person” provisions, DGLB stated that—

“Boards should feel confident in their decisions; the Boards should not be put in a position of feeling the need not to make a decision on the grounds that an appeal is likely and that defending the appeal would impact on operational budgets.”

69. Glasgow City Council Licensing Board (GCCLB) echoed this point stating that, in its view—

“the current drafting of the bill creates uncertainty as to the scope of the test and, unless corrected, will expose Boards to increased litigation costs until case law provides necessary judicial clarity.”

70. However, in oral evidence, the Bill Team stated that the fit and proper person test was not a completely new concept and had been framed—

“with reference to the overarching licensing objectives for the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005. Those objectives are broadly framed and put certain constraints on decisions that the local authority can make. Were local authorities to ignore those constraints, they would still be bound by the overall scope of the bill.”

71. Both DGLB and GCCLB drew attention to the Brightcrew vs. City of Glasgow Licensing Board decision which found that a Board may only have regard to matters flowing directly from the sale of alcohol and should not seek to regulate other activities.

72. The Bill Team, however, stated that the Brightcrew decision related to a board making decisions that went beyond the scope of the Bill. It further stated that—

---

13 Scottish Parliament Finance Committee, Official Report, 4 February 2015, Col 30
“Referencing the fit-and-proper-person test to the overarching licensing objectives ensures that decisions that the board makes are constrained within the scope of the 2005 Act.”

73. The lead committee may wish to seek confirmation from the Cabinet Secretary of whether the Government intends to increase the current occasional licence fee limit of £10 via secondary legislation and, if so, of the proposed timescales for doing so.

74. The Committee welcomes the proposed introduction of a statutory requirement for Licensing Boards to report on their income and expenditure. The lead committee may wish to seek clarification of the expected timescales for reviewing current licence fee limits following publication of these reports.

Part 3 – Civic Licensing

75. The FM states that the Bill “seeks to improve the effectiveness of the civic government licensing schemes administered by local authorities” in respect of a number of topics.

Taxis and private hire cars

76. The FM states that the Bill “will give local authorities the power to refuse to grant private hire car licences on grounds of overprovision.” It also extends the testing of taxi drivers to include private hire car drivers and removes the “contract exemption”, bringing hire cars used on contract work into the licensing regime.

77. The FM notes that licensing authorities will incur costs as a result of having to develop a policy in relation to overprovision. This would likely require a public consultation which would result in costs to the authority. The FM states that the costs of such a consultation could “vary significantly” depending on its methodology, but gives an indicative figure of £10,000.

78. The power to refuse a private hire licence on the grounds of overprovision is discretionary although the FM suggests that if a local authority chose to undertake an assessment of private hire services, it might incur costs of £15,000 to £20,000 every three years. These costs would be recouped through license fees but the FM does not expect the majority of licensing authorities to undertake such assessments, instead carrying them out only where there is a perceived problem of overprovision.

79. However Glasgow City Council Licensing Authority (GCCLA) suggested that “it would be extremely complex to measure demand in the private hire sector” and that “any model used to make the necessary assessment (and likely to conduct future ongoing assessments) would require to be developed by a specialist third party.”

80. SAC estimated the cost of assessing overprovision to be “in the region of £30,000 to £50,000 on a tri-annual basis.” It went on to state that “as this could result in legal challenges, it is a policy decision unlikely to be adopted by SAC.”

81. SLC and DGLB agreed with this perspective, with SLC suggesting that the costs in the FM “would be a minimum figure” and estimating that such an assessments would cost it “in excess of £20,000” whilst DGC stated that these costs “appear low”.

---

14 Scottish Parliament Finance Committee, Official Report, 4 February 2015, Col 34

82. The Scottish Taxi Federation (STF) stated that the FM had “got things badly wrong” and questioned how the FM’s estimate had been reached as no suitable methodology or measuring tool currently existed. It further stated that it would be “difficult if not impossible” to devise such a tool and that it would therefore be “equally difficult to quantify the cost of such a measurement tool assuming it is possible.”

83. The STF further stated that the FM’s example of measurement of significant unmet demand (SUD) related to demand for taxis as opposed to private hire cars and stated that such SUD surveys “can and do cost more than the £15,000 to £20,000 suggested.”

84. In response to questioning from the Committee, the Bill Team acknowledged that at present there was no equivalent test for private hire cars and explained that the figure in the FM (based on work by Napier University to assess unmet demand for taxis) was provided by way of example.

85. The Bill Team went on to confirm that any assessment of unmet demand for private hire cars would be a “completely new test” and it had “not yet devised a procedure to determine what the appropriate demand would be.” However, the Bill Team confirmed that it would be happy to “work with local licensing authorities and relevant stakeholders to develop an appropriate methodology.”

86. Whilst accepting that the figure of £15,000 “might be on the low side” for larger authorities such as the City of Edinburgh or Glasgow City Council, the Bill Team also stated that, a lot of local licensing authorities have very small numbers of private hire cars and would therefore incur lower costs as a result of any assessment of unmet demand.

87. The FM also notes that the Bill might result in greater numbers of court challenges to refusals to grant a licence. However, as the Government expects any costs to be recovered from licence holders through fees, the FM states that the overall cost impact on local authorities “should, therefore, be neutral.”

88. The FM acknowledges that individuals and businesses may incur additional costs through possible increases to fees. New applicants who are refused a licence would lose the money spent on their application and could incur further costs (for example, in legal fees) should they choose to challenge the decision.

89. The STF highlighted the potential impact on its members stating—

“This therefore, do not accept that the anticipated cost of court challenges to the question of over provision, which in our view are more likely as a result of the weakness in the legislation, should simply be passed back to licence fees.”

---

15 Scottish Parliament Finance Committee, Official Report, 4 February 2015, Col 31
90. The STF went on to suggest that “licence holders are in effect being punished for a system that the Scottish Government acknowledge in advance, is more likely to be challenged.”

91. When asked what assessment it had conducted on whether the legislation might result in increased licence fees, the Bill Team stated that this was difficult to gauge as overprovision in relation to private hire cars was a discretionary power. However, the Bill Team noted that the evidence did not appear to indicate that local authorities were keen to use the additional power and confirmed “if local authorities decide not to use it, no additional cost will be incurred.”

92. When asked whether, in the event that a local authority chose to use the power, the associated costs would be charged back to private hire operators through licence fees or whether they would be charged through the licensing regime in general, the Bill Team was unable to confirm which was the case, stating—

“I am not sure whether local authorities restrict the cost of that to the existing taxis or whether they spread it across the private hire regime. I suspect that it is really an issue for the local authority to decide on.”

93. The Committee welcomes the Bill Team’s commitment to “work with local licensing authorities and relevant stakeholders to develop an appropriate methodology” in respect of assessing unmet demand for private hire cars. The lead committee may wish to seek further detail regarding the Government’s proposals for doing so.

94. The lead committee may wish to seek clarification of whether any associated costs would be expected to be recouped from private hire car operators or from the licensing regime in general.

Public entertainment venues

95. The FM states that the Bill will abolish “Theatre Licenses” and transfer theatres to “a lighter touch” licensing scheme in order to afford greater flexibility to local licensing authorities. Local authorities are able to charge reasonable fees to cover their costs so the impact of the Bill on them is expected to be neutral.

96. The FM states that “the proposal represents a decrease in regulatory burden overall” as a discretionary regime will allow a flexible approach to be taken. The FM points out that there is “wide variation in licensing fees from one authority to another” and notes that the cost of a public entertainment licence “may be less or more than that currently paid.”

97. DGC stated that those authorities not currently licensing places of public entertainment would need to undertake a “substantial and detailed process” to assess whether there is a need to licence theatres as places of public entertainment. It further stated that those that already do would incur “significant press publication fees for statutory notices if the authority’s resolution is to be widened to include theatres.”

16 Scottish Parliament Finance Committee, Official Report, 4 February 2015, Col 36
17 Scottish Parliament Finance Committee, Official Report, 4 February 2015, Col 36
98. GCCLA agreed with this point suggesting that “there will be costs associated with the amending and publishing of the public entertainment resolution.” It urged the Government to introduce “provisions to allow the necessary amendment to the resolution to be expedited” which, it suggested, would “reduce the costs to theatre owners etc.”

99. When asked how the “decrease in regulatory burden” could be reconciled with additional costs in some areas, the Bill Team explained that the decreased regulatory burden would benefit theatres themselves which could apply for a single licence instead of both a theatre licence and a public entertainment licence which some might currently hold.

100. In response to GCCLA’s suggestion that the nine-month period between a local authority passing a resolution and it coming into force should be expedited, the Bill Team explained that, whilst it was “not especially wedded to that period”, it was reasonable for some time to elapse before an announcement comes into force.

101. The Bill Team confirmed that it would not expect “a substantial and detailed process to be required”, in respect of theatres due to the “strong assumption that they should fall under public entertainment licensing”.

102. Whilst recognising that costs would be incurred as a result of the existing requirement to publish classified adverts when changing a public entertainment resolution, the Bill Team noted that this would only cost “a few hundred pounds” and would be incurred only twice during the process. The Bill Team also confirmed that applications from a number of separate venues could all be captured within a single advert.

Sexual entertainment venues

103. The Bill creates a new licensing regime for sexual entertainment venues. Again, the FM states that as local authorities are able to charge reasonable fees to cover their costs, the impact of the Bill on them is expected to be neutral.

104. However, the FM notes that some local authorities might receive no fee income from sexual entertainment venues (i.e. where none exist in a local authority area) but could incur tens of thousands of pounds in legal fees should an operator challenge a decision not to grant a licence.

105. SAC confirmed that it may find itself in this position as it receives “no fee income against which to offset the cost of appeals against unsuccessful applications.”

106. GCC expressed similar concerns stating—

“In short, if the licensing regime for SEVs is properly implemented with the points raised by the Licensing Authority and other respondents taken account of, then the costs will be minimal. However, if there is a lack of clarity or guidance from the Scottish Government, then the Licensing Authority expects there could be significant litigation and therefore cost to the Authority.”

---

107. GCC went on to suggest that “much of the uncertainty surrounding potential litigation costs can be reduced by ensuring that clear guidance is issued detailing what factors a Licensing Authority may have regard to in determining SEV applications and in setting any policy on the number of venues in its area.”

108. In response to questioning from the Committee the Bill Team explained that the scope for appeals was limited as there were “only about 17 to 20" sexual entertainment venues in Scotland.”

109. When asked whether it had considered the scenario of new licence applications being rejected in addition to those venues already in operation given that Standing Orders require an FM to contain best estimates of costs and savings arising from a piece of legislation, the Bill Team stated that as a result of the low numbers of such venues currently in existence, it was “reasonable to infer that demand for licences was limited”.

110. The Bill Team further stated that—

“the cost of any appeals will depend on how far they are pursued through the courts. Going to the inner house of the Court of Session would be expensive. We have never had a better estimate of what exactly an appeal would cost than the figure of tens of thousands of pounds.”

CONCLUSION

111. The lead committee is invited to consider this report as part of its scrutiny of the Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill.

21 Scottish Parliament Finance Committee, Official Report, 4 February 2015, Col 33
Consultation
Did you take part in any consultation exercise preceding the Bill and, if so, did you comment on the financial assumptions made?
1. BASC did contribute to the consultation preceding this Bill in 2013. In our response we did comment on the financial assumptions made. We did state that “the cost that will be associated with the introduction or an air weapon licensing scheme will be very high” and that it would be “hugely disruptive to the already over-stretched Firearms Licensing administrations in Scotland”. We recommended that there should either be no fee or that it should be set at no more than £20, to ensure a maximum take up. We also disagreed with contention that a fee should be charged for each air weapons application, whether successful or not.

If applicable, do you believe your comments on the financial assumptions have been accurately reflected in the FM?
2. We do not believe that our comments on the financial assumptions have been accurately reflected in the FM. The recommendations that we made relating to the financial costs have largely been ignored and the assumption that most applications for an air weapon certificate (98%) will be dealt with without the need for further inquiry is, we feel, misleading.

Did you have sufficient time to contribute to the consultation exercise?
3. Yes.

Costs
If the Bill has any financial implications for your organisation, do you believe that they have been accurately reflected in the FM? If not, please provide details.
4. The Bill does not have direct financial implications for BASC, apart from the amount of staff time that has been spent, firstly through the SFCP and now dealing with the Parliamentary progress of the Bill. BASC members will be financially affected if and when they apply for an Air Weapon Certificate.

The indirect financial implications from the Bill for BASC are the costs associated with advising members, and others, on the implications for their own recreational shooting or, for trade members, on the implications for their businesses.

Do you consider that the estimated costs and savings set out in the FM are reasonable and accurate?
5. We do not consider that the estimated costs in the FM are accurate for the following reasons.

   a) We agree that there could be an estimated 500,000 air weapons in Scotland.
b) We accept that there could be between 10,000 and 30,000 new applications for air weapon certificates (or more) in the first licensing round, along with applications from some 40,000 existing certificate holders. (We accept that the costs of processing these applications should be relatively small.)

c) The SHOGUN IT system is not yet fully functional for all existing certificates in Scotland, though expected to be functional by mid-October. How easy it will be to incorporate air weapon certification remains questionable until it is proven with existing certificates.

d) Our main concerns relate to the “Processing Costs” outlined from Para. 66 onwards. An assumption is made that “extensive, detailed background checks and home visits will be necessary only in a very small proportion of cases”. The assumption is made that 98% of applications will only require 1.2 hours of processing by administrative staff, with no enquiry officer involvement. Given that there is a “good reason” requirement for obtaining an air weapon certificate we find it hard to believe that 98% of those applying for a certificate will be able to provide a “good reason” that will be processed (and confirmed) within 1.2 hours and will not require enquiry officer investigation.

It is assumed that the majority of air weapon owners use them for informal target shooting in their garden and we note that the Policy Memorandum states (para. 64) “Ministers do not believe that target shooting in such an environment (in gardens or other urban of highly populated settings) should generally be acceptable unless the applicant can satisfy the Chief Constable as to the safety and other arrangements in place to ensure that shooting can be carried out without risk to the public”. With this in mind we feel that a large number, possibly 50% of applications, will give such informal target shooting as their good reason. We do not know what decision-based mechanism could be used to determine whether this would be acceptable or not without enquiry officer involvement and/or a home visit. Instead of 2% of applications requiring “detailed process incl. home visit” we feel that this would be nearer to 50%. This would result in the average cost of each application rising to £118.90, an increase of almost 40%.

This would mean that the cost, spread over five years, for 10,000 applications would be £1,189,000 and for 30,000 applications £3,567,000.

e) We agree that the costs for applications from existing certificate holders should be greatly reduced due to much of the required information already being in place. What will not be known, however, is the good reason for requiring an air weapon certificate. Just because a person already has a shot gun or firearm certificate does not mean that they would automatically satisfy one or more of the good reason requirements for an air weapon certificate. This raises the issue of considerably more enquiry officer hours being required to attend to the applications of this group of possibly 40,000 applicants than was otherwise envisaged, at greater expense, and exceeding the anticipated full-cost recovery (Para. 104.)
Finally, the costs associated with processing are predicated upon Enquiry Officer and Administrative Officer costs. In Para. 62 it is noted that the current licensing service employs 66 administrative staff (including enquiry officers) and 25 police officers. The costs for the serving police officers will be greater than those for administrative staff but these are not featured in the summary of the anticipated costs.

f) We note that in Para. 78 it is estimated that some 500 air weapons could be tested, following investigation or seizure after the introduction of this legislation. This implies to us that both Police Scotland and the Scottish Police Authority anticipate low compliance rates with the licensing requirements if that number of air weapons are anticipated being seized. We are not sure how this equates with the much smaller number of summary prosecutions under the licensing provisions of the Bill (between 50-100 per annum, Para. 85) and how this then affects the costs anticipated in the Tables in Para. 88.

g) In Para. 99 reference is made to the “well-established system of visitor permits for firearms and shotguns under current firearms legislation”, implying that those coming to Scotland with an air weapon will be used to this form of permit. The majority of those coming to Scotland with air weapons, whether for competitive target shooting, pony club activities or for sporting shooting, will come from the rest of Great Britain. Visitor permits are neither currently necessary nor available for other GB residents so this will be a new regime for such visitors. For many, particularly groups of young people, this additional cost will act as a disincentive.

h) We note that Scottish Government supports the notion that fees will be payable “regardless of whether or not a certificate is granted”. (Para. 101.) This is not the case with applications for either firearms or shotgun certificates and this may encourage applications for these certificates rather than air weapon certificates.

If applicable, are you content that your organisation can meet any financial costs that it might incur as a result of the Bill? If not, how do you think these costs should be met?

6. BASC will be able to meet the financial costs incurred as a result of this Bill. These will include informing members of changes to legislation and advising them on their applications for air weapon certificates.

Does the FM accurately reflect the margins of uncertainty associated with the Bill’s estimated costs and with the timescales over which they would be expected to arise?

7. While we feel that the FM identifies the margins of uncertainty, and the timescales, it underestimates the true costs that will be associated with, in particular, processing of certificate applications.

Wider Issues
Do you believe that the FM reasonably captures any costs associated with the Bill? If not, which other costs might be incurred and by whom?
8. The only costs not identified will be those relating to appeals by those either refused an air weapon certificate or those whose certificates are revoked. Costs will be incurred by licensing staff and Police Scotland legal services as well as by the appellant (or organisation financially supporting their member’s appeal) and by Sheriff Courts. We believe that a provision should be entered for such costs. Current appeals can incur legal costs (from both sides) of up to or greater than £20,000.

Do you believe that there may be future costs associated with the Bill, for example through subordinate legislation? If so, is it possible to quantify these costs?

9. We cannot identify any future costs at this stage.
1. COSLA would like to offer the following observations in response to the Local Government and Regeneration Committee’s call for evidence on the Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill.

2. The Bill was considered by the Community Well-Being Executive Group which generally welcomed the intent and content. Several aspects of the Bill are discussed in detail below.

COSLA Vision

3. The single focus of COSLA and local authorities is to improve outcomes for communities. Local government is at the heart of the government’s focus on prevention, service integration and “place”, effective reform and strong local services are more important now than ever. National governance should enhance the ability of local government to achieve this as effectively as possible and deliver those benefits to communities thorough:
   - Empowering local democracy
   - Integration not centralisation led by community planning
   - Focus on outcomes not inputs
   - Local democracy needs to be at the heart of improvement and accountability

Air Weapons

4. COSLA have no concern over the proposal to require licenses for air weapons, provided that sufficient time is given to individuals to apply for licenses and the charge is proportionate. There is however a question as to whether licensing air weapons will deliver the outcome desired, as the main misuse of air weapons is generally from those under 18 this misuse may not be prevented as it is the parents who will hold the license and those under 18 may continue to have access.

Alcohol Licensing

5. COSLA welcomes the return of the “fit and proper person” test in relation to alcohol licensing along with the clarity provided by the changes to how Boards can consider potential overprovision in their areas as this will help in protecting and improving public health, addressing some of the concerns raised around the risk to Boards of legal challenge.

