On the bill’s alcohol licensing provisions, it was made clear in the consultation that people do not want a root-and-branch review of alcohol licensing legislation. However, certain areas are not working as effectively as they should be and, instead of proposing a radical overhaul of the regime, the bill examines those areas to find ways to improve the existing system. For example, the bill will take forward a commitment made in the 2011 Scottish National Party manifesto and create new offences of giving alcohol or making it available to a child or young person for consumption in a public place. That will allow Police Scotland to address the problem of the drinking dens where vulnerable young people can congregate to share alcohol.

The bill introduces a fit-and-proper test for both premises and personal licence applications, and licensing boards will also be able to consider spent offences. Those changes have been widely called for and will assist licensing boards in ensuring that only those who are fully appropriate can hold such a licence.

With regard to licensing board practice, we have clarified that an overprovision assessment can relate to an entire board area and can take account of licensing hours. We have also considered statements of licensing policy. Despite some very good practice at board level, such statements often fail to have the strategic impact that we had hoped, and as a result we are amending policy statements to ensure that they align better with local government elections. Such a move will encourage a new board to take stock, gather evidence and set a policy statement that reflects its own views and aspirations.

The bill contains a number of fairly technical amendments. For example, it amends the final licensing objective to include young people alongside children. The distinction between “children” and “young persons” can create difficulties for licensing boards in dealing with issues relating to young persons and can mean that issues involving 16 and 17-year-olds cannot be considered in relation to the protecting children objective. The amendment in the bill ensures that licensing boards have the power to consider such issues as part of the licensing objectives. There are also a number of provisions that should be welcomed by the trade, such as the removal of the five-year ban on reapplying for failure to render a personal licence refresher training certificate and the imposition of a duty on boards to report on their income and expenditure.

The bill improves the effectiveness of civic licensing regimes with a variety of reforms across a wide range of areas. For example, the bill will tighten up the licensing of metal dealers to ensure more effective regulation of the industry and to make it more difficult for metal thieves to dispose of stolen metal. It will deliver that objective by ensuring that all dealers are licensed, banning the use of cash as a payment for scrap, tightening record-keeping arrangements and requiring proper identification of customers.

The bill will allow communities to have a greater say over whether lap dancing takes place in their areas by giving local licensing authorities the power to control the number of licences for sexual entertainment venues in particular localities. Central to that proposal is the belief that local communities should be able to exercise appropriate control and regulate sexual entertainment venues that operate within their areas. Local licensing authorities are best placed to reflect the views of the communities that they serve and to determine whether sexual entertainment establishments should be authorised and under what conditions.

The bill simplifies the licensing of theatres by merging it with the public entertainment licensing regime, which will allow some theatres that currently have two licences to operate with a single licence. In addition, the new licensing regime will be more flexible, in that it will replace mandatory licensing with a discretionary system that will allow local licensing authorities to exempt smaller theatres if they so choose.

The bill also aims to bring greater consistency between and within taxi licensing regimes and private hire car licensing regimes. Local authorities are responsible for the taxi and private hire car licensing regimes. They have discretion in applying a local regime that best meets the specific requirements of their local area and can take account of the views of customers and the trade. In general, that local process works well, but we are aware that there have been a number of concerns about the taxi and private hire car licensing regimes for some time. Those concerns were highlighted by stakeholders during informal discussions and were further reinforced during the public consultation exercise.

Specific provisions in the bill include the power to refuse to grant private hire car licences on grounds of overprovision; the extension of driver testing to allow testing of private hire car drivers; and the removal of the contract exemptions from the licensing and regulation of taxis and private hire cars, which will bring hire cars that are used on contracts into the regime.

In part, the provisions acknowledge that, in parts of the country, taxis, private hire cars and contract hire cars are essentially operating in a very similar market. Some of the distinctions that have been made between their modes of operation—for example, the distinction between pre-booked cars and vehicles that use ranks or can be hailed—have been blurred as a result of changes in technology.

In addition to the amendments to specific regimes that are covered by the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982, the bill includes provisions that will have effect across the licensing parts of the 1982 act, the aim of which is to create greater consistency and clarity in the licensing regime.

The bill includes a number of provisions that are aimed at improving the operation of all civic government licensing regimes and clarifying compliance with the European Union services directive. Specific provisions include giving the Scottish ministers the power to make provision for the procedure to be followed at or in connection with hearings.

The bill introduces a new role—that of civic licensing standards officer. Civic licensing standards officers will have broadly the same powers and duties that authorised officers have under the 1982 act, but they will have specific functions in relation to providing information and guidance, checking compliance, providing mediation and taking appropriate action on perceived breaches of conditions to a licence that has been provided under the 1982 act.

I have set out the Government’s thinking on some of the key areas of what is a wide-ranging bill. I look forward to hearing the views of colleagues and to working with the committee as we continue with the bill’s passage through Parliament.

I move,

That the Parliament agrees to the general principles of the Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill.

14:44

Kevin Stewart (Aberdeen Central) (SNP): It is my pleasure to speak on behalf of the Local Government and Regeneration Committee. The Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill is an important and necessary piece of proposed legislation.

Before I embark on discussing the core of our deliberations, I will take a moment to set out the key role that licensing plays in Scotland. Licensing assists in preserving public order and safety, reducing crime and advancing public health. I will return to those objectives later, as they were the backdrop to our scrutiny and are fundamental to the recommendations that we made in our report.

Although we recognise the importance of those objectives, few of us consider the relevance of licensing to our daily lives. For those we spoke to, licensing is about their livelihoods, the services that they use and the activities in which they take part. The bill is wide ranging and deals with the complexities of licensing various activities, such as owning or using an air weapon, selling and purchasing alcohol, operating taxis or private hire cars, dealing in scrap metal, holding public entertainment events and running sexual entertainment venues.

Some obvious headline stories emerged from the bill—for example, the creation of two new licensing regimes: one for air weapons and the other for sexual entertainment venues. Both those aims are praiseworthy, but they are not the only stories that we uncovered. I will focus members’ attention on the other, perhaps less immediately obvious, parts of the bill—on topics that I and my colleagues believe are equally worthy of prominence in the debate and which perhaps have a wider impact on those living and working in modern Scotland. Modernity is another key theme that I will explore.

I will talk about how the committee set about the task of scrutinising this diverse bill. The bill was introduced in May last year, which afforded us time over the summer months to issue our call for evidence, which closed at the end of September and received 146 responses. The responses came from a wide section of stakeholder groups such as local authorities, drug and alcohol partnerships, equality organisations, energy and transport providers and the police, to name but a few. We also heard from a wide range of interested individuals.

Alex Fergusson (Galloway and West Dumfries) (Con): I understand that, when the committee undertook its scrutiny, Police Scotland was able to give statistics on airgun crime from April to July 2014, but that the figures for the year up to April 2014, unlike those for all previous years, had not been published and had been delayed until autumn this year. Did that give the committee any difficulties in having up-to-date information?

Kevin Stewart: We had information and data from a number of years about air weapons offences. We are all far too aware of the deaths and injuries that have taken place and the maiming of animals that has gone on across the country. That information gave us a good guide and is why I and the committee think that the air weapons licensing regime should be put in place.

As I said, we heard from a wide range of individuals and took a wide range of evidence. I thank all those who responded for the part that they played in helping us to examine the bill’s proposals.

Committee members had the opportunity to inform ourselves on the constituent subject areas. We held a number of informal meetings with academics, industry representatives and licensing experts to aid our understanding. I thank former committee members Mark McDonald, Stuart McMillan and Anne McTaggart for their work in exploring the various strands. They put in a huge amount of effort in doing so. While thanking members past, I will also mention the new committee members, as it was Clare Adamson, Cara Hilton and Willie Coffey who picked up the baton and carried it to the finishing line. We held nine themed evidence sessions and heard from the cabinet secretary, culminating in our stage 1 report being unanimously agreed to and published.

Before I move on to the specifics of our scrutiny and recommendations, I will say a little about the committee’s engagement activities. Engagement is a key priority for our committee. We have had close to 4,000 new engagements with ordinary people, over and above the well-kent faces. Many hold views on local government, and people need to be encouraged to share those views with us. Engagement is a long-term relationship in which trust is earned.

We published a promoted Facebook post on taxis and private hire cars in the Highland area because a gap had been identified in the information that we had and we needed to seek further views. That post was shared by 56 people. Our YouTube video on taxis and private hire cars was also a success; it amassed close to 1,000 views, which demonstrates the public’s level of interest in the topic. Comments that we received fed directly into our thinking on the bill proposals.

Responses to our video suggested that, in the minds of users, taxis and private hire cars are to all intents and purposes the same. One of our principal recommendations is that the Scottish Government should consider a full review of all aspects of taxi and hire car licensing because, if a licensing system was being designed now, it would—in our opinion—be implemented differently.

Our experience of engagement has shown us that, to be successful, engagement has to be well targeted, relevant and accessible. People have to feel that they are being listened to, and the value of their comments needs to be demonstrated. Only then will we encourage the quieter voices to enter the discussion.

I preface my comments on our findings by saying that we support moves to license air weapons and to have a separate licensing regime for sexual entertainment venues. We have made a few recommendations on how to improve those proposed regimes, although others may like to comment on those aspects.

I will concentrate on some of our key recommendations concerning the alcohol, taxi and private hire car, and metal dealer provisions. The alcohol provisions in part 2 of the bill contain a number of proposals, but I shall focus on two areas—determining overprovision of alcohol and alcohol licensing objectives. Our recommendations on those areas explicitly link to the overriding objectives of advancing public health and preserving public order and safety.

I will give a little background on overprovision. Licensing policy statements must contain a statement as to whether there is overprovision of licensed premises in any locality in a licensing board’s area. The bill would change the definition of overprovision to enable licensing boards to consider licensed hours as well as the number and capacity of licensed premises. It would also clarify that the whole of a board’s area can be classed as a locality for the purposes of carrying out the assessment. Trade bodies firmly opposed those changes and questioned their proportionality. On the other hand, the police, health boards and alcohol and drug partnerships strongly supported the changes. We support the latter group and would go further in efforts to reduce the harm that alcohol can cause to some.

On licensing statements, we heard suggestions that professional organisers abuse the occasional licence system to evade the requirements for fully licensed premises and that such events add to the overprovision of alcohol in an area. A similar concern was raised about members clubs. Alcohol Focus Scotland observed that, in the Borders, “22% of all licensed premises are members’ clubs.”

We therefore recommend that club licences and occasional licences must be included when licensing boards assess provision.

Given the overwhelming evidence that we received of harm and links to disorder from overconsumption, we also recommend that an additional licensing objective be added to the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 to include the reduction of alcohol consumption.

We spoke to a number of organisations and individuals involved in the taxi and private hire car trade and to those who license it. Changes in the market from the advent of hire car booking apps must take place in a framework that recognises the fundamental principle that licensed drivers in licensed vehicles are the ones who folk can safely use. We want to ensure that the public know that when they call, hail or use an app to get a car, they are entering a licensed vehicle with a licensed driver. Further reasons for licensing include the delivery of an accessible, reliable and affordable service to customers while preventing opportunities for criminal activity. Police Scotland told us that regulation “ensures that legitimate business thrives and provides opportunity to prevent organised crime groups from gaining a foothold in this industry.”

Licensing of metal dealers is extremely important. Metal theft is not a victimless crime and we have heard that it not only costs people a great deal of money but has created dangers. We must ensure that the maximum penalty for breaching licensing conditions is uprated from the current sum of £5,000.

I hope that my speech provided a flavour of the range of issues that the committee encountered in scrutinising the bill and that it set out some of the areas of the bill that we wish to be strengthened. Licensing is important to the lives of us all: it keeps us safe, cares for our health and reduces the opportunity for crime in our communities. I commend the committee’s stage 1 report to the Parliament.

Alex Rowley (Cowdenbeath) (Lab): Labour supports the principles that are set out in the policy memorandum to the bill. We will support the bill at stage 1 today, and we are keen to work with the Government to agree any stage 2 amendments that we think can improve the bill as it progresses to stage 3.

I put on record our thanks to the Local Government and Regeneration Committee for its work in scrutinising what is a lengthy and complex bill with many different parts, all of which are important in their own right. I wonder whether lumping together all those areas of licensing and trying to come up with improvements—often by adding to previous legislation that is outdated—is the best way to make legislation.

The policy memorandum states:

“The principal policy objectives of this Bill are to strengthen and improve aspects of locally led alcohol and civic government licensing in order to preserve public order and safety, reduce crime, and to advance public health. This is being achieved through reforms to the existing systems to alcohol licensing, taxi and private hire car licensing, metal dealer licensing and; giving local communities a new power to regulate sexual entertainment venues in their areas.”

In the time that I have available this afternoon, I cannot possibly cover everything that has been packed into the bill, but it is worth drawing to members’ attention some of the views that arose in the evidence that the committee received.

The committee’s report states:

“The Bill is what could be described as a ‘pick and mix’.

I am not sure that that is the best way to deal with all the matters that the Government wants to address, and I believe that a future Government will have to return to some aspects of the bill sooner rather than later.

The minister told the committee that he had no plans to review the 1982 act fundamentally, as it was reviewed only about 10 years ago and found to be fit for purpose. However, the practitioners, who are out there on the front line dealing with the legislation daily, had something different to say.

The Society of Local Authority Lawyers and Administrators in Scotland licensing group said:

“We would re-iterate that the Act is now 30 years old and it is becoming increasingly difficult to address modern business activity within the structure of the Act.”

The City of Edinburgh Council said that “continued amendment of the Act is not helpful”, and one of the council’s officers told the committee that “the 1982 act has probably passed its sell-by date.”

Glasgow City Council agreed, and one of its officials told the committee that “Any change would have to be substantial. I am teetering on the brink of saying that I do not think that enough amendments could be made to the bill to address the issues. The fundamental issue is that the 1982 act has been in place for more than 30 years. It has served its purpose; it has had its time. It needs to be rebuilt from the ground up, in line with the 2005 act, and to set out an entirely different framework for how we approach licensing.”

I suggest to the minister that he should look again at the evidence that was given on those provisions of the bill. The Glasgow City Council official suggested that “Parliament would have to go right back to the beginning and start again with the 1982 act, so that it could pass legislation that is fit for purpose in a modern Scotland.”—[Official Report, Local Government and Regeneration Committee, 18 February 2015; c 2, 6.]

I know that the SNP has a majority and can pass what it wants, but it is important that we get it right. Too many voices are suggesting that we cannot keep amending 30-year-old legislation if we are to do what is best for Scotland, and I would want to take up that issue with the minister.

I move on to the proposals for air weapons. As the committee’s report said, there are two camps on the proposals: those for and those against. Labour will support the proposals and the principle of the policy memorandum, which we believe the bill achieves, to recognise the need to protect and reassure the public in a way that is proportionate and practical. I am pleased to note that the Government supports many of the points that the committee made and will make sure that there is plenty of publicity in the lead-up to the legislation coming into effect and that those who no longer need an airgun are encouraged to hand in those weapons. As I said, we have heard the arguments from both sides of the debate, but for me the evidence shows clearly that the legislation is the right thing to do.

We believe that the introduction of a licence for sexual entertainment venues is necessary, as no adequate regulation is in place. The bill will empower local authorities to determine whether such venues can operate in their areas, which is a step in the right direction. Representations have been made and the committee has made specific recommendations that I hope will be implemented at stage 2.

We will want to explore with the Government other concerns and possible amendments for stage 2 that have been raised by groups such as Zero Tolerance, which include the issue of not allowing under-18s to work in such venues. The committee looked at that and I know that the minister did not think that the bill could address it, but we would like further discussion with him about that. The fact that the bill does not provide for a fit-and-proper-person test for a licensee of a sexual entertainment venue has been raised as an issue, and we would welcome further discussion of that.

There is no provision in the bill to restrict the signage and advertising of sexual entertainment venues. Again, we would like further discussion of that. There is no provision for community consultation on the granting of sexual entertainment venue licences. In line with the Community Empowerment (Scotland) Bill, which the committee looked at, we should explore that area further.

There is no provision in the bill on licensing fees. There is a view that they should be much higher than those for running a venue that is open to all sections of society, such as a cafe or a pub. Many English and Welsh local authorities have imposed high fees since their new sexual entertainment venue regime came into force. For example, Birmingham City Council charges more than £6,200 for a sexual entertainment venue licence, whereas a skin-piercing licence costs £87, and Manchester City Council charges £4,425 for a sexual entertainment venue licence, whereas a cafe licence starts from around £100. The argument has been made that we should look again at the cost of licences and at whether sexual entertainment venues should pay a higher licensing fee.

The bill does not require a licensing policy statement; that is discretionary. We would prefer it to be mandatory, so that a licensing committee could make a public statement about its intentions for the licensing of sexual entertainment venues and its understanding of the wider policy environment in which they operate. Again, we would like to discuss that with the minister. I hope that we can have a dialogue with him on all those matters over the coming weeks.

On the changes to the licensing of taxis, we heard evidence from taxi operators, the Scottish Taxi Federation and licensing boards, all of which were fairly positive about the proposals. I have written to operators in my constituency and will meet them soon to get their take on where we are at.

The bill’s scrap metal proposals will bring us into line with the rest of the United Kingdom, which is important, as there are no borders when it comes to the theft of such materials. Metal thefts threaten public safety and cause a huge amount of disruption to the energy supply, transport, communication and other industries that people rely on. Labour supports the bill’s proposals on that issue.

I have highlighted certain issues and I hope that we can all work together to strengthen aspects of the bill at stages 2 and 3. I hope that the minister will consider the fairly overwhelming evidence from practitioners on the 1982 act.

Cameron Buchanan (Lothian) (Con): The Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill covers a wide range of matters. As such, consideration of a broad range of principles is required, and I will touch on some of them.

Before I venture into the specific details, I will first set out two overarching principles that underpin our position. The first is that legislation should be passed only when it is considered to be good government, not just when it is thought by some to be good politics. Secondly, legislation should be targeted. Law-abiding people should not find themselves caught under a legislative net just because it is politically expedient for the Government to impose obligations.

The area of the bill concerning airguns—or “air weapons”, as the Government wants to call them—raises concerns both in principle and in practice. The bill seems partly to be about looking tough, rather than sensibly tackling pressing issues. Indeed, crimes involving airguns fell by 75 per cent between 2006 and 2013—a figure that surely indicates that the problem of misuse is receding rather than growing. No doubt some people will want to intervene at this point to say that criminal misuse of airguns should be tackled whether or not those levels are falling. I absolutely agree on that point, but making a big show of requiring the licensing of all airguns is not a sensible way of going about it. It may gather less attention, but better enforcement of existing legislation would be a targeted and better act of government.

Kevin Stewart: Does Mr Buchanan recognise that we are talking not about the licensing of individual weapons but about the licensing of individuals, and that, in the course of the committee’s deliberations, we heard about cases of maimings? We heard about a serious incident in Durham, and there have of course been deaths in the past. Does he not think that individuals who have those weapons should have to be licensed before they can get them?

Cameron Buchanan: Is there any evidence that licensing will reduce those instances? I am not sure about that. Some people will want to intervene but, at any rate, criminal misuse of airguns should be tackled whether or not the levels of misuse are falling. As I said, I agree with the point, but making a show of licensing all airguns is not a sensible way of going about it. It may gather less attention, but better enforcement of existing legislation would be a targeted and better act of government.

Kevin Stewart: The member has again fallen into the same trap about the licensing of individual weapons. We are not talking about the licensing of each individual weapon; we are talking about the licensing of people who own those weapons. We have to get that right.

Cameron Buchanan: Yes, I know that—thank you very much.

Making everyone who wants to own or use an airgun apply for a licence is certainly not targeted. Why should innocent users who want to shoot for sport be forced to go through a cumbersome licensing process that charges for the privilege? I for one consider that, when there is a problem, a Government should seek to address it without imposing itself unnecessarily. Lazily casting the legislative net over every current and potential airgun user certainly breaches that principle, which is particularly worrying when the problem in question is confined to a tiny minority of users.

Furthermore, a vast new airgun licensing regime would bring practical difficulties. We estimate that, at the moment, there are around 500,000 airguns in Scotland, which are untraceable to all intents and purposes. For Police Scotland to license and track them would be very difficult—although I know that that is not proposed—and the people who are using those airguns will go under cover.

This question is crucial: is it in the public’s best interests to invest police time and resources on licensing airguns—or licensing people to use airguns—when Police Scotland increasingly faces budgetary constraints and pressures on its staffing infrastructure? Most people would think not.

I move on to the alcohol licensing provisions. First, I agree that overconsumption of alcohol is a very serious problem, which must be addressed. I also think that it is useful to clarify the licensing boards’ powers so as to avoid confusion or uncertainty in future. However, it is important that aspiring small business owners do not face unnecessary barriers to entry that their competitors do not have to face.

On a similar note, I remain concerned about licensing authorities’ potential power to refuse to grant a licence for a private hire vehicle on the grounds of overprovision. That is anti-competitive and simply not in the best interests of the people whom we should be helping: the consumers. Greater provision of private hire vehicles would allow more people to access that form of transport than ever before. However, this Government proposes to erect barriers to entry that would block consumer benefits, as well as prevent the creation of jobs in an expanding industry.

The mechanism to allow licensing authorities to require knowledge tests for drivers of private hire vehicles has a similar effect. I do not think that... knowledge tests are necessary with the advent of TomTom, Garmin and satellite navigation. Furthermore, regulatory barriers to entry will restrict the industry's growth, which will cost jobs and act against consumers' interests. I will always maintain that Government should support innovation and refuse to protect vested interests from fair competition that they find inconvenient.

Having said all that, I am in agreement with some areas of the bill. The removal of the requirement for metal dealerships to hold metal for 48 hours before processing it is a welcome example of Government stepping back and removing costly regulation. On a visit to William Waugh scrap metal recyclers in Granton, I saw the large amount of space—and therefore expense—required to comply with that law. The provisions prohibiting payment in cash will also help to increase transparency, which will be beneficial provided that the definitions are clear.

As for the provisions on theatres, they may bring increased flexibility and consistency across the licensing of public entertainment venues, which would be welcome.

In a bill of so many parts, of which some are sensible, it would have been beneficial if the bill had been divided into two, as Alex Rowley stated.

It is clear that the bill will need to be amended substantially at the next legislative stage. As a result, I will lodge amendments at stage 2 that will seek to apply the principle of sensible, targeted government throughout the bill. Accordingly, I hope that the debate will draw out into the open the key areas of the bill in which work is still needed. I have touched on some aspects; my colleagues may come on to others.

On some aspects, such as the licensing of airguns, a considerable change in policy is required. However, I reiterate my view that some of the bill's provisions appear to be sensible. From that position, I will seek to amend the bill to make its overall impact targeted, beneficial and fair.

The Scottish Conservatives will abstain when voting at decision time.

Clare Adamson (Central Scotland) (SNP): As the committee convener mentioned, I came somewhat late to the bill, having joined the committee in November last year. However, I pay tribute to the many witnesses who contributed to the stage 1 proceedings whether by appearing before the committee or providing written evidence. I also thank the many organisations and stakeholders that submitted briefings for today's proceedings.

It has been mentioned that the bill is broad and diverse, and that many topics fall within its remit. I suspect that I will not be able to cover all the areas in the bill, although I hope to link them because my main concern is about safety. Every committee member and everyone in the chamber wants to see safer and healthier communities. I am sure that we all agree that that is the outcome that we would want from the intended changes.

I thought that there was more consensus on the committee. I am surprised that the Conservatives have chosen to abstain in the vote, because all committee members agreed the stage 1 report. Indeed, there did not seem to be much contention about it at the time.

Cameron Buchanan: Unfortunately, due to my relatively limited parliamentary experience, I did not realise the full implications of my acquiescence at stage 1, which was why I agreed to the bill.

Clare Adamson: Thank you for that explanation, Mr Buchanan.

Alex Rowley talked about the bill's complexity and said that bringing together so many items was a mistake. His point reminded me of an old joke about a traveller who, when seeking directions from a local, was met with the response, “Well, I wouldn't start from here.” We are here. We do not have a blank sheet of paper. We must work within the constraints, the capacities and the existing law in this place and at the local government level. How the Government has presented the bill is possibly the only way forward to address the serious issues in it.

Despite some of the comments that have been made this afternoon, I think that the bill proposes a proportionate and reasonable approach to airgun licensing. We cannot forget where it has come from. Few of us will forget the two-year-old boy, Andrew Morton, who was killed in Glasgow, or his parents' campaign to have the issue of airgun licensing addressed in Scotland. I believe that that campaign was a nominee for, if not the winner of, one of the press awards in the year following Andrew’s death. Individual tragic cases such as that, which show that the system is completely inadequate to protect our communities, have driven us to where we are at the moment.

We now have the right balance between protecting communities and allowing the legitimate use of shooting in a safe environment to continue. We have taken evidence from scouting organisations, from people who work with airguns in their day-to-day lives, and from apprentices, and the bill strikes the right balance for what is in the best interests of our communities.

Alex Fergusson: I totally agree that the type of crime to which Clare Adamson referred is utterly unacceptable in any society, but can she tell me... what evidence she heard at the committee that suggests that a regime to license the people who own airguns would prevent that sort of crime? I simply cannot find that sort of evidence.

Clare Adamson: I was at the committee when the police gave evidence and spoke of their frustration at their inability to address airguns in premises where they suspected that other crimes had been committed. Whether that is domestic abuse, drug crime or any other kind of crime in our community, the inability to do anything about airguns being present in those areas is a concern, so I found the police evidence compelling.

The Scottish firearms consultative panel estimates that there are 500,000 air weapons currently in circulation in Scotland. One of them is in my loft and has been for the past 20 years, and I believe that that is the case with most such weapons. They have been bought for recreational use at some point. My husband and his father were both scout leaders and used the gun to train scouts, but nonetheless the weapon remains in circulation. The amnesty period, and the opportunity for people to hand in weapons that are no longer in use, will make our communities safer.

I am running out of time, but I want to turn to metal dealers, metal theft and what that means to our communities. I represent the Auchengeich area of Moodiesburn and was appalled that, after all the fundraising that had been done by the local community and miners there to make a memorial to the Auchengeich disaster of 1959, the memorial was stolen within a matter of weeks. That was a real emotional blow to the community and one that was felt by everyone from an industrial background in the Lanarkshire area. The memorial was replaced, thanks to a generous donation from a local businessman, but when things affect our built heritage, our memorials, the fabric of our communities and our historic buildings, it has a detrimental effect that cannot be measured—whether it is the theft of lead from a church roof, the destruction of an historic building or indeed the theft of memorials, which is happening more and more.

We must look at the often disproportionate impact on the economy of an area where the value of the metal theft is as nothing to the disruption to infrastructure such as telecommunications or rail and road infrastructure. I am glad that that is being addressed in the bill.

I am not sure whether I have much time left, Presiding Officer.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Just a little bit.

Clare Adamson: I shall just mention the taxi app situation. There was a lot of talk about the changes in technology and, as a technologist, I was interested in that. Only last week, there was a case of alleged crime in Edinburgh, in which a young woman got into what she thought was a private hire car and was taken away and sexually assaulted. When we put safety at the very heart of what we are doing, we should look to the opportunities of apps, some of which provide a picture of the driver and the licence of the car that is picking someone up, as well as tracking the journey. Although such apps are seen as a threat in some areas, I think that there is a great opportunity to improve safety, which will be driven by the market.

Cara Hilton (Dunfermline) (Lab): I add my thanks to everyone who has contributed to getting the bill to this stage and who has provided us with excellent evidence and briefings. Like Clare Adamson, I am new to the committee—I joined in January—so I missed some of the evidence that was received.

As Alex Rowley said, Scottish Labour will support the bill at stage 1 but, as he also pointed out, the bill is so wide ranging that it might have been more effective to have several smaller bills rather than tagging everything together.

I intend to focus on section 68 of the bill, which I believe needs to be strengthened considerably. In his briefing for today’s debate, Scotland’s Commissioner for Children and Young People, Tam Baille, has drawn our attention to the fact that the bill as drafted would allow children under the age of 18 to work in sexual entertainment venues, as long as there is no actual entertainment taking place at the time. Zero Tolerance has expressed serious concerns about the provision and has warned that it could create a groomsers charter, allowing venues to employ teenage girls to work as cleaners, for example, and to then persuade them to become dancers when they reach 18. It also highlights the fact that many of those venues screen pornography in the background, which gives rise to concerns about child protection.

During stage 1 evidence, the Cabinet Secretary for Justice advised that those issues could not be addressed within the scope of the bill, but Zero Tolerance and the Commissioner for Children and Young People disagree. I share the view that no child under the age of 18 should be allowed to work in or attend a sexual entertainment venue in any capacity. I hope that the Scottish Government will look again at this area to see how we can protect young people more.

In respect of the proposed regime, although there is no doubt that sticking to the status quo simply is not an option, and Scottish Labour supports change in principle, we need to consider... carefully whether the bill could have unintended consequences. There is a real risk that, in licensing these venues, the Scottish Government could end up normalising a harmful form of sexual exploitation. As Zero Tolerance pointed out in its briefing note for today’s debate, “if we are to move beyond women’s value and worth being located in their bodies and their perceived sexual attractiveness, we need to move beyond seeing sexual entertainment venues as normal and harmless.”

That view is echoed by the Commissioner for Children and Young People, who has said that the idea that children could be working in these venues and exposed to degrading images of women simply does not sit well with the Scottish Government’s strategy, equally safe, to end violence against women and girls. The strategy rightly places at its heart recognition of the links between discrimination, objectification and violence against women. It aspires to “create a strong and flourishing Scotland where all individuals are equally safe and respected”.

However, normalising such venues risks sending out the wrong message to young people and especially to young girls. We only need to look at the customer reviews of the venues to get a real flavour of the lack of respect that the clientele have for the women who work there.

There is a risk that, by regulating the sector, we could end up expanding an industry that is harmful to women and is especially harmful to our children, undermining all the work that has been done to address unequal power relationships, tackle gender stereotypes and achieve true gender equality. I hope, therefore, that the Government will be favourable to the section being amended at stage 2.

Sticking to the theme of protecting children and young people from harmful sexual images, another area in which I believe that the bill could go much further is in the restriction of the display of harmful sexualised content in areas where children could see it, such as on supermarket shelves. I would like to highlight the fantastic girl guides campaign, girls matter, which is aimed at ensuring that the issues that matter to girls are addressed in the 2015 general election campaign. Although in recent months we have spent many an hour arguing about full fiscal autonomy and about which of us is the most anti austerlity, the girls matter campaign calls for politicians to take action on the issues that really matter to children and young girls. One of the key issues on which it asks politicians of all parties to take action is children’s exposure to harmful sexualised content in the media.

Kevin Stewart: Will the member give way?

Cara Hilton: I have no time, sorry.

The issue is absolutely vital, because the campaign’s research has found that 75 per cent of girls and young women aged 11 to 21 and 48 per cent of seven to 10-year-olds believe that there are too many images of naked or nearly naked women in the media; that the majority of young girls—almost 60 per cent—have experienced sexual harassment at school, college or work in the past year; and that a staggering 40 per cent of them say that they sometimes feel ashamed of how they look and that they do not take part in fun activities like sport because they are self-conscious. Given the images that girls are exposed to on a daily basis, on YouTube, in music videos and in magazines and newspapers, is it any wonder that so many of them feel pressure to conform to ideals that are often unachievable?

That does not just undermine girls’ self-esteem; the harsh reality is that the way that women are portrayed in the media and at such venues entrenches gender inequality and the unequal power relationships that are at the root of abuse and violence against women and girls. I do not want my six-year-old daughter to grow up in a Scotland where women are viewed as sexualised objects or where women are judged on how they look. I want my daughter to grow up in a society in which gender is no barrier to success and where every child is treated as equal. It is time that we started to take responsibility for making sure that the images of women and young girls that are portrayed in the media are realistic, and we have the opportunity to do that here and now, in the bill.

We could make it an offence to knowingly display harmful sexualised content on the front pages of magazines and newspapers that are within children’s sight. I intend to submit amendments on such a measure at stage 2. The bill also gives us scope to put in place restrictions on signage advertising sexual entertainment venues. The cabinet secretary referred to that in his letter to the committee, and I hope that we can make progress on the issue.

We all aspire to a Scotland in which equality is not just an aspiration but a reality, and we should use the powers in the bill to make that happen. Let us show that girls really do matter and ensure that their voices are heard. We must do all that we can in the bill to tackle the exploitation of women and girls wherever and whenever it takes place.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: I have indicated that there is a little bit of time in hand for interventions. It is, of course, up to members whether they want to take interventions. However, I suggest that, if they do not, they should try to stick to their six minutes.

Gil Paterson (Clydebank and Milngavie) (SNP): I share all the views that Cara Hilton has expressed with regard to broadcasting explicit scenes or posting them on the internet. Unfortunately, the Parliament does not have any powers to do anything about that.

I am not a member of the Local Government and Regeneration Committee, but the bill appeared, from its title, to be straightforward enough. However, as organisations and constituents starting to contact me ahead of the debate, I realised that the bill is wide ranging in its aims. I applaud the Scottish Government for that and the Local Government and Regeneration Committee for the extensive work that it has carried out on the bill at stage 1.

I will focus primarily on two aspects of the bill. First, I will address alcohol licensing, which is part of the larger approach to dealing with our relationship with alcohol and the negative impact that it has on a number of our citizens and communities. Secondly, I will look at the provisions that aim to tackle the increasing problem of metal theft in our country.

As a former member of the Health and Sport Committee, I have been involved in a great deal of evidence taking, including round-table discussions, on the impact of alcohol on Scottish society. The Scottish Government and all parties represented in the chamber are committed to tackling the problem. The impact of alcohol on the health of adults is well documented, but alcohol has an even greater effect on the health of young people. That is why I am pleased that the Scottish Government has announced, in the bill, that it will close the legal loophole that allows adults to purchase alcohol for someone under the age of 18 if the alcohol is then consumed in public. That loophole has encouraged young people to engage in drinking in outdoor drinking dens, which is detrimental to their health and has led to concerns being expressed by people who are afraid of groups of young people, especially if they have been drinking. For the provision to work, however, I advise that the police use their discretion and avoid being overactive in their enforcement, as that would only lead to the drinking dens going underground, which may make them harder to police.

Although there must be a focus on those who purchase alcohol, it is also paramount that, when a licensing board is considering someone’s application to sell alcohol, the board is provided with wide-ranging information to ensure that the applicant passes a fit-and-proper-person test. The test exists in many licensing regimes, and I am pleased that the bill will incorporate it into ours. That will offer some comfort to families across Scotland that those who hold an alcohol licence have been through a vigorous process, that they can be trusted and that their character is “fit and proper” to sell alcohol. Those are positive steps in the campaign to change our relationship with alcohol and I very much welcome the proposals.

As I stated, the second aspect of the bill that I will focus on is the provisions that aim to reduce metal theft. I have been approached by a number of constituents, including those from a religious background, who have raised their concerns over the increasing problem of metal theft and whose establishments have been subject to that crime. Not only does metal theft have a negative effect on those affected but it has a dangerous impact on those who carry out the thefts.

I am pleased that the Scottish Government acknowledges that efforts to reduce metal theft require legislative action. The proposals in the bill offer that action. While it is important to take preventative action to ensure that metal theft does not happen in the first place, it must be made very uncomfortable for the thieves to try to dispose of the stolen metal. If we introduce effective regulation of the metal-dealing industry, it will become more difficult for thieves to dispose of their stolen material.

Genuine metal dealers, who provide a valuable service to the community, and manufacturers will be protected by the legislation because it aims to target the unscrupulous dealers who offer a way for metal thieves to dispose of their stolen goods. It is hoped that, by cutting off that route, metal thieves will be discouraged from stealing in the first place, ensuring that our churches and railways are not despoiled and damaged.

I did not focus too long on other aspects of the bill as I am sure that colleagues will do so in greater detail. However, I welcome the Government’s commitment to licensing air weapons. It is one of the most significant parts of the bill. If it protects one child or one animal, I am for it. In the wrong hands, air weapons are a danger to our communities and wild, pet and farm animals. The system proposed in the bill offers measures that are proportionate and practical.

I commend the bill to Parliament.

Elaine Murray (Dumfriesshire) (Lab): I am not a member of any of the committees that have considered the bill and will focus my contribution on three areas.

The first is air weapons. I have no wish to prevent people with a legitimate reason for owning an airgun from being able to do so—I do not think that anyone in Parliament wants airguns to be banned altogether—but it should be recognised that airguns are weapons. They use pneumatic technology. In fact, air weapons were used in hunting and in war in previous centuries, until firearms technology overtook them.

We know that air weapons can kill—Clare Adamson referred to the horrific case of the murder of two-year-old Andrew Morton—but the extent of the misuse of air weapons was revealed by Assistant Chief Constable Wayne Mawson in evidence to the Local Government and Regeneration Committee when he advised that, between April and July 2014, Police Scotland recorded 84 offences specifically involving air weapons. Of those, “six involved injuries to animals” and “nine involved injuries to humans—one of which was an attempted murder.”—[Official Report, Local Government and Regeneration Committee, 3 December 2014; c 20-21.]

Air weapons are often implicated in criminal activity. Almost half of firearms-related offences involve air weapons. They are frequently used in attacks on domestic and wild animals. Last year in Dumfries and Galloway, there were reports of a 13-year-old pet cat having to be destroyed after an airgun pellet injured its legs. Air weapons are often used against rabbits, rodents and other animals that are considered to be pests, but they are not always used by people who are trained how to use them properly, so there are cruelty and animal welfare considerations that militate against the continuation of unregulated ownership of air weapons.

I am not sure that I really followed Cameron Buchanan’s argument, but it seems to me that the logical extension of that would be to ban the licensing of firearms. We could apply the same argument to that licensing regime, but I do not imagine anybody particularly wants to reverse the situation.

We need to take air weapons seriously. There are an estimated 500,000 of them in Scotland, which presents a challenge. I understand the argument that the law-abiding, responsible airgun owners who use their guns for legitimate purposes will probably be the first to comply, but law-abiding people are the first to comply with most legislation.

I also appreciate that there are resourcing issues for Police Scotland and that ministers are seeking ways of ameliorating those pressures. The committee made a number of recommendations in that regard.

The committee is right to strongly recommend that there needs to be a comprehensive public information campaign that begins well in advance of the commencement of the licensing regime. That should be about informing owners but it is also an opportunity to change attitudes towards air weapons and make the public realise how dangerous they are and the sort of damage that they can do in the wrong hands.

When I was a child, my father had an air rifle and enjoyed what I understand from the report is known as plinking. He even allowed my sister and me to do it on occasion—probably at some danger to our neighbours, I imagine, in my case. In those days, that sort of ownership and use of airguns was totally acceptable, and he kept the airgun safely locked away. However, that was 40-odd years ago and attitudes need to move on. The dangers of the misuse of air weapons to humans and animals outweigh the argument that anyone who wants to enjoy informal target practice at home should have the right to do so.

I also welcome the long-awaited proposals on measures to deter metal theft, although I agree with the committee that they could be further strengthened.

Back in 2014, Ivor Williamson, the owner of Rosefield Salvage in Dumfries, visited one of my advice surgeries to argue for a ban on all cash payments for metal. He believed that that was the only way to combat illicit trade in metals. Genuine metal dealers such as his company have nothing to fear from a national register for metal dealers in Scotland, for example, or the modernisation of the definition of a metal dealer.

Metal theft inconveniences at the very least, and often endangers lives. I live near the A75 and have noticed that a stretch of the fence there is routinely taken away from a field where children play, where dogs are walked and where there could be a danger from people running on to the road.

My final comments on the bill relate to the proposals for licensing the sexual entertainment industry, prompted by the Court of Session’s opinion in Brightcrew Ltd v City of Glasgow Licensing Board.

I agree with the Scottish Government’s violence against women strategy that commercial sexual exploitation constitutes violence against women and that it is harmful not just to the women who are exploited but to all women because of the attitudes towards women and their bodies that it promotes. I would prefer that no such establishments existed.

I cannot accept the argument that the commercial provision of entertainment providing sexual stimulation is necessary to attract business conventions to a city, as one witness appears to have suggested. In my view, establishments that encourage men to objectify and depersonalise women have no place in a modern and progressive country. I have sympathy with the arguments for an outright ban and that regulation might imply acceptance of the attitudes towards women that such establishments promote. However, I also agree with Zero Tolerance that regulation is better than the current situation.

Local authorities in Scotland have taken different views on the sexual entertainment industry—as they have done on prostitution—so it is perhaps appropriate that such decisions be taken at a local authority level. However, I hope that it will be possible for a local authority that does not wish to allow any such activity to set “the appropriate number” of venues in its area at zero. I hope that many authorities will do so.

I will mention a suggestion that is related to the appropriate number of venues but which is not in the bill. Various members of local authorities have told me that they feel powerless to prevent the proliferation of betting shops and gambling establishments in some communities. That is not part of the bill, but I hope that, at some stage, we will give some consideration to whether local authorities need to have more powers to set appropriate limits for the number of gaming and betting establishments in particular communities.

Colin Keir (Edinburgh Western) (SNP): I am not a member of the Local Government and Regeneration Committee but I thank it for producing the report, which is welcome.

I will restrict my comments to the sections in part 3 of the bill that relate to taxi and private hire car licensing. In my previous life as an Edinburgh councillor, I was the convener of the regulatory committee. In effect, that made me the spokesman for the then administration on taxi and private hire car licensing.

As the Local Government and Regeneration Committee report points out, the main reason for licensing taxis and private hire cars is that the general public must have confidence in the knowledge that it is safe to get into a vehicle and that there is a fit-and-proper-person behind the wheel. There is also the issue of ensuring that any operating company is not a front for organised crime.

My first television interview on licensing as a local politician some years ago was in relation to an incident where a young lady got into a vehicle thinking that it was a taxi. She was taken by the driver to a secluded spot where she was subjected to a serious sexual assault. That is why I feel so strongly that we must have a robust licensing system. For the most part, the taxi and private hire trade is of a similar mind. If we have such a system, those who have been subjected to such attacks in the past will feel that we as legislators are listening to them and that everyone is safe using taxis and private hire cars at any time.

The Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 was written at a time when the technology that we know did not exist. No one had thought of mobile phones as we use them today—they were massive in the early days—and certainly nobody had heard of such things as apps.

On booking offices, I absolutely disagree with the comment attributed in paragraph 311 of the report to Audrey Watson of West Lothian licensing board. Although Police Scotland could investigate nationally, in my opinion it is vital that booking offices are local to the licensing authority area or a short distance from the area in which they are licensed to operate. That allows the police or the licensing authority to easily check on driver and vehicle movements. To say, as Audrey Watson suggests, that a booking office did not have to be in Scotland would demand an almost unlimited amount of trust to be placed on a taxi or PHC operator.

Although most operations are professionally run, there have been the odd exceptions over the years. I believe that local licensing authorities should have not only the right to suspend a driver or vehicle or an operator’s licence but, in extreme circumstances, the right to be able to revoke a licence—a right that they do not have just now. I say that because there are examples of unscrupulous operators changing the day-to-day named operating manager or the ownership of an incorporated company while they fight a licence suspension in order to give the impression that there has been a substantive change to the business.

I know that the current convener of the regulatory committee at the City of Edinburgh Council, Councillor Barrie, would be supportive of such a change as he has informed me of his frustrations in combating unprofessional and unsafe practices within a small minority of the taxi and PHC trades in Edinburgh.

In local licensing systems, booking offices are key to public safety and to the ability to access records. That has to be the case for traditionally run taxi and PHC companies but also for those that use apps as a method of communicating with their customers. Indeed, any company—apps based or traditional—should be allowed to operate only if they do so taking cognisance of local conditions set down by the local licensing authority.

I turn to the issue of limiting numbers of vehicles and unmet demand. In my experience, that has been one of the most contentious subjects over many years, particularly here in the city of Edinburgh, and I suspect that it will be again if we decide to extend the right of licensing authorities to limit private hire car numbers.

I have absolutely no objection to the limiting of numbers, having seen the mess that some cities get themselves into with vast numbers of unregulated PHCs or taxis. Oddly enough, the comments made by Mr Buchanan in the debate echo those made in a debate that we had in the city council back in 2007—I have to say that the Conservatives have not changed their view in that time.

I was a supporter of the policy to limit taxi numbers when I was in charge of licensing here in the capital. However, in order to help licensing authorities, an accepted method of calculating unmet demand, which has always been a problem, should be made available and agreed. It has been too easy for those who have had licence applications refused to run off to the sheriff court and make an appeal that is based on there being no real, accepted methodology in place. In a licensing system in which litigation has been frequently used by many, it would make sense to make a more prescriptive change to the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 for certain circumstances, in order to make things easier for local authorities as well as to keep the cost of licence applications or amendments manageable for applicants.

I welcome the report and say well done to the committee for it. I have no problem in principle with limiting taxi numbers or with the ability to ensure that private hire drivers can be tested if that is done locally in a correct manner. I would also like to see currently exempt drivers and vehicles, such as stretch limousines, brought into the regulated system for safety purposes.

I once again commend the committee not just for its scrutiny of the bill but for opening up the discussion in the report, which has been very useful.

I support the general principles of the bill.

Tavish Scott (Shetland Islands) (LD): I apologise for being a minute late at the start of proceedings. I have no good reason at all for that; my legs just did not get me here quickly enough.

I have some sympathy with the cabinet secretary in respect of his responsibilities for licensing. I had responsibility for a licensing bill back in 2005, and I recall that the best advice that I received on how to understand the extent of the problem of overprovision as part of the issues that the Government was dealing with was very simple. It came from the most senior civil servant in the department and it was to spend as much time as I could in the bars of Glasgow and Edinburgh at 1 o’clock on a Saturday night. That was not exactly the advice that I expected to get from a senior civil servant, but I nevertheless considered it very carefully.

I also spent a lot of time with a Strathclyde Police division looking at what happened at 3 am on a Sunday morning and how it dealt with that. I still recall in some detail the night that I was out with that division. The incidents were few and far between. When we went back to the police headquarters for the briefing after the evening to look at how the division had handled various incidents, to review what had happened and to discuss where it knew there were and were not flashpoints, it was interesting to reflect on the number of incidents that had taken place. In some ways, nothing changes in Scotland. We are still dealing with such things.

I heard the cabinet secretary’s opening remarks about making an overprovision assessment across an entire board area. In passing, it strikes me that that will create significant issues. I am sure that the committee will reflect on that at stage 2. I recall some of the debate from some years back, and the trade certainly will reflect on that.

I have sympathy with the argument that Alex Rowley made on the bill being, in effect, a consolidated one. I seem to recall Westminster always being criticised for producing consolidated bills for Scotland. We seem to do quite a lot of that in Edinburgh nowadays.

There is some merit in the argument that a number of members across the chamber have put forward that something as clear-cut as air weapons deserves a piece of legislation in its own right. The licensing aspects that the cabinet secretary has introduced clearly have a common theme and there is a common area of responsibility. There could have been tidier legislation by dealing with matters in that way, not least for the reasons that Mr Rowley gave. There are arguments about the lengths of some of the regimes that have been in place and how they should be assessed.

I want to make some remarks on the air weapons licensing proposals, particularly from a rural perspective. I do not think that anyone disputes that there are problems with the ownership and inappropriate use of airguns. I believe—and the evidence supports this—that there are a greater number of such incidents in urban Scotland than there are in rural and island areas. However, in justifying the bill’s proposals, the current Cabinet Secretary for Justice and, indeed, the previous Cabinet Secretary for Justice have quite rightly mentioned well-publicised incidents in which young children have been hurt.
by the completely wrong use of an airgun. Those cases are appalling and have rightly been condemned, but they have also been prosecuted through the laws of Scotland that we already have. That point has to be borne in mind.

The question, therefore, is whether the proposed introduction of blanket restrictions will have a significant impact on individuals and practices that currently present absolutely no risk to public safety. That fact should be taken into account in any careful consideration of this matter. Moreover, as I understand it, these measures will not be much of a deterrent—if any deterrent at all—to those who are intent on acting irresponsibly. The cabinet secretary might say that the same argument could apply to many things, and he would be right; however, I think that when we bandy about terms such as “proportionality”—as we always do in these kinds of debates—there is a requirement on us all to make a judgment on these matters instead of jumping to the highest or lowest common denominator, depending on how you view a particular argument.

There is a greater risk for Government with regard to the licensing regime. I understand from experts that low-powered airguns would be subject to a higher level of restriction than double-barrelled 12-bore shotguns and even smooth-bore cannon. I am not arguing that there will be a sudden upsurge in the use of smooth-bore cannon but, as the evidence to the committee during its consideration of the bill and indeed to members in recent days suggests, it could be argued that, as a result of the bill, individuals might be allowed to trade up to more powerful weapons. That would be a perverse and bad outcome that neither I nor the Government would want.

I appreciate that the Government is under pressure to act. Ministers are always under pressure to do something in response to an incident, particularly the kind of tragic incident that has happened in the past, but Government is also about making a hard assessment of alternatives. I therefore urge the cabinet secretary to consider two things. First—and I am not sure whether the cabinet secretary mentioned this, but it was certainly mentioned by other members—it is thought that there are 500,000 airguns in Scotland, and an amnesty would take an awful lot of them out of circulation. Indeed, Claire Adamson, who is no longer in the chamber, told us that there is still a gun in the loft of her family home. I am sure that there are many such cases across Scotland, and an amnesty would, as in other circumstances, be a positive way of reducing the sheer number of guns in Scotland.

Secondly, I strongly advocate educating young people about firearms. The PlayStation and online games that my boys play invariably involve guns, and our national news is dominated at the moment not just by politics but by reports of people drowning in the Mediterranean while trying to escape from Libya, where there is no rule of law, only the rule of the gun. There is no doubt that young people are influenced by what they see on television, by the reporting of such events and by what they read online, and I believe that parents and schools absolutely have a responsibility to talk about guns and the reality of what they can mean.

The Government is rightly concerned about public safety, but the crime statistics suggest that the number of incidents involving air weapons is small and falling. Indeed, the evidence to the committee was very clear about that. I could contrast that situation, as others have, with knife crime, which is running at significantly higher levels. No one is suggesting that we should license the possession of kitchen knives—that would plainly be ludicrous—but the fact is that it is easier to buy any kind of blade. As a crofter in Shetland put it to me the other day, more murders happen as a result of knife crime than will ever happen as a result of airguns, and I ask the Government to bear that proportionality argument in mind in introducing this licensing legislation.

Sandra White (Glasgow Kelvin) (SNP): I thank the Local Government and Regeneration Committee for its scrutiny of the bill and the attention that it has paid to all the submissions, including mine, in what has been an arduous and at times emotional task. The committee has taken evidence on air weapons, the supply of alcohol, taxi licences, metal theft and sexual entertainment venues, and I thank the clerks for the work that they have carried out for the committee and for me as part of the process.

I am not a member of the Local Government and Regeneration Committee but, for many years now, I have taken an interest in the effects of the sexual entertainment industry on women and girls and the wider public’s perception of the matter, particularly men’s perception of women as a result of exploitation, and I welcome the fact that the regulation of venues such as lap-dancing clubs that offer sexual entertainment has been included in the bill. In 2005, the Government of the time—in which, as Tavish Scott has just pointed out, he was a minister—set up a working group on adult entertainment following concerns that were expressed about the lack of controls on adult entertainment activity.

The working group recommended that sexual entertainment should be regulated, but no such regulation was introduced. In 2010, I sought to amend the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Bill to that effect. Although my amendment was supported by the Scottish Government at stage 3 of that bill’s consideration, the Parliament did not agree to it. To say that I was disappointed is an understatement.

Undeterred, I have continued to pursue the issue, and I thank the Scottish Government for incorporating that amendment, which has been worked on since 2010, into this bill. I welcome the Local Government and Regeneration Committee’s comments on that and other issues. I am very pleased that such so-called entertainment is to be regulated and licensed. Mairi Millar of Glasgow City Council said:

“It strikes me that we have licensing legislation and regulations to cover everything from window cleaning to selling burgers from a van or selling chewing gum at 3 o’clock in the morning under late hours catering regulations, but adult entertainment activity is currently not regulated.”—[Official Report, Local Government and Regeneration Committee, 14 January 2015; c 17.]

I could not put it better myself. I think that it is high time that such activity was regulated.

I was struck by some of the examples that other members have given in relation to the licensing of adult entertainment, and I want to give a couple of examples of my own. Not far from here, a lady who works in an adult entertainment venue was attacked while she was walking along the street with her child. The person by whom she was accosted and attacked was someone who had been a customer in that venue. It was disgraceful that she was attacked in that way while she was going about her local business. What does that say about such venues?

I have also been contacted by women who work for corporate businesses who have been denied promotion because they refused to take to sexual entertainment premises corporate clients who had flown in or come up from other areas. Sexual entertainment venues must be regulated, not only because of the effect that they have on how women are perceived, which other members have commented on, but because, as Elaine Murray said, it is not the case that they are good for attracting businesses. It is disgraceful that women in corporate companies are being discriminated against because they will not take clients to such premises.

I turn to some of the recommendations that the committee made in its report, particularly on the issue of having an appropriate number of sexual entertainment venues and of whether to have a discretionary or a mandatory regime. I welcome the Scottish Government’s commitment to provide guidance to licensing authorities on what constitutes an appropriate number of venues, as the committee recommended. I note the committee’s recommendation that the licensing of sexual entertainment venues should be mandatory, but my original proposal, which the Scottish Government has incorporated in the bill, was for an opt-in system. It is a fact that only four or five local authorities operate such entertainment licences. The Scottish Government has indicated that it thinks that an opt-in system that gives local authorities a choice is sufficient. I agree with Elaine Murray’s view that local authorities are best placed to decide just how many licences they should have in their area.

A number of other issues have been raised, such as that of under-18s working in such clubs. I do not know what kind of work they would be doing, or whether it would be against EU regulations to prevent people between the ages of 16 and 18 from being able to work as cleaners or whatever in such premises. I would like that to be looked at, because it is important to consider the people who hang about in such clubs, whether within or outwith working hours. I also want to raise the issue of a fit and proper person. Both those issues should be looked at.

On the recommendation that there be a single body to deal with SEVs, as I will refer to them, alcohol and advertising, I am worried that if we went down that road, it might take longer to set up a new regulatory body and to legislate for that. I think that we have waited long enough for legislation to tackle sexual entertainment, which objectifies women. I am concerned that, if we went down that road, everything might have to be thrown out and we might need to start again. Perhaps the cabinet secretary could pick up on that or it could be looked at at stage 2.

Certainly, the bill is a step forward. Everybody has said that they will support the bill and I hope that it makes it through stages 2 and 3. We must ensure that women are no longer objectified by this form of so-called sexual entertainment.

Jayne Baxter (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab):
The bill is wide ranging and far reaching, and it is important that it is subject to scrupulous scrutiny in the Parliament. The scale of the bill’s ambition, however, leads me to believe that it would have been far better if it had been divided into smaller parts, so that each area could have been scrutinised as closely as possible. The provisions in the bill could easily have formed the larger part of several bills. When the Scottish Government considers issues of this significance in future, it should deal with them in discrete bills, to ensure that the Parliament’s legislation is as robust and effective as possible.

The licensing of the ownership of air weapons is a hugely important topic. I am sure each of us can recall the tragic cases that have been in the news over the years of air weapons leading to deaths and serious injuries. The approach adopted in the bill is therefore to be broadly supported. It is important that we keep in mind that there are some, albeit very limited, reasons for people to own and use air weapons. Shooting sports are as legitimate as any other and we should avoid stigmatising people who choose to participate in them. We must, however, remember that air weapons are weapons. We cannot allow further tragedies to take place across Scotland involving air weapons. I am pleased that there is cross-party agreement on this topic—or at least there was until today’s debate. I hope that we can get that cross-party agreement back.

As the committee noted, it is important that there is a well-funded and well-implemented publicity campaign across the country to ensure that all those affected by the changes that are contained in this long and fairly technical bill are aware of the implications of the new regime. Many people own an air weapon and no other form of firearm and might therefore be unaware of the conditions for applying for and holding a firearms certificate.

We would all agree that the current regime for the regulation of adult entertainment venues is inadequate. The question that is central to the bill is whether it goes far enough. I agree entirely with the principle of leaving to local authorities the last word on whether an adult entertainment venue receives a licence. As a former councillor, I believe that it is important that democratic accountability on a ward level combined with councillors’ experience in making various quasi-judicial decisions is utilised in relation to such venues. Local authorities currently can decide only whether an adult entertainment venue is permitted a licence for the provision of alcohol. It is only proper that local authorities are empowered to evaluate whether such venues should be allowed in the first place. I endorse Elaine Murray’s comments about extending that power to cover other sorts of venues such as betting shops and perhaps payday loan shops.

There are those who would like the bill to go much further, and those voices should be heard in the bill’s future stages. The bill deals with an important moral question and we should strive to ensure that those with strong feelings on the topic are able to put forward their case. We should also examine the apparent loophole regarding holding fewer than four events of an adult nature a year. If the legislation can be circumvented with such ease, it is hardly worth implementing in the first place.

I turn to the bill’s proposed changes to alcohol licensing. The abuse of alcohol is an enormous problem right across the country. Scottish Government-funded research has estimated that the costs of alcohol misuse in Scotland are somewhere between £2,883 million and £5,396 million per year. It is imperative, therefore, that our licensing scheme is appropriate, robust and effective. The bill seeks to amend fairly old legislation. It would have been preferable for the Scottish Government to introduce a less piecemeal and more fundamental set of reforms for alcohol licensing in Scotland. We should look more broadly at how effective the current regime is across the country. Future Governments will have to examine the issue in a more fundamental way, sooner or later.

The remainder of the bill deals with a series of highly specific forms of licensing. I return to my previous point that the bill is far too broad for us to properly scrutinise all its provisions, but I will briefly mention two key elements of the remainder of the bill.

The taxi licensing scheme has always been predicated on the idea that taxis have a significant business advantage, as they are able to accept bookings on the spot. However, that benefit has been reduced by the near-universal use of mobile phones. It is widely accepted that most journeys of this nature are now pre-booked. It appears that that trend is set to continue with the advent of taxi-booking mobile phone apps.

Those technological advances call into question the entire approach that has been adopted for the licensing of taxis in Scotland. Recognising that, however, we can still say that the specific provisions that are contained in the bill are acceptable and should be approved by the Parliament.

The proposed changes to the regulation of scrap metal dealing also seem sensible. They are very similar to the approach that has been adopted in England, which seems to work well. With that in mind, I see no reason to oppose the changes that the bill proposes.

All in all, the bill seems acceptable in principle. As it is technical and applies to many specialist groups, it is important that the Scottish Government listens closely to the concerns and advice of experts in the relevant fields, campaigners and businesses affected by the proposed changes. The Law Society of Scotland in particular has raised several concerns regarding various aspects of the legislation. The Scottish Government should pay close attention to those concerns and amend the legislation accordingly.

The bill deals with several key topics. It is important that we get the level of regulation on them right. Additionally, it is important that we ensure that when such questions are considered in the future, we are able to consider them in greater detail and, where appropriate, in separate legislation.

Willie Coffey (Kilmarnock and Irvine Valley) (SNP): I add to those of our Local Government and Regeneration Committee convener, and other members who have spoken so far, my thanks to the many people and organisations who took the time to offer their views and give evidence. I also thank our committee clerking team, who have done a great job in putting together the committee’s report.

The purpose of any licensing system is, of course, to regulate legal activities that have the potential to cause harm to individuals who engage in them and to the wider public who may be affected by them. In this case, we are looking at use of air weapons and at licensing as it relates to taxis, metal dealers and various public entertainment activities. The bill will, rather than regulating ownership, make it an offence to use, possess, purchase or acquire an air weapon without holding a certificate. When an offence is committed, it will be more about who committed the offence than about who owns the weapon that is used.

On air weapons, I am pleased that the Government has accepted the committee’s first recommendation, which is to support a public information campaign that will give the public the information that they need in advance of a certification system’s being put in place. A website and other social media tools will give people information about how to hand in unwanted weapons and about the certification process itself, right through to how they might wish to dispose of a weapon under the new scheme, along with all the appropriate information on fees and timescales. That will be a very important part of engaging with owners and clubs and it will also serve the wider public interest.

The committee also wanted to ensure that the bill will not prevent remote sales to people who live outside Scotland; that recommendation has also been accepted by the Government and I understand that an amendment at stage 2 will facilitate that. It will simply mean that an air weapon can be bought in Scotland and delivered to a registered firearms dealer in England or Wales for collection.

The issue of whether to introduce an air weapon marking and identification system was discussed at some length by the committee, but I see from the Government’s response to that idea that it, Police Scotland and the Gun Trade Association do not think that it is really necessary. Other legislation is in place to deal with criminality involving weapons, so a marking system would not be critical in helping to prove any case that might be brought to court. There is quite a detailed explanation from the Government on that, which I hope clarifies the issue.

One of the key alcohol licensing proposals is the creation of a new offence of supplying alcohol to young people for consumption in a public place. Members will know that although it is currently illegal to buy alcohol on behalf of a child, it is not illegal to buy alcohol to share with a child. The bill will close that loophole by making it an offence for a person aged 18 or over to share alcohol with a person under 18 in a public place. That includes private property, where drinkers may have accessed it illegally. The purpose is to help us to tackle outdoor drinking by children and young people. The proposal has widespread support.

I note the Government’s intention to consider the reintroduction at stage 2 of a fit-and-proper-person test for a person who wishes to hold an alcohol licence. Although there was agreement on that from some of those who gave evidence to the committee, there were also some reservations expressed, mainly with regard to linking the test to the broader licensing objectives and the possibility that that would give rise to further litigation. I hope that consideration of that issue at stage 2 will help us to resolve it one way or the other.

There are a few recommendations that will strengthen the desire for local licensing boards to consult the public, health boards and alcohol and drug partnerships on a variety of issues relating to alcohol. It is hoped that the more informed our boards are, the better will be the decisions that they make. The relevant parts of the committee report, which are supported by the Government, are more about reminding everyone that there is some good experience out there and that there are data to be shared before decisions are ultimately taken.

I have two points to make on the taxi licensing provisions in the bill. One relates to a situation in which a taxi driver who may be the subject of numerous complaints in one authority seeks to obtain a licence in another authority—forgetting, of course, to reveal that he has been the subject of such complaints. The response from the Government says that authorities can already make inquiries on such matters, and that Police Scotland, as a single entity now, should be able to assist. However, Police Scotland may not have such data recorded. I feel that in order to enhance the protection of the public who use taxis—in particular, vulnerable young women—there must be more than an expectation that authorities should try to find out from a neighbouring authority about any complaints that may have been made about an applicant. A Scotland-wide response to the issue is needed: authorities should record all such complaints and other authorities should be able to access that information easily. Anything less than that will do nothing to reduce the risk.

On the less controversial issue of knowledge, I support the committee’s view that the knowledge test should apply to all drivers, regardless of whether the service is a taxi or a private hire car. Members of the public expect, when they get into a car, to be taken somewhere by a driver who actually knows where he is going. I had an unfortunate experience a few years ago when a private hire taxi driver in Edinburgh did not have a clue where Hibernian’s Easter Road football stadium was. I hope that any guidance notes on the bill that are issued by the Government will strongly encourage adoption across the board of the knowledge test.

The Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill will, through its many provisions, strengthen public safety in Scotland and provide opportunities for the public and civic Scotland to engage with their local licensing boards on these very important issues. I am happy to support the general principles of the bill at stage 1.

Rhoda Grant (Highlands and Islands) (Lab): I will speak specifically about section 68 of the bill, which will introduce a licensing regime for sexual entertainment venues such as lap-dancing clubs. I pay tribute to Sandra White for the work that she has done on the issue over the years; I am sure that she is very pleased that the bill has been introduced.

The licensing of such venues became an issue in Inverness, where the licensing committee said that it was powerless to prevent a licence from being granted to a lap-dancing club in the city, despite the violence against women partnership’s warning about the impact that such a venue would have on the area. I therefore welcome the move to empower local authorities to prevent such clubs from opening in our towns and cities.

The Scottish Government’s document, “Equally Safe: Scotland’s strategy for preventing and eradicating violence against women and girls”, recognises commercial sexual exploitation, including stripping, lap-dancing and pole dancing, as violence against women. It tells us that “these activities have been shown to be harmful for the individual women involved and have a negative impact on the position of all women through the objectification of women’s bodies”.

It therefore seems to be a little perverse that we are licensing venues that perpetrate violence against women.

My preferred option would be that we ban all such venues from our country and seek to create an equal society in which women are valued and not sold as commodities. However, the proposed licensing regime is better than the current situation, in which licensing committees feel powerless to prevent such venues from opening. Zero Tolerance tells us that there is “no place for a highly gendered form of sexual entertainment in Scotland.”

In its briefing, it states that these venues are places where men often seek to buy sex, which means that women are often moved from sexualised entertainment into prostitution.

Such venues also encourage gender inequality, which impacts on all women and, indeed, on our whole society. If we are to live in an equal society, we have to stop such venues operating, because they treat women as commodities to be sold for the sexual pleasure of men. They are not normal entertainment venues, and other countries have none—for example, Iceland. The countries that will not tolerate such forms of entertainment tend to give gender equality a much higher priority than those that do.

The licensing regime must be mandatory. Every venue, regardless of how often it provides adult entertainment, should be subject to the licensing regime. Local authorities must carry out equalities impact assessments on the venues before issuing licenses, taking into account the venues’ impact on the wider society in their local area. I also wish to see violence against women partnerships being statutory consultees when licences are applied for. Local communities must have a say on whether licenses should be granted, and local authorities must be allowed to have a policy of having no venues at all in their area.

Other members have talked about the bill allowing young people under the age of 18 to work in venues at times when sexual entertainment is not taking place. However, there are often in such premises pornographic images that children working there would have access to. Again, Zero Tolerance warns us of the implications of allowing young people to work in such environments and tells us that, in essence, it creates a groomers charter.

Allowing that would also normalise such entertainment and exploitation in the eyes of very young and vulnerable people working there. Young girls would also be vulnerable to being enticed to become sexual entertainers when they turn 18. Any young person working there would be at risk of developing unhealthy attitudes to sexual relationships. I believe that the bill must be amended to protect young people from the exploitative nature of those premises.
The committee received a submission from Child’s Eye Line UK regarding public display of sexualised images to children. I believe that that organisation has a point and that Cara Hilton’s point on that was well made: such images should not be on display publicly. We have the power to ban the display of cigarettes—and are proposing to do so—because they are dangerous and harmful, but so are sexualised images because they impact on gender violence and inequality. The bill provides an opportunity to ban the public display of such images, so I hope that the Government will give that due consideration.

The bill does not have a fit-and-proper-person test for licensees of sexual entertainment venues, although people who apply for liquor licences are subjected to a fit-and-proper-person test. That is surely an oversight, so I hope that the bill will be amended to change that anomaly.

Licensing must also ensure that employment law is adhered to. Women who work in sexual entertainment venues are often charged appearance fees and can be fined, meaning that they can end up earning little or nothing at all. We all agree that we should be implementing the living wage and not promoting zero-hours contracts, and that we should be protecting workers. If we allow those venues to operate, we need to make sure that they are working within the law and that the people who work in them are treated and paid properly. Again, that can be addressed through the licensing regime.

I firmly believe that sexual entertainment venues have no place in a modern equal society, and that we should be banning them rather than licensing them. However, the bill’s provisions are a step in the right direction, and I hope that all local authorities will take the opportunity to refuse all licenses for such venues in their areas.

The Deputy Presiding Officer (John Scott): I call Stewart Stevenson, to be followed by John Wilson. You have a generous six minutes.

Stewart Stevenson (Banffshire and Buchan Coast) (SNP): I think that it is appropriate for me to report, before I start my speech, that I am a member of the Banff Town and County Club, which is a licensed premises such as are referred to in the bill. I do not intend to speak on that part of the bill.

This is an interesting debate. One of the things that we perhaps ought to think about is that the problem of alcohol abuse and licensing and controlling alcohol is hardly new. Christopher Smout, the renowned historian who wrote the book “Century of the Scottish People: 1830-1950”—he is essentially a social historian—spoke of a village in East Lothian that had one public house for every 14 occupants. There were special circumstances: it was a village to which many people came seasonally to work in agriculture. The problem is not exactly a new one.

The problem also existed when the Immature Spirits (Restriction) Act 1915 was passed. I have a personal interest in that act, because my father’s cousin was responsible for it. Lloyd George had wanted to ban the sale of alcohol altogether, because of the effect that alcohol had on the munitions factories and the military towns around the UK during the first world war. James Stevenson persuaded the Government that it might be more effective simply to prohibit the sale of immature spirits. That is why whisky is kept in bond for three years. The aim was not to improve the quality of the whisky—although it had that secondary effect—but to restrict its supply, because there was seen to be an issue at that time. The improvement of the brand that is Scotch whisky that flowed from the 1915 act was an incidental benefit for whisky, because it meant that there was no longer poor-quality stuff on the market and whisky could be trusted as a quality product.

We can move forward to the reforms of the 1960s. Before then, there were one or two things to do with licensing in Scotland that we have totally forgotten about. For example, there was the veto poll. Teddy Taylor, the Tory MP for Cathcart for many years, was a very strong exponent of that. I think—subject to confirmation—that Cathcart was the last area in Glasgow where there was a total veto. The population had requisitioned a poll under the appropriate legislation and voted to have no licensed premises in their area. That was the provision that applied after the war, up to the reform in the early 1960s.

A licence granted for sale of alcohol on a Sunday had to be for a hotel. The definition of “hotel” meant that, if someone was going to sell drink on a Sunday, somebody had to be resident in the hotel. Therefore, across Scotland were hotels that advertised seven-day licences that had one room where somebody lived permanently at a discounted rate so that the licence was not discontinued. I happened to know one poor unfortunate, now deceased, called John Dalrymple, who got thrown out of the home that he had lived in for 30 years when the legislation was reformed in the 1960s. We should not imagine that any generation of politicians has been able to identify all the perfect solutions to what is quite a substantial problem.

I admit that I first entered a pub and consumed drink on 21 March 1959. It was in the Register Tap in Edinburgh, following a 3-3 draw in the Calcutta cup at Murrayfield, and there was a need for... console. Members are probably able to work out that I may not have been fully of age. Indeed, the barman asked me to sit behind the door in case a policeman popped his head round—things were a lot more lax in the old days. The provisions that are before us now are much better. Of course, my grandfather would not have approved at all, because he was a member of the society of Rechabites, who went around trying to get people to sign the pledge. He was against drinking in all its forms.

I used to have an airgun when I was a kid. It was not the kind of airgun that people can get now. It struggled to propel its .177mm lead pellet more than about 30 feet—the guns that we have now are more significant. If I wanted to carry it in a public place, I needed a licence, but that was simply a question of going to the post office, handing over 10 bob and getting one. It was really just a way of recording who had the licences, and it seemed to be utterly pointless.

I commend the policy position that Cara Hilton has taken. I have enormous sympathy for what she expressed regarding sexualisation of the female image. I absolutely agree on that. I caution her, however: she appeared to suggest that she would lodge at stage 2 amendments to do with the media and the internet. They would not, of course, fall within the powers that we have in this Parliament. I thought that it would be useful to spell out why that would be a risky thing to do. When bills are introduced, the Presiding Officer’s office has to say that they are intra vires—in other words, that they are within the powers of the Parliament. As amendments are lodged at stage 2, it is up to the lead committee convener to come to a view. At stage 3, it is up to the Presiding Officer to select—or not to select—amendments.

Of course, we can pass legislation that is ultra vires. However, when it goes for royal assent, if it is judged by the palace’s legal advisers to be ultra vires, royal assent will not be given. It is not simply a matter of the little bit of the bill that is ultra vires being struck out—although it could be at a later date if there is a dispute—because that would cause the whole bill to fall.

Although I utterly sympathise and agree with what has been said, including what was said by Rhoda Grant and others, I simply advise that because there is no policy difference among us, we must be very careful to take good advice. If that advice is that we can do what is proposed, I would be utterly content and I would be behind any such amendments, but we must be very careful on such matters.

It is appropriate that I record our gratitude to Sandra White for her work over a significant period on sexual entertainment venues. She has not been the only person articulating the argument, but she has been the one who has utterly stuck with it. It is to her eternal credit that we see in the bill her not inconsiderably small hand writ large.

I wish the bill every success as it passes through its subsequent stages in Parliament.

John Wilson (Central Scotland) (Ind): I come to the debate as the Local Government and Regeneration Committee’s deputy convener. I sat through many committee evidence sessions, and pay tribute to our witnesses as well as to the many individuals who made submissions during our stage 1 consideration of the bill.

Like other members, I will talk about the sections that I think are of importance, which is not to say that every section is not important.

On air weapons, which, in part, lend their name to the bill, this Parliament has only been able to legislate in the area following the transfer of powers under section 10 of the Scotland Act 2012. It took too long to give Parliament that legal competence.

When the bill talks about air weapons, it is not talking about all air weapons, as we do not have the competence to license all air weapons. The power to license certain air weapons will continue to be held by the UK Government. Those weapons are defined as handguns that can fire above six foot pounds and rifles that can discharge at 12 foot pounds. We must ensure that, when we roll out the legislation, individuals are aware of the distinction that exists between air weapons, that those that are seen to be “specially dangerous” will still come under Westminster’s jurisdiction, and that we will have the right to regulate and legislate on and to license only air weapons that are below those limits.

We must also bear in mind the committee’s discussions on the cost of licensing—the individual, not the weapon; the committee convener quite rightly said that we are not licensing weapons. Firearms and shotguns are registered because they have registration marks, but air weapons do not have such marks. Firearms and shotguns must be registered by the licence holder against a certificate. Under the licensing regime in the bill, it is the individual who will be licensed, not the air weapon that they hold.

On the suggested fees, there has been discussion about what someone would be charged to become a licence holder. Westminster is considering the fee for a firearm or shotgun licence, which currently sits at £50, and I am sure that it will return to the issue after 7 May. However, the figure that is being quoted for a firearm licence is £88, and for a shotgun licence it is £79.50.
We must bear that in mind when we talk about potential full cost recovery in relation to a licensing regime for air weapons. As Tavish Scott said, we must not encourage individuals to look at the cost of licensing an air weapon at £80 and think that they could instead apply for a shotgun licence at £79.50, or a firearm licence at £88. The trading-up debate is there. Individuals who may have a licence, and who may be appropriate people to hold one, could trade up to hold a firearm or a shotgun rather than holding an air weapon.

A number of members have commented on the estimated 500,000 air weapons that are currently located in Scotland, which is something that we really need to address. We need to find a way of reducing that number. If we cannot reduce it, we need to find a way of introducing a licensing regime that does not clash with the peaks and troughs of the shotgun and firearms licensing that is currently taking place. We would hate to see the introduction of air weapons licensing coming at the peak of the licensing period for shotguns and firearms. The Police Scotland evidence indicated that there were peaks and troughs in relation to such licensing.

Those are the issues that we need to address, and I welcome the fact that the cabinet secretary has taken on board a number of the issues that the committee raised about air weapons.

The licensing of adult entertainment venues has been adequately covered by a number of members. I welcome the opportunity to consider the amendments that will be lodged and I will consider them with interest when they come before the committee.

I will talk about scrap metal dealers, because there is an issue there. Other members have mentioned the risks to life and health that are posed by people who steal scrap metal to sell on. We looked at fines, and the convener mentioned the £5,000 fine that can be imposed on somebody who is caught stealing scrap metal. The difficulty is that the overall cost of the damage that is done by some of the thefts that take place is far greater than that. We heard evidence from one of the power companies, which estimated that the damage could cost in the region of £40 million over a period of time—not including the costs to individual households and communities. The maximum fine at the moment is only £5,000, and it would be appropriate to make fines or penalties commensurate with the overall damage that is caused by those thefts.

