[The Presiding Officer opened the meeting at 14:00]

Time for Reflection

The Presiding Officer (Alison Johnstone): Good afternoon. The first item of business is time for reflection. Our time for reflection leader today is Mandy Evans Ewing, who is a humanist.

Mandy Evans Ewing (Humanist): Hello, and warmest greetings to everyone here, in this chamber, and beyond. Thank you for the opportunity to share some reflections this afternoon.

Recently, as summer transitioned into autumn, I celebrated being 60. Every year of my life, this season seems to take on a greater resonance. The palette and hues are broader and more vibrant. The leaves dance more joyously, the air smells more earthy and musky, and the light is more golden, more soft and more warm.

It is a time to reflect on the year's events, accomplishments and challenges; to consider what we have learned and how we have grown; and to release and let go of what no longer serves us, as the trees show us in the graceful shedding of their leaves. It is a time to embrace change, breathe and be still. It is a time to appreciate the harvest of our human spirit; the rich well of consciousness, emotion, reason, empathy, goodness, kindness, love, peace, purpose, inner strength, resilience and creativity that we have the capacity for; and the ability to have profound experiences of awe, connection and joy, which give motivation to live meaningful lives and work towards a better world.

May we be particularly conscious of how we use all that energy, for it creates our reality. We are all worthy of peace. May we be honest about what energy we bring to the table and what energy we are setting in motion.

The first law of thermodynamics states that no energy gets created in the universe and none is destroyed—it just changes form. Everything that we can examine contains an energy of vibration. All those vibrations coexist at the same time. It is to that vibration that everything and every person is connected, whether we are aware of it or not. The droplets that glisten on the spider's web in the garden remind me that our existence means that we inherently belong to the web of life and to our one human family.

Yoko Ono said:

"spring passes
and one remembers one's innocence

summer passes and one remembers one's exuberance

autumn passes and one remembers one's reverence winter passes

and one remembers one's perseverance".

To give reverence to the world that we want to create—one of wisdom, justice, compassion and integrity—in every possible moment, may we find warmth and love in our own and one another's bounteous and generous hearts. Choose presence and peace over power and position, and elect love over fear.

Topical Question Time

Future Farming Investment Scheme (Grants)

1. Jamie Halcro Johnston (Highlands and Islands) (Con): I remind members of my entry in the register of members' interests as a partner in a farming business that applied to the future farming investment scheme, and as a member of NFU Scotland.

To ask the Scottish Government how decisions on the award of offers of grants for the future farming investment scheme were made. (S6T-02727)

The Minister for Agriculture and Connectivity (Jim Fairlie): The FFIS was co-designed with the industry and prioritised a number of businesses and business types. As with any support scheme, applications were assessed using a bespoke scoring system and being in a priority group assisted in increasing an applicant's score but did not guarantee success. Given the level of demand, offers of grant were made to those assessed as delivering the best outcomes against the scheme's overall objectives.

Jamie Halcro Johnston: The scheme was supposed to help priority groups such as young farmers, new entrants to farming, tenants and island businesses, but only about one third of the total funding has gone to those groups. The figures that are available suggest that larger and longer-established farming businesses on the mainland of Scotland were successful, which has left many farmers and crofters struggling to understand what the scoring criteria were—some suggest that selection was just a lucky dip and others say that names were pulled from a hat.

Can the minister set out the process by which his officials decided who was successful? Was artificial intelligence used at all in the process? Can he explain why many applicants who met four or five of the priorities were unsuccessful while others who met none have been offered grants?

Jim Fairlie: I cannot talk to the specifics that Jamie Halcro Johnston raises, but I say clearly that I absolutely understand the frustration felt by any farmer who put in what they believed to be a very good application but who did not receive funding.

He asked me to set out the process. The FFIS scoring model applied six core objectives: business efficiency, business sustainability, environmental protection, greenhouse gas reduction, climate adaptation and public good. Funding requests were assessed to recognise realistic and proportionate applications, ensuring value for money. Equity adjustments were applied for smaller and lower-capital businesses and a 20 per cent priority multiplier was applied to new entrants, young farmers and small business tenants. Priority status alone did not guarantee funding, because, as I have already said, applicants also had to demonstrate strong alignment with scheme objectives and the ability to deliver measurable outcomes.