6. There are some concerns that the introduction of a duty for Boards to publish a financial report may be administratively difficult for local authorities depending on current accounting procedures. COSLA does recognise that this increases the transparency and would provide evidence for any future fee increases.

7. COSLA agrees that the requirement for Boards to publish a policy statement within 18 months of a local government election, lasting up to 5 years will result in the policy statements better reflecting the current views of the Licensing Boards.
8. COSLA would also request that this Bill is used as an opportunity to make an amendment to the functions of a Licensing Standards Officer (LSO) as defined in the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 to explicitly make it clear that local authorities can give LSO’s additional functions if they see fit. This would be used to facilitate LSO’s enforcing the Gambling Act (2005), which due to drafting errors, has not been possible in Scotland as it would enable LSO’s to be authorised officers for the purpose of gambling enforcement using the Advice Note which was published by the Gambling Commission. The issue of gambling in Scotland is of concern to both local and national government and we therefore hope that the Scottish Government will support an amendment of this nature to enable enforcement of the Gambling Act in Scotland.

Civic Licensing
Taxis and Private Hire Cars

9. COSLA welcomes the power to refuse to grant private hire car licenses on the grounds of overprovision where a local authority choses to do so and the extension of taxi driver testing to include private hire car drivers.

10. The removal of the contract exemptions to the licensing and regulation of taxis and private hire cars has received a mixed response from local authorities. Those that support the felt that it was necessary to ensure the quality of the service and those who it is provide it. However, those opposed, generally rural councils, felt that bringing contracts into the regime would disincentivise or prevent current providers from continuing to operate, leaving a gap in market or driving up costs. It is therefore requested that the Committee consider giving local authorities the flexibility to decide whether they feel contracts should be exempt within their own areas.

Sexual Entertainment Venues

11. Licensing and regulation is an important work stream in COSLA’s anti-human trafficking work and we welcome the creation of a separate licensing framework for sexual entertainment venues. This new framework gives local authorities proper powers to effectively regulate lap dancing clubs, tackle forced prostitution and minimise the potential for trafficking in human beings.

12. COSLA welcomes the ability of local authorities to determine the number of sexual entertainment venues permitted in their local area, including the power to set the number to zero. We view this as a major advantage in the regulation of such premises and for local decision-making and accountability in Scotland more widely.

13. By giving local licensing authorities capacity to consider local conditions and manage the total number of permitted venues, councils will be able to act on community preference and develop a position that reflects local attitudes. COSLA supports this flexibility which gives autonomy to local councils and supports local democracy.

14. Additionally having oversight of sexual entertainment venues will allow local authorities to regulate more effectively and promote standards that help protect the safety of those working in these establishments. It will also give strength to local authorities’ response to human trafficking with better opportunity to identify exploitative practices.

15. However, COSLA is concerned that the exemption for venues that host sexual entertainment three occasions or less per year will create a loophole and allow organisers to evade licensing by using multiple venues. Trafficking is transitory in nature, often with victims moved from place to place for the purpose of sexual exploitation. This exemption would allow for this occur, unchallenged and is unhelpful in Scotland’s strategic response to human trafficking. COSLA would therefore request that this concession be removed or that local authorities are able to set a lower number of occasions that trigger the requirement for a license if they chose.

Civic Licensing Standards Officer

16. Several Local Authorities have shown support for this proposal due to the success of the Licensing Standards Officer role, however there is the potential that this new role may require some restructuring of current posts with potential cost implications for local authorities. Moreover, although the Bill states these posts are to be funded through license fees this may be difficult to calculate and any increase in fees is likely to affect SME’s more. This has resulted in several local authorities objecting the new role. Presently the enforcement of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act is managed across various regulatory services, including Trading Standards and Environmental Health where appropriate, it is suggested that this role should not be mandatory for local authorities.

17. In summary, although COSLA are broadly supportive of the main aims of the Bill we have some concerns around the proposal to remove contract exemptions for licensing of taxies and private hire cars and the introduction of a mandatory Civic Licensing Standards Officer, we feel that both of these should be optional for local authorities so they can best reflect local circumstances and structures.

18. COSLA also request than the opportunity be taken to amend the functions of Licensing Standards Officers to facilitate the enforcement of the Gambling Act in Scotland, this will assist local authority in addressing some of the concerns around problem gambling in communities.

4. Taxi and Private Hire Licensing
The FM notes that the introduction of overprovision of Private Hire Vehicles will incur substantial ongoing costs to licensing authorities:

- Preparation of a resilient Overprovision Policy and maintenance of that policy;
- Instruction of an Assessment of Private Hire,

Costings of £10000 and £15-20000 respectively appear low. Although the FM is correct in pointing out that the licensing system should be self-financing and that extra costs would be recouped from fees, these are financially very difficult times and any substantial fee increase would impact on business feasibility and quality of service.

Similar concerns arise from the introduction of the discretion to insist that Private Hire Drivers as well as Taxi Drivers pass a knowledge test.

The Scottish Government’s insistence that this discretion should only be used when there are knowledge problems within the Area’s Private Hire Driver community highlights an issue which the licensing authority will be left to resolve: except for complaints the Private Hire trade is not clearly visible; the hire is pre-booked with forewarning of the destination.

With the introduction of mandatory Civic Licensing Standards Officers a level of enforcement will be expected of licensing authorities. This expectation is likely to increase within ever reducing resources. A completely invisible area is that of the presently exempted provision of services under a contract for the exclusive use of the vehicle for a period of not less than 24 hours. Removal of this exemption whereby a licence will be required for the vehicle and each driver, failing which an offence is being committed, would be an enforcement nightmare and resource intensive. The fact that Scottish Ministers could introduce a Statutory Instrument to create an exemption for unintended
Abolition of the licensing of Theatres
It is to be noted that the inference that theatres would likely be covered by a Public Entertainment Licence, fails to appreciate fully that Theatre licensing is presently mandatory whereas it is up to each licensing authority to determine whether to license places of public entertainment and if so what type of entertainment to cover.

The licensing authority will require information upon which to decide whether there is a need to license theatres as places of public entertainment. For authorities not licensing places of public entertainment this will be a substantial and detailed process. For those presently with PEL, the process may be less detailed but will include significant press publication fees for statutory notices if the authority’s resolution is to be widened to include theatres.

Introduction of licensing of Sexual Entertainment Venues
As it will be a decision of the licensing authority whether to license Sexual Entertainment Venues, this will involve detailed consultation, Committee and officer time and press publication fees for statutory notices and Committee and officer time in preparing and issuing a policy on the appropriate number of SEVs for its area, which limit may be zero. It is extremely unlikely that an authority would receive an application: most of the wasted effort would be avoided by making it a mandatory licensed activity.

Introduction of Civic Licensing Standards Officers
For many authorities this will be a new appointment or appointments. The licensed trade would not be appreciative of the significant increases which this and other proposals would necessitate. Many changes will attract extra costs as the practicalities of the text become discernible.

Do you consider that the estimated costs and savings set out in the FM are reasonable and accurate?

If applicable, are you content that your organisation can meet any financial costs that it might incur as a result of the Bill? If not, how do you think these costs should be met?

6. Licensing authorities should feel confident in their decisions; they should not be put in a position of feeling the need not to make a decision on the grounds that an appeal is likely and that defending the appeal would impact on operational budgets. This situation could arise with:-

- the introduction of overprovision of Private Hire Vehicles;
- withdrawal of the exemption for “contract” vehicles;
- the introduction of the giant Metal Dealers into the licensing system by withdrawal of Exemption Certificates;
- Pressure to start Public Entertainment licensing to cover theatres and for amenity including other forms of entertainment.
Does the FM accurately reflect the margins of uncertainty associated with the Bill’s estimated costs and with the timescales over which they would be expected to arise?

4. As stated in the FM many of the proposals could, at least at first flush, appear to foster better use of resources:-

- Five year period for Licensing Policy Statement (However a lot can happen in five years; Supplementary Licensing Policy Statements may very well be necessary during the 5 year period; this would reduce any suggested savings)
- Review on convictions for relevant or foreign offences not being mandatory
- The requirement on Councils to produce a Financial Statement on income and expectations will supplement financial discipline and reporting: the foundations will be within the ABB framework.
- Personal Licence Holders: Presently where a Personal Licence Holder fails to comply with the refresher training requirements the consequent revocation of the Personal Licence would mean that 5 years would have to elapse before reapplying. The Bill’s proposal is to allow immediate reapplication. The FM expects reduced costs and reduced business disruption although possible savings cannot be accurately qualified. What this fails to appreciate is that –
  - The Board would still have to revoke the Personal Licence
  - More importantly the proposal negates any need for undertaking refresher training: the Personal Licence is revoked; if the person is a designated Premises Manager, revocation of the Personal Licence is an event allowing 6 weeks operation without the authority of a DPM
  - meantime the person can reapply for a Personal Licence immediately; the only check on this could be Police comments and recommendation for refusal of the application but on what grounds? The legislation would allow the immediate reapplication and the breach of the previous licence received its statutory sanction-revocation. There would be increased uncertainty, more hearings with real potential for appeals meaning additional resources.
Although the FM is correct in stating that it is difficult to estimate additional costs for Boards if the fit and proper person criterion were introduced it should be recognised that:

- This is not the return of the Pre 2005 Act ‘fit and proper person’ but one enmeshed within the Licensing Objectives.
- Although this might appear appropriate, there is an existing ground for refusal relating the impact on the Licensing Objectives. Drawing on the Licensing Objectives within the ‘fit and proper person’ criterion would likely lead to complicated and lengthy appeals; the likelihood is that the logic of the leading case of Brightcrew will prevail and unless focussed squarely on the sale of alcohol, the Board’s assessment of fit and proper would irrelevant.

8. It is recommended that the Scottish Courts Service should be looking to increase training of members of the Judiciary and officers of Court on Alcohol Licensing Law both civil and criminal. The need for this was very recently indicated in the criminal appeal by Terrence Feeney.

Lady Paton commented ‘we extend sympathy to the justice for several reasons:

- The complexity of the legislation and its amendments
- A party litigant presenting has own case who did not draw attention to [the due diligence defence]
- The Crown’s apparent failure specifically to mention the[the due diligence defence]
- The fact that the justice’s legal assessor does not appear to have drawn his attention to the [the due diligence defence]’
The reference to the complexity of the legislation and its amendments draws attention to the fact that numerous Acts have amended the Licensing (Scotland) 2005 and the Bill will greatly add to this: only the sophisticated and well-resourced can hope to keep their understanding of the 2005 Act complete and up to date. This is an obstacle to access to justice for many party litigants. A consolidating statute is overdue

Consultation

Did you take part in any consultation exercise preceding the Bill and, if so, did you comment on the financial assumptions made?
1. Yes but no comment on financial assumptions.

If applicable, do you believe your comments on the financial assumptions have been accurately reflected in the FM?
2. Not applicable.

Did you have sufficient time to contribute to the consultation exercise?
3. Yes.

Costs

If the Bill has any financial implications for your organisation, do you believe that they have been accurately reflected in the FM? If not, please provide details.
4. Yes. Cost impact would generally be minimal, although potentially additional costs re: taxi over-provision and Civic Licensing Standards Officer are possible as indicated by the Bill. It is anticipated any impact would be recoverable from fees.

Do you consider that the estimated costs and savings set out in the FM are reasonable and accurate?
5. As best can be determined at this time from information provided in bill.

If applicable, are you content that your organisation can meet any financial costs that it might incur as a result of the Bill? If not, how do you think these costs should be met?
6. Yes, costs anticipated to be minimal - can be met via fee recovery.

Does the FM accurately reflect the margins of uncertainty associated with the Bill's estimated costs and with the timescales over which they would be expected to arise?
7. Yes.

Wider Issues

Do you believe that the FM reasonably captures any costs associated with the Bill? If not, which other costs might be incurred and by whom?
8. Yes, subject to areas noted in bill as being unable to quantify.

Do you believe that there may be future costs associated with the Bill, for example through subordinate legislation? If so, is it possible to quantify these costs?
9. Potentially - but unable to quantify until subordinate legislation known.
FINANCE COMMITTEE CALL FOR EVIDENCE

AIR WEAPONS AND LICENSING (SCOTLAND) BILL:

FINANCIAL MEMORANDUM SUBMISSION FROM

GLASGOW CITY COUNCIL

This response to the Financial Memorandum in respect of the Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill details the views of both the City of Glasgow Licensing Board (“the Board”) and Glasgow City Council’s Licensing Authority (“the Licensing Authority”). Each response is clearly marked to indicate which body is responding.

COSTS – the Board

In relation to the “fit and proper person” test, the Financial Memorandum suggests that “any additional cost is likely to be minimal”. The Board would broadly agree that a properly implemented “fit and proper person” test would result in minimal increased costs however, as detailed in our response to the consultation, the view of the Board is that the current drafting of the bill creates uncertainty as to the scope of the test and, unless corrected, will expose Boards to increased litigation costs until case law provides necessary judicial clarity. In particular further drafting of the bill must clarify the relationship between the “fit and proper person” test and the Brightcrew v City of Glasgow Licensing Board decision (i.e. that the Board can only have regard to matters flowing directly from the sale of alcohol).

The Licensing Board also notes that the Financial Memorandum intimates local authorities are able to retrieve any increases costs through licensing fees. Whilst the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 provides an open-ended fee structure to recover costs the 2005 Act does not. The Licensing (Fees) (Scotland) Regulations 2007 provides a fee structure that, in practical terms, caps the amount of income that a Licensing Board can realistically expect to recover each year. If the uncertainties around the “fit and proper person” test and its relationship with Brightcrew are not addressed then Boards may face increased litigation costs with no realistic way to recover those costs.

The Licensing Board notes and welcomes the proposal to remove the requirement for Licensing Boards to review a licence if the holder gains a conviction. This will save the Board’s time and resources as it notes that there are mechanisms in place to ensure that any noteworthy convictions are brought to its attention by either Licensing Standards Officers or Police Scotland.
The Licensing Authority notes the Financial Memorandum’s position that a Licensing Authority may choose to carry out an assessment of private hire services but that such an assessment would only carried out when there is a perceived problem of overprovision.

Many licensing authorities including Glasgow already adopt a limitation of numbers policy in respect of the issuing of Taxi Licences. The 1982 Act requires authorities to review any such limit at least once every three years. When carrying out a review the authority can make reliable assessments using factors such the demand at taxi ranks in their area or using data supplied by the night time economy.

The Licensing Authority is of the view that an analogous approach could not be implemented to assess private hire demand. Given the differences in operation between the taxi and private hire car sectors it would be extremely complex to measure demand in the private hire sector. Any model used to make the necessary assessment would require to be developed by a specialist third party and it likely that ongoing assessments would require to be carried out by this party. The costs of development and continuous assessment would then be passed onto the trade through increased fees.

Should these provisions be introduced then this Authority would, in order to ensure that no unnecessary costs are passed to applicants, encourage the Scottish Government to provide clear guidance on what factors would reliably evidence the overprovision of private hire services in a local authority area.

Sexual Entertainment Venues

The Licensing Authority welcomes the introduction of a new licensing regime for sexual entertainment venues (“SEVs”) however it does share the concern intimated by the Financial Memorandum that fee income may not cover the potentially substantive legal costs incurred in the litigation of applications refused by the Authority. In short, if the licensing regime for SEVs is properly implemented with the points raised by the Licensing Authority and other respondents taken account of, then the costs will be minimal. However, if there is a lack of clarity or guidance from the Scottish Government, then the Licensing Authority expects there could be significant litigation and therefore cost to the Authority.

The Licensing Authority would respectfully suggest that much of the uncertainty surrounding potential litigation costs can be reduced by ensuring that clear guidance is issued detailing what factors a Licensing Authority may have regard to in determining SEV applications and in setting any policy on the number of venues in its area. In particular the Scottish Government must provide clear guidance to local authorities as to whether sexual entertainment venues that are currently licensed under the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 should be subject to any quasi-grandfather rights in the determination of their applications for SEV Licences.
Civic Licensing Standards Officers

The Licensing Authority cannot, at this stage, comment fully as to the cost implications of the creation of CLSOs. While in general terms the role would have to be funded by the Licensing Authority and costs recovered by way of licensing fees, the Authority will require further details of the CLSOs’ powers and duties. Once it has this clarity, then the Licensing Authority will carry out a review of its existing staff and its existing resources. At this stage it will take a decision as to the most appropriate way to staff this role. However, the Licensing Authority notes that it does not funds to meet an additional LSO’s salary and if such a post was to be created then, as noted above, the Licensing Authority would need to absorb the costs itself and reclaim the monies through licensing fees moving forward.

Licensing of theatres etc

As noted in the Licensing Authority’s consultation response, it welcomes the repeal of the Theatres Act 1968 and the move to have it considered as part of the public entertainment regime. However, the Licensing Authority would suggest that there will be costs associated with the amending and publishing of the public entertainment resolution.

The Licensing Authority would use this opportunity, to again, urge the Scottish Government to introduce provisions to allow the necessary amendment to the resolution to be expedited. This would help reduce the costs to theatre owners etc.

WIDER ISSUES – the Board and the Licensing Authority

Both the Board and the Licensing Authority are aware that they are under a statutory obligation (albeit it from different sources) to recover only their costs through licensing fees in relation to the licensing regime. As such, both bodies agree with the contention contained within the Financial Memorandum that any costs should be recovered by way of the licence fees. However, it should be noted that it is difficult, if not impossible, for the bodies to pre-emptively raise fees at this point to take into account the Scottish Government’s proposals and therefore when introduced the bodies will need to initially absorb the cost of CLSOs or overprovision assessments. Both the Board and the Licensing Authority cannot effectively cost or evaluate the resources needed until there is certainty as to the legislation’s effect and implementation. Therefore, there will always be an overlap where the bodies will rely upon Glasgow City Council in meeting the costs incurred by new legislation.
Consultation
Did you take part in any consultation exercise preceding the Bill and, if so, did you comment on the financial assumptions made?
1. Yes, both the Council and the Licensing Board of North Ayrshire responded to the original consultation, but there was no comment on the financial assumptions.

If applicable, do you believe your comments on the financial assumptions have been accurately reflected in the FM?
2. N/A

Did you have sufficient time to contribute to the consultation exercise?
3. Yes.

Costs
If the Bill has any financial implications for your organisation, do you believe that they have been accurately reflected in the FM? If not, please provide details.
4. Yes. The financial implications outlined in the Bill can, in most cases, be addressed by increasing fees in line with cost recovery, subject to the statutory maximum limits. The exception to this is the new statutory requirement to employ a Civic Licensing Standards Officer.

Do you consider that the estimated costs and savings set out in the FM are reasonable and accurate?
5. Yes

If applicable, are you content that your organisation can meet any financial costs that it might incur as a result of the Bill? If not, how do you think these costs should be met?
6. The financial implications outlined in the Bill can, in most cases, be addressed by increasing fees in line with cost recovery, subject to the statutory maximum limits. The exception is the new statutory requirement to employ a Civic Licensing Standards Officer which will be an additional cost. This cost should be provided for by the Bill.