Clare Adamson mentioned the Auchengeich miners’ memorial, which was stolen. I was at the unveiling with the First Minister and other MSPs, and fortunately for that community, the sculptor had not destroyed the mould from which he had produced the sculpture, so he was able to replace the sculpture and we had a second unveiling. The difficulty is that many communities throughout Scotland do not have such an opportunity when thefts take place, because they do not have the original moulds and cannot reproduce sculptures or other items that have been stolen.

We have started the process. I hope that, when the committee considers the stage 2 amendments, we can get to a piece of legislation that will be not only meaningful but future proofed against developments in relation to issues concerning taxis, private hire cars, apps and various other things that will need to be considered.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: We now move to the closing speeches. I call Alex Fergusson.

Alex Fergusson (Galloway and West Dumfries) (Con): I am happy to be concluding the debate for the Scottish Conservatives, although, like other members, I am not a member of any of the committees that have been involved with the bill.

I have to say that I find myself somewhat perplexed by the bill and by the general principles that we have been debating this afternoon. As Cameron Buchanan noted in opening the debate for the Conservatives, there is a great deal in the bill that we welcome, even if we believe that some provisions might require modest amendment at later stages. I particularly welcome part 2, on alcohol licensing, for instance—I know that the issue is close to your heart, Presiding Officer—and I also welcome the sections that deal with scrap metal licensing.

However, we have a real sticking point when it comes to the Government’s proposals on air weapon licensing, and it is on that aspect of the bill that I will concentrate, given that it is the single reason why we are unable to support the general principles at decision time. I dearly wish that, as Alex Rowley and Tavish Scott have said, part 1 had been in a separate bill. However, we are where we are on that front.

I want to make one thing clear at the outset: whatever our views are on part 1, gun crime—any gun crime—is utterly abhorrent, whether it be carried out against human, pet, wild animal or bird. That is something on which everyone in the chamber can agree. We on the Conservative benches will always support robust enforcement of existing or additional legislation where there is an unequivocal evidence base that it will be effective in achieving its aims. However, I cannot find evidence that that will be the case in this instance.

Let us not forget that, as has been said, between 2006-07, when there were 683 offences involving air weapons, and 2012-13, when there were 171, there has been a drop of 75 per cent in reported incidents involving air weapons. Colin Keir mentioned a debate on the subject that took place in 2007 and said that the Conservatives’ position had not moved since then. That is not true. On the basis of those figures, our position has actually hardened, because it seems to me that a drop of 75 per cent is quite significant. In fact, it is a significant reduction in anyone’s language and it is, presumably, the result of the successful implementation of existing legislation and also of increased education initiatives by the Scottish Government and shooting organisations, for which they are to be commended. That is proof, if proof were needed, that the carrot often works better than the stick. Of course, on occasions such as this, they can also work well together.

On the subject of annual figures, I am concerned, as I said in an earlier intervention, that the most recent air weapon offence statistics—those for 2013-14—are not available. They should have been published in November 2014 but, apparently due to difficulties in collecting the data, they will not now be published until October this year, which is almost a year late and is certainly too late for them to inform this debate. A cynic—not me, but a cynic—might wonder why they cannot be produced by Police Scotland this year, while the bill is under consideration, when they have been produced regularly in previous years, and especially as Police Scotland was apparently able to quote figures from April to July 2014 in evidence. It seems to me that something is not quite right there, and it does not do this debate any favours.

Kevin Stewart: As Alex Fergusson has pointed out, we have moved to a new policing regime, with Police Scotland instead of the previous eight forces.

As the start of his speech, Mr Fergusson said that he would support a separate bill, but would not support part 1 of this bill, which deals with the subject. What would be different in that separate bill from the proposed legislation on air weapons in this bill that would make him support that one but not this one?

Alex Fergusson: I think that I am being misquoted, because I did not say that I would support a separate bill; I said that there should be a separate bill. What I do not like about this aggregated bill is that, at the end of the day, if this sticking point remains in place, we will have to vote against the bill. That would be a great pity, because there is so much of it that we believe is good. If there had been a separate bill, we could have disassociated ourselves from it and supported the parts of this bill that we agree with.

Whatever the figures that are not available turn out to be, there is no evidence at all that I can find that a licensing system will reduce crime. Indeed, if the possession of an airgun without a licence becomes a crime, the bill can only increase the crime statistics, which is surely the very opposite of what the Government intends.

Stewart Stevenson: I suggest to the member that no one cares about the statistics, whether they are up or down. We care about what happens on the ground and improving public safety.

Alex Fergusson: The point that I am trying to make is that I cannot find anything in the proposed regime that will improve public safety. I will come back to that later. Mr Stevenson’s intervention has brilliantly made me lose my place. It was well timed.

I now come to the practicalities of introducing the licence. The British Association of Shooting and Conservation—and, indeed, other shooting organisations on whose behalf it was speaking—has pointed out that, at the moment, it can take up to nine months to process a shotgun or firearms licence. Police Scotland is in the process of reducing the number of civilian licensing officers from 34 to 14, so it will have to train up police officers who, I presume, will be taken off the beat in order to fill the gap. Their task will then be to cope with the demand created by owners of some 500,000 air weapons wanting to obtain a licence. All those weapons, less the ones that will be surrendered during any amnesty period, are untraceable anyway, as airguns do not have unique identification numbers—and the cabinet secretary is right not to try to introduce such a system. The Law Society helpfully pointed out the difficulties of the situation, and I can only wish the police good luck with it when the bill is passed. It can only create a mountain of extra work and bureaucracy for an already overstretched police force, with no measurable impact on airgun crime. I therefore find myself asking what all this is for.

I do not think that the bill is about public benefit, despite Alex Rowley’s arguments, to which I listened very carefully. They were convincing in many ways, although I am afraid that they did not convince me. Tens of thousands of people will be caught up in a licensing scheme that will involve an incalculable number of inquiry officer visits to applicants’ homes for the purposes of verification and which has an indicative cost of at least £85 per application. That huge public expense is going to be incurred for no calculable public benefit or reduction in crime, and a new regulatory infrastructure will be required to oversee the system.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: You must conclude, please.
Alex Fergusson: I think that part 1 targets the wrong people, as future offenders will not be those who have obtained a licence. It will do nothing to preserve public safety, as the Law Society points out in its submission, in which it highlights the real possibility that many untraceable air weapons will simply disappear into the wrong hands as and when a licensing scheme is introduced. In addition, Police Scotland’s infrastructure is ill equipped and underresourced to do what it will be asked to do.

The cabinet secretary strikes me as a sensible man—I told him that I would be nice about him. He has seen sense on corroboration; I hold on to the hope that he will see sense on this as well.

Alex Rowley: There has been a lot of consensus in the debate, as there was in the committee. On all sides of the chamber, there is a willingness to see the bill go forward and be passed. I hope that we can work together over the coming weeks and that the minister will give an indication in his summing up that he is willing to work with the various groups that have put forward different arguments today so that we can find a way to continue that consensus.

The consensus broke down because of the Conservative Party’s view on air weapons, which I do not agree with. Elaine Murray pointed out that the committee was advised that 84 offences had been committed over a period. Representations were also received from animal welfare organisations and other organisations that highlighted the issues that can arise around air weapons. As Elaine Murray said, at the end of the day they are weapons. I am therefore supportive of that part of the bill and the Labour Party will support it.

John Wilson talked about fees, and the committee picked up on the point about full cost recovery for the licensing of air weapons. I know that the matter seems still to sit with the UK Government, but the committee picked it up and talked about being able to recover all the costs. It is important that we pick up those points from the report.

In his response to the report, the minister indicated that he is fairly positive about some areas of the report and will pick up some of its recommendations. The committee produced a number of recommendations, so I hope that we can discuss those with the minister in the coming weeks.

Kevin Stewart talked about all the people who gave up their time to give evidence to the committee. It would be good to demonstrate that it is worth while taking the time and trouble to give evidence to Parliament and that the issues in that evidence are being taken on board. I hope that we can pick up some of those issues.

A number of members talked about the proposals for licensing clubs. The Brightcrew decision meant in effect that there was no regulation of sexual entertainment venues. Even those who have said that they would rather that those clubs did not exist welcome some kind of regulation. Some members made the point that local authorities are well placed to make decisions about whether venues in their area should be licensed. At the end of the day, local authorities are held to account by the electorate. Those of us who support the devolution of decision making to the lowest possible level believe that it is right, on an issue as important as this, that local authorities should have the final say. Nevertheless, Cara Hilton and others pointed out that there are still a number of issues that we would like to discuss with the minister. I congratulate Sandra White, who I know has pushed that issue for some time.

On whether young people aged 16 to 18 should be able to work in those venues, I know that there has been an argument about employment law but, again, if the minister is open to it, we can discuss the issues and, hopefully, pick them up and take them forward.

Willie Coffey talked about licensing authorities sharing information about taxi operators. He asked a lot of questions about that in the committee. There is a recommendation on page 55 of the report that there should be more discussion in that regard. I am not sure whether that could be included in an amendment at stage 2 or whether the minister is open to having that dialogue. I would hope that he is and that we could pick that up and move that forward.

Clare Adamson talked about taxi apps and the importance of safety in relation to taxis. She gave the example of a woman who was sexually assaulted after getting into a vehicle that she thought was a private hire car. The committee heard evidence from an academic from the University of Edinburgh who is an expert on taxis, not just in Scotland but throughout the world. His view was that, as soon as the legislation is passed, it could be out of date because of new technologies. I know that Willie Coffey has more expertise in the field of technology, but that part of the bill may have to be considered again in future.

Kevin Stewart: One of the key things that the bill should achieve is that folk know that they are getting into a licensed vehicle with a licensed driver. That is the essential element in all of this. Whatever we do, technology-wise and so on—in terms of hailing or apping or whatever—the key thing to keep folk secure is to keep that licensed driver and licensed vehicle element in place. We should do everything possible to ensure that that continues.

Alex Rowley: I agree entirely with Kevin Stewart.

In his opening speech, Cameron Buchanan wondered whether we were being too heavy handed in treating taxis and private hire cars in a similar way in licensing. However, the evidence does not suggest that. Those who gave evidence to the committee—the taxi operators who operate private hire as well as the Scottish Taxi Federation—all seemed to be fairly positive about, and in favour of, the proposed legislation. I was struck by the pride that the taxi operators took in the quality of training, skills and expertise that they expect their drivers to have, so the proposals were broadly welcomed.

A number of members have said that they would like to consider amendments to a number of areas of the bill, particularly the regulation of sexual entertainment venues, and I ask the minister to indicate that he is willing to meet members who have concerns and want to lodge amendments to see whether we can maintain the consensus that we have had in the debate as we go forward to stages 2 and 3 and pass the bill.

Michael Matheson: I am grateful to all the members who have contributed to the debate. I have listened carefully to many of their comments and the issues that they raised.

I understand some of the frustrations that members have about the bill being presented with several different component parts to it. That is not unfamiliar and unusual in the Parliament. There are parts of the bill that would be difficult to have as bills on their own because they are limited in nature. However, I acknowledge that the bill acts as a vehicle to make changes that were needed to a number of aspects of legislation, such as the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005.

I am also conscious of the point that Tavish Scott made. He has been in the Parliament as long as I have and I do not think that we have gone through a parliamentary session in which some form of licensing legislation was not necessary. Because of circumstances that develop and from which we learn, we have to go back and consider amending the legislation and introducing new regulations to respond to challenges that come up.

However, the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005, to which Tavish Scott referred, made a significant improvement in the way in which we license premises that sell alcohol. For example, one of the common issues that the police used to raise with me concerned off-licences that were found to be selling alcohol to people who were under 18; they were at risk of losing their licence and they would simply transfer the licence to another family member and continue. Having a premises licence as well as an individual licence closes down the potential for that, so the 2005 act made a significant improvement in how we go about alcohol licensing.

I said to the committee that I understand the calls for a review of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982. I also said that we should not underestimate the scale of such a review and the work that could be involved in it. My estimation is that it would take several years for that work to be undertaken. Therefore, although I recognise and understand the calls for the review, I caution members on the potential implications of it and the nature of the work that would be involved in it. As I said to the committee, I would be more than happy to come back to it in the autumn having considered the issue in greater detail.

John Wilson: One of the issues that was raised at the committee was how the 1982 act was being applied throughout Scotland and what appeared to be inconsistencies in its application by certain local authorities. It would be useful if the cabinet secretary were to indicate whether he will consider some of the inconsistencies that were identified when we took evidence.

Michael Matheson: I am always prepared to look at areas where things can be improved. However, the very nature of licensing means that there will always be a level of variation, given the way that individual local authorities take particular matters forward.

Alex Rowley asked about having a discussion about some of the areas in which he and his colleagues believe that the bill could be improved. I am not in favour of deleting any section of the bill—that will disappoint the Conservatives—but I am always open to looking at how we can improve legislation, no matter which side of the chamber the suggestions come from. I am more than happy to engage with Alex Rowley and his colleagues and any other member in the chamber to look at how we can improve this bill.

I turn to the licensing of air weapons. I note the position that the Conservatives have now taken on this matter. Over recent years the number of crimes that have involved a firearm has decreased significantly, and that is positive. Having said that, almost half of all the incidents that involve a firearm involve an air weapon. So, although the number has been dropping, air weapons account for almost half of all the incidents that involve a weapon of a firearm nature.
We have sought to act proportionately in this area. The way in which the licensing regime will operate for air weapons is not the same as the way in which it will operate for firearms and shotguns. It is a much lighter-touch approach, but it will allow the police, as they have said, to prevent an individual from having an air weapon if the police do not believe that they are a suitable individual to have one, or if they do not think that it would be used in an appropriate way. It has been a frustration to the police for some time that individuals who they do not believe should have an air weapon have been able to have one and the police have been powerless to do anything about it. That point was raised by Sandra White.

Alex Fergusson: Would the cabinet secretary be open to—

The Presiding Officer (Tricia Marwick): Can we have Mr Fergusson’s microphone on, please?

Alex Fergusson: It might help if Mr Fergusson had put his card in.

The Presiding Officer: I would have thought that you would have known better, Mr Fergusson.

Alex Fergusson: So would I, Presiding Officer. You are absolutely right. I apologise.

Is the cabinet secretary open to the suggestion—perhaps this is for a later stage of the bill—that if somebody already holds a shotgun or firearms certificate they would automatically have the right to possess an airgun?

Michael Matheson: Part of the provision that we have put in the bill is that those who hold a shotgun or firearms licence and who also have an air weapon will not have to apply for an air weapons licence until they are applying for a new shotgun or firearms licence when their licence expires. That is the only point at which they would have to apply for it during that process. That is to take away some of the potential burden from them.

I turn to the issue that Mr Fergusson raised around the potential burden on the police in having to deal with all the licences that will be required for air weapons. As the member might be aware, there are significant peaks and troughs in the way in which the police deal with firearms licensing. That point was made by John Wilson in his speech. We are trying to ensure that we introduce the provision on air weapons in that trough when the police are not dealing with a significant amount of firearm or shotgun licences. We are working on that with the police. As I indicated, we are looking at how we can manage that issue through secondary legislation.

The fee for certificates for both shotguns and firearms has increased from £50 as of 6 April. For a firearms certificate, the fee is now £88 and for a shotgun certificate it is £79.50. We have sought to achieve a balance on the issue of the licensing of air weapons. I believe that the bill reflects that.

I turn to the issue of sexual entertainment venues, about which a number of comments have been made. I understand the comments and concerns that have been raised by some members on this issue and the need to make licensing provision on this matter. To her credit, Sandra White has pursued this matter through the Parliament for almost a decade, and we are now making significant progress in this bill to address the concerns that she has raised.

I am very conscious that often, when the Government takes action, there is the accusation that we are taking powers to the centre and making decisions that we should have allowed to be taken locally. In the bill, we are allowing local licensing boards to make the decision, based on local policy. I refer to the point that Rhoda Grant raised. If local licensing boards wish to set a zero figure for sexual entertainment venues, they can do so. There is a process that they will have to go through in justifying that, but the bill allows them to do that should they wish to do so. It gives them the power and allows them to engage with their local community and to reflect on that in their local decision making. I believe that that is the right balance to strike. That gives them the power and the scope to take matters forward.

On under-18s being able to work in sexual entertainment venues when the venues are not operating, I am more than open to looking at where measures can be taken. I am very conscious that there are issues around employment law that we must be careful of, but I am more than happy to look at that issue further. On the working conditions for those in the venues, I am more than happy to look at where provisions could be put—probably in secondary legislation—for licensing boards to take into account those matters, as well.

The Presiding Officer: You should bring your remarks to a close.

Michael Matheson: That would help to improve the legislation. I am open to looking at how we can take those matters forward.

The debate has been very useful. We will consider all the points that have been raised, and I will respond to members as positively as I can in order to build on the bill, improve it, make it as suitable as possible, and ensure that we continue to have a range of licensing regimes in Scotland that are fit for purpose.
Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill: Financial Resolution

The Presiding Officer (Tricia Marwick): The next item of business is consideration of motion S4M-12488, in the name of John Swinney, on the financial resolution to the Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill.

Motion moved,

That the Parliament, for the purposes of any Act of the Scottish Parliament resulting from the Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill, agrees to—

(a) any expenditure of a kind referred to in Rule 9.12.3(b) of the Parliament’s Standing Orders arising in consequence of the Act, and

(b) any charge or payment in relation to which Rule 9.12.4 of the Standing Orders applies arising in consequence of the Act.—[Michael Matheson.]

The Presiding Officer: The question on the motion will be put at decision time.

Decision Time

The Presiding Officer (Tricia Marwick): There are two questions to be put as a result of today’s business.

The first question is, that motion S4M-12994, in the name of Michael Matheson, on the Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill, be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Presiding Officer: There will be a division.

“(5) A Licensing Board making a premises licence review proposal may include in the proposal any information that the Board considers may be relevant to their consideration of the alleged ground for review including, in particular, information in relation to—

(a) the licence holder,
(b) where the licence holder is neither an individual nor a council, a connected person in relation to the licence holder, or
(c) any person who is an interested party in relation to the licensed premises.”.

Michael Matheson

47 In section 45, page 25, line 22, at end insert—

<(2B) Subject to section 39B, a revocation under subsection (2A) takes effect at the end of the period of 28 days beginning with the day on which the Board makes the decision.”.

Michael Matheson

48 In section 45, page 25, line 26, at end insert—

“39B Recall of revocation of licence under section 39(2A)

(1) This section applies where a Licensing Board decides to revoke a premises licence under section 39(2A).

(2) The Board must recall the revocation if—

(a) a relevant application is made before the end of the period referred to in section 39(2B) (“the 28 day period”), and
(b) the Board grants the application.
(3) The Board may extend the 28 day period pending determination of a relevant application.

(4) In this section, “relevant application” means—

(a) an application under section 33(1) for the transfer of the premises licence, or

(b) a premises licence variation application seeking a variation of the licence that the Board considers would remove the ground on which the licence was revoked under section 39(2A).

(5) This section does not affect the right to appeal against the decision to revoke the licence under section 39(2A).

After section 48

Michael Matheson

49 After section 48, insert—

<Transfer of premises licences>

Transfer of premises licences

(1) The 2005 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In section 33 (transfer of premises licence on application of licence holder)—

(a) for subsections (1) to (3) substitute—

“(1) Any person, other than an individual under the age of 18, may apply to the appropriate Licensing Board for the transfer of a premises licence to the person (such person being referred to in this section and section 33A as the “transferee”).

(1A) An application under subsection (1) must—

(a) specify the date on which the transfer is to take effect, and

(b) be accompanied by—

(i) the premises licence to which the application relates or, if that is not practicable, a statement of the reasons for failure to produce the licence, and

(ii) a written statement signed by the holder of the premises licence consenting to its transfer to the transferee (a “consent statement”) or, if that is not practicable, a statement of the reasons for failure to obtain the licence holder’s written consent.”,

(b) in subsection (4), after “constable” insert “, unless the Board must refuse the application under subsection (8A)”,

(c) in subsection (8), before paragraph (a) insert—

“(za) the application is accompanied by a consent statement referred to in subsection (1A)(b)(ii),”,

(d) after subsection (8) insert—

“(8A) If the application is not accompanied by a consent statement referred to in subsection (1A)(b)(ii), the Board must refuse the application, unless the Board dispenses with the requirement for a consent statement under section 33A(4).”.
The title of section 33 becomes “Application for transfer of premises licence”.

After section 33 insert—

“33A Application for transfer: further provision

(1) This section applies where a Licensing Board receives an application under section 33(1) for the transfer of a premises licence.

(2) The Board must take all reasonable steps to give notice of the application to the premises licence holder.

(3) Subsection (4) applies where the application is not accompanied by a consent statement referred to in section 33(1A)(b)(ii).

(4) The Board may dispense with the requirement for a consent statement if satisfied that the transferee has taken all reasonable steps to contact the premises licence holder in order to obtain consent but has received no response.

(5) Where the Board decides under subsection (4) not to dispense with the requirement for a consent statement, the Board must give notice of the decision, and of the reasons for it, to the transferee.

(6) Where the Board decides under subsection (4) to dispense with the requirement for a consent statement the Board must hold a hearing under section 33(9) for the purpose of considering and determining the application.

(7) Where the Board grants the application, the transfer of the licence takes effect—

(a) on the date specified in the application in accordance with section 33(1A)(a), or

(b) where the Board grants the application after that date, on such date as the Board may determine.”.

Section 34 (transfer on application of person other than licence holder) is repealed.

In Part 1 of schedule 5 (appeals to the sheriff principal)—

(a) in column 1 of the entry relating to a decision to refuse an application under section 33(1) or 34(1) for transfer of a premises licence, the words “or 34(1)” are repealed,

(b) in column 2 of that entry, after “applicant” insert “or the premises licence holder”,

(c) after that entry insert—

| “A decision to grant an application under section 33(1) for transfer of a premises licence” | The person from whom the premises licence is to be transferred |
|——|——|
Section 54

Michael Matheson

50 In section 54, page 30, leave out lines 8 to 10 and insert—

   ( ) at the beginning of paragraph (a) insert “must”,

<Interpretation of provisions relating to metal dealers etc.

(1) Section 37 of the 1982 Act (interpretation of sections 28 to 36) is amended as follows.

(2) In subsection (1), for the definition of “itinerant metal dealer” substitute—

“itinerant metal dealer” means a person who—

(a) carries on a business which consists wholly or substantially of buying or selling for scrap—

(i) metal articles that are old, broken, worn out or defaced, or

(ii) partly manufactured articles that are made wholly or partly from metal,
(b) collects articles of the kind described in paragraph (a)(i) and (ii) by means of visits from place to place, and
(c) disposes of such articles without causing them to be kept in a metal store or other premises (including by disposing or giving custody of the articles to a person who keeps a metal store).”.

(3) For subsection (2) substitute—

“(2) For the purposes of sections 28 to 36, a person carries on business as a metal dealer if the person—

(a) carries on a business which consists wholly or substantially of buying or selling for scrap—

(i) metal articles that are old, broken, worn out or defaced, or
(ii) partly manufactured articles that are made wholly or partly from metal, or

(b) carries on business as a motor salvage operator (so far as that does not fall within paragraph (a)).

(3) For the purposes of subsection (2)(b), a person carries on business as a motor salvage operator if the person carries on a business which consists wholly or substantially of—

(a) recovering salvageable parts from motor vehicles for re-use or sale and selling or disposing of the rest of the vehicle for scrap,
(b) buying significantly damaged motor vehicles and subsequently repairing and reselling them, or
(c) buying or selling motor vehicles which are to be the subject (whether immediately or upon a subsequent resale) of any of the activities mentioned in paragraphs (a) and (b).”.

Local Government and Regeneration Committee

[The Convener opened the meeting at 10:00]

Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill: Stage 2

The Convener (Kevin Stewart): Good morning and welcome to the 14th meeting in 2015 of the Local Government and Regeneration Committee.

If people wish to use tablet devices or mobile phones during the meeting, please switch them to flight mode, as they may otherwise affect the broadcasting system. Some committee members may consult tablet devices during the meeting; that is because we provide meeting papers in digital format.

We have apologies from Alex Rowley.

Agenda item 1 is the only item of business; it is our first day of stage 2 consideration of the Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill. I welcome Michael Matheson MSP, Cabinet Secretary for Justice, who is joining us today as the member in charge of the bill.

Today we will consider sections 1 to 40 of the bill and all amendments to those sections. The sections form part 1 of the bill and establish an air weapon certificate system in Scotland. At our next meeting, which will be on Wednesday 20 May, we will consider sections 41 to 59, on alcohol licensing. Any member wishing to lodge amendments to those sections must do so by 12 noon this coming Friday, which is 15 May.

We will consider the remaining sections and schedules of the bill at our meeting on Wednesday 27 May. That will cover civil licensing provisions such as those on scrap metal dealers, sexual entertainment venues and taxi and private car hire licensing. I point out now that, owing to the late spring holiday, the deadline for lodging amendments to the civil licensing sections of the bill is 12 noon on Wednesday 20 May, which is Wednesday of next week. Members should lodge amendments with the legislation clerks in the usual way.

Before we move on to consideration of amendments, it would be helpful if I set out the procedure for stage 2 consideration. Everyone should have with them a copy of the bill as introduced, the marshalled list of amendments, which was published on Monday, and the groupings of amendments, which sets out the amendments in the order in which they will be debated.

There will be one debate on each group of amendments. I will call the member who lodged the first amendment in each group to speak to and move their amendment, and to speak to all the other amendments in the group. Members who have not lodged amendments in the group but who wish to speak should indicate by catching my attention in the usual way.

If the cabinet secretary has not already spoken on the group, I will invite him to contribute to the debate just before I move to the winding-up speech. As with a debate in the chamber, the member who is winding up on a group may take interventions from other members if they wish. The debate on each group will be concluded by me inviting the member who moved the first amendment in the group to wind up.

Following debate on each group, I will check whether the member who moved the first amendment in the group wishes to press their amendment to a vote or to withdraw it. If they wish to press ahead, I will put the question on that amendment. If a member wishes to withdraw their amendment after it has been moved, they must seek the committee’s agreement to do so. If any committee member objects, the committee must immediately move to the vote on the amendment.

If any member does not want to move their amendment when I call it, they should say, “Not moved.” Please remember that any other MSP may move such an amendment. If no one moves the amendment, I will immediately call the next amendment on the marshalled list.

Only committee members are allowed to vote at stage 2. Voting in any division is by show of hands. It is important that members keep their hands clearly raised until the clerk has recorded the vote.

The committee is required to indicate formally that it has considered and agreed each section of the bill, and so I will put a question on each section at the appropriate point.

Today, we will go no further than part 1. Let us move on to the list of amendments.

Section 1—Meaning of “air weapon”

The Convener: Amendment 1, in the name of Cameron Buchanan, is grouped with amendments 2, 3, 5, 6, 36 and 37.

Cameron Buchanan (Lothian) (Con): Amendment 1 is a probing amendment, because I think that “air weapon” is a loaded term and that airguns are intended to be used for harm and to kill. I am aware that in the Firearms Act 1968 the term used was “air weapon”, but I think that “weapon” is a misleading term and that “gun” is better. I just wanted to see what the committee and Government thought about that.

I move amendment 1.

The Convener: I call the cabinet secretary to speak to amendment 2 and the other amendments in the group.

The Cabinet Secretary for Justice (Michael Matheson): I am grateful for the opportunity to bring forward a number of Government amendments to part 1 of the Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill this morning.

Since the bill was introduced, we have continued to listen carefully to the views of stakeholders and we have taken into account the evidence at committee sessions and the recommendations that were set out in the committee’s stage 1 report. As a result, we are bringing forward a small number of amendments that, as I hope the committee will agree, help to clarify and fine tune the bill’s provisions.

I also welcome the opportunity to respond to the issues that have been raised in the amendments that have been lodged by Cameron Buchanan, and I am grateful to him for his work.

I begin with what is probably the most complex group of amendments. Mr Buchanan’s amendment 1 would remove a key component of the definition of “air weapon” for the purposes of part 1 of the bill, without putting anything in its place. As such, the resulting position appears unworkable and confused.

In practical terms, the removal of section 1(2) without providing any alternative definition of the meaning of “air weapon” would introduce a risk that the bill might be read as attempting to capture air weapons that are either so high powered that they are controlled by the Firearms Act 1968, or so low powered that they are not considered lethal. In short, amendment 1, if agreed to, could significantly change the nature of the licensing regime that is set out in part 1 and remove the certainty over exactly what is covered, which is so important to a licensing regime.

Mr Buchanan’s amendments 5, 6 and 37 may be thought of together, as they address an issue around airsoft guns for approved clubs. In practice, the amendments attempt to exempt those using airsoft guns from the need to hold an air weapon certificate. I believe that the bill as drafted already provides a definition of air weapons that meets our principles of developing a proportionate, familiar and practicable licensing regime. We have consulted widely on the definition, and I believe that it is generally well understood.

However, I also believe that we can make the position even clearer for all users of the legislation, and achieve Mr Buchanan’s aims.

John Wilson (Central Scotland) (Ind): On the definition in the 1968 act, air weapons have changed dramatically with the use of, for example, airsoft and paintballing weapons. Those weapons are now powered up in the same way as many air rifles and guns are.

Is there not a need at some stage to tighten up the definition so that we are clear about the types of air weapon that are covered by the 1968 act and the types of weapon that the Scottish Government intends to cover in the bill? There have been major and significant advances in the use of weapons that could be termed air weapons but that may not be covered by the bill, such as paintballing and airsoft weapons.

Michael Matheson: If the member bears with me, I am coming to that very point in the explanation that I am providing.

Mr Buchanan wishes to clarify the position on the use of airsoft guns, and that will be achieved by amendments 2 and 3 in my name. We have been clear from the outset that it is not our intention to license very low-powered air weapons such as BB guns or those used for airsoft pursuits. In legal terms, such guns are not generally considered to be firearms within the meaning of the Firearms Act 1968. They are regulated elsewhere. For example, airsoft guns are regulated as realistic imitation firearms under existing Great Britain legislation: the Violent Crime Reduction Act 2006, which prohibits the manufacture, import and sale of realistic imitations, with a small number of exemptions. The exemptions include film and theatre production, historical re-enactments, and airsoft skirmishing in clubs that are affiliated with the United Kingdom Airsoft Retailers Association.

A number of stakeholders have written to ministers since the bill was introduced, seeking clarification over the types of guns that are to be included in the regime. Amendment 2 therefore aims to clarify the meaning of “air weapon” for the purposes of the licensing regime. It should help to put the position beyond doubt by excluding such guns if they are not firearms within the meaning of section 57(1) of the 1968 act. That excludes airguns such as airsoft and paintball guns.

Amendment 3 is simply a consequential change arising from amendment 2, to make it clear that the component parts of such guns would also fall outwith the licensing regime.

I believe that amendments 2 and 3 provide a clearer and simpler approach to addressing the matters that have been raised by Mr Buchanan’s amendments. I hope that the commentary that I have offered also clarifies for Mr Wilson the present arrangements for the regulation of imitation firearms. Therefore, I ask Mr Buchanan not to press amendment 1 and not to move amendments 5, 6 and 37, and I invite members to support amendments 2 and 3 in my name.

The Convener: As no other member wishes to enter the debate, I call Cameron Buchanan to wind up and to say whether he wishes to press or withdraw amendment 1.

Cameron Buchanan: Does the cabinet secretary not think that we should specify paintball and softball, rather than just give a general definition of them? Paintball and softball probably did not exist at the time of the 1968 act—certainly paintball did not. I wonder whether we should specify that, which is the whole point of amendment 1. As long as paintball and softball activities take place in an approved club, they should be all right, but I think that we should be a bit more specific on the definition.

The Convener: I think that the cabinet secretary was pretty specific in what he said. Do you want to repeat what you said, cabinet secretary?

Michael Matheson: We have lodged amendments 2 and 3 to make the bill clearer concerning that matter. It is tied into the Firearms Act 1968, and that is why we are providing further clarification on that in relation to air weapons.

Cameron Buchanan: Fine, but will you not specify any more? You are not trying to ban those hobbies, are you? That is the point. I am concerned that the issue is not mentioned.

The Convener: This is an unusual way of dealing with the procedure, but the cabinet secretary can come back in if he wants to do so.

Michael Matheson: We are not trying to ban anything. We are trying to ensure that there is provision and to offer the clarification that some in the sector have asked for, so that the bill is clear about the regime that will operate and apply to the particular weapons that they use.

Cameron Buchanan: Thank you. I wish to withdraw my amendment.

Amendment 1, by agreement, withdrawn.

Amendments 2 and 3 moved—[Michael Matheson]—and agreed to.

Section 1, as amended, agreed to.

Section 2—Requirement for air weapon certificate

The Convener: Amendment 4, in the name of Cameron Buchanan, is grouped with amendments 10 to 14 and 20. I point out that, if amendment 12 is agreed to, I cannot call amendments 13 or 14 respectively.

Cameron Buchanan: Amendment 4 would exempt holders of firearm or shotgun certificates from the requirement for an air weapon certificate. The point is that the possessor of a firearm or shotgun certificate can confidently be assumed to be fit to possess an air weapon, having already obtained a certificate. I think that forcing them and the police to go through administrative obstacles to obtain an air weapon licence is unnecessary and a bureaucratic burden on the applicants and the police, as we heard from the police.

I move amendment 4.

The Convener: Is that you finished with amendment 4 and all the amendments in the group?

Cameron Buchanan: Yes, I think so. The other amendments are consequential.

The Convener: As no other member wishes to speak, I call the cabinet secretary.

Michael Matheson: Can I just clarify that we are dealing with amendments 4 to 20?

The Convener: We are dealing with amendments 4, 10 to 14 and 20.

Michael Matheson: Mr Buchanan’s amendments in the group would fundamentally change the way in which we and the police approach the licensing of air weapons under the new legislation. They reflect many of the objections that we have heard to the principle of air weapons licensing. Those objections were expressed by some of the shooting representatives on our expert consultative panel and by other organisations and individuals who responded to our public consultation in early 2013. The committee heard similar views during the first evidence session on the bill in November last year. However, we believe that part 1 achieves our aim of setting out a familiar, proportionate and practicable licensing regime for air weapons. The committee and the Parliament have approved the principle underpinning the bill at stage 1 of the process.

Amendment 4 and consequential amendment 12 would provide an automatic exemption from the need for an air weapon certificate for anyone who holds a firearm certificate or shotgun certificate that is issued by the police under the Firearms Act 1968. I have heard what Mr Buchanan has said on the issue and I appreciate that providing such a blanket exemption could appear to ease the burden on the police and on those who shoot. In fact, we considered including that as a potential exemption from the licensing requirement in the early stages of the development of the bill.

However, we rejected the idea for a number of reasons. Among other things, the granting of firearm and shotgun certificates is subject to different tests under the 1968 act. For instance, the test for granting shotgun certificates is less stringent. There is no fit and proper person test, and the onus is on the police to demonstrate the absence of a good reason. We have been clear throughout the development of the bill that we do not think that that is the right approach to the licensing of firearms in a modern Scotland. In addition, firearms, shotguns and air weapons are used for different purposes in different environments and circumstances, depending on their technical specifications and power levels. It does not necessarily follow that someone who has a legitimate reason for requiring a more powerful firearm will also have a good reason for requiring an air weapon.

For air weapons, we believe that it is right and proper that applicants should be able to demonstrate that they have a reasonable use for the guns and that they can be permitted to use, possess and otherwise interact with them in a reasonable, responsible and safe manner. However, in section 5(2), we make provision to allow the chief constable to take as satisfied the tests that a person is fit to be entrusted with an air weapon, and that they are not prohibited from possessing firearms under the 1968 act if they already hold a firearms or shotgun certificate. I believe that that goes a significant way towards Mr Buchanan’s aims but maintains our overall intent in relation to the tests for granting or renewing an air weapon certificate. On that basis, I urge members to reject amendments 4 and 12.

The remaining amendments in the group seek to modify the requirements for the granting or renewal of an air weapon certificate in two ways. Amendments 13 and 14 appear to offer an alternative to amendments 4 and 12. They would require the chief constable to consider any applicant who holds a firearm or shotgun certificate to automatically meet the requirements to be granted an air weapon certificate without further inquiry.

Amendments 10, 11 and 20 seek to reduce the number of requirements for granting an air weapon certificate, to make the procedure more consistent with the less stringent test that applies to shotgun certificates. If agreed to, amendments 10 and 11 would remove the need for the chief constable to be satisfied of the fit person and good reason requirements.

Amendment 20 would consequentially amend section 7 to remove reference to the good reason test in relation to the granting of young persons certificates. However, Mr Buchanan has not followed that through to visitor permits or revocation, and would leave a potentially complicated set of different tests for different circumstances, which I suspect is not his intention. As I have already said, we do not believe that that is the correct approach to firearms licensing, and I urge members to reject the amendments.

John Wilson: The cabinet secretary has referred to firearms. The bill is about air weapons, and firearms come under different UK legislation—the 1968 act. When he talks about firearms, does he mean air weapons or does he mean firearms? We need to be clear that firearms come under the 1968 act and air weapons are under the jurisdiction of the Scottish Government under the terms of the bill that is going through the Parliament. The use of language about firearms versus air weapons requires clarification, as we are dealing with air weapons, not firearms.

Michael Matheson: I am not entirely clear what John Wilson’s point is.

John Wilson: Firearms are defined under the 1968 act, but the bill refers to air weapons, not firearms. Confusion may be caused among the general public if we talk about firearms and air weapons. As I said, firearms are defined under the 1968 act, and we are trying to define air weapons under the bill. I am trying to get that clear for everybody, so that if people apply for a licence for a firearm they know that they are applying for a licence under the 1968 act and that, in future, once the bill is passed, they will know that they are applying for an air weapon licence, not a firearms licence.

Michael Matheson: In short, that is correct. When I refer to an air weapon, it is to do with the licensing regime proposed in the bill. When I refer to firearms, I am referring to the licensing regime under the 1968 act.

The Convener: I call Cameron Buchanan to wind up and to say whether he wishes to press or withdraw amendment 4.

Cameron Buchanan: Cabinet secretary, I am not quite clear whether you meant—

The Convener: Mr Buchanan, you must press or withdraw and wind up now. This is no longer the time to question the cabinet secretary. If you wanted to question him, you should have done that by intervention while he was speaking.

Cameron Buchanan: I shall press my amendment.

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 4 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.
For
Buchanan, Cameron (Lothian) (Con)

Against
Adamson, Clare (Central Scotland) (SNP)
Coffey, Willie (Kilmarnock and Irvine Valley) (SNP)
Hilton, Cara (Dunfermline) (Lab)
Stewart, Kevin (Aberdeen Central) (SNP)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 1, Against 5, Abstentions 0.

Section 2 agreed to.

Schedule 1—Exemptions

Amendments 5 and 6 not moved.

The Convener: Amendment 7, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is grouped with amendments 31 to 33.

Michael Matheson: Section 24, which governs commercial transactions involving air weapons, broadly matches existing arrangements for firearms in the Violent Crime Reduction Act 2006. The provision in section 24(2)(c) allows a registered firearms dealer to sell or transfer an air weapon to a person who does not have an air weapon certificate if the gun is not handed to them but is sent for delivery to a place outwith Great Britain. That has caused stakeholders concerns that the bill will prevent sales of firearms to people from England and Wales. The committee reflected those concerns in paragraph 139 of its stage 1 report and recommended that we take steps to ensure that remote sales to other parts of Great Britain are not prevented in that way. I was happy to accept that recommendation in my reply to the stage 1 report, and my amendments in the group will ensure that we achieve that.

Amendment 32 extends the existing provision for sales for delivery outwith Great Britain to ensure that it also applies to sales for delivery to England and Wales. They will be permitted where the gun is sent directly to a registered firearms dealer in England or Wales, where the buyer can collect it.

Amendment 7, which is consequential to amendment 32, amends the exemption at paragraph 15 of schedule 1 to allow a person to purchase an air weapon in those circumstances without holding an air weapon certificate. Again, the amendment extends the provision as drafted, which applies to people who wish to purchase an air weapon for delivery to a place outwith Great Britain.

It is important that we maintain the principle that a person must have an air weapon certificate or hold a permit or be otherwise exempt from the general requirement to hold an air weapon certificate if they are to purchase an air weapon in Scotland. It is also an important principle of existing firearms legislation that commercial sales and transfers of firearms, including air weapons, should be completed face to face where the buyer is not also a registered firearms dealer. I believe that amendments 32 and 7 uphold those principles while ensuring that we do not prevent legitimate trade in air weapons to people in England and Wales. I therefore invite members to support my amendments.

I believe that Mr Buchanan’s amendment 31 is intended to address the very concern that I have just spoken about. However, I do not believe that the approach that it takes is the right one. The wording that it proposes was considered when the bill was drafted but it was decided against for the following reasons. Section 32 of the Violent Crime Reduction Act 2006 requires commercial sales of air weapons to individuals in Great Britain to be concluded face to face. That prevents potentially lethal firearms from being delivered directly to people’s homes. Instead, people must collect items from a registered firearms dealer. The bill repeals section 32 of the VCRA in Scotland but recreates it at section 25 to preserve the policy aim.

If Mr Buchanan’s amendment 31 was agreed to, there would be a risk that companies could set themselves up as registered firearms dealers in Scotland for the purpose of selling air weapons by mail order to the rest of Great Britain. That would undermine the policy that underpins section 32 of the VCRA and section 25 of the bill and enable such dealers to bypass the face-to-face requirement. We have therefore agreed the wording that is proposed in amendment 32 with the Gun Trade Association and the Home Office. It achieves the same aim, but preserves the face-to-face policy of the VCRA and section 25 of the bill.

Given that amendments 7 and 32 meet the aims that I have outlined and fully address the committee’s concerns in its stage 1 report, I ask Mr Buchanan not to move amendment 31.

Amendment 33 is slightly different. Section 26 of the bill was intended to replicate section 18 of the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1988. That provision allows the Government to notify fellow European Union countries when high-powered firearms or shotguns are sold for export to any such country. However, because air weapons are not covered by EU firearms law, there is no requirement to share such information. Police Scotland has therefore questioned what it would be expected to do with the information that was gathered under the provisions of section 26 notification.

We have examined the position again and concluded that such a notification requirement would place an unnecessary burden on both registered firearms dealers and the police for no practical purpose. To be clear for members, details of any sales of air weapons will still have to be recorded in the dealer's register of transactions and could therefore be checked by the police if necessary.

I lodged amendment 33 to remove section 26 in its entirety, and I invite members to support it.

I move amendment 7.

Cameron Buchanan: I thought that registered firearms dealers in Scotland would be allowed to deliver air weapons to another place. In view of what the cabinet secretary has said, there would have to be face-to-face completion with a registered dealer. I accept that.

Amendment 7 agreed to.

The Convener: Amendment 8, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is grouped with amendment 9.

Michael Matheson: Schedule 1 to the bill sets out a range of exemptions from the general requirement for an air weapon certificate under section 2. It details the circumstances in which a person may use, possess, purchase or acquire an air weapon without the need for holding an air weapon certificate. Those circumstances cover a wide range of situations, including use at an approved club, use at a funfair or other authorised event, and possession by registered firearms dealers or auctioneers. Schedule 1 also sets out certain exemptions from the restrictions on transactions involving air weapons under section 24.

Amendments 8 and 9 are minor, technical amendments to the exemptions that are listed in schedule 1.

Amendment 8 will make it explicit in paragraph 16 of schedule 1 that it will not be an offence under section 24 for a person to lend or to let on hire an air weapon to non-certificate holders provided that it is for a purpose exempted elsewhere in the schedule. That might include, for example, people who hire air weapons at a miniature rifle range at a funfair or an actor who borrows an air weapon for use in a film production.

Amendment 8 is a technical amendment that brings the wording of the provision more closely into line with the language that is used in other firearms legislation and is therefore more familiar to the police, shooters and other stakeholders. It also makes it explicit that the exemption allows the commercial hiring out of air weapons for exempted purposes without the need to be a registered firearms dealer.

On that basis, I invite members to agree to amendment 8.

A range of duties are undertaken by public servants that may require them to use, possess or otherwise deal with air weapons. Such activities are listed in paragraph 17(2) of schedule 1. Paragraph 17(3) lists public servants who may not require to hold an air weapon certificate for such purposes. It includes police officers, members of the armed forces and others, such as those who are involved in forensic examinations.

For those who are unfamiliar with the role, the Queen's and Lord Treasurer's Remembrancer, who is often referred to as the QLTR, is the Crown's representative in Scotland who deals with ownerless property—for example the assets of dissolved companies or the estates of individuals who have died with no will or traceable heir. Those may potentially include air weapons, so the exemption allows the QLTR to take possession without requiring a certificate.

Amendment 9 extends the exemption as originally drafted to ensure that others, properly authorised by the QLTR, may take possession of air weapons on the QLTR's behalf without requiring a certificate. That essentially provides the necessary legal cover for the QLTR's staff or other agents who act on their behalf. This approach has been discussed and agreed with the QLTR's office.

I move amendment 8.

Amendment 8 agreed to.

Amendment 9 moved—[Michael Matheson]—and agreed to.

Schedule 1, as amended, agreed to.

Sections 3 and 4 agreed to.

Section 5—Grant or renewal of air weapon certificate

Amendments 10 to 14 not moved.

Sections 5 and 6 agreed to.

Section 7—Special requirements and conditions for young persons

The Convener: Amendment 15, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is grouped with amendments 16 to 19, 26 and 27.

Michael Matheson: The Scottish Government is committed to ensuring that the use of air weapons by young people is properly and closely regulated. According to the most recently published statistics, more than 45 per cent of recorded crimes and offences involving air weapons are committed by persons aged 20 and under. Similarly, more than 50 per cent of the victims injured in offences in which a firearm was allegedly used were aged 20 and under.

The bill therefore sets out particular requirements and conditions around—

John Wilson: Will the cabinet secretary take an intervention?

Michael Matheson: Yes.

John Wilson: Can you clarify that those injuries were caused by air weapons and not firearms?

Michael Matheson: They were caused by air weapons. [Michael Matheson has corrected this contribution. See end of report.]

John Wilson: You have again fallen into the trap of using the term “firearm” when it should be “air weapon”. Incidents involving a firearm are more serious than incidents involving an air weapon—although any such incident is serious. I am sorry to be pernickety, but I am trying to get the language right for the official record. The statistics that you are using refer to air weapons, not firearms.

Michael Matheson: An air weapon is a firearm. Under the 1968 act, it is classed as a firearm.

John Wilson: That is right, but we are dealing with air weapons. The incidents that you have reported to the committee involved firearms. It is just the definition—

Michael Matheson: They are recorded as firearm incidents.

John Wilson: So they are recorded as firearm incidents.

Michael Matheson: Yes. They are firearms, and the incidents are recorded under the legislation as firearm incidents. An air weapon is a firearm under the 1968 act.

The Convener: That is the confusing issue for some members. Let us face facts: it would be much easier if we had control over all firearms. There is a bit of confusion about the fact that we are allowed to deal with air weapons here, yet previously they were dealt with under the Firearms Act 1968.

Michael Matheson: The terminology is correct in relation to the current legislation, although I appreciate that some members find the distinction challenging.

John Wilson: The reason I ask is not for the benefit of members around the table. Members of the public who are listening to the debate should be clear what we are referring to when we talk about air weapons and firearms.

Michael Matheson: For the record, and to be clear for the public, an air weapon is legally defined as a firearm under the 1968 act. That is the challenge. It would be a matter for the UK Government to reflect any changes by amending the 1968 act. It is important that the public are aware that that is the factual basis on which we operate.

The Convener: Thank you.

Michael Matheson: The bill sets out particular requirements and conditions around the purchase, acquisition, ownership and possession of air weapons by young people and the types of shooting that may be undertaken by certificate holders aged 14 to 17.

Amendment 15 is a minor drafting change that simply highlights the fact that any certificate granted to a young person must include a condition prohibiting the purchase and ownership of an air weapon, as well as one or more conditions restricting the possession and use of an air weapon to certain defined purposes.

On amendment 16, while we fully accept that there are a number of legitimate reasons—as described in section 7(5)—why a young person might possess and use an air weapon, we do not believe that it is appropriate for a young person to own such a gun in their own right. Section 7(4) therefore states that, while someone who is aged 14 to 17 may apply for a young person’s certificate to use and possess an air weapon, they will not be allowed to purchase or own such a weapon until they are 18.

Amendment 16 extends the conditions in section 7(4) to make it clear that 14 to 17-year-olds will not be permitted to hire an air weapon or accept one as a gift. They will, however, be allowed to borrow an air weapon, for example from an air weapon certificate holder or at an approved club. The amendment ensures that the conditions for young persons are brought more closely into line with the provisions of the Firearms Act 1968, which make it an offence for a person under 18 to purchase or hire an air weapon, or for anyone to sell, let on hire or make a gift of an air weapon to a person under 18. It will therefore provide greater consistency for shooters.

Following representations that have been made to us by a number of the main shooting organisations and the evidence that was given to the committee in November, we have looked again at the list of purposes for which a 14 to 17-year-old may be granted a young person’s air weapon certificate.

On amendment 17, I am very conscious of the fact that, in their evidence to the committee, some organisations—including the League Against Cruel Sports—stated that they oppose all shooting of live quarry. I fully understand that view. The abuse and harm caused to domestic animals and wildlife... by the inappropriate and illegal use of air weapons is completely unacceptable. The committee heard from the Scottish SPCA and others about the problems and upset that that can create. The police will investigate any such crimes that are reported to them. It is one of the issues that the licensing regime is intended to address.

However, we have considered carefully all the representations that have been made and have come to the conclusion that the initial drafting of the bill was too restrictive and does not reflect the reality of shooting for many young people, especially those who live in rural areas or those who are engaged in sport shooting. Such shooting can be appropriate in properly controlled circumstances.

I have therefore lodged amendment 17 to allow 14 to 17-year-olds to take part in shooting for sporting purposes, including shooting live quarry, on private land. Suitable quarry might include, for example, pigeons and rabbits. That change will bring the licensing of air weapons in Scotland into line with the restrictions on use that apply to young persons under UK and EU firearms legislation in relation to more powerful firearms. It should therefore ensure that there is a more consistent approach for shooters.

It is worth emphasising that it remains the responsibility of the chief constable to consider each application on its merits. If the chief constable decides that such shooting is not appropriate for a particular applicant, the certificate would not allow for sports shooting. I reassure committee members that extensive guidance is already widely available from shooting organisations and others about the types of live quarry that might properly be shot with air weapons. We will work closely with those organisations and the police to ensure that Scottish guidance reflects such advice. Any shooting of animals must take into account the power of the gun involved.

On Mr Buchanan’s amendment 19, we accept that restricting shooting for pest control to a young person who is a commercial pest controller or is employed by a pest controller is too restrictive and does not reflect the reality of shooting in many parts of Scotland. Such concerns were raised in evidence that was given to the committee by Police Scotland in particular, and I accept that the bill as introduced goes too far in that regard. The amendment will allow young people to volunteer to shoot rats at a church hall or rabbits at archaeological sites, for example. I am therefore happy to accept amendment 19. Given what I have said on these issues, I invite members to support the amendments in my name, as well as amendment 19 in Mr Buchanan’s name.

However, I am not so convinced by amendment 18, which is Mr Buchanan’s other amendment in the group. Although shooting at competitions and events is already one of the potential purposes for which a young person may use and possess an air weapon, amendment 18 broadens the condition to add “any connected activities”. That term is not defined in the amendment and, although I am interested to hear what Mr Buchanan says on the issue, I believe that “connected activities” is too broad a concept to stand on its own in this context. It might, for example, lead to a position in which a person believes that they can shoot in circumstances or at a location that would otherwise be deemed inappropriate.

The condition in section 7(5)(b) is already sufficiently broad to cover activities such as travelling to and from an event or competition. That would be considered possession for the purposes of participating in the event. Furthermore, the conditions in the menu of conditions at section 7(5) are not mutually exclusive and the police can attach any and all that they consider appropriate. For example, if a young person wanted to practise between events, and had a suitable place to do so, the target shooting condition in section 7(5)(a) could be added to their certificate. I therefore ask members to reject Mr Buchanan’s amendment 18.

Amendments 26 and 27 in my name are consequential on amendment 17. They will allow young people visiting Scotland on a group permit to shoot for sporting purposes or at targets on private land, or to shoot in competitions or at other events, and to do so under the same terms as young people in Scotland with their own certificate. As with amendments 15 to 17, I invite members to support amendments 26 and 27.

I move amendment 15.

Cameron Buchanan: Amendment 18 seeks to clarify the activities that are connected to competitions, which I do not think has been done. Such activities include training. It is only sensible that young people should be clear that they can practise or train for events, as well as compete in them. That is what is meant by the amendment's suggested insertion of the phrase “and any connected activities” after “competitions” in section 7, at line 12 of page 4 of the bill. I thought that the word “competitions” was a bit narrow, and that it should be clear that practice should be allowed.

Michael Matheson: In response to Mr Buchanan’s point, and as I outlined earlier, there is sufficient scope for the chief constable to make provision for a young person who may wish to practise at an identifiable location to have that included on their certificate when required, if the chief constable deems it appropriate.

Amendment 15 agreed to.

Amendments 16 and 17 moved—[Michael Matheson]—and agreed to.

Amendment 18 not moved.

The Convener: I call amendment 19, in the name of Cameron Buchanan. Mr Buchanan to move or not move.

Cameron Buchanan: Not moved.

The Convener: Just to clarify, Mr Buchanan has said that he does not want to move amendment 19. Is that correct?

Cameron Buchanan: Sorry. I want to move it.

Amendment 19 moved—[Cameron Buchanan]—and agreed to.

Amendment 20 not moved.

Section 7, as amended, agreed to.

Section 8—Duration of air weapon certificate

The Convener: Amendment 21, in the name of Cameron Buchanan, is grouped with amendment 22.

Cameron Buchanan: We should not restrict the length of time for which young people’s certificates last. If someone is 15, 16 or 17, they should not have to apply for another certificate when they are 18. We want a certificate to last for five years, irrespective of the applicant’s age.

It is only fair to allow the same length of time so that young people do not pay more than others for their certificates and are not therefore discouraged from applying. If someone is 16 or 17, they would be discouraged from applying because of the cost. Could we not make a young person’s certificate last for five years no matter whether they had turned 18?

I move amendment 21.

Michael Matheson: It may be helpful if I set out the way in which the licensing regime will operate for young people. That should address the concern that was raised by Mr Buchanan.

We have developed the provisions in part 1 to allow a responsible 14 to 17-year-old to hold a certificate in their own right, allowing them to shoot for specific purposes, as set out in section 7. Once those shooters become 18, it is right that they should be able to apply for and, it is hoped, obtain a full air weapon certificate. In addition, they should be able to purchase, acquire and own an air weapon in their own right.

For that reason, we introduced section 8(1)(a) to make it clear that a young person’s certificate expires on their 18th birthday. That provision does not prevent the young person from applying in advance for a full certificate to come into effect from that birthday, and that will be made clear in the guidance that we will publish in due course.

In practice, we also envisage that the scale of fees that we will bring forward in secondary legislation will include a sliding scale for young people. That will mean that a smaller fee than normal will be charged in such cases, to reflect the shorter duration of the certificate.

Cameron Buchanan: You are saying that, realistically, from the age of 14 to 18, there will be a sliding scale. Will it reflect the fact that the certificate will last for only two or three years?

Michael Matheson: That is the intention of the sliding scale. For example, a 16-year-old would effectively pay for the two years’ equivalent of their certificate at the time of application.

Section 36 relates to fees, and section 36(2) in particular allows different fees to be specified for different circumstances.

The bill achieves the objective that is sought by Mr Buchanan’s amendments, so I ask members to reject the amendments in the group.

Cameron Buchanan: I understand what the minister has said, so I will withdraw amendment 21.

Amendment 21, by agreement, withdrawn.

Amendment 22 not moved.

Section 8 agreed to.

Sections 9 and 10 agreed to.

Section 11—Revocation of air weapon certificate

The Convener: Amendment 23, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is grouped with amendments 24 and 25.

Michael Matheson: Any decision to revoke an air weapon certificate is serious. The initial grant, or subsequent renewal, is a matter for the chief constable and the decision to award it must be taken in light of the evidence that is available at the time.

The matters to be taken into account by the chief constable when granting or renewing a certificate are clearly set out in section 5 and, in the majority of cases, we would not expect the position to change radically for most certificate holders during the five-year period of the certificate. However, a person’s situation or circumstances might change, or new evidence might come to light that casts doubt on the person’s suitability to hold a certificate. In such circumstances, the chief constable may reconsider the position and decide to revoke a certificate if the person no longer meets the requirements for holding one.

Amendments 23, 24 and 25 make it clearer that any such revocation of an air weapon certificate should be as a result of new or further evidence coming to light about the suitability of a person to hold a certificate since it was granted or renewed. The amendments were suggested by the Law Society and I invite the committee to agree to all the amendments in my name.

I move amendment 23.

Sections 15 to 23 agreed to.

Section 24—Restrictions on transactions involving air weapons

The Convener: Amendment 28, in the name of Cameron Buchanan, is grouped with amendments 29 and 30.

Cameron Buchanan: Amendment 28 seeks to clarify that instructors at an approved club can repair or test the weapons. They should be able to do so because it would be highly impractical to expect participants to go to a registered firearms dealer every time that they had to repair or test a gun, even if there was just a minor fault. I seek to clarify whether that is permitted, and if it is not, to ask whether we need amendments to correct the situation.

I move amendment 28.

Michael Matheson: I understand the intention behind Cameron Buchanan’s amendments. We are clear that the sale and transfer of air weapons for trade or business purposes should be undertaken only—as it is at present—by firearms dealers who are registered under the provisions of the Firearms Act 1968. Mr Buchanan’s amendments do not alter that principle.

However, the amendments recognise that repair and testing, particularly in clubs, may be carried out on an informal basis in many cases. I am aware that a number of stakeholders have asked questions about how section 24 will come into effect. In principle, it appears to be sensible to allow club officials to undertake such repairs or tests, and that may be part of the service for which members pay an annual subscription fee or other fee. We have always been clear that we view air weapons clubs as the ideal environment for shooters to participate in their sport, and Mr Buchanan’s amendments are consistent with that approach.

However, the way in which Mr Buchanan approaches the issue leaves some questions on the detail, with particular doubt remaining around who could undertake such work and under what circumstances. For example, it would not be appropriate for the amendments inadvertently to undermine the existing RFD structures and the protection that they provide.

As such, I ask Mr Buchanan not to press amendment 28 at this stage. In doing so, I am happy to assure him and the committee that we will examine the issue in more detail, alongside stakeholders, and that we will consider lodging an appropriate amendment at stage 3 to address the issue.

Camer ich Buchanan: I listened to what the cabinet secretary said; I just wonder why—I suppose that I cannot ask the question at this point—he cannot amend the legislation as we have suggested at stage 2, rather than adding it in later.

The Convener: It would be impossible for the cabinet secretary to amend the bill on the hoof. He has just given you an assurance that he is willing to look at the issue at stage 3, Mr Buchanan.

Cameron Buchanan: Okay.

The Convener: Do you wish to press or withdraw amendment 28?

Cameron Buchanan: In this case, I will withdraw the amendment.

Amendment 28, by agreement, withdrawn.

Amendments 29 to 31 not moved.

Amendment 32 moved—[Michael Matheson]—and agreed to.

Section 24, as amended, agreed to.

Section 25 agreed to.

Section 26—Requirement to notify chief constable of certain sales

Amendment 33 moved—[Michael Matheson]—and agreed to.

Sections 27 to 30 agreed to.
Section 31—Failure to keep air weapons secure or to report loss to police

The Convener: Amendment 34, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is in a group on its own.

Michael Matheson: One of the aims of the licensing regime that we are introducing is to identify who holds air weapons and where in Scotland they are. A person will need to make proper arrangements for keeping their air weapons securely, and we will work with Police Scotland and shooting interests to develop guidance on safekeeping and other arrangements.

We will not require people with air weapons to purchase and install full-scale gun cabinets in every case, but there are already secure systems available for keeping air weapons safe. Section 31 makes it an offence for a person to fail to take such security precautions. In addition, it will be an offence to fail to notify the police if an air weapon is lost or stolen. The loss or theft of a firearm could leave it open to unauthorised or criminal use and is therefore a serious matter.

However, following evidence to the committee by the Scottish Police Federation, and the further discussions that we have had with Police Scotland, we agreed that the original drafting of the provision was overly strict in stating that someone must inform the police “immediately” of any theft or loss. Amendment 34 changes that timeframe to allow for individuals to report such a loss “as soon as reasonably practicable”.

That means that a person would not be penalised, for example, for not being able to report those details due to circumstances outwith their control, such as being on holiday or being unwell.

Ultimately, any judgment as to the reasonableness of any delay will be a case-by-case matter for the police, prosecutors and courts. I believe that that is a practical approach to address the need to ensure that proper care is taken over the security and handling of air weapons.

I move amendment 34.

The Convener: No one wishes to enter the debate, and I take it that the cabinet secretary does not wish to wind up.

Amendment 34 agreed to.

Section 31, as amended, agreed to.

Sections 32 to 37 agreed to.

After section 37

The Convener: Amendment 35, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is in a group on its own.

Michael Matheson: Amendment 35 inserts a new section to the bill on Crown application. Under the arrangements at Westminster, the existing firearms legislation does not automatically apply to the Crown, and the Firearms Act 1968 contains complicated provisions dealing with Crown servants and their use and possession of air weapons.

Members will be aware, however, that in Scotland legislation automatically applies to the Crown unless it expressly provides otherwise. It has been the Scottish Government’s policy that legislation should apply to the Crown as it applies to everyone else, unless specific exemption is made, and members of the Scottish Parliament have endorsed that view.

In line with that general policy, the air weapon licensing requirements will apply to the Crown, subject to the limited exemption that is set out in paragraph 17 of schedule 1 regarding public servants carrying out official duties. However, it is general policy to regulate the way in which the provisions will relate to the Crown in the text of the bill where there are potential questions over criminal responsibility.

The new provision will therefore exempt the Crown, excluding persons in the public service of the Crown, from being criminally liable for any contravention of a provision made by or under part 1. However, by way of enforcement, it will provide for

to apply to the Court of Session for a declarator of unlawfulness in relation to “any act or omission of the Crown which constitutes such a contravention.”

That is the standard approach to this type of situation.

I invite the committee to agree to the insertion of the new provision by way of amendment 35.

I move amendment 35.

The Convener: No one wishes to enter the debate, and I assume that the cabinet secretary forgoes his right to wind up.

Amendment 35 agreed to.

Sections 38 and 39 agreed to.

Section 40—Interpretation of Part 1

Amendment 36 moved—[Cameron Buchanan].

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 36 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.
The Convener: There will be a division.

Transfer of premises licences

(1) The 2005 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In section 33 (transfer of premises licence on application of licence holder)—

(a) for subsections (1) to (3) substitute—

“(1) Any person, other than an individual under the age of 18, may apply to the appropriate Licensing Board for the transfer of a premises licence to the person (such person being referred to in this section and section 33A as the “transferee”).

(1A) An application under subsection (1) must—

(a) specify the date on which the transfer is to take effect, and

(b) be accompanied by—

(ii) a written statement signed by the holder of the premises licence consenting to its transfer to the transferee (a “consent statement”) or, if that is not practicable, a statement of the reasons for failure to obtain the licence holder’s written consent.”.,

(b) in subsection (4), after “constable” insert “, unless the Board must refuse the application under subsection (8A)”,

(c) in subsection (8), before paragraph (a) insert—

“(za) the application is accompanied by a consent statement referred to in subsection (1A)(b)(ii),”,

(d) after subsection (8) insert—

“(8A) If the application is not accompanied by a consent statement referred to in subsection (1A)(b)(ii), the Board must refuse the application, unless the Board dispenses with the requirement for a consent statement under section 33A(4).”.

(3) The title of section 33 becomes “Application for transfer of premises licence”.

(4) After section 33 insert—

“33A Application for transfer: further provision

(1) This section applies where a Licensing Board receives an application under section 33(1) for the transfer of a premises licence.

(2) The Board must take all reasonable steps to give notice of the application to the premises licence holder.

(3) Subsection (4) applies where the application is not accompanied by a consent statement referred to in section 33A(1A)(b)(ii).

(4) The Board may dispense with the requirement for a consent statement if satisfied that the transferee has taken all reasonable steps to contact the premises licence holder in order to obtain consent but has received no response.

(5) Where the Board decides under subsection (4) not to dispense with the requirement for a consent statement, the Board must give notice of the decision, and of the reasons for it, to the transferee.

(6) Where the Board decides under subsection (4) to dispense with the requirement for a consent statement the Board must hold a hearing under section 33(9) for the purpose of considering and determining the application.

(7) Where the Board grants the application, the transfer of the licence takes effect—

(a) on the date specified in the application in accordance with section 33A(1A)(a), or

(b) where the Board grants the application after that date, on such date as the Board may determine.”.

(5) Section 34 (transfer on application of person other than licence holder) is repealed.

(6) In Part 1 of schedule 5 (appeals to the sheriff principal)—

(a) in column 1 of the entry relating to a decision to refuse an application under section 33(1) or 34(1) for transfer of a premises licence, the words “or 34(1)” are repealed,
(b) in column 2 of that entry, after “applicant” insert “or the premises licence holder”,
(c) after that entry insert—

| “A decision to grant an application under section 33(1) for transfer of a premises licence” | The person from whom the premises licence is to be transferred |
| A decision under section 33A(4), in relation to an application under section 33(1) for transfer of a premises licence, not to dispense with the requirement for a consent statement | The applicant |

<Restrictions on advertising of alcohol

Restrictions of advertising of alcohol

(1) The 2005 Act is amended as follows.

(2) After section 122 insert—

“PART 8A

RESTRICTIONS ON ADVERTISING OF ALCOHOL

Advertising near premises used by children

122A Ban on alcohol advertising near schools etc.

(1) It is an offence knowingly to cause or permit the display of an alcohol advertisement in a prohibited place within a restricted area.

(2) A restricted area is the area within 200 metres in any direction of any boundary of—

(a) the premises of a school (“premises” and “school” having the meanings given in section 135(1) of the Education (Scotland) Act 1980),

(b) premises used principally as a nursery or crèche,

(c) outdoor premises designed or adapted for use by members of the public as a children’s play area.

(3) In this section—

“advertisement” means any word, letter, image, mark, light, model, placard, board, notice, screen, awning, blind, flag, device, representation, container or package in the nature of, and employed wholly or partly for the purpose of, advertisement or promotion,

“alcohol advertisement” means an advertisement promoting alcohol,

“the display of an advertisement” includes emitting, screening or exhibiting an advertisement, “prohibited place” means any fixed place from which the advertisement may be seen by a person in a public place (other than a public place in any premises within which the prohibited place is situated).

122B Exceptions
(1) An advertisement is not an alcohol advertisement for the purposes of section 6 if it is an advertisement displayed on licensed premises that refers wholly to all or any of the following—
   (a) a general description of the business carried on,
   (b) a general description of the goods or services provided,
   (c) the name of the business,
   (d) the name or qualifications of the person carrying out the business or supplying the goods or services on those premises.
(2) An alcohol advertisement displayed on licensed premises and visible principally from within those premises is not displayed in a prohibited place for the purposes of section 122A merely because the advertisement is also visible from outside the premises.

Advertising within licensed premises

122C Advertising within licensed premises
(1) This section applies where off-sales premises form part of larger retail premises.
(2) It is an offence for a responsible person knowingly to cause or permit the display of an alcohol advertisement in any part of the larger premises other than the off-sales premises.
(3) In this section—
   “advertisement”, “alcohol advertisement” and “the display of an advertisement” have the meanings given in section 122A(3), “off-sales premises” means premises licensed to sell alcohol only for consumption off the premises, “responsible person” means—
   (a) the holder of the licence of the off-sales premises, and
   (b) any other person having management or control of the off-sales premises.

Advertising at sporting and cultural events

122D Advertising at sporting and cultural events
(1) It is an offence for a responsible person knowingly to cause or permit the display of an alcohol advertisement at any premises where a sporting event or a cultural event is being held if—
   (a) the majority of the participants in the event are under the age of 18, or
(b) the intended audience for the event consists principally of persons under that age.

(2) If the premises mentioned in subsection (1) form part of larger premises, that subsection does not apply to any other part of those larger premises.

(3) In this section—

“advertisement” has the meaning given in section 122A(3) and also includes an advertisement displayed on clothing,

“alcohol advertisement” and “the display of an advertisement” have the meanings given in section 122A(3),

“cultural event” includes any form of public exhibition or performance other than a film exhibition within the meaning of section 21(1) of the Cinemas Act 1985,

“participants” means—

(a) in relation to a cultural event, the performers (if any), and
(b) in relation to a sporting event, those engaging in the sport,

“responsible person” means any person having management or control of the event,

“sporting event” means any contest, exhibition or display of any sport to which the public are invited as spectators (whether or not on payment).

Penalties and enforcement

122E Penalties

A person guilty of an offence under this Part is liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding level 5 on the standard scale.

122F Offences by bodies corporate, etc.

(1) Where—

(a) an offence under this Part has been committed by—

(i) a body corporate,
(ii) a Scottish partnership, or
(iii) an unincorporated association other than a Scottish partnership, and

(b) it is proved that the offence was committed with the consent or connivance of, or was attributable to any neglect on the part of—

(i) a relevant individual, or
(ii) an individual purporting to act in the capacity of a relevant individual, that individual as well as the body, partnership or association is guilty of the offence and is liable to be proceeded against and punished accordingly.

(2) In subsection (1), “relevant individual” means—
(a) in relation to a body corporate other than a local authority—
   (i) a director, manager, secretary or other similar officer of the body,
   (ii) where the affairs of the body are managed by its members, the members,
(b) in relation to a local authority, an officer or member of the local authority,
(c) in relation to a Scottish partnership, a partner, and
(d) in relation to an unincorporated association other than a Scottish partnership, a person who is concerned in the management or control of the association.

(3) Any penalty imposed on a body corporate, Scottish partnership or unincorporated association on conviction of an offence under this Part is to be recovered by civil diligence in accordance with section 221 of the Criminal

122G Fixed penalties

(1) Schedule 4A (which makes provision as to fixed penalties for offences under this Part) has effect.

(2) Schedule 4A does not have effect in relation to an offence committed by a local authority.

(3) After Schedule 4 insert—

"SCHEDULE 4A
(introduced by section 122G)

FIXED PENALTY FOR ALCOHOL ADVERTISING OFFENCES"

Power to give fixed penalty notices

1 (1) An authorised officer of a local authority may, if having reason to believe that a person is committing or has committed an offence under Part 8A within the area of the local authority, give that person a fixed penalty notice in relation to that offence.

(2) A constable may, if having reason to believe that a person is committing or has committed an offence under Part 8A, give that person a fixed penalty notice in relation to that offence.

(3) In this schedule, “fixed penalty notice” means a notice offering a person the opportunity of discharging any liability to conviction for the offence in question by payment of a fixed penalty.

Contents of fixed penalty notice

2 (1) A fixed penalty notice must identify the offence to which it relates and give reasonable particulars of the circumstances alleged to constitute that offence.

(2) A fixed penalty notice must also state—

(a) the amount of the penalty and the period within which it may be paid,
(b) the discounted amount and the period within which it may be paid,
(c) the person to whom and the address at which payment may be made,
(d) the method by which payment may be made,
(e) the person to whom and the address at which any representations relating to the notice may be made,
(f) the consequences of not making a payment within the period for payment.

3 (3) The person specified under sub-paragraph (2)(c) must be the local authority in the area of which the offence is alleged to have been committed or a person acting on its behalf.

4 (4) The person specified under sub-paragraph (2)(e) must be—
(a) where the notice is issued by an authorised officer of a local authority, a person at such office of the local authority as is specified in the notice,
(b) where the notice is issued by a constable, a person at such office of the Police Service of Scotland as is specified in the notice.

Amount of penalty and period for payment

3 (1) The fixed penalty for an offence under Part 8A is £200.
(2) The period for payment of the fixed penalty is the period of 29 days beginning with the day on which the notice is given.

The discounted amount

4 (1) A discounted amount is payable instead of the amount of the fixed penalty if payment is made before the end of the period of 15 days beginning with the day on which the notice is given.
(2) The discounted amount is 75% of the amount of the fixed penalty.
(3) If the last day of the period specified in sub-paragraph (1) does not fall on a working day, the period for payment of the discounted amount is extended until the end of the next working day.
(4) In this paragraph, “working day” means any day other than a Saturday, a Sunday, Christmas Day or a day which, under the Banking and Financial Dealings Act 1971, is a bank holiday in Scotland.

Effect of notice and payment of penalty

5 (1) This paragraph applies where a person is given a fixed penalty notice under paragraph 1(1) or (2) in respect of an offence.
(2) No proceedings for the offence may be commenced—
(a) if the penalty is paid before the end of the period for payment of the penalty, or
(b) if the penalty is tendered after the end of that period and payment is accepted by the local authority.
(3) Payment of the discounted amount counts for the purposes of sub-paragraph (2)(a) only if it is made before the end of the period for payment of the discounted amount.
(4) The local authority must not accept any payment tendered in respect of the fixed penalty after proceedings have been commenced.

(5) In proceedings for the offence, a certificate which—

   (a) purports to be signed by or on behalf of a person having responsibility for the financial affairs of the local authority, and

   (b) states that payment of an amount specified in the certificate was or was not received by a date so specified, is sufficient evidence of the facts so stated.

Withdrawal of notices

6 (1) If the local authority considers (whether in light of representations made under paragraph 2(2)(e) or for any other reason) that a fixed penalty notice given by an authorised officer of the local authority ought not to have been given, it may give to the person to whom it was given a notice withdrawing the fixed penalty notice.

(2) If a constable considers (whether in light of representations made under paragraph 2(2)(e) or for any other reason) that a fixed penalty notice given by a constable ought not to have been given, the constable may give to the person to whom it was given a notice withdrawing the fixed penalty notice.

(3) The constable must give a copy of the notice under sub-paragraph (2) to the local authority specified in the fixed penalty notice under paragraph 2(2)(c).

(4) A notice under sub-paragraph (1) or (2) may be given only at a time when proceedings have not been commenced.

(5) Where a notice of withdrawal is given to a person under sub-paragraph (1) or (2) no proceedings are to be commenced against that person for the offence in question.

Repayment of fixed penalty

7 Where—

   (a) a notice of withdrawal is given under paragraph 6(1) or (2), or

   (b) proceedings for an offence in respect of which a fixed penalty notice has been given are commenced, any amount which has been paid by way of penalty in pursuance of the fixed penalty notice is to be repaid.

Duty to review fixed penalty

8 (1) The Scottish Ministers must annually review the fixed penalty for the time being specified in paragraph 3(1) to determine whether it should be modified to take account of changes in the value of money.

(2) The first review is to be no later than 12 months after the date on which the Bill for this Act receives Royal Assent.

(3) Each subsequent review is to be no later than the next subsequent anniversary of Royal Assent.
If, on a review, the Scottish Ministers determine that the fixed penalty should be modified, they must by regulations modify the fixed penalty.

Regulations

9 (1) The Scottish Ministers may make regulations about the method by which a fixed penalty may be paid.

(2) The Scottish Ministers may by regulations modify the periods for the time being specified in paragraphs 3(2) and 4(1) if they consider it desirable to do so having regard to other enactments making provision about fixed penalty notices.

<9B Annual report on exercise of functions

(1) Each Licensing Board must prepare and publish a report on the exercise of their functions not later than 3 months after the end of each financial year.