Jamie Halcro Johnston: Speaking on Radio Orkney this morning, the minister claimed that the scheme was co-designed with stakeholders and was as good a scheme as the Government could put forward in the time that it had to get that money out of the door as quickly as possible. However, information obtained by the Scottish Conservatives following a freedom of information request reveals that pressure on the timescales was caused by the cabinet secretary's demands that the scheme must be ready to go and to be announced at the Royal Highland Show. That was despite Mairi Gougeon's own concerns, expressed by her office, that "we haven't had those meaningful discussions with stakeholders at an early stage and are presenting them with the complete package",

"not in the spirit of the commitment that was made."

Is it not the case that the minister rushed out the scheme without proper engagement, which meant that millions of pounds of public money—funding that the farming sector so desperately needs—risks being spent on a scheme that will not meet its objectives and that has left thousands of farmers, crofters and agricultural businesses disappointed?

Jim Fairlie: That is quite simply not the case. The scheme was co-designed and we had numerous discussions with various stakeholders, including the National Farmers Union Scotland. A decision was made that we would make the scheme work for the communities that it was targeted at. The money has not been wasted: it has gone to farmers who have shown a clear appetite and are prepared to put in the time, effort and investment to ensure that they help us on our journey to create biodiversity, reduce emissions and make farming sustainable for the future, which is something that we should be very proud of.

Emma Harper (South Scotland) (SNP): The future farming investment scheme has shown that there is an appetite across Scotland's agricultural sector to invest in sustainability, productivity and resilience. The Opposition is conveniently overlooking the fact that the Scottish Government provided more than £21 million to assist with that. How will the grant awards that were made benefit

Scottish agriculture? Does the minister agree that the lack of a fair multi-annual funding settlement from the United Kingdom Government represents—[Interruption.]

The Presiding Officer (Alison Johnstone): I want everyone to be able to hear what everyone is saying.

Emma Harper: Thank you, Presiding Officer. I will finish my final sentence. Does the minister agree that the lack of a fair multi-annual funding settlement from the UK Government represents the biggest impediment to our ability to increase our support for and investment in Scottish agriculture?

Jim Fairlie: I absolutely agree with everything that Emma Harper has said.

Tim Eagle (Highlands and Islands) (Con): What a surprise!

Jim Fairlie: The Scottish Government is unequivocal—[Interruption.]

The Presiding Officer: There is a lot of interest in asking supplementary questions and I would like to get everyone in. Minister, please continue.

Jim Fairlie: I repeat that the Scottish Government's support for Scotland's farmers and crofters is unequivocal. We have provided a novel approach through the FFIS to deliver up-front investment to the sector to deliver on Scottish Government objectives.

The UK spending review failed to recognise Scotland's greater share of the UK landmass and seas and their potential to contribute significantly to the UK's climate and nature restoration targets. Instead of the long-term funding certainty that was available to us during our European Union membership, we now have an inadequate settlement within the United Kingdom that does not keep pace with the funding that Scotland received before we left the EU.

Rhoda Grant (Highlands and Islands) (Lab): We have already seen changes introduced by the Government that have a negative impact on our island farmers and crofters, such as the 410-day calving interval and aspects of the whole farm plan. The minister gave assurances that he would be cognisant of islanders' needs when bringing forward policies, yet only a tiny fraction—less than 1 per cent—of the funding is going to the Western Isles, as highlighted by Donald MacKinnon, an active crofter and former chair of the Scottish Crofting Federation. We also hear reports of a huge number of rejected applications across the Highlands and Islands.

Why was less than 3 per cent of the funding used to support islanders despite there being no shortage of applications? Was an island communities impact assessment carried out?

Jim Fairlie: Rhoda Grant raises a number of points in that question. There is absolutely no way that what we have done has excluded crofters or islanders. We have the croft house grant scheme and the crofting agricultural grant scheme, so there are funds available—[Interruption.]

Presiding Officer, I am having real difficulty hearing. I keep getting chuntering from the left side.

The Presiding Officer: I am having difficulty, too. I am keen to bring in everyone who has pressed their request-to-speak buttons, and that would be more straightforward if we could get through the questions and responses.