Does the FM accurately reflect the margins of uncertainty associated with the Bill’s estimated costs and with the timescales over which they would be expected to arise?
7. This is difficult to assess but would appear to be reasonably reflected.
Wider Issues

Do you believe that the FM reasonably captures any costs associated with the Bill? If not, which other costs might be incurred and by whom?

8. No. The Bill requires an annual statutory financial return to gather and assess information on each of the licensing objectives. This could result in some increased costs relating to a time-recording system, given that expenditure and income requires to be analysed by activity.

Do you believe that there may be future costs associated with the Bill, for example through subordinate legislation? If so, is it possible to quantify these costs?

9. It is not easy to estimate this with any certainty at present; it is felt that the FM is fairly comprehensive.
Consultation

Did you take part in any consultation exercise preceding the Bill and, if so, did you comment on the financial assumptions made?

1. SARPA did contribute to the consultation preceding this Bill in 2013. In that response we commented on the financial assumptions made. We did state that “the cost that will be associated with the introduction or an air weapon licensing scheme will be very high” and that it could place a massive burden on the already over-stretched Firearms Licensing administrations in Scotland. We recommended that there should either be no fee or a very low fee to encourage maximum participation and it should be no more than £20. We disagreed with contention that a fee should be charged for each air weapons application, whether successful or not.

If applicable, do you believe your comments on the financial assumptions have been accurately reflected in the FM?

2. We do not believe that our comments on the financial assumptions have been accurately reflected in the FM. The recommendations that we made relating to realistic financial costs have largely been ignored. Given the number of non-club and non FAC airgun owners the assumption that most applications for an air weapon certificate (98%) will be dealt with without the need for further inquiry is unrealistic.

Did you have sufficient time to contribute to the consultation exercise?

3. Yes.

Costs

If the Bill has any financial implications for your organisation, do you believe that they have been accurately reflected in the FM? If not, please provide details.

4. No, In order to meet new demand for new airgun users who wish to continue their hobby we (SARPA) would need to move most clubs from small sites which in most cases are low cost or gratis to larger commercial site to accommodate the increase in membership, currently we have only two such clubs and those are barely financial viable if we are to sustain Air gun shooting as a low cost accessible sport. Our membership would have to carry the individual licence cost as well as additional facility costs and “Club” or “Facility” licence cost.
Do you consider that the estimated costs and savings set out in the FM are reasonable and accurate?

5. We do not consider that the estimated costs in the FM are accurate for the following reasons.

   a) We agree that there could be an estimated 500,000 air weapons in Scotland.

   b) We accept that there could be between 10,000 and 30,000 new applications for air weapon certificates (or more) in the first licensing round though this number does seem underestimated given the number of farms and smallholdings who would own airguns as their primary pest control option, we would expect that a more realistic total licence number would be between 100,000 and 150,000 inclusive of the estimated 40,000 who also hold Firearms certificates at the moment.

   c) An assumption is made that “extensive, detailed background checks and home visits will be necessary only in a very small proportion of cases”. This would indicate that the level of checks will be very basic, in which case is the licence of little benefit, or the level and volume of checks has been vastly underestimated.

   Until the requirements for good reason and level of checks are clearly explained we doubt the estimated costs are truly reflective of the full financial burden.

   The most numerous use for airgun use is informal target practice on private lands, given by ministers would have informal target shooting abolished unless the Chief constable is satisfied that the arrangements “can be carried out without risk to the public” indicating some form of site visit by a competent officer would be required, we estimate this would take significantly more that the proposed 1.5 hrs.

   d) We agree that the costs for applications from existing certificate holders should be greatly reduced due to much of the required information already being in place, these individuals have already be deemed safe and competent with firearms though any “good reason” for holding an additional air weapon may well differ from other weapons they may hold.

   e) No clear indication of process or requirements has been made for licencing of facilities or Clubs, as most of the clubs are private and run on private grounds it may well be that this requirement will not be applicable but where it is there may be the requirement for detailed visits beyond what is expected for an individual.

   If applicable, are you content that your organisation can meet any financial costs that it might incur as a result of the Bill? If not, how do you think these costs should be met?

6. SARPA as an association of clubs has a genuine concern that the additional and costs may well force some of its clubs to close, the increase in club demand will require a wholesale upscaling of the organisation by private shooters forced to Join clubs to maintain their rights to shoot. While we are working with other bodies to try and source suitable sites to establish more clubs these, come at significant financial cost not only for the lands but also for the additional requirements to meet both able bodied and disability shooter requirements. The same level of public finance support should be made available for airgun shooters as is made available to other minority sports.

Does the FM accurately reflect the margins of uncertainty associated with the Bill’s estimated costs and with the timescales over which they would be expected to arise?

7. While the FM have identified reasonable timescales, by virtue of sheer numbers and time police time commitment we feel FM may have vastly underestimated the true full cost of processing applications and renewals for certificate applications.

Wider Issues

Do you believe that the FM reasonably captures any costs associated with the Bill? If not, which other costs might be incurred and by whom?

8. The FM has captured the sources of costs, court and legal costs may require additional attention.

Given the value of equipment held by some individuals which is held perfectly legally at this point in time, and that they may not receive any compensation for the surrender of their equipment, many may well challenge any decision through the courts should they be refused a licence.

Do you believe that there may be future costs associated with the Bill, for example through subordinate legislation? If so, is it possible to quantify these costs?

9. We cannot identify any future costs at this stage.

AIR WEAPONS AND LICENSING (SCOTLAND) BILL:

FINANCIAL MEMORANDUM SUBMISSION FROM

THE SCOTTISH TAXI FEDERATION

Consultation

Did you take part in any consultation exercise preceding the Bill and, if so, did you comment on the financial assumptions made?
1. The Scottish Taxi Federation confirms it took part in the consultation exercise preceding the above Bill. It further confirms that at no stage of the consultation did the question of financial assumptions arise and therefore we were not required to make any comment.

If applicable, do you believe your comments on the financial assumptions have been accurately reflected in the FM?
2. Since we were not asked for and therefore made no comment the answer is no.

Did you have sufficient time to contribute to the consultation exercise?
3. Yes.

Costs

If the Bill has any financial implications for your organisation, do you believe that they have been accurately reflected in the FM? If not, please provide details.
4. The Bill does not directly affect the Scottish Taxi Federation as an organisation. However, in light of the Government’s comments that additional costs should be charged to licence fees, it is clear that our members will be directly affected.

Do you consider that the estimated costs and savings set out in the FM are reasonable and accurate?
5. As stated in (4) above, the additional costs referred to may not affect our organisation directly, but it is clearly the case that individual members will be affected. We therefore, do not accept that the anticipated cost of court challenges to the question of over provision, which in our view are more likely as a result of the weakness in the legislation, should simply be passed back to licence fees.

If applicable, are you content that your organisation can meet any financial costs that it might incur as a result of the Bill? If not, how do you think these costs should be met?
6. Licence holders are in effect are being punished for a system that the Scottish Government acknowledge in advance, is more likely to be challenged.

Does the FM accurately reflect the margins of uncertainty associated with the Bill’s estimated costs and with the timescales over which they would be expected to arise?
7. This is difficult to answer since the assumptions are just that and not based on factual evidence.
Wider Issues

Do you believe that the FM reasonably captures any costs associated with the Bill? If not, which other costs might be incurred and by whom?

8. In terms of the Civic Licensing Section, the FM does not capture factual costs mainly by its admission that these are based purely on assumptions.

Do you believe that there may be future costs associated with the Bill, for example through subordinate legislation? If so, is it possible to quantify these costs?

9. Yes, but these cannot be quantified in advance.

10. The FM suggests that the likely cost to a Local Authority of undertaking an assessment of private hire car services might be in the region of £15 to £20 k every three years. How is it possible to arrive at such a conclusion?

There currently exists no methodology or measurement tool by which a Local Authority can measure that the numbers of private hire cars operating within its Licensing area is sufficient or otherwise. This of course means that one will have to be devised and with respect, such a measurement tool, because of the nature of the private hire operation, will be difficult if not impossible to achieve. It will therefore be equally difficult to quantify the cost of such a measurement tool assuming it is possible.

11. The courts have long accepted the SUD measurement used to determine demand for taxis, is in fact a legitimate methodology and have also decreed that 3 years between such surveys may be considered too long. It is also a fact that SUD surveys can and do cost more than the £15 to £20 k suggested. For example, it is our belief that in the case of Edinburgh City, the last SUD report may well have exceed these figures by some distance.

In Summary

The Scottish Taxi Federation is of the view that the FM has got things badly wrong in terms of its cost assumptions. It may be that it has been assumed that the cost of administering the over provision section and the possible court challenges, will only be charged back to the Licence fees for private hire car operators. If this is the case, then the legislation needs to make this clear otherwise Local Authorities will be free to make their own interpretations and as has been proven all too often in the past, these do not always work out as anticipated.

AIR WEAPONS AND LICENSING (SCOTLAND) BILL:
FINANCIAL MEMORANDUM SUBMISSION FROM SOUTH AYRSHIRE COUNCIL

Consultation
Did you take part in any consultation exercise preceding the Bill and, if so, did you comment on the financial assumptions made?

1. Licensing officers have previously submitted responses to consultation exercises on alcohol licensing, taxi and private hire car licensing, licensing of metal dealers, and licensing of sexual entertainment venues. The primary focus of these responses was licensing, not financial matters. However, the Scottish umbrella licensing group SOLAR will also provide a collective response to this consultation. Finance officers have not been involved in any previous consultation exercise.

If applicable, do you believe your comments on the financial assumptions have been accurately reflected in the FM?

2. Not applicable.

Did you have sufficient time to contribute to the consultation exercise?

3. Yes.

Costs
If the Bill has any financial implications for your organisation, do you believe that they have been accurately reflected in the FM? If not, please provide details.

4. We make the following comments:

ALCOHOL
- Licensing objectives & statements of policy: existing attributable costs are small and therefore any saving derived would be minimal.
- Greater powers for Licensing Boards & Police: this would likely result in more or longer hearings, however any additional costs would be minimal.
- Removal of automatic requirement for a hearing: existing attributable costs are small and therefore any saving derived would be minimal.
- Licensing Boards annual financial report: What purpose would this report serve? What format would it take? Would it require to be audited? In our experience, where fees are linked to the rateable value of premises this bears little correlation to the amount of work involved with a licensed premises and accordingly it is not wholly accurate to say that fees are based on cost recovery. For example, the charge for an occasional licence comes nowhere near to covering the cost of the associated administration process. In our view a significant level of cross-subsidy exists the within licensing fee structure, where some aspects generate a surplus of income while others bear a net cost. This would become clear in the publication of an annual financial report. For smaller authorities, the need to separately allocate costs and staff time would also introduce an additional administrative burden at a time when local authorities are seeking efficiencies.
TAXIS & PRIVATE HIRE CARS
- Overprovision: South Ayrshire Council estimate the cost of assessing overprovision to be in the region of £30,000 - £50,000 on a tri-annual basis. As this could result in legal challenges, it is a policy decision unlikely to be adopted by South Ayrshire Council.
- Testing of private hire care drivers: Drivers are currently required to undergo training at their own expense. This requirement would be maintained.

METAL DEALERS
- Metal theft is an issue within South Ayrshire.

PUBLIC ENTERTAINMENT VENUES
- The abolition of theatre licenses will have no financial implications.

SEXUAL ENTERTAINMENT VENUES
- At present, South Ayrshire has only one venue which is licensed for adult entertainment, although it is not currently trading. Consequently, there is no fee income against which to offset the cost of appeals against unsuccessful applications.

MISCELLANEOUS & GENERAL
- Civic licensing standards officers: The role of civic licensing standards officer is currently performed within South Ayrshire Council, however the introduction of this Bill may likely increase the demand for this role. This could require the Council to increase the full-time equivalent complement with no additional funding or income available to do so.

Do you consider that the estimated costs and savings set out in the FM are reasonable and accurate?
5. Refer to Q4 above.

If applicable, are you content that your organisation can meet any financial costs that it might incur as a result of the Bill? If not, how do you think these costs should be met?
6. No. Local authority funding continues to face pressures and Councils do not generally possess sufficient budget to create additional posts (e.g. Civic Licensing Standards officers) or to fund additional costs arising from legal challenges (e.g. private hire car overprovision, sexual entertainment venues, etc). On the assumption that additional central funding would not be made available, it would then fall to either local authorities or the licensed trades to fund the difference; however these business tend to operate at low margins, particularly in the current economic climate, therefore it may be preferable not to further burden these industries.

Does the FM accurately reflect the margins of uncertainty associated with the Bill’s estimated costs and with the timescales over which they would be expected to arise?
7. No comment.
Wider Issues

Do you believe that the FM reasonably captures any costs associated with the Bill? If not, which other costs might be incurred and by whom?

8. We consider that the Police Service of Scotland may incur additional costs from the introduction of a ‘fit and proper person’ test.

Do you believe that there may be future costs associated with the Bill, for example through subordinate legislation? If so, is it possible to quantify these costs?

9. None that we are currently aware of.

Other comments

Further to above, South Ayrshire Licensing Board is particularly concerned that the fee for occasional licences has not been reviewed. The current fee is insufficient to cover the cost of the work involved to process the licence application. In 2013/14 the Board processed over 660 occasional licence applications.
Consultation

Did you take part in any consultation exercise preceding the Bill and, if so, did you comment on the financial assumptions made?
1. No.

If applicable, do you believe your comments on the financial assumptions have been accurately reflected in the FM?
2. Not Applicable.

Did you have sufficient time to contribute to the consultation exercise?
3. Not Applicable.

Costs

If the Bill has any financial implications for your organisation, do you believe that they have been accurately reflected in the FM? If not, please provide details.
4. In order for the Council to produce an annual report of income and expenditure for Alcohol licensing fees, staffing costs, property costs etc are required to be split over three diverse areas – Liquor, Civic and Registration. There may be additional costs as a result of remedial work required, particularly in preparing the first report. Other costs will be the additional staff time required to prepare the annual report.

Any savings found as a result of the need to review the Policy Statement every five years as opposed to every three years would be minimal, particularly if the Board feels the need to amend the Policy during that period.

With regard to additional costs as a result of the ‘fit and proper’ person test this will depend on the number of reports received from Police Scotland under this heading. The Council have no indication of how many reports we are likely to receive however we do not expect to be inundated with them. Costs are therefore likely to be minimal.

The removal of the obligation to review a licence if the licence holder gains a conviction would result in minimal savings based on the number of reviews held to date.

If the Council were to go down the lines of requiring an assessment of private hire services, it is suggested that the costs referred to in the FM would be a minimum figure. South Lanarkshire Council operates a zoning system and this could result in the figure being in excess of £0.020m.

In terms of a public consultation on any proposed policy, this would be with those already involved in the assessment of private hire services. The £0.010m quoted in the FM seems reasonable for a consultation on its own, however if this was in conjunction with an assessment already undertaken then it would appear to be slightly overstated.
Do you consider that the estimated costs and savings set out in the FM are reasonable and accurate?

5. The removal of the obligation to review a licence if the licence holder gains a conviction would result in minimal savings based on the number of reviews held to date and not at the 40% of related costs quoted.

If applicable, are you content that your organisation can meet any financial costs that it might incur as a result of the Bill? If not, how do you think these costs should be met?

6. A review of fees would have to take place in the near future particularly with regard to occasional licences or extended hours applications as currently the fees for these applications do not cover the costs for administering the same.

If the Council were to go down the lines of requiring an assessment of private hire services it is suggested that the costs referred to in the FM would be a minimum figure. South Lanarkshire Council operates a zoning system and this could result in the figure being in excess of £0.020m.

With regard to the ability to recover appeal costs, there could be some delay in recouping the costs due to the time taken for appeal and administrative procedures.

In all cases of potential future costs, the Council does not currently have the funding in place to meet these. As suggested throughout the FM, the Council will consider fee levels to recover any additional costs from license holders that may materialise.

Does the FM accurately reflect the margins of uncertainty associated with the Bill’s estimated costs and with the timescales over which they would be expected to arise?

7. Yes.

Wider Issues

Do you believe that the FM reasonably captures any costs associated with the Bill? If not, which other costs might be incurred and by whom?

8. None, other than those mentioned above.

Do you believe that there may be future costs associated with the Bill, for example through subordinate legislation? If so, is it possible to quantify these costs?

9. Not possible to quantify costs at this stage.
Consultation
Did you take part in any consultation exercise preceding the Bill and, if so, did you comment on the financial assumptions made?
1. Yes, the GTA did take part in the original Consultation and, further, we had considerable input on the Risk Assessment.

If applicable, do you believe your comments on the financial assumptions have been accurately reflected in the FM?
2. The GTA's submission to the Scottish Government on the question of finance and the impact on the Trade, has been reproduced in the Financial Memorandum.

Did you have sufficient time to contribute to the consultation exercise?
3. Yes.

4. If the Bill has any financial implications for your organisation, do you believe that they have been accurately reflected in the FM? If not, please provide details. Please see the response to question 2.

Do you consider that the estimated costs and savings set out in the FM are reasonable and accurate?
5. In the GTA's response to the Scottish Government on the provisions of the Bill, there are a number of unanswered questions concerning the definition of ‘fit person’, ‘good reason’, ‘conditions’ and further legislative queries and, until these are answered, the GTA feels that the estimated costs and savings set out in the Financial Memorandum are unable to be verified.

If applicable, are you content that your organisation can meet any financial costs that it might incur as a result of the Bill? If not, how do you think these costs should be met?
6. The question is applicable as the GTA has already agreed at the Scottish Firearms Consultative Panel (SFCP), that they will be involved in helping promote with publicity on the detail of the Act and any handins and this will represent considerable cost both to the Scottish Government and the Shooting Organisations, including the GTA. We understand that provisions will be made by the Scottish Government to meet much of this cost.
Does the FM accurately reflect the margins of uncertainty associated with the Bill’s estimated costs and with the timescales over which they would be expected to arise?

7. See response to question 5

Wider Issues
Do you believe that the FM reasonably captures any costs associated with the Bill? If not, which other costs might be incurred and by whom?

8. See response to question 5 and comment in question 6 on publicity and information need/required. There will also be costs associated with revocations, appeals, and court cases.

Do you believe that there may be future costs associated with the Bill, for example through subordinate legislation? If so, is it possible to quantify these costs?

9. There will certainly be extra costs associated with the Bill, in particular with requirements from Secondary Legislation on issues such as security, storage, club memberships, the setting up of clubs, events and recreational facilities. Until the Bill, is finalised, no costs for these issues can be estimated.

AIR WEAPONS AND LICENSING (SCOTLAND) BILL:

FINANCIAL MEMORANDUM SUBMISSION FROM

WEST DUNBARTONSHIRE COUNCIL

Consultation

Did you take part in any consultation exercise preceding the Bill and, if so, did you comment on the financial assumptions made?

1. West Dunbartonshire Council (WDC) responded to a specific consultation on changes to taxi and private hire car licensing in March 2013. The consultation did not contain any financial assumptions.

WDC also responded to a consultation on licensing sexual entertainment venues. WDC considers the likely costs and income to be negligible.