(2) The Scottish Ministers may by regulations vary the period of time for the time being specified in subsection (1) within which each Licensing Board must prepare and publish their annual report under this section.

(3) A report under this section must include—
(a) a summary of the decisions taken by the Licensing Board in the exercise of their functions under this Act, including any decisions taken by any person to whom functions have been delegated by the Board under paragraph 10 of Schedule 1, during the financial year,

(b) a summary of the provision of licensed premises and the number of occasional licences granted in the Board’s area, including in particular localities within their area,

(c) a statement setting out how, in exercising their functions under this Act during the financial year, the Licensing Board—

   (i) have sought to give effect to their licensing policy statement and any supplementary licensing policy statement published under section 6,

   (ii) have taken account of any assessment they have made under section 7 of overprovision in any locality within their area,

   (iii) consider how the exercise of their functions has contributed to the licensing objectives.

(4) A report under this section may also include such other information about the exercise of the Licensing Board’s functions as the Board consider appropriate.

(5) The Scottish Ministers may by regulations make further provision about reports under this section including provision—

   (a) about the form and content of reports including, in particular—

      (i) the information on decisions that is to be included in a summary under subsection (3)(a),

      (ii) how a summary is to be reported for the purposes of subsection (3)(b), and

      (iii) the information to be kept for the purposes of providing a statement required under subsection (3)(c) and how such a statement is to be set out, and

   (b) the publication of reports.

(6) Regulations under subsection (5)(a) may modify subsection (3).

(7) In this section, “financial year” means a yearly period ending on 31 March.”.

Scottish Parliament
Local Government and Regeneration Committee

Wednesday 20 May 2015

[The Convener opened the meeting at 10:01]

Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill: Stage 2

The Convener (Kevin Stewart): Good morning and welcome to the 15th meeting in 2015 of the Local Government and Regeneration Committee. If you wish to use tablet devices or mobile phones during the meeting, please switch them to flight mode as they may otherwise affect the broadcasting system. Some committee members may consult tablet devices during the meeting because we provide meeting papers in digital format.

Apologies have been received from Cara Hilton.

Our only item of business today is our second day of stage 2 consideration of the Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill. I welcome back Michael Matheson MSP, the Cabinet Secretary for Justice. I also welcome Dr Richard Simpson MSP, who is attending to speak to amendments in his name. Today we will consider sections 41 to 59 and all amendments to those sections; the sections form part 2 of the bill and amend the alcohol licensing system in Scotland.

I remind members that, as the office of the clerk is closed on Friday 22 and Monday 25 May, the deadline for lodging amendments to parts 3 and 4 is 12 noon today.

Before we move on to consideration of amendments, it would be helpful if I set out the stage 2 procedure. Everyone should have with them a copy of the bill as introduced, the marshalled list of amendments that was published on Monday, and the groupings of amendments, which sets out the amendments in the order in which they will be debated.

There will be one debate on each group of amendments. I will call the member who lodged the first amendment in each group to speak to and move their amendment and to speak to all the other amendments in the group. Members who have not lodged amendments in the group but who wish to speak should indicate by catching my attention in the usual way.

If he has not already spoken on the group, I will invite the cabinet secretary to contribute to the debate before I move to the winding-up speech.

As with a debate in the chamber, the member who is winding up on a group may take interventions from other members if they wish. The debate on each group will be concluded by me inviting the member who moved the first amendment in the group to wind up.

Following the debate on each group, I will check whether the member who moved the first amendment in the group wishes to press their amendment to a vote or withdraw it. If they wish to press ahead, I will put the question on that amendment. If a member wishes to withdraw their amendment after it has been moved, they must seek the committee’s agreement to do so. If any committee member objects, the committee must immediately move to the vote on the amendment.

If any member does not want to move their amendment when I call it, they should say, “Not moved.” Please remember that any other MSP may move such an amendment. If no member moves the amendment, I will immediately call the next amendment on the marshalled list.

Only committee members are allowed to vote at stage 2. Voting in any division is by show of hands. It is important that members keep their hands clearly raised until the clerk has recorded the vote.

The committee is required to indicate formally that it has considered and agreed each section of the bill, and so I will put the question on each section at the appropriate point.

Today we will go no further than the end of part 2 of the bill.

Sections 41 and 42 agreed to.

After section 42

The Convener: Amendment 85, in the name of Dr Richard Simpson, is in a group on its own.

Dr Richard Simpson (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab): I apologise to you, convener, to the committee and to the cabinet secretary and his team for the fact that amendment 85 was lodged too late to allow evidence to be taken at stage 1 or to allow for a prolonged period of consideration. The committee will be aware that I have introduced a fairly comprehensive member’s bill on alcohol issues and it has been allocated to the Health and Sport Committee. The issues that my member’s bill deals with were arrived at after the usual consultation process. However, after a helpful meeting with the Cabinet Secretary for Health, Wellbeing and Sport and, at her suggestion, I have lodged a number of the sections of my bill as amendments to the Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill.

Amendment 85, which is the first of those amendments, aims to enhance local people’s
The industry does not favour the increases in consultation, as it believes that alcohol licensing forums and the existing law provide for sufficient consultation. However, alcohol licensing forums have limited representation and might not have representation from the area that is under consideration.

I reiterate that we need to empower communities who feel that they are disempowered by the current arrangements. Amendment 85 is a proportionate approach and is backed by the British Medical Association and Alcohol Focus Scotland.

I move amendment 85.

The Convener: Obviously, the committee has not taken evidence on any part of the amendment.

The Cabinet Secretary for Justice (Michael Matheson): I am grateful to Richard Simpson for lodging amendment 85, which relates to expanding the notification requirement in relation to premises and major variation applications by amendment to the Licensing (Procedure) (Scotland) Regulations 2007, which is a piece of secondary legislation.

The procedure regulations have not been updated since they first came into effect back in 2008. During that time, there has been considerable change to society and practices. It is therefore appropriate to look at the current regulations to ensure that the procedures and deadlines that they set out achieve what they are intended to achieve. We intend to review and, if necessary, update the licensing forms that are provided for in the procedure regulations. We also intend to update the regulations with the addition of a process of tacit authorisation within the alcohol licensing regime.

I am aware of recent work on community engagement that was commissioned by the Glasgow Centre for Population Health, and I would like it to be taken into account when we review the procedure regulations. Some of the amendments will require consultation to ensure that they will work effectively. Other amendments are required to support the operation of the bill when it comes into force. We are therefore already committed to acting quickly to consult on and update the procedure regulations.

I appreciate that Richard Simpson wants to ensure that the procedure regulations work as effectively as possible. However, I am concerned that amending the primary legislation and then updating the secondary legislation for the other issues that I have raised would create confusion and possibly introduce delays that could be avoided by dealing with everything at the same time as a comprehensive package.
I do not want any amendments to the procedure regulations to generate unduly large additional burdens on licensing boards, nor do I want to increase bureaucracy to needlessly delay the processing of licence applications. In order to achieve that balance, it is preferable to deal with all the changes in the round so that appropriate consideration can be given to the impact on businesses and communities.

On that basis, I encourage Richard Simpson to withdraw amendment 85, with the assurance that the Scottish Government will consult on updating the procedure regulations following royal assent, and I will be happy to keep members informed about the progress that we make on the matter.

The Convener: I invite Dr Simpson to wind up and to press or withdraw his amendment.

Dr Simpson: I thank the cabinet secretary for his considered and helpful reply. It is timely that we should review the regulations governing the whole process. Availability clearly needs to be addressed, and engaging communities effectively with that process is a paramount consideration. However, having listened to the cabinet secretary, I am happy to withdraw my amendment.

Amendment 85, by agreement, withdrawn.

Section 43—Premises licence application: ground for refusal

The Convener: Amendment 38, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is grouped with amendments 39 to 42 and 44 to 48.

Michael Matheson: The amendments in this group relate to the fit-and-proper-person test. Many stakeholders have criticised the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 for not including a fit-and-proper-person test. The bill addresses that by introducing such a test to the 2005 act.

Introducing a new test to an established licensing regime is not straightforward. The bill already includes six sections relating to the fit-and-proper-person test. We have engaged with stakeholders and carefully studied the large volume of useful material that was submitted in response to the committee’s call for evidence, as well as following the discussions that took place in the committee and reading the committee’s stage 1 report. That material has raised a small number of concerns about the fit-and-proper-person test that could mean that it would not work as well as we had intended. I have therefore lodged amendments to address those concerns.

There were three areas of concern. The first was about the board’s ability to consider unsuitable associations as part of the fit-and-proper-person test. Secondly, there were concerns that requiring the automatic revocation of a premises licence in relation to the fit-and-proper-person test might discourage boards from taking action. Thirdly, concerns were raised about the ability of boards to consider conviction notices and reports by the chief constable as part of the fit-and-proper-person test for a new premises licence.

Amendment 38 seeks to amend the 2005 act on objections to and representations on premises licence applications. It is already open to any person to object to or make representations on a premises licence application. Amendment 38 clarifies that an objection to or representation concerning a premises licence application may include any information that the person who is making the objection or representation considers to be relevant to any of the grounds for refusal, including information about the applicant when they are neither an individual nor a council, a connected person in relation to the applicant, or any person who would be an interested party in relation to the premises if the application were to be granted. That will allow information to be provided that might be relevant to the board’s consideration of the fit-and-proper-person test. In particular, it will allow information to be provided about those who are associated with the applicant, not just the applicant.

Amendment 39 is a technical drafting amendment. Amendment 40 seeks to amend the 2005 act on the determination of premises licence applications by clarifying that, in its consideration of the fit-and-proper-person test, the board can take into account any conviction notice and antisocial behaviour report supplied to the board by the chief constable.

Amendment 41 is a technical drafting amendment supporting amendment 42, which seeks to amend the 2005 act on the transfer of a premises licence. The bill provides that, when considering a transfer application, the chief constable can provide the board with any information about the transferee and, when the transferee is neither an individual nor a council, about a connected person. Amendment 42 provides that the chief constable may also provide any information about anyone who would be an interested party to the transferee if the application for the transfer were to be granted. That would cover those who are already an interested party and who would continue to be an interested party if the transfer application were to be granted.

Amendment 44 seeks to amend the 2005 act on the application for a review of a premises licence, to provide that any person who makes a premises licence review application may include any information that they consider to be relevant, including information about the licence holder, connected persons to the licence holder or interested parties to the licensed premises.

Amendment 45 is a technical drafting amendment. Amendment 46 seeks to insert a new subsection into the 2005 act on a review of a premises licence on a licensing board’s initiative. The 2005 act enables licensing boards to initiate a review of a premises licence, and amendment 46 clarifies that the review proposal may include information about the licence holder, connected persons to the licence holder or interested parties to the licensed premises.

Amendment 47 seeks to amend the 2005 act on a licensing board’s powers to review a premises licence. The bill provides for immediate revocation of a premises licence on the grounds that, having regard to the licensing objectives, the licence holder is not a fit-and-proper person to be the holder of a premises licence. However, concerns have been raised that without alternative disposals available to it, the board might be reluctant to find that a person is not fit and proper to hold a premises licence. I remain of the view that revocation is the correct option when a person is deemed not to be fit and proper to hold a premises licence. However, amendments 47 and 48 seek to address the concerns.

Amendment 47 provides that a revocation under the licensing board’s powers to review takes effect at the end of a period of 28 days beginning on the day on which the board makes the decision. That provides a short period of grace in which the licence holder may take action to address the problems that led to the board making the findings.

Amendment 48 inserts a new section into the 2005 act, which provides that when a licensing board has taken steps to revoke a premises licence on the ground that the licence holder is not a fit-and-proper person, the board must recall the revocation if the relevant application is made within that 28-day period and the board ultimately grants the relevant application.

Amendments 47 and 48 provide that when the licence has been revoked on the ground that the licence holder is not a fit-and-proper person, the licence holder has 28 days in which to arrange a transfer of the licence to another person or to propose a variation that would address the board’s concerns.

The amendments ensure that boards can take robust action when a licence holder is found not to be a fit-and-proper person and they offer reasonable traders the opportunity to take prompt action to address the board’s concerns and retain their licence. The changes will encourage boards to take appropriate action against those who are not fit and proper to hold a premises licence. I invite members to support the amendments.

Section 44—Application to transfer premises licence: ground for refusal

Amendments 41 and 42 moved—[Michael Matheson] and agreed to.

The Convener: Amendment 43, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is grouped with amendments 49, 57, 75, 77 and 78.

Michael Matheson: These amendments amend the arrangements for the transfer of a premises licence in the alcohol licensing regime.

Stakeholders have criticised the current procedure for the transfer of a premises licence, in which it is the original holder of the premises licence who must apply for the transfer. Often the original holder of the premises licence may have moved on or may be unwilling to engage with the process, but there is someone keen to take on the business. In contrast, under the Gambling Act 2005, it is the person who wishes to take on the business who must apply for the transfer.

The Scottish Government is keen to improve procedure where it can, to reduce needless red tape and cumbersome procedures. As such, I have lodged these amendments to change the procedure for the transfer of a premises licence.

Amendment 49 is the main amendment, which sets out the proposed changes to the transfer procedures in the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005. The changes provide that it is the person seeking to take on the premises licence who must apply for the transfer of the licence. When they do that, they should specify a date on which the transfer should take effect, provide the original premises licence, or a statement of reason as to why that is not practical, and a written statement signed by the holder of the premises licence consenting to the transfer, or a statement as to why that is not practical.

In addition, the board must take all reasonable steps to give notice of the transfer application to the original premises licence holder. That is a necessary protection against applicants submitting fraudulent consent letters or seeking to make a transfer without engaging with the original licence holder.

The board may decide to dispense with the requirement for the written consent of the original premises licence holder if it is satisfied that the applicant has taken all reasonable steps to contact the original premises licence holder in order to obtain consent but has received no response. Where the board decides to dispense with the requirement for consent, it must hold a hearing to determine the application.

Amendments 43, 57, 75, 77 and 78 are consequential; they remove references to section 34 of the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 that are no longer needed as a result of the changes in amendment 49.

The amendments offer a transfer procedure that is more suited to the reality of business today but which has appropriate checks and balances to protect the interests of existing trade without imposing undue burdens on boards and clerking services.

The Convener: Amendment 86, in the name of Dr Richard Simpson, is in a group on its own.

Dr Simpson: Amendment 86 deals in essence with the question of advertising of alcohol. It does so mainly through inserting new sections 122A, 122C and 122D, which deal with, respectively, a ban on advertising near schools and matters affecting children; advertising within licensed premises; and advertising at sporting and cultural events.

The Nicholson review on licensing was established when I was justice minister, and it led to the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005. It may be coincidence only, but the consumption of alcohol has been on a largely downward path since 2005. That may be due partly to the restriction on the display of alcohol to those areas that are licensed. Some members may remember when managers' special offers were stacked high at the entrance to stores and in the aisles.

Around the same time, Nicola Sturgeon, who was then a member of the Health and Community Care Committee, was endeavouring to curtail the advertising of tobacco. As she found, our powers in Scotland are limited in that respect, but I believe that we should seek to reduce the normalisation of alcohol in a similar manner to the way in which we did so for tobacco. Recent surveys have shown how successful that approach has been, with teenagers often unable to name tobacco brands that are familiar to all of us—even taking into account the various age groups of members, I think that we would all be aware of the brands.

This lengthy section seeks the further denormalisation of alcohol. It is underpinned by the World Health Organization strategy on alcohol, which they have termed as being no ordinary product. The WHO believes that children and teenagers

"who choose not to drink alcohol beverages have the right to be supported in their non-drinking behaviour and protected from pressures to drink."

The WHO strategy says that one of the 10 target areas for action should be the “marketing of alcoholic beverages”. The report recognises the need to reduce the impact of what are “sophisticated advertising and promotion techniques”, at least in respect of young people.

I appreciate that advertising restrictions in the United Kingdom aim to avoid direct impact on young people, but alcohol advertising is so prevalent that brand identity is established at a very early age. The restrictions that the amendment proposes are aimed at reducing young people’s exposure. It would ban alcohol advertising in the vicinity of schools, nurseries, crèches and play areas; within retail premises other than in areas that are licensed; and at sporting and cultural events that mainly involve, or are principally aimed at, under-18s.

The so-called loi Evin in France sets out clear definitions for alcoholic drinks and clear guidance on how the law is to be applied. It bans any advertising that is aimed at children and any advertising on television, in cinemas or at any sporting or cultural event, and it applies across the board. It is interesting that the predicted demise of sports that have been deprived of alcohol advertising in France has simply not occurred. It is also interesting that France, which had a severe alcohol problem in the 1980s and 1990s, as severe as ours was in 2005, has now moved back to the European Union average for alcohol problems. That is an extremely significant improvement.

The restrictions that I propose will complement the voluntary arrangements of self-policing by the industry-funded Portman Group. The Portman Group has a code, but that does not apply to wholesalers or to retail-led promotional activities. The advertising standards are tested, I believe, on an almost daily basis by radical new promotion methods.

Specifically, amendment 186 would ban advertising within 200m of certain premises that are used by children—schools, nurseries, crèches and children’s play areas. The restrictions will apply to billboards, hoardings, bus shelters and advertisements in or on licensed premises, excepting displays that are primarily to be seen from inside the premises. Displays on A-boards, displays of cans and bottles in shop windows and offers outside shops, pubs and restaurants would all be banned. There would be an exemption for factual information displayed at pubs.

Premises that are used for other purposes, such as community halls where a nursery or crèche may be hosted on an occasional basis and open spaces that are not specifically intended for children but which may be used by children and families, would be exempt.

Currently, although the display of alcoholic products in licensed premises is limited, advertising is not. The amendment would restrict advertising to the licensed area.

As I have said, the loi Evin is a blanket ban on alcohol advertising at sporting and cultural events. Although that might be desirable from a public health standpoint, much of our sport is very reliant on alcohol advertising. A blanket ban may happen in time—and, putting on my hat as the psychiatrist in addictions that I was before becoming a politician, I hope that it will—but for now I have attempted the more modest but difficult task of restricting bans to venues where under-18s are the primary group to be involved in, or the audience to, sporting and cultural events. The restrictions will not apply to open-air or on-street activities. Cultural events were also difficult to define, but I believe that the balance is correct in the amendment.

The responses to my consultation ranged—as you might expect—from support for the full loi Evin approach to a preference for the status quo. The only response that surprised me was the one from the Advertising Standards Authority; it felt that there was no need for additional restrictions. The proposals in my bill were supported by 81 per cent of respondents. The BMA and Alcohol Focus Scotland are backing the amendment and the Law Society of Scotland was very positive in its consultation response.

I move amendment 86.

The Convener: No other members wish to enter the debate. I say once again that we took no evidence on this issue at stage 1. I call the cabinet secretary.

Michael Matheson: I am grateful to Dr Simpson for taking us through amendment 86 which, among other things, seeks to restrict the advertising of alcohol near premises that are used by children, to restrict advertising within licensed premises and to restrict alcohol licensing at certain sporting and cultural events.

I know that my colleague the Cabinet Secretary for Health and Wellbeing recently met Dr Simpson to discuss this matter, among other things. She agrees with me that there is a requirement to understand the evidence base and consult properly in relation to such important changes.

We know that young people are particularly vulnerable to the effects of alcohol, whether they are drinking themselves or are being affected by the drinking of other people in their lives. Over the past few years, the Scottish Government has taken action to make it harder for underage drinkers to gain access to alcohol. As the committee is aware, the bill also takes forward our commitment to make it an offence to supply alcohol to under-18s in a public place, which will give the police more powers to deal with the problem of underage drinking dens.

The provisions in amendment 86 are already a significant part of Dr Simpson’s recently introduced member’s bill, the Alcohol (Licensing, Public Health and Criminal Justice) (Scotland) Bill. I understand that the Health and Sport Committee launched the call for evidence on that bill just last week.

The proposed restrictions on alcohol advertising would include making it an offence to display an alcohol advertisement “within 200 metres … of a school, … premises used principally as a nursery or crèche, … outdoor premises designed or adapted … as a children’s play area”;

in retail premises containing an area that is licensed to sell alcohol for consumption off the premises, except inside that area; and within premises being used as the venue for a cultural event—other than a film—or sporting event where

“the majority of participants … are under 18, or … the intended audience for the event consists principally of persons under that age.”

Although I recognise the sentiment behind Richard Simpson’s amendment, I am concerned at the inclusion of these matters in the bill at stage 2.
These are important issues and the proposals are very significant changes to undertake at this stage. It is essential that they receive detailed scrutiny and consideration—including from stakeholders—to ensure, for example, that there are no unintended consequences.

The best place to consider Richard Simpson’s proposals in the detail that they deserve is as part of his member’s bill, which is presently before the Health and Sport Committee. For example, scrutiny could ensure that the scope of the offences is appropriately drawn. We may risk criminalising those entirely out with the alcohol licensing regime for an advertisement or piece of branding that they might have been barely aware of. It may be challenging for individuals and businesses to ensure that they do not commit the offences and it may be challenging for enforcement bodies to prosecute them. A one-off event would require the owner of premises to remove or cover up any branding and advertising or find themselves potentially liable for a criminal offence with a fine of up to £5,000.

Although I, too, would like to see further restrictions on the advertising of alcohol, I believe that such provisions should be subject to fuller and more detailed scrutiny than their consideration as part of this bill would allow. The proposed offences are already contained in Richard Simpson’s member’s bill. I strongly believe that it is only right that they should benefit from the full scrutiny of the bill process, which will be the case for the member’s bill, which is presently before the Health and Sport Committee. I therefore ask the committee to reject amendment 86.

Dr Simpson: I again thank the cabinet secretary for what must be his initial views, as the amendment was submitted only very recently. I concur with him that the proposals require fuller consultation. There are clearly concerns about criminalising individuals who may not be fully aware of the situation.

It is appropriate that we should reach a point at which alcohol advertising is covered up when children are present. It will not be easy, but no one ever said that this area of law would be easy.

It is essential that Parliament moves on the issue as soon as possible. There is now a call for evidence on my bill. I hope that, as this committee has considered licensing issues, it may wish to further consider my amendment and make representations to the Health and Sport Committee.

On that basis, and on the basis of the advice of the cabinet secretary, I would like to withdraw the amendment.

Amendment 86, by agreement, withdrawn.

Section 53 agreed to.

Section 54—Overprovision

The Convener: Amendment 82, in the name of Cameron Buchanan, is grouped with amendments 50 to 52.

Cameron Buchanan (Lothian) (Con): Amendment 82 seeks to remove section 54(2)(a), which would amend section 7(2) of the 2005 act to say that a licensing board “may determine that the whole of the Board’s area is a locality”.

That is far too restrictive, because it would allow one locality to be Edinburgh, for example, rather than Leith, where there is a problem.

Each licence application should be considered on its merits and should take into account, for example, social, economic and health-related factors. As it stands, section 54(2)(a) will allow licensing boards to operate a presumption against granting licences over a wide area, particularly in cities. That would be anti-competitive and unfair to new retailers. There is no evidence that, if there is another supermarket in a city, people drink more. Section 54(2)(a) would have a detrimental impact on economic investment.

I move amendment 82.

Michael Matheson: I am grateful for Mr Buchanan’s comments on his amendment. Overprovision is a valuable tool by which a licensing board can prevent new licensed premises from opening in areas where it considers that that would cause an overcapacity of licensed premises. That can be useful from a public order perspective, in that disorderly behaviour, noise and other nuisances can be linked to areas where there is a high density of outlets selling alcohol. One example of that is disturbances at pub closing time. The tool is also useful from a public health perspective, in that easy access to alcohol can be associated with increased levels of alcohol-related harm.

Amendment 82 would remove the provision that clarifies that a licensing board is entitled to treat as a locality the board’s whole area when considering whether there is overprovision. That provision was supported by the committee in its stage 1 report.

It is important that the overprovision assessment is an effective and robust tool for licensing boards. Public health data may well be available only on a whole board basis, so it is important that boards can determine that there is overprovision across the board area. If we accepted amendment 82 and removed the provision that clarifies that licensing boards can class their entire board area as a single locality, we would risk undermining the work of licensing boards in assessing overprovision.
They might be unable to rely on important population health data that is not available for small areas. I therefore ask the committee not to agree to amendment 82.

On Government amendments 50 to 52, the bill as introduced clarified that, in assessing overprovision, increased capacity may be considered separately from an increase in the number of licensed premises, and opening hours can also be considered. The rationale for that was that, even if there were no increase in the total number of alcohol outlets, the overprovision assessment would be relevant if existing premises attempted to increase their capacity and/or opening hours.

However, following the bill’s publication, various stakeholders, including licensing board clerks and Alcohol Focus Scotland, expressed concerns about the drafting. Stakeholders were particularly concerned about the substitution of what was formerly a “must” consider with a “may” consider. Stakeholders have emphasised that the level of alcohol availability in terms of the number and capacity of licensed premises in a given locality is such important evidence for a licensing board when it considers overprovision that it needs to be retained as a mandatory consideration for a board.

After consideration of the feedback received, we agree that it is more appropriate to retain the 2005 act’s original wording, to the effect that a licensing board “must ... have regard to the number and capacity of licensed premises in the locality” and, as amendment 50 states, that a licensing board “may have regard to such other matters as the Board thinks fit including, in particular, the licensed hours of licensed premises in the locality”.

Amendment 50 will therefore reinstate the mandatory consideration by licensing boards, when they consider overprovision, of the number and capacity of licensed premises in a locality, while making optional the consideration of such matters as the board considers appropriate, including the licensed hours of licensed premises in the locality.

Amendments 51 and 52 will remove references in the 2005 act to what should be considered regarding overprovision as a ground of refusal when a licensing board is determining a premises licence application or an application for variation. The removal of those references will mean that licensing boards could refuse an application if they regarded that there would be overprovision were the application to be granted. I emphasise to the committee that we are not suggesting that numbers, capacity and licensed hours—among other things—are no longer relevant; rather, we merely suggest taking a slightly different approach to ensure consistency across the legislation.

I hope that the committee will support my amendments, which will ensure consistency in the definition of overprovision. I ask the committee to reject amendment 82 and invite members to support amendments 50 to 52.

Cameron Buchanan: I am disappointed that the cabinet secretary does not think that the restriction is too much. It will have a detrimental effect on economic development. It is important that we do not treat big cities as one area but that we treat them as areas made up of small localities. That would also give wider consumer choice. If expansion of the overprovision definition is allowed to restrict competition in detail, consumers will face less choice when shopping for goods and, therefore, higher prices.

I press amendment 82.

Amendment 82 disagreed to.

Amendments 50 to 52 moved—[Michael Matheson]—and agreed to.

Section 54, as amended, agreed to.

Amendment 87, in the name of John Wilson, is grouped with amendments 88 to 90.

John Wilson (Central Scotland) (Ind): I put on record my appreciation to Alcohol Focus Scotland for its suggestions on amendment 87. The amendment would insert a proposed new section 9B in the 2005 act, on licensing boards’ annual reporting on the exercise of functions.

If we want increased accountability of and transparency from boards, some form of annual reporting mechanism should be put in place, so that not only the licensed trade and elected members of health boards and the Scottish Government but the public are aware of licensing boards’ actions in the preceding year from seeing in annual reports what work licensing boards have undertaken. Amendment 87 suggests a number of issues that should be in the annual report, but they are not exclusive. The amendment would leave it open for the Scottish Government to state what further information it might deem relevant for boards to include in the reports.

The amendments in the group would ensure that we got the mix right in terms of the public’s look at what is happening in licensing. We have heard in the debates that have taken place in the committee that the public often feel excluded, that boards’ decisions are made in mysterious rooms and that the public are not fully consulted on, or aware of, the changes that are taking place or the decisions that are made.

Including in the bill a provision on an annual report would provide an opportunity to ensure that the public have more confidence in boards’ decision-making processes and that licensing boards’ data is placed in one document. It is suggested that that document or report be produced three months after the end of the financial year. However, amendment 87 also says that the Scottish Government could amend that timeframe so that boards could report later if they had particular issues.

What is crucial is getting an annual report prepared, produced and placed in the public domain that the public can understand and relate to. The other amendments in the group are consequential to amendment 87.

I move amendment 87.

Michael Matheson: I am grateful to Mr Wilson for lodging the amendments and I am certainly sympathetic to the views that he expressed on an annual report; I am also mindful of the views that the committee expressed in its stage 1 report. However, I am sure that committee members recognise that licensing boards are already under a substantial requirement to report on a range of areas, which places a significant burden on them. For example, they are obliged to prepare a licensing policy statement, an overprovision assessment and an annual report on key statistics to the Scottish Government, and to maintain a public register of key information. The public register must contain information in relation to premises, personal and occasional licences, and the decisions that have been taken about applications.

I believe that there is merit in moving towards licensing boards producing an annual report, and the Government intends to oversee the introduction of such an annual report. Before we do that, I wish to engage with stakeholders—particularly local authorities and those responsible for licensing boards—on the existing reporting requirements in order to consider what areas of reporting can be reduced or included in the annual report.

I therefore ask Mr Wilson to withdraw amendment 87 with a view to—

The Convener: Will you take an intervention, please? Will you indicate the timescale for the consultation and reporting back? The committee has a great interest in this area.

Michael Matheson: As I was just about to say, I ask Mr Wilson to withdraw his amendment with a view to a suitable stage 3 amendment being drafted that will be informed by engagement with stakeholders.

Alex Rowley (Cowdenbeath) (Lab): Does the minister accept that there needs to be more openness and transparency in engaging with the public in the licensing process so that they get a better understanding and perhaps more involvement in that process?

Michael Matheson: There is great merit in that. We need to manage that against the burden that is placed on licensing boards in undertaking reporting. That is why I want to consider with them the appropriate measures to put in place as part of annual reporting so that there is greater transparency and local licensing boards can manage that in a reasonable way.

I would be happy to work with Mr Wilson with a view to drafting a suitable stage 3 amendment that is informed by the discussion that we have with stakeholders before the stage 3 process.

John Wilson: I am grateful for the cabinet secretary’s comments on the issues that amendment 87 has raised, and I look forward to working with him and his officials to lodge a suitable stage 3 amendment. If the Scottish Government does not lodge a suitable amendment at stage 3, I reserve the right to press similar amendments. I will withdraw amendment 87 on the proviso that suitable amendments will be lodged at stage 3.

Amendment 87, by agreement, withdrawn.

Amendments 88 to 90 not moved.

Section 55 agreed to.

After section 55

The Convener: Amendment 53, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is grouped with amendment 54.
Amendments 53 and 54 provide licensing standards officers with the power to report the conduct of both applicants and personal licence holders to a licensing board.

Licensing standards officers are considered to be one of the successes of the 2005 act. Amendment 53 creates a new general function for licensing standards officers of being able to provide information to licensing boards about any conduct of personal licence holders or applicants for a personal licence that they consider to be inconsistent with the licensing objectives.

Section 46 already requires a board to provide a copy of a new personal licence application to the licensing standards officer and enables him or her to provide information that he or she considers to be appropriate for the board. Amendment 53 strengthens that by making it clear that such information may include details of inconsistent conduct. In our opinion, the creation of that new general function can only improve the effectiveness of licensing standards officers.

Amendment 54 provides licensing standards officers with a new power to report to a licensing board conduct of any personal licence holder that they consider to be inconsistent with the licensing objectives. Currently, if a licensing standards officer finds a holder of a personal licence to be acting or to have acted in a manner that is inconsistent with the licensing objectives, the only route to make the appropriate licensing board aware is through a premises licence review application under the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005. The feedback that we have received from stakeholders is that that requirement to seek a premises licence review is overly cumbersome. Therefore, providing licensing standards officers with the power to report conduct directly to the licensing board will ease the process and improve the effectiveness of the system.

I invite members to support amendments 53 and 54.

Amendment 53 agreed to.

Amendment 54 moved—[Michael Matheson]—and agreed to.

Section 56 agreed to.

Section 57—Personal licences: grant, duration and renewal

The Convener: Amendment 83, in the name of Cameron Buchanan, is grouped with amendments 84, 55, 56, 80 and 81.

Cameron Buchanan: Amendment 83 is technical, and relates to amendment 84, which seeks to reduce the time for which someone who has had their licence revoked for any reason has to wait to reapply, from five years to three years. The amendment relates in many ways to amendments 53 and 54. I welcome the provision that will exclude revocations under section 87(3) of the 2005 act from the five-year rule, which is a sensible recognition of how disproportionate the rule is when directed at licence holders who have not met all the training requirements.

I believe that the amendment of the 2005 act in that respect should go further. Five years is a very long time to be automatically considered unfit to be licensed without the opportunity to demonstrate otherwise. Whether people who have had their licence revoked remain unfit to hold a new licence should be for the licensing board to determine, rather than for the Scottish Government.

I move amendment 83.

Michael Matheson: I am grateful for amendments 83 and 84, which were lodged by Cameron Buchanan. They relate to the personal licence, which is a key feature of the alcohol licensing regime. A personal licence is required to supervise or authorise the sale of alcohol. It is therefore important that only appropriate people hold a personal licence.

Currently, in cases where a personal licence is revoked, the person is barred for five years from applying for a new personal licence. We have already agreed that that five-year ban is not appropriate where a personal licence is revoked simply for failure to render a certificate of refresher training. However, the remaining grounds for revocation are serious, and boards do not lightly undertake the revocation of a personal licence. Accordingly, I do not believe that it would be appropriate to reduce the ban to three years, and I therefore ask Mr Buchanan not to press amendments 83 and 84.

I turn to Government amendments 55, 56, 80 and 81. Amendments 55 and 56 will remove an apparent anomaly in the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 that would have rendered the process for the renewal of a personal licence after 10 years problematic. The matter was highlighted recently by licensing stakeholders, who raised concerns about the current procedures for the renewal of a personal licence prior to its expiry 10 years after being issued. The renewal process allows the licensing board to ensure that the holder of a personal licence is an appropriate person to hold that licence, and it applies the same requirements in relation to notification and determination as for the original personal licence application.
One requirement in relation to the granting of an initial personal licence application is that the applicant must not already hold a personal licence. That serves a useful purpose: it stops people from holding a back-up licence just in case one is revoked. However, that requirement is clearly not appropriate when it comes to the renewal of a personal licence, when someone will, quite rightly, already hold a personal licence. Amendment 56 removes the requirement that an applicant for the renewal of a personal licence must not already hold a personal licence. That will ensure that the renewal process starting in 2019 operates smoothly. Amendment 55 simply allows for the renumbering of subsections of the bill to accommodate amendment 56.

Amendments 80 and 81 will bring into force on the day following royal assent the provisions of the bill that remove the current five-year restriction on reapplying for a personal licence that has been revoked due to the failure of the applicant to supply the appropriate evidence of having undergone refresher training. As committee members know, the 2005 act requires that personal licence holders should undertake refresher training every five years. That is why updated personal licence refresher training courses were made available from the middle of 2013, to ensure that licence holders had sufficient time to sit the refresher course and submit proof to the relevant licensing board. Nearly 30,000 personal licence holders undertook the training.

However, it is also known that, unfortunately, a number of personal licence holders failed to complete training or to submit the relevant certificates by the deadline when they were due. As I mentioned when I discussed Mr Buchanan’s amendments 83 and 84, the 2005 act is clear that, in such circumstances, the personal licence should be revoked. Under current legislation such a revocation would mean that an individual could not reapply for another personal licence for five years. We share the concerns that revoking a personal licence for five years for what might be an oversight or an administrative failing may be considered excessive. That is why the bill already looks to amend the relevant provisions.

I am sure that we will all agree that it is important that the new provisions are commenced as quickly as possible once the bill has completed its process through Parliament. Amendments 80 and 81 will do exactly that. I envisage that, once the provisions are commenced, anyone who has had their licence revoked for failure to timeously submit evidence of their refresher training would be eligible immediately to apply for a new personal licence, provided that they meet the other requirements.

This change has been much called for, and I trust that the committee will support the amendments. I therefore ask Mr Buchanan not to press amendment 83, not to move amendment 84 and to support amendments 55, 56, 80 and 81.

Cameron Buchanan: In view of what Mr Matheson has said, which I believe is very opportune, I seek to withdraw amendment 83.

Amendment 83, by agreement, withdrawn.

Amendment 84 not moved.

Amendments 55 and 56 moved—[Michael Matheson]—and agreed to.

Section 57, as amended, agreed to.

Section 58—Processing and deemed grant of applications

Amendment 57 moved—[Michael Matheson]—and agreed to.

Section 58, as amended, agreed to.

Section 59 agreed to.

The Convener: That ends consideration of amendments for today. Members still have 52 minutes to lodge amendments for consideration next week.

I thank everyone for their participation. Our next meeting is on Wednesday 27 May, when we will consider part 3 of the bill on civic licensing provisions and possibly the general provisions in part 4.

Meeting closed at 11:08.

[The Convener opened the meeting at 10:00]

The Convener: Agenda item 3, which is our main item of business, is our third and final day of stage 2 consideration of the Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill. I welcome back Michael Matheson MSP, the Cabinet Secretary for Justice. I also welcome Colin Keir MSP, who is here to speak to amendments in his name. Later in the meeting, we will be joined by Richard Lyle MSP, who may speak in support of Richard Lyle's amendment.

Today, we will consider the remainder of the bill, from section 60 to section 79, and all amendments to those sections. That covers part 3 of the bill, on civil licensing provisions, and part 4, on general licensing.

Before we move on to consideration of amendments, it would be helpful if I set out the procedure for stage 2 consideration. Everyone should have with them a copy of the bill as introduced, the marshalled list of amendments that was published on Monday and the groupings of amendments, which sets out the amendments in the order in which they will be debated. There will be one debate on each group of amendments. I will call the member who lodged the first amendment in each group to speak to and move their amendment and to speak to all the other amendments in the group. Members who have not lodged amendments in the group but who wish to speak should indicate by catching my attention in the usual way.

If the cabinet secretary has not already spoken on the group, I will invite him to contribute to the debate just before I move to the winding-up speech. As with a debate in the chamber, the member who is winding up on a group may take interventions from other members if they wish. The debate on each group will be concluded by me inviting the member who moved the first amendment in the group to wind up. Following the debate on each group, I will check whether the member who moved the first amendment in the group wishes to press their amendment to a vote or to withdraw it. If they wish to press ahead, I will put the question on that amendment.

If a member wishes to withdraw their amendment when I call it, they should say, "Not moved." Please remember that any other MSP may move such an amendment. If no one moves the amendment, I will immediately call the next amendment on the marshalled list.

Only committee members are allowed to vote at stage 2. Voting in any division is by show of hands. It is important that members keep their hands clearly raised until the clerk has recorded the vote. The committee is required to indicate formally that it has considered and agreed each section of the bill, so I will put a question on each section at the appropriate point.

It is expected that the committee will conclude its stage 2 consideration of the bill at this meeting.

Before section 60

The Convener: Amendment 93, in the name of Colin Keir, is grouped with amendment 99.

Colin Keir (Edinburgh Western) (SNP): Thank you for your welcome, convener. Amendment 93 is a probing amendment that takes cognisance of modern technology. When the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 was written, no one would have heard of apps on mobile phones with a direct link to customers that is totally computerised and not recorded locally. Although many locally licensed taxi and private hire car operators now use apps, the advent of multinational companies with no licensed local booking office could well make local conditions that are set by licensing authorities redundant or difficult to enforce. That worry is shared by the Scottish Taxi Federation. Local conditions are focused on the safety and comfort of passengers. Amendment 93 might help to ensure that multinationals realise that such local conditions, including booking office conditions, are a legal nicety that they have to observe.

Shall I speak to my second amendment?

The Convener: You should speak to both, please.

Colin Keir: It is another probing amendment, to section 60. It would bring clarification for local licensing authorities—

The Convener: I think that you have understood me wrongly. At the moment, you are speaking only to amendment 93 and amendment 99, if you wish.

Colin Keir: I see—I beg your pardon. I am speaking only to amendment 93. The other amendment in my name is amendment 94.

I move amendment 93.

The Convener: We will come to amendment 94 later.
Cara Hilton (Dunfermline) (Lab): Amendment 99 is designed to ensure that taxi operators are required to have an office in the local authority area in which they are licensed and in which they operate. During the committee’s evidence sessions, we heard a lot of concern from the Scottish Taxi Federation and taxi drivers about the impact of operators such as Uber, which can operate without a licensed premises and might be able to bypass local licensing regimes. Amendment 99 would tighten up the bill to ensure that it reflects the changing nature of the taxi and private hire car industry. It would ensure that companies cannot bypass local licensing regimes and undercut taxi drivers and private hire car companies. In essence, it is about creating a level playing field and ensuring a fairer deal for all in the sector.

The Cabinet Secretary for Justice (Michael Matheson): I am grateful for the amendments that have been lodged by Colin Keir and Cara Hilton. I share their concerns that the current booking office regime that is provided for in the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 (Licensing of Booking Offices) Order 2009 should be examined again to ensure that it regulates the subject matter effectively.

The stage 1 evidence sessions discussed the need to reflect in legislation developments in modern technology. I have provided an undertaking that we will examine and review the existing legislation to ensure that it operates as effectively as possible. Scottish Government officials have already discussed the growing concerns on the issue in a meeting of stakeholders back in August 2014. A follow-up meeting that is scheduled for Wednesday 3 June will bring together representatives from the police, licensing authorities, academics and the trade, including Bill McIntosh of the Scottish Taxi Federation.

I realise that Colin Keir and Cara Hilton want to ensure that the 2009 order works as effectively as possible. However, I am concerned that, by making an amendment via primary legislation, and then updating the secondary legislation to deal with other issues that may arise in further meetings with stakeholders, we will create confusion and possibly introduce delays. Those delays can be avoided by dealing with everything at the same time as part of a comprehensive package that has had the benefit of full and considered stakeholder engagement.

I therefore ask Colin Keir to withdraw his amendment and Cara Hilton not to move hers, on the basis that the Scottish Government is already engaged with stakeholders on the issue and is committed to updating the relevant secondary legislation. We will keep the committee advised on progress that we make on the issue.

Colin Keir: Thank you, cabinet secretary—I found that incredibly interesting. I have a degree of sympathy with Cara Hilton’s amendment 99. However, having listened to the cabinet secretary, I seek to withdraw amendment 93.

Amendment 93, by agreement, withdrawn.
Amendment 99 not moved.

Section 60—Refusal to grant private hire car licences on grounds of overprovision

The Convener: Amendment 94, in the name of Colin Keir, is grouped with amendment 91.

Colin Keir: Amendment 94 is another probing amendment, which goes back to my days as regulator for taxis, among other things, here in Edinburgh. The proposals would bring clarification for local licensing authorities that wish to limit the number of hire vehicles operating in their areas. The issue is one of how to address unmet demand when having to justify the number of vehicles on the roads. With a policy of limiting numbers, an accepted methodology may lessen the chance of a legal appeal for those who have applied for a vehicle licence but who have subsequently been refused.

I have some sympathy for the other amendment in the group, amendment 91.

I move amendment 94.

The Convener: I call Cameron Buchanan to speak to amendment 91 and to the other amendment in the group.

Cameron Buchanan (Lothian) (Con): May I deal with amendment 92 at the same time?

The Convener: No. You may speak only to amendments 91 and 94 at the moment.

Cameron Buchanan: Amendment 91 would leave out section 60 totally, which would mean that a licensing authority would not be able to refuse a private hire car licence application on the grounds of overprovision. Allowing a licensing authority to refuse a private hire car licence application on the grounds of overprovision is severely anti-competitive, and it will hurt consumers, jobs and the local economy, as well as the wider public.

Allowing refusal due to overprovision would be against the public interests, for four reasons. First, restricting the supply of private hire vehicles would limit the ability of consumers to select their preferred option from the different services on offer. That ability to choose is crucial to increasing and maintaining service standards in the industry.
Secondly, preventing new entrants would reduce the amount of price competition in the industry. Therefore, prices would be prevented from going as low as possible in a freer market.

Thirdly, putting up barriers to entry would prevent increases in the supply of private hire vehicles, which, combined with price competition, would allow more people than before to make use of private transport.

Finally, it is apparent that allowing a licensing authority to determine that a locality is overprovided for would prevent economic growth and job creation. If someone wishes to start work as a private hire vehicle driver, a licensing authority should not stand in the way of that just because other drivers have already entered the market. Government should aim to facilitate job creation, rather than shielding incumbents from any competition.

Michael Matheson: I am grateful for amendments 94 and 91, which were lodged by Colin Keir and Cameron Buchanan.

Amendment 94 would require the Scottish Government to provide secondary legislation setting out the methodology to be used by licensing authorities to assess demand for private hire car services for the purposes of the overprovision test. Stakeholders have consistently argued that there needs to be guidance in order for the overprovision test to operate effectively, and we accept that. The Scottish Government is already fully committed to working with stakeholders to prepare guidance on the overprovision test. By providing guidance setting out the methodology, rather than secondary legislation, we can adopt a more user-friendly approach and can include material such as examples of best practice, which would not be appropriate within secondary legislation.

For those reasons I ask Colin Keir to withdraw amendment 94, with the assurance that we will prepare guidance on the overprovision test as part of its implementation and roll-out. In addition, I am happy to keep members informed of progress that we make on the matter.

I turn to amendment 91, which would remove section 60. Section 60 allows a licensing authority to refuse a private hire car licence when it is satisfied that granting it would result in there being an overprovision of private hire cars. I remain of the view that an optional overprovision test in relation to private hire cars is a useful addition to the taxi and private hire car licensing regime. Providing an ability to limit private hire car numbers where it is deemed necessary will enable licensing authorities to ensure that those who enter the private hire car trade can have an expectation of making a reasonable income. It will also reduce the temptation for private hire car drivers to attempt to operate in illegal competition with taxis.

I therefore ask Cameron Buchanan not to move amendment 91.

Colin Keir: Having heard the cabinet secretary, I seek leave to withdraw amendment 94. I look forward to seeing what comes forward from the Scottish Government.

Section 61—Testing of private hire car drivers

The Convener: Amendment 92, in the name of Cameron Buchanan, is in a group on its own.

Cameron Buchanan: Amendment 92 refers to section 61 but also to section 60. The amendment would prevent licensing authorities from being able to require testing of applicants for private hire vehicle licences.

Technology now allows drivers to efficiently navigate without extensive knowledge, and requiring a test would be a significant barrier to employment and growth in the industry. With Garmin and TomTom, nobody really needs the knowledge. If someone wishes to become a private hire car driver, the Government should not prevent them in any way from doing so.

Some people would prefer to be driven by someone with extensive local knowledge who does not need to use global positioning system navigation, but they can choose to use a black cab instead of a private hire vehicle. Passengers should be free to choose for themselves which type of transport they want.

Requiring testing of all drivers would be another method of shielding incumbents from the competition, which relates the amendment to section 60. That behaviour would favour vested interests over aspiring entrants to the market. More important, it would not be in the interests of consumers.

I move amendment 92.

Michael Matheson: I am grateful to Cameron Buchanan for his explanation of amendment 92. I remain of the view that offering local licensing authorities the ability to test private hire car drivers is entirely appropriate. The training and testing of taxi drivers serve a useful purpose, and given the growing numbers of private hire car drivers, I believe that it is important that they too should receive training and testing.

The legislation has deliberately been drafted to provide licensing authorities with the discretion to determine whether a test should take place and what that test should be, in order to ensure that unduly burdensome training is not required where it is clearly not appropriate. Such training could cover issues such as customer care and disability awareness. That would allow for consistency between taxis and private hire cars and would make for a more professional and capable private hire car service that is better able to meet the needs and aspirations of the people who use the service.

I therefore ask Cameron Buchanan to withdraw amendment 92.

Cameron Buchanan: I was talking less about training and more about the knowledge test—that was the key. As I said, I think that requiring testing of all drivers would shield incumbents from the competition, and I am against that; I would like to keep the competition open. Therefore, I press amendment 92.

The Convener: Amendment 58, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is in a group on its own.

Michael Matheson: Amendment 58 seeks to increase the penalties for those metal dealers who operate without a licence or who fail to comply with licence conditions. Amendment 58 will increase the relevant penalties to a maximum fine of £20,000 and/or up to six months in prison.

There is widespread agreement that the penalties in relation to metal-dealing offences are inadequate when they are set against the multimillion pound cost of metal theft. They are also inadequate when they are set against the possible rewards that can be obtained by a rogue dealer who seeks to circumvent the licensing regime by failing entirely to apply for a licence or by failing to comply with the conditions that are attached to a licence. The increased penalties are required to act as an effective deterrent to someone who operates outwith the licensing regime.

The committee recommended that the penalties be enhanced, and there is widespread support for that position from the police, the legitimate trade and those companies and organisations that are badly affected by metal theft. It is also worth highlighting that, regardless of the criminal penalties, the mere fact that they had a conviction would have very serious potential consequences for any scrap metal dealer. It would be open to a licensing authority to remove an individual’s licence, which might have implications for their livelihood. I therefore ask the committee to support the amendment.

I move amendment 58.

The Convener: In light of the evidence that we took, we welcome the Government’s amendment 58.

Amendment 58 agreed to.

Sections 63 and 64 agreed to.

Section 65—Acceptable forms of payment for metal

The Convener: Amendment 59, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is grouped with amendments 60 and 61.

Michael Matheson: Amendments 59, 60 and 61 seek to tighten the definitions that are used to define how payments for scrap can be made.
The policy intent, which enjoys widespread support, is to prevent a scrap metal dealer from paying in cash. As members will be aware, the rationale for that is to ensure that payments can be made only in a traceable fashion by cheque or bank transfer. The amendments seek to ensure that any loopholes are avoided by clarifying that an account that is used for a transfer of payment must be a bank or building society account.

Amendment 59 clarifies that an account must be a bank or building society account. Amendment 61 seeks to insert in the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 new section 33AA, which provides a definition of what means. Amendment 60 allows for any consequential amendments that may be necessary. The ability to make amendments to the definition in new section 33AA is limited to a consequence of changes that add, amend or remove methods of payments to those that are provided for in new section 33A(2).

"bank or building society account"

I ask the committee to support amendments 59, 60 and 61.

Section 66—Metal dealers and itinerant metal dealers: records

The Convener: Amendment 62, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is grouped with amendment 63.

Michael Matheson: Amendments 62 and 63 seek to amend the record-keeping requirements for scrap metal dealers that are set out in the bill. Amendment 62 has been lodged in response to an issue raised by the industry that the proposed requirement to record the date on which metal is processed would be impractical for many dealers, because of the business practices that most dealers follow. Once metal arrives in a yard, it is quickly sorted and stored collectively with a significant amount of other similar metal derived from other sources. Given those circumstances, it would be difficult to record the date on which a specific item was processed, by which I mean melted or crushed.

We have always made it clear that we are eager to work with and support the legitimate scrap metal industry. We believe that its concerns on this matter are well founded and that the change, taken in the context of the other enhanced licensing requirements in the bill, will not diminish the proposed scheme’s effectiveness.

Amendment 63 will allow Scottish ministers to specify through secondary legislation particular forms of identification, such as a passport, a driving licence or similar documents, that will be acceptable for the purposes of establishing a customer’s name and address. I ask the committee to support these amendments.

After section 66

The Convener: Amendment 64, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is in a group on its own.

Michael Matheson: Amendment 64 seeks to allow Scottish ministers to bring forward regulations to establish a register of metal dealers and itinerant metal dealers. We accept the committee’s view that a register of metal dealers would be of value, and a new register would build upon the existing requirements for licensing authorities to publish details of licences already contained within paragraph 14 of schedule 1 to the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982.

The secondary legislation powers that we are proposing in the bill will allow Scottish ministers to make regulations to establish, keep and maintain such a register. The regulations may also include other matters such as specifying who will maintain such a register, what details will be published and what duties will be imposed on individuals or bodies to provide information to be published. I ask the committee to support the amendment.

I move amendment 64.

Amendment 64 agreed to.

The Convener: Amendment 65, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is in a group on its own.

Michael Matheson: Amendment 65 makes provision for revised definitions of metal dealers and itinerant metal dealers. The legitimate trade has argued that it is essential to have a more comprehensive definition of the term “metal dealer” in the bill to capture those at the periphery of the industry who run businesses that involve the acquisition of large amounts of scrap metal. Such people might include a skip hirer on a building site, a door-to-door collector who does not pay for metal but takes it away for the householder’s convenience, a car breaker or a demolition contractor.
The committee picked up the concern in its stage 1 report, and amendment 65 addresses the problem by striking a balance to capture some of those wider activities without requiring someone who acquires and sells metal as an extremely peripheral activity—for example, a plumber or heating engineer who takes away domestic piping—to have a licence.

The amendment expands the definition to include those who buy or sell metal for scrap. That captures those who sell metal without making a payment for it in the first place—for example, the itinerant collector who goes door to door, collecting and taking away unwanted items. It departs from the previous definition, which required the person to buy and sell metal for scrap before they would need a licence. By defining the licensable activity as carrying on “a business which consists wholly or substantially of buying or selling for scrap”

we will ensure that people such as plumbers who, in the normal course of events, acquire or sell metal as a peripheral activity will not require a licence.

As with any licensing system, the decision as to whether an individual requires a licence will rely on the specific facts and circumstances of each case. It might be a question of the degree to which scrap metal forms a part of the business, which can be determined only on a case-by-case basis. I also point out that the new definition provides that a “motor salvage operator”, as defined in subsection (3) in the amendment, carries out the business of a metal dealer and therefore will require a licence.

We believe that amendment 65 strikes the right balance and I ask the committee to support it.

I move amendment 65.
Amendment 65 agreed to.

The Convener: Amendment 66, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is in a group on its own.

Michael Matheson: Amendment 66 makes provision for powers to make secondary legislation to allow Scottish ministers to set out the circumstances in which the metal dealer and itinerant metal dealer regime does not apply, thereby creating exemptions from metal dealer and itinerant metal dealer licensing requirements.

We are confident that the definition of “a metal dealer or an itinerant metal dealer” strikes the right balance. It provides clarity, capturing activities that should fall within licensing while avoiding the need to license peripheral activities in which the acquiring of metal is wholly incidental. It is also flexible enough to respond to the particular facts of individual cases.

Nevertheless, we believe that it is right to enhance the flexibility to deal with circumstances that might not emerge until after the new regime is up and running, and amendment 66 allows ministers to prescribe circumstances in which a licence is not required. Such circumstances might relate to particular premises or activities where it is concluded that a scrap metal dealer’s or itinerant metal dealer’s licence is not required. As it is right to build such flexibility into the system, I ask the committee to support the amendment.

I move amendment 66.
Amendment 66 agreed to.

Section 67 agreed to.

After section 67

The Convener: Amendment 67, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is in a group on its own.

Michael Matheson: Amendment 67 seeks to restrict the circumstances in which premises that are licensed under the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 are exempted from the requirement for a public entertainment licence. A number of boards have raised concerns that a large public entertainment event such as a music festival that is attended by tens of thousands of people could be licensed under a £10 occasional licence for alcohol issued under the 2005 act.

We are sympathetic to those concerns. The occasional licence is simply not intended to cover such events and is ill-suited for that purpose. Although we would not like to go so far as to entirely remove the exemption for those with an alcohol licence and thus require thousands of pubs to require an additional public entertainment licence, we nevertheless believe that the exemption should be restricted.

Amendment 67 therefore limits the exemption of premises that are licensed under the 2005 act to those that possess a premises licence within the meaning of section 17 of the 2005 act. That would include a premises licence and a temporary premises licence. However, an occasional licence issued under the 2005 act will no longer provide an exemption from the requirements of public entertainment licensing. I ask the committee to support the amendment.

Amendment 67 agreed to.

The Convener: Amendment 68, in the name of Richard Lyle, is in a group on its own.

Richard Lyle (Central Scotland) (SNP): I am the convener of the cross-party group on the Scottish Showmen’s Guild, and I will move amendment 68 on behalf of the guild in order to right a wrong that it has been unable to resolve for more than 30 years due to United Kingdom parliamentary procedure and time.

The Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982, which deals with funfair licensing, creates hardship for showmen who operate their legitimate business and continue their way of life here in Scotland. The 1982 act, which now falls within the competence of the Scottish Parliament, is being used to prevent funfairs by way of the implementation of excessive licensing conditions that take so long to process that events cannot be applied for in time.

Many local gala committees simply cannot have funfairs because the licensing legislation is too expensive, lengthy and involved for them to handle. We have to ask whether funfairs in England, Ireland and Wales are required to hold a temporary public entertainment licence, and the answer is that they are not. Funfairs in the rest of the United Kingdom are not classed as regulated entertainment.

Why are only funfairs that travel through Scotland required to be licensed? It is because of a parliamentary mistake dating back to 1982 in a Scottish act that was introduced by the UK Parliament. At that time, the Showmen’s Guild of Great Britain employed a parliamentary agent to keep abreast of legislation that was likely to affect travelling showmen in both England and Scotland. In 1982, due to an oversight, the parliamentary agent missed the Civic Government (Scotland) Bill and its ramifications for Scotland’s showmen.

In the rest of the UK apart from Scotland, showmen only need to obtain permission to operate. The funfair organiser in England, Ireland or Wales obtains permission from the landowner or local authority and simply notifies the local police of the showmen’s presence in the area. In other parts of the UK, showmen only need to show their safety certificate to obtain permission to operate. The same conditions apply for funfairs in Scotland, which come under directive HSG175— “Fairgrounds and amusement parks: Guidance on safe practice”—and the Health and Safety at Work etc Act 1974.

The Scottish Showmen’s Guild works with the National Association For Leisure Industry Certification and the amusement device inspection procedures scheme in ensuring that all funfair equipment is registered and subject to annual inspection, which involves electrical, pneumatic and hydraulic structural testing of welds; design review; conformity of design; risk assessment and HS spot checks.

You may ask whether the 1982 act on licensing relates to safety. It does not. You may ask how, if amendment 68 was agreed to, local authorities would control funfairs without licensing. I contend that there are other provisions in law that cover funfairs, such as the Noise Act 1996, HSG175, the Health and Safety at Work etc Act 1974, the Alcohol etc (Scotland) Act 2010 and the Gambling Act 2005. When applications are made to local authorities, the same procedure would be followed with regard to the police, the fire service, local councillors, local communities and environmental health departments. Most funfairs let land from the local authority, and a simple set of conditions of let can be applied as required and enforced by all Scottish local authorities.

All that we ask for is that which exists in England: fairness. Why do funfairs that travel through Scotland need to be removed from the 1982 act? I suggest that the time that is involved in obtaining a temporary licence is too long to be practical in real life. Applicants need to have all knowledge relating to an application submitted from 28 days up to 90 days in advance of the funfair date, including the layout, the types of rides that will be attending and the specific people who will be presenting those rides. There is no provision in the 1982 act for short notice, emergency changes regarding changes of layout, the tenant of the fair, extra attractions, extensions to dates or new venues. If showmen arrive at a site that is waterlogged, they cannot work, because permission will have been granted only for the particular site.

The 1982 act also affects showmen who present funfairs in other ways. It creates a further financial burden; fees vary between local authorities; and interpretation and implementation of the 1982 act is subject to local policies even if people disregard the working of the act. If a licence is refused, no refund is made to the applicant, who has no alternative way of earning a living during that period. That is totally unfair and it might breach the Human Rights Act 1998.

The 1982 act requires each funfair to be licensed, and the licence must include every tenant of the fair and an equipment plan. Imagine a window cleaner being required to make a separate licence application for every house and to submit a separate plan of each window’s location, type and size. That is what showmen have to provide under the 1982 act.

We can exempt funfairs from the 1982 act by inserting the text that is suggested in amendment 68:

“After section 67, insert—

<Public entertainment licenses: exemption for funfairs
In section 41 of the 1982 Act (public entertainment licenses), after subsection (2)(aa) insert—

“(ab) premises used for the purpose of a funfair;”.

Removing funfairs from the 1982 act would remove a financial and insecurity burden from Scottish show people and their families and allow them more opportunity to operate their attractions. It would alleviate the fear and cost of a refusal, give them a greater sense of security and allow them to continue with their culture and traditions. It would also allow them to deal with circumstances that are outwith their control, such as bad weather, and let operators, in conjunction with the local council, seek an alternative site to operate.

If the rest of the UK and the European Union do not have licensing of funfairs, why do we? I understand that the showmen have also gained the support of other parties in Parliament, and I hope that the Government will take steps to support show people in Scotland by removing the anomaly.

I move amendment 68.

Clare Adamson (Central Scotland) (SNP): I declare an interest as a member of the cross-party group on the Scottish Showmen’s Guild. May I make a contribution, convener?

The Convener: Yes—please do.

Clare Adamson: I congratulate Richard Lyle on his presentation of a comprehensive and detailed argument about the problems that showmen face while operating under the current system. However, this is a big bill that covers lots of different areas and we have taken no evidence on the issue at stage 1, nor have we consulted the stakeholders, so although I have sympathy with the reasons behind amendment 68, I will not be able to support it.

Alex Rowley (Cowdenbeath) (Lab): Mr Lyle makes a strong argument. I will wait to hear what the minister says. Even though we have not taken evidence on the issue at this stage, I hope that there will be a commitment to take on board and look at the case that has been made. It seems to me that Mr Lyle makes a fair case that the showmen and the shows that go round different communities are struggling. They often depend on the Scottish weather, but I know that it makes the gala in my home village if the fair is there.

There is a case, so I will wait to hear what the minister has to say. If we do not support amendment 68 today, I hope that we will be sympathetic and take on board what has been said.

The Convener: Thank you, Mr Rowley. Before I bring in the cabinet secretary, it is only fair for me to put on the record that we have received a communication on the issue from the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities that expresses concern that we have not taken evidence or consulted on the issue.

Michael Matheson: I thank Richard Lyle for lodging amendment 68, which draws attention to funfair operators’ concerns about public entertainment licensing arrangements. I am well aware of those concerns and I agree that there is scope for local licensing authorities to consider their current practices in dealing with licence applications.

Licensing should be fair and proportionate. There is no reason to gold plate licence conditions so that funfairs become impossible to hold, and there is no excuse for the outright hostility to funfairs that some operators have reported that they face. It would be a great shame if funfairs, which add much enjoyment to public life in many towns and communities, were lost.

Nevertheless, I cannot support amendment 68, which removes funfairs from regulatory control through licensing entirely. I am concerned that the amendment does not seek to define funfairs, which might give rise to problems of enforcement, and similarly it does not clarify the extent to which a premises may be "used for the purposes of a funfair" before the exemption is applicable. As fairs come in a variety of forms and can have associated activities such as market stalls and gala day parades, it is important to be clear about what would be exempted. Although it might be possible to address those issues, it would take careful consideration and we would benefit from appropriate consultation to ensure that we got it right.

More fundamentally, it is hard to think of a better example of a public entertainment that needs to be licensed. Funfairs raise obvious considerations with regard to the impact on neighbours in terms of noise and minor nuisance. Some fairs have raised the possibility of low-level alcohol-fuelled antisocial behaviour, and there are also health and safety considerations. Although other enactments provide some protection in that regard, licensing ensures that those enactments are followed and provides a quick and effective means of dealing with any concerns.

As the committee is aware, the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities and the police oppose the amendment. It is clear, however, that there is work to be done to ensure that funfair operators are treated fairly. To that end, I am prepared to work with local authorities to ensure that the issues that Richard Lyle has highlighted are addressed. I am also prepared to work towards the Scottish Government issuing guidance to licensing authorities to assist in their consideration of funfair applications. I hope that Richard Lyle will agree that those steps are welcome and provide an appropriate and proportionate response to the issue.

I ask the committee to reject amendment 68.

Richard Lyle: It was my intention to press the amendment because I feel that there is unfairness in Scotland compared with England. However, in discussions with the cabinet secretary, he has given me an undertaking that he will work towards addressing that unfairness. I ask that he meets me and the Scottish Showmen’s Guild as soon as possible to address the matter. In the light of the assurances that have been given, although I intended to press the amendment, I will not do so.

Amendment 68, by agreement, withdrawn.

Section 68—Licensing of sexual entertainment venues

The Convener: Amendment 95, in the name of Cara Hilton, is in a group on its own.

Cara Hilton: I put on record my thanks to the Zero Tolerance Trust for working with me on amendment 95, and I thank the other organisations, including Scottish Women’s Aid and Rape Crisis Scotland, that have offered their support.

Amendment 95 would oblige a local authority to produce a licensing policy statement outlining its intentions in respect of licensing sexual entertainment venues. The statement would set out clearly why the local authority chose to offer or not to offer licences for those venues and would put that in the wider context of public health, child protection, community safety, gender equality and other policy concerns, but with a special focus on tackling violence against women.

I share the view, which has been expressed by the Zero Tolerance Trust and others, that the licensing of these venues is incompatible with the Scottish Government’s priorities and with our ambitions to ensure genuine equality for women and girls. Allowing the venues to exist seems at odds with the equally safe strategy, which is Scotland’s strategy to eradicate violence against women and girls; the Human Trafficking and Exploitation (Scotland) Bill; our approach to domestic abuse, rape and sexual offences; and indeed, UK equality and human rights legislation.

The amendment would ensure that any local authority that was considering offering a licence to a sexual entertainment venue would be obliged to take the policy context into account in justifying any licensing decision. I think that such decisions should not operate in a vacuum but should reflect the wider policy agenda, locally and nationally.

The evidence suggests that local authorities have often not effectively policed sexual entertainment venues but have allowed multiple breaches of licensing conditions—which are apparently legally unenforceable—such as that there should be no private booths and that there should be no-touching policies.

There seems to be evidence, too, that some licensing authorities have taken their eye off the ball regarding the monitoring of venues. Furthermore, a recent court case involving City of Edinburgh Council officials showed that they had accepted lap dances in return for awarding building contracts.

There is absolutely no doubt that there must be a lot more public scrutiny before sexual entertainment venues are granted licences. A policy statement such as that which my amendment would require is one way of achieving that and increasing accountability.

I move amendment 95.

Alex Rowley: I support Cara Hilton’s amendment. I support the idea that it is for local authorities to make such decisions—it is correct to have that approach in the bill. When a local authority makes a decision on sexual entertainment venues, it is important to have a policy statement that is open and transparent and that the public can understand. Therefore, amendment 95 would enhance the bill. I hope that the minister will consider those points.

Michael Matheson: I have considerable sympathy for amendment 95.

The Scottish Government acknowledges that commercial sexual exploitation may be a form of violence against women. However, we have always argued that the local authorities that license the activities are best placed to reflect their community’s views on the issue. The proposed licensing scheme will allow proper local authority control, part of which is ensuring better working conditions and a more controlled environment for the women who work in sexual entertainment venues.

A local authority that seeks to license sexual entertainment in its area will have to undertake a proper exercise to reach a determination of how to approach the licensing function and what its policy objectives are. The Scottish Government will produce statutory guidance to assist local authorities in undertaking that exercise. That guidance will make it clear that a local authority will risk challenge unless it has sought relevant stakeholders’ views, gathered evidence and addressed all the relevant considerations. In other words, a local authority will have to give violence against women groups and similar organisations the opportunity to raise issues and will have to show that it has considered those issues before reaching its final determination.

I am, however, concerned that amendment 95 would make it appear that any sexual entertainment venue licensing regime that was adopted by an authority had one consideration or objective only—that is, to address violence against women. Our intention is to give local authorities the power to license the venues and to reach the decisions that are right for their own areas on the basis of a range of considerations. For example, I envisage their considering the impact on neighbours, on those who make use of a locality and on any schools and churches that may be nearby. I also envisage their considering whether there is an associated risk of criminality or public disorder. I would not want to create the impression that the regime was driven by one consideration only—violence against women. That is a crucial matter, but it should not be the sole consideration, and the bill needs to reflect that.

I recognise the importance of the issue that has been raised by Cara Hilton and I offer to work with her to produce a fresh amendment at stage 3 that will make explicit in the bill that local authorities must consider violence against women as one of a number of issues. Therefore, I invite Cara Hilton to withdraw amendment 95.

Cara Hilton: I am grateful to the minister for his comments. It is important that we take action. I want to see the spirit of my amendment reflected in the bill, so I accept his offer to work on a fresh amendment at stage 3.

Amendment 95, by agreement, withdrawn.

The Convener: Amendment 96, in the name of Cara Hilton, is in a group on its own.

Cara Hilton: I thank the Zero Tolerance Trust for working with me on amendment 96, and I thank Scotland’s Commissioner for Children and Young People for offering his support.

The purpose of the amendment is to prevent under-18s from working in sexual entertainment venues. As the bill stands, under-18s would be able to work in such venues at times when sexual entertainment was not taking place. The Zero Tolerance Trust has argued that that would create a groomers charter, allowing venues to employ teenage girls to work as cleaners or in office administration roles before persuading or coercing them to become performers when they reached 18.

We all know how short of cash people are at that age. It is probably quite a tempting offer for many girls in that situation, and it is a particular concern for vulnerable young women such as care leavers or women living with poverty or disadvantage. Also, some men who attend such venues seek to buy sex there, and there is no guarantee that they will restrict their inquiries to performers.

Under-18s who work in sexual entertainment venues are at risk of sexual exploitation, of being propositioned for sex and of being exposed to an industry that damages women. Many such venues screen pornography in the background, and there is a real risk that under-18s could be exposed to that, which is a child protection issue.

I do not think that anyone under 18 should be allowed to work in or attend in any capacity a sexual entertainment venue; it is simply not a safe, healthy, working environment for children. Under-18s cannot work in sex shops, and that provision should apply to these venues, too.

This is a personal issue for me. I have a six-year-old daughter, and I do not want her to grow up in a Scotland where women are viewed and treated as sexualised objects. These venues normalise a really harmful form of sexual exploitation, and “a failure by the Scottish Government to send out this clear message is a failure to young people.”

Those are not my words but those of Scotland’s Commissioner for Children and Young People.

The Scottish Government’s violence against women strategy recognises the very real links between discrimination, objectification, violence against women and commercial exploitation. If we are serious about wanting an equal Scotland and tackling domestic abuse and violence, and if we really want to ensure that Scotland is the best place for girls to grow up in, the Scottish Government must be consistent.

Sexual entertainment venues are no place for any child to work. We need to put a stop to that and ensure that our young people get the protection that they need.

I move amendment 96.

Cameron Buchanan: I support Cara Hilton on this issue. It is an anomaly that under-18s can work in a sexual entertainment venue, even as cleaners, because they will be influenced by that environment. There is an inconsistency here and I support amendment 96.

Michael Matheson: I have sympathy for the objective of amendment 96, which is aimed at offering better protection for young people. It follows up issues that were highlighted by the children’s commissioner ahead of the stage 1 debate. However, I have a number of concerns.
I make it clear that the bill does not relax controls in any way—it does quite the reverse. Sexual entertainment premises are currently treated in more or less the same way as any other licensed premises. That means that, at the moment, under-18s could be collecting glasses or undertaking similar activities while the sexual entertainment venue is open. The bill makes it clear that, if young people are being employed in such roles, that must stop. Under-18s should not be on the premises while sexual entertainment is taking place. That is a reasonable and proportionate step forward.

I would not, however, be comfortable in saying that a 17-year-old cleaner could not be employed or a plumber’s apprentice could not enter to repair a leak when the premises were closed or when the venue was being used merely as a bar and sexual entertainment was not taking place. I am not sure that the proposal is proportionate, as it gives rise to concerns that the employment opportunities of young people may be unreasonably restricted.

I have seen no evidence that the type of grooming that concerned the children’s commissioner, whereby the cleaner progresses eventually to participating in sexual entertainment, actually takes place. The tighter control that is offered by the new licensing regime should, in any case, prevent that sort of thing from occurring.

That said, I acknowledge the importance of the issue that Cara Hilton has highlighted. Again, I offer to work with her to produce a stage 3 amendment to address her concerns, but in a way that would allow some flexibility in order to avoid consequences that may be viewed as unreasonable.

For those reasons, I invite Cara Hilton to withdraw amendment 96.

Cara Hilton: The cabinet secretary says that the bill does not relax the rules in any way, but I do not accept that. I am concerned about the provision and the potential loopholes. Sexual entertainment venues are not the kind of places that we should be encouraging children and young people to work in. We should be challenging the culture.

Alex Rowley: Do you agree that it is important that we establish the principle—I think that that is what you are trying to do—that no one under the age of 18 should be in such premises?

Cara Hilton: Yes. Thank you for that helpful comment, Mr Rowley. It is about sending a clear message about the type of Scotland that we want to see and about how we value our young people. That is very important, so I will press the amendment.

The Convener: The question is, that amendment 96 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Convener: There will be a division.

For
Buchanan, Cameron (Lothian) (Con)
Hilton, Cara (Dunfermline) (Lab)
Rowley, Alex (Cowdenbeath) (Lab)

Against
Adamson, Clare (Central Scotland) (SNP)
Coffey, Willie (Kilmarnock and Irvine Valley) (SNP)
Stewart, Kevin (Aberdeen Central) (SNP)

Abstentions
Wilson, John (Central Scotland) (Ind)

The Convener: The result of the division is: For 3, Against 3, Abstentions 1. I must therefore use my casting vote, which is against the amendment.

Amendment 96 disagreed to.

The Convener: Amendment 97, in the name of Cara Hilton, is in a group on its own.

Cara Hilton: Amendment 97 would require licensing committees to consult violence against women partnerships or other bodies with a similar function. Right now, public policy can be a wee bit disconnected. Local authorities all have strategies on preventing sexual abuse and violence against women, but there is not a lot of joined-up thinking around how

John Wilson (Central Scotland) (Ind): What does Ms Hilton think about the example that was given by the cabinet secretary of a 16 or 17-year-old apprentice plumber or electrician being called out to work in such premises? Should they be excluded from the premises because of their age? We are talking about employment opportunities for 16 and 17-year-olds, and if Ms Hilton is going to press the amendment we need to be clear about how it would impact on the wider society, particularly young people who undertake apprenticeships and who are called out to undertake emergency plumbing or electrical repairs.

Cara Hilton: Amendment 97 would require licensing committees to consult violence against women partnerships or other bodies with a similar function. Again, it is aimed at ensuring that licensing committees fully appreciate the wider policy environment in which they operate. Right now, public policy can be a wee bit disconnected. Local authorities all have strategies on preventing sexual abuse and violence against women, but there is not a lot of joined-up thinking around how licensing decisions impact on women and little attention is paid to how having sexual entertainment venues in our towns and city centres impacts on women and girls. That does not make sense.

The Scottish Government’s violence against women and girls strategy, “Equally Safe”, which I referred to earlier in our proceedings, defines commercial sexual exploitation as a form of violence against women. The strategy aims to create “a strong and flourishing Scotland where all individuals are equally safe and respected”.

Amendment 97 would mean that local authorities would have to discuss their approach to sexual entertainment venues with local violence against women partnerships and think seriously about how their approach to licensing those venues fits with the strategy.

In his answer to one of my earlier amendments, the cabinet secretary referred to the strategy, so I hope that he will have something positive to say on this issue. It is about ensuring that there is proper joined-up policy making at local level and that our public policy aspirations are reflected in decisions that are made.

I move amendment 97.

Michael Matheson: I support the intent of amendment 97, but I have some practical concerns. Although the current process already allows for robust notification procedures, with requirements for newspaper advertising and for notices to be publicly displayed, I can see that there may be advantages in both practice and principle of requiring specific forms of notification. The practical advantage is that it would ensure that important stakeholders are notified of applications and have the ability to make timely representations and to influence the process. The advantage in principle is that it would send a very clear message that violence against women partnerships and similar bodies are important stakeholders in the licensing process.

I am concerned, however, that the amendment specifically identifies violence against women partnerships. Although it is currently obvious what we are talking about, they are non-statutory bodies and we need to guard against some future reorganisation or fresh approach that would make those bodies extinct.