Jim Fairlie: I would really like to try to give some proper answers to the questions, so I beg your forgiveness for asking members to stop talking.

There is no way that islanders have been downgraded in the scheme. We were very clear that we wanted young farmers, crofters and new entrants to get the funding. However, people were not guaranteed to get funding just because they were in those categories, because applications had to be robust in relation to the objectives in the first place.

We had a total of more than 7,000 claims, but only 4,000 of them were actually eligible. There have been some calls to look into why certain claims in certain areas were not taken forward, but they were not eligible for a range of reasons. I am happy to write to the member to tell her what those reasons are.

The overall picture is that the scheme has demonstrated a huge appetite from the members of the farming and crofting community. They want to get involved in the scheme and we want to make sure that we are delivering on that. We have kept the basic support for farming, the Scottish upland sheep support scheme and the voluntary coupled support. In those schemes, Scottish farmers are absolutely in line with the work of the Scottish Government, because we are doing them by co-design.

Douglas Ross (Highlands and Islands) (Con): There will be winners and losers when any scheme comes to fruition, but I have been taken aback by just how many people have been angry and annoyed that they have been unsuccessful in this case because they are clearly part of the priorities of the scheme—they are young farmers, new entrants, tenants and island businesses.

When the minister saw the provisional results, did he drill down to see why those priority groups were not successful? He has just told Parliament that 3,000 of the more than 7,000 applicants were not eligible. Did that information go back to the applicants? Most of the people that I have heard from were told just that they were not successful, and not that they were not eligible. Will the minister provide a regional breakdown of the numbers of applications that were submitted and the numbers that were successful so that we can see the success rate in each constituency and region across the country?

Jim Fairlie: I am absolutely happy to provide the information that Douglas Ross has asked for. On the point about a breakdown, we set out the scoring system and the funding that was available, but the scheme was massively oversubscribed. That goes back to the point that I made to Rhoda Grant. Farmers and crofters are clearly prepared to work with us, which is what we have been asking them to do, in order to meet our demands to reduce emissions, create biodiversity and be more efficient.

Although there is an awful lot of negativity, because people are disappointed—and I absolutely accept that people are disappointed—that demonstrates to me that we are on the right road and are trying to do the right things for our farming communities. I will continue to work as hard as I can to make sure that we continue to deliver for them, so that they can help us on that journey.

Liam McArthur (Orkney Islands) (LD): We were told that islanders, new entrants, young farmers and tenant farmers would be prioritised in the application of the funding. However, Orkney, which is one of the country's most agriculture-dependent areas, accounts for just 3.7 per cent of successful applications and 3.5 per cent of the total budget. Shetland and the Western Isles have fared even worse. As Douglas Ross said, there has been no explanation for those decisions, which has left farmers in my community astonished, confused and genuinely angry. I get that demand for the scheme was high, but given the Government's stated priorities, will the minister explain why it appears that islanders have fared so badly under the scheme?

Jim Fairlie: We will drill down into all the details of what the applications were. As the member will be aware, to come to the specific answers that he has asked for would involve drilling into a huge amount of information. I am more than happy to share that in writing.

I go back to the point that I have made from the start: the scheme was massively oversubscribed, which demonstrates the willingness of our farmers and crofters to be involved in the journey to reduce our emissions and create biodiversity. We will continue that.

Finlay Carson (Galloway and West Dumfries) (Con): This weekend, my inbox has been full of emails—many from agents who have had less than a good experience. They have submitted multiple applications on behalf of priority applicants such as young farmers, new entrants and environmentally focused business, but with minimal success. In some instances, farmers have gone for exactly the same equipment; one has hit the priorities and got nothing, but others have hit zero priorities and got funding.

It is also concerning that, from what the minister says, it appears that no farmers have been told whether they were ineligible; rather, they were unsuccessful due to the scheme being oversubscribed. How many farmers were ruled out as a result of the scoring methodology that was used, and why were applicants not given the opportunity to justify their choices? Will the minister commit to publishing the scoring framework and outcomes on each individual application, to ensure transparency, and will he commit to urgently engaging with agents to inform improvements to future schemes?