We are unaware of any other consultation on other aspects of the bill, including alcohol licensing and non-taxi civic licensing.

If applicable, do you believe your comments on the financial assumptions have been accurately reflected in the FM?

2. Not applicable.

Did you have sufficient time to contribute to the consultation exercise?

3. Yes.

Costs

If the Bill has any financial implications for your organisation, do you believe that they have been accurately reflected in the FM? If not, please provide details.

4. No, the financial implications have not been accurately reflected in the FM.

With respect to alcohol licensing, the financial memorandum (FM) states that "Local authorities will continue to bear the costs of administering the licensing process, and they recoup their costs through the licensing fees." (para 123). It also states: "It is for local Licensing Boards to determine the level of appropriate fees, subject to any prescribed level, and to ensure that the licensing regime is self-funding." (para 128).

However WDC's calculations show that it is in fact unable to recoup its costs. The legislation sets a maximum fee which licensing boards can charge and, even though ours is charging the maximum fee, we incur an annual deficit of almost £89,000. West Dunbartonshire Licensing Board is in fact only able to recover 52.8% of the expenditure to administer the licensing regime. It is therefore very misleading to suggest that licensing boards have the power to ensure that licensing is self-funding.¹

¹ Please note that WDC has confirmed that this sentence relates to alcohol licensing.
The comment in para 143 of the FM is to be welcomed if it leads to an increase in the fee that licensing boards can charge i.e. “The annual financial reports will inform the Scottish Government on appropriate maximum fee levels”.

The Scottish Government (SG) proposes to require Licensing Boards to publish an annual statement of income and expenditure to ensure transparency. This may be helpful to WDC by publicising the deficit incurred.

There are of course different ways to calculate expenditure, and some councils may report a smaller deficit if they do not include managerial costs or overheads for example. It would be helpful if the Scottish Government was to publish guidance for licensing boards (and councils for civic licensing) that sets out the wide range of costs that boards and councils should be recovering e.g. employee costs (incl. national insurance and superannuation), managerial costs, legal and committee administration costs, overheads and central support costs.

Para 143 of the FM states: “While in theory publishing these calculations should not require significant additional resource, it is recognised that some changes may need to be made to some Boards’ financial and accounting practices to enable this. It is anticipated that any additional costs arising from this should be minimal”. There is however some concern that it is unreasonably burdensome to require production of this statement within three months of the end of the financial year.

The FM states “Reducing the frequency of reviewing the Licensing Policy Statement from every three years [to five years] to better align with local government electoral terms will potentially result in a 40% saving from existing costs in relation to reviewing their Licensing Policy Statement for Licensing Boards. ” (para 135). However it should be noted that the saving will be on paper only and is not a cashable sum that can be saved or spent on other work.

Do you consider that the estimated costs and savings set out in the FM are reasonable and accurate?
5. Yes, subject to the other comments in this response.

If applicable, are you content that your organisation can meet any financial costs that it might incur as a result of the Bill? If not, how do you think these costs should be met?
6. There is no statutory cap on the fees that councils can charge for licences under the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982. Therefore any extra costs can in principle be covered by increasing fees.² Please note that WDC has confirmed that this paragraph relates to licences for taxis and private hire cars.

As noted in para 156 of the FM, the cost of defending an appeal against refusal to grant a licence can be recovered from fees. However such costs can vary significantly, as can the frequency of appeals, and it may be necessary to adjust fees only some time after any increase in appeal costs.

² Please note that WDC has confirmed that this paragraph relates to licences for taxis and private hire cars.

Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill: Financial Memorandum

The Convener: Our next item of business is evidence from the Scottish Government’s bill team on the financial memorandum to the Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill. I welcome Quentin Fisher, Ewan Bruce, Keith Main, Walter Drummond-Murray and Peter Reid. Good morning to you all. Members have copies of the financial memorandum and all written evidence received. Before we move to questions from me and from the committee, I invite one of our witnesses to make an opening statement. Who has drawn the short straw?

Quentin Fisher (Scottish Government): I have. Thank you for inviting us to offer evidence to the committee today. I will make a couple of brief and broad observations.

The bill makes provision in respect of a number of new and existing licensing regimes. Any additional costs associated with the bill should be read against the wider cost to society of the activities that are regulated or, indeed, the risks associated with the regulated behaviour.

The bill has a number of purposes. It aims to protect public safety by creating a new licensing regime for air weapons. It aims to improve aspects of locally led alcohol and civic government licensing, such as the licensing of scrap metal dealers, taxis and private hire cars, in order to preserve public order and safety, to reduce crime and to advance public health. It also gives local authorities the power to regulate sexual entertainment venues in their areas, so that performers and customers benefit from a safe and regulated environment.

The breadth of the licensing regimes that are covered means that there is not insignificant variation in the specific legislative detail and therefore in the financial impact in respect of each regime. That variation is, I hope, reflected accurately in the financial memorandum. In keeping with current licensing practice, the bulk of the costs associated with licensing regimes is ultimately borne by the individuals and organisations who seek to carry out the licensed activity.

It is worth noting that many of the costs that are identified, particularly in respect of part 3, “Civic Licensing”, depend on future decisions that will be taken at local authority level. Local authority discretion is an important principle in all of this. In such instances we have sought, where possible, to offer some indication of what the costs might be.

We will do our best to ensure that the answers that we provide today are helpful to the committee in informing your consideration of the bill.

The Convener: Thank you for your brief opening statement. When a question is asked, the witnesses can decide among themselves who is the most appropriate person to respond to it and to any follow-up question.

It is logical to go through the bill part by part, so let us start with part 1, “Air Weapons”. The bill will make it illegal to possess air weapons without good reason, but I note that people who hand in unlicensed air weapons will not be entitled to compensation. Surely the absence of compensation will make it less likely that weapons will be handed in. A lot of folk will just think, “Well, it’s at the back of the garage and I’m not going to the bother of digging it out and taking it to the local police station.” What is the thinking behind not compensating people who hand in weapons, even with a token £20 or so?

Keith Main (Scottish Government): That issue has been discussed quite a lot over the three or four years in which we have been working with stakeholders and considering provisions. I understand that it is of concern to some people.

There have been occasions in the past when changes in firearms law led to the outright prohibition or banning of certain types of gun. For example, in 1997 handguns were in effect prohibited and the Government of the day offered compensation. In the bill, the Government does not intend to ban airguns as such. We are seeking to ensure that the people who have airguns are appropriate and can have them safely and so on, but we are not banning the guns.

Our view is that there are an awful lot of airguns at the back of people’s garages, as you said. In the course of the past few years, lots of people have said to me, “We had one of those when I was a kid. It’s in the loft or somewhere and I haven’t seen it for years.” We think that there will be a lot of low-value, old air weapons that have never been used or are perhaps broken or no longer fit for use, and it will be open to people to hand them in to the police—we will put in place arrangements for that—sell them through private sales or registered firearms dealers or make other arrangements. For example, owners might pass them on to other users.

Ministers’ policy has always been that, because there will be no ban and we are talking about quite a high number of low-value weapons, compensation will not be part of the arrangements.
The Convener: I thought that compensation might be an incentive for people who no longer have an interest in or use for airguns to get them out of circulation. We might get more guns out of circulation than we otherwise would.

Quentin Fisher said that the new system will not be unduly burdensome, but that is hotly contested. The financial memorandum suggests that the cost of processing applications for air weapons under the new arrangements will be about £85.55. That is a remarkably precise figure, and it has been contested by people who submitted evidence to the committee. For example, the British Association for Shooting and Conservation—I will try not to use acronyms—said:

"the cost that will be associated with the introduction of an air weapon licensing scheme will be very high", and

"hugely disruptive to the already overstretched Firearms Licensing administrations in Scotland".

You have said that 98 per cent of people will be dealt with without the need for further inquiry, but the Scottish Air Rifle and Pistol Association says that that is incredibly misleading, because half the folk who use these weapons use them for informal target shooting in their own gardens; we do not want to see that, because of the safety impact. The association completely refutes the financial assumptions that have been made about the bill and suggests that the average cost will be significantly higher; it mentions a figure of almost £120.

Can you talk us through how you came to the 98 per cent figure for the proportion of applications that would not require visits, and how you reached the figure of £85.55?

Keith Main: We arrived at the 98 per cent figure in discussion with Police Scotland, which will be the licensing authority. The air weapons provisions and the whole process of applying for licences for air weapons are based around the existing firearms regime for high-powered rifles, shotguns and so on. The aim has been to provide a fairly light-touch approach to licensing air weapons, recognising that they are not generally as dangerous as more high-powered guns.

In talking to Police Scotland, we discussed how that would be done. We accept the police’s view, which we share, that there are some 60,000 to 65,000 existing certificate holders for other types of firearms, and that many of them will also have air weapons and will be brought into the new regime. Many of the security issues have been looked at in licensing those holders and providing them with certificates, so a large number of people would already be taken out of the system. For those who are new applicants, it is a relatively light touch, and Police Scotland has told us that a disclosure-style arrangement, under which they will check an applicant’s basic criminal history, should suffice for the majority of applicants.

That has been the view of Police Scotland throughout. The police therefore believe that 2 per cent is the right level for a full home visit and security check. Obviously, as the new system comes in that may vary a little, but that is the view that we have taken over the piece, and we worked up the figures on that basis.

In the past couple of weeks, I have looked again at the £85.55 figure. The figure is very accurate. We used figures that have been used by colleagues down south in the Home Office and the Association of Chief Police Officers; they have done a lot of work over the past couple of years in looking at the costs of processing existing firearms applications. With their agreement, we have adopted a lot of the figures for work that has been done by our working group in that context. The figure takes account of processing times and the type of staff who are doing different bits of work, and the calculations behind the £85.55 pretty much reflect the work that is done.

That has led the Home Office to consult recently on an increase in firearms fees more generally, so we have continued to adopt that figure. BASC and SARPA are aware of that work. In fact, BASC was part of the working group down south that agreed those figures. There are always differences in how we treat the figures, and I understand BASC’s concerns about the impact on its members, but we think that there is a generally accepted basis for the background workings behind the figures, which we will review later in the year as we start to look at fee levels.

The Convener: I imagine that more than 2 per cent of the population will have a criminal record, so it seems a bit odd that the figure is so low. It is quite burdensome, even if the cost is £85. Okay, a law-abiding citizen will grudgingly apply for that, but the folk whom you are most worried about will just not bother paying £85 to get a gun licensed, will they? Surely all that you will do is impact adversely on shooting clubs and their members.

Keith Main: There will be an impact on shooting clubs and members—absolutely. That is part and parcel of the licensing system, but, then again, existing firearms and shotgun owners pay for a certificate, which currently costs £50 for five years. We have not set a fee level yet for air weapons. The fee reflects the work that has to be done by Police Scotland to ensure that the right people have air weapons and that the police can therefore help to protect public safety. If the figure is £50, £60 or £70 over five years, that is a relatively small price compared with the cost of membership of a club or with the amount that somebody pays for some other interest.

I accept that there will be a core of people who will just say, “We’ll hide our guns. We’re not going to get involved in this licensing system.” As part and parcel of the implementation, we have to ensure that we are getting the message out. There is provision in the financial memorandum for a media campaign. We have had the verbal agreement of the shooting organisations to help us get that message out. We need to get it out to the wider community to make sure that people know that there will be a requirement to license their guns. If people choose not to license those weapons, they will be committing an offence and the police will deal with that appropriately. Over time, it will help the police to identify air weapons that are in circulation with people who should not have them. There are provisions elsewhere in the bill that will allow for the courts to order the forfeiture of those weapons or deal with them appropriately.

The Convener: If there are half a million weapons in circulation and you are talking about between 10,000 and 30,000 applications, to me, that means that between 94 and 98 per cent of people will not bother getting their weapons licensed. SARPA has said:

“a more realistic total licence number would be between 100,000 and 150,000”.

Even then that would be a maximum of 30 per cent of people applying—most people would still blank the legislation.

The cost of this measure will be millions of pounds. How will the bill deliver on what it proposes in terms of enhanced and improved safety, when we are talking about only small minorities of people—according to your own figures—getting these guns licensed?

Keith Main: I cannot remember the paragraph numbers in the memorandum, but the estimate of 500,000 air weapons is generally accepted around the working group table as the potential number of air weapons out there in Scotland. In fact, we expect that a lot of them will simply be handed in because they are old, broken or unwanted. A lot of them will be sold on. Many people who own guns of any sort—air weapons included—will have a number of different guns, possibly because they have upgraded over the years and possibly because they do different types of shooting. Working down through those assumptions, we get to the figure in the financial memorandum of potentially 40,000 existing firearm certificate holders also having air weapon certificates in future. The 20,000 estimate is brand-new applicants to the system, who do not have more powerful firearms but who will come in and seek a certificate for the air weapon or multiple air weapons that they hold. It will be one certificate. A person can hold one, two or any number of air weapons on that certificate.

The Convener: I will just ask one more question on this area, because colleagues want to ask about other parts of the bill.

The financial memorandum states that the estimated maximum additional enforcement, testing and reporting costs to be incurred by Police Scotland would amount to £90,000 per annum, based on an estimated 500 cases per year at £180 a case. The BASC questioned whether that figure implied that the police expected to seize 500 weapons as a result of non-compliance and asked how the figure compared with the estimate of 50 to 100 summary prosecutions that the FM quotes. That appears to be a wee bit of an anomaly.

Keith Main: We are looking at the line between the existing regime and the new regime. The 500 tests that sit against Police Scotland’s costs are an estimate that is based on the number of actual weapons that might have to be tested—they would be brand-new tests.

In the course of investigating other crimes or complaints, Police Scotland may find air weapons in a property and, under the current regime, the police cannot take those weapons. However, one of the benefits of the provisions in the bill is that, from the point at which they come into force, the police will be able to seize weapons and test them as part and parcel of another investigation. For example, if the police go into a property because of a complaint about domestic abuse or antisocial behaviour, a prosecution will already be going on because of that complaint, alongside which there will be tests if air weapons are seized.

The figure of 500 tests relates to the number of air weapons that could be taken in such investigations but there might be only 50 to 100 brand-new prosecutions simply for an air weapons licensing offence.

The existing firearms legislation already contains offences relating to air weapons. For example, it is already an offence for somebody to fire an air weapon beyond the boundaries of their own premises or carry an air weapon in the street. Under the bill, there will be a number of new licensing-related offences that will sit alongside existing offences that can be investigated and prosecuted.

The Convener: I said that that was my last question, but I want to ask about one other thing. How many appeals do you expect from people who have been refused licences, and what would be the cost of those appeals?
Keith Main: I looked at the written evidence on appeals. We do not have a specific provision for appeals in the financial memorandum at the moment.

The Convener: Indeed. I know that.

Keith Main: I apologise for that. I will look at it again. On the basis of criminal prosecutions, we expect a relatively small number of brand-new appeals. The thinking was that the bill would lead to a very low number of potential criminal appeals.

I understand that the British Association for Shooting and Conservation is saying that there is potential for a number of appeals against refusal or revocation of a certificate. However, the people who apply under the existing firearms regime are generally known in the system—they are known to the police and are existing firearms owners—so the number of refusals is very small. Each year, around 1 per cent of applications are refused, according to the most recent statistics that we have. As our system rolls out, we will look to the police to provide advice on that.

It is difficult to estimate the number of appeals, but we will have to be aware of the issue and, perhaps, revisit it. I am also conscious that there is a new sheriff appeal court system coming into play under the Courts Reform (Scotland) Act 2014, so we will have to consider how appeals will work through that system. Ministers and officials hope that there will not be a lot of appeals; because it will be a light-touch system, we do not expect there to be a lot.

The Convener: We will move on to alcohol licensing. I will spend less time on the next two sections, not least because I have taken 20 minutes and I want committee colleagues to come in.

On the alcohol licensing provisions, West Dunbartonshire Council says:

“The legislation sets a maximum fee which licensing boards can charge and, even though ours is charging the maximum fee, we incur an annual deficit of almost £89,000”.

Glasgow City Council says:

“it should be noted that it is difficult, if not impossible, for the bodies to preemptively raise fees … to take into account the Scottish Government’s proposals”.

South Lanarkshire Council says:

“the Council does not currently have the funding in place to meet” potential future costs. Surely the regime will add significant burdens to local authorities.

Peter Reid (Scottish Government): The proposals in the bill are a broad mix. They were derived from suggestions that were floating about among stakeholders and from the consultation exercise. The idea was to finesse and improve the existing legislation, not to impose substantial additional burdens on licensing boards. On that basis, we felt that it was reasonable to say that the costs would be broadly neutral.

We would be sympathetic to the idea of amending the existing limits on the licensing fees, but we carried out detailed work in reviewing them and got scant response from the local authorities. Therefore, we felt that we did not have enough information on which to base an increase in the fee levels.

Inserting a statutory duty on local authorities to report on their income and expenditure will give us a basis on which to understand all the local authorities’ costs—in relation to both expenditure and time—in order to allow the fees to be increased, if that is felt to be appropriate. One of the main findings of the fees review was that the current occasional licence fee of £10 is felt to be insufficient. We feel that we can increase the occasional licence fee without extensive further work, and fairly soon.

The Convener: Thank you. The written submission from the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities states:

“There are some concerns that the introduction of a duty for Boards to publish a financial report may be administratively difficult for local authorities depending on current accounting procedures. COSLA does recognise that this increases transparency and would provide evidence for any future fee increases.”

Nevertheless, COSLA adds that South Ayrshire Council “expressed ‘particular concerns’ that the fee for occasional licences had not been reviewed, stating that the current fee was insufficient to cover the cost of work involved in processing a licence application.”

Peter Reid: Yes. The current £10 fee is set in secondary legislation, so we could increase it outwith the bill.

The Convener: Okay. I have one final question on civic licensing—I am skimming through the submissions because I want to allow colleagues to ask questions.

The financial memorandum states that the bill “will give local authorities the power to refuse to grant private hire car licences on grounds of overprovision.”

However, the Scottish Taxi Federation states that the financial memorandum has “got things badly wrong”, and it questions how the financial memorandum’s estimate was reached, stating that no suitable methodology or measuring tool exists at present. Indeed, it goes on to say that it would be “difficult if not impossible” to devise such a tool. How did you reach your estimates?

Peter Reid: At the moment, there is no equivalent test for private hire cars. There is a similar test for taxis that relates to unmet demand, but that is a different test. We took the figure from Napier University, which quoted £15,000 to £20,000—the figure is in the financial memorandum—as the indicative level for the unmet demand test. That figure was given as an example; in practice, it is a completely new test and we have not yet devised a procedure to determine what the appropriate amount would be.

The point that the Scottish Taxi Federation and others raise—that £15,000 might be on the low side—is possibly true for a large authority such as the City of Edinburgh Council or Glasgow City Council, but those are exceptional cases. A lot of local licensing authorities have very small numbers of private hires and, were they to carry out an unmet demand test, the amount would probably be a lot lower. We would be happy to work with local licensing authorities and relevant stakeholders to develop an appropriate methodology for testing that.

The Convener: Thank you. I said that I was going to open up the evidence session, but none of my colleagues has yet indicated that they want to ask any questions. I hope that they will. I will ask another question while they all get themselves psyched up for that.