My preference would be for an amendment that would allow each local authority to identify which organisations in their area should be notified of applications. The statutory guidance that will follow the bill will specify what types of bodies and organisations should be considered and that would certainly include bodies such as violence against women partnerships.

I therefore invite the committee to reject amendment 97, as I have asked my officials to lodge an amendment at stage 3 that will achieve a similar aim.

Cara Hilton: In light of the cabinet secretary’s comments, I withdraw the amendment and I look forward to an amendment being lodged at stage 3.

Amendment 97, by agreement, withdrawn.

Section 68 agreed to.

Section 69—Deemed grant of applications

The Convener: Amendment 69, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is grouped with amendment 70.

Michael Matheson: Amendments 69 and 70 will allow licensing authorities to revoke a licence under part 2 of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982.

Part 2 licences include taxis and private hire cars, metal dealers and street traders, and can be granted for one to three years. At present, such a licence may be suspended for a specific period or for the remaining duration of the licence, but it cannot be revoked. However, it is possible to revoke a licence under part 3—for a sex shop—as indeed it is for an alcohol licence under the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005. The ability to revoke a part 2 licence was called for in evidence sessions, and Colin Keir MSP made the same point during the stage 1 debate in Parliament.

I am therefore pleased to bring forward these amendments. As I have said, although it is already possible for a part 2 licence to be suspended for varying periods in certain circumstances, these amendments will allow for a proper response in those cases where the stronger sanction of revocation is more appropriate.

I move amendment 69.

Amendment 70 moved—[Michael Matheson]—and agreed to.

Section 70 agreed to.

Section 71—Conditions for Part 3 licences

The Convener: Amendment 71, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is grouped with amendments 76 and 79.
Michael Matheson: Amendment 71 concerns civic licensing, while amendments 76 and 79 relate to alcohol licensing.

Amendment 71 is a technical amendment. The bill as introduced repealed the word “unconditionally” from paragraph 9 of schedule 2 to the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 on the grounds that its inclusion is redundant when viewed alongside the new condition-setting power created by the bill in section 71. Amendment 71 improves the drafting by defining more precisely where the deleted word lies in the 1982 act.

Amendments 76 and 79 are on alcohol licensing. Amendment 76 will allow a licensing board, when determining an application for a major variation to a premises licence, to request that the chief constable provides it with a report on all cases, complaints or representations made regarding antisocial behaviour on or in the vicinity of the premises in question. Currently, the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 provides that a licensing board, when determining a premises licence application, may request that the chief constable provides it with an antisocial behaviour report to help it consider whether to grant the licence. However, the board can do that only when considering the original premises licence application and not any later application for a major variation to a licence. We are of the opinion that that power should be available to boards when they are considering applications for major variations.

Amendment 79 is a minor amendment to remove reference in section 57(2), which was repealed by the Criminal Justice and Licensing (Scotland) Act 2010.

I hope that the committee will support these amendments.

I move amendment 71.

Amendment 71 agreed to.

Section 71, as amended, agreed to.

After section 71

The Convener: Amendment 72, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is grouped with amendment 98.

Michael Matheson: Amendment 72 will enhance the ability of licensing authorities to deal with the way in which sexual entertainment venues and sex shops seek to market themselves. Currently, conditions that may be imposed by the licensing authority are limited to regulating displays and advertising “on or in” the premises. Amendment 72 will ensure that advertising activities “connected with” the premises may also be dealt with, irrespective of where they take place. As sexual entertainment venues sometimes conduct a range of activities in surrounding streets, such as handing out flyers and putting up signs and posters, it is sensible to ensure that the authority is able to deal with those matters.

Amendment 98, in the name of Cara Hilton, seeks to address the same issue so, obviously, I welcome and support its objective. However, in my view, amendment 98 would be a more complicated way of achieving a similar objective to that of amendment 72 and it would significantly cut across the new provisions in section 71 that will permit Scottish ministers to, by order, provide mandatory conditions and local authorities to set standard conditions in respect of sexual entertainment venue and sex shop licences.

In addition, although amendment 72 will allow a local authority to deal with advertising and displays, amendment 98 would require a local authority to set conditions on that matter. My view is that it is unnecessary to make such a condition a statutory requirement; the proper approach is to enable local authorities to deal with the matter, support them in doing so through guidance and then leave the authority to choose how to go about using the powers at its local discretion.

Additionally, were amendment 98 to be agreed to, further amendments would be required at stage 3 to find a means to integrate the principle behind amendment 98 into the new scheme for mandatory and standard conditions. That would seem unnecessary, given that section 71 provides for the ability to set mandatory and standard conditions for all part 3 licences and amendment 72 will expand the ability of local authorities to deal with the issue of displays and advertising at a local level. Furthermore, the Government intends to issue guidance to local authorities on their use of conditions for part 3 licences. The Government may also impose specific mandatory conditions on such licences if it is subsequently shown that that is necessary.

I ask the committee to support amendment 72 and reject amendment 98.

I move amendment 72.

Cara Hilton: I welcome the opportunity to speak in support of amendment 98, which is aimed at restricting displays and advertising for sexual entertainment venues. Often, such venues have prominent, sexually explicit signage that can be seen by anyone who passes them, including children who are going to school and women who are going about their ordinary business. It is not acceptable that our children are exposed to those images and that women are made to feel uncomfortable daily. Such venues are not a mainstream form of public entertainment and are certainly not aimed at a cross-section of the public.
It is only right that we should have restrictions on how such venues are allowed to advertise. Why should mums and dads have to plan their daily walking routes to avoid such images? Children should not be exposed to them on our high streets.

I ask the committee to support amendment 98.

Michael Matheson: As I outlined in my opening comments, what Cara Hilton is trying to achieve with amendment 98 is largely covered by our amendment 72, which provides powers for local authorities to take appropriate measures. As we have also set out, we will provide guidance to local authorities on how they should implement that aspect of the powers that they will have under the bill.

Amendment 98 not moved.

Sections 72 to 77 agreed to.

Schedule 2—Minor and consequential amendments and repeals

The Convener: Amendment 73, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is in a group on its own.

Michael Matheson: Amendment 73 is a consequential amendment that inserts a new part into schedule 4 to the Firearms Act 1968. The Firearms Act 1968, as amended, currently restricts the commercial sale or transfer of air weapons to registered firearms dealers. Schedule 4 to that act sets out the details of such sales or transfers, which must be recorded in a dealer’s register of transactions and, therefore, available for police inspection on request.

Section 24 of the bill maintains the existing restrictions but also restricts the manufacture, repair or testing of air weapons by way of trade or business to registered firearms dealers, as is the case with other firearms. Therefore, the amendment is necessary to ensure that details of those transactions are also properly recorded in a dealer’s register. Registered firearms dealers will, in essence, be required to record the same transactional information in relation to air weapons as for other firearms and so will be familiar with the new requirements.

I move amendment 73.

Amendment 73 agreed to.

The Convener: Amendment 74, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is in a group on its own.

Michael Matheson: This amendment matches existing provision in the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 that applies to court proceedings relating to firearms or shotgun offences.

For the purposes of such proceedings, a constable or person employed by the Scottish Police Authority may sign a certificate that states that the accused did not hold the appropriate firearms or shotgun certificate on the date in question. That may be taken as sufficient proof of the matter, rather than requiring police witnesses to give such routine evidence in court.

Amendment 74 makes similar provision for the purposes of court proceedings that involve offences under part 1 of the bill. That amendment to the 1995 act is a sensible and proportionate measure for dealing with matters of routine evidence, which will save police and court time.

Part 1—Air weapons

Meaning of “air weapon”

(1) This section defines the expression “air weapon” for the purposes of this Part.

(2) The expression generally has the same meaning as that given in section 1(3)(b) of the Firearms Act 1968 (“the 1968 Act”).

(3) In addition, the expression includes—

(a) the component parts of an air weapon (within the meaning of section 1(3)(b) of the 1968 Act), and

(b) any accessory to such a weapon designed or adapted to diminish the noise caused by discharging the weapon.

(4) But the expression does not include—

(a) an air weapon which is not a firearm (within the meaning of section 57(1) of the 1968 Act),

(b) the component parts of an air weapon described in paragraph (za) or (a)(i) or (ii).

(5) Other words and expressions used in this Part are defined in section 40.
Air weapon certificates

2 Requirement for air weapon certificate

(1) It is an offence for a person to use, possess, purchase or acquire an air weapon without holding an air weapon certificate.

(2) A person who commits an offence under subsection (1) is liable—

(a) on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 12 months or a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum (or both),

(b) on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 2 years or a fine (or both).

(3) Schedule 1 contains exemptions from—

(a) the offence under subsection (1), and

(b) certain other offences under this Part.

(4) The Scottish Ministers may by regulations amend schedule 1 so as to—

(a) add further exemptions,

(b) remove or modify exemptions.

3 Application for grant or renewal of air weapon certificate

(1) An individual aged 14 years or more may apply to the chief constable for—

(a) the grant of an air weapon certificate, or

(b) the renewal of an air weapon certificate.

(2) An application is valid only if it complies with the requirements of—

(a) section 4 (verification of applications),

(b) if applicable, section 7 (special requirements and conditions for young persons), and

(c) any regulations under section 37 which apply to the application.

(3) The chief constable must maintain a register containing the details of each application made under this section (whether or not the application results in an air weapon certificate being granted or renewed).

4 Verification of applications

(1) An application for the grant or renewal of an air weapon certificate must be verified in the prescribed form and manner by an individual who meets the requirements of subsection (2) (“a verifier”).

(2) The requirements are that a verifier must—

(a) have known the applicant for at least 2 years,

(b) in the opinion of the chief constable, be of good standing in the community,

(c) not be—

(i) a relative of the applicant,

(ii) a registered firearms dealer,
Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill

Part I—Air weapons

(iii) a constable or a member of police staff,
(iv) a member of, or a member of staff of, the Scottish Police Authority, or
(v) ordinarily resident outwith the United Kingdom.

(3) In verifying the application, a verifier must confirm that, to the best of the verifier’s knowledge and belief, the information supplied in the application is correct.

5 Grant or renewal of air weapon certificate

(1) The chief constable may only grant or renew an air weapon certificate if satisfied that the applicant—

(a) is fit to be entrusted with an air weapon,
(b) is not prohibited from possessing an air weapon or other firearm under section 21 of the 1968 Act,
(c) has a good reason for using, possessing, purchasing or acquiring an air weapon, and
(d) in all the circumstances, can be permitted to possess an air weapon without danger to the public safety or to the peace.

(2) The chief constable may, when considering an application made under section 3 by an applicant who holds a firearm or shot gun certificate, treat paragraphs (a) and (b) of subsection (1) as being satisfied in relation to the applicant.

(3) The chief constable may, before determining an application made under section 3, require that the applicant permit a constable or member of police staff—

(a) to visit the applicant at the applicant’s usual place of residence,
(b) to inspect any place where the applicant intends to store or use an air weapon.

6 Air weapon certificate: conditions

(1) Every air weapon certificate is subject to any prescribed mandatory conditions.

(2) The chief constable may, when granting or renewing an air weapon certificate, attach conditions to the certificate (and, in the case of a renewal, may attach different conditions from those attached to the certificate prior to its renewal).

(3) The chief constable may not attach to an air weapon certificate a condition which is inconsistent with—

(a) a prescribed mandatory condition which applies to air weapon certificates, or
(b) a condition which must be attached to the certificate under this Part.

(4) It is an offence for a holder of an air weapon certificate to fail to comply with a condition attached to the holder’s certificate.

(5) An individual who commits an offence under subsection (4) is liable, on summary conviction, to a fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale.

7 Special requirements and conditions for young persons

(1) This section applies where an applicant for an air weapon certificate is under the age of 18.
(2) A parent or guardian of the applicant must consent in the prescribed form and manner to the applicant making the application.

(3) Where the chief constable grants an air weapon certificate to an individual under the age of 18, the chief constable must attach to the certificate—

(a) the condition described in subsection (4), and

(b) one or more of the conditions described in subsection (5).

(4) The condition is that the holder may not purchase, hire, accept a gift of or own, an air weapon.

(5) The conditions are that—

(a) the holder may use and possess an air weapon only for sporting purposes (including shooting live quarry) on private land,

(b) the holder may use and possess an air weapon only for the purposes of target shooting on private land,

(c) the holder may use and possess an air weapon only for the purposes of participating in events or competitions,

(d) the holder may use and possess an air weapon only for the purposes of protecting livestock, crops or produce on land used for or in connection with agriculture,

(e) the holder may use and possess an air weapon only for the purposes of pest control.

(6) It is sufficient, for the purposes of section 5(1)(c), for the chief constable to be satisfied that the applicant has a good reason for using or possessing an air weapon.

(7) For the purposes of this section, “agriculture” is to be construed in accordance with section 85 of the Agricultural Holdings (Scotland) Act 1991.

8 Duration of air weapon certificate

(1) An air weapon certificate expires (unless earlier revoked or cancelled)—

(a) in the case of a certificate granted to an individual under the age of 18, when the individual attains the age of 18,

(b) in any other case, at the end of the period of 5 years beginning with the date on which the certificate is granted or renewed.

(2) Where an individual has applied for the renewal of an air weapon certificate before its expiry but the chief constable has not, as at the date of its expiry, determined whether or not to grant the renewal, the certificate is to continue to have effect until the application is determined.

(3) The Scottish Ministers may by regulations amend subsection (1)(b) to specify a different period.

9 Alignment of different types of certificate

(1) Subsection (2) applies where an individual—

(a) holds a firearm or shot gun certificate, and
(b) makes an application for the grant or renewal of an air weapon certificate under section 3.

(2) Where this subsection applies, the applicant may request that the chief constable grant or renew an air weapon certificate for such shorter period than is provided for in section 8 as is appropriate to secure that it expires on the same day as the applicant’s firearm or shot gun certificate (or, if the applicant holds both a firearm and shot gun certificate, either of them).

(3) Subsection (4) applies where an individual—
   (a) holds an air weapon certificate, and
   (b) makes an application for the grant or renewal of a firearm or shot gun certificate under the 1968 Act.

(4) Where this subsection applies, the applicant may make an application under section 3 of this Act for the air weapon certificate to be renewed as from the same day as that on which the firearm or shot gun certificate is granted or renewed.

10 Variation of air weapon certificate

(1) The chief constable may, by giving notice to the holder of an air weapon certificate—
   (a) vary the holder’s certificate,
   (b) attach conditions to the certificate, or
   (c) vary or revoke a condition attached to the certificate other than—
      (i) a prescribed mandatory condition which applies to air weapon certificates, or
      (ii) a condition which must be attached to the certificate under this Part.

(2) The chief constable may give a notice under subsection (1)—
   (a) on the application of the holder of an air weapon certificate, or
   (b) of the chief constable’s own accord (at any time).

(3) The chief constable may not attach to an air weapon certificate a condition which is inconsistent with—
   (a) a prescribed mandatory condition which applies to air weapon certificates, or
   (b) a condition which must be attached to the certificate under this Part.

(4) For the purposes of this section, the chief constable may by notice given to the holder of an air weapon certificate require the holder to produce the certificate within the period of 21 days beginning with the date on which the notice is given.

11 Revocation of air weapon certificate

(1) The chief constable must revoke an air weapon certificate if—
   (a) the chief constable is satisfied that the holder of the certificate can no longer be permitted to possess an air weapon without danger to the public safety or to the peace, or
   (b) the holder is prohibited from possessing an air weapon or other firearm under section 21 of the 1968 Act.
(2) The chief constable may revoke an air weapon certificate if—
   (a) the chief constable has reason to believe that the holder—
       (i) is no longer a fit person to be entrusted with an air weapon, or
       (ii) no longer has a good reason to use, possess, purchase or acquire an air weapon,
   (b) the chief constable is satisfied that the holder of the certificate has failed to comply with a condition attached to the certificate, or
   (c) the holder fails to produce the certificate when required to do so under section 10(4).

(3) An air weapon certificate is revoked by the chief constable giving notice to the holder of the certificate to that effect.

(4) A notice under subsection (3) must—
   (a) be given at least 7 days before the date on which the revocation is to take effect, and
   (b) require the holder to surrender the certificate and any air weapons that the holder possesses by such date as the chief constable may specify in the notice.

(5) It is an offence for a person, without reasonable excuse, to fail to comply with the requirements of a notice given under subsection (3).

(6) A person who commits an offence under subsection (5) is liable, on summary conviction, to a fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale.

(7) In the event that the holder of an air weapon certificate makes an appeal under section
     35 against a decision to revoke the holder’s certificate—
     (a) the revocation does not take effect, but
     (b) the holder must still surrender the certificate and any air weapons that the holder possesses in accordance with the requirements of the notice given under subsection (3), pending the determination or withdrawal of the appeal.

Permits

12 Police permits

(1) The chief constable may, on the application of an individual, grant a permit (“a police permit”) authorising the individual—
     (a) to possess or acquire an air weapon without holding an air weapon certificate, or
     (b) to sell (or expose for sale) an air weapon in the course of that individual’s business.

(2) A police permit must not be granted to an individual who is prohibited from possessing an air weapon or other firearm under section 21 of the 1968 Act.

(3) A police permit expires (unless earlier revoked or cancelled) on the expiry date specified in the permit.

(4) An application for a police permit is valid only if it complies with the requirements of any regulations under section 37 which apply to the application.
13 Visitor permits

(1) The chief constable may, on the application of a qualifying visitor, grant a permit (“a visitor permit”) authorising the visitor to use, possess, purchase or acquire an air weapon without holding an air weapon certificate for the period (or a part of it) that the qualifying visitor is in Scotland.

(2) A person may, on behalf of a group of 2 to 20 qualifying visitors, make an application to the chief constable for each member of the group to be granted a visitor permit.

(3) The chief constable may grant a visitor permit to some or all of the members of the group.

(4) The chief constable may grant a visitor permit only if satisfied—

(a) in the case of an individual application, that the qualifying visitor has a good reason for using, possessing, purchasing or acquiring an air weapon while visiting Scotland,

(b) in the case of a group application, that each qualifying visitor is to use and possess an air weapon while visiting Scotland only—

(i) for sporting purposes (including shooting live quarry) on private land,

(ii) for the purposes of target shooting on private land, or

(iii) for the purposes of participating in an event or competition,

(c) in every case—

(i) that the qualifying visitor can be permitted to possess an air weapon without danger to the public safety or to the peace, and

(ii) that the qualifying visitor is not prohibited from possessing an air weapon or other firearm under section 21 of the 1968 Act.

(5) For the purposes of subsection (4)(b) the chief constable may require the applicant to produce evidence that the owner or occupier of the land consents to the visitors’ intended use or possession of air weapons on the land.

(6) Except where section 14 applies, the chief constable must, on granting a visitor permit in respect of a group application, attach to the permit as a condition that the holder of the permit may use and possess an air weapon only for such of the purposes described in subsection (4)(b) as the chief constable may specify in the condition.

(7) A visitor permit expires (unless earlier revoked or cancelled) on the expiry date specified in the permit.

(8) No visitor permit is to be granted for a period of longer than 12 months.

(9) An application for a visitor permit is valid only if it complies with the requirements of any regulations under section 37 which apply to the application.

(10) For the purposes of this section and section 14—

“group application” means an application under subsection (2) for visitor permits made by a person on behalf of qualifying visitors in a group,

“individual application” means an application under subsection (1) for a visitor permit made by the qualifying visitor,

“qualifying visitor” means an individual who is—
(a) aged 14 years or more,
(b) not ordinarily resident in Scotland, and
(c) visiting (or intending to visit) Scotland.

14 Visitor permits: young persons

(1) This section applies—
   (a) where an individual applicant for a visitor permit is under the age of 18,
   (b) in respect of any individual who is—
      (i) under the age of 18, and
      (ii) on whose behalf a visitor permit is applied for as part of a group application.

(2) A parent or guardian of the applicant or individual under the age of 18 must consent in the prescribed form and manner to the making of the application.

(3) The chief constable must, on granting a visitor permit in respect of an individual application, attach to the permit—
   (a) the condition described in section 7(4), and
   (b) one or more of the conditions described in subsection (5) of that section.

(4) The chief constable must, on granting a visitor permit in respect of a group application, attach to the permit—
   (a) the condition described in section 7(4), and
   (b) one or more of the conditions described in paragraphs (za) to (b) of subsection (5) of that section.

(5) It is sufficient, for the purposes of section 13(4)(a), for the chief constable to be satisfied that the applicant has a good reason for using or possessing an air weapon.

15 Police and visitor permits: conditions

(1) Every police permit and visitor permit is subject to any prescribed mandatory conditions.

(2) The chief constable may, when granting a police permit or a visitor permit, attach conditions to the permit.

(3) The chief constable may not attach to a police permit or a visitor permit a condition which is inconsistent with—
   (a) a prescribed mandatory condition which applies to police permits or, as the case may be, visitor permits, or
   (b) a condition which must be attached to the permit under this Part.

(4) It is an offence for the holder of a police permit or a visitor permit to fail to comply with a condition attached to the permit.

(5) An individual who commits an offence under subsection (4) is liable, on summary conviction, to a fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale.
16  Police and visitor permits: variation and revocation

(1) The chief constable may, by giving notice to the holder of a police permit or a visitor permit—

(a) vary the permit,

(b) attach conditions to the permit,

(c) vary or revoke a condition attached to the permit other than—

(i) a prescribed mandatory condition which applies to the permit, or

(ii) a condition which must be attached to a permit under this Part, or

(d) revoke the permit.

(2) The chief constable may give a notice under subsection (1)—

(a) on the application of the holder of a police permit or visitor permit, or

(b) of the chief constable’s own accord (at any time).

(3) The chief constable may not attach to a police permit or a visitor permit a condition which is inconsistent with—

(a) a prescribed mandatory condition which applies to police permits or, as the case may be, visitor permits, or

(b) a condition which must be attached to the permit under this Part.

(4) For the purposes of paragraphs (a) to (c) of subsection (1), the chief constable may by giving notice to the holder of a police permit or a visitor permit require the holder to produce the permit within the period of 21 days beginning with the date on which the notice is given.

(5) A notice given under subsection (1) which revokes a police permit or a visitor permit must—

(a) be given at least 7 days before the date on which the revocation is to take effect, and

(b) require the holder of the permit to surrender the permit and any air weapons that the holder possesses by such date as the chief constable may specify in the notice.

(6) It is an offence for the holder of a police permit or a visitor permit, without reasonable excuse, to fail to comply with a requirement contained in a notice under subsection (1).

(7) An individual who commits an offence under subsection (6) is liable, on summary conviction, to a fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale.

(8) In the event that the holder of a police permit or a visitor permit makes an appeal under section 35 against a decision to revoke the holder’s permit—

(a) the revocation does not take effect, but

(b) the holder must still surrender the permit and any air weapons that the holder possesses in accordance with the requirements of the notice given under subsection (1), pending the determination or withdrawal of the appeal.
17 Event permits

(1) The chief constable may, on the application of a person (“the organiser”) who is organising or otherwise responsible for an event, grant a permit authorising individuals at the event to borrow, hire, use and possess air weapons while engaging in an event activity without holding an air weapon certificate (“an event permit”).

(2) The chief constable may, when granting an event permit, attach conditions to it.

(3) The organiser must ensure that the event permit (or a copy of it) is prominently displayed at the event so as to be capable of being read by any person attending the event.

(4) It is an offence for the organiser—

   (a) to fail to comply with a condition attached to the event permit, or

   (b) without reasonable excuse, to fail to comply with subsection (3).

(5) A person who commits an offence under subsection (4) is liable, on summary conviction, to a fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale.

(6) An application for an event permit is valid only if it complies with the requirements of any regulations under section 37 which apply to the application.

(7) For the purposes of this section, an “event activity” is an activity—

   (a) involving the use and possession of air weapons by individuals, and

   (b) which has been planned by (or on behalf of) the organiser as part of the event.

18 Approval of air weapon clubs

(1) The chief constable may, on the application of an air weapon club, grant or renew an approval of the club.

(2) An application for the grant or renewal of an approval of an air weapon club is valid only if it complies with the requirements of any regulations under section 37 which apply to the application.

(3) The chief constable may, at any time by giving notice to an approved air weapon club, withdraw the club’s approval.

(4) Every approval of an air weapon club is subject to any prescribed mandatory conditions.

(5) The chief constable may, when granting or renewing an approval, attach conditions to the approval (and in the case of a renewal, may attach different conditions from those attached to the approval prior to its renewal).

(6) The chief constable may not attach to an approval a condition which is inconsistent with a prescribed mandatory condition which applies to approvals.

19 Variation of approval

(1) The chief constable may, by giving notice in writing to an approved air weapon club—

   (a) vary the club’s approval,

   (b) attach conditions to the club’s approval, or
(c) vary or revoke a condition attached to the club’s approval other than a prescribed mandatory condition which applies to approvals.

(2) The chief constable may give a notice under subsection (1)—
(a) on the application of the approved air weapon club, or
(b) of the chief constable’s own accord (at any time).

(3) The chief constable may not attach to an approval a condition which is inconsistent with a prescribed mandatory condition which applies to approvals.

20 Duration of approval

(1) An approval of an air weapon club expires (unless earlier withdrawn) at the end of the period of 6 years beginning with the date on which the approval is granted or renewed.

(2) Where an approved air weapon club has applied for the renewal of its approval before its expiry but the chief constable has not, as at the date of its expiry, determined whether or not to grant the renewal, the approval is to continue to have effect until the application is determined.

(3) The Scottish Ministers may by regulations amend subsection (1) to specify a different period.

21 Alignment of club approvals

(1) Subsection (2) applies where an air weapon club—
(a) is approved as a rifle club under section 15 of the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1988 (“the 1988 Act”), and
(b) makes an application for the grant or renewal of an approval under section 18(1) of this Act.

(2) Where this subsection applies, the club may request that the chief constable grant or renew its approval under section 18(1) of this Act for such shorter period than is provided for in section 20(1) of this Act as is appropriate to secure that it expires on the same day as the club’s approval under section 15 of the 1988 Act.

(3) Subsection (4) applies where a club—
(a) is an approved air weapon club, and
(b) makes an application for the grant or renewal of an approval as a rifle club under section 15 of the 1988 Act.

(4) Where this subsection applies, the club may make an application under section 18(1) of this Act for the club’s approval to be renewed as from the same day as that on which the club’s application for approval under section 15 of the 1988 Act is granted or renewed.

22 Power to enter and inspect club premises

(1) The chief constable may, for the purposes of ascertaining whether the provisions of this Part or any conditions attached to an approved air weapon club’s approval are being complied with, authorise a constable or a member of police staff—
(a) to enter any club premises of an approved air weapon club, and
(b) to inspect those premises and anything on them which is relevant to the purposes for which the authorisation was granted.

(2) The power of a constable or a member of police staff under subsection (1)(b) to inspect anything on club premises includes power to require any information which is stored in electronic form and accessible from the premises to be produced in a form which is visible and legible.

(3) A constable or a member of police staff may exercise the powers of entry conferred by this section only at a reasonable time, unless it appears to the constable or member of police staff that the purposes of entering the club premises may be frustrated if the constable or member of police staff seeks to enter at a reasonable time.

(4) A constable or a member of police staff must, if asked, produce the authorisation before entering any premises under this section.

(5) The chief constable may delegate the power to grant an authorisation under subsection (1) only to a constable who holds the rank of inspector or above.

(6) It is an offence for a person to obstruct intentionally a constable or a member of police staff in the exercise of the constable’s or member of police staff’s powers under an authorisation granted under this section.

(7) A person who commits an offence under subsection (6) is liable, on summary conviction, to a fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale.

(8) In this section, “club premises”, in relation to an approved air weapon club, means any premises, other than a dwelling, occupied or used by the club.

23 Requirements for recreational shooting facilities

(1) A person who operates a recreational shooting facility must—

(a) hold or (if not an individual) ensure that an individual responsible for the management and operation of the facility holds, an air weapon certificate, and

(b) at all times that the facility is in use, display the certificate (or a copy of it) prominently on the facility so as to be capable of being read by anyone considering whether to use the facility.

(2) It is an offence for a person who operates a recreational shooting facility—

(a) to fail to comply with subsection (1)(a), or

(b) without reasonable excuse, to fail to comply with subsection (1)(b).

(3) A person who commits an offence under subsection (2) is liable, on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 6 months or a fine not exceeding level 5 on the standard scale (or both).

(4) In this section, “recreational shooting facility” means—

(a) a miniature rifle range or a shooting gallery at which air weapons are used, or

(b) a facility for combat games which involve using an air weapon, which is operated with a view to making a profit.

(5) This section does not apply to an approved air weapon club.
Restrictions on transactions involving air weapons

(1) It is an offence for a person other than a registered firearms dealer, by way of trade or business, to—
   (a) manufacture, sell, transfer, repair or test an air weapon,
   (b) expose an air weapon for sale or transfer, or
   (c) possess an air weapon for the purposes of its sale, transfer, repair or testing.

(2) It is an offence for a person (“A”) to sell or transfer an air weapon to another person (“B”) unless—
   (a) B is a registered firearms dealer,
   (b) B holds an air weapon certificate (without a condition attached to it preventing B from purchasing or acquiring an air weapon) and shows it to A,
   (c) A is a registered firearms dealer and is satisfied that—
      (i) in a case where B is an individual, B is aged 18 years or more, and
      (ii) the air weapon is to be delivered to a place outwith Great Britain, or to a registered firearms dealer in England or Wales, without first coming into B’s possession, or
   (d) B provides evidence to A that B is otherwise entitled to purchase or acquire an air weapon without holding an air weapon certificate by virtue of the provisions of this Part.

(3) It is an offence for a person (“A”) to manufacture, repair or test an air weapon for another person (“B”) unless—
   (a) B is a registered firearms dealer,
   (b) B holds an air weapon certificate and shows it to A, or
   (c) B provides evidence to A that B is otherwise entitled to possess an air weapon without holding an air weapon certificate by virtue of the provisions of this Part.

(4) A person who commits an offence under this section is liable—
   (a) on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 12 months or a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum (or both),
   (b) on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 2 years or a fine (or both).

Requirement for commercial sales of air weapons to be in person

(1) This section applies where a person (“the seller”) sells an air weapon by way of trade or business to an individual in Great Britain who is not a registered firearms dealer.

(2) It is an offence for the seller, for the purposes of the sale, to transfer possession of the weapon to the purchaser otherwise than at a time when both the purchaser and the seller (or a representative of the seller) are present in person.

(3) The reference in subsection (2) to a representative of the seller is a reference to—
   (a) a person who is employed by the seller in the seller’s business as a registered firearms dealer,
Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill
Part I—Air weapons

(b) a registered firearms dealer ("A") who has been authorised by the seller to act on the seller’s behalf in relation to the sale, or

c) a person who is employed by A in A’s business as a registered firearms dealer.

(4) A person who commits an offence under this section is liable, on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 12 months or a fine not exceeding level 5 on the standard scale (or both).

Enforcement

27 Power of search with warrant

(1) A sheriff may, on the application of a constable or a member of police staff, grant a warrant to the applicant under this section if satisfied, by evidence on oath, that there is a reasonable ground for suspecting—

(a) that an air weapon offence has been, is being, or is about to be committed, or

(b) that, in connection with an air weapon, there is a danger to the public safety or to the peace.

(2) A warrant under this section may authorise a constable or a member of police staff—

(a) to enter at any time any place named in the warrant, if necessary by force, and to search the place and every person found there,

(b) to seize and detain anything that the constable or member of police staff may find at the place, or on any such person, in respect of which or in connection with which the constable or member of police staff has a reasonable ground for suspecting—

(i) that an air weapon offence has been, is being or is about to be committed, or

(ii) that in connection with an air weapon there is a danger to the public safety or to the peace.

(3) The power of a constable or a member of police staff under subsection (2)(b) to seize and detain anything found at any place, or on any person found there, includes power to require any information which is stored in any electronic form and is accessible from the place or by the person to be produced in a form—

(a) which is visible and legible and can be taken away, or

(b) from which it can be readily produced in a visible and legible form and can be taken away.

(4) It is an offence for an individual to obstruct intentionally a constable or member of police staff in the exercise of the constable’s or member of police staff’s powers under a warrant granted under this section.

(5) An individual who commits an offence under subsection (4) is liable, on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 12 months or a fine not exceeding level 5 on the standard scale (or both).

28 Production of air weapon certificate

(1) A constable may require a person whom the constable believes to be in possession of an air weapon to produce—
Part 1—Air weapons

(a) the person’s air weapon certificate, or
(b) evidence that the person is entitled to possess an air weapon without holding an air weapon certificate by virtue of the provisions of this Act.

(2) Where a person fails to produce the air weapon certificate or evidence required under subsection (1), the constable may—
(a) seize and detain the air weapon, and
(b) require the person to provide (immediately) the person’s name and address.

(3) It is an offence for a person—
(a) to fail to comply with a requirement under subsection (2)(b), or
(b) to provide a false name or address.

(4) A person who commits an offence under subsection (3) is liable, on summary conviction, to a fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale.

29 Cancellation of air weapon certificate

(1) Subsection (2) applies where an individual (“A”) holding an air weapon certificate—
(a) is convicted of—
(i) an air weapon offence,
(ii) an offence under the 1968 Act, or
(iii) an offence for which A is sentenced to imprisonment or to detention in a young offenders’ institution,
(b) has been ordered to keep the peace or to be of good behaviour and, as a condition of that, is not to possess, carry or use an air weapon or other firearm,
(c) is subject to a community payback order under section 227A of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 which contains a requirement not to possess, carry or use an air weapon or other firearm, or
(d) has been ordained to find caution and as a condition of that, is not to possess, carry or use an air weapon or other firearm.

(2) Where this subsection applies, the court by or before which A is convicted, or which imposes the condition or requirement, may cancel the air weapon certificate held by A.

(3) Where the court cancels an air weapon certificate under this section—
(a) the court must notify the chief constable of the cancellation, and
(b) the chief constable must, by notice given to A, require A to surrender A’s air weapon certificate within the period of 21 days beginning with the date the notice is given.

(4) It is an offence for an individual, without reasonable excuse, to fail to comply with the requirements of a notice under subsection (3)(b).

(5) An individual who commits an offence under subsection (4) is liable, on summary conviction, to a fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale.

30 Forfeiture and disposal of air weapons

(1) Subsection (2) applies where a person (“A”) is convicted of an air weapon offence.
(2) Where this subsection applies, the court by or before which A is convicted may make such order as to the forfeiture or disposal of any air weapon found in A’s possession as the court thinks fit.

(3) A constable may seize and detain an air weapon which may be the subject of an order for forfeiture under this section or which, but for subsection (5), could be the subject of such an order.

(4) A sheriff may, on an application of the chief constable, order the disposal (by any means the chief constable thinks fit) of any air weapon seized and detained by a constable under this Part.

(5) No order is to be made under subsection (2) or (4) for the forfeiture or disposal of an air weapon which is possessed for the purposes of a museum.

(6) Subsection (7) applies where—

(a) an air weapon is surrendered in pursuance of—

(i) a notice given under section 11(3) which revokes an individual’s air weapon certificate, or

(ii) a notice given under section 16(1) which revokes an individual’s police permit or visitor permit, and

(b) the individual appeals against the decision to revoke the individual’s air weapon certificate, police permit or, as the case may be, visitor permit (and does not withdraw that appeal prior to its determination).

(7) Where this subsection applies—

(a) if the appeal is successful, the air weapon must be returned,

(b) if the appeal is dismissed, the sheriff may make such order for the disposal of the air weapon as the sheriff considers appropriate.

(8) Subsection (9) applies where—

(a) an air weapon is surrendered in pursuance of—

(i) a notice given under section 11(3) which revokes an individual’s air weapon certificate, or

(ii) a notice given under section 16(1) which revokes an individual’s police
permit or visitor permit, and

(b) the individual—

(i) does not appeal against the decision to revoke the individual’s air weapon certificate, police permit or, as the case may be, visitor permit, or

(ii) makes and subsequently withdraws an appeal against such a decision.

(9) Where this subsection applies, the air weapon is to be disposed of—

(a) in such manner as the chief constable and the owner of the weapon may agree, or

(b) in default of such agreement, in such manner as the chief constable may decide.

(10) Where the chief constable decides to dispose of an air weapon under subsection (9)(b), the chief constable must give the owner notice of the decision.
Offences

31 Failure to keep air weapons secure or to report loss to police

(1) It is an offence for a person—
   (a) to fail to take reasonable precautions for the safe custody of an air weapon possessed by the person, or
   (b) to fail to report as soon as reasonably practicable to the chief constable the loss or theft of an air weapon possessed by the person.

(2) A person who commits an offence under subsection (1) is liable, on summary conviction, to a fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale.

32 False statements, certificates and permits

(1) It is an offence for an individual to knowingly or recklessly make any statement which is false in any material particular for the purposes of procuring (either personally or for another person)—
   (a) the grant, renewal or variation of an air weapon certificate,
   (b) the grant or variation of a police or visitor permit,
   (c) the grant of an event permit, or
   (d) the grant, renewal or variation of an approval of an air weapon club.

(2) It is an offence for an individual, with a view to purchasing, acquiring or procuring the repair or testing of an air weapon—
   (a) to produce a false air weapon certificate, police permit or visitor permit,
   (b) to produce an air weapon certificate, police permit or visitor permit which has been improperly altered, or
   (c) to knowingly or recklessly make a statement which is false in a material particular.

(3) An individual who commits an offence under this section is liable, on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 12 months or a fine not exceeding level 5 on the standard scale (or both).

33 Time limit for offences

Section 136 of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 (time limit for certain offences) applies to an air weapon offence which is triable only summarily as if the references in subsection (1) of that section to 6 months were to 36 months (and subsection (2) of that section were omitted).

34 Offences by bodies corporate etc.

(1) Subsection (2) applies where—
   (a) an offence under this Part has been committed by—
      (i) a body corporate,
      (ii) a Scottish partnership, or
      (iii) an unincorporated association other than a Scottish partnership, and
(b) it is proved that the offence was committed with the consent or connivance of, or was attributable to neglect on the part of—

(i) a relevant individual, or

(ii) an individual purporting to act in the capacity of a relevant individual.

(2) The individual (as well as the body corporate, partnership or (as the case may be) association) commits the offence and is liable to be proceeded against and punished accordingly.

(3) In subsection (1), “relevant individual” means—

(a) in relation to a body corporate (other than a limited liability partnership)—

(i) a director, manager, secretary or similar officer of the body,

(ii) where the affairs of the body are managed by its members, a member,

(b) in relation to a limited liability partnership, a member,

(c) in relation to a Scottish partnership, a partner,

(d) in relation to an unincorporated association other than a Scottish partnership, an individual who is concerned in the management or control of the association.

General

35 Appeals

(1) A person aggrieved by a decision of the chief constable under a section listed in subsection (2) may appeal against the decision to the appropriate sheriff.

(2) The sections are—

(a) section 5(1) (grant or renewal of air weapon certificate),

(b) section 6(2) (air weapon certificates: conditions),

(c) section 7(3)(b) (special requirements and conditions for young person’s air weapon certificate),

(d) section 10(1) (variation of air weapon certificate),

(e) section 11(1)(a) or (2) (revocation of air weapon certificate),

(f) section 12(1) (police permits),

(g) section 13(1) or (6) (visitor permits),

(h) section 14(3)(b) or (4)(b) (visitor permits: young persons),

(i) section 15(2) (police and visitor permits: conditions),

(j) section 16(1) (police and visitor permits: variation and revocation),

(k) section 17(1) or (2) (event permits),

(l) section 18(1), (3) or (5) (approval of air weapon clubs),

(m) section 19(1) (variation of approval for air weapon club),

(n) section 30(9)(b) (forfeiture and disposal of air weapons).

(3) An appeal must be made within the period of 21 days beginning with the date on which the decision appealed against was made.
(4) An appeal under this section is to be determined on the merits (and not by way of review).

(5) The sheriff hearing the appeal may consider any evidence or other matter, whether or not it was available at the time the chief constable made the decision appealed against.

(6) On determining the appeal, the sheriff may—
   (a) dismiss the appeal,
   (b) give the chief constable such direction as the sheriff considers appropriate as respects the matter which is the subject of the appeal.

(7) The decision of the sheriff may be appealed against only on a point of law.

(8) In this section, “the appropriate sheriff” means—
   (a) in a case where the appellant resides in Scotland, a sheriff of the sheriffdom in which the appellant resides, or
   (b) in a case where the appellant resides outwith Scotland, a sheriff of the sheriffdom of Lothian and Borders, sitting at Edinburgh.

36 Fees

(1) The Scottish Ministers may by regulations make provision for the charging of fees by the chief constable—
   (a) in respect of applications under this Part, and
   (b) otherwise in respect of the performance of functions by the chief constable under this Part.

(2) Regulations under subsection (1) may—
   (a) specify different fees for different circumstances,
   (b) specify circumstances in which no fee is payable,
   (c) provide for fees to be determined by reference to such factors (including the value of money) as may be specified in the regulations.

(3) Where regulations under subsection (1) provide for a fee to be charged in respect of an application under this Part, the application is valid only when the fee is paid.

(4) Nothing in this section limits the generality of section 75.

37 Power to make further provision

(1) The Scottish Ministers may by regulations make further provision for the purposes of this Part.

(2) Without limiting that generality (or the generality of section 75), regulations under subsection (1) may—
   (a) make provision about the application processes under this Part (for example, prescribing the form and content of applications, any required supporting documentation or making further provision about the verification of applications),
   (b) make provision in relation to air weapon certificates, police permits, visitor permits, event permits and approvals of air weapon clubs (for example, prescribing their form and content or the conditions which may or must be attached to them).
37A Crown application

(1) No contravention of any provision made by or under this Part makes the Crown criminally liable.

(2) But the Court of Session may, on the application of the Scottish Ministers, the chief constable or any other public body or office-holder having responsibility for enforcing the provision, declare unlawful any act or omission of the Crown which constitutes such a contravention.

(3) Despite subsection (1), any provision made by or under this Part applies to a person in the public service of the Crown as it applies to other persons.

38 Transitional arrangements for existing certificate holders

(1) This section applies where, on the day on which section 2(1) comes into force, a person aged 14 years or more holds a firearm certificate or a shotgun certificate (“the existing certificate”).

(2) It is not an offence under section 2(1) for the person to use and possess an air weapon without holding an air weapon certificate for the duration of the transitional period.

(3) The person must, in relation to such use or possession, comply with—

(a) any prescribed mandatory conditions which apply to the use and possession of air weapons, and

(b) if the person is under the age of 18, the conditions mentioned in section 7(5).

(4) A person who fails to comply with a condition mentioned in subsection (3) commits an offence.

(5) But it is not an offence under subsection (4) for a person to fail to comply with a condition mentioned in subsection (3) if—

(a) the person is entitled to use or possess an air weapon by virtue of an exemption under schedule 1, and

(b) the failure relates to the use or possession of an air weapon in accordance with the exemption.

(6) A person who commits an offence under subsection (4) is liable, on summary conviction, to a fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale.

(7) In this section, the “transitional period” means, in relation to an existing certificate, the period—

(a) beginning with the day on which section 2(1) comes into force, and

(b) ending with (the earlier of)—

(i) the day on which the existing certificate is, or falls to be, renewed, or

(ii) the day on which the existing certificate is surrendered, cancelled or revoked.

(8) For the purposes of subsection (7)(b)(i), where a person holds both a firearm certificate and a shotgun certificate, the existing certificate is the certificate which is, or which falls to be, renewed later.

(9) For the purposes of subsection (7)(b)(ii), where a person holds both a firearm certificate and a shotgun certificate—
(a) the surrender of one of the certificates does not end the transitional period, but
(b) the cancellation or revocation of either certificate ends the transitional period.

(10) For the purposes of paragraph 16 of schedule 1, this section is to be treated as if it were an exemption under that schedule.

39 Guidance

(1) The chief constable must, in exercising any function under this Part, have regard to any guidance issued by the Scottish Ministers.

(2) The Scottish Ministers must publish any guidance they issue for the purposes of this Part.

(3) The Scottish Ministers may revise and revoke such guidance.

48A Transfer of premises licences

(1) The 2005 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In section 33 (transfer of premises licence on application of licence holder)—

   (a) for subsections (1) to (3) substitute—
“(1) Any person, other than an individual under the age of 18, may apply to the appropriate Licensing Board for the transfer of a premises licence to the person (such person being referred to in this section and section 33A as the “transferee”).

(1A) An application under subsection (1) must—

(a) specify the date on which the transfer is to take effect, and

(b) be accompanied by—

(ii) a written statement signed by the holder of the premises licence consenting to its transfer to the transferee (a “consent statement”) or, if that is not practicable, a statement of the reasons for failure to obtain the licence holder’s written consent.”,

(b) in subsection (4), after “constable” insert “, unless the Board must refuse the application under subsection (8A)”,

(c) in subsection (8), before paragraph (a) insert—

“(za) the application is accompanied by a consent statement referred to in subsection (1A)(b)(ii),”,

(d) after subsection (8) insert—

“(8A) If the application is not accompanied by a consent statement referred to in subsection (1A)(b)(ii), the Board must refuse the application, unless the Board dispenses with the requirement for a consent statement under section 33A(4).”.

(3) The title of section 33 becomes “Application for transfer of premises licence”.

(4) After section 33 insert—

“33A Application for transfer: further provision

(1) This section applies where a Licensing Board receives an application under section 33(1) for the transfer of a premises licence.

(2) The Board must take all reasonable steps to give notice of the application to the premises licence holder.

(3) Subsection (4) applies where the application is not accompanied by a consent statement referred to in section 33(1A)(b)(ii).

(4) The Board may dispense with the requirement for a consent statement if satisfied that the transferee has taken all reasonable steps to contact the premises licence holder in order to obtain consent but has received no response.

(5) Where the Board decides under subsection (4) not to dispense with the requirement for a consent statement, the Board must give notice of the decision, and of the reasons for it, to the transferee.

(6) Where the Board decides under subsection (4) to dispense with the requirement for a consent statement the Board must hold a hearing under section 33(9) for the purpose of considering and determining the application.”
(7) Where the Board grants the application, the transfer of the licence takes effect—

(a) on the date specified in the application in accordance with section 33(1A)(a), or

(b) where the Board grants the application after that date, on such date as the Board may determine.”.

(5) Section 34 (transfer on application of person other than licence holder) is repealed.

(6) In Part 1 of schedule 5 (appeals to the sheriff principal)—

(a) in column 1 of the entry relating to a decision to refuse an application under section 33(1) or 34(1) for transfer of a premises licence, the words “or 34(1)” are repealed,

(b) in column 2 of that entry, after “applicant” insert “or the premises licence holder”,

(c) after that entry insert—

“A decision to grant an application under section 33(1) for transfer of a premises licence

The person from whom the premises licence is to be transferred

A decision under section 33A(4), in relation to an application under section 33(1) for transfer of a premises licence, not to dispense with the requirement for a consent statement

The applicant”

58 Processing and deemed grant of applications

5 (1) The 2005 Act is amended as follows.

(2) After section 134 insert—

“134ZA Duty to acknowledge applications

(1) This section applies where a Licensing Board receive a relevant application.

(2) In a case where the Licensing Board are satisfied that the application meets the prescribed requirements they must, unless subsection (3) applies, give an acknowledgement to the applicant—

(a) confirming that they are satisfied that the application meets the prescribed requirements,

(b) listing any documents received in support of the application and the date or dates on which the documents were received by them, and

(c) informing the applicant about the period for determining the application under section 134ZB.

(3) This subsection applies where the Licensing Board consider it appropriate to determine the application on its merits without first giving an acknowledgement to the applicant.

(4) In a case where the Licensing Board are not satisfied that the application meets the prescribed requirements, they must give a notice to the applicant—

(a) indicating that they are treating the application as incomplete and not having been made, and

(b) stating their reasons for treating the application in that way.

(5) Subsection (4) does not prevent an applicant from submitting further information in support of the application if that is otherwise competent.

(6) A Licensing Board must give an acknowledgement under subsection (2) or give a notice under subsection (4) as soon as is practicable.

(7) For the purposes of this section, “prescribed requirements”, in relation to a relevant application, means the requirements (as to form, content, etc.) which are imposed by or under this Act or any other enactment in respect of the type of relevant application in question.

(8) In this section, a “relevant application” is—

(a) a premises licence application,

(b) a premises licence variation application,

(c) an application under section 33(1) to transfer a premises licence,

(d) an application under section 35(1) for variation of a premises licence on transfer,

(g) an application under section 47(2) for a temporary premises licence,

(h) an occasional licence application,

(i) an extended hours application,

(j) a personal licence application,

(k) a personal licence renewal application.

134ZB Period for determination of applications

(1) A Licensing Board must determine every relevant application which meets the prescribed requirements (including an application mentioned in subsection (2)) before the end of the period of 9 months beginning with (the later of)—

(a) the date on which the Licensing Board received the application, or

(b) where the application did not initially meet the prescribed requirements, the date on which the application met the prescribed requirements.

(2) Where a Licensing Board consider it appropriate to determine a relevant application without first giving an acknowledgement under section 134ZA(2), they must determine the application as soon as is practicable.

(3) A sheriff of the appropriate sheriffdom may, on an application by a Licensing Board in relation to a relevant application, extend the period for determining the application under subsection (1).

(4) The sheriff may extend the period only if—

(a) it appears to the sheriff that there is a good reason to do so, and

(b) no previous extension has been granted in relation to the relevant application.

(5) The applicant in relation to a relevant application is entitled to be a party to proceedings on an application to a sheriff under subsection (3).

(6) In this section—

“prescribed requirements” has the same meaning as in section 134ZA,

“relevant application” has the same meaning as in section 134ZA.

134ZC Deemed grant of applications

(1) Subsection (2) applies where a Licensing Board have failed to determine a relevant application before the expiry of the determination period.

(2) Where this subsection applies—

(a) the application is deemed to have been granted on the date on which the determination period expired, and

(b) the deemed grant of the application has the same effect, for the purposes of this Act, as if the application had been granted by the Licensing Board.
A Licensing Board may not impose any conditions (other than those which they must impose under this Act) in respect of an application which is deemed to have been granted under subsection (2).

(4) Subsection (5) applies in relation to an application—

(a) that is deemed to have been granted under subsection (2), and

(b) in respect of which the Licensing Board must, on granting such an application, determine the period during which the thing applied for is to have effect.

(5) The thing applied for is to have effect for the duration of the period stated in the application (subject to any limits imposed by this Act).

(6) In this section—

“determination period” means, in relation to a relevant application, the period for determining the application under section 134ZB(1) including (if applicable) any extension to that period granted under subsection (3) of that section,

“prescribed requirements” has the same meaning as in section 134ZA,

“relevant application” has the same meaning as in section 134ZA.”.

(1) The 1982 Act is amended as follows.
(2) Sections 30 (keeping of records) and 33 (receipts and invoices: itinerant metal dealers) are repealed.
(3) After section 33A (as inserted by section 65 of this Act), insert—
“33B  Requirement to keep records

(1) This section applies where a metal dealer or an itinerant metal dealer (“the dealer”), in the course of the dealer’s business—

(a) acquires any metal (whether or not for value), or

(b) processes or disposes of any metal (by any means).

(2) In respect of any metal acquired, the dealer must record the following information—

(a) the description and weight of the metal,

(b) the date and time of the acquisition of the metal,

(c) if the metal is acquired from another person—

(i) the name and address of the person,

(ii) the means by which the person’s name and address was verified,

(d) the price, if any, payable in respect of the acquisition of the metal, if that price has been ascertained at the time when the entry in the record relating to that metal is to be made,

(e) the method of payment of the price (if applicable),

(f) where no price is payable for the metal, the value of the metal at the time when the entry is to be made as estimated by the dealer,

(g) in the case of metal delivered to the dealer by means of a vehicle, the registration mark (within the meaning of section 23 of the Vehicle Excise and Registration Act 1994) borne by the vehicle.

(3) Where the dealer has paid for metal, the dealer must keep a copy of—

(a) the cheque, or

(b) the document evidencing the electronic transfer of funds.

(4) In respect of any metal processed or disposed of, the dealer must record the following information—

(a) the description and weight of the metal immediately before its processing or disposal,

(c) in the case of metal which is processed, the process applied,

(d) in the case of metal disposed of by sale or exchange—

(i) the consideration for which it is sold or exchanged,

(ii) the name and address of the person to whom the metal is sold or with whom it is exchanged, and

(iii) the means by which the person’s name and address was verified,

(e) in the case of metal disposed of otherwise than by sale or exchange, its value immediately before its disposal as estimated by the dealer.

(5) The dealer must—

(a) keep separate records in relation to—

(i) metal acquired, and
Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill
Part 3—Civic licensing

(ii) metal processed or disposed of,
(b) record the information immediately after the metal is acquired, processed or disposed of,
(c) keep a copy of any document produced by a person to verify that person’s name or address, and
(d) retain information recorded or documents kept under this section for a period of not less than 3 years beginning with the date on which the information was recorded or document obtained.

(6) The Scottish Ministers may by regulations—
(a) specify the means by which a person’s name and address may be verified for the purposes of this section,
(b) require further information to be recorded about any metal acquired, processed or disposed of by metal dealers or itinerant metal dealers.

(7) Regulations under subsection (6)—
(a) may make different provision for different purposes, and
(b) are subject to the negative procedure.

33C Form of records

(1) A metal dealer or an itinerant metal dealer (“a dealer”) must record the required information—
(a) in books with serially numbered pages, or
(b) by means of a device for storing and processing information.

(2) Where a dealer records the required information in books, the dealer must use separate books for recording the required information about—
(a) metal acquired, and
(b) metal processed or disposed of.

(3) Where a dealer uses a device for storing and processing information, the dealer must, by means of the device or otherwise, keep details of all modifications made in the records kept by the device.

(4) Where a dealer is required to keep a copy of a document under section 33B, it is sufficient for the dealer—
(a) to keep an electronic copy of the document, and
(b) in relation to a document verifying a person’s name or address, keep only one copy of the document.

(5) In this section, “required information” means the information about metal acquired, processed or disposed of that a dealer is required to record under or by virtue of section 33B(2), (4) or (6).

33D Metal dealer to keep records for each place of business

(1) A metal dealer must keep separate records of the required information in relation to—
(a) each place of business operated by the dealer, and

(b) any metal acquired, processed or disposed of otherwise than at such a place of business.

(2) Where a metal dealer records the required information in books, the dealer must not, at any time at a place of business, use more than—

(a) one book for recording the required information about metal acquired, and

(b) one book for recording the required information about metal processed or disposed of.

(3) In this section—

“place of business” means a place of business operated by a metal dealer in the ordinary course of that dealer’s business as a metal dealer,

“required information” means the information about metal acquired, processed or disposed of that a dealer is required to record under or by virtue of section 33B(2), (4) or (6).”.

(4) In section 34 (offences relating to metal dealing)—

(a) after subsection (2) insert—

“(2A) Any metal dealer or itinerant metal dealer who fails to comply with a requirement of section 33B, 33C or 33D commits an offence and is liable, on summary conviction, to a fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale.”;

(b) in subsection (3), for the words from “furnishes” to “keep” substitute “produces any information or document which the dealer is required to record or keep under section 33B which is false or misleading in a material particular”.

66A Register of dealers in metal

After section 35 of the 1982 Act, insert—

“35A Register of metal dealers and itinerant metal dealers

(1) The Scottish Ministers may by regulations make provision for and about the establishment, keeping and maintaining of a register of metal dealers and itinerant metal dealers.

(2) Regulations under subsection (1) may, in particular, make provision—

(a) about who is to keep and maintain the register,

(b) requiring the provision of information to the person who keeps the register,

(c) specifying the information to be included in the register in relation to each person who holds a licence as a metal dealer or itinerant metal dealer,

(d) about the form and publication of the register,

(e) for the charging of fees in such circumstances as may be specified in the regulations.

(3) Regulations under subsection (1) may—
(a) make incidental, supplementary, consequential, transitional, transitory or saving provision,
(b) modify this or any other enactment.

(4) Regulations under subsection (1) which contain provision which adds to, replaces, or omits any part of an Act are subject to the affirmative procedure.

(5) Otherwise, regulations under subsection (1) are subject to the negative procedure.”.

66B Interpretation of provisions relating to metal dealers etc.

(1) Section 37 of the 1982 Act (interpretation of sections 28 to 36) is amended as follows.

(2) In subsection (1), for the definition of “itinerant metal dealer” substitute—

““itinerant metal dealer” means a person who—
(a) carries on a business which consists wholly or substantially of buying or selling for scrap—

(3) For the purposes of that definition—

“audience” includes an audience of one,

“financial gain” includes financial gain arising directly or indirectly from the provision of the sexual entertainment,

“organiser”, in relation to the provision of sexual entertainment in premises, means—

(a) the person (“A”) who is responsible for—

(i) the management of the premises, or

(ii) the organisation or management of the sexual entertainment, or

(b) where A exercises that responsibility on behalf of another person (whether by virtue of a contract of employment or otherwise), that other person,

“premises” includes any vehicle, vessel or stall but does not include any private dwelling to which the public is not admitted,

“sexual entertainment” means—

(a) any live performance, or

(b) any live display of nudity, which is of such a nature that, ignoring financial gain, it must reasonably be assumed to be provided solely or principally for the purpose of sexually stimulating any member of the audience (whether by verbal or other means).

(4) For the purposes of the definition of “sexual entertainment”, “display of nudity” means—

(a) in the case of a woman, the showing of (to any extent and by any means) her nipples, pubic area, genitals or anus,

(b) in the case of a man, the showing of (to any extent and by any means) his pubic area, genitals or anus.

(5) Sexual entertainment is provided if (and only if) it is provided (or allowed to be provided) by or on behalf of the organiser.

(6) References in Schedule 2 (as modified for the purposes of section 45B) to the use of any premises by a person as a sexual entertainment venue are to be read as references to their use by the organiser.

(7) The following are not sexual entertainment venues—

(a) a sex shop (within the meaning of paragraph 2(1) of Schedule 2),

(b) such other premises as the Scottish Ministers may by order specify.

(8) An order under subsection (7)(b) may make different provision for different purposes.

(9) Premises at which sexual entertainment is provided as mentioned in subsection
(2) on a particular occasion (“the current occasion”) are not to be treated as a sexual entertainment venue if sexual entertainment has not been provided on more than 3 previous occasions which fall wholly or partly within the period of 12 months ending with the start of the current occasion.

(10) For the purposes of subsection (9)—

(a) each continuous period during which sexual entertainment is provided on the premises is to be treated as a separate occasion, and

(b) where the period during which sexual entertainment is provided on the premises exceeds 24 hours, each period of 24 hours (and any part of a period of 24 hours) is to be treated as a separate occasion.

(11) The Scottish Ministers may by order provide for—

(a) descriptions of performances, or

(b) descriptions of displays of nudity, which are not to be treated as sexual entertainment for the purposes of this section.

(12) An order under subsection (7)(b) or (11) is subject to the negative procedure.

45B Licensing of sexual entertainment venues

(1) A local authority may resolve that Schedule 2 (as modified for the purposes of this section) is to have effect in their area in relation to sexual entertainment venues.
(2) If a local authority passes a resolution under subsection (1), Schedule 2 (as so modified) has effect in their area from the day specified in the resolution.

(3) The day mentioned in subsection (2) must not be before the expiry of the period of one year beginning with the day on which the resolution is passed.

(4) A local authority must, not later than 28 days before the day mentioned in subsection (2), publish notice that they have passed a resolution under this section.

(5) The notice must—

(a) state the general effect of Schedule 2 (as modified for the purposes of this section), and

(b) be published electronically or in a newspaper circulating in the local authority’s area.

(6) For the purposes of this section, paragraphs 1 and 3 to 25 of Schedule 2 apply with the following modifications—

(a) references to a sex shop are to be read as references to a sexual entertainment venue,

(b) references to the use by a person of premises, vehicles, vessels or stalls as a sexual entertainment venue are to be read as references to their use by the organiser,

(c) in paragraph 1—

(i) in sub-paragraph (b)—

(A) the word “or immediately following paragraph (i) is omitted,

(B) paragraph (ii) is omitted, and

(ii) sub-paragraph (c) is omitted,

(d) in paragraph 7—

(i) in sub-paragraph (2), at the beginning insert “Subject to sub-paragraph (3A),”, and

(ii) after sub-paragraph (3) insert—

“(3A)If a local authority consider it appropriate to do so in relation to an application, the local authority may dispense with the requirement to publish an advertisement under sub-paragraph (2) and may instead publish notice of the application electronically.

(3B)Publication under sub-paragraph (3A) must be not later than 7 days after the date of the application.”,

(e) in paragraph 9—

(i) in sub-paragraph (5)(c)—

(A) after the word “in” insert “the local authority’s area or”,

(B) after the word “for” insert “their area or”,

(ii) after sub-paragraph (5) insert—

“(5A)For the purposes of sub-paragraph (5)(c), a local authority must—
(a) from time to time determine the appropriate number of sexual entertainment venues for their area and for each relevant locality, and

(b) publicise the determination in such manner as they consider appropriate.”,

(iii) after sub-paragraph (6) insert—

“(6A) A local authority may refuse an application for the grant or renewal of a licence despite the fact that a premises licence under Part 3 of the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 is in effect in relation to the premises, vehicle, vessel or stall to which the application relates.”,

(f) in paragraph 12(2)(b), for “shorter” substitute “other”,

(g) in paragraph 19, after sub-paragraph (1) insert—

“(1A) But it is not an offence—

(a) under sub-paragraph (1)(b) for the holder of a licence for a sexual entertainment venue to employ a person under the age of 18 in the business of the sexual entertainment venue if the employee’s duties do not involve the employee being in the sexual entertainment venue at a time when sexual entertainment is being provided, or

(b) under sub-paragraph (1)(e) for the holder of a licence for a sexual entertainment venue, or the servant, employee or agent of such a person, to permit an employee under the age of 18 to enter the sexual entertainment venue at times when sexual entertainment is not being provided.”, and

(h) in paragraph 25, in each of sub-paragraphs (1)(a) and (2), for “45” substitute “45B”.

(7) In carrying out functions conferred by virtue of this section, a local authority must have regard to any guidance issued by the Scottish Ministers.”.

(4) The title of Part 3 becomes “Control of sex shops and sexual entertainment venues”.

Miscellaneous and general

69 Deemed grant of applications

(1) The 1982 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In section 3 (discharge of functions of licensing authorities)—

(a) in subsection (1), for the words from “shall” to the end substitute “must—

(a) consider each relevant application made to them within the period of 3 months beginning with the date on which the application was made, and

(b) subject to the following provisions of this section, reach a final decision on the application within the period of 6 months beginning with the end of the 3 month period referred to in paragraph (a).”,

(b) in subsection (4)—

(i) the words “applied for” are repealed,
(ii) for “or, as the case may be, renewed” substitute “, renewed or, as the case may be, varied”,

(iii) the words from “and” where first occurring to the end are repealed,

(c) after subsection (4) insert—

“(4A) A licence deemed to have been granted or renewed under subsection (4) is—

(a) in the case of a temporary licence, to remain in force for the duration of the period sought in the application (up to a maximum period of 6 weeks), or

(b) in any other case, to remain in force for the period of one year.

(4B) A variation of the terms of a licence deemed to have been granted under subsection (4) is to have effect for the remaining period of the licence.

(4C) Subsections (4) and (4B) do not affect—

(a) the powers of revocation under section 7(6)(a),

(b) paragraph 8(5) of Schedule 1 (which relates to renewals of existing licences),

(c) the powers of variation under paragraph 10 of that Schedule, or

(d) the powers of suspension and revocation under paragraphs 11 and 12 of that Schedule.”,

(d) for subsection (5) substitute—

“(5A) The deemed grant, renewal or variation of the terms of a licence under subsection (4) is, for the purposes of Schedule 1, to be treated as a decision of the licensing authority to grant, renew or vary the terms of a licence.

(5B) For the purposes of this section, a “relevant application” is an application under paragraph 1, 7 or 10 of Schedule 1.”.

(3) After section 45B (as inserted by section 68 of this Act) insert—

“45C Deemed grant of applications

(1) For the purpose of the discharge of their functions under this Part, every local authority must—

(a) consider each relevant application made to them within the period of 3 months beginning with the date on which the application was made, and

(b) subject to the following provisions of this section, reach a final decision on the application within the period of 6 months beginning with the end of the 3 month period referred to in paragraph (a).

(2) On an application by the local authority within the 6 month period referred to in subsection (1)(b), the sheriff may, if it appears that there is a good reason to do so, extend that period as the sheriff thinks fit.

(3) The applicant is entitled to be a party to proceedings on an application under subsection (2).

(4) Where the local authority have failed to reach a final decision on the application before the expiry of—

(a) the 6 month period referred to in subsection (1)(b), or
(b) such further period as the sheriff may have specified on application under subsection (2),
the licence is deemed to have been granted, renewed or, as the case may be, varied on the date of such expiry.

(5) A licence deemed to have been granted or renewed under subsection (4) is to remain in force for the period of one year.

(6) A deemed variation of the terms of a licence deemed under subsection (4) is to have effect for the remaining period of the licence.

(7) Subsections (4) and (6) do not affect—

(a) the powers of revocation under paragraph 13 of Schedule 2, and

(b) the powers of variation under paragraph 15 of that Schedule.

(8) The deemed grant, renewal or variation of the terms of a licence under subsection (4) has the same effect, for the purposes of Schedule 2, as a decision of the licensing authority to grant, renew or vary the terms of a licence.

(9) For the purposes of this section, a “relevant application” is an application under paragraph 6 or 15 of Schedule 2.”.

(4) In Schedule 1 (licensing: further provisions as to the general system), in paragraph 10, after sub-paragraph (5) insert—

“(6) Sub-paragraph (5) does not apply to a deemed variation of the terms of a licence under section 3(4).”.

(5) In Schedule 2 (control of sex shops and sexual entertainment venues), in paragraph 15, after sub-paragraph (4) insert—

“(4A) Sub-paragraph (4) does not apply to a deemed variation of the terms of a licence under section 45C(4).”.

69A Revocation of Part 2 licences

(1) The 1982 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In section 5 (rights of entry and inspection), in subsection (2)(a)(ii), after “suspended” insert “or revoked”.

(3) In Schedule 1 (licensing: further provisions as to the general system)—

(a) the italic heading preceding paragraph 10 becomes “Variation, suspension and revocation of licences”,

(b) in paragraph 11—

(i) in sub-paragraph (1), after “suspend” insert “or revoke”,

(ii) in sub-paragraph (2), after “suspension” insert “or revocation”,

(iii) in sub-paragraph (4), after “suspend” insert “or revoke”,

(iv) in sub-paragraph (6), after “order” insert “to suspend a licence”,

(v) in sub-paragraph (7), after “suspend” insert “or revoke”,

(vi) in sub-paragraph (8), after “suspension” insert “or revocation”,

(vii) in sub-paragraph (9)—
(A) after “suspension” where first occurring insert “or revocation”,

(B) after each subsequent occurrence of “suspension” insert “or, as the case may be, revocation”,

(viii) in sub-paragraph (10), after “suspension” where first occurring insert “or revocation”,

(c) in paragraph 12(5)(b), after “suspend” insert “or revoke”,

(d) in paragraph 13—

(ii) in sub-paragraph (3), after “suspending” insert “or revoking”,

(e) in paragraph 14(2)(b), after “terms,” insert “revocation”,

“(ai) to revoke a licence or to refuse to do so,”.

(g) in paragraph 18(10)—

(i) after “suspension” where first occurring insert “or revocation”,

(ii) the words “above that the suspension be immediate” are repealed.

70 Procedure for hearings

(1) The 1982 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In Schedule 1 (licensing: further provisions as to the general system), after paragraph 18 insert—

“Power to make provision about hearings

18A(1) The Scottish Ministers may by regulations make provision as to the procedure to be followed at, or in connection with, any hearing to be held by a licensing authority under this Schedule.

(2) Regulations under this paragraph may, in particular, make provision—

(a) for notice of the hearing to be given to such persons as may be prescribed in the regulations,

(b) about the rules of evidence which are to apply for the purposes of the hearing,

(c) about the representation of any party at the hearing,

(d) as to the times by which any step in the procedure must be taken, and

(e) as to liability for expenses.

(3) Regulations under this paragraph may make different provision for different purposes including, in particular, different types of licence.

(4) Regulations under this paragraph are subject to the negative procedure.”.

(3) In Schedule 2 (control of sex shops and sexual entertainment venues), after paragraph 24 insert—
24A(1) The Scottish Ministers may by regulations make provision as to the procedure to be followed at, or in connection with, any hearing to be held by a local authority under this Schedule.

(2) Regulations under this paragraph may, in particular, make provision—

(a) for notice of the hearing to be given to such persons as may be prescribed in the regulations,

(b) about the rules of evidence which are to apply for the purposes of the hearing,

(c) about the representation of any party at the hearing,

(d) as to the times by which any step in the procedure must be taken, and

(e) as to liability for expenses.

(3) Regulations under this paragraph may make different provision for different purposes, including, in particular, different types of licence.

(4) Regulations under this paragraph are subject to the negative procedure.”.

71 Conditions for Part 3 licences

(1) The 1982 Act is amended as follows.

(2) After section 45C (as inserted by section 69) insert—

“Conditions of licences granted under this Part

45D Mandatory licence conditions

(1) The Scottish Ministers may by order prescribe conditions to which licences granted by local authorities under this Part are to be subject.

(2) Different conditions may be prescribed under subsection (1)—

(a) in respect of different licences or different types of licence,

(b) otherwise for different purposes, circumstances or cases.

(3) An order under subsection (1) is subject to the affirmative procedure.

(4) Subsection (1) does not affect any other power of the Scottish Ministers under this Act or any other enactment to prescribe conditions—

(a) to which licences granted by local authorities under this Part are to be subject, or

(b) to be imposed by local authorities in granting or renewing licences under this Part.

(5) The following conditions are referred to in this Part as “mandatory conditions”—

(a) conditions prescribed under subsection (1),

(b) conditions prescribed under any power referred to in subsection (4), and

(c) conditions imposed, or required to be imposed, by any provision of this Part.
(6) In this section and section 45E, references to licences granted by local authorities include references to—

(a) licences renewed by local authorities, and

(b) licences deemed by virtue of section 45C to have been granted or renewed by local authorities.

45E Standard licence conditions

(1) A local authority may determine conditions to which licences granted by them under this Part are to be subject.

(2) Conditions determined under subsection (1) are referred to in this Part as “standard conditions”.

(3) Different conditions may be determined under subsection (1)—

(a) in respect of different licences or different types of licence,

(b) otherwise for different purposes, circumstances or cases.

(4) A local authority must publish, in such manner as they think appropriate, any standard conditions determined by them.

(5) Standard conditions have no effect—

(a) unless they are published, and

(b) so far as they are inconsistent with any mandatory conditions.

(6) Subsection (1) is subject to paragraph 9(1A) of Schedule 2.”.

(3) In paragraph 9 of Schedule 2 (disposal of applications for licences)—

(a) in sub-paragraph (1)—

(i) in paragraph (a), the word “unconditionally” is repealed,

(ii) paragraph (b) is repealed,

(b) after sub-paragraph (1) insert—

“(1A) In granting or renewing a licence under sub-paragraph (1)(a), a local authority may (either or both)—

(a) disapply or vary any standard conditions,

(b) impose conditions in addition to any mandatory or standard conditions to which the licence is subject.”,

(c) in sub-paragraph (2)—

(i) for “sub-paragraph” where first occurring substitute “sub-paragraphs (2ZA) and”,

(ii) for “(1)” substitute “(1A)(b)”,

(d) after sub-paragraph (2) insert—

“(2ZA) A variation made under sub-paragraph (1A)(a) or a condition imposed under sub-paragraph (1A)(b) has no effect in so far as it is inconsistent with any mandatory condition to which the licence is subject.”,

(e) in sub-paragraph (2A), for “(1)” substitute “(1A)(b)”.

71A  Conditions for Part 3 licences: displays or advertising

In paragraph 9(2) of Schedule 2 to the 1982 Act (examples of conditions which may be imposed in relation to Part 3 licences), in paragraph (b), after “on or in” insert “or otherwise connected with”.

72  Civic licensing standards officers

After Part 3 of the 1982 Act insert—

“PART 3A

CIVIC LICENSING STANDARDS OFFICERS

45F  Civic licensing standards officers

(1) Each local authority must appoint for their area one or more officers (a “civic licensing standards officer”—

(a) to exercise, in relation to the authority’s area, the general functions conferred on civic licensing standards officers by virtue of section 45G, and

(b) to exercise any other functions that may be conferred on such an officer by virtue of this or any other enactment.

(2) A civic licensing standards officer appointed by a local authority is taken to be an authorised officer of the authority for the purposes of Parts 1 to 3.

(3) A person may hold more than one appointment under subsection (1) (so as to be a civic licensing standards officer for more than one local authority area).

(4) Nothing in this section prevents an officer of a local authority other than a civic licensing standards officer from being an authorised officer of the authority for a purpose of Parts 1 to 3.

(5) In this Part, a reference to a local authority includes a reference to that authority acting as the licensing authority for their area and a reference to an authorised officer of a local authority (however expressed) is to be construed accordingly.

45G  General functions of a civic licensing standards officer

(1) The general functions of a civic licensing standards officer are—

(a) to provide to any interested person information and guidance concerning the operation of Parts 1 to 3 in the officer’s area,

(b) to supervise the compliance by the holder of a licence granted under Parts 1 to 3 in the officer’s area with—

(i) the conditions of the licence, and

(ii) the other requirements of Parts 1 to 3,

(c) to provide mediation services for the purposes of avoiding or resolving disputes or disagreements between—

(i) the holder of a licence granted under Parts 1 to 3 in the officer’s area, and
(2) The function under subsection (1)(b) includes, in particular, power for a civic licensing standards officer, where the officer believes that a condition to which the licence is subject has been or is being breached—

(a) to give a notice to the holder of the licence requiring such action to be taken to remedy the breach as may be specified in the notice, and

(b) to refer the breach to the local authority which granted the licence for consideration at a meeting of the authority.

(3) A civic licensing standards officer may only refer a breach of a condition under subsection (2)(b) if—

(a) the officer has given notice under subsection (2)(a) and the holder of the licence has failed to comply with it, or

(b) the officer considers that it is appropriate for the breach to be referred to the authority without such a notice being given.

(4) In this section, a reference to an officer’s area is a reference to—

(a) the local authority area for which the officer is appointed under section 45F(1), or

(b) where the officer is appointed for more than one local authority area, the area for which the officer is exercising a function at the relevant time.”.

73 Electronic communications under the 1982 Act

(1) The 1982 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In Schedule 1 (licensing: further provisions as to the general system)—

(a) after paragraph 3(3), insert—

“(3A) Where a licensing authority have determined to accept objections and representations by means of an electronic communication under paragraph 16A, an objection or representation is made for the purpose of sub-paragraph (1) of this paragraph if it is sent—

(a) to the authority by means of an electronic communication which complies with the determination, and

(b) within the time specified in sub-paragraph (1).

(3B) Sub-paragraph (3A) is without prejudice to sub-paragraph (3).”,

(b) after paragraph 16 insert—

“Electronic communications

16A(1) A licensing authority may determine to accept—

(a) applications for the grant or renewal of a licence under paragraph 1,

(b) objections or representations under paragraph 3,

(c) notifications of a change to a licence under paragraph 9,

by means of an electronic communication.
(2) Where a licensing authority make a determination under sub-paragraph (1) they must—

(a) specify in the determination—

(i) the form of electronic communication by which applications, objections, representations or notifications may be made or given,

(ii) the electronic address to be used for making or giving applications, objections, representations or notifications, and

(iii) any means of authentication (in addition to an electronic signature) that are acceptable, and

(b) publicise the determination as they consider appropriate.