Jim Fairlie: I will not commit to sharing scoring on every single application. I will not use Government resources to that extent, because that would be a massive effort.

On Finlay Carson's first question, which was about ineligibility, there were a number of reasons. According to my figures, 3,539 people—47 per cent—were not prioritised for funding because they did not meet one or more of the eligibility and compliance requirements. There is a range of what those were: no active farmer; a failure to meet the minimum activity status; not being registered with or approved by the Scottish Government rural payments and inspections division; incomplete or missing investment details; unsupported or inconsistent investment; invalid email addresses, which create a notification risk; previous schemes not having been declared; the application having exceeded the minimum grant threshold; and the recovery ratio being below 30 per cent. There are a range of issues as to why some people were not eligible.

However, I reiterate that we will take the learnings. I bear in mind that the scheme was very generous. We were giving 100 per cent grants for equipment, in order to give farmers the best opportunity to get it. Perhaps we need to rethink the 100 per cent grant. We will ensure that the kind of support that we are putting in place—which is working for Scottish farming—is better targeted in the future.

Ambulances (Waits)

2. Jackie Baillie (Dumbarton) (Lab): To ask the Scottish Government what action it will take in light of reports that some people are waiting 10 hours for an ambulance. (S6T-02733)

The Cabinet Secretary for Health and Social Care (Neil Gray): It is not acceptable that some people are waiting for extended periods of time for an ambulance. Officials continue to hold regular strategic meetings with the Scottish Ambulance Service to help it to manage system pressures. The Scottish Ambulance Service is actively engaging with boards at chief executive and senior management level to ensure that they implement measures to reduce delays.

It is important to consider that ambulance crews responded to 547 life-threatening incidents during the week of 20 October, achieving a median response time of eight minutes and 20 seconds.

Our support for the Scottish Ambulance Service has led to a record increase in staffing, with new staff including newly qualified paramedics, patient transport service staff and control staff.

Jackie Baillie: Last week, a footballer with a suspected dislocated knee, who had been playing in a championship match, was left waiting for an ambulance for 10 hours. A month earlier, another footballer waited for five hours after suffering a double leg break. At the time, the First Minister described that wait as an “error”, but now it looks as though it was not a one-off but a repeated problem.

Those are just two examples of the thousands of Scots who are left waiting because the Scottish Ambulance Service is struggling to meet demand. Ambulances are stuck waiting at the front doors of hospitals for more than an hour to discharge patients, which means that they are unavailable to take other calls. What is the cabinet secretary doing about that particular problem to reduce long waits for ambulances?

Neil Gray: There are a number of points in Jackie Baillie’s question that I wish to cover. She is correct to point to the case of Charlie Fox’s suspected dislocated knee. Having suffered a knee dislocation 20 years ago, I recognise the trauma and pain that he will have been suffering, which makes the delay even more difficult to understand.

Off the back of the other case that Jackie Baillie referred to—the case of Brooke Paterson, in October—we commissioned the Scottish Ambulance Service to undertake a review of the management of traumatic fractures of patients who were injured outside and could not be moved safely. The terms of reference required a full review of the management of those incidents in the past six months and the triage protocol for them, taking into account the escalation measures in times of higher demand, the capacity of the Scottish Ambulance Service’s integrated clinical hub to review a larger proportion of 999 calls and the processes for identifying patients who are outdoors on the ambulance control systems.

Jackie Baillie is correct to say that turnaround times are affected by the pressures on hospitals. We know about some of the sites where particular challenges exist. Through the use of flow navigation centres and other triage work, work is being done to relieve the pressure on the Scottish Ambulance Service and hospitals. Jackie Baillie will also be aware of the work that is being done with local partners to reduce delayed discharge, so that more people can move back into their homes and be treated there in the longer term through the likes of the hospital at home work.

Jackie Baillie: I am glad that the cabinet secretary acknowledges that there is a problem. In 2014, one in every 100 ambulances spent an hour stuck on a hospital forecourt. By 2025—their year—the figure was one in three. This week, 2,007 Scots waited for more than 12 hours in accident and emergency departments, and we are not properly in winter yet.

At the weekend, former Scottish Government health secretary Jeane Freeman said that the Scottish National Party Government has failed to listen to NHS staff. That is why it is getting it so wrong. Does the minister agree, or is Jeane Freeman wrong?