The financial memorandum notes that some local authorities might receive no fee income from sexual entertainment venues—that is, where none exists in a local authority area—but could incur “tens of thousands of pounds” in legal fees should an operator challenge a decision not to grant a licence. What is your comment on that?

Walter Drummond-Murray (Scottish Government): We recognise that risk in the financial memorandum, but the precise amount that such a challenge could cost is very hard to pin down. Glasgow City Council estimated that a low-level challenge in relation to a civic licence—for example, a private hire car driver licence going before the sheriff court—could cost between £2,500 and £3,000. However, if a case went all the way to the inner house of the Court of Session, the cost would be very substantial—there is no getting away from that—although it is hard to be precise.

The Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 confers a responsibility on local authorities to ensure that the total cost of licensing is covered by the licensing fees. Ultimately, however, when a case is likely to be very expensive, it is for the local authority to judge whether it is worth pursuing and whether the public benefit that it is trying to achieve would warrant pursuit of the case all the way through the courts and the incurring of that expenditure.

The Convener: My colleagues now wish to ask questions. The first one will be from Mark McDonald.

Mark McDonald: In relation to several areas that are dealt with in the financial memorandum, various organisations have highlighted concerns about the cost of appeals. The British Association of Shooting and Conservation has concerns in relation to air rifles; the Scottish Taxi Federation has concerns in relation to taxis; and various licensing boards are concerned about some of the new changes, particularly the fit-and-proper-person test. There are concerns that the cost of appeals in those areas has not been properly factored in. Would you like to respond to those concerns?

Quentin Fisher: That question covers all the licensing regimes, so I will deal with it in a broad fashion if I may.

I take it that you are talking about appeals in respect of decisions that have been made by the local authorities or the police to grant or revoke licences. The way to eliminate the possibility of an appeal would be to have no appeals system, but I do not think that anyone is suggesting that. At the moment, we have an appeals system and the possibility of appeal arises. The likelihood of an appeal being successful depends on, among other things, the quality of the decision that has been taken. It also depends on the mindset and the positioning of the potential appellant.

The moment that we have an appeals system in place—we have one for all licensing decisions—the possibility of an appeal exists. However, the likelihood of an appeal being successful is a different matter and can be ascertained only on a case-by-case basis, as can the costs of the appeal.

I do not know whether any of my colleagues wants to say anything about the specific regimes.

Walter Drummond-Murray: I would just add to the point that the convener made. There are only about 17 to 20 sexual entertainment venues in Scotland, which of itself limits the scope for appeals being taken through the courts.

Mark McDonald: You say that in relation to sexual entertainment venues, but the submissions that we have received raise the issue that there may be appeals against refusals to grant licences. Although there are only a small number of such venues in existence, there may be applications that, prior to the implementation of the legislation, would have gone through the alcohol licensing system or another route. The bill will create a new licensing regime, which will, potentially, lead to refusals under that new regime and thus to appeals against those refusals. Basing your projection on the small number of venues that exist does not reflect what may happen, and that is the point that the licensing boards are attempting to get across.

I realise that it is difficult to put an exact figure on it, but a financial memorandum is supposed to deal in best estimates. Did you consider the scenario of licence applications being refused rather than simply the number of licences that have already been granted?

Walter Drummond-Murray: You are correct in saying that there would be applications on top of that figure. However, the point remains that lap-dancing clubs have been in existence in Scotland for perhaps 15 years and, even after that time, there are still only about 20. It is therefore reasonable to infer that the demand for licences is limited. There will be applications, but there will not be an enormous number of them.

The cost of any appeals will depend on how far they are pursued through the courts. Going to the inner house of the Court of Session would be expensive. We have never had a better estimate of what exactly an appeal would cost than the figure of tens of thousands of pounds.

Mark McDonald: On the introduction of the fit-and-proper-person test for the granting of personal licences, there is a feeling that the definition is vague and could lead to a number of challenges. The Glasgow City Council licensing board states:

> “the current drafting of the bill creates uncertainty as to the scope of the test and, unless corrected, will expose Boards to increased litigation costs until case law provides necessary judicial clarity.”

Has that issue been raised with you directly, in connection with the fit-and-proper-person test, and does the Government intend to look at the matter as the bill moves forward?

Peter Reid: The fit-and-proper-person test has been carefully drafted. There are existing fit-and-proper-person tests in other pieces of legislation that the local authorities will be quite familiar with so it is not a completely new concept.

The test has also been framed with reference to the overarching licensing objectives for the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005. Those objectives are broadly framed and put certain constraints on decisions that the local authority can make. Were local authorities to ignore those constraints, they would still be bound by the overall scope of the bill.

The Brightcrew decision that is frequently referenced related to a board making decisions that went beyond the scope of the bill. Referencing the fit-and-proper-person test to the overarching licensing objectives ensures that decisions that the board makes are constrained within the scope of the 2005 act.

Mark McDonald: On public entertainment venues, the financial memorandum states that the abolition of theatre licences would represent > “a decrease in regulatory burden overall”

but in evidence to the committee Dumfries and Galloway Council says that those authorities not currently licensing places of public entertainment would need to undertake a “substantial and detailed process” to assess whether there is a need to license theatres as places of public entertainment. It further stated that those that already do would incur > “significant press publication fees for statutory notices if the authority’s resolution is to be widened to include theatres.”

Glasgow City Council urges the Government to introduce > “provisions to allow the necessary amendment to the resolution to be expedited” which, it suggested, would > “reduce the costs to theatre owners etc.”

On the one hand we are being told that there is a reduction in the burden, but on the other hand we are given evidence that suggests that there will be an increase in costs in some places. Could somebody reconcile that?

Walter Drummond-Murray: The point about a decreased regulatory burden was about the burden on theatres themselves. Some theatres might have to have a theatre licence and a public entertainment licence at the moment whereas the proposed system will be more streamlined and will allow a theatre, for example, to apply for just one licence. In the longer term, we also expect that operating a single regime rather than two will benefit local authorities.

On expediting the nine-month period between a local authority passing a resolution and it coming into force, it is reasonable for there to be some time between an authority announcing that something needs to be licensed and it coming into force so that people have time to apply for licences to get ready for it. The current period for that is nine months. We are not especially wedded to that period but it is hard to see how it could be less than several months. It should also be pointed out that a public entertainment licence is very wide and flexible so the local authority could decide to license billiard halls or snooker clubs, for example, and there needs to be some months between the time that that decision is made and the licence coming into force.

The requirements of the 1982 act are that an authority should publish the resolution, invite comments, and then consider those representations. There is some work to be done to reach the point at which a draft resolution can be published, but the amount of work should be proportionate to what is being proposed.

In the case of theatres, we expect there to be a strong assumption that they should fall under public entertainment licensing. They are already licensed and they have largely the same characteristics as many of the other forms of entertainment that are licensed as public entertainment. In those circumstances, we would not expect a substantial and detailed process to be required.

On fees, we recognise that publishing the sort of classified advert that is required under the 1982 act to notify people of a change in resolution has a cost. Glasgow estimated that the cost of an advert ranges between £300 and £550, its previous two having been £340 and £522. It is therefore a cost of a few hundred pounds, but it is not an on-going cost and it would have to be incurred only twice during the process of changing a public entertainment resolution.

Mark McDonald: I was just going to ask about that. I am by no means an expert so this is going to be very much the daft laddie question. I presume that an advert does not need to be posted for each individual licence; adverts can be applied collectively. For example, if a number of venues are going through the licensing process, they could all be captured within the one advert, which would reduce the cost burden.

Walter Drummond-Murray: Yes. The cost that is being referred to relates to the fact that, when a local authority determines the change through a public entertainment resolution and says what it is going to license, it has to advertise that fact and invite comments. It has to put in another advert at the end of the process showing what the final resolution looks like. It is not about individual applications; it is about the totality of what is changing within a local authority area.

Richard Baker (North East Scotland) (Lab): I want to return to the submission from the Scottish Taxi Federation. It said that the bill will impact on its members because of the Government’s comments that additional costs should be charged to licence fees. Paragraph 170 of the financial memorandum gives an indicative value of the cost to drivers, vehicles and booking offices, with examples of fees in five licensing authorities. Do those examples include any additional costs for the implementation of the bill, or do the comments from the Scottish Taxi Federation reflect the fact that those costs are likely to increase in the future because of additional costs through appeals and other impacts of the legislation?

Peter Reid: The financial memorandum reports licence fees that were being charged at the time we asked. Those are existing costs.

Richard Baker: What assessment have you made of the impact that the legislation might have through additional or increased costs for licence fees for taxi drivers?

Peter Reid: It is difficult to gauge because overprovision in relation to private hire is a discretionary power. It is up to local authorities whether they wish to introduce it. When we consulted, there seemed to be broad support for it and the evidence that came in response to the call for evidence does not seem to indicate that local authorities are keen to use the additional power. If local authorities decide not to use it, no additional cost will be incurred.

Richard Baker: The Scottish Taxi Federation wishes to be clear whether, if a local authority applies for that power, the cost of the overprovision section and the possible court challenges will only be charged back to licensees for private hire care operators, or whether they will be charged back to the regime in general.

Peter Reid: I have had a look at the bill, but I am not a lawyer so I cannot really offer a legal view. It does not seem to me to be prescriptive about how the local authority would allocate that cost and whether it would be to just the private hire element or the whole taxi element. At the moment, there is an unmet demand test in relation to taxis. I am not sure whether local authorities restrict the cost of that to the existing taxis or whether they spread it across the private hire regime. I suspect that it is really an issue for the local authority to decide on.

The Convener: There appear to be no further questions from the committee. Do you have any other points to make to the committee before we wind up the meeting?

Quentin Fisher: We thank you for asking us to give evidence today. If we can help with anything further, please let us know and we will happily provide further comment.

The Convener: Thank you very much for that. That being the end of the public part of today’s deliberations, we will move into private. Before we do, I would like the committee to agree that we will look at the report of the evidence in private at our next meeting.

Members indicated agreement.
The Convener: Thank you.
Background

1. The Committee reported on the delegated powers in the Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill\(^1\) on 20 January 2015, in its 5th report of 2015.

2. The response from the Scottish Government to the report is reproduced at the Annex.

Scottish Government response

Section 37(1) – Power to make further provision

Provision

3. Section 37(1) enables Scottish Ministers to make further provision by regulation for the purposes of Part 1 of the Bill. Section 37(2) states that such regulations may make further provision for the application and approvals process for air weapon certificates, police permits, visitor permits, event permits, or club approvals. This includes prescribing the mandatory conditions that will attach to certificates, permits, or air weapon club approvals.

4. Various other provisions state that such matters may be “prescribed”, which refers to prescription by regulations under this section. This applies at sections 4(1), 6(1), 7(2), 13(9), 14(2), 15(1), 17(6), and 18(2) and (4).

Committee consideration

5. The Committee noted the Government’s intention that the power at section 37 will be used to set out the ‘administrative minutiae’ of the air weapons regime in secondary legislation. However, the Committee was not convinced that it was necessary to take such a general, broad power in order to achieve this aim.

---

\(^1\) Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill [as introduced] available here: http://www.scottish.parliament.uk/S4_Bills/Air%20Weapons%20and%20Licensing%20(Scotland)%20Bill/b49s4-introd.pdf%20Bill/b49s4-introd.pdf)
6. In reaching this conclusion, the Committee noted that the powers at sections 4(1) to 18(4) (as noted above) set out various matters in Part 1 of the Bill which may be prescribed by regulations.

7. The Committee’s report therefore recommended that the Scottish Government bring forward an amendment at stage 2 to remove the broad power at section 37 to make further provision in relation to Part 1 of the Bill.

8. The report further recommended that if the Government considers that further types of provision need to be specified beyond those already set out across sections 4(1) to 37(2), this could be achieved by bringing forward appropriate amendments.

Scottish Government response

9. In response, the Government explains that the broad power at section 37 is considered to be required in order to effectively implement the new air weapons regime, and ensure that it can adapt to potential changing circumstances such as a move to an online application process.

10. The response further notes that most firearms legislation remains reserved to Westminster. The Government’s intention is that the power in section 37(1) can be used to respond to any changes made to firearms legislation relatively quickly, in order to ensure the regime can continue to function effectively.

11. The Government therefore does not consider it appropriate to remove or amend the power at section 37(2) and does not intend to act upon the Committee’s recommendations.

Section 68(3) – Power to specify premises that are not sexual entertainment venues

Section 68(3) – Power to provide for descriptions of performances or descriptions of displays of nudity which are not to be treated as sexual entertainment

Provision

12. The power in the new section 45A(7)(b) of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 (“the 1982 Act”) (as inserted by section 68(3)) enables Ministers to prescribe other types of premises, that are not sexual entertainment venues (apart from sex shops which are separately regulated). The new section 45A(11) of the 1982 Act also allows the Ministers to prescribe descriptions of performances or “displays of nudity” that are not to be treated as “sexual entertainment” for the purposes of the licensing regime.

Committee consideration

13. The Committee was concerned that these powers appear to be drawn more broadly than required as they allow for the exemption from the licensing regime of any other premises (apart from sex shops), or descriptions of performance or displays of nudity.
14. This contrasts with the Government's policy intention of only exempting a very limited range and number of premises, performance or display, which might include some types of theatrical or artistic performance which have inadvertently been included within the licensing regime.

15. In response to a question on this matter, the Government explained that it is difficult to define the exact circumstances in which it may be considered necessary to exempt a premises or performance. The precise types of premises and performances which may be exempted would not be identified until after the proposed new licensing scheme has become fully operational. The Government therefore did not consider it appropriate to draw the power more narrowly in order to specify in which limited circumstances exemptions may be applied.

16. Whilst the Committee remained concerned about the potential width of the powers, it noted that policy considerations underlie how they have been drawn. The Committee therefore agreed to draw the Government’s response on this matter to the Local Government and Regeneration Committee, as the lead committee for the Bill.

Scottish Government response

17. The Government’s response to the report comments on the power to exempt descriptions of performances or descriptions of displays of nudity, and does not specifically refer to the power to specify premises that are not sexual entertainment venues.

18. The Government reiterates its intention that the power to exempt will only be required in very limited circumstances. The power will be used to ensure that activities, such as art performances, which are not intended to be licensed, do not fall under the scheme in error. The response also states that other as yet unforeseen circumstances may arise once the regime is in place, requiring the Government to use the exempting power.

Section 68(3) (inserting section 45B of the 1982 Act) – Licensing of sexual entertainment venues- local authority powers

Provision

19. The new section 45B of the 1982 Act would require a resolution by a local authority for sexual entertainment venue licensing to have effect in their area. (That is, by applying schedule 2 of that Act as modified by section 45B to their area.) This confers power on the local authority, though not in a form of subordinate legislation. A resolution would not have effect until a specified date (which cannot be less than 1 year after the resolution is passed). It must be publicised either electronically or in a local newspaper.

20. The section also allows a local authority to determine an appropriate number of sexual entertainment venues for their area. The appropriate number so determined must be publicised, then the determination must be publicised in a manner considered appropriate by the local authority.
21. Section 45B(7) also provides that local authorities (in carrying out functions conferred by the section), must have regard to any guidance issued by the Ministers.

Committee consideration

22. The Committee was content with the powers in the newly inserted section 45B of the 1982 Act which confer power on local authorities to issue resolutions and determinations in relation to sexual entertainment venues.

23. However, the Committee considered that the Bill should be amended to require the Government to both publish and lay before Parliament any guidance issued under section 45B(7).

Scottish Government response

24. The Government’s response explained that whilst it intends to publish the guidance and draw it to the Parliament's attention as a matter of good practice, it is willing to consider making this a formal requirement by bringing forward an appropriate amendment at stage 2.

Section 76 – Ancillary provision

Provision

25. Section 76 confers powers to make ancillary provisions in “stand alone” regulations. The Scottish Ministers may make incidental, supplementary, consequential, transitional, transitory or saving provision, as the Ministers consider necessary or expedient for the purposes of, or in consequence of, or for giving full effect to any provision of the Act or any provision made under it.

Committee consideration

26. The Committee considered the words ‘or any provision made under it’ to be unusual, in that recent Acts containing a comparable number of regulatory powers, or powers of potentially wider scope than contained in this bill, have not used these additional words.

27. In response to a question from the Committee on this matter, the Government explained that it considered that a wide power was required, in order to reflect the number of enabling powers required to set out the detail of the regulatory schemes provided for in the Bill. The Government also explained that it considered that the power, as worded, would allow the flexibility required to make necessary additional ancillary provisions which may be brought to light after the main regulations had been made.

28. The Committee did not consider the Government’s explanation to provide sufficient justification for the additional words and was therefore of the view that the scope of the power in section 76 was uncertain.

29. The Committee’s report therefore recommended that the Government remove the additional words in section 76 by bringing forward an appropriate amendment at stage 2.
Scottish Government response

30. The Government’s response reiterates its view that the additional words are required in order to ensure that the new regime operates effectively. The power may be used to integrate the processes provided for by regulations made under this Bill ‘with other parts of the statutory landscape that may not be as directly connected with the regime in question.’ The Government considers that this ‘fine-tuning’ would be best achieved once the regime is operational.
Correspondence from the Scottish Government, dated 27 February 2015

We are grateful for the detailed work undertaken by the Committee, and would in particular respond to the following points.

Section 37(1) – Power to make further provision

- The Committee therefore invites the Scottish Government to amend the bill to remove the broad power to make any further provision, while keeping the specification of those types of provision which are enabled. If the Government considers that, as a result of removing the broad power, more types of provision would need to be specified beyond all those set out across sections 4(1) to 37(2), then these should be proposed by amendment.

We note that the Committee has invited the Scottish Government to remove the broad power and to detail any further types of provision to be made in (what is currently) section 37(2). It was not, however, the intention that section 37(2) should be an exhaustive list. Rather, it is there to help frame the power in section 37(1) by identifying some of the types of regulations, which will be required to establish the licensing system.

We consider that this broader power is needed to ensure that the Government can fully implement and fine-tune the new air weapons licensing regime and also to respond to changing circumstances. This will ensure that the Act will continue to have the intended effect in the face of future changes.

The application process may well, for example, at some stage in the future allow for online electronic applications and certification. Such a development would not in itself undermine or fundamentally change the licensing regime, but we would need to be able to set out appropriate processes, timescales, record-keeping arrangements, etc. That might be possible under the set specific powers, but the Government considers that a power such as that at section 37(1) ensures that appropriate provision can be made and therefore is a more suitable provision.

More generally, the vast majority of firearms legislation remains reserved to Westminster, including general provisions around the definition of firearms, including air weapons, and provisions around commercial transactions, requirements on dealers and issues arising out of European decisions. Notably, some changes have been made as recently as last year, through the Anti-social Behaviour, Crime and Policing Act 2014. In addition, the Law Commission is about to embark on a 12 month scoping exercise to examine the need for changes to the Firearms Act 1968 and other legislation.