(3) In relation to an application, objection, representation or notification made or given by means of an electronic communication, any requirement of this Schedule for the application, objection, representation or notification—

(a) to be in writing is satisfied if the communication is—

(i) in the form specified under sub-paragraph (2)(a)(i), and

(ii) sent to the address specified under sub-paragraph (2)(a)(ii),

(b) to be signed is satisfied if the communication includes an electronic signature or is authenticated by a means specified under sub-paragraph (2)(a)(iii).

(4) A licensing authority may determine to—

(a) give notices under paragraphs 5, 9, 10, 11 or 12, and

(b) give reasons under paragraph 17,

by means of an electronic communication.

(5) A licensing authority may only give a notice or reasons by means of an electronic communication if—

(a) the person to whom the notice or reasons is or are to be given has agreed to receive notices and reasons by means of an electronic communication, and

(b) the communication is sent to an electronic address, and is in an electronic form, specified for that purpose by the person.

(6) In relation to any notice or reasons given by means of an electronic communication, any requirement of this Schedule for the notice or reasons to be given in writing is satisfied if the communication is sent in accordance with sub-paragraph (5).

(7) When a licensing authority gives a notice or reasons by means of an electronic communication then, unless the contrary is proved, it is to be treated as having been received by the person to whom it was sent on the second working day after the day on which it was sent.

(8) For the purposes of sub-paragraph (7), “working day” means a day which is not—

(a) a Saturday or Sunday,

(b) Christmas Eve or Christmas Day.
(c) a day which is a bank holiday in Scotland under the Banking and Financial Dealings Act 1971,
(d) a day appointed for public thanksgiving or mourning, or
(e) a day which is a local or public holiday in the area in which the electronic communication is to be sent.

(9) A licensing authority may make different determinations for different purposes including, in particular, for different types of licence.

(10) In this Schedule—

“electronic communication” is to be construed in accordance with section 15(1) of the Electronic Communications Act 2000, “electronic signature” is to be construed in accordance with section 7(2) of the Electronic Communications Act 2000.”.

(3) In Schedule 2 (control of sex shops and sexual entertainment venues)—

(a) after paragraph 8(4) insert—

“(4A) Where a local authority have determined to accept objections and representations by means of an electronic communication under paragraph 22A, an objection or representation is made for the purpose of sub-paragraph (2) of this paragraph if it is sent—

(a) to the authority by means of an electronic communication which complies with the determination, and

(b) within the time specified in sub-paragraph (2).

(4B) Sub-paragraph (4A) is without prejudice to sub-paragraph (4).”,

(b) after paragraph 22 insert—

“Electronic communications

22A(1) A local authority may determine to accept—

(a) applications for the grant or renewal of a licence under this Schedule,

(b) objections or representations under paragraph 8,

(c) notifications of a change to a licence under paragraph 14,

by means of an electronic communication.

(2) Where a local authority make a determination under sub-paragraph (1) they must—

(a) specify in the determination—

(i) the form of electronic communication by which applications, objections, representations or notifications may be made or given,

(ii) the electronic address to be used for making or giving applications, objections, representations or notifications, and

(iii) any means of authentication (in addition to an electronic signature) that are acceptable, and

(b) publicise the determination as they consider appropriate.
In relation to an application, objection, representation or notification made or given by means of an electronic communication, any requirement of this Schedule for the application, objection, representation or notification—

(a) to be in writing is satisfied if the communication is—

(i) in the form specified under sub-paragraph (2)(a)(i), and

(ii) sent to the address specified under sub-paragraph (2)(a)(ii),

(b) to be signed is satisfied if the communication includes an electronic signature or is authenticated by a means specified under sub-paragraph (2)(a)(iii).

A local authority may determine to—

(a) give notices under paragraphs 8, 10, 13, 14 or 15, and

(b) give reasons under paragraph 23,

by means of an electronic communication.

A local authority may only give a notice or reasons by means of an electronic communication if—

(a) the person to whom the notice or reasons is or are to be given has agreed to receive notices and reasons by means of an electronic communication, and

(b) the communication is sent to an electronic address, and is in an electronic form, specified for that purpose by the person.

In relation to any notice or reasons given by means of an electronic communication, any requirement of this Schedule for the notice or reasons to be given in writing is satisfied if the communication is sent in accordance with sub-paragraph (5).

When a licensing authority gives a notice or reasons by means of an electronic communication then, unless the contrary is proved, it is to be treated as having been received by the person to whom it was sent on the second working day after the day on which it was sent.

For the purposes of sub-paragraph (7), “working day” means a day which is not—

(a) a Saturday or Sunday,

(b) Christmas Eve or Christmas Day,

(c) a day which is a bank holiday in Scotland under the Banking and Financial Dealings Act 1971,

Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill
[AS AMENDED AT STAGE 2]

An Act of the Scottish Parliament to make provision for the licensing and regulation of air weapons; to amend the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005; to amend and extend the licensing provisions of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982; and for connected purposes.

Introduced by: Kenny MacAskill
On: 14 May 2014
Bill type: Government Bill
INTRODUCTION

1. As required under Rule 9.7.8A of the Parliament’s Standing Orders, these revised Explanatory Notes are published to accompany the Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill (introduced in the Scottish Parliament on 14 May 2014) as amended at Stage 2. Text has been added or deleted as necessary to reflect the amendments made to the Bill at Stage 2 and these changes are indicated by sideling in the right margin.

INTRODUCTION

2. These Explanatory Notes have been prepared by the Scottish Government in order to assist the reader of the Bill and to help inform debate on it. They do not form part of the Bill and have not been endorsed by the Parliament.

3. The Notes should be read in conjunction with the Bill. They are not, and are not meant to be, a comprehensive description of the Bill. So where a section or schedule, or a part of a section or schedule, does not seem to require any explanation or comment, none is given.

PURPOSE

4. The Bill introduces a system of licensing for air weapons in Scotland. The Bill creates a number of new offences related to possession, use and acquisition of air weapons by persons who do not hold a licence or do not act in accordance with the licensing regime. The Bill also sets out the framework through which the Police Service of Scotland may grant an air weapon licence to appropriate individuals.

5. The Bill will give local communities the power to regulate sexual entertainment venues in their areas. The Bill also amends the licensing regimes in relation to alcohol licensing, taxis and private hire cars, metal dealers, as well as making systematic changes across the civic licensing regimes contained within the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 (“the 1982 Act”).

6. A more detailed explanation of the Bill’s purpose can be found in the Policy Memorandum, which also explains the thinking and policy intentions that underpin it.
STRUCTURE AND SUMMARY OF THE BILL

7. The Bill is in four parts:

- Part 1 Air weapons sets out a new licensing system for air weapons administered by the Police Service of Scotland. Specific provisions include:
  - a definition of the air weapons that will be subject to licensing;
  - a requirement for air weapon certificates and the process for applications, grants (including conditions and duration) variations, renewal and revocation of these;
  - a system of police permits, visitor permits and event permits;
  - restrictions on the commercial sale, sale for delivery outwith Scotland, manufacture, repair, testing of air weapons and the operation of recreational shooting facilities;
  - Enforcement powers and offences;
  - Power to set fees and provide guidance;
  - Air gun clubs;
  - Exemptions from the licensing regime.

- Part 2 Alcohol licensing amends the existing licensing regime for alcohol licensing included within the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 (“the 2005 Act.”) Specific provisions include:
  - Amendment of the licensing objective in relation to children to also include young persons;
  - Amendment of the duration of a licensing policy statement to align with the term of Local Government elections;
  - Inserting a fit and proper person test in relation to the issue or continued holding of a premises or a personal licence;
  - Amendment of the transfer provisions for a premises licence;
  - Providing Licensing Standards Officers with a new power to report conduct of a personal licence holder;
  - Removal of the automatic requirement for a hearing to be held where a Licensing Board is notified of a relevant or foreign offence in relation to a premises or personal licence;
  - Amendment of the definition of relevant offences and foreign offences to no longer disregard a matter that is spent for the purposes of the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974;
  - Creation of new offences of giving, or making available, alcohol to a child or young person for consumption in a public place;
  - Inclusion of the flavouring angostura bitters in the definition of alcohol for the purposes of the Act;
This document relates to the Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill as amended at Stage 2
(SP Bill 49A)

- Clarification that for an overprovision assessment, the whole Board area may be considered as an area of overprovision;
- For an overprovision assessment allow Boards to take account of licensed hours, among other things;
- A duty on Boards to prepare an annual financial report in respect of their licensing activities;
- Removal of the requirement for a premises licence holder to notify a change in interested parties and amendment of the definition of an “interested party” to remove premises managers;
- Changes to the personal licence holder requirements including removal of the five year restriction on re-applying for a licence revoked on grounds of failing to undertake refresher training or notifying the board of such, and other changes to the personal licence holder requirements;
- A requirement for a Licensing Board to issue an acknowledgement of complete applications, unless the Board does not consider that it would be appropriate to do so;
- Automatic grant of a licence where a Licensing Board has failed to determine an application within the required period or the extended period as granted by a sheriff. This clarifies compliance with the EU Services Directive.

Part 3 Civic Licensing amends the existing licensing regimes included within the 1982 Act:

Sexual entertainment venues

- Sets out a new licensing system for sexual entertainment venues administered by local authorities. Specific provisions include:
  - The definition of sexual entertainment venues;
  - The power for local authorities to license sexual entertainment venues according to the existing structure set out in Schedule 2 of the 1982 Act;
  - The power for local authorities to determine the number of sexual entertainment venues in their area.

Metal dealers

- Amendments to the metal dealer regime. Specific provisions include:
  - Removal of the exemption warrants system that allowed a metal dealer with a larger turnover to be exempted;
  - Limit payment for metal by metal dealers or itinerant metal dealers to prescribed methods i.e. bank transfer or cheque;
  - Amended standards for identification of customers;
  - Amended standards of record keeping;
  - Removal of mandatory requirement that metal dealers should not process metal for 48 hours after receiving it;
Conferring power on the Scottish Ministers to establish a register of metal dealers and itinerant metal dealers;

Amended definitions of metal dealer and itinerant metal dealer.

Taxis and private hire cars

- Amendments to the taxis and private hire cars regime. Specific provisions include:
  - The power to refuse to grant private hire car licences on grounds of overprovision;
  - The extension of taxi driver testing to include private hire car drivers;
  - Removal of the contract exemptions to the licensing and regulation of taxis and private hire cars, bringing hire cars used on contracts into the regime.

Public entertainment venues

- Amendments to the public entertainment regime. Specific provisions include:
  - Abolish ‘theatre licences’ as currently required under the Theatres Act 1968 and instead regulate theatres through the existing public entertainment licensing regime provided for in the 1982 Act;
  - Restrict the exemption concerning premises licensed under the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005.

Miscellaneous and general

- Amendments to the operation of all civic government licensing regimes. Specific provisions include:
  - Power for Scottish Ministers to make provision for the procedure to be followed at or in connection with hearings;
  - Introduction of a new role, Civic Licensing Standards Officer;
  - Create an ability for a Licensing Authority to revoke a licence under Part 2 of the 1982 Act
  - Where it has not already been provided for, the deemed grant of a licence where the Local Authority has failed to determine an application within the required period or the extended period granted by a sheriff.

- Part 4 General Provision sets out general provisions, such as for the making of ancillary provision by regulations. It also contains definitions, the short title and provisions for commencement of the Act by order.

PART 1 – AIR WEAPONS

8. The provisions in this Part establish a licensing regime in relation to air weapons.
Meaning of air weapon

Section 1 – Meaning of “air weapon”

9. Section 1 defines the term “air weapon” for the purposes of the Part. Subsection (2) adopts the definition from section 1(3)(b) of the Firearms Act 1968 (“the 1968 Act”). Section 1(3)(b) of the 1968 Act provides that an air weapon is an air rifle, air gun or air pistol which does not fall within section 5(1) of the 1968 Act and which is not of a type declared by the Secretary of State by rules to be “specially dangerous”. The Firearms (Dangerous Air Weapons) (Scotland) Rules 1969 (S.I. 1969/270) as amended are the applicable rules made by the Secretary of State.

10. The effect of this is that the Part applies to air weapons capable of a muzzle energy equal to or lower than 12 foot pounds (ft/lb), or 6 ft/lb for an air pistol (approximately 16.27 joules and 8.13 joules respectively). Air weapons above these thresholds – or those that come within section 5(1) of the 1968 Act, for example by being disguised as another object, or designed or adapted to use a self-contained gas cartridge system – will continue to require to be held on a Firearms Certificate issued under the 1968 Act. Note that section 48 of the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1997 provides that any reference to an air rifle, air pistol or air gun in the Firearms Acts 1968 to 1997 includes a reference to any such rifle, pistol or gun which is powered by compressed carbon dioxide and therefore such weapons also fall to be licensed by the Part.

11. Subsection (4)(a)(i) adds a lower power threshold of one joule (approximately 0.74 ft/lb) to this definition, so that air weapons with a muzzle energy of one joule or below do not require to be held on an air weapon certificate. Subsection 4(za) excludes air weapons that are not captured by the definition of “firearm” at section 57(1) of the 1968 Act, that is “a lethal barrelled weapon of any description from which any shot, bullet or other missile can be discharged”. This means that, although certain air powered weapons may exceed 1 joule of muzzle energy, they do not fall to be regulated under this Part if they are not firearms for the purposes of the 1968 Act – for example, low powered airsoft weapons or paintball guns. Subsection (4)(a)(ii) also excludes air weapons designed for use only underwater, for example spear guns, from requiring a certificate. Such weapons are excluded from existing UK firearms legislation by regulation 2 of the Firearms (Dangerous Air Weapons) (Scotland) Amendment rules 1993 (S.I. 1993/1541).

12. Subsection (3) sets out that component parts and sound moderators for air weapons are included in the definition of “air weapon”, and require to be held on an air weapon certificate.

Air weapon certificates

Section 2 – Requirement for air weapon certificate

13. This section makes it an offence for a person to use, possess, purchase or acquire an air weapon (as defined in section 1) without holding a valid air weapon certificate or otherwise than in accordance with the Part. Subsection (2) specifies that this offence is triable summarily or on indictment, and sets out the maximum penalties for both. The offence attracts strict liability. A “person” includes non-natural (e.g. corporate bodies) as well as natural persons.

14. Subsection (3) introduces schedule 1, which sets out a number of exemptions from the requirement to hold an air weapon certificate, and certain other offences created by the Part. Commentary on schedule 1 begins at paragraph 259 of these Notes. Subsection (4) provides the Scottish Ministers with the power to add, remove or modify exemptions in schedule 1 by regulations. Such regulations are subject to the affirmative procedure in the Scottish Parliament.

Section 3 – Application for grant or renewal of air weapon certificate

15. This section sets out the process by which an individual can apply for an air weapon certificate, or the renewal of a certificate which has previously been granted. Subsection (1) states that applications must be made to the Chief Constable of the Police Service of Scotland, and sets a lower age limit of 14 for applicants.

16. Subsection (2) provides that applications for an air weapon certificate must be made in the form specified in regulations issued under section 37 and must be verified as set out in section 4. Additionally, applicants below the age of 18 must provide information specified in section 7. If an application is not accompanied by the required information it cannot be considered by the Chief Constable. Separately, section 36(3) has the effect that where an application is made in compliance with the application processes it still cannot be considered by the Chief Constable until the fee is paid.

17. Subsection (3) requires the Chief Constable to keep a register of all applications for a new or renewed air weapon certificate, even if the application is ultimately unsuccessful.

Section 4 – Verification of applications

18. This section, combined with section 3(2)(a), requires an application for a new or renewed air weapon certificate to be verified by an appropriate individual before it can be considered by the Chief Constable. Subsection (2) sets out who can verify an application but subsection (2)(c) lists those who can never verify an application, and subsection (3) requires the verifier to confirm the accuracy of any information supplied with the application. In every case the verifier must have known the applicant personally for at least two years, but not be related to them (see the definition of “relative” in section 40) or be ordinarily resident outside the United Kingdom, or be a Registered Firearms Dealer or be a constable or member of police staff of the Police Service of Scotland or a member or employee of the Scottish Police Authority. The Chief Constable must also be satisfied that verifiers are of good standing in the community. Further detail on who can verify an application will be provided in guidance published by the Scottish Ministers under section 39.

Section 5 – Grant or renewal of air weapon certificate

19. This section allows the Chief Constable to issue a new or renewed air weapon certificate provided that the applicant is fit to be entrusted with an air weapon; is not prohibited from possessing any firearms by section 21 of the 1968 Act (which makes provision to prohibit for life or 5 years possession of firearms, including air weapons, by persons who have been convicted and sentenced to specified terms of imprisonment); has a good reason to use, possess, purchase or acquire an air weapon (for example, pest control, sporting target shooting, or being a collector); and in all the circumstances can do so without danger to the public safety or the peace (this last test is intended to allow account to be taken of factors not only directly about the applicant but beyond, such as the applicant’s wider domestic situation or acquaintances). Further clarity on how the Chief Constable should test applicants against these criteria will be provided in guidance published by the Scottish Ministers under section 39.

20. Subsection (2) allows the Chief Constable to consider applicants who already hold a firearm or shotgun certificate issued under the 1968 Act to have met the “fit” and “not prohibited” criteria without further enquiry, on the grounds that these tests will already have been met for the grant of the firearm or shotgun certificate.

21. Subsection (3) allows the police to visit an applicant’s home, or any other place where air weapons are intended to be stored or used, and conduct enquiries relating to the criteria in subsection (1) before granting or renewing an air weapon certificate.

Section 6 – Air weapon certificate: conditions

22. This section relates to conditions which are applied to air weapon certificates. Conditions are defined in section 40(1) as including requirements and restrictions and may comprise positive or negative obligations. Conditions may therefore place restrictions on the way that the certificate holder stores or uses their weapons, or may require the holder to carry out certain administrative functions (for example, informing the Chief Constable if they change address).

23. Subsection (1) sets out that all air weapon certificates will carry certain mandatory conditions, which will be specified in regulations issued under section 37. Subsection (2) allows the Chief Constable to attach additional conditions to certificates as required, and to change a certificate’s conditions at the time of renewal.

24. Subsection (3) specifies that conditions attached by the Chief Constable must not be inconsistent with or undermine the effect of any of the mandatory conditions (as required by subsection (1)), or any other condition attached as a requirement of this Part (for example, the conditions for 14-17 year olds required by section 7(3)).

25. Subsections (4) and (5) create the offence of non-compliance with any conditions attached to an air weapon certificate, and set out the maximum penalty available respectively. This offence attracts strict liability.

Section 7 – Special requirements and conditions for young persons

26. This section sets out additional requirements for applications and certificates granted where the applicant is aged under 18. When combined with the minimum age for applicants at section 3(1), this section applies to applicants aged 14-17.

27. When read with section 3(2)(b), subsection (2) of this section requires that applications for an air weapon certificate from an individual aged 14-17 must contain a statement of consent from the applicant’s parent or guardian in the form and manner prescribed by regulations under section 37. The term “guardian” is defined at section 40(1).
28. Subsections (3) to (5) set out mandatory conditions for air weapon certificates granted to 14-17 year olds. The condition in subsection (4) prohibits a 14-17 year old with an air weapon certificate from purchasing, hiring, accepting a gift of or otherwise owning (for example by inheriting or finding) an air weapon, meaning that they may only use borrowed air weapons. This condition applies to all air weapon certificates granted to young persons. Subsection (5) lists the specific activities for which a 14-17 year old might be granted an air weapon certificate. The Chief Constable must apply one or more of the conditions listed at subsection (5) to the young person’s air weapon certificate, as appropriate.

29. Subsection (6) disapplies the requirement that a young applicant need satisfy the Chief Constable that the applicant has a good reason for purchasing or acquiring an air weapon because an air weapon certificate granted to a young person will not permit them to purchase, hire, accept a gift of or own such a weapon and therefore that aspect of the test for grant or renewal is not relevant.

30. Subsection (7) defines agriculture for the purposes of this section, specifically subsection (5)(d). The definition used at section 85 of the Agricultural Holdings (Scotland) Act 1991 is adopted, which refers to “horticulture, fruit growing; seed growing; dairy farming; livestock breeding and keeping; the use of land as grazing land, meadow land, osier land, market gardens and nursery grounds; and the use of land for woodlands where that use is ancillary to the farming of land for other agricultural purposes: and “agricultural” shall be construed accordingly”.

Section 8 – Duration of air weapon certificate

31. Subsection (1) sets the normal duration of air weapon certificates at five years, except in the case of a certificate issued to a 14-17 year old, where the certificate expires on the holder’s 18th birthday. At this point the young person’s air weapon certificate can be renewed and the conditions required by section 7 may be removed (for example, the prohibition on purchasing a weapon).

32. Subsection (2) provides that an air weapon certificate will remain valid beyond its stated expiry date, provided that the holder has applied to the Chief Constable for a renewal before that expiry date and the Chief Constable has not yet approved or rejected that renewal. The renewal application must be valid, i.e. comply with the requirements in section 3 and section 36, for this subsection to apply. The effect of this section is that the holder neither has to surrender the holder’s weapons nor commits the offence at section 2(1) when the original certificate expires, provided that renewal is being actively considered by the Chief Constable.

33. Subsection (3) provides the Scottish Ministers with the power to change the duration of air weapon certificates other than those in relation to young people. The regulations will be subject to the affirmative procedure in the Scottish Parliament.

Section 9 – Alignment of different types of certificate

34. This section allows air weapon certificates to be made co-terminous with firearm or shotgun certificates issued under the 1968 Act. This allows for all certificates to be due for renewal at the same time, minimising the workload for the applicant and the Chief Constable.
Regulations under section 36 are expected to make provision for a proportionately lowered fee where such air weapon certificates are granted or renewed for significantly shorter duration. This section does not affect the duration of firearm or shotgun certificates.

35. Subsections (1) and (2) allow an applicant who already holds a valid firearm and/or shotgun certificate to request that the expiry date on an air weapon certificate – if granted or renewed – match the expiry date on their existing firearm and/or shotgun certificate(s). Because the standard duration for firearm, shotgun and air weapon certificates are all set at five years, an air weapon certificate issued in this way will necessarily have a shorter than normal duration when it is first granted.

36. Subsections (3) and (4) allow an applicant who already holds a live air weapon certificate to request that that certificate be renewed before it has run its full five year lifespan, and re-issued on the same date that a new or renewed firearm and/or shotgun certificate is granted, so that the expiry dates on all certificates are aligned. This will necessarily mean that the air weapon certificate which they originally paid for on a five year basis will not have lasted for its full duration.

Section 10 – Variation of air weapon certificate

37. This section allows the Chief Constable to vary any of the details on an air weapon certificate after it has been granted or renewed, including adding, amending or removing conditions on the certificate (except the mandatory conditions required by section 6, and, if applicable, section 7). The Chief Constable may vary a certificate at any time, but is obliged to notify the certificate holder of the changes made.

38. Subsection (2)(a) separately allows the holder of an air weapon certificate to request that the Chief Constable make such a variation, for example to provide an updated contact address, or to request the removal or amendment of an outdated condition. Decisions whether to grant such variations are made at the Chief Constable’s discretion.

39. Subsection (3) specifies that conditions attached by the Chief Constable must not be inconsistent with or undermine the effect of any of the mandatory conditions (as required by section 6(1)), or any other condition attached as a requirement of this Part (for example, the conditions for 14-17 year olds required by section 7(3)).

40. Subsection (4) allows the Chief Constable to require an air weapon certificate holder to relinquish their certificate within 21 days, for the purpose of varying the physical certificate in any way. Failure to do so may result in revocation of the certificate under section 11(2)(c).

Section 11 – Revocation of air weapon certificate

41. This section deals with revocation of an air weapon certificate. Subsection (1) requires the Chief Constable to revoke an air weapon certificate if satisfied that there is a danger to public safety or the peace if the certificate holder continues to possess an air weapon, or that the certificate holder is prohibited from possessing firearms under section 21 of the 1968 Act. These tests reflect those at sections 5(1)(d) and 5(1)(b) respectively.
42. Subsection (2) separately provides – but in contrast with subsection (1) does not require – the Chief Constable with discretion to revoke an air weapon certificate where the Chief Constable has reason to believe that the certificate holder is no longer a fit person to possess an air weapon (for example, if the holder was convicted of a crime of violence, or there is evidence of drug or alcohol abuse that meant that they could no longer be trusted with a firearm), or that they no longer have a good reason to hold a certificate (for example, if the holder had been a member of an airgun club but had not renewed membership of it). These tests reflect those at sections 5(1)(a) and 5(1)(c) respectively.

43. Subsections (2)(b) and (2)(c) provide the Chief Constable with discretion to revoke an air weapon certificate where the holder has failed to comply with a condition on that certificate, or has failed to surrender the certificate to the police for the purpose of a variation (as required by Section 10(4)). As with subsection (2)(a), in these circumstances the Chief Constable has the power to revoke but is not required to do so.

44. Subsections (3) to (6) set out the process for the revocation of an air weapon certificate. The Chief Constable must provide at least seven days’ advance notice of a revocation, within such time the certificate holder must relinquish the certificate and any air weapons or commit an offence (unless a reasonable excuse, for example illness, prevents them from doing so). Subsection (7) provides that, should the certificate holder make an appeal against the decision of the Chief Constable to revoke under section 35, the notice period will be suspended until such time as the appeal is disposed of or abandoned. However, subsection (7)(b) requires that the certificate holder must still surrender their certificate and weapons. If an appeal is successful then the court will quash the notice. If the appeal is rejected then the notice continues to run its remaining period from the date it was suspended.

Permits

Section 12 – Police permits

45. This section makes provision for police permits, which are distinct from air weapon certificates and are intended for use in transient situations where an individual may find themselves in possession of an air weapon, but grant of an air weapon certificate would not be appropriate (for example, where the executor of an estate takes possession of an air weapon when ingathering the deceased’s property). In this respect this section is intended to perform a similar function to that of section 7 of the 1968 Act, which allows the police to issue similar permits to allow the temporary possession of a firearm covered by section 1 of that Act. This section should be read in conjunction with the exemption at paragraph 8 of schedule 1 to the Bill.

46. Subsection (1) sets out that the Chief Constable may issue a permit to allow an individual to possess or acquire and/ or sell an air weapon in the course of business without requiring an air weapon certificate (or, in the case of sale in the course of business, being a Registered Firearms Dealer). These permissions may be applied or omitted from the permit at the Chief Constable’s discretion. Subsection (2) states that a police permit must not be granted to anyone prohibited from possessing firearms under section 21 of the 1968 Act, which is explained in more detail at paragraph 19 of these Notes.
47. Subsection (3) allows police permits to have variable durations, set at the discretion of the Chief Constable in each case but, as reflects the transient situation for which a permit is to cater, the duration of a permit is not intended to be of the order of that for an air weapon certificate.

48. Subsection (4) provides that applications for a police permit must comply with the requirements set out in regulations made under section 37 or the application will not be treated as having been made. The effect is that an application for a permit cannot be considered by the Chief Constable if the application processes set out in the regulations are not followed. Separately, section 36(3) has the effect that where an application is made in compliance with the application processes it still cannot be considered by the Chief Constable until the fee is paid.

Section 13 – Visitor permits

49. This and the following related sections provide for a system whereby visitors to Scotland may apply to the Chief Constable for a permit to use, possess, purchase or acquire air weapons while in Scotland, without holding an air weapon certificate. This section should be read in conjunction with the exemption at paragraph 9 of schedule 1.

50. Subsection (4) sets out the criteria for grant of a visitor permit. For individual visitors, subsection (4)(a) requires the applicant to have a good reason, and subsection (4)(c) provides that the visitor must not be prohibited from possessing firearms, nor should their possession of an air weapon present a danger to the public. These requirements match those for applicants for an air weapon certificate in section 5, with the omission of the ‘fit person’ test which would be difficult to apply effectively to visitors from abroad.

51. Subsections (2) and (3) allow for applications by groups of two to 20 people to be made on behalf of the group. The Chief Constable does not have to grant or refuse every member of the group a permit en bloc and can reject some while accepting others. Subsection (4)(b) provides that the Chief Constable must be satisfied that each member of the group individually is to use and possess an air weapon only for one of the listed activities. Each member of the group individually must also not be prohibited from possessing firearms, nor should their possession of an air weapon present a danger to the public. Subsection (5) permits the Chief Constable to require proof from the person applying on behalf of the group that the group has the permission of the owner or occupier of the land in question for the activities mentioned in subsection (4)(b)(i) and (ii).

52. Subsection (6) requires the Chief Constable to attach a condition to a visitor permit granted as part of a group application which restricts the permit holder to taking part in the activity or activities listed in subsection (4)(b) for which the permit has been granted. However, subsection (6) does not apply to a visitor who is part of a group but is aged 14-17, who will be subject to the separate restrictions under section 14.

53. Subsection (7) allows visitor permits to have variable durations, set at the discretion of the Chief Constable, although subsection (8) sets a maximum duration of 12 months.

54. Subsection (9) requires that an application for a visitor permit must comply with the requirements set out in regulations issued under section 37 or it will not be regarded as having been made. The effect is that an application for a permit cannot be considered by the Chief Constable if the application processes set out in the regulations are not followed. Separately, section 36(3) has the effect that where an application is made in compliance with the application processes it still cannot be considered by the Chief Constable until the fee is paid.

55. Subsection (10) provides definitions, including specifying that applicants for a visitor permit must be aged 14 or over, and must live outside Scotland but intend to visit (or, be visiting at the time of application).

Section 14 – Visitor permits: young persons

56. This section makes provision where applications for visitor permits are from people under 18 years of age. When read with the definition of “qualifying visitor” in section 13(10) the effect is that this section applies to applicants aged 14 to 17 years.

57. Subsection (2) requires that applications for a visitor permit from an individual aged 14 to 17 years must contain a statement of consent from the applicant’s parent or guardian, set out in a form to be specified in regulations made under section 37. The term “guardian” is defined at section 40(1) and should be construed in light of the relevant jurisdiction of the applicant.

58. Subsections (3) and (4) provide that certain mandatory conditions set out in section 7 must be applied to visitor permits granted to young people, either individually or as part of a group. This means that young people with a visitor permit are subject to equivalent conditions as a young person residing in Scotland who holds an air weapon certificate.

59. Subsection (5) makes equivalent provision to that in section 7(6) as a young person with a visitor permit will not be able to purchase, hire, accept a gift of or own an air weapon while in Scotland.

Section 15 – Police and visitor permits: conditions

60. This section relates to conditions that are applied to police and visitor permits which have been granted under section 12 or section 13 respectively. Conditions will have the same effect as described in section 6. Subsection (1) sets out that all such permits will be subject to any mandatory conditions, which will be specified in regulations issued under section 37. Subsection (2) allows the Chief Constable to attach additional conditions to police and visitor permits as required.

61. Subsection (3) specifies that conditions attached by the Chief Constable must not be inconsistent with or undermine the effect of any of the mandatory conditions required by subsection (1), or any other condition attached as a requirement of this Part (for example, by virtue of the visitor’s age (under section 14) and/ or their being part of a group (under section 13)).

62. Subsections (4) and (5) make it an offence for the permit holder to contravene any condition attached to a permit under this section, and set out the penalty. This offence attracts strict liability.
Section 16 – Police and visitor permits: variation and revocation

63. This section relates to variation and revocation of police permits or visitor permits which have been granted under section 12 and section 13 respectively.

64. Subsection (1) allows the Chief Constable to vary any details on a police permit or a visitor permit after it has been granted, including adding, amending or removing conditions, except any mandatory condition required by section 15(1), or any conditions which must be attached to a visitor permit by virtue of the visitor’s age (under section 14) and/ or their being part of a group (under section 13). Subsection (2) provides that a variation may occur either on the application of the permit holder, or at the Chief Constable’s discretion although the Chief Constable is obliged to notify the permit holder of the changes made. Subsection (4) allows the Chief Constable to require a permit holder to relinquish their permit within 21 days, for the purpose of varying it in this way. Guidance is expected to set out that failure to surrender a permit in this way would be grounds for the permit to be revoked.

65. Subsection (3) specifies that conditions attached by the Chief Constable must not be inconsistent with or undermine the effect of any of the mandatory conditions required by section 15(1), or any other condition attached as a requirement of this Part (for example, by virtue of the visitor’s age (under section 14) and/ or their being part of a group (under section 13)).

66. Subsection (1)(d) allows the Chief Constable to revoke a police or visitor permit at any time, at the Chief Constable’s discretion. The Chief Constable must notify the permit holder of the revocation, and subsection (5) requires this notification to provide at least seven days’ notice of revocation, within which time the permit holder must relinquish the revoked permit and any air weapons possessed.

67. Subsections (6) and (7) make it an offence for a permit holder to fail, without reasonable excuse, to relinquish a permit for the purpose of revocation within the timescale specified by the Chief Constable.

68. Subsection (8) provides that when a permit holder appeals against a decision to revoke a permit, the notice period for that revocation is put on hold until the outcome of the appeal is known. However, by virtue of subsection (8)(b) the holder must still surrender the permit and any weapons to the Chief Constable. This mirrors the provision at section 11(7).

Section 17 – Event permits

69. This section provides for air weapon event permits. These are distinct from other permits as they are to be required where an event is to take place at which people may borrow, hire use or possess an air weapon for a short timescale, without holding individual air weapon certificates. Examples of situations where an event permit might be granted would be a Highland Games with an air weapon shooting component, or a variant of modern biathlon or pentathlon. This section should be read in conjunction with the exemption at paragraph 10 of schedule 1.

70. Subsection (1) sets out that applications for an event permit should be made to the Chief Constable, by a person responsible for the event. A “person” here includes non-natural (e.g. corporate bodies) as well as natural persons. Event permits are granted at the Chief Constable’s discretion, and permit the borrowing, hiring, possessing and/or using of air weapons at a specified time and place, for the purpose of participating in a planned event activity as defined at subsection (7). Subsection (2) adds that the Chief Constable may attach conditions to an event permit as required.

71. Subsection (3) requires that an event permit – or a copy thereof – be displayed at the event to which it pertains. This requirement allows a participant at the event to confirm that a permit is in place and the exemption therefore applies when handling air weapons.

72. Subsections (4) and (5) create the offence of failing to comply with any condition attached to an event permit, or failing to display the permit as required by subsection (3) without a reasonable excuse. In either case the offence is committed by the event organiser named on the permit. The offence in subsection (4)(a) attracts strict liability.

73. Subsection (6) states that applications for an event permit cannot be considered unless they comply with the requirements set out in regulations to be made under section 37. Separately, section 36(3) has the effect that where an application is made in compliance with the application processes it still cannot be considered by the Chief Constable until the fee is paid.

Air weapon clubs and recreational shooting facilities

Section 18 – Approval of air weapon clubs

74. This section sets out the process by which an air weapon club can be approved by the Chief Constable, to allow its members to benefit from the exemption at paragraph 1 of schedule 1, as well as allowing members to put forward their club membership as evidence that they meet the ‘good reason’ criteria required by section 5(1)(c) for the grant of an individual air weapon certificate.

75. Subsection (1) states that the Chief Constable may, at the Chief Constable’s discretion, approve an air weapon club on receipt of an application from a club. Subsection (2) states that an application for an air weapon club approval cannot be considered unless it complies with the requirements set out in regulations to be made under section 37. Separately, section 36(3) has the effect that where an application is made in compliance with the application processes it still cannot be considered by the Chief Constable until the fee is paid.

76. Subsection (3) allows the Chief Constable to withdraw a club approval at any time, by giving notice to the club to that effect.

77. Subsection (4) states that all club approvals will be subject to mandatory conditions, which will be specified in regulations issued under section 37. Subsection (5) provides for the Chief Constable to attach other conditions to air weapon club approvals, which may place positive or negative obligations on the club’s secretariat and membership. But, in accordance with subsection (6), the Chief Constable may not attach any conditions which are inconsistent with any mandatory conditions.
Section 19 – Variation of approval

78. This section allows the Chief Constable to vary any of the details on an air weapon club approval after it has been granted or renewed, including adding, amending or removing conditions on the approval (except the mandatory conditions required by section 18(4)). The Chief Constable may vary an approval at any time, but is obliged to notify the club of the changes made.

79. Subsection (2)(a) separately allows the club to request that the Chief Constable make such a variation, for example to provide an updated contact address, or to request the removal or amendment of an outdated condition. Decisions whether to grant such variations are made at the Chief Constable’s discretion.

80. Subsection (3) specifies that conditions attached by the Chief Constable must not be inconsistent with or undermine the effect of any of the mandatory conditions (as required by section 18(4)).

Section 20 – Duration of approval

81. Subsection (1) sets the duration of air weapon club approvals at six years, which is consistent with approvals issued to rifle or muzzle-loading pistol clubs under section 15 of the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1988 (“the 1988 Act”).

82. Subsection (2) provides that an air weapon club approval will remain valid beyond its stated expiry date, provided that the club has applied to the Chief Constable for a renewal before that expiry date and the Chief Constable has not yet approved or rejected that renewal. The effect of this subsection is that club members can continue to benefit from the exemption at paragraph 1 of schedule 1 when the original approval expires, provided that renewal is being actively considered by the Chief Constable.

83. Subsection (3) provides the Scottish Ministers with the power to change the duration of air weapon club approvals. The regulations will be subject to the affirmative procedure.

Section 21 – Alignment of club approvals

84. This section allows air weapon club approvals to be made co-terminous with a rifle club approval issued by the Scottish Ministers under section 15 of the 1988 Act. This allows for both approvals to be due for renewal at the same time, minimising the workload for the applicant and the Chief Constable. Regulations under section 36 are expected to make provision for a proportionately lowered fee where such air weapon club approvals are granted or renewed for significantly shorter duration. This section does not affect the duration of rifle club approvals.

85. Subsections (1) and (2) allow an air weapon club which already holds a valid rifle club approval to request that the expiry date on an air weapon club approval – if granted or renewed – matches the expiry date on their existing rifle club approval. Because the standard duration for rifle and air weapon club approvals are both set at six years, an air weapon club approval issued in this way will necessarily have a shorter than normal duration when it is first granted.
86. Subsections (3) and (4) allow a club that already holds a live air weapon club approval to request that that approval be renewed before it has run its full six year lifespan, and re-issued on the same date that a new or renewed rifle club approval is granted, so that the expiry dates on both approvals are aligned. This will necessarily mean that the air weapon club approval which was originally paid for on a six year basis will not have lasted for its full duration.

87. References in this section to “rifle club approvals” include clubs approved for the use of small-bore rifles, full-bore rifles and/or muzzle-loading pistols, all of which are approved under section 15 of the 1988 Act.

Section 22 – Power to enter and inspect club premises

88. This section empowers the Chief Constable – or a delegated officer not below the rank of inspector – to authorise a police constable or member of police staff to enter and inspect any approved air weapon club premises, other than a private dwelling, to ensure that the requirements in this Part are being complied with. Subsection (3) provides that the inspection should, where possible, take place at a reasonable time, which may be any time that the club is operating including in the evenings or at weekends. Subsections (1)(b) and (2) set out that the police constable or member of police staff can inspect anything on the club premises, including requiring electronic information to be reproduced in a way that can be removed from the premises. However inspection should only be of those things for the purpose of ascertaining whether the provisions of the Part or any conditions attached to a club’s approval are being complied with.

89. Subsection (4) requires that the police constable or member of police staff must produce their authorisation if asked before entering a club premises to inspect it in accordance with this section.

90. Subsections (6) and (7) set out the offence of intentionally obstructing a police constable or member of police staff from carrying out their duties when authorised under this section – for example, by refusing them access to the club premises, or by concealing evidence from them.

Section 23 – Requirements for recreational shooting facilities

91. This section and the exemption in paragraph 12 of schedule 1 set out arrangements for commercial recreational shooting facilities where individuals who do not hold air weapon certificates will be able to borrow or hire air weapons for short durations, for a specific purpose – for example, a miniature rifle range at a funfair.

92. Subsection (1) sets out that the operator of such a facility (or, where the operator is a non-natural person, must ensure that an individual responsible for the management and operation of the facility) must hold a valid air weapon certificate granted for this purpose, and must display this certificate (or a copy) at the venue. This requirement allows users of the facility to confirm that a certificate is in place and the exemption in paragraph 12 of schedule 1 therefore applies to them.
93. Subsections (2) and (3) make it an offence for anyone to operate a recreational shooting facility without either holding a valid air weapon certificate or ensuring that an individual responsible for the management and operation of the facility holds one for that purpose, or to fail to display that certificate at the facility without a reasonable excuse. The offence in subsection (2)(a) attracts strict liability.

94. Subsection (4) defines a recreational shooting facility for the purposes of the section as a shooting range or gallery, or a facility for combat games, where air weapons are used and which is run for the purpose of making a profit. Subsection (5) makes it clear that approved air weapon clubs are not subject to the requirements of the section.

Transactions involving air weapons and commercial matters

Section 24 – Restrictions on transactions involving air weapons

95. Subsection (1) makes it an offence for any person except a Registered Firearms Dealer under section 33 of the 1968 Act to manufacture, sell, transfer, expose for sale or transfer, repair or test an air weapon by way of trade or business, or to possess an air weapon for one of these purposes. This subsection makes analogous provision to that in section 3(1) of the 1968 Act and adds manufacture, repair and test of air weapons to the activities limited to Registered Firearms Dealers. This offence only applies to sales, transfers etc. by way of trade or business, and does not prohibit private sales between individuals. “Person” here includes non-natural persons (e.g. corporate bodies) as well as natural persons. The offences in this section attract strict liability.

96. Subsection (2)(a), (b) and (d) makes it an offence for anyone to sell or transfer an air weapon (including private sales) without first confirming that the recipient is entitled to have the air weapon by: showing a valid air weapon certificate; demonstrating that the recipient does not need to have a certificate; or, by virtue of being a Registered Firearms Dealer.

97. Subsection (2)(c) specifically allows a Registered Firearms Dealer to sell an air weapon to someone without requiring to see an air weapon certificate or evidence that an exemption applies, provided that the air weapon in question will be sent out of Great Britain, or to a Registered Firearms Dealer in England or Wales where the buyer can collect it, without first coming into the possession of the purchaser. Where the purchaser is an individual (as opposed to, for example, a corporate body) the individual must also be aged 18 or over for this paragraph to apply. For example, an overseas visitor to Scotland who does not hold a visitor permit allowing purchase might have a Registered Firearms Dealer export an air weapon directly to their home country.

98. Subsection (3) broadly reflects subsection (2), and makes it an offence to manufacture, repair or test an air weapon for anyone without confirming that they hold a valid air weapon certificate or are a Registered Firearms Dealer or do not need to have a certificate.

99. Subsection (4) sets out the penalties for any of the offences committed in this section.
Section 25 – Requirement for commercial sales of air weapons to be in person

100. This section requires that commercial sales of air weapons are done face-to-face, and is intended to make analogous provision to section 32 of the Violent Crime Reduction Act 2006. Subsection (1) sets out that this section applies to all sales by way of trade or business except those between two Registered Firearms Dealers, and to those where the sale is concluded outside Great Britain (for example mail order sales).

101. Subsection (2) requires that, at the point at which possession of the air weapon(s) is/are transferred to the purchaser, both the purchaser and the seller – or their representative – must be physically present, otherwise the seller commits an offence. Subsection (3) sets out different categories of person who may act as a representative of the seller for the purposes of this section. A “person” here means a non-natural (e.g. corporate bodies) as well as a natural person. This offence attracts strict liability.

Enforcement

Section 27 – Power of search with warrant

102. This section relates to search warrants issued where there is a reasonable ground to suspect that an air weapon offence has been, is being or is about to be committed or there is a danger to the public safety or the peace involving an air weapon. Subsection (1) sets out that such a warrant may be granted by a sheriff on application by a constable or member of police staff. Subsections (2) and (3) set out what a constable or member of police staff may do under such a warrant – that is, enter and search premises and seize or detain anything found there in relation to the commission of an air weapon offence. This includes anything in the possession of a person on those premises, and includes the power to require that any electronic information to be reproduced in a way that can be removed from the premises.

103. Subsections (4) and (5) make it an offence for any person to obstruct intentionally a police constable while carrying out a search under this section, and set out the attached penalty. “Person” includes both natural and non-natural persons.

Section 28 – Production of air weapon certificate

104. Subsection (1) empowers a constable to require the production of an individual’s air weapon certificate, or proof that the person does not require to hold a certificate, if the constable believes that an air weapon is in that person’s possession. “Person” in this section includes both natural and non-natural persons. Subsection (2) allows the constable to seize any air weapons held and require the person’s name and address if a certificate or exemption is not provided.

105. Subsections (3) and (4) make it an offence to fail to provide a name and address, or to provide a false one, when required by this section. This offence attracts strict liability.

Section 29 – Cancellation of air weapon certificate

106. This section allows a court to order the cancellation of an individual’s air weapon certificate when that individual is convicted of one or more of the offences, or is subject to one of the other orders, set out in subsection (1). Orders may make provision about any type of firearm as well as air weapons.

107. Subsection (3) requires the court to notify the Chief Constable of a cancellation made under this section, at which point the Chief Constable must notify the certificate holder and allow 21 days for surrender of the certificate.

108. Subsections (4) and (5) make it an offence for an individual to fail to surrender the certificate within 21 days when required by subsection (3)(b), without reasonable excuse (for example, if they were unable to comply because they were serving a prison sentence).

Section 30 – Forfeiture and disposal of air weapons

109. This section allows a court to order the forfeiture or disposal of any air weapon in the possession of someone who has been convicted of any offence introduced by this Part. Subsection (3) allows a police constable to seize the weapon(s) in question, and subsection (4) allows the Chief Constable to apply to a sheriff to dispose of the weapon(s) in any manner the Chief Constable sees fit, for example by sale at auction, destruction by scrap metal dealer, or transfer to a museum if the weapon is of historic or other significance.

110. Subsection (5) provides that a court may not order the forfeiture or disposal of an air weapon which is possessed by a museum following a conviction for an air weapon offence or where it was seized or detained by a constable. This provides for situations where, for example, a person is convicted of possession of an air weapon where he or she has stolen it from a museum, or a member of museum staff commits an offence with a museum weapon, so that the court does not inadvertently order forfeiture and thereby prevent the museum from getting return of an air weapon which may be of historic or other significance.

111. Subsections (6) and (7) set out what happens to air weapons where the Chief Constable has revoked an air weapon certificate, police permit or visitor permit on which they are held, but the holder appeals against that revocation. If the appeal is successful then the air weapons must be returned to their owner, and if it is not then the court may order their disposal as the Sheriff considers appropriate.

112. Subsections (8) and (9) set out what happens to air weapons where the air weapon certificate, police permit or visitor permit on which they are held has been revoked and the holder does not appeal, or withdraws their appeal. In such a case the Chief Constable and the owner of the weapon should seek to agree arrangements for disposal (for example, transfer to someone permitted to possess air weapons, or sale through a Registered Firearms Dealer). If an agreement cannot be reached then the Chief Constable may dispose of them as he or she sees fit, which may be by one of the methods outlined in paragraph 109 above. In such a circumstance subsection (10) requires the Chief Constable to notify the owner of the method of disposal, who may then appeal against the Chief Constable’s decision under section 35(2)(n).
Offences

Section 31 – Failure to keep air weapons secure or to report loss to police

113. This section makes it an offence for a person in possession of an air weapon to fail to take reasonable precautions for its safe custody, or to fail to report the loss or theft of the air weapon to the Chief Constable as soon as reasonably practicable (this allows for any reasonable delay as a result of, for example, a person being ill in hospital or temporarily unaware of the loss or theft due to being on holiday). These offences apply to any person who possesses an air weapon, including natural and non-natural persons. The offences attract strict liability.

Section 32 – False statements, certificates and permits

114. This section creates two offences around providing false information in order to obtain an air weapon certificate, permit, or approval, or producing a falsified or improperly altered certificate or other information in order to obtain the repair or testing of an air weapon.

115. Subsection (1) makes it an offence to knowingly or recklessly make a statement which contains false information in order to procure an air weapon certificate, police permit, visitor permit, event permit, or club approval. This could include, for example, providing a false name, or declining to disclose a criminal history when asked. This offence may also be committed by the person verifying the application, if the verifier knew that the information was incorrect or was reckless in verifying false information.

116. Subsection (2) makes it an offence to produce a false or improperly altered air weapon certificate, police permit or visitor permit, or to provide any other false information, in order to purchase or acquire an air weapon, or to have one repaired or tested. This could include, for example, impersonating an air weapon certificate holder, or amending the details on an expired certificate so that it appeared to still be live.

Section 33 – Time limit for offences

117. This section provides that anyone committing a summary-only air weapon offence could have proceedings brought against them up to three years after that offence has been committed. Section 136 of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 normally sets a time limit of six months after the offence has been committed. This only applies to summary-only offences, which is all of the offences in this Part except the ones at section 2 and section 24.

Section 34 – Offences by bodies corporate etc.

118. This section provides for cases where there may be an offence committed by a non-natural person such as a body corporate, partnership or unincorporated association (e.g. an auctioneer, carrier firm, operator of a recreational shooting facility etc.). Subsection (2) states that both the individual who committed the specific offence, as well as the corporate entity on whose behalf the criminal act was done, can be proceeded against for the purpose of that offence.
General

Section 35 – Appeals

119. This section allows persons to appeal against various decisions made by the Chief Constable in administering the air weapon licensing regime. Subsection (2) lists the decisions that can be appealed.

120. Subsections (1) and (3) set out that appeals must be made to the appropriate sheriff, as defined by subsection (8), within 21 days of the decision being appealed against. Subsections (4) and (5) state that the sheriff should undertake a full consideration of the merits of the Chief Constable’s decision of new, including considering any evidence that the Chief Constable may not have been aware of at the time.

121. Subsection (6) allows the sheriff hearing the appeal either to dismiss it or to direct the Chief Constable to take whatever action the sheriff sees fit to resolve the matter under appeal (for example, ordering the Chief Constable to grant a refused certificate, or not to revoke a certificate).

122. Subsection (7) states that the decision of the sheriff may only be appealed on point of law. The effect of this is that appeals may be made on point of law ultimately to the Inner House of the Court of Session. The “appropriate sheriff” is defined as being the sheriff of the sheriffdom where the appellant resides or, where the appellant resides outside Scotland, the sheriff at Lothian and Borders. The latter is necessary because in certain circumstances an appellant may reside outside of Scotland, for example where a visitor permit has been refused.

Section 36 – Fees

123. This section allows the Scottish Ministers to set out fees for various aspects of the air weapon licensing regime in secondary legislation. Regulations under this section will be subject to the negative procedure in the Scottish Parliament. Subsection (1) provides that a fee can be set in relation to any application for a certificate, permit etc. under this Part, or to any other service provided by the Chief Constable in relation to the Chief Constable’s performance of functions under the Part. Subsection (2) provides that the Scottish Ministers may set out a range of fees taking into account different circumstances – for example, lower fees for co-terminous certificates – as well as situations where a fee may be waived entirely. Subsection (2)(c) allows fees to be raised or reduced by reference to factors specified in the regulations, such as inflation.

124. Subsection (3) provides that until the appropriate fee is tendered with an application it is not valid and this means the Chief Constable cannot consider any application under the Bill until the appropriate fee has been paid.

Section 37 – Power to make further provision

125. This section allows the Scottish Ministers to make regulations via secondary legislation setting out detailed provisions regarding the application and grant process for air weapon certificates, police permits, visitor permits, event permits, or club approvals. This would include, for example, setting out templates for application forms, granted certificates, and specifying the conditions referred to in section 6. Regulations under this section will be subject to the negative procedure in the Scottish Parliament.

Section 37A – Crown application

126. This section exempts the Crown from criminal liability for any contravention of a provision made by or under Part 1 of the Bill. Enforcement against the Crown is restricted to one of the authorities named in subsection (2) seeking a declarator of unlawfulness in the Court of Session. Subsection (3) makes it clear, though, that this exemption does not extend to persons in the public service of the Crown. Instead, paragraph 17 of schedule 1 exempts certain public servants from the requirement to hold an air weapon certificate when dealing with air weapons in the course of their duties.

Section 38 – Transitional arrangements for existing certificate holders

127. This section introduces a temporary exemption that applies to persons who are aged 14 years or over and already hold a firearm and/ or shotgun certificate issued under the 1968 Act at the point when the section 2 offence is brought into force. Under subsection (2) such persons can possess and use (but not purchase or acquire) air weapons without holding an air weapon certificate, until their existing firearm and/ or shotgun certificate expires or is renewed. When renewing the firearm or shotgun certificate the individual should apply to the Chief Constable for first grant of an air weapon certificate if it is desired to continue to possess or use an air weapon.

128. This section also applies to firearm and shotgun certificates issued in the rest of Great Britain, so someone from England or Wales who holds valid a firearm and/ or shotgun certificate could visit Scotland with an air weapon without requiring to apply for a visitor permit, subject to the restrictions set out below.

129. Subsection (3) requires that a person making use of this exemption must nonetheless comply with the mandatory conditions for air weapon certificates to be specified in regulations issued under Section 37 – and, in the case of an individual aged below 18, can only use the air weapon for of the purposes mentioned in section 7(5). Subsections (4) to (6) set out the offence, exception and penalty related to non-compliance with the conditions mentioned in subsection (3). This offence attracts strict liability.

130. Subsection (7) sets out that this transitional exemption applies from the day that the offence at section 2 comes into effect, and ends on the day that the individual’s firearm and/ or shotgun certificate is renewed or expires. Subsection (7)(b)(ii) provides that should the firearm and/ or shotgun certificate be surrendered, cancelled or revoked before its stated expiry date, the transitional exemption will also end.

131. Subsections (8) and (9) apply where the individual holds both a firearm and shotgun certificate, which are not co-terminous. Subsection (8) states that the transitional exemption ends on the later of the two certificate expiry dates. Subsection (9) states that should either certificate be surrendered the transition exemption continues in force until the remaining one expires or is surrendered, while if either certificate is cancelled or revoked then the transitional exemption ends immediately. Subsection (10) ensures that those making use of the exemption are also able to make use of the exemption in paragraph 16 of schedule 1.

Section 39 – Guidance

132. This section allows the Scottish Ministers to publish, revise and revoke guidance on any aspect of the air weapon licensing regime. Subsection (1) obliges the Chief Constable to take account of this guidance when carrying out his or her duties. Guidance will also be publicly available so that all stakeholders are aware of the Scottish Ministers’ view on application of the regime.

Section 40 – Interpretation of Part 1

133. This section provides definitions for various terms used throughout the Part.

134. Subsections (4) and (5) provide that where terms used in the Part are the same as those used in existing UK firearms legislation then the jurisprudence of the courts on interpretation of those terms in the existing UK firearms legislation applies equally to those terms when used in the Bill. The effect of this is to ensure that common terms are interpreted consistently across the Bill and the wider corpus of firearms legislation.

PART 2 – ALCOHOL LICENSING

135. The provisions in this Part amend the licensing regime for alcohol licensing within the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005.

Licensing objectives

Section 41 – Licensing objectives: protecting young persons from harm

136. Section 41 amends the licensing objective at section 4(1)(e) of the 2005 Act to include young persons. The term young person is defined at section 147 of the 2005 Act and means a person aged 16 or 17. Under the current legislation, Boards must ensure that their decision making is underpinned by the five licensing objectives, including the objective ‘to protect children from harm’. This amendment expands this requirement so that Boards must also consider protecting ‘young people’ from harm.

Statements of licensing policy

Section 42 – Statements of licensing policy: licensing policy periods

137. Section 42 amends section 6 of the 2005 Act in relation to statements of licensing policy. A statement of licensing policy will generally have effect from 18 months after a local government election until 18 months after the next local government election. For example, the next local government elections are scheduled for May 2017 and May 2021 with the result that, in the usual case, the statements of licensing policy would last November 2018 until November 2022.
138. It is possible for the Licensing Board to decide that a statement of licensing policy should come into effect earlier than it otherwise would, and if they do so, then they must publish the licensing policy statement and publicise the date on which the licensing policy statement is to come into effect.

Fit and proper person test

139. The Bill introduces a ‘fit and proper person test’ into the processes for obtaining, reviewing and potentially revoking licences under the 2005 Act by virtue of sections 43 to 48. In each of these sections, the fit and proper test is considered with regard to the licensing objectives. It also makes some associated changes to the handling of information relating to relevant offences and foreign offences.

Section 43 – Premises licence application: ground for refusal

140. Section 43 amends section 22 of the 2005 Act with regard to objections and representations in relation to premises licences applications. Section 43 clarifies that an objection to or representation concerning a premise licence application may include any information that the person submitting the objection or representation considers relevant to consideration of any of the grounds for refusal, including information in relation to the applicant, a connected person in relation to the applicant, or any person who would be an interested party in relation to the premises if the application were to be granted.

141. Section 43 also amends section 23 of the 2005 Act in relation to the grounds of refusal for a premises licence application. Section 43 provides that it is a ground for refusal at a hearing when determining premises licence applications in section 23 of the 2005 Act, if the Licensing Board considers that, having regard to the licensing objectives, the applicant is not a fit and proper person to be the holder of a premises licence. An amendment is also made to section 23(8) so that, where the Licensing Board refuses a licence on the fit and proper person ground, the Board must state the licensing objective that the ground relates to.

142. Section 43 also amends section 23(6) of the 2005 Act in relation to determination of premises licence applications. Section 43 clarifies that any conviction notice supplied by the chief constable and any antisocial behaviour report by the chief constable supplied to the Board, is relevant to the specific consideration of the new fit and proper test as well as to consideration of the existing ground of refusal that the application would be inconsistent with one or more of the licensing objectives.

Section 44 – Application to transfer premises licence: ground for refusal

143. Section 44 amends section 33 of the 2005 Act in relation to grounds for refusal for an application to transfer a premises licence (whether on the application of the current licence holder or someone else). Section 44 provides that it is a ground for refusal at a hearing when determining applications to transfer premises licences under section 33 of the 2005 Act if the Licensing Board considers that, having regard to the licensing objectives, the transferee is not a fit and proper person to be the holder of a premises licence.
144. This section also expands the information that can be provided to the Licensing Board by the Chief Constable upon receiving notice of a transfer of a premises licence. This includes information in relation to the transferee, a connected person in relation to the licence holder or an interested party in relation to the licensed premises, if the application for the transfer were to be granted. If information is provided, the Licensing Board must hold a hearing to determine the application.

Section 45 – Ground for review of premises licence

145. Section 45 makes amendments with regards to review of a premises licence (both on an application by a third party for a review and on a proposal for a review initiated by the Licensing Board itself). Section 45 provides that it is a ground for review of a premises licence, if having regard to the licensing objectives, the licence holder is not a fit and proper person to be the holder of a premises licence. If a review is based on this ground, the review application or proposal must include a summary of the information on which the applicant or the Board based its view that the alleged ground applies.

146. Section 45 clarifies that any person who makes a premises licence review application may include in the application any information that the person considers relevant to the Licensing Board’s consideration of the alleged ground of review, including information related to the licence holder, connected persons in relation to the licence holder or an interested party in relation to the licensed premises.

147. Section 45 also amends section 37 of the 2005 Act in relation to a review of a premises licence on the Licensing Board’s initiative. Section 45 clarifies that the Licensing Board’s review proposal may include information that the Board considers relevant to its consideration of the alleged ground of review, in relation to the licence holder, connected persons in relation to the licence holder or interested parties in relation to the licensed premises.

148. If at the review hearing the Licensing Board is satisfied that the fit and proper person ground for review is established, the Board must revoke the licence. Thereafter the Board must provide notification of its determination to the licence holder and where the decision is taken in connection with a premises licence review application, the applicant. A decision to revoke the licence is added to the list of decisions in schedule 5 to the 2005 Act that are appealable to the sheriff principal.

149. Section 45 also amends section 39 of the 2005 Act to provide that a revocation of a licence will take effect 28 days after the Board makes its decision. This provides a short period of grace in which action may be taken to render the premises licence acceptable to the Licensing Board, for example by varying the licence to remove a premises manager or by transferring the premises licence to a new licence holder.

150. Section 45 also inserts a new section 39B into the 2005 Act, which provides that, where a Licensing Board has revoked a premises licence on the grounds that the licence holder is not a fit and proper person, then the Board must recall the revocation if a relevant application is made within the 28 day period, and the Board ultimately grants the relevant application. The period of 28 days may be extended by the Board pending determination of a relevant application.
relevant applications would be applications for transfer of the licence, or for a premises licence variation that the Board considers would remove the ground on which the licence had been revoked.

Section 46 - Personal licence applications and renewals: ground for refusal 151. Section 46 makes amendments to sections 73, 74 and 78 of the 2005 Act in relation to personal licence applications and renewals. Section 46 provides that it is a ground for refusal at a hearing when determining personal licence application or personal licence renewal application under section 74 of the 2005 Act if the Licensing Board considers that, having regard to the licensing objectives, the applicant is not a fit and proper person to be the holder of a personal licence.

152. Subsection (2) provides that on giving a notice under subsection (3)(a) or (b) of section 73 of the 2005 Act, the Chief Constable may also provide to the Licensing Board any information in relation to the applicant that the Chief Constable considers may be relevant to consideration of the application by the Board.

153. Section 46 also inserts a new section 73A into the 2005 Act to provide that where a Licensing Board receives a personal licence application, the Board must give notice of it, together with a copy of the application, to a Licensing Standards Officer for the Board’s area. A Licensing Standards Officer may, within 21 days of the date of receipt of this notice, respond to the notice by giving the Licensing Board any information in relation to the applicant that the Officer considers may be relevant to consideration of the application by the Board. If information is supplied to the Board by the Chief Constable or by a Licensing Standards Officer, the Board may hold a hearing.

Section 47 – Personal licence holders: procedure on receipt of notice of conviction

154. Section 83 of the 2005 Act provides the procedure that a Licensing Board must follow where they receive notice of a conviction (or otherwise become aware of a conviction) of a personal licence holder. The Board must notify the Chief Constable of the conviction and, where the existence of the conviction is confirmed by the Chief Constable, the Board must hold a hearing to review the licence.

155. Section 47 of the Bill amends section 83 to enable a Licensing Board to consider at such hearings whether the licence holder is a fit and proper person to hold a personal licence. Where the Board are satisfied the person is not a fit and proper person to hold a personal licence, they must make an order revoking the licence. A decision to make such an order is added to the list of decisions in schedule 5 to the 2005 Act that are appealable to the sheriff.

Section 48 – Personal licence holders: conduct inconsistent with the licensing objectives

156. Section 84 of the 2005 Act provides the procedure that a Licensing Board must follow when, in the course of reviewing a premises licence under section 38 of the 2005 Act, they find that a personal licence holder was acting on the premises in a manner not consistent with the licensing objectives. Where the Licensing Board makes such a finding a hearing must be held where the Board can revoke, suspend or endorse the licence if they believe it necessary to do so.
This document relates to the Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill as amended at Stage 2 (SP Bill 49A)

157. Section 48 of the Bill amends section 84 to enable a Licensing Board to consider at such hearings whether the licence holder is a fit and proper person to hold a personal licence. Where the Board are satisfied the person is not a fit and proper person to hold a personal licence, they must make an order revoking the licence. A decision to make such an order is added to the list of decisions in schedule 5 to the 2005 Act that are appealable to the sheriff.

Transfer of premises licences

Section 48A – Transfer of premises licences

158. Section 48A amends the transfer provisions at section 33 of the 2005 Act to provide that it is the transferee that commences the transfer procedure in all circumstances. This also includes amendments to the procedures for the transfer of premises licences. Section 33A is inserted into the 2005 Act to make further provision in relation to the new transfer procedure. Section 34 (transfer on application of person other than the licence holder) of the 2005 Act is repealed as it is no longer necessary in light of the amendments to section 33. The appeal provisions at Part 1 of schedule 5 to the 2005 Act are also amended.

159. Section 48A amends section 33 of the 2005 Act to allow for any person, other than an individual under 18, to apply to the appropriate Licensing Board for the transfer of a premises licence to that person.

160. Subsection (2) inserts a new section 33(1A) into the 2005 Act to provide that the application must specify the date on which the transfer is to take effect, be accompanied by the original premises licence, or a statement of reasons for failure to produce the licence, and a written statement signed by the current holder of the premises licence consenting to the transfer to the transferee, or if that is not practical a statement of the reasons for failure to provide the written consent of the current holder of the premises licence. It is envisaged that this might cover instances of death, insolvency, dissolution and incapacity.

161. Subsection (2) also provides that the current requirement to provide the chief constable with a copy of the application in section 33(4) of the 2005 Act is amended, such that no copy need be provided if the Board must refuse the application under section 33(8A).

162. Subsection (2) also inserts section 33(8)(za) into the 2005 Act. The effect is that, if the written consent of the current licence holder is provided and the other requirements of section 38(8) of the 2005 Act are met (i.e. the transferee has no relevant conviction and there is no recommendation from the chief constable for refusal), then the transfer application must be granted. Thereafter, a new subsection 33(8A) is inserted providing that, where an application is not accompanied by a consent statement from the original licence holder, it must be refused unless the Board agrees to dispense with the requirement for a consent statement under the new section 33A(4).
163. Subsection (4) inserts a new section 33A into the 2005 Act, which make further provision for the procedures to be followed for applications to transfer a premises licence. Subsection (2) of the new section 33A requires the Board to take all reasonable steps to notify the original premises licence holder of the application. It is envisaged that this would allow the original premises licence holder to flag up where the holder’s consent had been faked, or the holder would otherwise not be in agreement with the transfer.

164. Where a notice of consent by the original premises licence holder has not been provided, subsection (4) of the new section 33A provides that the Board may dispense with the requirement if it is satisfied that the applicant has taken all reasonable steps to contact the original premises licence holder to obtain written consent, but has received no response. Where the Board decides not to dispense with the requirement for a letter of consent, subsection (5) of the new section 33A provides that it must notify the applicant and provide its reasons for that decision.

165. Subsection (6) of the new section 33A provides that where it has been decided to dispense with the requirement for a letter of consent, the Board must hold a hearing to determine the transfer application.

166. Subsection (7) of the new section 33A provides that, where an application is granted, the transfer is to take place on the date specified by the applicant, or where this date has passed, such date as the Board may determine.

167. Section 48A(6) amends Part 1 of schedule 5 to the 2005 Act, on appeals to the sheriff principal, to reflect the new transfer procedure. The right of appeal against a refusal to grant a premises transfer application is amended by subsection (6)(b) to extend to either the applicant or the premises licence holder. Subsection (6)(c) provides that the right of appeal against the granting of a premises licence transfer application is provided to the original holder of the premises licence. Subsection (6)(c) also provides that the right of appeal against the Board’s refusal to dispense with the requirement for a consent statement, as per the new section 33A(4), is provided to the applicant for a premises licence transfer.

Relevant offences and foreign offences

Section 49 – Premises licences: procedure in relation to relevant offences or foreign offences

168. Section 49 amends section 44 of the 2005 Act so that when a Licensing Board receives a notice of conviction in relation to a premises licence holder (or a person connected to the premises licence holder) they must initiate a review of the premises licence and hold a hearing only where the Chief Constable has made a recommendation under section 44(5), namely that having regard to the conviction specified in the notice, it is necessary for the purposes of any of the licensing objectives that the premises licence should be varied, suspended or revoked. Where the Chief Constable has not made such a recommendation then the Board may either make a premises licence review proposal, (and hold a hearing), or decide to take no further action in relation to the conviction.
Section 50 – Personal licences: procedure in relation to relevant offences or foreign offences

169. Section 50 amends section 83 of the 2005 Act so that when a Licensing Board receives notice of a conviction in relation to a personal licence they must hold a hearing only where the Chief Constable has made a recommendation under section 83(5), namely that having regard to the conviction specified in the notice it is necessary for the purposes of any of the licensing objectives that personal licence should be varied, suspended or revoked. Where the Chief Constable has not made such a recommendation then the Board may either hold a hearing, or decide to take no further action in relation to the conviction.

Section 51 – Relevant offences and foreign offences: spent convictions

170. Section 51 repeals section 129(4) of the 2005 Act which prohibits any consideration of a conviction for a relevant offence or foreign offence if it is spent for the purposes of the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974. This amendment will make it possible for spent convictions to be brought to and considered by Boards as part of their decision-making.

Supply of alcohol to a child or young person

Section 52 – Offences of supplying alcohol to a child or young person

171. Subsection (1) of this provision inserts section 104A into the 2005 Act making it a criminal offence for a person, other than a child or young person, to buy or attempt to buy alcohol for or on behalf of a child or to give or otherwise make available alcohol to a child.

172. It also inserts a new section 104B which makes it a criminal offence for a person, other than a child or young person, to buy, attempt to buy, give or otherwise make alcohol available, to a young person. “Young person” is defined in section 147 of the 2005 Act as a person who is 16 or 17 years of age.

173. It is not an offence under either section however to buy alcohol for, or give alcohol to, a child or young person, a) for consumption other than in a public place or b) for the purposes of religious worship.

174. In addition, it is not an offence under section 104B – if beer, wine, cider or perry is bought, given or made available to the young person along with a meal to be consumed in relevant premises.

175. These exceptions do not apply to the offences of buying alcohol on behalf of a child or young person.

176. There is also a defence to the section 104B offence if the person who bought or gave the alcohol did not know the young person was under 18 years.

177. A person convicted of either offence may receive a fine, not exceeding level 5 on the standard scale, imprisonment for up to three months, or both.
178. In both sections, “public place” is defined as relevant premises, any place to which public have access to at the relevant time (on payment or not), and any place to which the public do not have access but which the child or young person unlawfully gains access to. The term “relevant premises” is defined in section 122 of the 2005 Act.

179. Subsection (2) repeals subsections (4), (5) and (7) of section 105 of the 2005 Act (and consequentially renames that section), as the substance of those subsections is replicated in new sections 104A and 104B.

Miscellaneous

Section 53 – Meaning of “alcohol”: inclusion of angostura bitters

180. This provision amends section 2 of the 2005 Act to include angostura bitters within the definition of “alcohol”. Angostura Bitters were exempt from Excise and were excluded from the 2005 Act definition of alcohol. However, they are now liable for Excise duty and have been brought into the definition of alcohol.

Section 54 – Overprovision

181. Section 54 amends section 7 of the 2005 Act which deals with the duty of Licensing Boards to assess overprovision, and provides that where a Board determines the “localities” for the purposes of the Act then it may determine that the whole of the Board’s area is a single locality.

182. Section 7 is further amended so that the Licensing Board may have regard to such matters as the Board considers appropriate, including the licensed hours of licensed premises in the locality, when assessing if there is overprovision.

183. Amendments are also made to allow these wider factors to be taken into account at:

- section 23(5)(e) of the 2005 Act (refusal of a premises licence on grounds of overprovision), and
- section 30(5)(d) of the 2005 Act (refusal to vary premises licence on grounds of overprovision).

These amendments remove specific reference to numbers and capacity when considering whether there would be overprovision as a ground for refusal, when a Board is determining a premises licence application or an application for a premises licence variation.

184. Removing these references means that Licensing Boards can refuse an application if they consider that there would be overprovision if the application was granted. Their consideration of overprovision would not be confined to considering only numbers and capacity but could take account of other factors too.
Section 55 – Duty of Licensing Boards to produce annual financial report

185. This provision inserts section 9A into the 2005 Act requiring Licensing Boards to produce an annual financial report on their alcohol licensing activities.

186. Section 9A(1), (2) and (3) place a duty on Licensing Boards to prepare and publish the annual financial report no later than three months after the end of the financial year. It should contain details of relevant income received by the Licensing Board during the financial year; details of relevant expenditure incurred in respect of the Board’s area during the year; and an explanation of how the amounts in the report were calculated. The Board is required to break down its figures into the component sources of relevant income and expenditure. Relevant income for example would be premises licence application fees, personal licence fees or fees charged in respect of an application to vary a premises licence and relevant expenditure would for example be the salary cost of a Licensing Standards Officer in respect of his duties under the alcohol licensing regime or the costs for the Board in administering the alcohol licensing regime.

187. Section 9A (4) and (5) provide that the aforementioned annual financial report may also include such other information about the performance of the Licensing Board’s functions as they consider appropriate, and that at the request of the Licensing Board the relevant council must provide the Board with such information as the Board may reasonably require for the purpose of preparing a report under this section. Subsection (6) gives the Scottish Ministers an order making power to make further provision about reports under this section, including provision about the form and content of reports; further details on what constitutes relevant income and relevant expenditure; and the publication of reports.

Section 55A – Licensing Standards Officers: general function in relation to personal licences 188. Section 55A amends section 14(1) of the 2005 Act which deals with general functions of Licensing Standards Officers. This provision makes it clear that Licensing Standards Officers have a new general function of being able to provide information to Licensing Boards about the conduct of personal licence holders or applicants for a personal licence which is inconsistent with the licensing objectives.

Section 55B – Powers of Licensing Standards Officers

189. Section 55B inserts section 84B into the 2005 Act to provide Licensing Standards Officers with a specific power to report conduct of a personal licence holder, who is or was working in licensed premises in their area, which is inconsistent with the licensing objectives, to the relevant Licensing Board.

190. Where a Licensing Board receives such a report from a Licensing Standards Officer the Board may hold a hearing, but is under no obligation to do so.
Section 56 – Interested parties

191. This provision amends section 40A (connected persons and interested parties: licence holder’s duty to notify changes,) to remove the references to interested parties, including within the section title. It also removes a requirement to notify changes of interested parties. The licence holder now only requires to provide notification in respect of connected persons.

192. It also amends the definition of an interested party at section 147(5) by permitting that a premises manager can be an interested party. This has the effect of allowing the premises manager to be subject to vicarious liability for offences under s141B.

Section 57 – Personal licences: grant, duration and renewal

193. This provision amends section 74 of the 2005 Act regarding the determination of a personal licence application. Section 74(3) provides conditions which must be met before an application can be granted. This provision amends section 74(3)(c) which currently states a personal licence cannot be granted if one has been revoked in the last five years. This provision amends section 74(3)(c) to provide that the provision is not applicable to persons who have had a personal licence revoked under section 87(3) of the 2005 Act. Accordingly, if a personal licence is revoked under section 87(3) the person will no longer have to wait for five years to elapse before applying for a new personal licence.

194. This provision also amends section 77(8) of the 2005 Act to increase the length of time prior to the expiry date of a personal licence that the relevant Licensing Board must give notice to the licence holder that the licence will cease to have effect on the expiry date unless renewed. The period of time is increased to nine months before the expiry date of a personal licence.

195. The provision amends section 78 of the 2005 Act to increase the length of the time period in which a personal licence holder may apply to the relevant Licensing Board for renewal of the licence, as well as to increase the length of the period provided for the Licensing Board’s consideration of this application. The period of time to submit an application under section 78(1) is now within the nine months period beginning 12 months before the expiry date of the licence.

196. The provision also amends Section 78(5) of the 2005 Act to remove the requirement that an applicant for renewal of a personal licence must not already hold a personal licence.

197. Finally section 84A of the 2005 Act is amended to provide that if a Chief Constable reports conduct inconsistent with the licensing objectives to the relevant Licensing Board, the whole of section 84(8) now applies in relation to an order made under subsection (2) of this section as opposed to only section 84(8)(a). This means that the Board making the order must now notify the order to the licence holder, the Board who gave the original notice and the Board who issued the licence, if these are different Boards.

Section 58 – Processing and deemed grant of applications

198. Section 58 inserts a requirement for Licensing Boards to issue an acknowledgement for relevant applications, where the application meets the requirements. The requirements for an application form are those imposed under the 2005 Act or any other relevant enactment in respect of the type of application.