Neil Gray: No. I will come back to the points that Jeane Freeman raised shortly. The pressures that we are facing in our hospitals are not unique to Scotland. They are pressures that all health systems across the United Kingdom have faced since Covid. Indeed, the deterioration of ambulance response times in England demonstrates the pressure that there is on all parts of the system. [Interruption.]

I can hear Jackie Baillie chuntering away, but the category 1 and category 2 ambulance response times in England in September were the slowest since February 2025, and the category 3 and category 4 response times were the slowest since December 2024. The point that I am making is that that does not excuse the situation that we are facing in Scotland—far from it. The decisions that we are making mean that we are in the best possible position to respond.

I want to ensure that the review that we have commissioned from the Scottish Ambulance Service to ensure that those types of incidents are responded to properly is acted on as quickly as possible. The outcome of the review and the collaboration with the senior management team at SAS is happening now. An urgent implementation plan will be agreed and monitored to ensure that we can respond to the concerns that Jackie Baillie has raised.

Clare Haughey (Rutherglen) (SNP): I remind members that I am employed as a bank nurse by NHS Greater Glasgow and Clyde.

I thank our incredibly hard-working staff and my colleagues in the NHS and the Scottish Ambulance Service, who are working day in and day out to reduce delays and bring down waiting times. I am sure that Jackie Baillie will welcome the recent statistics that show that waiting times are coming down in Scotland. How will the First Minister's announcement yesterday of additional funding for nine health boards further help with that?

Neil Gray: First, I thank Clare Haughey for acknowledging the incredible efforts that are being made by our staff. In this case, the focus is on our ambulance staff, who operate in incredibly challenging situations and to whom I am incredibly grateful.

Secondly, we are seeing increased activity rates. We can see that from the statistics that have come out today on cancelled operations. We have seen a 4 per cent year-on-year increase in the number of operations that are being performed and planned. We have seen activity rates go up, and waiting times—the longest waits—are coming down. Again, that is in contrast to what is happening in other parts of the United Kingdom.

The £25.5 million funding increase that was announced on Monday brings our total additional investment in reducing waiting times to £135.5 million this year. That is dedicated funding as part of the record £21.7 billion that has been invested in our national health service. I point out that that was investment that the Labour Party could not support.

Sandesh Gulhane (Glasgow) (Con): I declare an interest as a practising NHS general practitioner and a previous head of medicine for Queen's Park.

Queen's Park defender Charlie Fox suffered a serious knee injury during a championship game that could have resulted in an unnecessary amputation. He was forced to wait for 10 hours, which is the equivalent of almost seven football matches. In some areas, patients are waiting even longer than that. We know that, in the past year, one code red patient in the Highlands waited for more than 18 hours for an ambulance, while another in Lothian waited for almost 17 hours. The median wait is of cold comfort to those patients.

Our paramedics do a brilliant job, but they are left to do it with one hand tied behind their back. There are also home-grown student paramedics who are not getting jobs in Scotland. When will the Government put a proper focus on workforce planning and prioritise getting resources to the front line and away from bureaucracy?

Neil Gray: We have already done that. As I did in response to Jackie Baillie's question, I apologise to Charlie Fox for the situation that he faced. I recognise the pain and trauma that he will have suffered while he was waiting. I am expecting the Scottish Ambulance Service to carry out a full investigation into what happened in that incident. When the time is right for Mr Fox, I would encourage him to engage with the Ambulance Service to ensure that the investigation can be done in the most informed way possible.

I have already set out, in response to Jackie Baillie, the work that we have commissioned the Ambulance Service to do to review the management of traumatic fractures, to ensure that such incidents—or, indeed, dislocations, which we have heard about—are able to be responded to properly and timeously.

We have invested significantly in Ambulance Service staffing and that has led to a record increase in staffing, including for newly qualified paramedics. I am obviously aware of the situation for some, and I am working with the Ambulance Service to ensure that, where a newly qualified paramedic's number 1 geographical area is not available, we can at least support people to understand where the vacancies are and can match them up to those newly qualified paramedics.