The broader power set out in section 37(1) would allow the Government to respond to such future changes by way of secondary legislation, maintaining the integrity of the air weapons licensing regime, without recourse to primary legislation. This may prove important where changes require to be made quickly to ensure that the regime can continue to operate effectively. Any changes brought forward by regulations under this power would be subject to the negative Parliamentary procedure.

For these reasons, the Scottish Government believes there continues to be a good case for retaining the provision at section 37(1) as set out in the Bill and does not propose to bring forward a Stage 2 amendment to remove this power and/or to seek to amend section 37(2).

Section 68(3) – Power to provide for descriptions of performances or descriptions of displays of nudity which are not to be treated as sexual entertainment

- The Committee therefore draws the Government’s response on these powers (reproduced in the Annex to this report) to the attention of the Local Government and Regeneration Committee.

We note the Committee’s views and reiterate that the Scottish Government envisages limited circumstances when such a power might be needed. The intention is to allow for circumstances when activities inadvertently fall into licensing. Whilst the Government does not expect this to happen it will be advantageous to allow for this situation should it arise. An obvious example is theatrical performances which, while we do not expect them to be licensed, should that happen then we will be able to address that situation. Other circumstances may arise which are wholly unforeseen and will not become apparent until the licensing regime is established.

Section 68(3) (inserting section 45B of the 1982 Act) – Licensing of sexual entertainment venues- local authority powers

- The Committee considers, in relation to the new section 45B(7), that the Bill should provide that any guidance issued by the Scottish Ministers to local authorities must be published, and a copy laid before the Parliament on issue.

The Scottish Government would regard it as good practice to draw Parliament’s attention to any guidance, and publish it on our website. We are happy to consider whether it should be an obligation in the Bill.

Section 76 – Ancillary provision

- Section 76(1) confers power to make incidental, supplementary, consequential, transitional, transitory or saving provision, as the Ministers consider necessary or expedient for the purposes of, or in consequence of, or for giving full effect to any provision of the Act or any provision made under it. The Committee notes that those words in italics are unusual, in comparison with recent Acts containing a comparable number of regulatory powers, or powers of potentially wider scope than contained in this bill. (See for example, the ancillary powers in the Public Services Reform (Scotland) Act 2010, the Regulatory Reform (Scotland) Act 2014, and the Reservoirs (Scotland) Act 2011).

- The Committee considers that the Scottish Government has not sufficiently justified why those words in italics should be added within the ancillary powers in this particular bill. It therefore invites the Scottish Government to remove these words by amendment at Stage 2.

The Scottish Government believes that it is appropriate for the words in question ‘…or any provision made under it.’ to remain in the Bill to ensure that the purposes of the Bill can be given full effect.

We do not consider the inclusion of these words to be particularly unusual in legislation of this type. While we note the Acts mentioned did not include these words, they have appeared in a number of recent pieces of legislation including the Police and Fire Reform (Scotland) Act 2012, the Housing (Scotland) Act 2014, the Procurement Reform (Scotland) Act 2014 and the Bankruptcy and Debt Advice (Scotland) Act 2014.

In this Bill, among other things, the Government would envisage using the section 76 power to provide for transitional and transitory measures in respect of the introduction of the air weapons regime (and indeed bringing into force the changes to the other regimes covered by the Bill). This might include, for example, provisions to allow for the smoothing of the application processes for first time applicants for air weapon certificates in such a way as to promote the efficient administration of police resources within the wider firearms framework.

The identified wording of the provision “or any provision made under it” gives helpful and appropriate latitude to make adjustments following the initial implementation of the various regimes to which the Bill is making changes. It ensures that the processes established by the regulations made under the Bill can be made to operate as efficiently and effectively as possible by integrating them with other parts of the statutory landscape that may not be directly connected to the regime in question. This kind of fine-tuning is best done once the main provisions of the regime are in place and starting to operate.

We therefore remain of the opinion that it is necessary and appropriate to retain the words in italics in the Bill to ensure that the aims of the legislation can be met.

Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill: The Committee considered the Scottish Government's response to its Stage 1 report and agreed to draw the attention of the lead committee to the breadth and scope of certain delegated powers within the Bill.
11:39

The Convener: This item of business is consideration of the Scottish Government’s response to the committee’s stage 1 report on the bill. Members have seen the briefing paper and the response from the Scottish Government.

The committee may wish to highlight the following matters to the lead committee on the bill.

Section 37(1) enables the Scottish ministers to make further provision by regulation for the purposes of part 1 of the bill. However, the committee’s report noted that the powers at sections 4(1), 6(1), 7(2), 13(9), 14(2), 15(1), 17(6) and 18(2) and (4) set out various matters in part 1 of the bill that may be prescribed by regulations.

The committee did not consider the broad, general power in section 37(1) to be necessary, and it recommended that it be removed by amendment at stage 2. The report further recommended that, if the Government considers that further types of provision need to be specified beyond those already set out across sections 4(1) to 37(2), that could be achieved by bringing forward appropriate amendments.

The committee’s report also commented on section 76, which confers powers to make ancillary provisions in stand-alone regulations. Under it, the Scottish ministers may make “incidental, supplementary, consequential, transitional, transitory or saving provision as they consider necessary or expedient for the purposes of, or in consequence of, or for giving full effect to, any provision of this Act or any provision made under it.”

The committee considered the use of the words "or any provision made under it" to be unusual and that the Government had not provided sufficient justification for this use of additional wording. The committee considered that the scope of the power in section 76 is uncertain, and it recommended that it be removed by amendment at stage 2.

The Government’s response to the report indicates that it does not intend to accept the committee’s recommendations in relation to the two matters that I have just discussed. Do members have any comments, or are we comfortable to draw the response to the attention of the lead committee?

John Scott: I am content to draw it to the committee’s attention, but at the risk of putting my head in a noose I think that the Government’s response is quite reasonable. There will perhaps be a need for broader powers on occasion in terms of the developing situation with airgun licensing.

Stewart Stevenson (Banffshire and Buchan Coast) (SNP): This is broadly an issue of policy, and it would be entirely proper to draw it to the attention of the appropriate policy committee for it to consider whether there is a policy need for the powers. I feel slightly uncomfortable with the drafting in its present form, but it may well be that the policy committee concludes otherwise when it looks at it.

The Convener: I think that the general argument is that we are looking at some slightly unusual words and there is no obvious explanation for why they should be there, but plainly that is a matter of policy and I therefore suggest that referring the issue to the lead committee is the appropriate thing to do. If colleagues are comfortable with that, that is what we will do.

Does the committee have any further comments, or shall we just look at what comes back at stage 2—assuming there are any amendments that come to us?

John Scott: I think that this is fundamentally a matter for the policy committee.

John Mason: I am not entirely clear how much this is an issue of policy, as the wording seems to be important and we have not really had an explanation. The approach that we might reconsider the bill after stage 2 is fine.

The Convener: Thank you, colleagues. That draws us to the end of the agenda, so I close the meeting.

Meeting closed at 11:43.
Dear Convener

LOCAL GOVERNMENT AND REGENERATION COMMITTEE
RESPONSE FROM THE SCOTTISH GOVERNMENT TO THE STAGE 1 REPORT OF THE
AIR WEAPONS AND LICENSING (SCOTLAND) BILL

I write in response to the Local Government and Regeneration Committee’s Stage 1 Report on the Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill.

I would like to take this opportunity to thank the Committee for its careful consideration of the Bill, and to all those who contributed to that consideration by providing evidence. I am pleased that the Committee supports the general principles of the Bill.

A number of important issues have been raised during Stage 1 proceedings, and a detailed response is attached in the Annex to this letter. The text in bold are the recommendations from the Committee’s Report.

I hope the Committee finds this information helpful in its further consideration of the Bill.

MICHAEL MATHESON
LOCAL GOVERNMENT AND REGENERATION COMMITTEE
RESPONSE FROM THE SCOTTISH GOVERNMENT TO THE STAGE 1 REPORT OF THE
AIR WEAPONS AND LICENSING (SCOTLAND) BILL

PART 1: AIR WEAPONS

I am grateful to the Committee for the comments on the Part 1 provisions of the Bill, covering the licensing of air weapons. In particular, I note the Convener’s comments welcoming the proposals and describing the air weapons measures as a timely and important piece of work.
The responses below refer to the various recommendations or to the paragraph numbering of the report, as far as possible.

General comments

Ownership

Throughout the report the text refers to “ownership” of an air weapon for the purpose of licensing. This reflects the language used in the early consultation paper and to some extent in the Policy Memorandum and other documents accompanying the Bill.

In practice, however, the Bill sets out a regime to license those persons who wish to use, possess, purchase or acquire an air weapon. Ownership is addressed directly only in terms of restrictions placed on ownership by young people. In addition, it is worth emphasising that the principal offence in section 2 of the Bill relates to the unlicensed use, possession, etc of an air weapon, rather than to ownership as such – though a person in possession of a weapon may of course also be the owner of it. This approach is consistent with the Firearms Act 1968 (as amended).

Types of air weapon covered

Paragraph 54 - The Report states that the Bill seeks to license owners of “specially dangerous weapons”. In fact, section 10 of the Scotland Act 2012 specifically excludes specially dangerous air weapons from the types of air weapon devolved to the Scottish Parliament. “Specially dangerous” weapons are designated as such by the Secretary of State by way of rules made under the Firearms Act 1968 and, if so designated, are reserved to Westminster.

Under section 2 of the Bill, as read with section 1 and paragraphs 8 to 10 of the Explanatory Notes to the Bill, the basic requirement for an air weapon certificate applies to a person who wishes to use, possess, purchase or acquire an air weapon which is capable of discharging a missile so that the missile has, on being discharged from the muzzle of the weapon, kinetic energy in excess of 1 joule but equal to or lower than, in the case of an air pistol, 6 foot pounds (approximately 8.13 joules) or, in the case of an air weapon other than an air pistol, 12 foot pounds (approximately 16.27 joules). Air weapons above these maximum thresholds will continue to be regulated by the Firearms Act 1968, as will air weapons which fall to be prohibited weapons under section 5 of that Act.

The application process

Paragraph 83 - The Report states that Police Scotland will be administering two different firearms certificate systems for the first time, and asks how those systems might interact. In practice, the processes and considerations for licensing firearms under section 1 of the Firearms Act 1968, or shotguns under section 2 of that Act, already differ in a number of respects but are administered through the same system. Licensing of air weapons will largely follow the principles and processes of the current firearms regime so that it will be familiar to both the police and to those existing shooters who apply for an air weapon certificate. In line with this, air weapons licensing will be administered using same computer system (SHOGUN) as firearms and shotguns. Officials are continuing to work with Police Scotland and others to plan the implementation of the regime, and will aim to ensure that the new processes can be introduced as seamlessly as possible.

Fees

Paragraph 95 - The Committee will be aware that the Home Secretary announced the outcome of the UK Government’s review of fees on 12 March 2015 and has laid the required statutory instrument at Westminster to increase the fee tariff. The new fees took effect from 6 April 2015, with the cost of a five-year firearms certificate rising to £88, and that for a shotgun certificate to £79.50 (both from £50).

Age restrictions

Paragraph 111 - The Bill provisions allow for any person of 14 years of age or over – rather than 18 or over - to apply for an air weapon certificate. It is correct, however, that special requirements and conditions apply to those aged 14 to 17 years. In particular, the conditions preclude young persons from purchasing or otherwise owning an air weapon (consistent with the Firearms Act 1968), and also restrict the purposes for which they may use and possess an air weapon.

Paragraph 114 - The Report notes comments from the British Association for Shooting and Conservation regarding the cost of a certificate to young persons. In this regard it might be worth drawing the Committee’s attention to paragraph 20 of the Delegated Powers Memorandum which refers to “a reduced fee for a short-term air weapon certificate granted to an under-18 that expires on their 18th birthday”. It is my intention to set this out in detail in the fees regulations which will be brought forward as secondary legislation following adoption of the Bill.

Delegated powers

Paragraph 134 - The Report reflects the views of the Delegated Powers and Law Reform Committee (DPLRC) with regard to the delegated powers set out at sections 37 and 76 of the Bill.

Section 37 sets out the power to make further provision in regard to the licensing of air weapons. The officials have written to the DPLRC in detail on this issue and consider that this broader power is needed to ensure that the Government can fully implement and fine-tune the new air weapons licensing regime and respond to changing circumstances. This will ensure that the Act will continue to have the intended effect in the face of future changes.

Such changes may, for example, allow for online electronic applications and certification and we would need to be able to set out appropriate processes, timescales, record-keeping arrangements, etc. That might be possible under the set specific powers, but the Government considers that a power such as that at section 37(1) ensures that appropriate provision can be made and therefore is a more suitable provision.
More generally, most firearms legislation remains reserved to Westminster and the powers set out in section 37(1) would allow the Scottish Government to respond to changes in the wider regime by way of secondary legislation. A number of changes were, for example, made as recently as last year, through the Anti-social Behaviour, Crime and Policing Act 2014. In addition, the Law Commission is now embarking on a 12 month scoping exercise to examine the need for changes to the Firearms Act 1968 and other legislation.

Section 76(1) confers power to make incidental, supplementary, consequential, transitional, transitory or saving provision, as Ministers consider necessary or expedient for the purposes of, or in consequence of, or for giving full effect to any provision of the Act of any provision made under it. The Scottish Government believes that it is appropriate for the words in question ‘...or any provision made under it.’ to remain in the Bill to ensure that the purposes of the Bill can be given full effect.

In this Bill, among other things, the Government would envisage using the section 76 power to provide for transitional and transitory measures in respect of the introduction of the air weapons regime (and indeed bringing into force the changes to the other regimes covered by the Bill).

The identified wording of the provision “or any provision made under it” gives helpful and appropriate latitude to make adjustments following the initial implementation of the various regimes to which the Bill is making changes. It ensures that the processes established by the regulations made under the Bill can be made to operate as efficiently and effectively as possible by integrating them with other parts of the statutory landscape that may not be directly connected to the regime in question. This kind of fine-tuning is best done once the main provisions of the regime are in place and starting to operate.

Recommendations

The application process

135. In order to ensure all owners and users of air weapons are ready for the introduction of the system, a clear and comprehensive public information campaign will be vital. Many people may only own an air weapon, and no other form of firearm, and therefore be unaware of the conditions for applying for, and holding a firearms certificate. Therefore, we recommend the Scottish Government should work closely with the shooting community, Police Scotland, and other key stakeholders to design and implement a comprehensive public information campaign. This should begin well in advance of the commencement of any certificate system to allow enough time for those who wish to lawfully dispose of any air weapons to do so.

136. The Government and Police Scotland should develop a dedicated website for the air weapons certificate system. This should contain, amongst other things, clear information about what air weapons owners must do to obtain a certificate, information on how to dispose of an air weapon they no longer wish to retain, as well as the relevant timescales for applying for a certificate etc.

I accept these recommendations and the Scottish Government has always been clear that full implementation of the new licensing regime would be preceded by a well-publicised campaign and a “hand in period” for unwanted weapons. This commitment was made in the original public consultation document “Proposals for Licensing Air Weapons in Scotland” published by the Scottish Government in December 2012. Paragraph 58 of that document stated:

“A campaign will be launched prior to the introduction of certification, encouraging people who do not need or want their air weapon to hand it in to the police. We will also need to remind everyone to check their cupboards, attics etc. for any forgotten weapons that they should pass to the police.”

Elsewhere, the document made reference to the need for a long term, joint information campaign involving dealers, shooting organisations, clubs and the Scottish Government. Officials have already started planning for such a campaign and will engage with the police and shooting organisations regarding the form it could take. A dedicated web page will be set up to provide potential applicants, or those seeking to dispose of unwanted air weapons, with the information they need. Information will also be shared and distributed, for example, through printed and broadcast media, websites, social media, etc, to raise awareness of the introduction of licensing, and to direct members of the public to appropriate sources for further information.

137. The Bill should be amended to give the Chief Constable of Police Scotland a degree of latitude in the rollout of the air weapons certificate system to address future application peaks and troughs.

I note the issues discussed (eg at paragraphs 85 to 92 of the Report) with regard to resourcing Police Scotland and the need to “smooth” the application workload against a background of peaks and troughs in existing firearms licensing work. As I stated to the Committee on 25 February, officials are discussing this with Police Scotland and working very closely with them to ensure that the resourcing impact of the new regime is minimised as far as possible. As I pointed out there are a number of ways in which this might be achieved, including how we commence implementation of the Bill, and I would like to reassure Committee members that Ministers I am amenable to bringing forward appropriate amendments at Stage 2 of the Bill if this is a reasonable way to achieve a smoother transition.

The fee for the application process

138. The Scottish Ministers should continue to make the case to the UK Government for a fee for shotguns and firearms which will ensure full cost recovery.

I accept this recommendation. Scottish Ministers have written to the Home Office on several occasions in recent years urging the Westminster Government to increase the tariff of fees to a more realistic level, reflecting the costs to the police of providing the licensing service. I have therefore welcomed the recent decision to increase fees from 6 April 2015 – the first rise for almost 15 years. I wrote to the responsible UK Minister in December, welcoming the proposed rise but expressing disappointment that the new fees would still not cover the costs to the police of processing the applications. We will continue to engage with the Home Office and other stakeholders to press for a fee tariff which fully reflects the costs involved.

Sale of air weapons to people who reside outside Scotland

139. The Scottish Government should ensure Part 1 of the Bill does not prevent remote sales outside Scotland to people who reside in all other parts of the UK.
I accept this recommendation. The Report highlights (at paragraph 117) an issue raised by the Gun Trade Association and others with regard to sales of an air weapon to a person outwith Scotland but within Great Britain. I have listened to the concerns expressed about this and propose to bring forward an amendment at Stage 2. This will enable a person to purchase an air weapon in Scotland and have it delivered to a Registered Firearms Dealer in England or Wales for collection. This ensures that such sales and transfers are conducted on a face to face basis in accordance with existing legislation.

Unique weapons identification mark

140. The Scottish Government consider whether it might be feasible to include some form of identifier mark as part of the design of the air weapons certificate system. The Government should also take the opportunity to engage the UK Government and the European Commission, on the possibility of introducing suitable EU regulations in this area.

The issue of whether and how to identify individual air weapons within the licensing regime has been considered in detail throughout the development of the policy and legislation. The Scottish Firearms Consultative Panel (SFCP), who helped to shape the policy behind the draft provisions, agreed at a very early stage that it would be appropriate to license a person to have one or more air weapons, rather than to license the gun itself. This allows for a light-touch, proportionate approach to the regulation of air weapons in a way which is affordable and practicable. Continuing discussions with stakeholders, including Police Scotland and the Gun Trade Association, confirm there is little or no support for a proposal to mark weapons individually.

I have noted the views of the British Association for Shooting and Conservation (BASC), who were members of the SFCP, and others that the inability to identify individual guns will mean that the licensing regime will be ineffectual in helping to reduce crime. I do not accept this contention, this view is supported by Police Scotland and others. All three police witnesses who gave evidence to the Committee on 25 February were clear on that point. In response to questioning Assistant Chief Constable Wayne Mawson said:

> “I can say that we expect that the benefit of legislation that prevents people who are not fit and proper, or who do not have a good reason to do so, from holding air weapons, will be that a huge number of air weapons will be handed in to the police for destruction. That means that there will be fewer air rifles and air pistols lying around in wardrobes, on bedside tables, in garages and in attics—where, to be frank, anybody could pick them up, including young people. That has to be a good thing.”