199. The acknowledgement must amongst other things inform the applicant of the timescale within which the application must be decided. The acknowledgement must be issued as soon as is practicable.

200. Where an application does not meet the requirements, the Licensing Board must give notice to the applicant that they are treating the application as incomplete and as not having been made, along with their reasons.

201. A Licensing Board must determine accepted applications within nine months of the date of receipt, as recorded in the letter of acknowledgement. This period of nine months can be extended, once, on application to the sheriff. The sheriff may extend the period for determining the application only if it appears to them, that there is a good reason for doing so. The applicant is entitled to be a party to proceedings to consider such an extension.

202. The Licensing Board is not required to issue an acknowledgement where it would not be appropriate to do so, however this would not alter the requirement to determine an application within nine months unless an extension has been granted by the sheriff. A Board may for example decide to grant a minor variation under subsection 30(2) without first issuing an acknowledgement.

203. If the Licensing Board fails to determine the application in this period then the licence will be deemed to have been granted and the Licensing Board must issue the licence to the applicant as soon as practicable. The Licensing Board must apply the relevant mandatory conditions, under schedule 3, or 4, including, where applicable, the Late Opening Premises Conditions, as set out in The Licensing Conditions (Late Opening Premises)(Scotland) Regulations 2007, but at time of issue, may not apply pool conditions or local conditions to a licence granted in this way.

Section 59 – Form etc. of communications under the 2005 Act

204. Section 59 expands the order making power provided at section 134 of the 2005 Act in relation to the form etc. of applications, proposals and notices to also include other communications. This means, for example, that the Scottish Ministers may make regulations expressly facilitating the use of email or other internet based systems for any type of application, notice, proposal or communication required under the 2005 Act.

PART 3 – CIVIC LICENSING

205. This Part of the Bill makes a number of amendments to the licensing provisions in the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982.
Taxis and private hire cars

Section 60 – Refusal to grant private hire car licences on grounds of overprovision

206. Section 60 amends section 10 of the 1982 Act. This enables (but does not require) the licensing authority to refuse a private hire car licence application on the grounds of overprovision of private hire car services in a given locality or localities. It allows the licensing authority to determine the localities within their area, allowing them to either treat the whole licensing authority area as one locality or sub-divide it. The section also provides that when assessing overprovision the licensing authority must have regard to the number of private hire cars operating in the locality and the demand for private hire car services in the locality.

Section 61 – Testing of private hire car drivers

207. Section 61 amends section 13 of the 1982 Act to allow licensing authority to require testing of applicants for a private hire car driver licence, as per the current ability to do so for a taxi driver’s licence. Licensing authorities will be able to require the same testing of both taxi and private hire car drivers or different elements of testing (or no testing) of one set of drivers.

Section 62 – Exemptions from requirements of sections 10 to 21 of 1982 Act

208. Section 62 amends section 22 of the 1982 Act to remove the exemption at subsection (c) which applies to ‘any vehicle while it is being used for carrying passengers under a contract for its exclusive hire for a period of not less than 24 hours’. This brings vehicles that are being used on contract in this manner into the licensing regime for taxis and private hire cars. Examples of the type of service that could potentially be brought within the licensing regime for taxi and private hire cars are: executive hire work – where a car is hired to transport an individual between meetings over the course of a day; airport transfers – where a car is hired to transport customers on longer journeys (meaning the car can only do one job in the 24 hour period) e.g. collecting from Glasgow Airport and taking a group to Iona.

209. Subsection (4) gives the Scottish Ministers the power to specify by order further exemptions from taxi and private hire car licensing. It is assumed the definition of a hire car within the 1982 Act makes clear the type of operation that should covered: ‘…‘hire car’ means a motor vehicle with a driver…which is, with a view to profit, available for hire by the public for personal conveyance.’ However, if it becomes clear types of service not intended to be covered are being swept up in taxi and private hire car licensing, this power could be used e.g. where a service is providing some kind of transport as an ancillary part of the wider service, not the main focus. An example could be if child-minders are being expected to be licensed as private hire car drivers and their vehicles licensed for collecting children in their care from school by car. The power could be used to make explicit that this type of operation is not intended to be covered.

Section 62A – Penalties for failure to have appropriate licence or comply with conditions

210. Section 62A amends section 7 of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 to increase the penalties for the offences of operating without a metal dealer’s licence or itinerant metal dealer’s licence (where a licence is required) to a maximum fine of £20,000 and or six months imprisonment on summary conviction. Section 62A also increases the maximum penalties for the offence of failing to comply with a condition of a metal dealer’s or itinerant metal dealer’s licence to the same level i.e. a fine of £20,000 or six months imprisonment, or both.

Section 63 – Removal of exemption warrants for certain metal dealers

211. This section amends section 28 of the 1982 Act and repeals section 29 of the 1982 Act to remove the current provisions that allow a metal dealer with an audited turnover in excess of a figure specified by order (currently £1 million) to be exempted from licensing requirements. This will have the effect of ensuring that all dealers are subject to licensing requirements.

Section 64 – Abolition of requirement to retain metal for 48 hours

212. This section repeals section 31 of the 1982 Act to remove the mandatory requirement that metal dealers should not process metal for 48 hours after receiving it. This would allow a dealer to process metal quickly (which may be required for the safe operation of the site).

Section 65 – Acceptable forms of payment for metal

213. This section creates a new section 33A in the 1982 Act. This specifies acceptable forms of payment that may be accepted by a metal dealer or itinerant metal dealer. The acceptable forms of payment are a cheque or electronic transfer into a bank or building society account. Cash is not an acceptable form of payment. A dealer who makes payment in a method not specified commits an offence. The offence extends to a person with day to day management responsibilities and the person who makes the payment. The metal dealer and manager are provided with a defence that they have made arrangements to ensure that payment is made by the specified methods and have taken all reasonable steps to ensure compliance. Subsection (7) gives Scottish Ministers the power by regulation to add or remove forms of payment that are acceptable and to make any consequential changes to section 33A or 33B(3) in consequence of changes to the acceptable form of payment.

214. Section 65 also adds a new section 33AA into the 1982 Act which provides a definition of what constitutes an acceptable bank or building society account is for the purposes of the regime. Subsection (4) in particular stipulates types of account that are not acceptable, with reference to Part 4A of the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000.

Section 66 – Metal dealers and itinerant metal dealers: records

215. This section amends the record keeping requirements for metal dealers and itinerant metal dealers. A new section 33B is inserted into the 1982 Act and provides the details that must be recorded by a dealer when metal is acquired or disposed of and supports the separate provisions stipulating acceptable forms of payment by requiring dealers to keep copies of documentation evidencing the form of payment used. Subsection (6) of section 33B provides the Scottish Ministers the power by regulation to amend the record keeping requirement and to stipulate particular means that can be used for the purpose of establishing a person’s name and address e.g. passport, driving licence, residency permit, bank statement etc.
216. The section also inserts a new section 33C into the 1982 Act to stipulate how records should be stored and a new section 33D to require records to be kept for each place of business a dealer operates from.

217. The section also creates an offence in relation to a failure to comply with the new requirements in relation to record keeping and amends the existing offence in relation to providing false or misleading information.

Section 66A – Register of dealers in metal

218. Section 66A create a new section 35A in the 1982 Act that provides regulation-making powers to the Scottish Ministers to establish, keep and maintain a register of metal dealers and itinerant metal dealers and the matters that regulations establishing the register may cover. These matters may include such things as who is to keep and maintain the register, the duty to provide information, the information to be covered by the register, the form and publication of the register and any fees that may be relevant. Examples of information that may be included in the register might include the name (or trading names) of the person holding the licence, a contact address for the person and the person’s place of business, which type (or types) of licence the person holds and the date on which the licence (or licences) will expire.

Section 66B – Interpretation of provisions relating to metal dealers etc.

219. Section 66B amends section 37 of the 1982 Act to amend the definition of both metal dealers and itinerant metal dealers to encompass those who buy or sell metal as opposed to those who both buy and sell metal (which was the previous position). The 1982 Act is amended to provide the activities that are licensable and it is explicitly stated that a motor salvage operator, as defined in subsection (3), is carrying out the business of a metal dealer and will require a licence to do so.

220. The section provides that a licence is required for those who carry on a business that “wholly or substantially” consists of buying or selling scrap. This means that those who deal in scrap metal to a significant degree will require a licence but those whose involvement is peripheral or tangential will not. It will be a matter of fact or degree whether a licence is necessary in individual circumstances but, for example, it might well be the case that a plumber who acquires some metal piping in the course of domestic repairs would not require to be licensed. Conversely, a skip hirer who takes substantial amounts of metal from a building site, and that forms a substantial part of the hiree’s business may require to be licensed.

Section 66C – Exemptions from requirements of sections 28 to 37 of 1982 Act

221. Section 66C creates a new section 37A within the 1982 Act. The new section creates a regulation-making power that will allow the Scottish Ministers to set out circumstances where the metal dealer and itinerant metal dealer regime does not apply, thereby resulting in a licence not being required.
Public entertainment venues

Section 67 – Licensing of theatres etc.

222. This section repeals existing licensing requirements in the Theatres Act 1968 (“the 1968 Act”) and supporting provisions in the 1968 Act that allow for powers of entry and inspection and prevent licensing being used to censor the content of plays.

223. The section also removes the exemption for premises licensed under the 1968 Act from the 1982 Act thereby allowing plays to fall into the activities that may be licensed under public entertainment licensing arrangements. An equivalent of the anti-censorship provisions in the 1968 Act is inserted into the 1982 Act.

Section 67A – Restriction of exemption from requirements for public entertainment licence 224. Sections 67A restricts the exemption from public entertainment licensing requirements contained in section 41(2)(f) of the 1982 Act, to specify that the exemption is only applicable to premises in possession of a premises licence within the meaning of section 17 of the 2005 Act. This would result in those in possession of an occasional licence issued under section 56 of the 2005 Act no longer being exempt from public entertainment licensing requirements.

Sexual entertainment venues

Section 68 – Licensing of sexual entertainment venues

225. The Section creates a new licensing regime for sexual entertainment venues.

226. This is achieved by amending the existing licensing scheme for sex shops found in Part 3 and Schedule 2 of the 1982 Act, such that it applies to sexual entertainment venues also, with modifications as necessary. The following paragraphs explain the key features of the new regime as modified.

227. The section amends section 41(2) of the 1982 Act to preclude a sexual entertainment venue from being licensed under public entertainment licences.

228. The section creates a new section 45A which establishes for the purposes of the legislation what is meant by a sexual entertainment venue and provides definitions of ‘audience’, ‘financial gain’, ‘organiser’, ‘premises’, ‘sexual entertainment’ itself and ‘display of nudity’. A power is provided by the section to allow the Scottish Ministers to prescribe types of premises that are not sexual entertainment venues. Sex shops are specifically identified as not being sexual entertainment venues.

229. A power is provided by the section to allow the Scottish Ministers to prescribe descriptions of performances or displays of nudity that are not to be treated as sexual entertainment for the purposes of the legislation.
231. The section specifies that a venue hosting sexual entertainment very occasionally (defined as three occasions or less) would not be treated as a sexual entertainment venue.

232. A new section 45B is created which requires a resolution by a local authority in order for sexual entertainment venue licensing to have effect in their area. The section requires that a resolution under the section would not have effect until a specified date (which cannot be less than one year after the resolution is passed). A resolution must be publicised either electronically or in a local newspaper.

233. The section also allows a local authority to determine an appropriate number of sexual entertainment venues for their area. The appropriate number so determined must be publicised then the determination must be publicised in a manner considered appropriate by the local authority.

234. Section 45B also clarifies that a licence for a sexual entertainment does not have to be granted even when a premises licence under Part 3 of 2005 Act (an alcohol licence) is in place.

235. Unlike sex shops, it will be permissible for a person under 18 to enter a sexual entertainment venue or be employed by such a venue but only at times when sexual entertainment is not taking place.”

236. Section 45B also provides that local authorities must have regard to any guidance issued by the Scottish Ministers.

Miscellaneous and general

Section 69 – Deemed grant of applications

237. The section modernises and expands the requirement for licensing authorities to deal with matters expeditiously. Failure to do so has the result that the application will be deemed to have been authorised. The expanded requirement also includes applications for variations to a licence so that a failure to take a decision within the specified timescale would have the effect that the variation would be deemed to have been agreed.

238. Section 3 of the 1982 Act is amended to modernise the language to provide greater clarity of the requirement to consider an application within three months and then reach a final decision within a further six months.

239. Section 3(4) is amended to include variations and to clarify the language used to describe the effect of a failure of a licensing authority to reach a decision.

240. A new subsection (4A) is inserted in section 3 of the 1982 Act to specify the duration of a licence or temporary licence granted under the ‘deemed grant provisions’.
241. A new subsection (4B) is inserted in section 3 of the 1982 Act to clarify that a licence issued under these provisions is not immune to the separate powers of a licensing authority to vary, suspend or revoke licences or to consider renewal.

242. A new section 45C is added to the 1982 Act to replicate these provisions in relation to sex shops and sexual entertainment venues.

Section 69A – Revocation of Part 2 licences

243. This section gives a licensing authority the ability to revoke a Part 2 licence, in addition to the current ability to suspend such licences. This is achieved by a number of amendments to the provisions of the 1982 Act. While it will be for the licensing authority to determine what the most appropriate disposal is in the circumstances, it is now possible for the authority to revoke a licence in circumstances where previously its only option was to suspend it. Paragraph 11 of Schedule 1 to the 1982 Act sets out those circumstances in full.

Section 70 – Procedure for hearings

244. Section 70 amends the 1982 Act by inserting paragraph 18A, in Schedule 1 and inserting paragraph 24A in Schedule 2. The new paragraphs create an order-making power to allow the Scottish Ministers to make provision about hearings in relation to activities licensed under Part 1 to 3 of the 1982 Act. The regulations may cover notice of hearings, rules of evidence, representation, timescales for steps in the procedure, and liability for expenses. The regulations may differentiate between different purposes, for example, different types of licence.

Section 71 – Conditions for Part 3 licences

245. This section recreates powers that allow the Scottish Ministers to set mandatory conditions that would apply to all licences issued under Part 3 of the 1982 Act. The condition setting power is broad, would be specified by Order and could encompass different licences and particular purposes and sets of circumstances or cases.

246. The section also allows local licensing authorities to produce standard conditions to which licences issued by them under this Part would be subject. The conditions would have no effect until they are published and cannot be inconsistent with the mandatory conditions. Standard conditions can be varied or dis-applied for particular applications, although a variation could also not be inconsistent with a mandatory requirement.

Section 71A – Conditions for Part 3 licences: displays or advertising

247. Section 71A amends paragraph 9(2)(b) of Schedule 2 of the 1982 Act to expand the definition of conditions that may be imposed to include displays or advertisements “in connection” with the premises. Currently a local authority can set reasonable licence conditions with regard to displays or advertising of a sex shop that are “on or in” the premises. As a result of these amendments, conditions can also be imposed on sex shops and sexual entertainment venues licensed by the authority in relation to displays and advertising that are in other locations e.g. flyers handed out in the streets in the vicinity or left in other pubs, or posters erected nearby.
Section 72 – Civic licensing standards officers

248. Section 72 inserts a new Part 3A into the 1982 Act. This introduces a statutory requirement for a local authority or licensing authority to appoint an individual or individuals in a new role, referred to as a ‘Civic Licensing Standards Officer’. These new Civic Licensing Standards Officers will have the same powers and duties as an ‘authorised officer’ within the 1982 Act but will also have specific functions in relation to providing information and guidance, checking compliance, providing mediation and taking appropriate action on perceived breaches of conditions to a licence provided under the 1982 Act.

Section 73 – Electronic communications under the 1982 Act

249. The section amends Schedule 1 of the 1982 Act to permit a licensing authority to determine to receive electronic communications for a variety of matters. The matters are:

(a) applications for the grant or renewal of a licence under paragraph 1,
(b) objections or representations under paragraph 3,
(c) notifications of a change to a licence under paragraph 9.

250. Where a licensing authority makes a determination to receive electronic communications they must specify the form of electronic communication, the address to be used and any means of authentication that may be used in addition to an electronic signature.

251. The section clarifies that an electronic communication meeting the requirements set out will meet any requirement under schedule 1 for a communication to be in writing and signed.

252. A licensing authority may also determine to make communications in respect of the giving of notices or the giving of reasons electronically. The giving of reasons or notices electronically would only be acceptable if the intended recipient has agreed to receive communications in such a form and has specified an address. If the requirements are satisfied then any requirement for a notice or reasons to be given in writing will be met.

253. Determinations in relation to electronic communications may be made for different purposes and for different licences.

254. Similar amendments regarding electronic communications are made to Schedule 2 in respect of sex shops and sexual entertainment venues.

PART 4 – GENERAL PROVISION

Section 74 – Interpretation

255. Section 74 defines various expressions used in the Bill.
Section 75 – Regulations

256. Section 75 provides procedural requirements for orders and regulations made under the Bill.

Section 78 – Commencement

257. Section 78 provides that the provisions of the Bill (except those which come into force at the beginning of the day following the day on which the Bill receives Royal Assent) will come into force on a date or dates determined by order, made by Ministers.

Section 79 – Short title

258. Section 79 gives the short title of the Bill.

SCHEDULE 1: EXEMPTIONS

Paragraph 1 – Approved air weapon clubs

259. This paragraph exempts members of an air weapon club approved by the Chief Constable under section 18 from the requirement to hold an air weapon certificate, for the purpose of possessing or using an air weapon for target shooting at that club. The air weapon in question may be owned by the club and held on an air weapon certificate issued to the club secretary, or borrowed from elsewhere (for example another club member who holds their own air weapon certificate).

260. Sub-paragraph (b)(i) sets out that this exemption applies while the member is target shooting at other approved air weapon clubs, or at an event or competition, provided that the shooting is in connection with their club membership. Sub-paragraph (b)(ii) also allows possession and use of an air weapon in connection with club target shooting, for example to allow a club member to transport an air weapon owned by the club between shooting venues.

261. Sub-paragraph (c) requires that, where an air weapon club member is aged below 14, they must be supervised by another club member aged 21 or over for this exemption to apply. There is no lower age limit to the application of this exemption.

Paragraph 2 – Registered firearms dealers and their employees

262. This paragraph exempts firearms dealers who are registered with the Chief Constable under section 33 of the 1968 Act from requiring to hold an air weapon certificate when carrying out their business.

263. Sub-paragraph (1)(b) extends this exemption to the Registered Firearms Dealer’s employees, and sub-paragraph (2) allows this exemption to apply anywhere (i.e. not just at the dealer’s usual place of business). Sub-paragraphs (3) and (4) allow for an individual to borrow an air weapon from a Registered Firearms Dealer and use it on land the dealer occupies provided the individual is supervised by the dealer or an employee of the dealer. Where the individual is under 14 then the supervisor must be aged 21 or over.

264. Sub-paragraph (1)(b) extends this exemption to the Registered Firearms Dealer’s employees, and sub-paragraph (2) allows this exemption to apply anywhere (i.e. not just at the dealer’s usual place of business).

Paragraph 3 – Auctioneers

265. This paragraph exempts auctioneers and their employees from requiring to hold an air weapon certificate when carrying out their business. This exemption only allows the possession, acquisition and purchase of air weapons, not their use.

266. Sub-paragraph (2) extends this exemption to allow an auctioneer to sell an air weapon by way of trade or business without committing the offence at section 24, provided that the auctioneer holds a police permit issued under section 12.

Paragraph 4 - Carriers and warehouse keepers

267. This paragraph exempts carriers and warehouse keepers, and their employees, from requiring to hold an air weapon certificate when carrying out their business. This exemption only allows the possession of air weapons, not their use, acquisition or purchase.

Paragraph 5 – Artistic performers

268. This paragraph allows an individual taking part in a theatrical performance, a rehearsal, or a film production – as defined by sub-paragraph (2) – to possess and use an air weapon without holding an air weapon certificate. This exemption only applies to the performer involved, and only for the duration of the performance. This exemption does not permit purchase or acquisition of an air weapon.

Paragraph 6 – Cadet corps

269. This paragraph exempts members of a cadet corps approved under section 54(5)(b) of the 1968 Act, and their instructors, from requiring to hold an air weapon certificate for the purposes of drilling and target shooting with air weapons.

Paragraph 7 – Bodies corporate etc.

270. This paragraph exempts corporate bodies from possessing, purchasing or acquiring an air weapon provided that a natural person who is an officer of the body listed in sub-paragraph (2) has an air weapon certificate.
Paragraph 8 – Holders of police permits

271. This paragraph sets out the specific exemption that applies to a holder of a permit issued under section 12. Sub-paragraph (2) extends this exemption to allow a permit holder to sell an air weapon by way of trade or business without committing the offence at section 24.

Paragraph 9 – Holders of visitor permits

272. This paragraph sets out the specific exemption that applies to a holder of a permit issued under section 13.

Paragraph 10 – Authorised events

273. This paragraph sets out the specific exemption that applies to attendees at an event covered by a permit issued under section 17. Sub-paragraph (1)(b) specifies that the attendee must be using the air weapon to engage in an activity at the event for the exemption to apply. Use of an air weapon at an event when not engaging in event activities is therefore not exempted from the section 2(1) offence.

Paragraph 11 – Supervised use of air weapons on private land

274. This paragraph allows a person without an air weapon certificate to borrow an air weapon from an individual who holds a valid air weapon certificate, and to possess and use it while on private land and under the supervision of the certificate holder, or their employee. Any use must be in line with the conditions attached to the relevant air weapon certificate.

275. Sub-paragraph (2)(d) provides that if the borrower is younger than 14, then the supervisor must be aged 21 or over. There is no lower age limit to the application of this exemption.

Paragraph 12 – Use of air weapons at recreational shooting facilities

276. This paragraph sets out the specific exemption that applies to participants at a commercial recreational shooting facility which complies with the requirements at section 23. Sub-paragraph (1)(b) specifies that this exemption only applies while the user is on site – thus they cannot remove air weapons from the premises. Sub-paragraph (2) extends this exemption to apply to employees working at the recreational shooting facility.

Paragraph 13 - Museums

277. This exemption relates to museums which hold air weapons as part of their collection. Sub-paragraph (1)(b) sets out that, for this exemption to apply, the museum must either be approved by the Scottish Ministers under Schedule 1 to the 1988 Act (which will be the case if it already holds section 1 or 2 firearms), or, if the only firearms held by the museum are air weapons to which section 1 of the 1968 Act does not apply, a responsible person as defined by sub-paragraph (2) must hold an air weapon certificate.
278. Provided that either of these requirements is met the employees of the museum are exempted from requiring individual air weapon certificates to possess, purchase or acquire air weapons in the course of their duties at the museum.

Paragraph 14 - Air weapons on ships

279. This exemption applies to the possession and use of air weapons while on board a ship, provided that the air weapons are part of the ship’s equipment. This might cover, for example, air weapons for pest control, or an air weapon range on a cruise liner. An air weapon certificate or police permit would be required to remove an air weapon from the ship, or to purchase or acquire new air weapons for it.

Paragraph 15 – Purchase of air weapons for delivery outwith Scotland

280. This paragraph sets out the specific exemption that allows someone who does not hold an air weapon certificate to purchase an air weapon in the manner set out in section 24(2)(c), without committing the offence at section 2(1) of purchasing an air weapon without a valid air weapon certificate.

Paragraph 16 – Loaning of air weapons for exempted purposes

281. This exemption allows the holder of an air weapon certificate (or a person who does not hold a certificate but is entitled to possess or use an air weapon without committing an offence by virtue of another exemption) to lend or let on hire an air weapon to another individual who does not hold an air weapon certificate, without committing an offence under section 24(1) or (2). Section 24 otherwise limits the lending or letting on hire of air weapons by way of trade or business (or the possession of air weapons for such purposes) to Registered Firearms Dealers. This exemption only applies provided that the recipient of the loaned or hired air weapon will possess or use the air weapon in accordance with one of the exemptions in schedule 1. For example, this would allow an operator of a recreational shooting facility to lend or let on hire air weapons for the purposes of the exemption at paragraph 12, or a theatrical armourer to lend or let on hire air weapons for purposes of the exemption at paragraph 5.

Paragraph 17 – Public servants carrying out official duties

282. This paragraph exempts various categories of public servants listed at sub-paragraph (3) from requiring an air weapon certificate. This exemption relates to members of the police or armed forces who may be required to use or take possession of air weapons in connection with their duties (for example, a police constable seizing an air weapon, or a police forensic examiner testing its muzzle energy). This exemption only applies while the individual is carrying out their role as a public servant, and only when they are required to handle an air weapon in the fulfilment of their duties.

Paragraph 18 – Holders of certificates or permits with conditions

283. This paragraph allows an air weapon certificate, visitor or police permit holder to make use of the exemptions in the schedule notwithstanding any condition which may be attached to the certificate or permit. This means that a person who holds, for example, a visitor permit that permits use and possession, can take advantage of the exemption in paragraph 15 to purchase an air weapon for delivery to that person’s home country. Or, an air weapon certificate holder whose certificate has a condition limiting them to shooting for pest control purposes could separately be a member of an approved air weapon club, and shoot at the club under the exemption in paragraph 1.

SCHEDULE 2: MINOR AND CONSEQUENTIAL AMENDMENTS AND REPEALS

PART 1 – AMENDMENTS AND REPEALS RELATING TO PART 1

Paragraph 1 – Firearms Act 1968 (c.27)

284. This paragraph amends various provisions of the Firearms Act 1968 as it applies in Scotland. Sub-paragraph (2) repeals the offence limiting sales of air weapons to Registered Firearms Dealers, as this requirement is recreated by section 24 of the Bill. Sub-paragraph (8)(b) also extends the definition of Firearms Dealer to include anyone who manufactures, repairs or tests air weapons by way of trade or business. This brings the definition of Firearms Dealers in Scotland in line with the commercial offences being introduced at section 24 of the Bill. Sub-paragraph (8A) amends Schedule 4 to the 1968 Act so that Registered Firearms Dealers in Scotland are required to record the full range of air weapon transactions (sale, transfer, manufacture, repair or test) in their register of transactions, in the same way as for more powerful firearms.

285. Sub-paragraphs (3) to (8) amend and repeal various provisions relating to use of air weapons by young people, as these provisions are superseded by the creation of an air weapons licensing regime. Sub-paragraph (9) amends the table of offences and penalties in the 1968 Act accordingly.

Paragraph 1A – Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995

286. This paragraph inserts a new provision in Schedule 9 to the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995, which lists a number of statutory offences in relation to which certain routine matters may be proved by certificate (rather than by oral evidence at trial). It allows a constable or a person employed by the Scottish Police Authority to certify that an accused individual held, or (as the case may be) did not hold, an air weapon certificate at the time of an alleged offence under Part 1, and for this to be used as sufficient evidence of that fact in criminal proceedings relating to the offence.

Paragraph 2 – Violent Crime Reduction Act 2006 (c.38)

287. This paragraph repeals section 32 of the Violent Crime Reduction Act 2006 in Scotland, which is restated by section 25 of the Bill.

PART 2 – AMENDMENTS RELATING TO PART 2

288. Paragraph 3 deals with minor amendments. It inserts reference to section 24A of the 2005 Act (power to request antisocial behaviour report) into section 29(4) of the 2005 Act (application to vary premises licence). A Licensing Board, when determining an application for a ‘major’ variation to a premises licence, will now be able to request that a chief constable provides it with a report on all cases, complaints or representations made regarding antisocial behaviour on or in the vicinity of the premises in question.

289. This paragraph also removes a spent reference in section 57(5) of the 2005 Act (notification of application to chief constable and Licensing Standards officer) to the previously repealed section 57(2) of that Act.
AIR WEAPONS AND LICENSING (SCOTLAND) BILL
[AS AMENDED AT STAGE 2]

SUPPLEMENTARY FINANCIAL MEMORANDUM

INTRODUCTION
1. As required under Rule 9.7.8B of the Parliament’s Standing Orders, this Supplementary Financial Memorandum is published to accompany the Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill (introduced in the Scottish Parliament on 14 May 2014) as amended at Stage 2.

2. The Memorandum has been prepared by the Scottish Government. It does not form part of the Bill and has not been endorsed by the Parliament. It should be read in conjunction with the original Financial Memorandum published to accompany the Bill as introduced.

3. The purpose of this Supplementary Financial Memorandum is to set out the expected costs associated with the new and amended provisions included in the Bill following Stage 2 amendments. The majority of amendments do not significantly affect the assumptions in the original Financial Memorandum. This document addresses those amendments where additional costs are likely to be substantially altered or where the future additional costs are uncertain as they are dependent on the level of demand but there is a potential for significant costs to be incurred.

SUMMARY OF CHANGES NOT SUBSTANTIALLY ALTERING COSTS
4. The Bill was amended at Stage 2 to make a number of changes that the Scottish Government does not judge to be substantially altering the financial costs associated with the Bill.

5. In Part 1 of the Bill, changes in relation to the licensing of air weapons clarified the types of weapon to be covered by the legislation; ensured that the Bill did not prevent sales of air weapons to the rest of Great Britain; changed the period of notice in which a person must report the loss or theft of an air weapon to the chief constable; and made a number of technical amendments.

6. In Part 2 of the Bill, changes in relation to alcohol licensing create a new transfer regime for premises licences in response to calls from the Law Society; provide Licensing Standards Officers with a new power to report conduct of a personal licence holder; allow for commencement the day after Royal Assent of the Bill provision that removes the current five-year restriction on re-applying for a personal licence that has been revoked due to the failure of the applicant to supply the appropriate evidence of having undergone refresher training; as well as a range of technical amendments.

7. In Part 3 of the Bill, changes in relation to licensing of metal dealers and itinerant metal dealers included an increase in penalties for licensing offences; tightened definitions used in relation to the requirement for payment for scrap metal to be made via bank transfer or cheque; new expanded definitions of who will be considered a dealer in metal and a power for the Scottish Ministers to create exemptions from licensing requirements. In relation to the provisions creating a new licensing regime for sexual entertainment venues, the power of local authorities to deal with displays and advertising has been expanded to allow authorities to consider these matters where they occur “in connection” with the premises as opposed to physically “on or in” the premises. A new provision has been added to remove the exemption from public entertainment licensing requirements currently enjoyed by holders of an alcohol occasional licence issued under the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005. In relation to Part 2 licences, including taxis and private hire cars, an ability to revoke a licence has been created.

8. Further information on the changes can be found in the Revised Explanatory Notes.

REGISTER OF METAL DEALERS

9. The Bill was amended at Stage 2 to insert a new section 66A to allow the Scottish Ministers to establish via regulations under the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 a register for metal dealers and itinerant metal dealers.

10. The Scottish Government has responded to a recommendation from the Stage 1 report of the Local Government and Regeneration Committee to take steps to provide a register. This will assist local licensing authority officers and the police in enforcing licensing requirements. It will also assist members of the public who wish to ensure that a dealer is indeed licensed.

11. The regulation-making power enables the establishment of the register and sets out the matters that regulations establishing the register may cover. These matters cover the maintenance of the register, the duty to provide information, the information to be covered by the register, the form and publication of the register and any fees that may be relevant.

COSTS ON THE SCOTTISH ADMINISTRATION

12. Establishing a register may cause a significant cost to the Scottish Government depending upon the route chosen to deliver a register.

13. Establishing a national database from scratch would be expensive. Databases for alcohol licensing have been looked at in the past so some comparison is possible. The expertise to establish an on-line register normally requires the engagement of outside consultants which would cost tens of thousands of pounds. More significantly, paying for necessary IT to be rolled out amongst each local authority would take the costs into the order of hundreds of thousands.
Clearly the numbers of metal dealers and itinerant metal dealers is significantly lower than the number of alcohol licences (over 16,000 premises and 50,000 personal licences) so the cost would be commensurately less. Nevertheless, much of the cost of establishment is incurred irrespective of whether a licensing database is small or large. A similar exercise of establishing a stand-alone database in England and Wales was costed in an impact assessment at £250k to £1m for start-up costs with on-going support costs of between £50k and 175k per annum.

14. Start-up costs might be expected to be of a similar level in Scotland.

15. An alternative route would be to build upon existing arrangements. SEPA already publishes data on-line for scrap metal dealers as all dealers are also registered as licensed waste carriers. SEPA’s capacity to undertake such a task has not been fully explored but clearly the costs would be dramatically decreased if the register was created in such a way as to utilise existing infrastructure. In England and Wales, a similar solution was adopted, using the website of the Environment Agency to host a stand-alone database. The costs were thus much lower, although still substantial (£110k of start-up costs).

16. It would be the Scottish Government’s preference to explore with SEPA the possibility of building upon its existing record-keeping arrangements and to utilise its website in order to deliver an effective register in the most cost-effective fashion.

COSTS ON LOCAL AUTHORITIES

17. Local authorities are under an existing obligation under paragraph 14 of Schedule 1 to the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 to maintain a register of applications. The register, which is open to public inspection, includes the detail of the application, the final decision and the terms of any licence issued. Whilst the register is open to public inspection, the Scottish Government is not aware that any authority does so in a way that is particularly user-friendly and accords with expectations in the 21st century. For the particular problem of metal theft and its possible linkage with the scrap metal trade, a more modern approach is required.

18. Whatever final solution is decided upon, it is likely that there will be cost to local authorities in gathering data and supplying data to whoever is charged with maintaining the register. Given the numbers of dealers in each authority is not large, the duty should not be unduly onerous or likely to incur significant expense over and above the costs already incurred for meeting the existing obligation to maintain a register. Given that the existing fee for a metal dealer’s licence is typically priced in the low hundreds of pounds (and this covers a range of costs including staffing, processing, inspecting and so on), it is unlikely that the additional administrative burden of the new register could add more than tens of pounds to the cost per licence.

19. The regulation-making power makes provision for the setting of fees so that licensing authorities would be able to recover some costs – for example, the cost of proving a certified extract from the register. Beyond this, as is normal, any costs falling to the licensing authority are recoverable by the authority through licensing fees via paragraph 15 of Schedule 1 to the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982.
COSTS ON OTHER BODIES, INDIVIDUALS AND BUSINESSES

20. The costs of establishing and maintaining a register will fall naturally upon the public bodies that will undertake the task. It is possible that metal dealers will see higher licensing fees as costs incurred by licensing authorities are recoverable. They are likely to be in the order of the fairly low additional costs incurred by the licensing authority (discussed above).

21. That said, the on-going costs of supplying information and updating it are not likely to be very significant. The greater cost would be likely to be in establishing a register (although, as discussed above, the costs will depend upon the route chosen to establish the register). These start-up costs are unlikely to be faced by local licensing authorities and are therefore likely to be irrecoverable from licensing fees.

22. The regulation-making power does allow for the charging of fees but this is expected to be a nominal amount that may be applicable for an individual seeking an extract from the register. (One authority currently charges £30 for an extract from the Civic Government Register).
AIR WEAPONS AND LICENSING (SCOTLAND) BILL
[AS AMENDED AT STAGE 2]

SUPPLEMENTARY DELEGATED POWERS MEMORANDUM

INTRODUCTION

1. This Memorandum has been prepared by the Scottish Government to assist the Delegated Powers and Law Reform Committee in its consideration of the Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill. This Memorandum describes provisions in the Bill conferring power to make subordinate legislation which were either introduced to the Bill or amended at Stage 2. The Memorandum supplements the Delegated Powers Memorandum on the Bill as introduced.

PROVISIONS CONFERRING POWER TO MAKE SUBORDINATE LEGISLATION INTRODUCED OR AMENDED AT STAGE 2

2. The amended or new delegated powers provisions in the Bill are listed below, with a short explanation of what each power allows, why the power has been taken in the Bill and why the selected form of Parliamentary procedure has been considered appropriate.

PART 3

Section 65 – Power to make provision about acceptable forms of payment for metal

Power conferred on: the Scottish Ministers
Power exercisable by: regulations made by statutory instrument
Revised or new power: revised
Parliamentary procedure: affirmative procedure

Provision

3. Section 65 of the Bill provides a new section 33A in the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 (“the 1982 Act”). This new section 33A of the 1982 Act provides acceptable forms of payment that may be made by a metal dealer or itinerant metal dealer. The acceptable forms of payment are a cheque or electronic transfer.

4. The new section 33A(7) that is inserted into the 1982 Act provides the Scottish Ministers the power by regulations to add, amend or remove forms of payment that are acceptable. It also enables the Scottish Ministers to make appropriate consequential modifications to the record keeping requirements specified in the new section 33B(3) of the 1982 Act.
5. Amendment at Stage 2 expands the power in the new section 33A(7) of the 1982 Act so as to make consequential amendment to the new section 33AA of the 1982 Act (also introduced at Stage 2) which provides a definition of bank and building society account for the purposes of further specifying how metal dealers can make payment for scrap metal.

Reason for Taking Power

6. The ability to make amendments to the definition in the new section 33AA of the 1982 Act is limited to a consequence of changes to the methods of payment in the new section 33A(2), inserted into the 1982 Act, which add, amends or removes methods of payment. The expanded power provides a degree of future-proofing so that if new payment methods are developed that are suitable for facilitating cashless transactions, consequential changes to new section 33AA of the 1982 Act can be made to facilitate this.

Choice of Procedure

7. The current regulation making powers in the new section 33A(7) of the 1982 Act are subject to affirmative procedure. Affirmative procedure allows for a more detailed level of Parliamentary scrutiny. It is the view of the Scottish Government that this remains appropriate for the expanded powers in section 33A(7).

Section 66 – Power to make specify particular means that can be used for the purpose of verifying a person’s name and address

- Power conferred on: the Scottish Ministers
- Power exercisable by: regulations made by statutory instrument
- Revised or new power: revised
- Parliamentary procedure: negative procedure

Provision

8. Section 66 of the Bill provides a new section 33B in the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982. This set out record keeping requirements for a metal dealer or itinerant metal dealer.

9. The new section 33B(6) in the 1982 Act provides the Scottish Ministers the power by regulations to require further information to be recorded about any metal acquired, processed or disposed of by metal dealers or itinerant metal dealers.

10. Amendment at Stage 2 expands the power so as to allow the Scottish Ministers to specify particular means that can be used for the purpose of verifying a person’s name and address.

Reason for Taking Power

11. The new record keeping requirements in the Bill will require dealers’ to seek evidence of a person’s name and address. The regulation making power is required to specify the particular means that might be acceptable – these may be items such as a passport or driving licence. By setting out the means in secondary legislation Ministers will be able to include any new means that may emerge in the future as suitable proofs.
Choice of Procedure

12. The current regulation making powers in the new section 33B(6) of the 1982 Act are subject to negative procedure. It is the view of the Scottish Government that this remains appropriate. It is not intended that the regulations will change the provisions of the Act. It is not anticipated that the means by which a person’s identity can be verified will be controversial. As such, it remains the view of the Scottish Government that the use of negative procedure would be appropriate here bearing in mind the balance required between scrutiny for a provision of this nature and the use of valuable parliamentary resources.

Section 66A – Power to make provision for a register of metal dealers

Power conferred on: the Scottish Ministers
Power exercisable by: regulations made by statutory instrument
Revised or new power: new Parliamentary procedure: negative procedure (or affirmative procedure where the Regulations amends or repeals any part of an Act)

Provision

14. The new section 35A, inserted into the 1982 Act, provides new regulation making powers for the Scottish Ministers to make provisions to establish a register of metal dealers and the matters that regulations establishing the register may cover. These matters cover the maintenance of the register, the duty to provide information, the information to be covered by the register, the form and publication of the register and any fees that may be relevant.

15. New section 35A(3) of the 1982 Act also provides the Scottish Ministers, when making an regulations concerning the establishment of the register, to include such, incidental, supplementary, consequential, transitional, transitory or saving provision as is considered appropriate, and to modify any enactment.

Reason for Taking Power

16. The Scottish Government has responded to a recommendation from the Stage 1 report of the Local Government and Regeneration Committee to take steps to provide a register of metal dealers. This will assist local licensing authority officers and Police in enforcing licensing requirements. It will also assist members of the public who wish to ensure that a dealer is indeed licensed.

17. The regulation making powers will enable the Scottish Ministers to establish the register and set out the mechanics of how the register will work.

Choice of Procedure

18. The register for metal dealers and itinerant metal dealers will be primarily concerned with the collating and making available of information centrally. This information is itself already available, due to the requirements for licensing authorities to publish details of licences already contained within paragraph 14 of Schedule 1 to the 1982 Act but is not held in a central and consistent format. The new arrangements therefore represent an evolution of existing procedures and the way that information is accessed.

19. As the regulations will concern principally administrative functions and the technical details of the register, the use of negative procedure is appropriate bearing in mind the balance required between scrutiny for a provision of this nature and the use of valuable parliamentary resources.

20. However, it worth noting that it is envisaged that the initial setting up of the register may require consequential amendment of the 1982 Act. As such the initial regulations are expected to be subject to affirmative procedure. (Where amendments are made to primary legislation in this manner the additional scrutiny provided by the affirmative procedure is considered appropriate.)

21. An amendment at Stage 2 of the Bill makes provision for a new section 37A to be inserted into the 1982 Act.

22. The new section 37A, inserted in to the 1982 Act provides new regulation making powers that will allow the Scottish Ministers to set out circumstances where the metal dealer and itinerant metal dealer regime does not apply. Such circumstances could perhaps relate to particular premises or activities where it is concluded that a scrap metal dealers or itinerant metal dealers regime should not apply, thereby resulting in a licence not being required.

Reason for Taking Power

23. The Scottish Government is confident that the definition of a dealer is now the right one. It provides clarity to capture those activities that should fall within licensing, but avoids licensing those peripheral activities where the metal acquired is wholly incidental. It is also flexible enough to respond to the particular facts of individual cases.

24. Nevertheless, we believe it right to enhance the flexibility to deal with circumstances that may not emerge until after the new regime is up-and-running.

25. This amendment will allow the Scottish Ministers to prescribe circumstances where the metal dealer and itinerant metal dealer regime does not apply and a licence is not required. This may be some example where it becomes apparent that a licence is being required by licensing authorities in circumstances where it was not envisaged that a licence would be necessary.
Choice of Procedure

26. It is the view of the Scottish Government that it is appropriate for the regulations to be subject to negative procedure. The provisions will provide the flexibility to provide additional exemptions to the metal dealer and itinerant metal dealer licensing regime if a need to do so is identified. It is anticipated that any exemptions from licensing which may be provided by this regulation making power are unlikely to be controversial and may well be in response to the emergence of an activity which should not fall within the regime. As such, it is considered that the use of negative procedure is appropriate here.

Introduction

1. At its meeting on 16 June 2015, the Delegated Powers and Law Reform Committee considered the delegated powers provisions in the Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill as amended at Stage 2 (“the Bill”). The Committee submits this report to the Parliament under Rule 9.7.9 of Standing Orders.

2. The Bill was introduced by the then Cabinet Secretary for Justice on 14 May 2014. The Bill makes provision for the licensing and regulation of air weapons; to amend the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005; to amend and extend the licensing provisions of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982; and for connected purposes.

3. The Scottish Government has provided the Parliament with a supplementary memorandum on the delegated powers provisions in the Bill, in advance of Stage 3 of the Bill (“the SDPM”).

4. The Committee reported on certain matters in relation to the delegated powers provisions in the Bill at Stage 1 in its 5th report of 2015.

Delegated Powers Provisions

5. The Committee considered each of the new or substantially amended delegated powers provisions in the Bill after Stage 2.

6. After Stage 2, the Committee reports that it does not need to draw the attention of the Parliament to the substantially amended or new delegated powers provisions listed below, and that it is content with the Parliamentary procedure to which they are subject:

- Section 65 – inserting new section 33A(7)(b) of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 (“the 1982 Act”) – Acceptable forms of payment for metal
- Section 66 – inserting section 33B(6)(a) of the 1982 Act - Metal dealers and itinerant metal dealers: records
- Section 66A – inserting new section 35A of the 1982 Act – Register of dealers in metal
- Section 78(1) – Commencement
Recommendation

7. The Committee comments on the remaining power in the Bill as follows:

Section 66C—inserting new section 37A of the 1982 Act—Exemptions from requirements of sections 28 to 37 of 1982 Act

Power conferred on: the Scottish Ministers
Power exercisable by: regulations
Parliamentary procedure: negative

9. The new section 37A provides a new regulation making power, which enables the Ministers to make provision specifying circumstances in which the provisions of sections 28 to 37 of the 1982 Act on metal dealer licensing are not to apply. This extends to the disapplication of the amendments and new provisions made by sections 63 to 66B of the bill to the regime for metal dealer licensing.

10. The SDPM states:

“The Scottish Government is confident that the definition of a dealer is now the right one. It provides clarity to capture those activities that should fall within licensing, but avoids licensing those peripheral activities where the metal acquired is wholly incidental. It is also flexible enough to respond to the particular facts of individual cases. Nevertheless, we believe it right to enhance the flexibility to deal with circumstances that may not emerge until after the new regime is up-and-running.

This amendment will allow the Scottish Ministers to prescribe circumstances where the metal dealer and itinerant metal dealer regime does not apply, and a licence is not required.”

11. The Committee notes that this power is designed to permit the Scottish Ministers the flexibility to grant exemption in relation to particular activities, operators or premises, should this be required once the new regime contained in the bill is in force, so that a licence in those circumstances would not be required. However the power is framed more widely. It allows regulations to make provision specifying circumstances in which the provisions of sections 28 to 37 of the 1982 Act are not to apply (that is, the entire licensing and regulation of metal dealers regime in the 1982 Act, as amended by sections 63 to 66C of the bill). For example, the power is capable of being used to disapply provisions for offences. (There are offence provisions related to metal dealer licensing in sections 33A and 34 of the 1982 Act, as amended by the bill; for example in connection with the disposal of metal to, or purchase from, a person aged under 16).
12. The Committee considers therefore, given the potential scope of this power, that regulations under new section 37A of the 1982 Act would be more suitably scrutinised by the Parliament by the affirmative procedure, rather than the negative procedure.

13. The Committee therefore calls on the Scottish Government to consider amending the Bill at Stage 3, so that the power in section 66C (inserting new section 37A of the 1982 Act) is subject to the affirmative procedure.

(2) The local authority must prepare a statement of their policy with respect to the exercise of their functions in relation to the licensing of sexual entertainment venues (a “SEV policy statement”).

(3) In preparing a SEV policy statement, a local authority must—

(a) consider the impact of the licensing of sexual entertainment venues in their area, having regard, in particular, to how it will affect the objectives of—

(i) preventing public nuisance, crime and disorder,

(ii) securing public safety,

(iii) protecting children and young people from harm,

(iv) reducing violence against women, and

(b) consult such persons or bodies as they consider appropriate.

(4) The local authority must publish the SEV policy statement at the same time and in the same manner as they publish the notice of the resolution under section 45B(4).

(5) The local authority must—

(a) from time to time review the SEV policy statement and make such revisions as they consider appropriate (if any), and

(b) publish the revised statement in such manner as they consider appropriate.

(6) Subsection (3) applies to a review of a SEV policy statement as it applies to preparing such a statement.

(7) In exercising their functions in relation to the licensing of sexual entertainment venues, a local authority must have regard to their SEV policy statement or revised statement.

(8) In this section—

(a) “children” means persons under the age of 16,
(b) “young people” means persons aged 16 or 17.”.

Groupings of Amendments for Stage 3

This document provides procedural information which will assist in preparing for and following proceedings on the above Bill. The information provided is as follows:

- the list of groupings (that is, the order in which amendments will be debated). Any procedural points relevant to each group are noted;
- the text of amendments to be debated on the day of Stage 3 consideration, set out in the order in which they will be debated. THIS LIST DOES NOT REPLACE THE MARSHALLED LIST, WHICH SETS OUT THE AMENDMENTS IN THE ORDER IN WHICH THEY WILL BE DISPOSED OF.

Groupings of amendments

Note: The time limits indicated are those set out in the timetabling motion to be considered by the Parliament before the Stage 3 proceedings begin. If that motion is agreed to, debate on the groups above each line must be concluded by the time indicated, although the amendments in those groups may still be moved formally and disposed of later in the proceedings.

Group 1: Air weapons: requirements for grant or renewal of an air weapon certificate
1, 2, 3, 4

Notes on amendments in this group
Amendment 2 pre-empts amendments 3 and 4

Group 2: Alcohol licensing: licensing objectives
5, 6, 7

Group 3: Alcohol licensing: overprovision
8, 9, 10, 11

Debate to end no later than 35 minutes after proceedings begin

Group 4: Alcohol licensing: annual functions report
12, 13

Group 5: Alcohol licensing: register of alcohol premises licences and personal licences
14

Group 6: Private hire cars: overprovision
15, 16
Group 7: Testing of private hire car drivers
17

Debate to end no later than 1 hour 10 minutes after proceedings begin

Group 8: Notice of sexual entertainment venue licence application
18

Group 9: Sexual entertainment venues: access of persons under 18
22, 19

Notes on amendments in this group
Amendment 22 pre-empts amendment 19

Group 10: Sexual entertainment venue licensing policy statement

Debate to end no later than 1 hour 30 minutes after proceedings begin
Business Motion: Joe FitzPatrick, on behalf of the Parliamentary Bureau, moved S4M-13613— That the Parliament agrees that, during stage 3 of the Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill, debate on groups of amendments shall, subject to Rule 9.8.4A, be brought to a conclusion by the time limit indicated, that time limit being calculated from when the stage begins and excluding any periods when other business is under consideration or when a meeting of the Parliament is suspended (other than a suspension following the first division in the stage being called) or otherwise not in progress:

- Groups 1 to 3: 35 minutes
- Groups 4 to 7: 1 hour 10 minutes
- Groups 8 to 10: 1 hour 30 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill - Stage 3: The Bill was considered at Stage 3.

The following amendments were agreed to (without division): 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 18 and 20.

Amendment 19 was agreed to (by division: For 84, Against 28, Abstentions 0).

The following amendments were disagreed to (by division)—

1 (For 19, Against 96, Abstentions 0)
3 (For 19, Against 98, Abstentions 0)
4 (For 19, Against 100, Abstentions 0)
5 (For 9, Against 109, Abstentions 0)
6 (For 9, Against 109, Abstentions 0)
7 (For 9, Against 109, Abstentions 0)
15 (For 14, Against 102, Abstentions 0)
17 (For 14, Against 100, Abstentions 0)
22 (For 33, Against 67, Abstentions 14).

Amendment 14 was moved and, with the agreement of the Parliament, withdrawn.

The following amendments were not moved: 2 and 16.
The Minister for Parliamentary Business moved a motion without notice under Rule 9.8.5A to move the first time limit by 15 minutes. The motion was agreed to. As a consequence, subsequent time limits were also moved by 15 minutes. The Deputy Presiding Officer altered the time of Decision Time by 10 minutes in consequence of the motion under Rule 9.8.5A being agreed to and notified members accordingly.

Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill - Stage 3: The Cabinet Secretary for Justice (Michael Matheson) moved S4M-13606—That the Parliament agrees that the Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill be passed.

After debate, the motion was agreed to ((DT) by division: For 92, Against 17, Abstentions 0).
On resuming—

Business Motion

The Deputy Presiding Officer (Elaine Smith): Good afternoon, colleagues. The first item of business this afternoon is consideration of business motion S4M-13613, in the name of Joe FitzPatrick, on behalf of the Parliamentary Bureau, setting out a timetable for stage 3 consideration of the Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill.

Motion moved,

That the Parliament agrees that, during stage 3 of the Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill, debate on groups of amendments shall, subject to Rule 9.8.4A, be brought to a conclusion by the time limit indicated, that time limit being calculated from when the stage begins and excluding any periods when other business is under consideration or when a meeting of the Parliament is suspended (other than a suspension following the first division in the stage being called) or otherwise not in progress:

Groups 1 to 3: 35 minutes
Groups 4 to 7: 1 hour 10 minutes
Groups 8 to 10: 1 hour 30 minutes.

Motion agreed to.

Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill: Stage 3

The Deputy Presiding Officer (Elaine Smith): The next item of business is stage 3 proceedings on the Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill.

In dealing with the amendments, members should have the bill as amended at stage 2, which is SP bill 49A, the marshalled list of amendments, which is SP bill 49A-ML, and the groupings of amendments, which is SP bill 49A-G.

The division bell will sound and proceedings will be suspended for five minutes for the first division of the afternoon. The voting period thereafter will be 30 seconds. Following that, I will allow a period of one minute for the first division after each debate. Members who wish to speak in the debate on any group of amendments should press their request-to-speak button as soon as possible after I call the group.

Members should now refer to the marshalled list of amendments, please.

Section 2—Requirement for air weapon certificate

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Group 1 is on air weapons: requirements for grant or renewal of an air weapon certificate. Amendment 1, in the name of Alex Fergusson, is grouped with amendments 2 to 4. If amendment 2 is agreed to, I cannot call amendments 3 and 4, due to a pre-emption.

Alex Fergusson (Galloway and West Dumfries) (Con): I thank the Presiding Officers for allowing these amendments, which were also lodged at stage 2, to be brought back at stage 3. We believe that they are worthy of further consideration, and I am grateful to the Presiding Officers for permitting that.

The purpose of amendments 1 and 2 is really quite simple: it is to save unnecessary bureaucracy, unnecessary expense and unnecessary use of police officers’ valuable time. Surely those are three worthy aims.

As we know, there are an estimated 500,000 air weapons in Scotland and presumably at least 300,000 people who own them. Each and every one of those people will have to undergo a process to be approved for and obtain an air weapon certificate. That is a pretty monumental task in anybody’s book, but when it is to be carried out by Police Scotland, which is in the process of reducing Scotland’s specialist resource of civilian firearms officers from an already miserly 34 to the Elaine Murray (Dumfriesshire) (Lab): My apologies, Presiding Officer, I did not realise that we had to notify you in advance if we wanted to speak on amendments.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: You do not have to notify us in advance, but if we run out of time I cannot call members because the timings are based on what we know.

Elaine Murray: I will bear that in mind.

The Countryside Alliance has contacted us about this issue and I have had a couple of constituents contact me to say that people who already have a firearms licence should automatically be allowed to have an air weapons licence.

I resist the amendments in this group. Firearms regulations differ from the arrangements in the bill. If somebody has one firearm, they are not automatically allowed to have another firearm—another lethal weapon. Therefore, the fact that somebody has a licence for a firearm should not necessarily mean that they are automatically entitled to have an air weapon—another lethal weapon—without showing that there is a good reason for that.

I therefore resist the idea that somehow because someone has a licence for one firearm they should be allowed to have any number of air weapons without having to prove that they have a good reason for having them.

The bill does provide for some exemptions and quite rightly so, but I believe that the chief constable should be satisfied that someone has a good reason for holding a lethal weapon, because airguns of the size and power in question are lethal weapons and people should have to have a good reason for having one.

I understand that farmers in particular may feel that, because they tend to have a shotgun licence, they should be allowed to have an air weapons licence, but this is not just about the farming community; it is about the whole community in Scotland. It is important that the bill stays as it is and is not amended in this regard.

On the second set of amendments in this group—amendments 3 and 4—amendment 3 proposes substituting “must” for “may”. I think that “may” is the normal terminology in legislation, but in any case they are just another way of trying to do the same thing as amendments 1 and 2. I would resist all four amendments in Alex Fergusson’s name.

Liam McArthur (Orkney Islands) (LD): The minister will be aware of the concerns expressed by my colleague Tavish Scott at stage 1 about the proportionality and effectiveness of the bill as it stands. I very much welcome the fact that Alex Fergusson has succeeded in lodging his amendments.

From my experience, Police Scotland is indeed struggling to cope with the workload pressures already involved in administering shotgun licences. The amendments lodged by Alex Fergusson would at least offer some opportunity to make the bill a bit more proportionate and ease some of those workload pressures on Police Scotland.

I am therefore happy to lend the amendments my support.

The Cabinet Secretary for Justice (Michael Matheson): Mr Fergusson has lodged a group of amendments that would fundamentally change the way in which we and the police intend to approach the licensing of air weapons under this bill.

The amendments reflect some of the objections that we have heard to the principles of air weapons licensing. Those objections were expressed by some of the shooting representatives on our expert consultative panel and by others who responded to our public consultation in early 2013. The Local Government and Regeneration Committee heard similar views during the first evidence session on the bill last November and again at stage 2, when Mr Buchanan lodged his amendments. However, as I said at stage 2, we believe that the measures and tests set out in part 1 of the bill achieve our aim of establishing a familiar, proportionate and practical licensing regime for air weapons.

Amendment 1 and the consequential amendment 2 seek to provide an automatic exemption from the need for an air weapons certificate for any person who already holds a firearms certificate or shotgun certificate issued by the police under the Firearms Act 1968. We considered that as a potential exemption from the licensing requirement when we first developed the bill, but we rejected the option for several reasons.

Under the Firearms Act 1968, for example, the tests for the grant of a firearms or shotgun certificate are different. The test for granting shotgun certificates is less stringent. There is no fit-and-proper-person test, and the onus is on the police to demonstrate the absence of a good reason to be granted a certificate, rather than the applicant having to show good reason. That is not the right approach to the licensing of firearms, including air weapons.

Also, firearms, shotguns and air weapons are used for different purposes and in different circumstances, as the police clearly explained when they gave evidence to the committee at stage 1. It does not necessarily follow that someone who has a legitimate reason for requiring a powerful rifle, for example, will also have a good reason for requiring an air weapon.

The bill gives us the chance to set out proper provisions for the regulation of air weapons in a modern Scotland. Applicants should be required to demonstrate that they have a reasonable and proper use for the guns and that they can be entrusted to use them responsibly and safely.

Liam McArthur: Will the cabinet secretary take an intervention?

Michael Matheson: I will first finish my points.

Amendments 3 and 4 offer an alternative to the first two amendments in the group. They would require the chief constable to consider any applicant who holds a firearms or shotgun certificate automatically to meet the requirements to be granted an air weapon certificate without any further inquiry. Accepting those amendments would undermine the fundamental principle behind the licensing regime and the tests that are set out in it.

Having said all that, we have been clear that the new licensing regime should not place undue burdens on the police or applicant. We have made provision in section 5(2) to allow the chief constable to take as satisfied the tests that a person is fit to be entrusted with an air weapon, and that they are not prohibited from possessing firearms under the Firearms Acts 1968, if they already hold a firearms or shotgun certificate.

We also make provision at section 9 to allow the alignment of air weapons certificates with those for firearms and shotguns. Coterminal certificates exist to align firearms and shotgun licences. The addition of air weapons will mean that all certificates fall to be renewed on the same date, reducing the burden on the applicant and the licensing authority. The fee for a coterminal air weapons certificate application will, as a result, be set at a lower level than that for a full application, as the police will be able to conduct all their inquiries at the same time.

Those measures go significantly towards the aims set out in Mr Fergusson’s amendments, but without compromising our overall objective of setting an adequate and fair test for the granting of certificates.

Liam McArthur: I have listened carefully to the cabinet secretary’s points. He has gone some way to addressing the concerns around burden, but Police Scotland is clearly struggling to deal with the workload pressures in operating gun licensing provisions. What he has set out will not satisfactorily address the concerns about the additional workload under the new regime. What reassurances will he give that Police Scotland is... geared up to deal with the workload pressures that will come as a result of the bill?

Michael Matheson: The member should consider Police Scotland’s evidence to the Local Government and Regeneration Committee when it outlined how gun certificates are dealt with. There is a peak and trough in workload, and we are timing the introduction of air weapons licensing to fit into the period when a lower number of firearms and shotgun certificates require renewal.

Police Scotland is introducing a new database to deal with licences. It is confident that it can manage requirements smoothly, proportionately and reasonably. I am confident that, given the assurances that Police Scotland has given us, we can take forward the new regime. On that basis, I encourage Parliament to reject amendments 1 to 4.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: I invite Alex Fergusson to wind up and to indicate whether he will press or withdraw his amendment.

Alex Fergusson: I am grateful to members for their contributions. I say to Elaine Murray that the issue is not by any means just about the farming community, although we and other members will have received representations from that community. Indeed, many different people will consider that the extra burden that is to be placed on them is as unnecessary as it is disproportionate.

The cabinet secretary has pointed out, understandably, that the applicant has to show good reason for possessing a shotgun instead of the other way round, as happens in the current firearms licensing regime. At the end of the day, however, police officers or enforcement officers still have to decide whether that reason is good enough, so a burden is still being placed on the police.

I do not know whether the cabinet secretary is aware of this, but—and I will come back to this issue later this afternoon—I am reliably informed that Police Scotland is already failing to keep up with quite a heavy backlog of shotgun certificate and firearms licence applications. However much the Government might be trying to bring the processes together, I cannot see that this new process will be anything other than a very heavy burden on Police Scotland officers, when most of us think that they have better things to do.

We have made the arguments, and I accept that we are where we are. Nevertheless, I will press amendment 1.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The question is, that amendment 1 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: There will be a division. As this is the first division of the afternoon, I suspend the meeting for five minutes, after which there will be a 30-second division.

14:46

Meeting suspended.

14:51

On resuming—

Patrick Harvie (Glasgow) (Green): I was prompted to lodge my amendments after the recent decision about the Arches venue in Glasgow. Members will be aware of the press coverage of Glasgow licensing board’s decision to revoke the Arches’ ability to operate past midnight, effectively closing it as a club venue, with the consequent job losses and the cultural loss of the venue to Glasgow and Scotland.

Members will be aware of the 40,000 members of the public who signed a petition calling for that licensing board decision to be reversed. [Interuption.]

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Order, please. Could we hear the member?

Hanzala Malik (Glasgow) (Lab): Will the member take an intervention?

Patrick Harvie: Not at the moment, thank you.

Members will also be aware of the open letter that was signed by more than 400 leading names in Scotland—

Hanzala Malik: Will the member give way?

Patrick Harvie: Not at the moment, thank you.

The letter was signed by almost 400 members of the arts community in Glasgow. They said:

“our main concern is that we are not satisfied that full consideration has been given to the potentially catastrophic impact this decision will have on the cultural life of Scotland.”

The letter goes on to look at the social as well as cultural benefit of the venue:

“Thousands of people from all over the country come together at the Arches at weekends, and it is widely regarded by leading professionals as one of the best venues in the world.”

Later on, it says:

“As a key venue at the centre of Glasgow’s remarkable cultural renaissance of the past 25 years The Arches importance to the future of the cultural life of Scotland cannot be overstated”.

Having discussed the situation with colleagues who serve on licensing boards, I intend to address two issues through my amendments. First, the existing licensing objectives focus on the issues of potential harm, crime and disorder, the threat to public safety, nuisance, the impact on public health and the need to protect children from harm. Those are important factors and licensing boards should take them into account, but positive factors can come from licensed venues and their cultural and social benefit to a community. Those factors should also be taken into account.
Amendment 5 would introduce the additional licensing objective of "promoting social and cultural life."

John Mason (Glasgow Shettleston) (SNP): Is the member arguing that a venue that is causing problems should be closed if it is a stand-alone venue but allowed to stay open if it is linked to an arts venue?

Patrick Harvie: I am arguing that our approach to licensing should take a holistic look at all the impacts of a decision, not just some of them.

Amendments 6 and 7 address a second concern that colleagues on licensing boards threw up. They often feel drawn to making a decision purely about one venue rather than about the wider impact. In this case, we are looking at the harm that is caused by recreational drugs. Most of the people who went clubbing at the Arches used a recreational drug, but it was a licensed and legal recreational drug—alcohol—and most of us also use it. Recreational drugs pose a risk of harm that we should take seriously.

The Arches has a long-standing record as one of the most progressive, enlightened and responsible venues in relation to illegal drugs. It reported issues to the police, made sure that medical facilities were on site for when someone got into trouble and trained its staff well. The idea that closing such a venue means that people who use illegal recreational drugs when they go out clubbing will instead go to the library or to a poetry reading is nonsense. People will use the same drugs in less responsible and experienced venues. Let us not kid ourselves—many clubs in Glasgow, and elsewhere, will not report it to the police when they find drugs on the premises; they will flush them. Let us not pretend that there are not irresponsible venues out there.

By taking our current approach to licensing, we risk increasing the incentive for such irresponsible behaviour. Amendments 6 and 7 ask that we balance the decision about individual premises with the wider impact on the community.

Sandra White (Glasgow Kelvin) (SNP): I hear what Patrick Harvie is saying, but to be precise we are talking about one venue operating in two different ways. As John Mason suggested, people say that the Arches nightclub pays for the cultural part of it—and obviously we are sorry about anyone losing their job—but surely it would be better to give money to the cultural part of the Arches, rather than doing as Patrick Harvie suggests, which is to say that if a venue is safe to use drugs, it is all right as a cultural and social venue? What about all the other social venues that do not participate in that?

Patrick Harvie: The argument for additional arts funding to try to salvage some of the Arches business model is still on the table.

The case that I am making for amendments 6 and 7 is not the same as for amendment 5. Amendment 5 is about cultural and social life as a licensing objective. For amendments 6 and 7, I would make the same case for a purely commercial club venue, which had no artistic element as part of its business model, as for the Arches. If we have a responsible venue, which behaves well, trains its staff and provides medical facilities, do we really think that we are improving public safety by closing it down and ensuring that its customers will go elsewhere, to a less experienced or less responsible venue? It is not appropriate to leave the alcohol licensing regime to mop up the harm that is done by irrational drug laws in this country.

I move amendment 5.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Despite the fact that the Parliament agreed a timetabling motion, it is clear from the number of members who have requested to speak that the agreed time will not be sufficient. Therefore, under rule 9.8.5A, I am minded to accept a motion without notice to propose that the time limit be extended by 15 minutes.

Motion moved,

That, under Rule 9.8.5A, the first time limit be moved by 15 minutes.—[Joe FitzPatrick.]

Motion agreed to.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: That will extend the time limit for subsequent groups. I notify members that the clock in the chamber was reset in error. The time used in debate on amendments began at 2.32 pm and the timetable for consideration of amendments will be taken from that time.

Claire Baker (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab): I appreciate the concerns that Patrick Harvie raises and I recognise that it is about the regrettable closure of the Arches in Glasgow. There is a discussion to be had about how licensing boards operate, the proportionate policing of Glasgow’s club scene and the responsibility of licensed premises to meet public safety demands. We have not had much time to consider the amendments, but I am not convinced that the bill is the right way in which to deal with those issues.

We may need to have the debate at another time. It should not be rushed and would need to include full consultation with all interested parties.
Sandra White: As I explained earlier, I understand about the cultural part of the Arches, but I have real concerns about the definition of “social and cultural life” in amendment 5. I know exactly what Patrick Harvie is saying about the Arches, but there are other forms of cultural life. Would the definition bring in strip clubs or sexual entertainment premises? I am worried that the amendment would go against everything that is sought by some of the amendments to the bill that I have lodged.

As Claire Baker said, perhaps we should have a further debate on this and look at the definition. However, at this late stage, the bill is not the proper channel to go through.

Cameron Buchanan (Lothian) (Con): On amendment 5, I can understand the desire to promote sensible social activities, but does Patrick Harvie not consider that the aim of “promoting social and cultural life” is already achieved by adherence to the current licensing objectives on the public’s behalf?

Licensing objectives are intended to protect the public and that should remain their core purpose. I appreciate the principles behind amendments 6 and 7, but I have concerns about their implementation. The objectives are meant to protect the public from particular problems and licensing decisions should respond to those when necessary. The key phrase is “where necessary”: local issues should be responded to locally.

Will Patrick Harvie confirm whether the intention of amendments 6 and 7 is to clarify the board’s responsibility for its whole area or to encourage restrictions to be applied across a whole board area, even when many parts of that area will not have pressing licensing issues?

As has been said, it is hard not to be sympathetic to the aims behind Mr Harvie’s amendments, but this is not the time or the place to debate them.

Ken Macintosh (Eastwood) (Lab): I sympathise with Patrick Harvie’s motivation in lodging these amendments. The future of the Arches is an issue that has been raised by colleagues—including Drew Smith and Claire Baker—on the Labour side of the chamber. However, I would put two arguments to Mr Harvie. First, changing the legislation governing licensing to introduce a whole new objective of “promoting social and cultural life” would be a fairly significant development, which at the least deserves fuller consideration.

A second, related point is that it is not generally good practice to introduce new proposals such as this one at stage 3. Civic licensing is already a complicated area, and the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 has been amended many times.

I urge Mr Harvie, having made his point, to withdraw amendment 5.

Michael Matheson: I am grateful to Patrick Harvie for taking us through his amendments. The licensing objectives represent the values on which the Scottish alcohol licensing system is based, and they are central to the way in which licensing boards carry out their functions under the 2005 act.

The current licensing objectives contained in the 2005 act are “preventing crime and disorder ... securing public safety ... preventing public nuisance ... protecting and improving public health; and ... protecting children from harm.”

By virtue of section 41 of the bill, the last of those will soon include “young persons”, too.

Patrick Harvie’s proposed objective of “promoting social and cultural life” sits very uneasily within an act whose purpose is the regulation of the sale of alcohol. It is difficult to see how it could operate in practice for licensing boards, the trade and the public. I am concerned that, while the aim is laudable, we should not be charging licensing boards with the promotion of social and cultural life. The existing licensing objectives concern themselves with mitigating the effects of alcohol. However, the proposed new objective does not have that same concern as its primary aim.

I am sure that we all expect boards to take decisive action to address alcohol misuse. Amendment 5 has the potential to create difficulties for licensing boards in deciding which objective should be deemed more important than another when considering an individual case, and to deter boards from taking the sorts of decisions that we would expect them to take.

I do not believe that legislation concerning the regulation of the sale of alcohol is the appropriate means by which to consider the promotion of social and cultural life in Scotland. In addition, I am of the view that the promotion of social and cultural life in Scotland is not dependent on the sale and consumption of alcohol. As such, I do not believe that that should become one of the licensing objectives in the 2005 act. I therefore ask Mr Harvie to withdraw amendment 5 and not to move amendments 6 and 7. If those amendments were agreed to, they would undermine the entire alcohol licensing regime and all that it sets out to achieve.

Patrick Harvie: Michael Matheson’s final comment that the objective would undermine everything that the licensing regime sets out to achieve is a wee bit of hyperbole. Amendment 5 is intended to broaden the aims that we seek to achieve through the licensing regime.

The cabinet secretary says that the regulation of the sale of alcohol is not the place for the promotion of cultural life in Scotland. If that is the case, it is certainly not the place either for the promotion of the objectives of our country’s drug laws.

Whether members support or oppose our current drug laws, the fact is that the impact of incidents of illegal drug use was a critical issue that led to the licensing board’s decision on the Arches. Once again, I cannot accept the argument that moving recreational drug use from one venue to another increases public safety—certainly not if we are moving it from a responsible, well-trained venue to other venues that are less so.

Drew Smith (Glasgow) (Lab): One issue that the licensing board had to deal with in the case of the Arches was concern from the police. Would the amendments mean that the licensing board could disregard those police concerns, which were at the root of the decision that was taken on the Arches?

Patrick Harvie: I would not want any licensing board in Scotland to disregard the concerns of the police, but I want what one member—I think that it was Claire Baker—called proportionate policing. Is it proportionate or intelligent to signal to other club venues in Glasgow, or elsewhere, that if they report incidents to the police instead of covering them up, they will be putting their licence at risk? At the moment we risk sending out a signal that irresponsible behaviour is less likely to lead to a licence being at risk.

Several members have pointed out that amendment 5 was lodged late, which I freely admit. Some may feel that the change it proposes is too big to introduce at stage 3. I felt that the amendment was a necessary response to recent events, and to challenge the idea that we focus only on harm. We would be wrong to ignore the harm that is caused by licensing the sale of alcohol, but we are also wrong if we fail to acknowledge the good that is done by licensing responsible, well-trained venues, and supporting them to operate even when there are problems. Those problems may be better dealt with on those premises than elsewhere.

I will press amendment 5 to a vote. Whether or not members support it, I think that this issue requires further debate and a recognition that we have been shying away from problems and pretending that our current approach to licensing solves them, when it manifestly does not.

Section 55—Duty of Licensing Boards to produce annual financial report

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The amendments in the group are minor technical amendments concerning overprovision.

Section 7 of the 2005 act places a duty on licensing boards to make an assessment of overprovision of licensed premises in any locality within their areas and subsequently include a statement regarding it in their licensing policy statements. That allows boards to consider the unique circumstances of their areas, including distinct localities within them, and decide whether, based on local need, it is appropriate to restrict access to alcohol through limits on new licences, licences of a particular type or variations of existing licences within the entire area or identified parts of it.

It is important that the overprovision assessment is an effective and robust tool for licensing boards. In respect of the overprovision ground for refusal for a premises licence or for a major variation of a premises licence, our amendments to the bill at stage 2 made the wording of the 2005 act more concise. The technical amendments in this group have been lodged in response to concerns that were raised by stakeholders that our stage 2 amendments had, in reality, made the wording overly brief.

On further consideration, we agree that it will clarify interpretation if there is more detail at section 23(5)(e) of the 2005 act, which concerns the refusal of a premises licence on grounds of overprovision, and section 30(5)(d) of the 2005 act, which concerns the refusal to vary a premises licence on grounds of overprovision. We lodged these technical amendments to rectify that so that the updated sections 23(5)(e) and 30(5)(d) of the 2005 act would be clearer to the reader.

I ask the Parliament to support the amendments.

Section 54—Overprovision

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Group 3 is on alcohol licensing: overprovision. Amendment 8, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is grouped with amendments 9 to 11.
their functions. Amendment 12 addresses a concern first raised by Alcohol Focus Scotland and others, supported by the Local Government and Regeneration Committee, about the need for licensing boards to provide greater clarity about how they carry out their business.

John Wilson moved a non-Government amendment at stage 2 to oblige licensing boards to lodge annual reports on the exercise of their functions. The Government is sympathetic to the views that were expressed during the bill process, and I am grateful to Mr Wilson for agreeing to withdraw his amendment at stage 2 to allow my officials to carry out some informal stakeholder engagement before lodging the Government amendment.

Section 55 already imposes a duty on licensing boards to produce an annual financial report. Amendment 12 imposes a further duty on boards to prepare and publish an annual report on the exercise of their functions no later than three months after the end of each financial year. The amendment sets out what generally should be included in the report and what boards should have regard to in its compilation.

Amendment 12 also allows licensing boards to publish a combined financial and functions report, if they so wish. To ensure that the reports remain as effective and useful as possible, amendment 12 provides Scottish ministers with the power to make further provision about the annual reports using secondary legislation. We would expect to consult on the most effective and proportionate format and content before laying secondary legislation is required.

The annual reports will ensure increased accountability and transparency from licensing boards so that the public can see how they go about their business. I ask Parliament to support amendments 12 and 13.

I move amendment 12.

John Wilson (Central Scotland) (SNP): I thank the cabinet secretary for taking on board the aim of the amendments that I lodged at stage 2, which were based on discussions with Alcohol Focus Scotland. I welcome the cabinet secretary’s decision to lodge amendments 12 and 13 at stage 3, and I look forward to their being agreed to.

Amendment 12 agreed to.

Amendment 13 moved—[Michael Matheson]—and agreed to.

After section 59

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Group 5 is on alcohol licensing: register of alcohol premises licences and personal licences. Amendment 14, in the name of Dr Richard Simpson, is the only amendment in the group.

Dr Richard Simpson (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab): I was not a member of the committee that considered the bill, but I observed the evidence that was given by a number of people at stage 1 about information that is available to the public. Amendment 14 would create a national alcohol licensing register to ensure that communities would have access to comprehensive information on licensed premises to help them to participate in the licensing process, particularly in relation to overprovision. Collating data at licensing board level in a uniform manner and publishing it centrally, preferably with information available at the ward or small data area level, could ensure a much more accessible form of information for communities.