Alex Cole-Hamilton (Edinburgh Western) (LD): The stacking of ambulances outside our A and E departments and the long, protracted waits inside A and E are not a result of a deficiency in emergency care. Instead, they are a result of the fact that, on any given night in Scotland, 2,000 Scots are stuck in hospital who are well enough to go home but too frail to do so without either a care bed or a care package to receive them into the community. That is because this Government has failed on social care.

Does the cabinet secretary recognise that the situation in our communities is getting worse, particularly in the Highlands, which is seeing care homes close? Will he instruct an urgent inquiry into all preventable deaths caused as a result of the crisis in emergency care?

Neil Gray: I share Alex Cole-Hamilton's assessment of some of the challenges that are being faced around the delays that are being suffered by people who need to use the Ambulance Service and, indeed, by people in accident and emergency.

There is an issue with flow through the system, which is why we are bolstering general practice through the investment that we are making there to support more people in primary care. That is also why we have invested record levels in social care, going beyond our previous commitments to invest in social care to the tune of £2.2 billion.

I recognise that there is significant demand on social care. That is why it is so important that, in addition, work is being done to expand hospital at home services to support people in their own homes for longer, including for people who have such an acuity of need that it is a challenge to meet their social care needs. I look forward to the discussion that we are about to have in 15 minutes, when we can discuss more of these issues, as we do regularly.

The Presiding Officer: That concludes topical question time. I apologise to those members I was unable to fit in.

Financial Considerations When Leaving an Abusive Relationship

The Presiding Officer (Alison Johnstone): The next item of business is a Social Justice and Social Security Committee debate on motion S6M-19487, in the name of Bob Doris, on financial considerations when leaving an abusive relationship.

Bob Doris (Glasgow Maryhill and Springburn) (SNP): On behalf of the Social Justice and Social Security Committee, I am pleased to open the debate. Before I discuss the substantive issues that the committee explored as part of its inquiry into financial considerations when leaving an abusive relationship, I first thank the individuals and organisations who enriched our work on the topic.

The committee's inquiry began by engaging with the Scottish Women's Aid survivor reference group—a group of women who have experience of domestic abuse and coercive control. That engagement was invaluable to the inquiry's work, and I put on record my thanks, on behalf of the whole committee, to the participants for their time and their willingness to share their experience with us. I also thank Financially Included, which is an Easterhouse-based organisation that supports women who have experienced economic abuse.

Financially Included hosted the committee before we started taking formal oral evidence and provided a perspective that it is really only possible to gain by speaking with front-line staff about what they actually experience. We heard from our discussions with the survivor reference group that, although Financially Included consists of only a tiny team, they are amazing; I am pleased to put that on record this afternoon.

Evidence that was provided by individuals and stakeholders was essential in helping committee members to reach the conclusions and recommendations that are detailed in the report. We hope that those reflect the broad societal response that is needed to tackle economic abuse. One in five women across the United Kingdom are either experiencing economic abuse at the hands of a current or former partner or have experienced it in the past 12 months.

We made a number of recommendations for the Scottish Government, which must take a leading role in supporting those who have faced such abuse. The committee is extremely pleased that the Government is investing £1 million in a new national fund to leave for 2025-26. We heard great things about the pilots, and we heard that the Government is committed to making the fund permanent. It is particularly welcome that that support will be open to those with no recourse to public funds—as the committee heard, people in that group face greater challenges in leaving abusive relationships as a result of their extremely limited access to sources of financial support.

Where it was piloted, the fund to leave supported more than 500 women and was widely supported by stakeholders. Citizens Advice Scotland said that the fund offers

“the deep psychological reassurance that comes from knowing that there is a cushion available to get yourself restarted in order to have a safe future”.—[Official Report, Social Security and Social Justice Committee, 15 May 2025; c 13.]

Providing money to enable victims/survivors to leave abusive relationships is vital; however, so is ensuring that we are not punitively taking money away from them. Aberlour Children’s Charity described the system of public debt collection in Scotland as “very aggressive” and said that it further traps people in debt. However, the committee heard that practice varies widely across local authorities. There is good practice out there, and some councils are willing to write off debt. With that in mind, we want local authorities to take a consistent and trauma-informed approach when pursuing debt from victims of domestic abuse that takes account of their specific needs. We ask that the Scottish Government and the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities work together to make that happen.