As set out at the beginning of this reply, the Bill proposes to make it an offence to use, possess, purchase or acquire an air weapon without holding a certificate (subject to certain exemptions), rather than regulate “ownership” as such. When an offence occurs the police will need to establish who was in possession of or using the air weapon at the time, but not necessarily who owns the air weapon. In terms of detecting crime it is also worth stressing that there is already legislation in place to deal with the criminal misuse of air weapons and the police are experienced in its application. In practice, police officers will investigate such crime as they do for any other offence, through a mix of evidence gathering and intelligence. This might include identifying a specific gun, perhaps through witness evidence or any available ballistic information. Accordingly, having a unique identifying mark is not critical to proving that a person unlawfully used, possessed, purchased or acquired an air weapon.
Any change to this fundamental principle of licensing the person, not the gun, would represent a significant shift in the Bill’s intent and effect and is likely to prove difficult to achieve. To be tamperproof, any unique identifier would have to be embedded or affixed under controlled circumstances, either on manufacture or at the point of sale. Each would then have to be recorded and, in order to be a meaningful control, tracked through subsequent transactions. In addition, any air weapon entering the country, with a visitor or on import for sale, would similarly have to be marked and tracked. This would represent an onerous additional burden on the police, dealers and air weapons users.

It should also be noted that there is no consistent approach to identifying weapons amongst countries where they are manufactured. Additionally, many low-cost imported weapons, in particular from China, have interchangeable parts and this could render identifiers ineffective.

On the Committee’s final point, the UK Government has no plans to introduce licensing of air weapons and resisted the Calman Commission’s 2009 recommendation that responsibility for air weapons should be devolved. Similarly, there is little apparent appetite in the European Commission for introducing any central regulation of air weapons. The overarching EU legislation on firearms - Council Directive 91/477/EEC (as amended) – does not include controls on air weapons and priorities for the Commission lie in areas such as the control of high powered firearms, including controls on trafficking, reactivation of decommissioned weapons and the use of guns in organised crime. While I would support any reasonable measures to better control potentially lethal air weapons, I do not see any prospect for such regulation in the foreseeable future.

PART 2: ALCOHOL LICENSING

Duration of policy statement

261. We support the extension of the period to a maximum of five years although we consider, given its importance, the new statement should require to be in place within 12 months of a new Board being appointed.

I note and welcome the views expressed by the Committee. The 18 month period is based upon the time currently taken by Licensing Boards to undertake this process. If a new Board is appointed in May, it may well be the Autumn before they are meeting on a regular basis, and able to acquaint themselves with the existing Licensing Policy Statement. The legislation does explicitly allow for a Board to introduce a Licensing Policy Statement early should they so wish. On balance I feel that the timings, as offered within the Bill would allow a Board a reasonable period of time in which to prepare, consult on and bring in a new Licensing Policy Statement.

Fit and Proper Person Test

262. We welcome the reintroduction of this test. We consider the test should also be applied to connected persons.

I welcome the Committee’s support for the reintroduction of the fit and proper person test. I also note the Committee’s comments regarding connected persons, and will consider this matter further for Stage 2
263. We welcome the additional flexibility this provision will give Licensing Boards although we have concerns about the inflexibility of Licensing Boards based in large measure upon a fear of challenge. We recommend the guidance be revised as a matter of priority and the guidance make clear Boards have the maximum flexibility to make different policy decisions relating to individual localities, types of license and types of premises.

I note the comments of the Committee. The Scottish Government will update the guidance as soon as practicable, once the work on the Bill has been completed.

264. We also recommend club licenses and occasional licenses require to be included by Boards when considering their overprovision statements.

I note the comments of the Committee. It is important that overprovision assessments can operate in a clear and robust manner. The preparation of an overprovision assessment places a considerable burden on local authorities, and including additional information within this would increase this burden.

Occasional licences are, by their very nature, for covering events that could be infrequent and last for only a short space of time. An occasional licence is only granted for a short period, at most 14 days, and there is a limit on the number of occasional licences that a members club can apply for, and there are order making powers that would allow the Government to limit the number of occasional licences for other premises. We are not convinced that including occasional licences in the overprovision assessment would be particularly practical, and it might even serve to undermine an overprovision assessment, by creating areas for dispute.

Members clubs are not open to the public, the public may only enter when signed in and accompanied by a member. As such it is not clear that the inclusion of members clubs within an overprovision assessment would be a useful or meaningful addition to the assessment.

Therefore I am not persuaded that including members clubs and occasional licenses would have any significant measurable impact on improvements in determining levels of overprovision.

265. We see a clear role for Health Boards and Alcohol and Drug Partnerships as well as the Police in providing evidence to Boards to assist them in reaching their determinations. We expect all Health Boards to be proactive in presenting and championing health inequalities to Boards. Our later recommendations around reporting should also assist in this regard.

The Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 is underpinned by five licensing objectives, including “protecting and improving public health” these should, for example, inform licensing policy statements, licence refusals, the attachment of conditions and licence reviews. The Scottish Government would also encourage all Health Boards and Alcohol and Drug Partnerships to be proactive in sharing their experience of what works in their area with Boards to assist them in reaching their determinations.

266. We recognise the quasi-judicial status of Licensing Boards. In our opinion this should allow them to be more robust in setting out their policy on overprovision and less inclined thereafter to “hide” behind the prospect of review by the courts. A well developed and rigorous policy should prevent Licensing Boards from the risk that decisions will be successfully reviewed.

267. We also expect Boards to involve their local communities and recommend in line with other empowerment initiatives Boards be required to consult local communities before and during their consideration of overprovision determinations.

I welcome the views of the Committee on the role of Boards and agree that they have a key role to play in tackling alcohol misuse, reducing crime and preserving public order. In doing this it is important that Boards carefully consider the evidence presented to them by the public and professionals, such as Police Scotland and the NHS, and use the powers available to them when considering overprovision. The Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 already imposes requirements on Boards to consult in relation to the preparation of their Licensing Policy Statement and Overprovision Assessment. I believe that this is an important element of the process, with some Boards demonstrating excellent practice. I would encourage all Boards to seek to engage fully and widely on the preparation of these documents.

Licensing Objectives

268. We welcome the amendment to the licensing objectives to include “young persons”.

I welcome the Committee’s comments. I know that young people are particularly vulnerable to the effects of alcohol, and it is vital that the health interests of young persons are at the heart of the licensing regime.

The distinction between children and young persons can create difficulties for Licensing Boards when dealing with issues around young persons and can have the effect that issues around 16/17 year olds cannot be considered in relation to the ‘protecting children’ objective. I am therefore of the view that the amendment to the licensing objective will address this issue.

269. We also recommend, given the overwhelming evidence we received of harm and links to disorder from overconsumption, an additional objective be added to include the reduction of consumption.

I note your suggestion to create a sixth licensing objective. However I am not convinced that an additional objective such as this is required. The current objectives: ‘preventing crime and disorder’; ‘securing public safety’; ‘preventing public nuisance’; ‘protecting and improving public health’, and ‘protecting children from harm’ are already broadly framed. It is my opinion that the current licensing objectives already sufficiently cover issues connected to the harm and links to disorder from overconsumption.

I consider that such an objective would sit uneasily within an Act whose purpose is for regulating the sale of alcohol and it is difficult to see how it could operate in practice for Licensing Boards, the trade or the public. I therefore believe that Boards and Police Scotland should continue to use the powers available to them within the Act to address issues such as public nuisance and to improve public health.

Spent convictions and police intelligence

270. We accept the rationale for adding spent convictions as proposed.
I welcome the Committee’s comments.

271. We also recommend, given the nature of crimes that can now result in alternatives to prosecution (ATP’s), that Boards be advised of all ATP’s.

I note the Committee’s suggestion.

It might be helpful to explain that presently no information about ATPs, subject to a period of 3 months for certain types of ATPs, are made available through the system of disclosure (e.g. a basic disclosure check, a standard disclosure check do not contain information on ATPs). This approach of limited disclosure period for certain ATPs and no disclosure for other ATPs was agreed by Parliament through section 109 of the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Act 2010 (“the 2010 Act”).

In addition, Parliament agreed in early 2013 that no ATPs should feature as part of the general exceptions and exclusions to the protections afforded individuals under the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974. That is, protections afforded individuals under 1974 Act (by virtue of section 109 of the 2010 Act) not to have to disclose an ATP once it is spent are not disapplied by the Rehabilitation of Offenders (Exclusions and Exceptions) (Scotland) Order 2013. There is therefore no responsibility placed on individuals themselves to disclose spent ATPs or authority for spent ATPs to be included in disclosure certificates issued by Disclosure Scotland.

While we understand why it may have been suggested to allow for information about ATPs to be disclosed, I agree with the previously expressed view of Parliament that disclosure of information about ATPs is disproportionate given ATPs are used for low level offending. I consider such a change would require a wider look at the appropriateness of such disclosure across a range of areas and Stage 2 of this Bill would not seem an appropriate place to develop such significant new policy relating to a wider area than simply licensing.

272. We do not consider that police intelligence in a raw form should be made available to Boards. It is a matter for the Police to make available relevant information to Boards in a manner consistent with ECHR considerations.

I note the comments of the Committee. It is for the police to determine what information to place before Boards, in accordance with ECHR. The term police intelligence is broad. It can, for example, include incidents witnessed by a police officer or reports received in an area. I understand that the police are currently considering best practice in relation to the presentation of intelligence to Boards. This process will be informed by Board practice and case law. Finally, it is for the Board to consider the weight that it places upon the evidence placed before it, and their decision would be open to appeal.

Duty on Boards to prepare an annual financial report

273. We welcome this provision and also recommend Boards, in order to become more accountable to the public prepare annual reports. We draw to the attention of the Scottish Government the suggestions in this regard contained in the letter to us from Alcohol Focus dated 15 January 2015. As a minimum we expect to see the report containing information on how the board has delivered in relation to the licensing objectives and its policy statements including overprovision. We also expect a sufficient amount of data to be contained showing the number and type of each licensed premises within the Board area along with details of the number of... occasional licenses granted during the period. We would expect the Bill to set out as a minimum the above along with a requirement to report within 6 months of the end of each reporting year.

I note the comments of the Committee; the provision in relation to a Board being required to produce an annual report was prepared following a review of Board fees where it proved difficult to establish an overall picture of income and expenditure. Boards will be required to provide the report within three months of the end of the financial year. I am sympathetic to the views expressed by Alcohol Focus Scotland, the current provision within the Bill already includes the ability to specify additional material for inclusion within these reports and we intend to work with appropriate stakeholders to determine what content should most usefully be included and then to use secondary legislation to make this absolutely clear. In addition the Scottish Government already gathers annual statistics from local Licensing Boards on a variety of issues, although occasional licences are not currently included, we would be happy to include this information in future statistics.

Occasional Licenses

274. We expect to see section 57 of the Bill commenced without delay.

I note the comments of the Committee. The Scottish Government will look to commence the removal of the five year ban on reapplying for a personal licence as a result of failure to submit a certificate for refresher training as soon as practicably possible following Royal Assent.

275. When applying to club premises provision should be made that these do not have the effect of circumventing other requirements generally applying to the club, for example the requirement for the signing in of guests.

I note the comments of the Committee. It might be helpful to point out that a member’s club licence is distinct from a full premises licence. There are certain restrictions and certain benefits that relate to a member’s club licence, for example any guests must be signed in and accompanied by a member but the fee charged is in the lowest category. Where a member’s club wishes to be open to a public, then they must apply for a full premises licence, or apply for an occasional licence. For a member’s club the total period covered by occasional licences is limited to a maximum of 56 days.

Any application for an occasional licence is notified to the Chief Constable and LSO and anyone can lodge an objection. The Board can refuse the application, for example where the granting of the application would be inconsistent with any of the licensing objectives.

276. We recommend that a licence to sell alcohol should not automatically cover the provision of public entertainment. If no public entertainment licence exists one must be sought, if required, as part of the occasional licence application.

I note the committee’s views in respect of the interaction of occasional licences and public entertainment licences. We will consider the issue further for stage 2.

Members Clubs

277. The Scottish Government requires to satisfy us the existing legislation is adequate to prevent the abuses of club licences identified during our evidence sessions. Failing which we recommend appropriate provision is made to incorporate the club’s constitution into the main operating plan.

I am aware of strong concerns about members clubs, this was a matter the Scottish Government has already consulted on. We were however unable to find any consensus whether an issue with members clubs actually existed, or how best to address it. Therefore this is an issue that we intend to investigate further.

278. We recommend the fit and proper person test applies to all transfers.

I note the views of the Committee and will consider this issue for Stage 2.

Surrender of Licenses

279. We do not support the suggestions made for change in this area. We have heard no evidence to convince us that businesses should be able to avoid current regulations designed for safety or other reasons through this method.

Site Only Licenses

280. We do not support the suggestions made for change in this area. We consider greater clarity within overprovision statements and procedures thereunder should provide the necessary information required by developers. We note for example the effect of recent business decisions made by large retail groups not to develop sites. They could under these proposals hold these types of licenses for a considerable period before trading commences. This could impact on other businesses seeking licences during the interim period between a grant and sales commencing.

Combined answer to 279 and 280

I note and agree with the Committee’s comments.

Major v Minor variations

281. We recommend the Scottish Government urgently review the types of applications falling into each of these categories with a view to ensuring local residents have adequate opportunity to make representations about variations which might adversely affect them. We expect the revised guidance to enhance the rights of residents to make representation and remove existing anomalies as reported to us.

I note the comments of the Committee. Under the alcohol licensing regime set out in the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005, as amended, the premises licence includes a large volume of information. This includes the application form, as well as the operating plan and layout plan. It is an offence to trade not in accordance with the premises licence. Therefore, if the licence holder intends to operate in a manner which deviates from the details originally approved, then a variation is required. Such variations can be classed as either minor or major variations.

Variations which are considered minor are set out at section 29(6) of the 2005 Act, and further minor variations are provided for in The Licensing (Minor Variations) (Scotland) Regulations 2011. Minor variations must be granted by the Licensing Board for a small fee. If a variation is not a minor variation then it will be a major variation. Major variations are subject to section 21(1), 21(2) and section 22, that is the requirement to notify neighbours, health board and police, with it being open to anyone to lodge an objection. All major variations must be considered by the Board at a hearing.

There are no existing plans for reform in this area, although we would particularly welcome any concerns from stakeholders about the current list of specified minor variations if there are concerns that issues that should be subject to a full hearing are being treated as minor variations.

Home Deliveries

282. The Scottish Government should confirm existing legislation is adequate to deal with any issues arising around home deliveries, so called “Dial-a-booze” arrangements.

I note the concerns of the Committee on issues around home delivery, such as ‘dial-a-booze’ arrangements. I am of the view that appropriate legislation is in place.

Any sale of alcohol outwith the terms of a premises licence will be an offence under section 1 of the Act with a fine not exceeding £20,000 and/or imprisonment for a term not exceeding 6 months. The police can always seek a review of a premises licence and the Licensing Board can apply appropriate conditions to it.

In terms of the delivery of alcohol, section 119 imposes a requirement for a delivery book or invoice to be held by anyone delivering alcohol. There are offences in relation to delivering without such records, and refusal to co-operate with a constable or Licensing Standards Officer if they want to inspect their vehicle or records.

Section 120 of the Act prohibits late night deliveries of alcohol to a premises (other than a licensed premise) between the hours of midnight and six am. Any person who delivers alcohol or who knowingly allows the alcohol to be delivered commits an offence. We believe that the current offences offer the police sufficient scope to address concerns in this area.

Additional enforcement powers - gambling premises

283. We recommend the Scottish Government amend the Bill to close a loophole which prevents Licensing Standards Officers from undertaking an important public protection role in gambling which they currently fulfil in relation to alcohol.

I note the concerns of the Committee on the effective enforcement of gambling by Licensing Standards Officers. I believe that this would require an amendment to, or use of the secondary legislation making powers in section 304 of the Gambling Act 2005 to designate an authorised person. This matter is ultimately reserved to the UK Government at Westminster under Heading B9 of Schedule 5 of the Scotland Act 1998.

I do not therefore believe that it is within the powers of the Scottish Parliament to legislate to resolve this issue. I will continue to encourage the UK Department for Culture, Media & Sport to bring in appropriate legislation to address this issue, and to encourage the UK Government to fully devolve powers in relation to gambling to the Scottish Parliament.
PART 3: CIVIC LICENSING

PART 3: CIVIC LICENSING: TAXIS AND PRIVATE CAR HIRE

319. In our opinion the principal reason for licensing taxis and private hire cars must be to ensure the safety of passengers. The separate licensing of vehicles and drivers both contribute towards delivery of this objective. Changes in the market must therefore take place within a framework that does not allow this fundamental requirement to be evaded. Further reasons must include the delivery of an accessible, reliable and affordable service to customers whilst also preventing opportunities for criminal activity.

320. We are in no doubt that if a licensing system was being designed now it would be a single regime applying to both taxis and private hire vehicles and their respective drivers. We accept the majority view that change would be disruptive to operators and the licensing authorities nor do we consider change should be made without full consideration of all factors and detailed consultation. That said we are clear the licensing regime requires review and we recommend the Scottish Government consider a full review of all aspects of taxi and private car licensing and report back to this Committee within this Parliamentary term; see our recommendation at paragraph 42.

I welcome the views of the Committee. The Scottish Government undertook a detailed consultation on taxis and private hire car licensing from 28 November 2012 to 15 March 2013. The response to the consultation and a summary have since been published.

http://www.gov.scot/Publications/2013/09/2230

The consultation was issued following a wide ranging review of the taxis and private hire car regime, and asked a range of questions. The responses to the consultation informed the provisions within the Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill. I agree that further work to review the taxi and private hire car regime would be appropriate, but believe that rather than a fundamental review, it would be better to focus on specific aspects of the regime. This can then inform updates to the relevant secondary legislation. The Scottish Government intends to take forward specific work to consider the impact of technology such as smartphone apps, as well as reviewing the guidance to allow the sharing of best practice at local authority level. The Scottish Government is in continuous contact with relevant stakeholders and will always seek to respond to emerging issues of interest.

I would be happy to provide the Committee with an update on progress with this work.

321. We have discrimination concerns around two aspects of the existing regime. With the advent of the smartphone technology the difference between taxis and private hire cars, at least in the minds of the user, has been significantly eroded. Provided the service is safe, responses to our video suggested users saw little difference between the two types. However, for those who do not own, or those who cannot operate a smartphone the benefit could be limited. Equally, for reasons of infirmity or disability, some people may be more restricted in their use of modern technology and some private hire cars may not be accessible for their needs. Secondly on price, in the event demand sees price rise, as has been the case in other countries, there will be an adverse impact on the less well off. We therefore ask the Scottish Government to address both of these concerns at stage 2.