Currently, licensing boards have to keep a public licensing register, but Alcohol Focus Scotland was recently able to locate only 16 publicly available registers, covering 19 of the 40 licensing board areas. The form and content of the information provided in the registers is highly variable, and not all the registers are available electronically. Alcohol licensing registers are potentially valuable tools for communities and other stakeholders to make use of in supporting their involvement in the licensing process, but there is a need to consider the form in which they are produced to ensure that they are as accessible and helpful as possible.

There is a national online register for tobacco outlets in Scotland, which can be searched by local authority area, postcode and type of premises. Examples of other possible approaches include mapping tools such as that produced by Lambeth Council, and the new website that shows alcohol and tobacco outlet density for small neighbourhood areas across Scotland. That website was created by a partnership involving the University of Edinburgh’s centre for research on environment, society and health—CRESH—the University of Glasgow, Alcohol Focus Scotland and ASH Scotland.

At stage 1, Dr Niamh Shortt from CRESH said:

“One of the most striking things in the documentation” that the committee sent out

“was the very small number of applications that were refused. In 2011-12, only 21 licences were refused, whereas 347 were granted. In 2012-13, 12 were refused and 332 were granted. That shows the difficulties for local authorities in looking at”—

and fulfilling—

“licensing objectives.”—[Official Report, Local Government and Regeneration Committee, 19 November 2014; c 15.]
CRESH found that no data was available on licensed premises at the local area level, and that the data that was available was so variable that it took CRESH nine months to cleanse it before being able to put it into a research paper. Members might wish to look at the paper that has now been published, because it shows the relationship between the density—indeed, the overprovision—of licensed premises and alcohol problems in different areas.

It is a huge disappointment that communities have been unable to challenge overprovision largely because they have been unable to access the data. Access to total board area data and small area data is vital.

Amendment 14 would allow ministers to make provision for a national register to be completed by boards; it would not overburden licensees but would require boards to produce information in a specific format that would be publishable on the web.

Paragraph (3)(a) of the proposed new section that amendment 14 would insert would ensure that the information to be recorded not only would include the number of personal licences but could include data on the linear sales areas for off-licences and the number of drinking places available in on-licences.

I move amendment 14.

John Scott (Ayr) (Con): I will be brief. I welcome the cabinet secretary addressing the problem that is faced by individual licence holders who fail to renew their licences on time. I understand that that provision will be enacted swiftly, and I would be grateful if the cabinet secretary could publicise now—and widely thereafter—that welcome change.

Michael Matheson: I am grateful to Richard Simpson for lodging amendment 14, and I am sympathetic to the views that he expresses. However, I do not believe that it is appropriate to introduce the issue at this stage. The issue has not been brought before the Local Government and Regeneration Committee, nor has it been subjected to detailed financial consideration. I understand that a similar service in relation to e-planning has cost several million pounds to set up.

I am also concerned that the amendment, as drafted, is unworkable, because it incorrectly places a burden on licensing authorities to provide information when, in fact, the information that is required is held by licensing boards.

I assure the chamber that the Scottish Government is alert to the issue and that work is already in hand to go some way towards addressing it. Government amendment 12, which public health bodies such as Alcohol Focus Scotland pressed for, will impose a duty on licensing boards to report on the exercise of their functions and provide considerable information on the licences that are held, including occasional licences. We intend to consult widely to ensure that those reports are as useful as they can be without imposing an undue burden on licensing boards.

Furthermore, Police Scotland is already well advanced in rolling out its national Inn Keeper database. The police are a statutory consultee, which means that licensing boards will be provided with information from that national database.

The Scottish Government is working with a wide range of partner organisations to develop a business case for a national online licensing solution. Initial work has led to the development of a wider scope that is looking beyond just alcohol licensing to the civic regimes and central Government licensing regimes.

As all members will be aware, Scottish Government resources are limited. Therefore, rather than hastily commit to a specific project, we would do better to subject a major project such as that which is proposed to proper scoping and cost benefit analysis. That would allow us to assess the widest possible benefits to stakeholders while using effectively the resources that the Scottish Government, local authorities and others have in the area.

I ask Richard Simpson to withdraw amendment 14, on the basis that the Scottish Government already has work under way to develop an action plan for the delivery of a national licensing solution.

Dr Simpson: I am prepared to withdraw my amendment.

Under subsection (6) of the new section to be inserted by amendment 12—the annual functions report amendment, which we have just agreed to—it will be possible for ministers do much of what I am asking for, through “the form and required content of reports”.

I understand from the cabinet secretary’s comments that that would be the case.

If communities are to participate fully in seeking to prevent overprovision, it is essential that they have that information. I therefore urge the cabinet secretary to pursue the development work that he has referred to as rapidly as possible and to ensure that we have an electronic system that allows proper access to the information.

On the basis of the cabinet secretary’s reassurances, I seek to withdraw the amendment.

Amendment 14, by agreement, withdrawn.
Section 60—Refusal to grant private hire car licences on grounds of overprovision

15:30

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Group 6 concerns overprovision of private hire cars. Amendment 15, in the name of Cameron Buchanan, is grouped with amendment 16.

Cameron Buchanan: The amendments make it clear that if a licensing authority wishes to refuse a private car hire licence solely on the ground of overprovision, it must prove that there is, or would be, overprovision.

I consider strongly that refusing a private hire car licence solely on the ground of overprovision is anti-competitive and would hurt consumers, jobs and, indeed, the local economy. In the interests of compromise, I have worded the amendments to ensure that such refusals are kept to cases in which overprovision is certain.

Refusals due to overprovision would be against the best interests of the public for four reasons. First, restricting the supply of private hire vehicles would limit the ability of consumers to choose between different services and select their preferred option. That choice is crucial to increasing and maintaining standards of service in the industry. Secondly, preventing new entrants would prevent prices from going as low as they could do in a less restricted market, as an expanded supply of private hire vehicles would bring down prices and make such transport an even more affordable option for all consumers. Thirdly, experience elsewhere has shown that those lower prices would allow more people than before to make frequent use of private transport. That can be a great convenience and it would be a loss to the Scottish public if they were denied the same opening up of travel options that is available in other places. Finally, it is apparent that determining that there is overprovision in a locality would prevent economic growth and job creation.

If someone wishes to start work as a private hire vehicle driver, the licensing authority should not stand in their way just because other drivers have already entered the market and do not want competition for fares. For that reason, the amendments aim to provide some measure of protection against unfair licence refusals by ensuring that authorities can refuse licences on the ground of overprovision only where that is certain.

I move amendment 15.

Ken Macintosh: It is clear from Mr Buchanan’s comments that he believes that a competitive free market trumps every other consideration for this Parliament. I urge colleagues to resist the amendments.

Mr Buchanan suggests that we replace a local authority's judgment that it is satisfied that there is overprovision with a requirement for there to be proof of overprovision. The matter was debated by the committee at stage 2, when I believe that Mr Buchanan asked the Government to remove section 60 altogether. The Scottish Government agreed to provide further guidance. That was accepted by the committee, and I ask Mr Buchanan to accept the committee’s judgment on the matter.

Michael Matheson: I am grateful to Cameron Buchanan for explaining his amendments.

Section 60 will allow a licensing authority to refuse a private hire car licence where it is satisfied that granting it would result in an overprovision of private hire cars. I remain of the view that an optional overprovision test in relation to private hire cars is a useful addition to the taxi and private hire car licensing regime.

There are already appropriate checks and balances in place in relation to those who are unhappy with a decision that a licensing authority has made. Paragraph 18 of schedule 1 to the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 provides that, where a private hire car driver licence is refused, the applicant can require the licensing authority to provide reasons for that refusal and can appeal the decision to the sheriff court. If, during any appeal hearing, the licensing authority is unable to demonstrate that it has reasonably reached its decision, the sheriff can uphold the appeal and remit the case back to the authority to be reconsidered or reversed.

I am concerned that the amendments would create uncertainty in the minds of licensing authorities and might deter them from considering an overprovision test in relation to private hire cars.

It would be wrong to take that tool away from licensing authorities or to discourage its use. An overprovision test would allow licensing authorities to ensure that those entering the private hire car trade can have an expectation of making a reasonable income while reducing the temptation for private hire car drivers to attempt to operate in illegal competition with taxis. I therefore ask Cameron Buchanan to withdraw amendment 15 and not to move 16.

Cameron Buchanan: Having listened to the arguments on both sides, I would like to press amendment 15.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The question is, that amendment 15 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.
The Deputy Presiding Officer: There will be a division. This will be a one-minute division.

Section 61—Testing of private hire car drivers

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Group 7 is on testing of private hire car drivers. Amendment 17, in the name of Cameron Buchanan, is the only amendment in the group.

Cameron Buchanan: Amendment 17 would prevent licensing authorities from requiring testing of the navigational knowledge of applicants for a private hire car driver licence, although it would allow other forms of background checks or testing.

Satellite navigation now allows drivers to navigate efficiently without extensive knowledge of roads, which makes requiring a knowledge test an unnecessary barrier to employment and growth in the industry. [Interuption.]

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Order, please. I need to hear the member.

Cameron Buchanan: Furthermore, restricting competition would act against the interests of consumers by keeping prices higher than they should be.

Some people may prefer the possibility that they will pay a little extra to be driven by someone with extensive local knowledge who does not need to use a satellite navigation system. Those people are free to choose a taxi instead of a private hire vehicle.

The point is that people should be free to choose for themselves which type of private transport to opt for. The Government should not allow that choice to be taken away from them. We should allow the market to reflect customers’ preferences by letting them make their own decisions, rather than allowing licensing authorities to dictate what sort of taxi industry there should be.

I recall that the minister argued at stage 2 that the testing provisions should provide licensing authorities with discretion, and that tests could cover issues such as customer care and disability awareness so that private services can meet customers’ needs. I acknowledge those points. Amendment 17 retains that discretion and would allow such tests to take place, including checks to allay any fears about an applicant’s criminal background. That is very important.

The point is that allowing knowledge testing of all drivers is a distinct issue. It would probably become a method to shield incumbents from the competitive effects of a technological change. Customer preference for either local knowledge or technology should be left to the customer, and testing should be introduced only where it is in consumers’ best interests.

I believe that amendment 17 strikes the appropriate balance and therefore urge members to act on behalf of consumers by supporting it.

I move amendment 17.

Michael Matheson: I am grateful to Cameron Buchanan for explaining amendment 17.

I am mindful of Cameron Buchanan’s concerns that it is not desirable to create a barrier to entry to the private hire car trade that is too high. That is why the provisions on the ability to test private hire car drivers have deliberately been drafted to be flexible. Whether and what to test is at the discretion of the local licensing authority.

We are also happy to make the point that any test should be proportionate and necessary within the guidance that will accompany the legislation. Accordingly, where the local authority does not see a requirement to take forward a knowledge test of any kind for private hire car drivers, they are not required to do so.

However, I suspect that many passengers would quite rightly expect that a private hire car driver has a reasonable knowledge of the area and how to get about it. It is right to give local licensing authorities the ability to test that.

I remain of the view that the licensing authority is best placed to decide whether any testing of private hire car drivers should occur and what the test should involve. I therefore ask Cameron Buchanan to withdraw amendment 17.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The question is, that amendment 17 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: There will be a division.

Section 68—Licensing of sexual entertainment venues

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Group 8 is on notice of sexual entertainment venue licence application. Amendment 18, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is the only amendment in the group.

Michael Matheson: Amendment 18 is an important measure in supporting community engagement in the licensing of sexual entertainment. The issue was raised by Cara Hilton at stage 2, and I undertook at that time to lodge an amendment at stage 3.

Although the current process already allows for robust notification procedures, with requirements for both newspaper advertising and notices to be publicly displayed, there are advantages in requiring specific notification to particular bodies that will have an interest in the licensing of sexual entertainment venues. There is a practical advantage in ensuring that important stakeholders, including violence against women partnerships and community councils, are notified of applications early, so that they have sufficient time to consider applications and to make such representations to the authority as they consider appropriate. [Interruption.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Order, please. Can we hear the cabinet secretary?

Michael Matheson: There is also an advantage in that it will send a very clear message that groups that are identified as being appropriate to receive copies of the application, including violence against women partnerships and community groups, are at the heart of the licensing process.
Rather than identify particular bodies in primary legislation, my preference is for each local authority to identify which organisations in its area should be notified of applications, because local authorities are best placed to make that judgement. However, the statutory guidance that will follow the bill will indicate the types of bodies and organisations that should be considered, and my intention is that they will certainly include bodies such as violence against women partnerships. Local authorities will have to take that guidance into consideration when compiling their list of recipients. Local authorities will also have to have regard to their sexual entertainment venue licensing policy statement and the full range of objectives that are set out in that document.

I move amendment 18.

Amendment 18 agreed to.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Group 9 is on sexual entertainment venues: access of persons under 18. Amendment 22, in the name of Cara Hilton, is grouped with amendment 19. If amendment 22 is agreed to, I cannot call amendment 19, because it will have been pre-empted.

15:45

Cara Hilton (Dunfermline) (Lab): I thank the Zero Tolerance Trust for working with me on amendment 22, and I thank Scotland’s Commissioner for Children and Young People, who has given the amendment his support.

The purpose of amendment 22 is to prevent under-18s from working in sexual entertainment venues. It would remove the option of young people being employed in those venues at any time and ensure that sexual entertainment venues cannot be accessed by children and young people at any time.

I recognise that Michael Matheson’s amendment 19 seeks to clarify the circumstances in which young people may enter sexual entertainment venues, and that it would oblige operators to provide a reasonable excuse, but I do not accept that that provides sufficient safeguards. When I lodged the same amendment at stage 2, there was some debate about the employment rights of, for example, an apprentice plumber who attended a job at a sexual entertainment venue. The reality is that that affects very few young people, but there will be significant risks to a large number of young people if the bill proceeds as it is.

The Zero Tolerance Trust has argued that allowing under-18s to be employed in sexual entertainment venues will in essence create a groomers’ charter by allowing venues to employ teenage girls to work as cleaners or in office roles and then to persuade or subtly coerce them to become performers when they reach 18. That is a real concern for vulnerable young women including care leavers, and for women who live with poverty or disadvantage. Even if sexual entertainment is not taking place, a young person who works in one of those venues will be exposed to sexually explicit materials and could be at risk of sexual exploitation, of being propositioned for sex or of being exposed to an industry that damages women and to an environment in which sexual entertainment is normalised. That could lead a vulnerable young person to come to the view that sexual entertainment is an acceptable form of employment for them.

Scotland’s Commissioner for Children and Young People, Tam Baillie, has said that “the approach being taken in this Bill towards young people being employed in sexual entertainment venues appears in direct contradiction to a range of key Scottish Government policies and legislation, including Getting It Right For Every Child” and the Children and Young People (Scotland) Act 2014. If we are serious about having an equal Scotland and about tackling domestic abuse and violence, and if we really want to make Scotland the best place for girls to grow up in, the Scottish Government must be consistent. Michael Matheson’s amendment 19 is well intentioned, but as Tam Baillie said, it has the “potential to create more difficulties than it solves”.

The use of the word “reasonable” leaves the way open to wider interpretation. I think that that could be to the detriment of young people and that it will put more young people at risk. It is already the case that no one under the age of 18 can work in a sex shop under any circumstances. That provision should also apply to sexual entertainment venues. My amendment 22 would allow that to happen.

My amendment 22 is in the best interests of children and young people right across Scotland. I urge the Scottish Government and members to listen to the views of Scotland’s Commissioner for Children and Young People and of groups including Barnardo’s Scotland, the Zero Tolerance Trust, Rape Crisis Scotland and Scottish Women’s Aid. Members should support my amendment.

I move amendment 22.

Michael Matheson: Amendments 19 and 22 follow issues that were highlighted by Scotland’s Commissioner for Children and Young People ahead of the stage 1 debate and which were subsequently pursued by Zero Tolerance Scotland. Each concerns the position of young people in relation to sexual entertainment venues and the particular concern that a young person could be employed in such a venue—as a cleaner, for example—and then find themselves being drawn into becoming a dancer. At stage 2, I agreed to consider the matter further and to lodge an appropriate Government amendment at stage 3.

We have always made it clear that the bill’s intention is to tighten up the licensing of sexual entertainment venues, which have been treated hitherto in more or less the same way as any other licensed premises. That has meant that under-18s could perhaps collect glasses or undertake similar activities while the premises are open and the sexual entertainment is taking place. We do not believe that that is acceptable. That is why the bill, as introduced, made it clear that under-18s should never be on the premises while sexual entertainment is taking place.

I have fully considered the concerns that have been raised about the employment of under-18s in such venues, and in response, we have lodged amendment 19, which would remove the provision in the bill that would have permitted a young person to be employed by a sexual entertainment venue. Amendment 22 would do likewise, as Cara Hilton has outlined. Therefore, both amendments mean that under-18s should not generally be able to access such venues.

However, the Government amendment goes further in providing protection. There is a misunderstanding about how the law works in this area, which has led to some stakeholders confusing the impacts of amendments 19 and 22. I hope to make that clear this afternoon.

The Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982 includes a provision for a reasonable excuse that will permit a young person to be in a sexual entertainment venue. Cara Hilton’s amendment would simply remove the provision in the bill relating to the employment without addressing the reasonable excuse in the 1982 act and would therefore permit a young person to be in such a venue at any time, including when sexual entertainment is being provided if that young person has a reasonable excuse. It will be a matter for the courts to determine what might constitute a reasonable excuse.

However, the Government’s amendment would restrict availability of that defence of a reasonable excuse only to when the sexual entertainment was not taking place. That is, under amendment 19, no person under 18, whether an employee or otherwise, will be permitted on the premises while sexual entertainment is taking place and only where there is a reasonable excuse for that young person will they be permitted within the premises when no entertainment is taking place. Cara Hilton’s amendment does not go that far.

Therefore, both the Government amendment 19 and Cara Hilton’s amendment 22 would remove the provision in the bill that permits an under-18 to be employed in a sexual entertainment venue. However, Cara Hilton’s amendment is less restrictive than the Government’s amendment in that it would allow the reasonable excuse defence to be applied at all times, whereas amendment 19 will restrict that defence to times when sexual entertainment is not taking place.

Liam McArthur: I am very grateful to the cabinet secretary for giving way. He will be aware of the children’s commissioner’s concerns, specifically in relation to that point. In his briefing the commissioner states:

“Amendment 19 also shifts the focus from young people in an employment capacity to young people more generally. There is therefore a possibility that venue owners could find ways for younger children and young people to be ‘legitimately allowed to enter sexual entertainment venues.’”

How would the cabinet secretary respond to that specific concern?

Michael Matheson: Unfortunately, the children’s commissioner has got the law wrong in this area, because of the reasonable excuse provision, which is provided for in the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982, which has not been addressed. That is why the Government’s amendment 19 addresses that point.

Government amendment 19 makes it clear that no person under 18 can ever be employed in a sexual entertainment venue. It also makes it clear that no under-18 can be on the premises when sexual entertainment is taking place. Finally, it makes it clear that even when sexual entertainment is not taking place, an under-18 can be on the premises only if it is shown that there is good reason for them to be there.

For those reasons, I ask Parliament to reject amendment 22 and to support amendment 19, which imposes further restrictions to protect young people.

Ken Macintosh: In speaking in support of the powerful words of my colleague Cara Hilton on her amendment 22, I simply draw members’ attention to the excellent briefing from Scotland’s Commissioner for Children and Young People. [Interruption] The minister made an argument based on legal advice that was remarkably unconvincing for me. He made an argument that there should be reasonable excuse—[Interruption]

The Deputy Presiding Officer (John Scott): Order.

Ken Macintosh: I have to say that the children’s commissioner has laid out a very clear argument.
He says that he is concerned that:

“A young person working in an SEV”—a sexual entertainment venue—is likely to be at increased risk of grooming/exploitation by their employer or those associating with them.

Even if sexual entertainment is not taking place at the time the young person is present, it is likely that environment itself is unsuitable. For example, sexually explicit materials may be on display.

A young person will be working in an environment where sexual entertainment is ‘normalised’ and therefore may form a view that sexual entertainment is an acceptable form of employment for them."

His conclusion is clear:

“A sexual entertainment venue is no place for a child or a young person.”

It is difficult to disagree with either of the children’s commissioner’s observations or conclusions. I urge members to follow the commissioner’s recommendations, to support Cara Hilton’s amendment 22 and to reject the minister’s amendment 19.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: I call Cara Hilton to wind up, and to seek to withdraw or to press her amendment 22.

Cara Hilton: There is a danger that the bill could put children and young people at risk of harm. My amendment would remove the option of any under 18-year-olds being employed by a sexual entertainment venue. [Interruption.]

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Order. Order! Allow Cara Hilton to be heard.

Cara Hilton: Amendment 22 will ensure that such venues cannot be accessed by children and under 18-year-olds in any circumstances or at any time.

I am not at all convinced by the cabinet secretary’s arguments.

Kevin Stewart (Aberdeen Central) (SNP): Will Cara Hilton take an intervention?

Cara Hilton: No—I have no time. I am sorry.

Kevin Stewart: We have plenty of time.

Cara Hilton: Amendment 19, by allowing venues a reasonable excuse to allow young people on premises, will open up many loopholes, which will put young people, especially young women, at risk of sexual exploitation. The venues are completely unsuitable for young people at any time.

Today, we have an opportunity to send out a strong message about the Scotland that we want. I want a Scotland that protects our children and young people from harm and exploitation and which challenges the objectification of women and girls. I urge the chamber to vote for amendment 22 and to reject amendment 19.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The question is, that amendment 22 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: There will be a division.

Amendment 19 moved—[Michael Matheson].

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The question is, that amendment 19 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The result of the division is: For 33, Against 67, Abstentions 14.
It has always been envisaged that a local authority that seeks to license sexual entertainment in its area will have to undertake a full and proper exercise to reach a determination of how to approach the licensing function. In other words, it will have to adopt a policy in respect of the exercise of its functions that relate to licensing sexual entertainment venues.

Amendment 20 seeks to formalise that by requiring the preparation and publication of a policy statement, and it also requires that, in preparing its policy, the authority should focus on listed objectives. Some of those objectives are traditional licensing issues—for example, prevention of nuisance and crime, and protecting children and young people from harm. We have also included the objective of reducing violence against women in order to make it clear to local authorities that that important issue is at the heart of the licensing regime, and that part of the licensing authority’s role will be to ensure improved working conditions and a safer environment for the women who work in those venues.

The Scottish Government will produce statutory guidance to assist local authorities in developing their policies. Once those policies are prepared, the local authorities must have regard to their own policy statements when exercising their functions in relation to the licensing of sexual entertainment venues. As a result, the policy statement will need to be considered when a list of persons or bodies who are to receive copies of licence applications is prepared, or when it is decided that such an application should be granted. That will ensure that the policy statement is fully embedded in the licensing process. Finally, the amendment also lays out the mechanics of how and when the policy statement should be published and reviewed.

I move amendment 20.

Cara Hilton: I thank the cabinet secretary for engaging with me and the Zero Tolerance Trust on this amendment and amendment 18. I am pleased that both amendments reflect many of the issues that I raised during stage 2 in respect of consulting violence against women partnerships and obliging local authorities to produce a licensing policy statement.

Amendment 20 is important, because it will ensure that local authorities, in offering a licence for a sexual entertainment venue, fully consider the wider public policy priorities including tackling violence against women and protecting young people from harm. There is absolutely no doubt that there needs to be a lot more public scrutiny before such venues are granted licences. I hope that the amendment will ensure that there is more joined-up thinking on the policy at local and national levels, and I am very happy to support it.
Amendment 20 agreed to.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: That brings us to the end of stage 3 consideration of amendments.

Gas Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill

The Deputy Presiding Officer (John Scott): The next item of business is a debate on motion S4M-13606, in the name of Michael Matheson, on the Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill.

The Cabinet Secretary for Justice (Michael Matheson): I am pleased to open the stage 3 debate on the Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill. For the purposes of rule 9.11 of standing orders, I advise the Parliament that Her Majesty, having been informed of the purport of the bill, has consented to place her prerogative and interests, so far as they are affected by the bill, at the Parliament’s disposal for the purposes of the bill.

As members are aware, the bill sets out a new licensing regime for air weapons and amends the existing alcohol licensing and civic licensing regimes. I thank past and present members of the Local Government and Regeneration Committee for their detailed scrutiny of the bill over the past 13 months, and I am also grateful to the Finance Committee and the Delegated Powers and Law Reform Committee for their consideration of the bill.

The Local Government and Regeneration Committee invited a wide range of stakeholders to give evidence at stage 1. That evidence, as well as the committee’s stage 1 report—which supported the general principles of the bill—has proven to be extremely valuable in helping the Government to reflect on whether we had the provisions exactly right.

The stage 2 committee meetings helped us to further refine the bill. We have in front of us today a bill that will make a number of significant improvements to the relevant licensing regimes.

We have a long-standing commitment to reducing gun crime, and the licensing of air weapons is central to that aim. It featured in our 2007 and 2011 manifestos, and the power to regulate air weapons was finally devolved to this Parliament in the Scotland Act 2012.

We have acted on that new power and consulted widely with experts and the public. Our proposals have not been universally welcomed, but we believe that they strike the right balance between respecting the interests of people who shoot legitimately—for work, sports, pest control or leisure—and the need to ensure that those who would misuse guns do not have access to them.
Alexander Fergusson (Galloway and West Dunfries) (Con): I appreciate the cabinet secretary verifying that the principal purpose is to reduce crime involving air weapons, but can he tell me what evidential back-up he has to suggest that the measure will reduce gun crime using air weapons, which is already at an almost record low?

Michael Matheson: The member is correct to say that gun crime is at an almost record low. However, within the category of gun crime, almost half of all the offences involve air weapons. He may also have noticed from the most recently published statistics that, in the area where there was an increase in gun crime, the increase was due to the use of air weapons. Having a licensing regime will assist us to be more effective in ensuring that people who are not suitable to have such weapons do not have access to them.

The bill does not ban air weapons in Scotland, but those who should not have access to firearms—including those who deliberately and maliciously target property, animals or other people—will no longer be allowed to have air weapons. That will better protect the public from suffering harm at the hands of those who misuse their guns.

When publishing the committee’s stage 1 report, the committee’s convener, Kevin Stewart, said:

“There is no doubt air weapons are dangerous ... That is why we welcome plans to introduce a licensing regime ... It is a timely and important piece of work.”

I welcome and agree with his remarks and I am sure that the majority of members also agree with them and support the provisions.

Alcohol licensing is of constant interest to the Parliament. That part of the bill is largely focused on quite technical issues. We know that outdoor drinking dens attract vulnerable young people and place them at immediate and long-term risk. That is why the bill creates offences in relation to the supply of alcohol by adults to children and young people in a public place. That will give the police the powers that they require to address the problem of drinking dens.

A fit-and-proper-person test is being introduced for premises licences and personal licences, and licensing boards will also be able to consider spent licences. Those changes were widely called for to ensure that only those who are suitable can hold a licence.

We are clarifying that a licensing board, when considering overprovision, may determine that the whole of its area is a single locality. We have listened to calls for licensing boards to provide greater clarity about how they carry out their business. Therefore, as well as imposing a duty on boards to report annually on their income and expenditure, the bill requires boards to publish an annual report on the exercise of their functions.

Various members expressed concerns about the five-year ban on someone reapplying for a personal licence after they have had their licence revoked for failure to submit a refresher training certificate. We are removing that ban. That will come into effect on the day following royal assent.

The bill improves the effectiveness of civic licensing regimes with a variety of reforms across a wide area. It will deliver an improved regime for the licensing of metal dealers that will raise standards in the industry and make it more difficult for metal thieves to convert the proceeds of crime into cash. The bill ensures that all dealers are licensed, bans the use of cash as payment for scrap, tightens record-keeping arrangements and requires proper identification of customers. It also increases the scope of licensing to capture some important peripheral activities, such as door-to-door collectors. It increases penalties for licensing offences and creates a power that will enable the creation of a register of metal dealers.

I take the opportunity to record my thanks to those who have helped in developing the proposals—particularly the British Metals Recycling Association, which has represented the interests of the many legitimate and reputable scrap metal dealers, and the British Transport Police, which has led the fight against metal theft in recent years.

The bill allows communities a greater say over whether sexual entertainment, such as lap dancing, takes place in their areas by allowing local authorities the power to provide for a licensing regime for such activity and thereby to control the number of licences that are granted for sexual entertainment venues. Central to that is the belief that the voice of communities should be heard and that local authorities should have a clear influence over whether an activity such as sexual entertainment should take place in their areas. Local authorities are best placed to reflect the views of the communities that they serve and to determine whether sexual entertainment establishments should be authorised and under what conditions.

I welcome the amendments to the bill that reinforce the role that imposing proper control over sexual entertainment venues can play in tackling violence against women. I applaud the role that many individuals and organisations have played in getting us to this point, but I particularly acknowledge Sandra White, who has worked tirelessly for many years to highlight the issues and to push for the introduction of such a licensing regime.
The bill also makes a small number of changes in relation to taxi and private hire car licensing regimes. Local authorities are responsible for hire car licensing regimes. They have discretion in applying a local regime that best meets their area’s requirements, and that can take account of the views of customers and the trade. In general, the local process works well.

Specific provisions in the bill include the power to refuse, on the ground of overprovision, to grant private hire car licences; the extension of driver testing to allow testing of private hire car drivers; and the removal of the contract exemptions from the licensing and regulation of taxis and private hire cars, which will bring hire cars that are used on contracts into the licensing regime. The bill also simplifies and improves licensing arrangements by, for example, providing for the licensing of theatres within the public entertainment licensing regime.

I have set out the Government’s thinking on some of the key areas of a wide-ranging bill.

I move,

That the Parliament agrees that the Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill be passed.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Before I call Cara Hilton, I inform members that, to allow everyone to speak in the debate, I have determined that decision time will take place at 10 past five.

Cara Hilton (Dunfermline) (Lab): I echo the cabinet secretary’s comments and thank all who were involved in devoting time and energy to supporting us in our scrutiny of the Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill. I particularly thank the parliamentary staff for the support that they provided to the Local Government and Regeneration Committee during the bill’s progress.

I joined the committee mid-way through the process, so I missed many of the early evidence sessions, but I thank all the witnesses and interest groups that engaged with the committee and provided evidence on the wide range of topics that the bill covers. I thank the cabinet secretary for his willingness to work with committee members and other MSPs to improve the bill and for engaging with and responding constructively to all stakeholders involved.

The bill is certainly a bill of many parts. It introduces a new licensing regime for air weapons, as well as reforming local authority licensing functions in respect of alcohol, taxis and private hire cars, scrap metal dealers and theatres. The bill also introduces a new licensing regime for sexual entertainment venues.

According to the policy memorandum, the bill’s aim is to protect public safety, preserve public order, reduce crime and advance public health. During the stage 2 debate back in April, my colleague Alex Rowley suggested that combining such a diverse range of subjects and objectives into a single bill, which is based on possibly outdated legislation, is perhaps not the best way to legislate. I hope that this Scottish Government and future Governments will reflect on that.

The committee’s report on the bill stated that “The Bill is what could be described as a ‘pick and mix’.” That sums up the situation pretty well. Scottish Labour will support the bill today, but we do not think that it is perfect.

Considerable progress has been made on alcohol licensing. I was pleased that our amendments were accepted and to hear the reassurance that was given to Dr Richard Simpson that work on the issue that his amendment raised is under way.

We are concerned that some parts of section 68 of the bill, as amended by the Government today, could put children and young people at risk. I am disappointed that my amendment to totally ban under-18s from sexual entertainment venues was rejected, despite having the backing of Scotland’s Commissioner for Children and Young People, Barnardo’s Scotland, the Zero Tolerance Trust, Scottish Women’s Aid and Rape Crisis Scotland.

I am disappointed that the Scottish Government believes that it is acceptable for young people to have access to sexual entertainment venues if owners can come up with a reasonable excuse. That directly contradicts a range of key Scottish Government policies that Scottish Labour supports, such as getting it right for every child and the Children and Young People (Scotland) Act 2014. It is also inconsistent with the Scottish Government’s strategy on violence against women.

Michael Matheson: Does Cara Hilton understand the point that I made about her amendment and the Government’s amendment in relation to under-18s having access to sexual entertainment venues? Had we gone with the amendment that Cara Hilton proposed, the reasonable excuse defence could have been used at any time when the venue was being used for sexual entertainment or not for sexual entertainment, whereas the Government amendment bans under-18s from being on the premises and closes down the use of the reasonable excuse defence, so that it cannot be used to allow a young person to be on the premises when sexual entertainment is taking place. Those are the provisions that we will now have in law, under the bill.

Cara Hilton: That is one interpretation, but I am not convinced by those arguments. I lodged the same amendment at stage 2 and I did not hear those arguments then; this is the first time that I have heard those arguments, so I am a bit doubtful as to their validity.

Kevin Stewart (Aberdeen Central) (SNP): Oh.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Order.

Cara Hilton: I have lost my place now.

I am pleased that the Scottish Government introduced positive amendments that will improve notification procedures and require local authorities to fully consider the impact of licensing sexual entertainment venues on the local authority's wider objectives, such as reducing violence against women and protecting children and young people. I hope that that will give local communities a bigger say in whether such venues can operate in their areas.

The cabinet secretary’s amendments in those areas reflect what I hoped to achieve in the amendments that I lodged at stage 2. That is welcome progress. I hope that we can develop more joined-up policy making at local and national levels in building towards the type of Scotland that we all want to see.

The sex industry can never be allowed to operate in a vacuum. Our approach needs to reflect the goals in “Equally Safe” of a Scotland where all individuals are equally safe and respected and where our town and city centres are welcoming to all. Until now, the industry has in effect been unregulated so, although the bill is far from ideal, the new licensing regime that it proposes is certainly better than the current situation.

Regardless of the debates about the legality of the new regime, we have to be vigilant in monitoring that regime. In licensing such venues, the Scottish Government risks normalising a harmful form of sexual exploitation. As the Zero Tolerance Trust pointed out in its initial briefing to the Local Government and Regeneration Committee,

“If we are to move beyond women’s value and worth being located in their bodies and their perceived sexual attractiveness, we need to move beyond seeing sexual entertainment venues as normal and harmless.”

We need to challenge a culture where women and girls are viewed and treated as sexualised objects. To fail to send out a clear message on that is to fail our young people.

There is no doubt that the taxi and private hire car industry is changing rapidly, and it is vital that the legislation reflects the pace of change. During the committee’s evidence sessions, there was concern about whether the bill will be robust enough and future proofed enough to prevent taxi app companies from bypassing local regimes. I hope that it will be, but only time will tell.

I know that the Scottish Taxi Federation was pleased with the assurances that it received from the cabinet secretary. We all agree that it is vital that there is a level playing field and a fairer deal for all in the sector.

Scottish Labour fully supports the air weapons proposals in the bill. It is estimated that 500,000 airguns are owned by people throughout Scotland. The bill will—rightly—require anyone who owns an airgun to demonstrate a legitimate reason for having such a weapon.

There is no doubt in my mind that air weapons are dangerous. The tragic death of two-year-old Andrew Morton 10 years ago and the heartache that his family continue to endure every day highlight the real and pressing need for us to act to prevent future tragedies.

Half of all firearms offences involve the use of an air weapon, and every single day our police officers and animal welfare groups have to deal with the consequences of those weapons being misused. The proposals in the bill are welcome and will ensure that Scotland has a strong and robust air weapons licensing regime.

The bill’s proposals on metal dealers and metal theft are welcome and will bring Scotland into line with the rest of the UK. Metal theft is a big issue in many of our communities, and it is never a victimless crime. We hope that the bill will strengthen the licensing of metal dealing and reduce metal theft and related criminal activity, which not only inconvenience the public but endanger the public and offenders, too.

I notice that I have run out of time. In conclusion, although the bill is not without its flaws, many of the proposals that it contains are welcome, and it is certainly a step in the right direction. Scottish Labour will support the bill, and I look forward to the rest of the debate.

Alex Fergusson (Galloway and West Dumfries) (Con): In opening the debate for the Scottish Conservatives, I am sorry to say that I find myself every bit as perplexed about the bill now as I was at stage 1. The vast majority of it is greatly to be welcomed, in particular the provisions on alcohol licensing, metal dealers and public and sexual entertainment venues. In general, although regime that the Government wishes to introduce.

For us, that is a red-line issue that also involves an important point of democratic principle. We believe that part 1 should always have been a separate piece of legislation.

However, the problem that we on the Conservative side of the chamber have—which will come as no surprise to members—is with part 1. It contains the new licensing provisions—they regime that the Government wishes to introduce.

For us, that is a red-line issue that also involves an important point of democratic principle. We believe that part 1 should always have been a separate piece of legislation.

During the stage 1 debate, Kevin Stewart intervened on me to ask what might be different in a separate bill that would lead me to support it.
The answer to that is quite possibly nothing, but the point is that we could have had a clear debate and decision-making process on a completely new area of licensing provision while almost certainly unanimously agreeing on a separate bill that covered the provisions in parts 2 and 3 of this bill.
We on the Conservative side of the chamber are forced into the position of being unable to support the bill despite agreeing very much with a large part of it.

I will spend the brief time that is available to me explaining why we are so opposed to part 1. At stage 1, I raised a concern about the fact that the most recent statistics on air weapon offences, which should have been published in November 2014, would not be published until October this year—almost a year late. Lo and behold, the statistics have now been published, and they show that air weapon offences are at their second lowest level in the past decade. Such offences make up 0.06 per cent of all reported crime in Scotland, which is a drop of 73 per cent from their peak.

Against that background, the possessors of the estimated 500,000 airguns in Scotland are to undergo a process to license them to possess airguns. That process is to be carried out by officers of Police Scotland, but not by the trained civilian specialist firearms officers, whose numbers are being reduced from 34 to 14 as we speak.
Instead, it will be carried out by rank-and-file police officers with no previous experience of weaponry at all, whose training—I am reliably informed—consists largely of learning about the legislation involved, rather than any hands-on weaponry training that might help officers to prepare for the task that they will have to undertake.

I am equally reliably informed that Police Scotland has a current backlog of more than 500 shotgun and firearms licence applications, so one can only begin to imagine what additional pressures the airgun licensing regime will place on it. Once a licence or permit has been gained, it will not be required to purchase the ammunition for those weapons. That could mean that those holders of airguns who do not bother or want to get a licence or permit—everybody agrees that there will be many of them—will have no difficulty in obtaining ammunition for their weapons. I suggest that those who are most likely to carry out airgun crimes are probably those least likely to bother to get a permit, especially one that costs around £80. I do not believe or accept that this new regime will have any impact on crime statistics whatsoever.

I suggested earlier that amendments 1 and 2 would reduce bureaucracy, expense and the unnecessary use of human resources. Had they been accepted, I am sure they would have had that effect, but they were not. We are left with a bill that will create a whole new layer of bureaucracy and expense. It will take up countless hours of police officers’ time to introduce a licensing regime that will do nothing to reduce the minute amount of crime that a minuscule number of airgun owners or possessors currently commit.

As I said earlier, the bill seems a perfect example of using a sledgehammer to crack a nut.
That the sledgehammer is being wielded by a Scottish Government that preaches the gospel of cutting down on unnecessary red tape, expense and time wasting at every possible opportunity almost defies belief. We do not believe that this sledgehammer will crack the targeted nut; all it will do is place an unnecessary increased burden on thousands of perfectly law-abiding citizens, which is not something that Conservative members can support.

16:26

Kevin Stewart (Aberdeen Central) (SNP): In April, we debated and agreed the general principles of the Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill, and today we debate the bill in the form in which we hope it will be enacted. Although there is no formal role for me in this debate, as convener of the Local Government and Regeneration Committee I would like to share the work of the committee and its effectiveness in realising change.
As I pointed out at stage 1, licensing has an important role. It is integral to preserving public order and safety, reducing crime and advancing public health. A key aim of the bill is to improve the efficiency of the licensing regimes, contributing to the creation of a better regulatory environment for business. The bill is wide ranging and covers the creation of new licensing systems in Scotland for the use of air weapons and the operation of sexual entertainment venues. The bill also amends existing licensing systems on alcohol sales, scrap metal dealers, taxis and private car hires, and public entertainment venues. The importance of those regimes and the objectives that they seek to reinforce should not be underplayed.

Our level of engagement with key stakeholders allowed us to make meaningful changes to the bill that will improve the effectiveness of the provisions. For example, the bill now enables the sale of air weapons to customers in the rest of Great Britain; requires alcohol licensing boards to publish annual reports outlining how they have contributed to the licensing objectives; empowers licensing authorities to deal with issues connected to advertising of sexual entertainment venues; updates the definition of metal dealers so as to include those who do not buy metal but sell it; more clearly defines the forms of payment to metal dealers; and provides the legislative framework for the creation of a national database of metal dealers.

The work of the committee has led to major change in the bill from stage 1, and the vast bulk of that work has been pretty co-operative. We have seen where there has been division and mistake because of misunderstandings. I was disappointed that a committee member was briefing against colleagues in the press, and I will be interested to see how some colleagues have voted on certain amendments, particularly amendment 19.

I thank the cabinet secretary for being extremely co-operative as we have tried to get the bill absolutely right. As I said, we have made great moves towards getting it right. I will give one example: the penalties for metal theft. The committee believed that the original proposals on that were far too lenient, but now we have a fine of up to £20,000 and/or up to six months in prison. We have reached that conclusion because of the work of the committee.

The bill now strikes the right balance. It allows businesses and ordinary folk to go about their lives while seeking to prevent or reduce the harm that is caused by people who seek to avoid regulation or to carry out criminal acts. The bill is proportionate to the issues that it tackles, which is why I will vote in favour of it at decision time.

Elaine Murray (Dumfriesshire) (Lab): The intention of people who support the bill has never been to ban air weapons; it has been to regulate them. Air weapons can and, sadly, do kill. It is wrong that anyone who wants to can keep and use a lethal weapon without any checks on why they have it and whether they can be relied on to use it responsibly and for a legitimate purpose. I am pleased that the bill will rectify that situation.

Like other members, I was lobbied to exclude people who already hold a firearms licence. The bill excludes them from some but not all of the licence tests. That is correct because, although a person who has a firearm might be a suitable person also to have an airgun licence, they might not have a good reason for doing so and it is correct that the chief constable should be required to ascertain that they have a good reason for having an air weapon.

I note the concern that the Law Society of Scotland raises in its stage 3 briefing that there are around 500,000 air weapons in Scotland that cannot be properly traced and that they might be sold off or given away in advance of the bill coming into force rather than being handed in to the police. Does the cabinet secretary have a strategy to try to encourage people to hand in their weapons rather than give them away and have them circulating illegally in Scotland?

In that briefing, the Law Society also makes the point that the purchase of ammunition is not regulated and that there is no requirement in the bill to produce the weapons certificate when purchasing ammunition. I suspect that the purchase of ammunition might still be reserved—I think that it is only the licensing of air weapons that has been handed over to the Scottish Parliament—and therefore it is not possible for that to be addressed here. Perhaps it needs to be addressed at Westminster.

The regulation of air weapons will protect people, domestic pets and wild animals. It is difficult to assess the numbers of wild animals that have been injured or killed by air weapons, as they might die in places where their carcasses will never be discovered.

I was a bit concerned about an amendment that was agreed to at stage 2 that allows young people to use airguns for pest control. Originally, the bill had permitted only young people who were commercial pest controllers or employed by them to shoot pests. I accept that shooting can be a humane method of pest control in the right hands, but I am a bit concerned that, because of that stage 2 amendment, untrained young people—or, indeed, untrained adults—can use airguns to shoot live animals and, potentially, cause them... significant suffering if they are not instantly dispatched.

I seek the cabinet secretary’s reassurance on whether other legislation, such as the Animal Health and Welfare (Scotland) Act 2006, provides sufficient protection for wild animals that might be considered pests but are, after all, still sentient creatures and might suffer badly if untrained individuals take pot shots at them in the name of pest control.

I mentioned scrap metal dealers during the stage 1 debate, having discussed the bill with a local and reputable metal dealer. I was pleased to note that, at stage 2, the Government introduced amendments to prevent a scrap metal dealer from paying in cash by clarifying that only a bank or building society account may be used when undertaking a sale of metal. That is welcome. It will prevent the theft of scrap metal, which has been a serious problem for some time—since metal prices rose—and can have serious consequences for public safety and public convenience. Welcome amendments were made regarding record-keeping requirements and establishing a register of metal dealers, which had both been argued for.

It is correct that local government will take responsibility for regulating sexual entertainment venues, taking into account the views of local communities. I agree that councils are best placed to do that. I pay tribute to Sandra White and others who have campaigned on the issue of sexual entertainment venues for many years. It is easy to be portrayed as a bit of a killjoy and illiberal when taking on such an issue, but people in this chamber rightly recognise that commercial sexual exploitation is a form of violence against women.

Liam McArthur (Orkney Islands) (LD): I join others in thanking Kevin Stewart’s committee and committee witnesses for their work on what is, by common consent, a wide-ranging and complex bill. Cara Hilton was right to remind us of the committee’s observation that the bill was a bit of a pick and mix. I have sympathy for the view that it is two bills masquerading as one, and Alex Fergusson quite rightly pointed to the implications of that for the vote on the bill at decision time. The cabinet secretary was his characteristically reasonable and measured self as he sought to deal with the amendments at stage 3 today. However, I am disappointed that there was not a willingness to accept some of the amendments in relation to airguns, and I will turn to that issue in a minute.

There is much in the bill that we welcome. Part 2, on alcohol licensing, and part 3, on civic licensing, set out reforms with which we strongly agree. Kevin Stewart articulated those reforms very fairly in his observations. A couple of examples are the closing of the loophole that means that, although it is illegal to buy alcohol for a child, it is legal to buy alcohol to share with a child in a public place; and creating additional record-keeping requirements for scrap metal dealers, including recording the identity of those who sell metal. Those are both eminently sensible moves.

The fact remains, however, that a great deal of the bill relates to the licensing of air weapons, an issue on which we have consistently voiced concerns—my colleague Tavish Scott did so during the stage 1 debate. Unfortunately, those concerns have not been adequately addressed. There have been opportunities to do so, most recently this afternoon, when we welcomed Alex Fergusson’s amendments at stage 3. I felt that they sought a practical way ahead on some of the issues while lifting the burden on those already struggling to manage requirements for existing gun licensing, for which there is a backlog, as Alex Fergusson indicated.

The Government is rightly concerned about public safety, but crime statistics suggest that the number of incidents involving air weapons is small and falling—evidence to the committee was very clear about that. I do not dispute that problems exist. In justifying the proposals on air weapons, the current justice secretary and previous ones have cited well-publicised incidents when young children have been hurt because of the inappropriate use of an airgun. Those incidents are appalling and have been roundly and rightly condemned, but those involved were prosecuted under laws that we already have. I cannot see any evidence of how the bill will reduce the risk of such incidents happening.

At stage 1, Tavish Scott called for a proportionate response to the problem, but the bill before us at this stage does not strike the right balance. The introduction of blanket restrictions will have a significant impact on individuals and practices that currently present no risk to public safety, without necessarily providing any deterrent for those intent on acting irresponsibly. Indeed, there is even an argument that the restrictions could encourage more people to trade up to more powerful weapons. I would be interested to know whether the bill has been either island proofed or rural proofed in any way, as the Government has committed to doing.

Steps might need to be taken to address the inappropriate ownership and use of airguns, but I fear that the proposals in the bill are more a way of allowing ministers to claim that they are taking action than an effective response to any problem that exists. On that basis and despite our welcome of many other aspects of the bill, we will not be able to support it at decision time.

Sandra White (Glasgow Kelvin) (SNP): The bill is an important one that deals with metal theft, air weapon licensing, alcohol licensing and, of course, sexual entertainment venues. I will limit my comments to the part of the bill that deals with sexual entertainment venues.

I am grateful to the many members who have mentioned that I have been pursuing the licensing of sexual entertainment venues for more years than I care to remember. I thank the Local Government and Regeneration Committee for all the work that it did on this part of the bill. I also thank the clerks—I see that they are in the chamber—for the advice that they have given me and their help in lodging various amendments. I also thank the Scottish Government and the Cabinet Secretary for Justice for introducing the bill. Special thanks must go to the previous justice secretary, Kenny MacAskill, who worked with me when I brought my member’s bill to the chamber a number of years ago—unfortunately, the Opposition parties voted it down, but we did not give in; we brought it back again. I thank everyone who has helped with the current bill, but if it were not for the previous justice secretary, Kenny MacAskill, I do not know whether it would have got this far.

A number of members have talked about the granting of sexual entertainment licences for lap-dancing clubs. I represent Glasgow city centre, and such clubs are a part of that. In fact, many people have come to me about the proliferation of lap-dancing clubs in Glasgow city centre. It has been decided that local authorities will be responsible for their licensing, and that is absolutely right—there cannot be mandatory licensing; it must be for local authorities to represent the people in their areas. I thank Councillor Coleman, of Glasgow City Council, who gave me enormous amounts of advice and support while I was pushing through this part of the bill. It is fantastic that, as a result of all the work of everyone concerned, from 10 past 5 tonight, if a local authority wishes no lap-dancing and sexual entertainment licences to be granted in its area, none will be granted. I call that empowering local people—not just local authorities but local communities—who wish not to have this type of entertainment in their areas.

As others have said—I have long said it myself—sexual entertainment is a form of violence against women. I have already mentioned some of the examples that I have encountered of people being in such establishments. The bill is therefore a really good piece of legislation to come out of the Scottish Parliament. Lots of people on community councils and not just women’s groups but groups throughout Scotland very much welcome the bill. The idea that women can be objectified through lap dancing and people paying for that type of thing will be long gone when the legislation is implemented. Others besides me have worked on it for many years, and I thank everyone who has helped me to bring it forward. I look forward to 10 past 5 tonight, when we will finally be able to say yes to this legislation.

Malcolm Chisholm (Edinburgh Northern and Leith) (Lab): I welcome many of the changes that the bill will bring about, although I think that there will, in due course, need to be a more fundamental revision of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982.

On airguns, I accept—as Alex Fergusson said—that the bill is not going to eliminate the problem totally. However, I believe that, as with firearms legislation, it will make a significant difference. It is right that it parallels firearms legislation, because the reality is that airguns cause a great deal of harm to people, pets and wild animals. It is therefore absolutely right to have a fit-and-proper-person test. People should have a reasonable and proper use for such weapons.

The issue of alcohol comes up frequently at community councils, and the bill makes some good progress. The fit-and-proper-person test for licensed premises and personal licence applications is a good measure, as is the renewed and reinforced focus on overprovision, which relates the measure to the whole licensing board area. In speaking to his amendment 14, Richard Simpson made the important point that communities must have all the information in order to be able to object to overprovision meaningfully and realistically. That is why he wanted a national register. He withdrew amendment 14 because some defect in it was pointed out, but he referred to subsection (6) of the new section that will be introduced by amendment 12, which is the amendment on the annual functions reports that was agreed to. I think that it is possible, through that subsection, to provide the information that Richard Simpson was seeking. I think that the cabinet secretary accepted that, and I hope that he will keep Parliament informed on that.

Everybody welcomes the provisions on scrap metal. We know that there is a problem with metal theft, so anything that makes it more difficult to dispose of stolen metal has to be a good thing.

Last, but by no means least, is the issue of sexual entertainment venues. The provisions in the bill about empowering local authorities and enabling them to say no are correct and widely welcomed. We should pay tribute to Cara Hilton and Zero Tolerance for the way in which they have developed the policy, in partnership with the minister to a large extent, over the past few weeks. That has resulted in the agreement today to an amendment on a statement of policy by local authorities, and the requirement for that statement to take into account the wider policy context. That is welcome progress.

Also welcome is the requirement for local bodies to be notified. Again, that includes community councils, violence against women partnerships and others, following the statutory guidance that was announced by the cabinet secretary today.

The main problem in this area today was the debate around amendment 19 and amendment 22. We all had strong briefings on the issue from Barnardo’s and the children’s commissioner, and we had previous influential briefings from Zero Tolerance that emphasised the position that sexual entertainment is an example of the objectification and sexual exploitation of women and is, therefore, intrinsically undesirable. People will therefore understand why we supported Cara Hilton’s amendment on the issue of people under 18. We had a problem when the cabinet secretary introduced a whole lot of new arguments that had not been presented at stage 2.

Kevin Stewart: Will Malcolm Chisholm give way?

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The member is in his last minute.

Malcolm Chisholm: If Cara Hilton’s amendment had dealt with a new issue, we would not be able to complain. However, it dealt with an issue on which she had lodged an amendment at stage 2, when we heard not one word of the explanation that we heard today. It was absolutely impossible for us to assess what the cabinet secretary was saying, which is why we supported amendment 22, along with Zero Tolerance and the children’s commissioner.

16:47

John Wilson (Central Scotland) (SNP): I want to take this opportunity to welcome the discussion and debate on what are clearly important issues for Scotland. The health and security of everyone in Scotland are of the utmost concern, and this bill has created important discussion around those issues.

I put on record my welcome of the cabinet secretary’s willingness to listen to and act on the discussions that took place in the committee and elsewhere, particularly at stage 2, and to accept the issues that were being raised by external organisations.

I put on record my thanks to the many organisations that came and gave evidence to the committee, and to the individuals who responded to the call for evidence. Without that evidence, some of the issues that have been discussed today might not have been discussed, as they might have been lost in the debate.

The bill covers a number of areas, as members have said: air weapons; alcohol licensing; taxis and private hire cars; metal dealers; the licensing of public entertainment venues; and the licensing of sexual entertainment venues. Some of the issues that were debated at stage 1 and stage 2 have been lost today, because they were dealt with in a consensual manner. For example, issues around the licensing of public entertainment venues were accepted and adopted by all concerned, because there was confusion about how sexual entertainment venues licensing might impact on public entertainment venues.

With regard to metal dealers, we heard evidence in committee about the cost of metal theft in Scotland. One witness indicated in written evidence that the cost of metal theft in Scotland could be up to £40 million. I am glad that the fines have been increased to take account of the issues that have been raised because, clearly, we have not been targeting those who are seriously involved in metal theft. It is hoped that the fines will help to deter some of those characters, and to safeguard the infrastructure of communities in Scotland.

There are issues about the interpretation of air weapons licensing. I have had a number of representations from members of the airsoft community who are concerned with how the changes in the legislation may affect them. It will be incumbent on the cabinet secretary in guidance and in regulation in the future to ensure that airsoft and related communities are clear about what is covered in the licensing regime. There are issues related to the strength of the weapon being used: technological advances that are taking place, particularly in the airsoft area, mean that some of those weapons may soon become covered by the air weapons licensing that we are proposing today.

I welcome the discussions that are taking place, and I welcome the fact that the cabinet secretary has been so consensual.

Access to sexual entertainment venues, dealt with in amendments 22 and 19, is an area that the Local Government and Regeneration Committee discussed at stage 2 in terms of the relevant issues and the impact that provisions in the bill may have on employment in, and access to, those venues. I am glad that the cabinet secretary... lodged an amendment on that; although the majority in the chamber accepted it, it is quite clear that there is still much debate to be held outwith the chamber.

I will support the bill as amended at stage 3, and I look forward to its implementation. If it needs to be worked on in the future, I look forward to the opportunity to do that.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: We will now have closing speeches.

Cameron Buchanan (Lothian) (Con): The Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill has drawn out areas of both consensus and contention, as today’s debate has shown. As I have commented before, legislation should be passed only when it is targeted and when it acts effectively in the public’s best interests. Where that has been the case, such as with metal dealers, it seems to me that the bill would improve matters, and we have heard how the bill has the support of most metal dealers as well as our committee.

However, it is apparent that the aim of protecting people from unnecessary or unhelpful government intervention has not been applied throughout the bill. As a result, the Scottish Conservatives do not believe that it is in the best interests of the people of Scotland.

A guiding principle throughout our consideration of the bill has been that law-abiding people should not find themselves unnecessarily caught under a legislative net just because it is easier or politically expedient for the Government to impose wide-reaching obligations. The provisions on air weapons are a case in point.

Kevin Stewart: Will the member give way?

Cameron Buchanan: Certainly.

Kevin Stewart: I thank Mr Buchanan for giving way. We recognise that there is a small minority of abusers of air weapons. However, the use of those weapons by abusers has led to the deaths of people in this country, including, as mentioned previously, Andrew Morton. Surely it is right to act to ensure that we do not have any more deaths or injuries by making sure that we have the right licensing regime in place.

Cameron Buchanan: What evidence do we have that a licensing regime will prevent deaths? I cannot see it. I do not think it will make any difference; I think that those people will go under cover. [Interruption.]

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Mr Buchanan, carry on.

Cameron Buchanan: The misuse of air weapons is confined to a tiny minority of users, as recently published statistics on recorded crimes in Scotland involving firearms for 2013-14 have confirmed. On a side note, it is welcome that the Scottish Government finally changed its initial decision to withhold publication of this data until well after today’s debate.

A targeted response to the small number of crimes involving air weapons would be to focus on better enforcement of existing laws, but the bill instead imposes an extensive and costly licensing process upon users.

Furthermore, it is difficult to see how those provisions could be in the public’s best interests in terms of security, when Police Scotland’s already pressured resources could be invested instead in tackling crimes more prevalent than the 0.06 per cent of crimes that involve air weapons. The administration of air weapon licensing would involve a disproportionately large commitment of the police’s resources, as we heard from Alex Fergusson, which may threaten the public security achieved through police operations in other areas.

Those major concerns suggest that the bill does not adhere to the principles of targeted and effective government, a position that is reinforced by the provisions relating to the licensing of the taxi and private hire vehicle market. There are legitimate concerns that, in order to protect consumers, drivers of private hire vehicles should be required to have background checks and to understand the various needs of passengers. An appropriate solution would be to allow tests of only those things, yet the bill will also permit the knowledge test to be required of all private hire drivers, despite the availability of perfectly adequate satellite navigation.

That overreaching of the testing provisions, combined with licensing authorities’ power to refuse to grant a licence for a private hire vehicle solely on the grounds of overprovision, has the effect that the bill does not act in the public’s best interests. Experience elsewhere has indicated that an expanded supply of private hire vehicles would lower prices and, in doing so, allow more people to afford regular use of private transport. Such a development would clearly be in the public’s interest, yet the unnecessary testing provisions and anti-competitive ability to refuse licences on the grounds of overprovision would stand as barriers against that progress.

Colin Keir (Edinburgh Western) (SNP): Will the member give way?

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The member is closing.

Cameron Buchanan: Those things are plainly not in Scottish consumers’ best interests.
There are some aspects of the bill that we agree with and that could be beneficial. The problem is that they are embedded within a bill of many parts that includes aspects that we cannot agree with. The welcome provisions include those relating to metal dealerships as well as some sensible reforms to theatre and sexual entertainment venue licensing. However, our principles are not a loose commitment that we wish to see fulfilled only some of the time. For us to be able to support the bill it would have to be focused throughout on genuine improvements on behalf of the Scottish public, and it certainly should not violate the principles of targeted and effective government. Accordingly, the Scottish Conservatives will regrettably vote against the Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill.

Ken Macintosh (Eastwood) (Lab): Not only do I thank all members present for their contribution to the debate but I extend our appreciation to all those outwith the Parliament who have taken the time to give evidence to help us shape the bill. I give particular thanks to members of the Local Government and Regeneration Committee and their clerks for their work—and indeed to the cabinet secretary and the bill team for taking a constructive approach to the bill. The bill itself encompasses an odd mix of policy objectives and is not without criticism, but overall it is stronger as a result of parliamentary scrutiny and amendment.

Before I talk about some of the issues covered by the bill, it is worth putting it on record that we—that is the Scottish Government and the Scottish Parliament—may need to return to civic licensing sooner rather than later. The cabinet secretary said at stage 1 that he had no wish to review the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982, but evidence to the committee suggested that the 1982 act is nearing the end of its shelf life. Witnesses from both Edinburgh and Glasgow city councils suggested that it was no longer fit for purpose and others from the business community commented on the piecemeal nature of the 1982 act following three decades of amendments. Even today we had amendments that arguably open up a whole new set of criteria that could be applied in shaping our town and city centre activities, so I urge the cabinet secretary to revisit the Local Government and Regeneration Committee’s recommendations on that point and instigate a review.

If passed today, the bill will create a new offence relating to possessing, purchasing or acquiring an air weapon without holding a valid air weapons certificate. For those of us who remember the death of two-year-old Andrew Morton—some 10 years ago now—that law has been a long time in the waiting and it is all the more welcome for that wait. I recognise that gun licensing generally remains a divisive issue, and I am conscious that we should not subject the law-abiding air weapon owners of Scotland to what is sometimes regarded as the tyranny of the majority. However, in this case the bill is proportionate to the problem that we still face as a society. The casual cruelty often inflicted on domestic pets—cats and dogs—and even passing birds by irresponsible airgun users would be reason enough to introduce a more regulated form of ownership. The fact that last year half of all offences involving a firearm involved an air weapon is even more persuasive for me and my colleagues. Scottish Labour is very pleased to support the air weapons proposal.

The whole area of licensing sexual entertainment venues is fraught with difficulty. There is an argument that suggests that if you license an activity you are implicitly or even explicitly endorsing it. I came across that argument when I was proposing action on sunbeds and skin cancer through an amendment to the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982. There is an interpretation that by licensing such venues we are almost approving of them. I am sure that many of us in the chamber would object to any such interpretation being made of our actions this afternoon.

Women suffer—in fact, all of Scotland suffers—from the objectification of women and discrimination and violence against women. That is recognised in the Scottish Government’s policy.

Equality groups have mostly taken the view that they support sexual entertainment licensing on the basis that that is better than having unlicensed venues, but concerns remain—those concerns were raised by my colleague Cara Hilton—that the bill does not quite do enough to align with Scottish Government policy on gender equality. I regret, for example, the fact that the proposals to restrict the display of sexualised images in public places that are accessible by children were not included in the bill, if even for discussion. I am grateful to Child’s Eye Line UK and my colleague Cara Hilton for raising that issue during stages 1 and 2.

It is worth noting the support for such a proposal from Girlguiding through its girls matter campaign, which highlights the desire of young people to be subject to less objectifying and to stop children’s exposure to harmful sexualised content in mainstream media. It is worth pointing out that the Parliament has already acted to prevent the display of tobacco products because we deemed them to be harmful. Therefore, I hope that the Parliament has the opportunity to return to that issue at some point in the near future if we are to improve the environment in which we bring up not just our young girls, but all our children.
The bill will help to empower licensing authorities to limit the number of private hire cars where there is overprovision, and is welcome for that reason. However, many stakeholders have expressed concern that the current legislation does not deal with the technological challenges that face the industry—for example, remote booking through mobile apps and new operators whose business models are not based on traditional divisions between taxis and private hire cars. I believe that the cabinet secretary has stated that the Government is taking separate steps to address that issue. I look forward to seeing the fruits of that work in due course.

We are happy to welcome the measures in the bill that take a firmer stance on scrap metal theft. The disruption that is caused by such crime causes great strain on our communities and vital public services. From the stealing of train cables from the railways to the stealing of aluminium cables from pylons, the cost of those crimes to the Scottish economy is estimated to be £700 million each year.

In particular, we welcome the proposal to establish a national register of metal dealers. That will help to inform both buyers and sellers on the legitimacy of those whom they are dealing with and further protect them from unintentional law breaking. We are pleased that the minister has agreed to amendments that will avoid causing disruption to daily business practice.

In conclusion, notwithstanding the rather animated discussion earlier about whether we should legislate to make reasonable excuse for a young person to be in a sexual entertainment venue, we have reached broad agreement on the bill. I thank all my colleagues across the chamber for the contribution that they have made and look forward to seeing the benefits that I hope the legislation will bring to our communities.

Michael Matheson: I have listened with interest to all the members who have contributed to our stage 3 debate. I think that Cara Hilton described the bill as a "pick and mix" because it covers a variety of areas in which licensing provision needs to be made. Changes were made to the bill as a result of the stage 1 and stage 2 processes and the parliamentary scrutiny that it has been subject to, but it continues to fully deliver on its original intentions. The parliamentary scrutiny process has strengthened it.

In my opening speech, I said that I believe that the provisions go a long way towards protecting the public, pets and wildlife from the painful and pointless tragedies that they are often subjected to, which are caused by the irresponsible use of things such as air weapons. Earlier this afternoon, before the debate, I met Sharon McMillan and her family and friends. She is the mother of Andrew Morton, who was tragically killed by an air weapon some 10 years ago. She and her husband Andy have campaigned tirelessly over the years for something to be done about the dangers of air weapons. I sincerely hope that the passage of the bill under Parliament's support will reassure them that, through the bill, we are delivering progress and helping to ensure that nobody has to go through the same pain that they have had to go through as a family. [Applause.]

During consideration of the bill, I have listened closely to concerns and issues that a range of stakeholders have raised. Issues were raised about the implementation and timing of the introduction of the provisions on licensing air weapons. Elaine Murray suggested having an information campaign so that individuals are aware of the regime's implications for them. I assure her that work is already being done to ensure that we have a sufficiently robust and widespread information campaign.

We intend to introduce some of the bill's provisions in a way that allows the public and others who might hold an air weapon some time to decide whether to surrender that weapon or apply for a certificate for it. That will take a bit of time, but work is being taken forward to progress that. I know that Police Scotland, shooting organisations and other stakeholders will all be keen to look at how that is progressed and at how the guidance on the bill is developed.

On a number of occasions, in interventions on me and in his speech, Alex Fergusson raised the issue of the evidence base for the bill. He also asked whether the bill is disproportionate to the risks that are out there. He referred to the most recent statistics on incidents involving firearms in Scotland.

I welcome the fact that gun crime is at a lower level than it was in 2007, but that headline figure ignores the fact that the figures that were published just last week also show a rise in recorded offences involving firearms for the first time in seven years. Within that, offences involving air weapons are up by 6 per cent, which goes against the trend of shotguns and other forms of firearms.

I do not believe that we can be complacent. As almost 50 per cent of all firearms incidents involve an air weapon, that gives us a good signal on the need to take proactive action to address the issue.

If Alex Fergusson and his colleagues, including Liam McArthur, are not persuaded by me that the bill, in bringing in a licence for the provision of air weapons, will prevent crime, they have only to... look at the evidence that was put to the committee at stage 1 by Police Scotland. It was clear in that that a licensing regime for the provision of air weapons will help to reduce crime that is associated with them and at the same time improve public safety. We cannot ignore that message. That is why we introduced the bill. [Interruption.]

The Deputy Presiding Officer: While I do not wish to dispel the end-of-term spirit, I ask members to curtail their vital conversations for just another two minutes, please.

Michael Matheson: I deeply regret the fact that the Conservatives and the Liberal Democrats cannot bring themselves to support the bill tonight. I think that they will come to regret that as well.

Members have raised the issue of resourcing in Police Scotland. Police Scotland told the committee that it is taking forward a range of work to prepare for the introduction of the licensing regime. It is reviewing its licensing of firearms to make sure that that is integrated in a single force rather than being done in different component parts, as happened with the different forces in the past.

Alex Fergusson raised issues about delays. There are periods when there are delays because of a spike in applications but, in general, there is no overall delay in dealing with firearms certificates in Scotland. In individual cases, inquiries might need to be made, which result in delays.

I do not believe that a small number of incidents—more than 180 last year—is insignificant. It is not insignificant when they harm or maim an individual or an animal. We should not dismiss that as insignificant in the way that I think Alex Fergusson did this afternoon.

The bill improves how we deal with alcohol licensing. The provisions will support our licensing boards in making sure that we continue to make progress in tackling Scotland’s unhealthy relationship with alcohol, which costs this country £3.6 billion a year in associated social and health costs.

I have no doubt that we have all experienced the impact of metal theft in our constituencies. The bill’s provisions will make significant improvements in that area, too.

It has been clear that the lack of sufficient legislation to license sexual entertainment venues has not been acceptable. The bill will strengthen local authorities’ ability to make decisions about what they consider to be appropriate in their areas based on local circumstances and their ability to do so consultatively and collaboratively.

The bill covers a number of licensing areas. After it is passed today, it will deliver significant improvements to public safety in relation to air weapons and to public health through how we deal with alcohol licensing. It will also deliver significant improvements in dealing with the scourge of metal theft and, equally, in tackling violence against women in sexual entertainment venues. That will ensure that Scotland continues to be seen as a progressive place in dealing with those issues.

The Deputy Presiding Officer (John Scott):
There are five questions to be put as a result of today’s business. The first question is, that motion S4M-13606, in the name of Michael Matheson, on the Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill, be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: There will be a division.

Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill

[AS PASSED]

An Act of the Scottish Parliament to make provision for the licensing and regulation of air weapons; to amend the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005; to amend and extend the licensing provisions of the Civic Government (Scotland) Act 1982; and for connected purposes.

PART 1

AIR WEAPONS

Meaning of “air weapon”

1 Meaning of “air weapon”

(1) This section defines the expression “air weapon” for the purposes of this Part.

(2) The expression generally has the same meaning as that given in section 1(3)(b) of the Firearms Act 1968 (“the 1968 Act”).

(3) In addition, the expression includes—

(a) the component parts of an air weapon (within the meaning of section 1(3)(b) of the 1968 Act), and

(b) any accessory to such a weapon designed or adapted to diminish the noise caused by discharging the weapon.

(4) But the expression does not include—

(za) an air weapon which is not a firearm (within the meaning of section 57(1) of the 1968 Act),

(a) an air weapon (within the meaning of section 1(3)(b) of the 1968 Act)—

(i) which is not capable of discharging a missile with kinetic energy of more than one joule as measured at the muzzle of the weapon, or

(ii) that is designed to be used only when submerged in water, or

(b) the component parts of an air weapon described in paragraph (za) or (a)(i) or (ii).

(5) Other words and expressions used in this Part are defined in section 40.
Air weapon certificates

2 Requirement for air weapon certificate

(1) It is an offence for a person to use, possess, purchase or acquire an air weapon without holding an air weapon certificate.

(2) A person who commits an offence under subsection (1) is liable—

(a) on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 12 months or a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum (or both),

(b) on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 2 years or a fine (or both).

(3) Schedule 1 contains exemptions from—

(a) the offence under subsection (1), and

(b) certain other offences under this Part.

(4) The Scottish Ministers may by regulations amend schedule 1 so as to—

(a) add further exemptions,

(b) remove or modify exemptions.

3 Application for grant or renewal of air weapon certificate

(1) An individual aged 14 years or more may apply to the chief constable for—

(a) the grant of an air weapon certificate, or

(b) the renewal of an air weapon certificate.

(2) An application is valid only if it complies with the requirements of—

(a) section 4 (verification of applications),

(b) if applicable, section 7 (special requirements and conditions for young persons), and

(c) any regulations under section 37 which apply to the application.

(3) The chief constable must maintain a register containing the details of each application made under this section (whether or not the application results in an air weapon certificate being granted or renewed).

4 Verification of applications

(1) An application for the grant or renewal of an air weapon certificate must be verified in the prescribed form and manner by an individual who meets the requirements of subsection (2) (“a verifier”).

(2) The requirements are that a verifier must—

(a) have known the applicant for at least 2 years,

(b) in the opinion of the chief constable, be of good standing in the community,

(c) not be—

(i) a relative of the applicant,

(ii) a registered firearms dealer,
(iii) a constable or a member of police staff,
(iv) a member of, or a member of staff of, the Scottish Police Authority, or
(v) ordinarily resident outwith the United Kingdom.

(3) In verifying the application, a verifier must confirm that, to the best of the verifier’s knowledge and belief, the information supplied in the application is correct.

5 Grant or renewal of air weapon certificate

(1) The chief constable may only grant or renew an air weapon certificate if satisfied that the applicant—

(a) is fit to be entrusted with an air weapon,
(b) is not prohibited from possessing an air weapon or other firearm under section 21 of the 1968 Act,
(c) has a good reason for using, possessing, purchasing or acquiring an air weapon, and
(d) in all the circumstances, can be permitted to possess an air weapon without danger to the public safety or to the peace.

(2) The chief constable may, when considering an application made under section 3 by an applicant who holds a firearm or shot gun certificate, treat paragraphs (a) and (b) of subsection (1) as being satisfied in relation to the applicant.

(3) The chief constable may, before determining an application made under section 3, require that the applicant permit a constable or member of police staff—

(a) to visit the applicant at the applicant’s usual place of residence,
(b) to inspect any place where the applicant intends to store or use an air weapon.

6 Air weapon certificate: conditions

(1) Every air weapon certificate is subject to any prescribed mandatory conditions.

(2) The chief constable may, when granting or renewing an air weapon certificate, attach conditions to the certificate (and, in the case of a renewal, may attach different conditions from those attached to the certificate prior to its renewal).

(3) The chief constable may not attach to an air weapon certificate a condition which is inconsistent with—

(a) a prescribed mandatory condition which applies to air weapon certificates, or
(b) a condition which must be attached to the certificate under this Part.

(4) It is an offence for a holder of an air weapon certificate to fail to comply with a condition attached to the holder’s certificate.

(5) An individual who commits an offence under subsection (4) is liable, on summary conviction, to a fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale.

7 Special requirements and conditions for young persons

(1) This section applies where an applicant for an air weapon certificate is under the age of 18.
(2) A parent or guardian of the applicant must consent in the prescribed form and manner to the applicant making the application.

(3) Where the chief constable grants an air weapon certificate to an individual under the age of 18, the chief constable must attach to the certificate—

(a) the condition described in subsection (4), and

(b) one or more of the conditions described in subsection (5).

(4) The condition is that the holder may not purchase, hire, accept a gift of or own, an air weapon.

(5) The conditions are that—

(za) the holder may use and possess an air weapon only for sporting purposes (including shooting live quarry) on private land,

(a) the holder may use and possess an air weapon only for the purposes of target shooting on private land,

(b) the holder may use and possess an air weapon only for the purposes of participating in events or competitions,

(c) the holder may use and possess an air weapon only for the purposes of the holder’s membership of an approved air weapon club,

(d) the holder may use and possess an air weapon only for the purposes of protecting livestock, crops or produce on land used for or in connection with agriculture,

(e) the holder may use and possess an air weapon only for the purposes of pest control.

(6) It is sufficient, for the purposes of section 5(1)(c), for the chief constable to be satisfied that the applicant has a good reason for using or possessing an air weapon.

(7) For the purposes of this section, “agriculture” is to be construed in accordance with section 85 of the Agricultural Holdings (Scotland) Act 1991.

8 Duration of air weapon certificate

(1) An air weapon certificate expires (unless earlier revoked or cancelled)—

(a) in the case of a certificate granted to an individual under the age of 18, when the individual attains the age of 18,

(b) in any other case, at the end of the period of 5 years beginning with the date on which the certificate is granted or renewed.

(2) Where an individual has applied for the renewal of an air weapon certificate before its expiry but the chief constable has not, as at the date of its expiry, determined whether or not to grant the renewal, the certificate is to continue to have effect until the application is determined.

(3) The Scottish Ministers may by regulations amend subsection (1)(b) to specify a different period.

9 Alignment of different types of certificate

(1) Subsection (2) applies where an individual—

(a) holds a firearm or shot gun certificate, and
Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill
Part 1—Air weapons

(b) makes an application for the grant or renewal of an air weapon certificate under section 3.

(2) Where this subsection applies, the applicant may request that the chief constable grant or renew an air weapon certificate for such shorter period than is provided for in section 8 as is appropriate to secure that it expires on the same day as the applicant’s firearm or shot gun certificate (or, if the applicant holds both a firearm and shot gun certificate, either of them).

(3) Subsection (4) applies where an individual—
   (a) holds an air weapon certificate, and
   (b) makes an application for the grant or renewal of a firearm or shot gun certificate under the 1968 Act.

