BEIS heat pump project

Warmworks is running a trial across south-east Scotland, using funding from BEIS, to investigate the barriers that may exist in terms of people in on-gas areas voluntarily switching to a heat pump. Please see links below:

The project is ongoing, and the findings will be published once the installations and monitoring periods are complete. However, even in the early stages of the project, Warmworks is already finding that it is possible for households that had previously used gas as their main heating source to switch to a heat pump successfully and seamlessly.