I welcome the views of the committee. Taxis and private hire cars provide a vital service to the Scottish public and we believe that the current Bill will continue to enable this. I would expect that taxi and private hire car provision will continue to be available to non-smartphone users. The existing ability of local authorities to impose conditions already offers them flexibility to address such concerns. I share your concern that taxis and private hire cars should not charge unreasonable fares. Fares are currently set by the local Licensing Authority. It is currently an offence, where a vehicle is fitted with a taximeter, for any person to charge in excess of the scales set by the licensing authority under s.17 and 18 of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982. The Scottish Government are aware of concerns that vehicles without a taximeter are not constrained by this, and officials are currently investigating the most proportionate means to address this.

322. On section 60 we are unclear why the overprovision test for private hire vehicles should be different or how that “creates greater consistency within the regime” to an extent which would be recognised by users. We ask the Scottish Government to reassess their approach here and unless this can be achieved through guidance amend accordingly at stage 2.

I note the views of the Committee. The existing unmet demand test in relation to taxis, relies on examination of taxi ranks and an ability to hail a taxi. As private hire cars are not able to either use ranks or to be hailed, a separate test is required. That is why the Bill provides for a test of overprovision. There are already overprovision tests within the alcohol licensing regime and the houses in multiple occupation regime. I recognise that it will be necessary to develop a fresh methodology and officials will work with relevant stakeholders to arrive at best practice for any such test.

323. We recommend the same knowledge test should apply to all drivers regardless of their vehicle. Again an appropriate amendment to avoid local authorities applying internally different tests for the two regimes should be made.

I note the comments by the Committee. The Licensing Authority is at liberty to determine whether or not to apply a test, what to test, and whether to require such a test of either, or both taxis and private hire cars. The ability to test is not intended to create a barrier to entry, but to improve the service that is offered to the public. I believe that the local Licensing Authority is best placed to determine what tests would be appropriate. As a private hire is not able to use a taxi rank or to be hailed in the street, it could be argued that there is less requirement for a private hire car driver to demonstrate their knowledge of the area. I would envisage that training could cover such areas as customer care, disability awareness and first aid. Upon commencement it would be our intention to offer guidance to Local Authorities making this clear and encouraging them to make best use of this new ability.

324. We have no recommendations on section 62, being content with the proposed course of action set out by the Cabinet Secretary.

325. We recommend greater sharing of information between licensing authorities. This should cover the operation of firms within areas as well as information about licence holders and their vehicles. We expect the Scottish Government to encourage and facilitate through appropriate legislation, if necessary, the sharing of information between authorities.
I note the comments of the Committee. Under Schedule 1, para 4 of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 it is already possible for a Licensing Authority, when considering a new application or a renewal, to make such reasonable enquiries as they see fit and include the results of these inquiries in matters they take into account. I would therefore envisage that Licensing Authorities could already make inquiries to adjacent Authorities where they felt it was appropriate. In addition the police are a statutory consultee, and as a national police force would be in a position to provide relevant information from across Scotland and beyond to the Licensing Authority. We would be happy to further encourage such sharing of information when the best practice guidance is updated after the passage of the Bill.

PART 3: CIVIC LICENSING: METAL DEALERS

390. The Scottish Government should consider the merits of a national licensing scheme and report back to the Committee in this Parliamentary term.

I note the views of the Committee, however I remain of the view that the local licensing authorities are best placed to regulate metal dealers, including itinerant metal dealers. The issuing authority can consider both the issues that it is directly aware of within its own area, and those from outwith its area that are reported to it by Police Scotland. I am not convinced that requiring an itinerant metal dealer to seek a specific licence for each local authority area in which they operate would be proportionate, or would necessarily lead to significantly better enforcement.

Compliance and enforcement

406. Experience in England and Wales has shown that non-legislative interventions – Operation Tornado and the establishment of the National Metal Theft Taskforce – have had a significant impact in reducing metal crime and strengthened the impact of the legislation. We urge the Scottish Government to continue to work with the British Transport Police and Police Scotland to ensure the legislation is supported by a robust compliance and enforcement programme.

I note and agree with the Committee’s comments. The Scottish Government will continue to work with the Police and other enforcement bodies to ensure that the new regulatory regime is supported.

Banning cash payments for metal

407. We ask the Scottish Government to respond to comments we heard that the payment methods are poorly defined in the Bill, and to consider whether further clarification is needed.

I believe that the payment methods clearly state what are acceptable methods of payment (as opposed to alternative formulations which state what is unacceptable). However, I will consider for Stage 2 whether further clarification is required.

Improved standards of record keeping and customer identification

408. We welcome the commitment from the Scottish Government to consider amending the Bill to remove the need for metal dealers to record the date on which metal was processed.
I note the Committee’s comments and will consider this matter further for Stage 2.

409. We ask the Scottish Government to respond to the suggestions made to us about the need to clarify the types of ID that would be deemed suitable to verify customers’ identity and in relation to keeping digital records.

I believe that the ID requirements need to be seen in the context that all payments for metal will be made into bank accounts (for which rigorous ID checks are already required). However, I will look at possible amendments for Stage 2 that will allow for specification of particular types of ID.

Removing the requirement to retain metal

410. We ask the Scottish Government to respond to the suggestion that revoking the requirement to retain metal would make it difficult for licensing authorities to impose this locally.

I would not agree with this assessment. Removing the requirement to retain metal as a mandatory requirement would not prevent a licensing authority imposing it on a discretionary basis. There is no bar in the legislation that would prevent this.

Definition of a metal dealer

411. We welcome the Scottish Government’s commitment to consider expanding the definition of a metal dealer. The Bill represents a good opportunity to modernise the definitions in the 1982 Act and we urge the Government to work with the metal dealing industry and enforcement bodies to find a suitable form of words that captures the industry as a whole and has limited unintended consequences.

I note the Committee’s comments and will consider this matter further for Stage 2. As noted during the evidence sessions it is important to capture within the licensing requirement those, at the periphery of the trade, who profit from the sale of metal. Equally, I would wish to avoid licensing some of the incidental activities that to a very limited degree might involve the acquisition of metal e.g. a heating engineer replacing a boiler or a landscaper who pulls out an old metal gate.

National register of metal dealers

412. We recommend the Scottish Government considers options for establishing a national register of metal dealers in Scotland.

I note and agree with the Committee’s comments in respect of the value of such a register, although further work will have to be undertaken to establish how such would be organised and paid for. I will consider this matter further for Stage 2.

Requirement to display a licence

413. We welcome the Scottish Government’s commitment to consider how best to introduce the requirement that metal dealers must display their licence.

I believe that this can be delivered via secondary legislation and am of the view that this is the more suitable means of delivery for such a condition.
Penalties

414. We believe the maximum penalty liable under the legislation for breaching any of the licensing conditions should be uprated to take account of the substantial impact metal theft can have in terms of disruption to services and risk to life. Such a move would emphasise the seriousness of metal theft and act as a deterrent to criminals. We recommend that the Scottish Government consider bringing forward amendments at Stage 2 to increase the scale of fines liable under the legislation.

I note and agree with the Committee’s comments and will consider this for Stage 2.

PART 3: CIVIC LICENSING: PUBLIC ENTERTAINMENT

435. We are of the view that the proposals in this section of the Bill are non-contentious and are in general agreement with them. We recognise the concerns around transitional timescales and recommend the Scottish Government allow suitable timescales and provide guidance to deal with this transition.

436. We recognise concerns around costs and, while we would not expect a need for current costs of Public Entertainment licences to increase, we understand this would be a matter for licensing authorities.

I note the Committee’s comments on this section of the Bill. I agree that there is no obvious reason for costs, and consequently fees, to increase.

PART 3: CIVIC LICENSING: SEXUAL ENTERTAINMENT VENUES

503. We support the view of the Delegated Powers and Law Reform Committee in relation to second provision.

I note the Committee’s comments and refer to my response below.

Definitions

504. We welcome the Scottish Government’s commitment to provide guidance to assist licensing authorities in interpreting the definition and to utilise subordinate legislation to make specific provision to exclude an activity should it become necessary. Given the sustained concerns on this matter we recommend the Scottish Government amends the definition to exclude plays as defined in the Theatres Act 1968 from the licensing regime.

I note the Committee’s comments and the Scottish Government will provide guidance to Licensing Authorities to assist implementation of the new regime. I have noted the concerns of those representing Theatres that plays could fall within licensing.

I am confident that plays will not require a licence even if they are ground-breaking and pushing at boundaries. Unless a performance is intended to sexually stimulate then a licence will not be required. In addition the Scottish Government is proposing secondary legislation making powers that would allow any instances of “inadvertent licensing “ to be dealt with via secondary legislation.
Exemption for venues holding no more than four performances a year

505. It is clear from the evidence we have received from all quarters a provision to exempt four occasions from the SEV licensing regime creates a loophole whereby those who wish to circumvent the licensing regime could move from venue to venue avoiding regulation. We believe all SEVs should be regulated to safeguard the performers and therefore we recommend the exemption provision should be removed from the Bill.

I note the view of stakeholders and those of the Committee. I note however, that in England and Wales (which allows a far higher figure of 12 exemptions) that there has been little evidence of operators conducting sexual entertainment on an itinerant basis.

Part of the rationale for the new licensing regime is to deal with those premises that operate on a daily basis and have a potential impact on the localities in which they operate. That potential impact may be seen through, for example, nuisance, criminality, anti-social behaviour or simply by operating in an area that is inappropriate for a particular area. These issues are unlikely to arise to the same degree in the context of very occasional activity.

Whilst the licensing regime as drafted is believed to capture about 17-20 premises across Scotland, were no exemption to be in place for very occasional activity, we would be unable to accurately estimate how many premises might be affected. It may well be a considerable number given it would capture pubs and clubs that may occasionally hire out a hall or function room for some sort of performance. I would be concerned that the number of premises affected would be significantly beyond that currently envisaged or consulted upon.

Power to set an “appropriate” number of sexual entertainment venues for an area

506. We acknowledge licensing authorities when implementing the provision will have to give consideration to all the factors in their area as the power is not unfettered. This will require careful determination otherwise there is potential for legal challenge from existing businesses. We therefore welcome the Scottish Government’s commitment to provide guidance which will assist licensing authorities with their interpretation of this provision.

I note and agree with the Committee’s view that guidance will be required to assist local authorities and will ensure that such guidance is produced.

Appropriateness of a discretionary regime

507. The Committee acknowledges the Scottish Government’s reasoning for adopting a discretionary approach to licensing of SEVs, however the overwhelming opinion of those who submitted evidence, including importantly enforcement authorities, was the licensing regime should be mandatory. We recommend the SEV regime should be mandatory not least to avoid the potential for “regime shopping”.

I remain of the view that it would be disproportionate to require all 32 local Licensing Authorities to establish a licensing regime for an activity that currently only takes place in 4 or 5 authorities. Whilst it may be possible for an individual to seek a more permissive regime before opening a sexual entertainment venue, it might be thought that an operator would be constrained by the fact that demand is likely to be limited to a fairly small number of urban locations.
Responsibility for licensing sexual entertainment venues

It was clear from the evidence we took from those who are pro-sexual entertainment, and those who are anti-sexual entertainment, it would be more appropriate to bring all the elements of licensing SEVs (including advertising and alcohol) under the control of a single body. This would allow dual licensing issues to be dealt with more easily and simplify the complaints route for the public. We recommend The Scottish Government should identify the most appropriate body to carry out this role in light of the experience of the previous regime and, taking into account the need to have oversight to deal with any dual licensing issues, bring forward amendments at Stage 2.

My view is that the licensing of sexual entertainment falls naturally into the civic licensing responsibilities of local authorities. Indeed the proposed licensing regime is predicated on the architecture of the 1982 Act. We do not believe that either local accountability or the effectiveness of the scheme would be enhanced by such a move.

I believe that the new scheme can co-exist successfully alongside other licensing regimes (especially the alcohol licensing regime).

I do see some scope to expand the regime to deal more effectively with advertising of premises and will consider possible amendments at Stage 2.

Beyond this, I consider that this recommendation sits, in part, alongside the recommendations at 42 and 44 for major licensing reform about which I committed to respond to the committee within this Parliamentary term.

PART 3: CIVIC LICENSING: CIVIC LICENSING GENERAL

42. We believe the time is right for a review of the 1982 Act as it is not designed for the modern age and, some witnesses suggested it struggled to be fit for purpose. We recommend the Scottish Government consider and report back to us within this Parliamentary term on undertaking a review of the 1982 Act, with a particular focus on where it can be modernised as well as considering harmonisation and streamlining across the various licensing regimes.

I note the views of the Committee. The Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 was subject to a detailed review and appropriate amendments were made, for example through the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Act 2010. We have also carried out a number of specific consultations and carefully considered the evidence and views of the Committee, in order to inform the current Bill and amendments to it. The overall architecture of the 1982 Act allows considerable ability to determine and amend regimes via secondary legislation and I am content that this will continue to allow appropriate amendment to the regime to address changes.

I consider that further review would be a very major piece of work but we will consider the matter further and return to the committee in due course.

43. In the short term we recommend the Scottish Government considers the submissions we received on the Bill which suggest changes to the Bill to improve the operation of the 1982 Act and bring forward appropriate amendments at Stage 2.
I note the comments of the Committee, the Scottish Government is carefully reviewing the views expressed by the Committee and witnesses and is considering appropriate amendments.

44. Given the dual licensing issues and our recommendation at paragraph 42 we also recommend the Scottish Government consider and report back to us within this Parliamentary term on bringing all licensing in Scotland under a single regime.

I note the views of the Committee. It is inevitable that a large business or premises might undertake a wide variety of activities. It is not necessarily practical that these are all regulated under the same licensing regime. Similarly it would be difficult to draft legislation that could effectively regulate such a wide variety of activities, without it being subject to constant amendment.

I am therefore of the view that there will therefore inevitably exist circumstances where dual licensing might be required. That said, where opportunities exist to streamline regulatory structures I am happy to take them. For example, the Bill provides for a simplification in licensing of Theatres.

As indicated in the answer to recommendation 42 we will consider the matter further and write to the committee within the Parliamentary term.

Effectiveness of the 1982 Act

530. We recommend the Scottish Government amends the Bill to create licensing objectives for the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 in order to assist licensing authorities to deal with, for example, public nuisance. Allied to this recommendation, we recommend the bill should be further amended to provide for a system to review and revoke licences having regard to these licensing objectives.

I believe that the current system works successfully with the objectives implied, and supported by case law, as opposed to being set out in legislation. For example, I do not believe that a Licensing Authority would be unable to deal with a public nuisance simply because tackling nuisance is not an objective under the Act.

I do see possible merit in a civic licensing regime underpinned by objectives. Were the 1982 Act to be reviewed entire, with a view to possible replacement, then it may well be that such a system would be desirable. I am concerned however that to make such a significant change, without full consultation, could lead to unintended consequences.

The Scottish Government did consult in 2013 upon a proposal to include objectives into civic licensing. The responses were mixed. While many would welcome such a move, others cautioned that it would be wrong to expect too much from the creation of objectives.

531. From our earlier work on community empowerment, we are only too well aware local authorities can be risk averse, however they are also fearful without legislation notifying communities might lead to legal challenge; we therefore recommend a framework to enable neighbour notification with regard to licence applications, in a similar manner as the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005, is added to the Bill to increase community participation in the licensing process.
I do not believe that there is anything to prevent a Licensing Authority attempting to notify neighbours of relevant applications. It would be logical extension of existing duties under the 1982 Act to publish details of applications.

It would be hard to find a straightforward, consistent approach to neighbour notification for the matters licensed under the Act. The cost of any national requirement to notify could well be considerable and would have to be borne by the trade, or the public. It is therefore essential that any amendments to the legislation be considered carefully. Clearly, some itinerant licences would be wholly unsuitable e.g. itinerant metal dealers, street traders. Whilst some premises licences could be subject to neighbourhood notification, what would be appropriate could vary dramatically. A public entertainment licence for a major rock concert would impact neighbours for a far greater distance than events of lesser scale. Certainly, the prescriptive approach of the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 does not seem entirely suitable.

It would also be our view that substantial consultation with local Licensing Authorities would be required before introducing such a mandatory requirement for neighbour notification.

On resuming—

Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill: Stage 1

The Deputy Presiding Officer (Elaine Smith): Good afternoon. The first item of business this afternoon is a debate on motion S4M-12994, in the name of Michael Matheson, on the Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill.

The Cabinet Secretary for Justice (Michael Matheson): I am happy to open this stage 1 debate on the Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill.

I thank my colleague and predecessor Kenny MacAskill, who brought forward the bill last year. I also thank the Local Government and Regeneration Committee, the Finance Committee and the Delegated Powers and Law Reform Committee for their work in considering the bill.

I was pleased to note from the Local Government and Regeneration Committee's report that it supports the general principles of the bill, in particular the licensing of air weapons. I am grateful to that committee for the manner in which it took evidence at stage 1. It invited a wide range of stakeholders to give evidence in the spirit of drawing out changes that will, in line with the aims of the bill, best improve the relevant licensing regime in Scotland. The evidence and the committee's report have been extremely valuable in helping the Government to reflect on whether we can make further improvements in particular areas, and the committee will have seen my response to its report.

I am pleased to be able to update the wider Parliament by providing an overview of the bill, which is in four parts. Part 1, which covers air weapons, sets out a new licensing regime for air weapons to be administered by Police Scotland. Part 2, which covers alcohol licensing, amends the existing licensing regime for alcohol licensing that is included in the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005. Part 3, which deals with civic licensing, amends the existing licensing regimes included in the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982. Finally, part 4 sets out general provisions.

I will look at air weapons first. The licensing of air weapons has been on our agenda for quite some time. Our 2007 manifesto set out plans to tackle that, and we reiterated that aim in our 2011 manifesto. Following the Calman commission's report in 2009, responsibility for the regulation of most air weapons was devolved in the Scotland Act 2012. Kenny MacAskill introduced the bill having chaired a firearms consultative panel of experts and carried out a wider consultation on the principles of licensing.

The aim has been to set out a regime that parallels existing firearms legislation where appropriate and is therefore familiar to the police and to shooters, but which is relatively light touch in its practical application.

The Local Government and Regeneration Committee suggested a few amendments in its stage 1 report. I have already responded to those recommendations, but I would like to mention a couple of the most prominent issues.

The first relates to Police Scotland and the need to smooth the transition workload for the work that it will undertake for the introduction of the licensing. Officials are still discussing that with the police to ensure that the impact of the new regime is minimised as far as possible. We are considering whether that is best achieved by way of an amendment at stage 2 or through regulations under the bill.

The second issue is the proposal to add some form of identifier mark to air weapons to support the certificate system. The Scottish firearms consultative panel agreed at a very early stage that it would be appropriate to license a person rather than the gun itself, and continuing discussions with stakeholders, including Police Scotland and the Gun Trade Association, confirm that there is little or no support for a proposal to mark weapons individually. Such a move would place immense additional burdens on the police, the trade and shooters while doing little to help tackle criminal misuse of air weapons. As a result, I do not intend to lodge at stage 2 amendments to introduce an identifier mark.