(4) Where this subsection applies, the applicant may make an application under section 3 of this Act for the air weapon certificate to be renewed as from the same day as that on which the firearm or shot gun certificate is granted or renewed.

10 Variation of air weapon certificate

(1) The chief constable may, by giving notice to the holder of an air weapon certificate—
   (a) vary the holder’s certificate,
   (b) attach conditions to the certificate, or
   (c) vary or revoke a condition attached to the certificate other than—
       (i) a prescribed mandatory condition which applies to air weapon certificates, or
       (ii) a condition which must be attached to the certificate under this Part.

(2) The chief constable may give a notice under subsection (1)—
   (a) on the application of the holder of an air weapon certificate, or
   (b) of the chief constable’s own accord (at any time).

(3) The chief constable may not attach to an air weapon certificate a condition which is inconsistent with—
   (a) a prescribed mandatory condition which applies to air weapon certificates, or
   (b) a condition which must be attached to the certificate under this Part.

(4) For the purposes of this section, the chief constable may by notice given to the holder of an air weapon certificate require the holder to produce the certificate within the period of 21 days beginning with the date on which the notice is given.

11 Revocation of air weapon certificate

(1) The chief constable must revoke an air weapon certificate if—
   (a) the chief constable is satisfied that the holder of the certificate can no longer be permitted to possess an air weapon without danger to the public safety or to the peace, or
   (b) the holder is prohibited from possessing an air weapon or other firearm under section 21 of the 1968 Act.
(2) The chief constable may revoke an air weapon certificate if—

(a) the chief constable has reason to believe that the holder—

(i) is no longer a fit person to be entrusted with an air weapon, or

(ii) no longer has a good reason to use, possess, purchase or acquire an air weapon,

(b) the chief constable is satisfied that the holder of the certificate has failed to comply with a condition attached to the certificate, or

(c) the holder fails to produce the certificate when required to do so under section 10(4).

(3) An air weapon certificate is revoked by the chief constable giving notice to the holder of the certificate to that effect.

(4) A notice under subsection (3) must—

(a) be given at least 7 days before the date on which the revocation is to take effect, and

(b) require the holder to surrender the certificate and any air weapons that the holder possesses by such date as the chief constable may specify in the notice.

(5) It is an offence for a person, without reasonable excuse, to fail to comply with the requirements of a notice given under subsection (3).

(6) A person who commits an offence under subsection (5) is liable, on summary conviction, to a fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale.

(7) In the event that the holder of an air weapon certificate makes an appeal under section 35 against a decision to revoke the holder’s certificate—

(a) the revocation does not take effect, but

(b) the holder must still surrender the certificate and any air weapons that the holder possesses in accordance with the requirements of the notice given under subsection (3), pending the determination or withdrawal of the appeal.

Permits

12 Police permits

(1) The chief constable may, on the application of an individual, grant a permit (“a police permit”) authorising the individual—

(a) to possess or acquire an air weapon without holding an air weapon certificate, or

(b) to sell (or expose for sale) an air weapon in the course of that individual’s business.

(2) A police permit must not be granted to an individual who is prohibited from possessing an air weapon or other firearm under section 21 of the 1968 Act.

(3) A police permit expires (unless earlier revoked or cancelled) on the expiry date specified in the permit.

(4) An application for a police permit is valid only if it complies with the requirements of any regulations under section 37 which apply to the application.
Visitor permits

(1) The chief constable may, on the application of a qualifying visitor, grant a permit (“a visitor permit”) authorising the visitor to use, possess, purchase or acquire an air weapon without holding an air weapon certificate for the period (or a part of it) that the qualifying visitor is in Scotland.

(2) A person may, on behalf of a group of 2 to 20 qualifying visitors, make an application to the chief constable for each member of the group to be granted a visitor permit.

(3) The chief constable may grant a visitor permit to some or all of the members of the group.

(4) The chief constable may grant a visitor permit only if satisfied—

(a) in the case of an individual application, that the qualifying visitor has a good reason for using, possessing, purchasing or acquiring an air weapon while visiting Scotland,

(b) in the case of a group application, that each qualifying visitor is to use and possess an air weapon while visiting Scotland only—

(i) for sporting purposes (including shooting live quarry) on private land,

(ii) for the purposes of target shooting on private land, or

(iii) for the purposes of participating in an event or competition,

(c) in every case—

(i) that the qualifying visitor can be permitted to possess an air weapon without danger to the public safety or to the peace, and

(ii) that the qualifying visitor is not prohibited from possessing an air weapon or other firearm under section 21 of the 1968 Act.

(5) For the purposes of subsection (4)(b)(i) and (ii) the chief constable may require the applicant to produce evidence that the owner or occupier of the land consents to the visitors’ intended use or possession of air weapons on the land.

(6) Except where section 14 applies, the chief constable must, on granting a visitor permit in respect of a group application, attach to the permit as a condition that the holder of the permit may use and possess an air weapon only for such of the purposes described in subsection (4)(b) as the chief constable may specify in the condition.

(7) A visitor permit expires (unless earlier revoked or cancelled) on the expiry date specified in the permit.

(8) No visitor permit is to be granted for a period of longer than 12 months.

(9) An application for a visitor permit is valid only if it complies with the requirements of any regulations under section 37 which apply to the application.

(10) For the purposes of this section and section 14—

“group application” means an application under subsection (2) for visitor permits made by a person on behalf of qualifying visitors in a group,

“individual application” means an application under subsection (1) for a visitor permit made by the qualifying visitor,

“qualifying visitor” means an individual who is—
(a) aged 14 years or more,
(b) not ordinarily resident in Scotland, and
(c) visiting (or intending to visit) Scotland.

14 Visitor permits: young persons

(1) This section applies—
(a) where an individual applicant for a visitor permit is under the age of 18,
(b) in respect of any individual who is—
(i) under the age of 18, and
(ii) on whose behalf a visitor permit is applied for as part of a group application.

(2) A parent or guardian of the applicant or individual under the age of 18 must consent in the prescribed form and manner to the making of the application.

(3) The chief constable must, on granting a visitor permit in respect of an individual application, attach to the permit—
(a) the condition described in section 7(4), and
(b) one or more of the conditions described in subsection (5) of that section.

(4) The chief constable must, on granting a visitor permit in respect of a group application, attach to the permit—
(a) the condition described in section 7(4), and
(b) one or more of the conditions described in paragraphs (za) to (b) of subsection (5) of that section.

(5) It is sufficient, for the purposes of section 13(4)(a), for the chief constable to be satisfied that the applicant has a good reason for using or possessing an air weapon.

15 Police and visitor permits: conditions

(1) Every police permit and visitor permit is subject to any prescribed mandatory conditions.

(2) The chief constable may, when granting a police permit or a visitor permit, attach conditions to the permit.

(3) The chief constable may not attach to a police permit or a visitor permit a condition which is inconsistent with—
(a) a prescribed mandatory condition which applies to police permits or, as the case may be, visitor permits, or
(b) a condition which must be attached to the permit under this Part.

(4) It is an offence for the holder of a police permit or a visitor permit to fail to comply with a condition attached to the permit.

(5) An individual who commits an offence under subsection (4) is liable, on summary conviction, to a fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale.
Part 1—Air weapons

16 Police and visitor permits: variation and revocation

(1) The chief constable may, by giving notice to the holder of a police permit or a visitor permit—

(a) vary the permit,

(b) attach conditions to the permit,

(c) vary or revoke a condition attached to the permit other than—

(i) a prescribed mandatory condition which applies to the permit, or

(ii) a condition which must be attached to a permit under this Part, or

(d) revoke the permit.

(2) The chief constable may give a notice under subsection (1)—

(a) on the application of the holder of a police permit or visitor permit, or

(b) of the chief constable’s own accord (at any time).

(3) The chief constable may not attach to a police permit or a visitor permit a condition which is inconsistent with—

(a) a prescribed mandatory condition which applies to police permits or, as the case may be, visitor permits, or

(b) a condition which must be attached to the permit under this Part.

(4) For the purposes of paragraphs (a) to (c) of subsection (1), the chief constable may by giving notice to the holder of a police permit or a visitor permit require the holder to produce the permit within the period of 21 days beginning with the date on which the notice is given.

(5) A notice given under subsection (1) which revokes a police permit or a visitor permit must—

(a) be given at least 7 days before the date on which the revocation is to take effect, and

(b) require the holder of the permit to surrender the permit and any air weapons that the holder possesses by such date as the chief constable may specify in the notice.

(6) It is an offence for the holder of a police permit or a visitor permit, without reasonable excuse, to fail to comply with a requirement contained in a notice under subsection (1).

(7) An individual who commits an offence under subsection (6) is liable, on summary conviction, to a fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale.

(8) In the event that the holder of a police permit or a visitor permit makes an appeal under section 35 against a decision to revoke the holder’s permit—

(a) the revocation does not take effect, but

(b) the holder must still surrender the permit and any air weapons that the holder possesses in accordance with the requirements of the notice given under subsection (1), pending the determination or withdrawal of the appeal.
Event permits

(1) The chief constable may, on the application of a person ("the organiser") who is organising or otherwise responsible for an event, grant a permit authorising individuals at the event to borrow, hire, use and possess air weapons while engaging in an event activity without holding an air weapon certificate ("an event permit").

(2) The chief constable may, when granting an event permit, attach conditions to it.

(3) The organiser must ensure that the event permit (or a copy of it) is prominently displayed at the event so as to be capable of being read by any person attending the event.

(4) It is an offence for the organiser—
   (a) to fail to comply with a condition attached to the event permit, or
   (b) without reasonable excuse, to fail to comply with subsection (3).

(5) A person who commits an offence under subsection (4) is liable, on summary conviction, to a fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale.

(6) An application for an event permit is valid only if it complies with the requirements of any regulations under section 37 which apply to the application.

(7) For the purposes of this section, an "event activity" is an activity—
   (a) involving the use and possession of air weapons by individuals, and
   (b) which has been planned by (or on behalf of) the organiser as part of the event.

Approval of air weapon clubs

(1) The chief constable may, on the application of an air weapon club, grant or renew an approval of the club.

(2) An application for the grant or renewal of an approval of an air weapon club is valid only if it complies with the requirements of any regulations under section 37 which apply to the application.

(3) The chief constable may, at any time by giving notice to an approved air weapon club, withdraw the club’s approval.

(4) Every approval of an air weapon club is subject to any prescribed mandatory conditions.

(5) The chief constable may, when granting or renewing an approval, attach conditions to the approval (and in the case of a renewal, may attach different conditions from those attached to the approval prior to its renewal).

(6) The chief constable may not attach to an approval a condition which is inconsistent with a prescribed mandatory condition which applies to approvals.

Variation of approval

(1) The chief constable may, by giving notice in writing to an approved air weapon club—
   (a) vary the club’s approval,
   (b) attach conditions to the club’s approval, or
(c) vary or revoke a condition attached to the club’s approval other than a prescribed mandatory condition which applies to approvals.

(2) The chief constable may give a notice under subsection (1)—
   (a) on the application of the approved air weapon club, or
   (b) of the chief constable’s own accord (at any time).

(3) The chief constable may not attach to an approval a condition which is inconsistent with a prescribed mandatory condition which applies to approvals.

20 Duration of approval

(1) An approval of an air weapon club expires (unless earlier withdrawn) at the end of the period of 6 years beginning with the date on which the approval is granted or renewed.

(2) Where an approved air weapon club has applied for the renewal of its approval before its expiry but the chief constable has not, as at the date of its expiry, determined whether or not to grant the renewal, the approval is to continue to have effect until the application is determined.

(3) The Scottish Ministers may by regulations amend subsection (1) to specify a different period.

21 Alignment of club approvals

(1) Subsection (2) applies where an air weapon club—
   (a) is approved as a rifle club under section 15 of the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1988 (“the 1988 Act”), and
   (b) makes an application for the grant or renewal of an approval under section 18(1) of this Act.

(2) Where this subsection applies, the club may request that the chief constable grant or renew its approval under section 18(1) of this Act for such shorter period than is provided for in section 20(1) of this Act as is appropriate to secure that it expires on the same day as the club’s approval under section 15 of the 1988 Act.

(3) Subsection (4) applies where a club—
   (a) is an approved air weapon club, and
   (b) makes an application for the grant or renewal of an approval as a rifle club under section 15 of the 1988 Act.

(4) Where this subsection applies, the club may make an application under section 18(1) of this Act for the club’s approval to be renewed as from the same day as that on which the club’s application for approval under section 15 of the 1988 Act is granted or renewed.

22 Power to enter and inspect club premises

(1) The chief constable may, for the purposes of ascertaining whether the provisions of this Part or any conditions attached to an approved air weapon club’s approval are being complied with, authorise a constable or a member of police staff—
   (a) to enter any club premises of an approved air weapon club, and
(b) to inspect those premises and anything on them which is relevant to the purposes for which the authorisation was granted.

(2) The power of a constable or a member of police staff under subsection (1)(b) to inspect anything on club premises includes power to require any information which is stored in electronic form and accessible from the premises to be produced in a form which is visible and legible.

(3) A constable or a member of police staff may exercise the powers of entry conferred by this section only at a reasonable time, unless it appears to the constable or member of police staff that the purposes of entering the club premises may be frustrated if the constable or member of police staff seeks to enter at a reasonable time.

(4) A constable or a member of police staff must, if asked, produce the authorisation before entering any premises under this section.

(5) The chief constable may delegate the power to grant an authorisation under subsection (1) only to a constable who holds the rank of inspector or above.

(6) It is an offence for a person to obstruct intentionally a constable or a member of police staff in the exercise of the constable’s or member of police staff’s powers under an authorisation granted under this section.

(7) A person who commits an offence under subsection (6) is liable, on summary conviction, to a fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale.

(8) In this section, “club premises”, in relation to an approved air weapon club, means any premises, other than a dwelling, occupied or used by the club.

23 Requirements for recreational shooting facilities

(1) A person who operates a recreational shooting facility must—

(a) hold or (if not an individual) ensure that an individual responsible for the management and operation of the facility holds, an air weapon certificate, and

(b) at all times that the facility is in use, display the certificate (or a copy of it) prominently on the facility so as to be capable of being read by anyone considering whether to use the facility.

(2) It is an offence for a person who operates a recreational shooting facility—

(a) to fail to comply with subsection (1)(a), or

(b) without reasonable excuse, to fail to comply with subsection (1)(b).

(3) A person who commits an offence under subsection (2) is liable, on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 6 months or a fine not exceeding level 5 on the standard scale (or both).

(4) In this section, “recreational shooting facility” means—

(a) a miniature rifle range or a shooting gallery at which air weapons are used, or

(b) a facility for combat games which involve using an air weapon, which is operated with a view to making a profit.

(5) This section does not apply to an approved air weapon club.
Restrictions on transactions involving air weapons

(1) It is an offence for a person other than a registered firearms dealer, by way of trade or business, to—

(a) manufacture, sell, transfer, repair or test an air weapon,
(b) expose an air weapon for sale or transfer, or
(c) possess an air weapon for the purposes of its sale, transfer, repair or testing.

(2) It is an offence for a person (“A”) to sell or transfer an air weapon to another person (“B”) unless—

(a) B is a registered firearms dealer,
(b) B holds an air weapon certificate (without a condition attached to it preventing B from purchasing or acquiring an air weapon) and shows it to A,
(c) A is a registered firearms dealer and is satisfied that—
(i) in a case where B is an individual, B is aged 18 years or more, and
(ii) the air weapon is to be delivered to a place outwith Great Britain, or to a registered firearms dealer in England or Wales, without first coming into B’s possession, or
(d) B provides evidence to A that B is otherwise entitled to purchase or acquire an air weapon without holding an air weapon certificate by virtue of the provisions of this Part.

(3) It is an offence for a person (“A”) to manufacture, repair or test an air weapon for another person (“B”) unless—

(a) B is a registered firearms dealer,
(b) B holds an air weapon certificate and shows it to A, or
(c) B provides evidence to A that B is otherwise entitled to possess an air weapon without holding an air weapon certificate by virtue of the provisions of this Part.

(4) A person who commits an offence under this section is liable—

(a) on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 12 months or a fine not exceeding the statutory maximum (or both),
(b) on conviction on indictment, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 2 years or a fine (or both).

Requirement for commercial sales of air weapons to be in person

(1) This section applies where a person (“the seller”) sells an air weapon by way of trade or business to an individual in Great Britain who is not a registered firearms dealer.

(2) It is an offence for the seller, for the purposes of the sale, to transfer possession of the weapon to the purchaser otherwise than at a time when both the purchaser and the seller (or a representative of the seller) are present in person.

(3) The reference in subsection (2) to a representative of the seller is a reference to—

(a) a person who is employed by the seller in the seller’s business as a registered firearms dealer,
(b) a registered firearms dealer (“A”) who has been authorised by the seller to act on the seller’s behalf in relation to the sale, or

(c) a person who is employed by A in A’s business as a registered firearms dealer.

(4) A person who commits an offence under this section is liable, on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 12 months or a fine not exceeding level 5 on the standard scale (or both).

Enforcement

27 Power of search with warrant

(1) A sheriff may, on the application of a constable or a member of police staff, grant a warrant to the applicant under this section if satisfied, by evidence on oath, that there is a reasonable ground for suspecting—

(a) that an air weapon offence has been, is being, or is about to be committed, or

(b) that, in connection with an air weapon, there is a danger to the public safety or to the peace.

(2) A warrant under this section may authorise a constable or a member of police staff—

(a) to enter at any time any place named in the warrant, if necessary by force, and to search the place and every person found there,

(b) to seize and detain anything that the constable or member of police staff may find at the place, or on any such person, in respect of which or in connection with which the constable or member of police staff has a reasonable ground for suspecting—

(i) that an air weapon offence has been, is being or is about to be committed, or

(ii) that in connection with an air weapon there is a danger to the public safety or to the peace.

(3) The power of a constable or a member of police staff under subsection (2)(b) to seize and detain anything found at any place, or on any person found there, includes power to require any information which is stored in any electronic form and is accessible from the place or by the person to be produced in a form—

(a) which is visible and legible and can be taken away, or

(b) from which it can be readily produced in a visible and legible form and can be taken away.

(4) It is an offence for an individual to obstruct intentionally a constable or member of police staff in the exercise of the constable’s or member of police staff’s powers under a warrant granted under this section.

(5) An individual who commits an offence under subsection (4) is liable, on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 12 months or a fine not exceeding level 5 on the standard scale (or both).

28 Production of air weapon certificate

(1) A constable may require a person whom the constable believes to be in possession of an air weapon to produce—

- a registered firearms dealer (“A”) who has been authorised by the seller to act on the seller’s behalf in relation to the sale, or
- a person who is employed by A in A’s business as a registered firearms dealer.

A person who commits an offence under this section is liable, on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 12 months or a fine not exceeding level 5 on the standard scale (or both).
(a) the person’s air weapon certificate, or
(b) evidence that the person is entitled to possess an air weapon without holding an air weapon certificate by virtue of the provisions of this Act.

(2) Where a person fails to produce the air weapon certificate or evidence required under subsection (1), the constable may—
(a) seize and detain the air weapon, and
(b) require the person to provide (immediately) the person’s name and address.

(3) It is an offence for a person—
(a) to fail to comply with a requirement under subsection (2)(b), or
(b) to provide a false name or address.

(4) A person who commits an offence under subsection (3) is liable, on summary conviction, to a fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale.

29 Cancellation of air weapon certificate

(1) Subsection (2) applies where an individual (“A”) holding an air weapon certificate—
(a) is convicted of—
(i) an air weapon offence,
(ii) an offence under the 1968 Act, or
(iii) an offence for which A is sentenced to imprisonment or to detention in a young offenders’ institution,
(b) has been ordered to keep the peace or to be of good behaviour and, as a condition of that, is not to possess, carry or use an air weapon or other firearm,
(c) is subject to a community payback order under section 227A of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 which contains a requirement not to possess, carry or use an air weapon or other firearm, or (d) has been ordained to find caution and as a condition of that, is not to possess, carry or use an air weapon or other firearm.

(2) Where this subsection applies, the court by or before which A is convicted, or which imposes the condition or requirement, may cancel the air weapon certificate held by A.

(3) Where the court cancels an air weapon certificate under this section—
(a) the court must notify the chief constable of the cancellation, and
(b) the chief constable must, by notice given to A, require A to surrender A’s air weapon certificate within the period of 21 days beginning with the date the notice is given.

(4) It is an offence for an individual, without reasonable excuse, to fail to comply with the requirements of a notice under subsection (3)(b).

(5) An individual who commits an offence under subsection (4) is liable, on summary conviction, to a fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale.

30 Forfeiture and disposal of air weapons

(1) Subsection (2) applies where a person (“A”) is convicted of an air weapon offence.
(2) Where this subsection applies, the court by or before which A is convicted may make such order as to the forfeiture or disposal of any air weapon found in A’s possession as the court thinks fit.

(3) A constable may seize and detain an air weapon which may be the subject of an order for forfeiture under this section or which, but for subsection (5), could be the subject of such an order.

(4) A sheriff may, on an application of the chief constable, order the disposal (by any means the chief constable thinks fit) of any air weapon seized and detained by a constable under this Part.

(5) No order is to be made under subsection (2) or (4) for the forfeiture or disposal of an air weapon which is possessed for the purposes of a museum.

(6) Subsection (7) applies where—

(a) an air weapon is surrendered in pursuance of—

(i) a notice given under section 11(3) which revokes an individual’s air weapon certificate, or

(ii) a notice given under section 16(1) which revokes an individual’s police permit or visitor permit, and

(b) the individual appeals against the decision to revoke the individual’s air weapon certificate, police permit or, as the case may be, visitor permit (and does not withdraw that appeal prior to its determination).

(7) Where this subsection applies—

(a) if the appeal is successful, the air weapon must be returned,

(b) if the appeal is dismissed, the sheriff may make such order for the disposal of the air weapon as the sheriff considers appropriate.

(8) Subsection (9) applies where—

(a) an air weapon is surrendered in pursuance of—

(i) a notice given under section 11(3) which revokes an individual’s air weapon certificate, or

(ii) a notice given under section 16(1) which revokes an individual’s police permit or visitor permit, and

(b) the individual—

(i) does not appeal against the decision to revoke the individual’s air weapon certificate, police permit or, as the case may be, visitor permit, or

(ii) makes and subsequently withdraws an appeal against such a decision.

(9) Where this subsection applies, the air weapon is to be disposed of—

(a) in such manner as the chief constable and the owner of the weapon may agree, or

(b) in default of such agreement, in such manner as the chief constable may decide.

(10) Where the chief constable decides to dispose of an air weapon under subsection (9)(b), the chief constable must give the owner notice of the decision.
Offences

31 Failure to keep air weapons secure or to report loss to police

(1) It is an offence for a person—

(a) to fail to take reasonable precautions for the safe custody of an air weapon possessed by the person, or

(b) to fail to report as soon as reasonably practicable to the chief constable the loss or theft of an air weapon possessed by the person.

(2) A person who commits an offence under subsection (1) is liable, on summary conviction, to a fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale.

32 False statements, certificates and permits

(1) It is an offence for an individual to knowingly or recklessly make any statement which is false in any material particular for the purposes of procuring (either personally or for another person)—

(a) the grant, renewal or variation of an air weapon certificate,

(b) the grant or variation of a police or visitor permit,

(c) the grant of an event permit, or

(d) the grant, renewal or variation of an approval of an air weapon club.

(2) It is an offence for an individual, with a view to purchasing, acquiring or procuring the repair or testing of an air weapon—

(a) to produce a false air weapon certificate, police permit or visitor permit,

(b) to produce an air weapon certificate, police permit or visitor permit which has been improperly altered, or

(c) to knowingly or recklessly make a statement which is false in a material particular.

(3) An individual who commits an offence under this section is liable, on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 12 months or a fine not exceeding level 5 on the standard scale (or both).

33 Time limit for offences

Section 136 of the Criminal Procedure (Scotland) Act 1995 (time limit for certain offences) applies to an air weapon offence which is triable only summarily as if the references in subsection (1) of that section to 6 months were to 36 months (and subsection (2) of that section were omitted).

34 Offences by bodies corporate etc.

(1) Subsection (2) applies where—

(a) an offence under this Part has been committed by—

(i) a body corporate,

(ii) a Scottish partnership, or

(iii) an unincorporated association other than a Scottish partnership, and
(b) it is proved that the offence was committed with the consent or connivance of, or was attributable to neglect on the part of—

(i) a relevant individual, or

(ii) an individual purporting to act in the capacity of a relevant individual.

(2) The individual (as well as the body corporate, partnership or (as the case may be) association) commits the offence and is liable to be proceeded against and punished accordingly.

(3) In subsection (1), “relevant individual” means—

(a) in relation to a body corporate (other than a limited liability partnership)—

(i) a director, manager, secretary or similar officer of the body,

(ii) where the affairs of the body are managed by its members, a member,

(b) in relation to a limited liability partnership, a member,

(c) in relation to a Scottish partnership, a partner,

(d) in relation to an unincorporated association other than a Scottish partnership, an individual who is concerned in the management or control of the association.

General

Appeals

(1) A person aggrieved by a decision of the chief constable under a section listed in subsection (2) may appeal against the decision to the appropriate sheriff.

(2) The sections are—

(a) section 5(1) (grant or renewal of air weapon certificate),

(b) section 6(2) (air weapon certificates: conditions),

(c) section 7(3)(b) (special requirements and conditions for young person’s air weapon certificate),

(d) section 10(1) (variation of air weapon certificate),

(e) section 11(1)(a) or (2) (revocation of air weapon certificate),

(f) section 12(1) (police permits),

(g) section 13(1) or (6) (visitor permits),

(h) section 14(3)(b) or (4)(b) (visitor permits: young persons),

(i) section 15(2) (police and visitor permits: conditions),

(j) section 16(1) (police and visitor permits: variation and revocation),

(k) section 17(1) or (2) (event permits),

(l) section 18(1), (3) or (5) (approval of air weapon clubs),

(m) section 19(1) (variation of approval for air weapon club),

(n) section 30(9)(b) (forfeiture and disposal of air weapons).

(3) An appeal must be made within the period of 21 days beginning with the date on which the decision appealed against was made.
(4) An appeal under this section is to be determined on the merits (and not by way of review).

(5) The sheriff hearing the appeal may consider any evidence or other matter, whether or not it was available at the time the chief constable made the decision appealed against.

(6) On determining the appeal, the sheriff may—
   (a) dismiss the appeal,
   (b) give the chief constable such direction as the sheriff considers appropriate as respects the matter which is the subject of the appeal.

(7) The decision of the sheriff may be appealed against only on a point of law.

(8) In this section, “the appropriate sheriff” means—
   (a) in a case where the appellant resides in Scotland, a sheriff of the sheriffdom in which the appellant resides, or
   (b) in a case where the appellant resides outwith Scotland, a sheriff of the sheriffdom of Lothian and Borders, sitting at Edinburgh.

36 Fees

(1) The Scottish Ministers may by regulations make provision for the charging of fees by the chief constable—
   (a) in respect of applications under this Part, and
   (b) otherwise in respect of the performance of functions by the chief constable under this Part.

(2) Regulations under subsection (1) may—
   (a) specify different fees for different circumstances,
   (b) specify circumstances in which no fee is payable,
   (c) provide for fees to be determined by reference to such factors (including the value of money) as may be specified in the regulations.

(3) Where regulations under subsection (1) provide for a fee to be charged in respect of an application under this Part, the application is valid only when the fee is paid.

(4) Nothing in this section limits the generality of section 75.

37 Power to make further provision

(1) The Scottish Ministers may by regulations make further provision for the purposes of this Part.

(2) Without limiting that generality (or the generality of section 75), regulations under subsection (1) may—
   (a) make provision about the application processes under this Part (for example, prescribing the form and content of applications, any required supporting documentation or making further provision about the verification of applications),
   (b) make provision in relation to air weapon certificates, police permits, visitor permits, event permits and approvals of air weapon clubs (for example, prescribing their form and content or the conditions which may or must be attached to them).
37A  Crown application

(1) No contravention of any provision made by or under this Part makes the Crown criminally liable.

(2) But the Court of Session may, on the application of the Scottish Ministers, the chief constable or any other public body or office-holder having responsibility for enforcing the provision, declare unlawful any act or omission of the Crown which constitutes such a contravention.

(3) Despite subsection (1), any provision made by or under this Part applies to a person in the public service of the Crown as it applies to other persons.

38  Transitional arrangements for existing certificate holders

(1) This section applies where, on the day on which section 2(1) comes into force, a person aged 14 years or more holds a firearm certificate or a shot gun certificate (“the existing certificate”).

(2) It is not an offence under section 2(1) for the person to use and possess an air weapon without holding an air weapon certificate for the duration of the transitional period.

(3) The person must, in relation to such use or possession, comply with—

(a) any prescribed mandatory conditions which apply to the use and possession of air weapons, and

(b) if the person is under the age of 18, the conditions mentioned in section 7(5).

(4) A person who fails to comply with a condition mentioned in subsection (3) commits an offence.

(5) But it is not an offence under subsection (4) for a person to fail to comply with a condition mentioned in subsection (3) if—

(a) the person is entitled to use or possess an air weapon by virtue of an exemption under schedule 1, and

(b) the failure relates to the use or possession of an air weapon in accordance with the exemption.

(6) A person who commits an offence under subsection (4) is liable, on summary conviction, to a fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale.

(7) In this section, the “transitional period” means, in relation to an existing certificate, the period—

(a) beginning with the day on which section 2(1) comes into force, and

(b) ending with (the earlier of)—

(i) the day on which the existing certificate is, or falls to be, renewed, or

(ii) the day on which the existing certificate is surrendered, cancelled or revoked.

(8) For the purposes of subsection (7)(b)(i), where a person holds both a firearm certificate and a shot gun certificate, the existing certificate is the certificate which is, or which falls to be, renewed later.

(9) For the purposes of subsection (7)(b)(ii), where a person holds both a firearm certificate and a shot gun certificate—
Part 1—Air weapons

(a) the surrender of one of the certificates does not end the transitional period, but
(b) the cancellation or revocation of either certificate ends the transitional period.

(10) For the purposes of paragraph 16 of schedule 1, this section is to be treated as if it were an exemption under that schedule.

39 Guidance

(1) The chief constable must, in exercising any function under this Part, have regard to any guidance issued by the Scottish Ministers.

(2) The Scottish Ministers must publish any guidance they issue for the purposes of this Part.

(3) The Scottish Ministers may revise and revoke such guidance.

(2) In this Part, a reference to an individual holding an air weapon certificate, a police permit or a visitor permit is a reference to an individual holding an air weapon certificate, police permit or, as the case may be, visitor permit—

(a) granted to the individual under section 5, 12 or, as the case may be, 13 and

(b) which has not expired or been revoked or cancelled.

(3) In this Part, a reference to a condition attached to an air weapon certificate, police permit, visitor permit, event permit or approval of an air weapon club includes a reference to any condition to which the certificate, permit or as the case may be, approval is subject by virtue of this Act.

(4) Any expression used in this Part which is also used in an Act listed in subsection (5) is, unless the context otherwise requires, to be construed in accordance with any decisions or opinions of a court interpreting the expression for the purposes of the Act.

(5) The Acts are—

(a) the 1968 Act,

(b) the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1988, and
(c) the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1997.

PART 2

ALCOHOL LICENSING

Licensing objectives

41 Licensing objectives: protecting young persons from harm

In section 4 of the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 (“the 2005 Act”) (the licensing objectives), in subsection (1)(e), after “children” insert “and young persons”.

Statements of licensing policy

42 Statements of licensing policy: licensing policy periods

In section 6 of the 2005 Act (statements of licensing policy)—

(a) in subsection (1), for “3 year period” substitute “licensing policy period”,

(b) in subsection (2), for “3 year period” substitute “licensing policy period”,

(c) after subsection (3) insert—

“(3ZA) A Licensing Board may, in preparing a licensing policy statement, decide that the licensing policy period to which the statement relates is to begin on a date earlier than it otherwise would under subsection (7).

(3ZB) Where a Licensing Board make a decision under subsection (3ZA) they must, when publishing the licensing policy statement under subsection (6), publicise the date on which they have decided the licensing policy period is to begin."

(d) in subsection (4), for “3 year period” substitute “licensing policy period”,

(e) for subsection (7) substitute—

“(7) Subject to subsection (3ZA), in this section, “licensing policy period” means the period between each relevant date.

(8) For the purposes of subsection (7), “relevant date” means the date occurring 18 months after an ordinary election of councillors for local government areas takes place under section 5 of the Local Government etc. (Scotland) Act 1994.”.

Fit and proper person test

43 Premises licence application: ground for refusal

(A1) The 2005 Act is amended as follows.

(A2) In section 22 (objections and representations)—

(a) after subsection (1) insert—

“(1A) A person giving a notice under subsection (1) may include in the notice any information that the person considers may be relevant to consideration by the Board of any ground for refusal including, in particular, information in relation to—

(a) the applicant,

...
(b) where the applicant is neither an individual nor a council, a connected person in relation to the applicant, or
(c) any person who would be an interested party in relation to the subject premises if the application were to be granted.”,

(b) in subsection (3)(b), after “representation” insert “(including any information included under subsection (1A))”.

(A3) In section 23 (determination of premises licence application)—

(a) in subsection (5)—

(i) after paragraph (b) insert—

“(ba) that the Licensing Board consider, having regard to the licensing objectives, that the applicant is not a fit and proper person to be the holder of a premises licence,”,

(ii) in paragraph (c), after “would” insert “otherwise”,

(b) in subsection (6), for the words “the granting of the application would be inconsistent with one or more of the licensing objectives,” substitute “either of the grounds of refusal specified in subsection (5)(ba) and (c) applies,”,

(c) in subsection (8)(b), for “(5)(c)” substitute “(5)(ba) or (c)”.}

44 Application to transfer premises licence: ground for refusal

(1) The 2005 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In section 33 (transfer on application of licence holder)—

(a) after subsection (7) insert—

“(7A) On giving a notice under subsection (6)(a) or (b), the chief constable may also provide to the Licensing Board any information in relation to—

(a) the transferee,

(b) where the transferee is neither an individual nor a council, a connected person, or

(c) any person who would be an interested party in relation to the licensed premises if the application for the transfer of the licence to the transferee were to be granted, that the chief constable considers may be relevant to consideration by the Board of the application.”,

(b) in subsection (8)—

(i) the word “and” immediately following paragraph (a) is repealed,

(ii) after paragraph (b) insert “, and

(c) no information has been provided under subsection (7A),”,

(c) in subsection (10)—

(i) after “notice” insert “and any information provided under subsection (7A)”,

(ii) in paragraph (a), for the words from “it” to “objectives” substitute “a ground for refusal applies”,

5
(d) after subsection (10) insert—

“(11) The grounds for refusal are—

(a) that, having regard to the licensing objectives, the transferee is not a fit and proper person to be the holder of a premises licence,

(b) that it is otherwise necessary to refuse the application for the purposes of any of the licensing objectives.”.

45 Ground for review of premises licence

(1) The 2005 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In section 36 (application for review of premises licence)—

(a) in subsection (3), before paragraph (a) insert—

“(za) that, having regard to the licensing objectives, the licence holder is not a fit and proper person to be the holder of a premises licence,”,

(b) in subsection (5), before paragraph (a) insert—

“(za) where the ground is that specified in subsection (3)(za), a summary of the information on which the applicant’s view that the alleged ground applies is based,”,

(c) after subsection (5) insert—

“(5A) A person making a premises licence review application may include in the application any information that the applicant considers may be relevant to consideration by the Licensing Board of the alleged ground for review including, in particular, information in relation to—

(a) the licence holder,

(b) where the licence holder is neither an individual nor a council, a connected person in relation to the licence holder, or

(c) any person who is an interested party in relation to the licensed premises.”.

(3) In section 37 (review of premises licence on Licensing Board’s initiative)—

(a) in subsection (4), before paragraph (a) insert—

“(za) where the ground is that specified in section 36(3)(za), a summary of the information on which the Board’s view that the alleged ground applies is based,”,

(b) after subsection (4) insert—

“(5) A Licensing Board making a premises licence review proposal may include in the proposal any information that the Board considers may be relevant to their consideration of the alleged ground for review including, in particular, information in relation to—

(a) the licence holder,

(b) where the licence holder is neither an individual nor a council, a connected person in relation to the licence holder, or

(c) any person who is an interested party in relation to the licensed premises.”.
(4) In section 39 (Licensing Board’s powers on review)—

(a) after subsection (1), insert—

“(1A) Subsection (1) is subject to subsection (2A).”,

(b) after subsection (2), insert—

“(2A) Where, at a review hearing in relation to any premises licence, the Licensing Board are satisfied that the ground for review specified in section 36(3)(za) is established, the Board must revoke the licence.

(2B) Subject to section 39B, a revocation under subsection (2A) takes effect at the end of the period of 28 days beginning with the day on which the Board makes the decision.”.

(5) In section 39A (notification of determinations), in subsection (1)—

(a) the word “or” immediately following paragraph (a) is repealed,

(b) after paragraph (b), insert “, or

(c) decides to revoke a premises licence under section 39(2A),”.

(5A) After section 39A insert—

“39B Recall of revocation of licence under section 39(2A)

(1) This section applies where a Licensing Board decides to revoke a premises licence under section 39(2A).

(2) The Board must recall the revocation if—

(a) a relevant application is made before the end of the period referred to in section 39(2B) (“the 28 day period”), and

(b) the Board grants the application.

(3) The Board may extend the 28 day period pending determination of a relevant application.

(4) In this section, “relevant application” means—

(a) an application under section 33(1) for the transfer of the premises licence, or

(b) a premises licence variation application seeking a variation of the licence that the Board considers would remove the ground on which the licence was revoked under section 39(2A).

(5) This section does not affect the right to appeal against the decision to revoke the licence under section 39(2A).”.

(6) In Part 1 of schedule 5 (appeals to the sheriff principal), in the entry in the left-hand column relating to a decision under section 39(1), after “39(1)” insert “or (2A)”.

46 Personal licence applications and renewals: ground for refusal

(a) the date on which the Licensing Board received the application, or

(b) where the application did not initially meet the prescribed requirements, the date on which the application met the prescribed requirements.

(2) Where a Licensing Board consider it appropriate to determine a relevant application without first giving an acknowledgement under section 134ZA(2), they must determine the application as soon as is practicable.

(3) A sheriff of the appropriate sheriffdom may, on an application by a Licensing Board in relation to a relevant application, extend the period for determining the application under subsection (1).

(4) The sheriff may extend the period only if—

(a) it appears to the sheriff that there is a good reason to do so, and

(b) no previous extension has been granted in relation to the relevant application.

(5) The applicant in relation to a relevant application is entitled to be a party to proceedings on an application to a sheriff under subsection (3).

(6) In this section—

“prescribed requirements” has the same meaning as in section 134ZA, “relevant application” has the same meaning as in section 134Z.A.

134ZC Deemed grant of applications

(1) Subsection (2) applies where a Licensing Board have failed to determine a relevant application before the expiry of the determination period.

(2) Where this subsection applies—

(a) the application is deemed to have been granted on the date on which the determination period expired, and

(b) the deemed grant of the application has the same effect, for the purposes of this Act, as if the application had been granted by the Licensing Board.

(3) A Licensing Board may not impose any conditions (other than those which they must impose under this Act) in respect of an application which is deemed to have been granted under subsection (2).

(4) Subsection (5) applies in relation to an application—

(a) that is deemed to have been granted under subsection (2), and

(b) in respect of which the Licensing Board must, on granting such an application, determine the period during which the thing applied for is to have effect.
Part 3—Civic licensing

(5) The thing applied for is to have effect for the duration of the period stated in the application (subject to any limits imposed by this Act).

(6) In this section—

―determination period‖ means, in relation to a relevant application, the period for determining the application under section 134ZB(1) including (if applicable) any extension to that period granted under subsection (3) of that section,

―prescribed requirements‖ has the same meaning as in section 134ZA,

―relevant application‖ has the same meaning as in section 134ZA.”.

(2) The methods of payment are—
   (a) by means of a cheque which under section 81A of the Bills of Exchange Act 1882 is not transferable, or
   (b) by electronic transfer of funds to a bank or building society account in the name of the payee.

(3) If a metal dealer or an itinerant metal dealer pays for metal otherwise than in accordance with subsection (1), the dealer and each of the persons listed in subsection (4) (if any) commit an offence.

(4) The persons are—
   (a) in a case of payment being made by a metal dealer at a place of business of the dealer, the person with day to day management of the place,
   (b) in any case, any person who, acting on behalf of the metal dealer or the itinerant metal dealer, makes the payment.

(5) It is a defence for a metal dealer, an itinerant metal dealer or a person described in subsection (4)(a) who is charged with an offence under this section to prove that the dealer or, as the case may be, person—
   (a) made arrangements to ensure that the payment was to be made only in accordance with subsection (1), and
   (b) took all reasonable steps to ensure that those arrangements were complied with.

(6) A person who commits an offence under this section is liable, on summary conviction, to a fine not exceeding level 5 on the standard scale.

(7) The Scottish Ministers may by regulations—
   (a) amend subsection (2) so as to add, amend or remove methods of payment, and
   (b) make such consequential modification of section 33AA or 33B(3) as they consider appropriate.

(8) Regulations under subsection (7) are subject to the affirmative procedure.

(9) In this section, “place of business” means a place of business operated by a metal dealer in the ordinary course of that dealer’s business as a metal dealer.
Acceptable forms of payment: meaning of “bank or building society account”

(1) In section 33A(2)(b), “bank or building society account” means an account held with a bank or a building society.

(2) For the purposes of subsections (1) and (4)—
   (a) “bank” means an authorised deposit-taker that has its head office or a branch in the United Kingdom, and
   (b) “building society” has the same meaning as in the Building Societies Act 1986.

(3) In subsection (2)(a), “authorised deposit-taker” means—
   (a) a person who has permission to accept deposits under Part 4A of the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 (but see subsection (4) for exclusions),
   (b) an EEA firm of the kind mention in paragraph 5(b) of Schedule 3 to that Act that has permission under paragraph 15 of that Schedule (as a result of qualifying for authorisation under paragraph 12(1) of that Schedule).

(4) The reference in subsection (3)(a) to a person who has permission to accept deposits under Part 4A of the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 does not include—
   (a) a building society,
   (b) a society registered as a credit union under the Co-operative and Community Benefit Societies Act 2014 or the Credit Unions (Northern Ireland) Order 1985 (S.I. 1985/1205 (N.I. 12)),
   (c) a friendly society within the meaning given by section 116 of the Friendly Societies Act 1992, or
   (d) an insurance company within the meaning of section 275 of the Finance Act 2004.”.

Metal dealers and itinerant metal dealers: records

(1) The 1982 Act is amended as follows.

(2) Sections 30 (keeping of records) and 33 (receipts and invoices: itinerant metal dealers) are repealed.

(3) After section 33A (as inserted by section 65 of this Act), insert—

“33B Requirement to keep records

(1) This section applies where a metal dealer or an itinerant metal dealer (“the dealer”), in the course of the dealer’s business—
   (a) acquires any metal (whether or not for value), or
   (b) processes or disposes of any metal (by any means).

(2) In respect of any metal acquired, the dealer must record the following information—
   (a) the description and weight of the metal,
   (b) the date and time of the acquisition of the metal,
(c) if the metal is acquired from another person—
   (i) the name and address of the person,
   (ii) the means by which the person’s name and address was verified,

(d) the price, if any, payable in respect of the acquisition of the metal, if that price has been ascertained at the time when the entry in the record relating to that metal is to be made,

(e) the method of payment of the price (if applicable),

(f) where no price is payable for the metal, the value of the metal at the time when the entry is to be made as estimated by the dealer,

(g) in the case of metal delivered to the dealer by means of a vehicle, the registration mark (within the meaning of section 23 of the Vehicle Excise and Registration Act 1994) borne by the vehicle.

(3) Where the dealer has paid for metal, the dealer must keep a copy of—

   (a) the cheque, or

   (b) the document evidencing the electronic transfer of funds.

(4) In respect of any metal processed or disposed of, the dealer must record the following information—

   (a) the description and weight of the metal immediately before its processing or disposal,

   (c) in the case of metal which is processed, the process applied,

   (d) in the case of metal disposed of by sale or exchange—

       (i) the consideration for which it is sold or exchanged,

       (ii) the name and address of the person to whom the metal is sold or with whom it is exchanged, and

       (iii) the means by which the person’s name and address was verified,

   (e) in the case of metal disposed of otherwise than by sale or exchange, its value immediately before its disposal as estimated by the dealer.

(5) The dealer must—

   (a) keep separate records in relation to—

       (i) metal acquired, and

       (ii) metal processed or disposed of,

   (b) record the information immediately after the metal is acquired, processed or disposed of,

   (c) keep a copy of any document produced by a person to verify that person’s name or address, and

   (d) retain information recorded or documents kept under this section for a period of not less than 3 years beginning with the date on which the information was recorded or document obtained.

(6) The Scottish Ministers may by regulations—
(a) specify the means by which a person’s name and address may be verified for the purposes of this section,
(b) require further information to be recorded about any metal acquired, processed or disposed of by metal dealers or itinerant metal dealers.

(7) Regulations under subsection (6)—
(a) may make different provision for different purposes, and
(b) are subject to the negative procedure.

33C Form of records

(1) A metal dealer or an itinerant metal dealer (“a dealer”) must record the required information—
(a) in books with serially numbered pages, or
(b) by means of a device for storing and processing information.

(2) Where a dealer records the required information in books, the dealer must use separate books for recording the required information about—
(a) metal acquired, and
(b) metal processed or disposed of.

(3) Where a dealer uses a device for storing and processing information, the dealer must, by means of the device or otherwise, keep details of all modifications made in the records kept by the device.

(4) Where a dealer is required to keep a copy of a document under section 33B, it is sufficient for the dealer—
(a) to keep an electronic copy of the document, and
(b) in relation to a document verifying a person’s name or address, keep only one copy of the document.

(5) In this section, “required information” means the information about metal acquired, processed or disposed of that a dealer is required to record under or by virtue of section 33B(2), (4) or (6).

33D Metal dealer to keep records for each place of business

(1) A metal dealer must keep separate records of the required information in relation to—
(a) each place of business operated by the dealer, and
(b) any metal acquired, processed or disposed of otherwise than at such a place of business.

(2) Where a metal dealer records the required information in books, the dealer must not, at any time at a place of business, use more than—
(a) one book for recording the required information about metal acquired, and
(b) one book for recording the required information about metal processed or disposed of.
(3) In this section—

“place of business” means a place of business operated by a metal dealer in the ordinary course of that dealer’s business as a metal dealer,

“required information” means the information about metal acquired, processed or disposed of that a dealer is required to record under or by virtue of section 33B(2), (4) or (6).”.

(4) In section 34 (offences relating to metal dealing)—

(a) after subsection (2) insert—

“(2A) Any metal dealer or itinerant metal dealer who fails to comply with a requirement of section 33B, 33C or 33D commits an offence and is liable, on summary conviction, to a fine not exceeding level 3 on the standard scale.”,

(b) in subsection (3), for the words from “furnishes” to “keep” substitute “produces any information or document which the dealer is required to record or keep under section 33B which is false or misleading in a material particular”.

15 66A Register of dealers in metal

After section 35 of the 1982 Act, insert—

“35A Register of metal dealers and itinerant metal dealers

(1) The Scottish Ministers may by regulations make provision for and about the establishment, keeping and maintaining of a register of metal dealers and itinerant metal dealers.

(2) Regulations under subsection (1) may, in particular, make provision—

(a) about who is to keep and maintain the register,

(b) requiring the provision of information to the person who keeps the register,

(c) specifying the information to be included in the register in relation to each person who holds a licence as a metal dealer or itinerant metal dealer,

(d) about the form and publication of the register,

(e) for the charging of fees in such circumstances as may be specified in the regulations.

(3) Regulations under subsection (1) may—

(a) make incidental, supplementary, consequential, transitional, transitory or saving provision,

(b) modify this or any other enactment.

(4) Regulations under subsection (1) which contain provision which adds to, replaces, or omits any part of an Act are subject to the affirmative procedure.

(5) Otherwise, regulations under subsection (1) are subject to the negative procedure.”.

66B Interpretation of provisions relating to metal dealers etc.

(1) Section 37 of the 1982 Act (interpretation of sections 28 to 36) is amended as follows.
Part 5—Civic licensing

(2) In subsection (1), for the definition of “itinerant metal dealer” substitute—

““itinerant metal dealer” means a person who—

(a) carries on a business which consists wholly or substantially of buying or selling for scrap—

(i) metal articles that are old, broken, worn out or defaced, or

(ii) partly manufactured articles that are made wholly or partly from metal,

(b) collects articles of the kind described in paragraph (a)(i) and (ii) by means of visits from place to place, and

(c) disposes of such articles without causing them to be kept in a metal store or other premises (including by disposing or giving custody of the articles to a person who keeps a metal store),”.

(3) For subsection (2) substitute—

“(2) For the purposes of sections 28 to 36, a person carries on business as a metal dealer if the person—

(a) carries on a business which consists wholly or substantially of buying or selling for scrap—

(i) metal articles that are old, broken, worn out or defaced, or

(ii) partly manufactured articles that are made wholly or partly from metal, or

(b) carries on business as a motor salvage operator (so far as that does not fall within paragraph (a)).

(3) For the purposes of subsection (2)(b), a person carries on business as a motor salvage operator if the person carries on a business which consists wholly or substantially of—

(a) recovering salvageable parts from motor vehicles for re-use or sale and selling or disposing of the rest of the vehicle for scrap,

(b) buying significantly damaged motor vehicles and subsequently repairing and reselling them, or

(c) buying or selling motor vehicles which are to be the subject (whether immediately or upon a subsequent resale) of any of the activities mentioned in paragraphs (a) and (b).”.

66C Exemptions from requirements of sections 28 to 37 of 1982 Act

After section 37 of the 1982 Act insert—

“37A Exemptions

(1) The Scottish Ministers may by regulations make provision specifying circumstances in which the provisions of sections 28 to 37 are not to apply.

(2) Regulations under subsection (1)—

(a) may make transitional, transitory or saving provision,

(b) are subject to the negative procedure.”.
Public entertainment venues

67 Licensing of theatres etc.

(1) In section 41 of the 1982 Act (public entertainment licences)—
   (a) in subsection (2)(d), the words “the Theatres Act 1968, or” are repealed,
   (b) after subsection (3) insert—

“(3A) In relation to a public entertainment licence which authorises the use of premises for the performance of plays, no condition may be attached to the licence as to the nature of the plays which may be performed, or the manner of performing plays, under the licence.

(3B) Subsection (3A) does not prevent a licensing authority from attaching, by virtue of section 3B or in accordance with subsection (3) or paragraph 5 of Schedule 1, any condition which they consider appropriate on the grounds of public safety.”.

(2) In section 1 of the Theatres Act 1968 (“the 1968 Act”) (abolition of censorship of the theatre), subsection (2) is repealed.

(3) Sections 12 to 14 of the 1968 Act (licensing of premises for public performances of plays) are repealed.

(4) In section 15 of the 1968 Act (powers of entry and inspection)—
   (a) in subsection (1)—
      (i) the word “or” immediately following paragraph (a) is repealed,
      (ii) paragraph (b) is repealed,
      (iii) the words “or, in a case falling within paragraph (b) above, any police officer or authorised officer of the licensing authority” are repealed,
      (iv) paragraph (ii) is repealed,
   (b) subsections (2), (3), (5) and (6) are repealed.

(5) In section 18 of the 1968 Act (interpretation), in subsection (1), the definition of “licensing authority” is repealed.

(6) Schedule 1 to the 1968 Act (provision about licenses to perform plays) is repealed.

67A Restriction of exemption from requirement for public entertainment licence

In section 41(2) of the 1982 Act (places not requiring public entertainment licences), in paragraph (f), for the words from “licensed” where first occurring to “(asp 16)” substitute “premises in respect of which a premises licence within the meaning of section 17 of the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 has effect”.

Sexual entertainment venues

68 Licensing of sexual entertainment venues

(1) The 1982 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In section 41(2) (definition of place of public entertainment), after paragraph (aa) insert—
“(ab) a sexual entertainment venue (as defined in section 45A) in relation to which Schedule 2 (as modified for the purposes of section 45B) has effect, while being used as such;”.

(3) After section 45 insert—

45A Licensing of sexual entertainment venues: interpretation

(1) This section applies for the purposes of the interpretation of section 45B and Schedule 2 (as modified for the purposes of section 45B).

(2) “Sexual entertainment venue” means any premises at which sexual entertainment is provided before a live audience for (or with a view to) the financial gain of the organiser.

(3) For the purposes of that definition—

“audience” includes an audience of one,

“financial gain” includes financial gain arising directly or indirectly from the provision of the sexual entertainment,

“organiser”, in relation to the provision of sexual entertainment in premises, means—

(a) the person (“A”) who is responsible for—

(i) the management of the premises, or

(ii) the organisation or management of the sexual entertainment,

or

(b) where A exercises that responsibility on behalf of another person (whether by virtue of a contract of employment or otherwise), that other person,

“premises” includes any vehicle, vessel or stall but does not include any private dwelling to which the public is not admitted,

“sexual entertainment” means—

(a) any live performance, or

(b) any live display of nudity,

which is of such a nature that, ignoring financial gain, it must reasonably be assumed to be provided solely or principally for the purpose of sexually stimulating any member of the audience (whether by verbal or other means).

(4) For the purposes of the definition of “sexual entertainment”, “display of nudity” means—

(a) in the case of a woman, the showing of (to any extent and by any means) her nipples, pubic area, genitals or anus,

(b) in the case of a man, the showing of (to any extent and by any means) his pubic area, genitals or anus.

(5) Sexual entertainment is provided if (and only if) it is provided (or allowed to be provided) by or on behalf of the organiser.
References in Schedule 2 (as modified for the purposes of section 45B) to the use of any premises by a person as a sexual entertainment venue are to be read as references to their use by the organiser.

The following are not sexual entertainment venues—

(a) a sex shop (within the meaning of paragraph 2(1) of Schedule 2),

(b) such other premises as the Scottish Ministers may by order specify.

An order under subsection (7)(b) may make different provision for different purposes.

Premises at which sexual entertainment is provided as mentioned in subsection (2) on a particular occasion (“the current occasion”) are not to be treated as a sexual entertainment venue if sexual entertainment has not been provided on more than 3 previous occasions which fall wholly or partly within the period of 12 months ending with the start of the current occasion.

For the purposes of subsection (9)—

(a) each continuous period during which sexual entertainment is provided on the premises is to be treated as a separate occasion, and

(b) where the period during which sexual entertainment is provided on the premises exceeds 24 hours, each period of 24 hours (and any part of a period of 24 hours) is to be treated as a separate occasion.

The Scottish Ministers may by order provide for—

(a) descriptions of performances, or

(b) descriptions of displays of nudity,

which are not to be treated as sexual entertainment for the purposes of this section.

An order under subsection (7)(b) or (11) is subject to the negative procedure.

45B Licensing of sexual entertainment venues

A local authority may resolve that Schedule 2 (as modified for the purposes of this section) is to have effect in their area in relation to sexual entertainment venues.

If a local authority passes a resolution under subsection (1), Schedule 2 (as so modified) has effect in their area from the day specified in the resolution.

The day mentioned in subsection (2) must not be before the expiry of the period of one year beginning with the day on which the resolution is passed.

A local authority must, not later than 28 days before the day mentioned in subsection (2), publish notice that they have passed a resolution under this section.

The notice must—

(a) state the general effect of Schedule 2 (as modified for the purposes of this section), and

(b) be published electronically or in a newspaper circulating in the local authority’s area.
(6) For the purposes of this section, paragraphs 1 and 3 to 25 of Schedule 2 apply with the following modifications—

(a) references to a sex shop are to be read as references to a sexual entertainment venue,

(b) references to the use by a person of premises, vehicles, vessels or stalls as a sexual entertainment venue are to be read as references to their use by the organiser,

(c) in paragraph 1—

(i) in sub-paragraph (b)—

(A) the word “or immediately following paragraph (i) is omitted,

(B) paragraph (ii) is omitted, and

(ii) sub-paragraph (c) is omitted,

(d) in paragraph 7—

(i) in sub-paragraph (2), at the beginning insert “Subject to sub-paragraph (3A),”

(ii) after sub-paragraph (3) insert—

“(3A) If a local authority consider it appropriate to do so in relation to an application, the local authority may dispense with the requirement to publish an advertisement under sub-paragraph (2) and may instead publish notice of the application electronically.

(3B) Publication under sub-paragraph (3A) must be not later than 7 days after the date of the application.

(3C) The applicant must also, not later than 7 days after the date of the application—

(a) send a copy of the application to each person or body listed in the local authority’s determination under sub-paragraph (3D), and

(b) submit to the local authority a certificate stating that the applicant has complied with this sub-paragraph.

(3D) For the purposes of sub-paragraph (3C), a local authority must—

(a) from time to time determine the persons or bodies who must receive a copy of the application, and

(b) publicise the determination in such manner as they consider appropriate.”,

(e) in paragraph 9—

(i) in sub-paragraph (5)(c)—

(A) after the word “in” insert “the local authority’s area or”,

(B) after the word “for” insert “their area or”,

(ii) after sub-paragraph (5) insert—

“(5A) For the purposes of sub-paragraph (5)(c), a local authority must—
(a) from time to time determine the appropriate number of sexual entertainment venues for their area and for each relevant locality, and

(b) publicise the determination in such manner as they consider appropriate.”,

(iii) after sub-paragraph (6) insert—

“(6A) A local authority may refuse an application for the grant or renewal of a licence despite the fact that a premises licence under Part 3 of the Licensing (Scotland) Act 2005 is in effect in relation to the premises, vehicle, vessel or stall to which the application relates.”,

(f) in paragraph 12(2)(b), for “shorter” substitute “other”,

(g) in paragraph 19(1)(e), for the words from “without” to the end of paragraph (e) substitute “knowingly permits any person under the age of 18 to enter the sexual entertainment venue—

(i) at a time when sexual entertainment is being provided, or

(ii) without reasonable excuse, at any other time,”, and

(h) in paragraph 25, in each of sub-paragraphs (1)(a) and (2), for “45” substitute “45B”.

(7) In carrying out functions conferred by virtue of this section, a local authority must have regard to any guidance issued by the Scottish Ministers.

45BA Statements of policy in relation to sexual entertainment venues

(1) This section applies where a local authority passes a resolution under section 45B(1).

(2) The local authority must prepare a statement of their policy with respect to the exercise of their functions in relation to the licensing of sexual entertainment venues (a “SEV policy statement”).

(3) In preparing a SEV policy statement, a local authority must—

(a) consider the impact of the licensing of sexual entertainment venues in their area, having regard, in particular, to how it will affect the objectives of—

(i) preventing public nuisance, crime and disorder,

(ii) securing public safety,

(iii) protecting children and young people from harm,

(iv) reducing violence against women, and

(b) consult such persons or bodies as they consider appropriate.

(4) The local authority must publish the SEV policy statement at the same time and in the same manner as they publish the notice of the resolution under section 45B(4).

(5) The local authority must—

(a) from time to time review the SEV policy statement and make such revisions as they consider appropriate (if any), and
(b) publish the revised statement in such manner as they consider appropriate.

(6) Subsection (3) applies to a review of a SEV policy statement as it applies to preparing such a statement.

(7) In exercising their functions in relation to the licensing of sexual entertainment venues, a local authority must have regard to their SEV policy statement or revised statement.

(8) In this section—
(a) “children” means persons under the age of 16,
(b) “young people” means persons aged 16 or 17.”.

(4) The title of Part 3 becomes “Control of sex shops and sexual entertainment venues”.

Miscellaneous and general

69  Deemed grant of applications

(1) The 1982 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In section 3 (discharge of functions of licensing authorities)—

(a) in subsection (1), for the words from “shall” to the end substitute “must—

(a) consider each relevant application made to them within the period of 3 months beginning with the date on which the application was made, and

(b) subject to the following provisions of this section, reach a final decision on the application within the period of 6 months beginning with the end of the 3 month period referred to in paragraph (a).”,

(b) in subsection (4)—

(i) the words “applied for” are repealed,

(ii) for “or, as the case may be, renewed” substitute “, renewed or, as the case may be, varied”,

(iii) the words from “and” where first occurring to the end are repealed,

(c) after subsection (4) insert—

“(4A) A licence deemed to have been granted or renewed under subsection (4) is—

(a) in the case of a temporary licence, to remain in force for the duration of the period sought in the application (up to a maximum period of 6 weeks), or

(b) in any other case, to remain in force for the period of one year.

(4B) A variation of the terms of a licence deemed to have been granted under subsection (4) is to have effect for the remaining period of the licence.

(4C) Subsections (4) and (4B) do not affect—

(a) the powers of revocation under section 7(6)(a),

(b) paragraph 8(5) of Schedule 1 (which relates to renewals of existing licences),

(c) the powers of variation under paragraph 10 of that Schedule, or
(d) the powers of suspension and revocation under paragraphs 11 and 12 of that Schedule.”,

(d) for subsection (5) substitute—

“(5A) The deemed grant, renewal or variation of the terms of a licence under subsection (4) is, for the purposes of Schedule 1, to be treated as a decision of the licensing authority to grant, renew or vary the terms of a licence.

(5B) For the purposes of this section, a “relevant application” is an application under paragraph 1, 7 or 10 of Schedule 1.”.

(3) After section 45B (as inserted by section 68 of this Act) insert—

“45C Deemed grant of applications

(1) For the purpose of the discharge of their functions under this Part, every local authority must—

(a) consider each relevant application made to them within the period of 3 months beginning with the date on which the application was made, and

(b) subject to the following provisions of this section, reach a final decision on the application within the period of 6 months beginning with the end of the 3 month period referred to in paragraph (a).

(2) On an application by the local authority within the 6 month period referred to in subsection (1)(b), the sheriff may, if it appears that there is a good reason to do so, extend that period as the sheriff thinks fit.

(3) The applicant is entitled to be a party to proceedings on an application under subsection (2).

(4) Where the local authority have failed to reach a final decision on the application before the expiry of—

(a) the 6 month period referred to in subsection (1)(b), or

(b) such further period as the sheriff may have specified on application under subsection (2),

the licence is deemed to have been granted, renewed or, as the case may be, varied on the date of such expiry.

(5) A licence deemed to have been granted or renewed under subsection (4) is to remain in force for the period of one year.

(6) A deemed variation of the terms of a licence deemed under subsection (4) is to have effect for the remaining period of the licence.

(7) Subsections (4) and (6) do not affect—

(a) the powers of revocation under paragraph 13 of Schedule 2, and

(b) the powers of variation under paragraph 15 of that Schedule.

(8) The deemed grant, renewal or variation of the terms of a licence under subsection (4) has the same effect, for the purposes of Schedule 2, as a decision of the licensing authority to grant, renew or vary the terms of a licence.

(9) For the purposes of this section, a “relevant application” is an application under paragraph 6 or 15 of Schedule 2.”.
(4) In Schedule 1 (licensing: further provisions as to the general system), in paragraph 10, after sub-paragraph (5) insert—

"(6) Sub-paragraph (5) does not apply to a deemed variation of the terms of a licence under section 3(4).".

(5) In Schedule 2 (control of sex shops and sexual entertainment venues), in paragraph 15, after sub-paragraph (4) insert—

"(4A) Sub-paragraph (4) does not apply to a deemed variation of the terms of a licence under section 45C(4).".

69A  Revocation of Part 2 licences

(1) The 1982 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In section 5 (rights of entry and inspection), in subsection (2)(a)(ii), after “suspended” insert “or revoked”.

(3) In Schedule 1 (licensing: further provisions as to the general system)—

(a) the italic heading preceding paragraph 10 becomes “Variation, suspension and revocation of licences”,

(b) in paragraph 11—

(i) in sub-paragraph (1), after “suspend” insert “or revoke”,

(ii) in sub-paragraph (2), after “suspension” insert “or revocation”,

(iii) in sub-paragraph (4), after “suspend” insert “or revoke”,

(iv) in sub-paragraph (6), after “order” insert “to suspend a licence”,

(v) in sub-paragraph (7), after “suspend” insert “or revoke”,

(vi) in sub-paragraph (8), after “suspension” insert “or revocation”,

(vii) in sub-paragraph (9)—

(A) after “suspension” where first occurring insert “or revocation”,

(B) after each subsequent occurrence of “suspension” insert “or, as the case may be, revocation”,

(viii) in sub-paragraph (10), after “suspension” where first occurring insert “or revocation”,

(c) in paragraph 12(5)(b), after “suspend” insert “or revoke”,

(d) in paragraph 13—

(i) in sub-paragraph (2)(a), after “suspend” insert “, revoke”,

(ii) in sub-paragraph (3), after “suspending” insert “or revoking”,

(iii) in sub-paragraph (4), after “suspension” where first occurring insert “or revocation”,

(e) in paragraph 14(2)(b), after “terms,” insert “revocation”,

(f) in paragraph 17, in sub-paragraph (1)(d), before paragraph (i) insert—

“(ai) to revoke a licence or to refuse to do so,”.

(g) in paragraph 18(10)—
(i) after “suspension” where first occurring insert “or revocation”,
(ii) the words “above that the suspension be immediate” are repealed.

70 Procedure for hearings

(1) The 1982 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In Schedule 1 (licensing: further provisions as to the general system), after paragraph 18 insert—

“Power to make provision about hearings

18A(1) The Scottish Ministers may by regulations make provision as to the procedure to be followed at, or in connection with, any hearing to be held by a licensing authority under this Schedule.

(2) Regulations under this paragraph may, in particular, make provision—

(a) for notice of the hearing to be given to such persons as may be prescribed in the regulations,

(b) about the rules of evidence which are to apply for the purposes of the hearing,

(c) about the representation of any party at the hearing,

(d) as to the times by which any step in the procedure must be taken, and

(e) as to liability for expenses.

(3) Regulations under this paragraph may make different provision for different purposes including, in particular, different types of licence.

(4) Regulations under this paragraph are subject to the negative procedure.”.

(3) In Schedule 2 (control of sex shops and sexual entertainment venues), after paragraph 24 insert—

“Power to make provision about hearings

24A(1) The Scottish Ministers may by regulations make provision as to the procedure to be followed at, or in connection with, any hearing to be held by a local authority under this Schedule.

(2) Regulations under this paragraph may, in particular, make provision—

(a) for notice of the hearing to be given to such persons as may be prescribed in the regulations,

(b) about the rules of evidence which are to apply for the purposes of the hearing,

(c) about the representation of any party at the hearing,

(d) as to the times by which any step in the procedure must be taken, and

(e) as to liability for expenses.

(3) Regulations under this paragraph may make different provision for different purposes, including, in particular, different types of licence.

(4) Regulations under this paragraph are subject to the negative procedure.”.
71 Conditions for Part 3 licences

(1) The 1982 Act is amended as follows.

(2) After section 45C (as inserted by section 69) insert—

“Conditions of licences granted under this Part

45D Mandatory licence conditions

(1) The Scottish Ministers may by order prescribe conditions to which licences granted by local authorities under this Part are to be subject.

(2) Different conditions may be prescribed under subsection (1)—

(a) in respect of different licences or different types of licence,

(b) otherwise for different purposes, circumstances or cases.

(3) An order under subsection (1) is subject to the affirmative procedure.

(4) Subsection (1) does not affect any other power of the Scottish Ministers under this Act or any other enactment to prescribe conditions—

(a) to which licences granted by local authorities under this Part are to be subject, or

(b) to be imposed by local authorities in granting or renewing licences under this Part.

(5) The following conditions are referred to in this Part as “mandatory conditions”—

(a) conditions prescribed under subsection (1),

(b) conditions prescribed under any power referred to in subsection (4), and

(c) conditions imposed, or required to be imposed, by any provision of this Part.

(6) In this section and section 45E, references to licences granted by local authorities include references to—

(a) licences renewed by local authorities, and

(b) licences deemed by virtue of section 45C to have been granted or renewed by local authorities.

45E Standard licence conditions

(1) A local authority may determine conditions to which licences granted by them under this Part are to be subject.

(2) Conditions determined under subsection (1) are referred to in this Part as “standard conditions”.

(3) Different conditions may be determined under subsection (1)—

(a) in respect of different licences or different types of licence,

(b) otherwise for different purposes, circumstances or cases.

(4) A local authority must publish, in such manner as they think appropriate, any standard conditions determined by them.

(5) Standard conditions have no effect—
Air Weapons and Licensing (Scotland) Bill
Part 3—Civic licensing

(a) unless they are published, and
(b) so far as they are inconsistent with any mandatory conditions.

(6) Subsection (1) is subject to paragraph 9(1A) of Schedule 2.”.

(3) In paragraph 9 of Schedule 2 (disposal of applications for licences)—

(a) in sub-paragraph (1)—

(i) in paragraph (a), the word “unconditionally” is repealed,
(ii) paragraph (b) is repealed,

(b) after sub-paragraph (1) insert—

“(1A) In granting or renewing a licence under sub-paragraph (1)(a), a local authority may (either or both)—

(a) disapply or vary any standard conditions,
(b) impose conditions in addition to any mandatory or standard conditions to which the licence is subject.”,

(c) in sub-paragraph (2)—

(i) for “sub-paragraph” where first occurring substitute “sub-paragraphs (2ZA) and”,
(ii) for “(1)” substitute “(1A)(b)”,

(d) after sub-paragraph (2) insert—

“(2ZA) A variation made under sub-paragraph (1A)(a) or a condition imposed under sub-paragraph (1A)(b) has no effect in so far as it is inconsistent with any mandatory condition to which the licence is subject.”,

(e) in sub-paragraph (2A), for “(1)” substitute “(1A)(b)”.

71A Conditions for Part 3 licences: displays or advertising
In paragraph 9(2) of Schedule 2 to the 1982 Act (examples of conditions which may be imposed in relation to Part 3 licences), in paragraph (b), after “on or in” insert “or otherwise connected with”.

72 Civic licensing standards officers
After Part 3 of the 1982 Act insert—

“PART 3A

CIVIC LICENSING STANDARDS OFFICERS

45F Civic licensing standards officers
(1) Each local authority must appoint for their area one or more officers (a “civic licensing standards officer”)—

(a) to exercise, in relation to the authority’s area, the general functions conferred on civic licensing standards officers by virtue of section 45G, and

(b) to exercise any other functions that may be conferred on such an officer by virtue of this or any other enactment.
(2) A civic licensing standards officer appointed by a local authority is taken to be an authorised officer of the authority for the purposes of Parts 1 to 3.

(3) A person may hold more than one appointment under subsection (1) (so as to be a civic licensing standards officer for more than one local authority area).

(4) Nothing in this section prevents an officer of a local authority other than a civic licensing standards officer from being an authorised officer of the authority for a purpose of Parts 1 to 3.

(5) In this Part, a reference to a local authority includes a reference to that authority acting as the licensing authority for their area and a reference to an authorised officer of a local authority (however expressed) is to be construed accordingly.

45G General functions of a civic licensing standards officer

(1) The general functions of a civic licensing standards officer are—

(a) to provide to any interested person information and guidance concerning the operation of Parts 1 to 3 in the officer’s area,

(b) to supervise the compliance by the holder of a licence granted under Parts 1 to 3 in the officer’s area with—

(i) the conditions of the licence, and

(ii) the other requirements of Parts 1 to 3,

(c) to provide mediation services for the purposes of avoiding or resolving disputes or disagreements between—

(i) the holder of a licence granted under Parts 1 to 3 in the officer’s area, and

(ii) any other person, concerning any matter relating to compliance with the conditions of the licence or the other requirements of Parts 1 to 3.

(2) The function under subsection (1)(b) includes, in particular, power for a civic licensing standards officer, where the officer believes that a condition to which the licence is subject has been or is being breached—

(a) to give a notice to the holder of the licence requiring such action to be taken to remedy the breach as may be specified in the notice, and

(b) to refer the breach to the local authority which granted the licence for consideration at a meeting of the authority.

(3) A civic licensing standards officer may only refer a breach of a condition under subsection (2)(b) if—

(a) the officer has given notice under subsection (2)(a) and the holder of the licence has failed to comply with it, or

(b) the officer considers that it is appropriate for the breach to be referred to the authority without such a notice being given.

(4) In this section, a reference to an officer’s area is a reference to—
(a) the local authority area for which the officer is appointed under section 45F(1), or

(b) where the officer is appointed for more than one local authority area, the area for which the officer is exercising a function at the relevant time.”.

73 Electronic communications under the 1982 Act

(1) The 1982 Act is amended as follows.

(2) In Schedule 1 (licensing: further provisions as to the general system)—

(a) after paragraph 3(3), insert—

“(3A) Where a licensing authority have determined to accept objections and representations by means of an electronic communication under paragraph 16A, an objection or representation is made for the purpose of sub-paragraph (1) of this paragraph if it is sent—

(a) to the authority by means of an electronic communication which complies with the determination, and

(b) within the time specified in sub-paragraph (1).

(3B) Sub-paragraph (3A) is without prejudice to sub-paragraph (3).”,

(b) after paragraph 16 insert—

“Electronic communications

16A(1) A licensing authority may determine to accept—

(a) applications for the grant or renewal of a licence under paragraph 1,

(b) objections or representations under paragraph 3,

(c) notifications of a change to a licence under paragraph 9,

by means of an electronic communication.

(2) Where a licensing authority make a determination under sub-paragraph (1) they must—

(a) specify in the determination—

(i) the form of electronic communication by which applications, objections, representations or notifications may be made or given,

(ii) the electronic address to be used for making or giving applications, objections, representations or notifications, and

(iii) any means of authentication (in addition to an electronic signature) that are acceptable, and

(b) publicise the determination as they consider appropriate.

(3) In relation to an application, objection, representation or notification made or given by means of an electronic communication, any requirement of this Schedule for the application, objection, representation or notification—

(a) to be in writing is satisfied if the communication is—

(i) in the form specified under sub-paragraph (2)(a)(i), and

(ii) sent to the address specified under sub-paragraph (2)(a)(ii),

(a) after paragraph 8(4) insert—
“(4A) Where a local authority have determined to accept objections and representations by means of an electronic communication under paragraph 22A, an objection or representation is made for the purpose of sub-paragraph (2) of this paragraph if it is sent—

(a) to the authority by means of an electronic communication which complies with the determination, and

(b) within the time specified in sub-paragraph (2).

(4B) Sub-paragraph (4A) is without prejudice to sub-paragraph (4).”

(b) after paragraph 22 insert—

“Electronic communications

22A(1) A local authority may determine to accept—

(a) applications for the grant or renewal of a licence under this Schedule,

(b) objections or representations under paragraph 8,

(c) notifications of a change to a licence under paragraph 14,

by means of an electronic communication.

(2) Where a local authority make a determination under sub-paragraph (1) they must—

(a) specify in the determination—

(i) the form of electronic communication by which applications, objections, representations or notifications may be made or given,

(ii) the electronic address to be used for making or giving applications, objections, representations or notifications, and

(iii) any means of authentication (in addition to an electronic signature) that are acceptable, and

(b) publicise the determination as they consider appropriate.

(3) In relation to an application, objection, representation or notification made or given by means of an electronic communication, any requirement of this Schedule for the application, objection, representation or notification—

(a) to be in writing is satisfied if the communication is—

(i) in the form specified under sub-paragraph (2)(a)(i), and

(ii) sent to the address specified under sub-paragraph (2)(a)(ii),

(b) to be signed is satisfied if the communication includes an electronic signature or is authenticated by a means specified under sub-paragraph (2)(a)(iii).

(4) A local authority may determine to—