We welcome the Scottish Government’s investment in increased debt advice provision for those who are in council tax arrears, as well as its development of resources to support best-practice principles for council tax collection. When someone is fleeing a dangerous situation, safe accommodation is an immediate concern. However, if someone is in council tax or rent arrears, that can be a barrier to finding somewhere new to live. That must be addressed. We ask the Scottish Government to work with COSLA to ensure that fear of being made to repay such debts does not prevent someone from leaving an abusive relationship.

It is appalling to think that people are trapped with abusers because debt means that they cannot afford to leave. We therefore welcome provisions in the recently passed Housing (Scotland) Bill for social landlords that suspect that domestic abuse is contributing to rent arrears to take action to support the victim/survivor’s needs. We have also called for those provisions to be applied to the private rented sector. The lack of suitable and safe accommodation options for those who are escaping abuse urgently needs to be addressed.

The issues facing those who experience economic abuse are varied and complex. We therefore welcome the Scottish Government’s comprehensive equally safe strategy to address violence against women and girls. However, stakeholders highlight that improvements could be made to further recognise in the strategy the impact of economic abuse. Financially Included recommends that the strategy should include specific actions to cover issues relating to public sector debt, housing costs and legal expenses.

The information that is available to victims/survivors also needs to be improved. The Glasgow violence against women partnership emphasised the fact that a woman will contact up to 11 services before she gets the information that she needs. That should not be the case.

Scottish Women’s Aid told the committee that a whole-system response for advice and information is required. Access to legal advice and representation is also essential when someone is leaving an abusive relationship, but we heard that that is not always available. I highlight the Equalities, Human Rights and Civil Justice Committee’s recent inquiry into civil legal assistance, which concluded that there is an urgent need for action to improve the delivery of civil legal assistance.

During our inquiry, the Social Justice and Social Security Committee heard about a number of issues with the legal aid system. In the time that is available to me, I will discuss some of the most pressing concerns. Eligibility for legal aid was a significant concern that members of the survivor reference group raised. The Scottish Legal Aid Board told us that solicitors have the ability to exercise discretion when it comes to financial assessments, but there is a lack of awareness of that discretion, which means that victims/survivors are missing out on the legal support that could make all the difference to their cases. We asked the Scottish Legal Aid Board to address that as a matter of priority and to raise awareness of that discretion in the legal profession and with the public.

The committee heard that arrangements for means testing for advice and assistance are more restrictive than they are for civil legal aid. Along with the Equalities, Human Rights and Civil Justice Committee, we have called for the financial thresholds to be reviewed. We also called on the Scottish Government to work with the profession on the fees that are paid to firms for legal aid, given that we heard that the amounts that are awarded are insufficient and can make it difficult to offer a trauma-informed service to victims/survivors.

Following the publication of our committee’s report, the Scottish Legal Aid Board wrote to the committee to respond to the recommendations. We are pleased that the agency has committed to working with stakeholders to create a more responsive and user-focused system for the future—time will tell—and that that will include enhanced training and support for solicitors and applicants.

The Regulation of Legal Services (Scotland) Act 2025, which was passed in June, introduced provisions to widen access to legal services, which the committee welcomes. It will be important to monitor how effective those changes are. During the debate, it would be helpful to hear progress updates from the minister on the committee's recommendations to the Scottish Government.

The financial barriers to leaving an abusive relationship can be exacerbated by the welfare and benefits system. Best practice needs to be shared between the United Kingdom Government, the Department for Work and Pensions, the Scottish Government, Social Security Scotland and local authorities. The five-week wait for universal credit is a huge barrier to those who are fleeing domestic abuse, and that wait should end.

There should be a joint group that is led by the Scottish Government. My apologies that my words on this are not precise, because I am doing this from memory rather than from my script, but the committee believes that a group should be convened—to be led by the Scottish Government and to include the UK Government and other partners—to find a way forward that will remove all those financial barriers for women as they leave an abusive relationship. If the will is there, it can be done.

I will make other observations on the committee's recommendations in my closing comments but, for now, I look forward to hearing from other members.

I move,

That the Parliament notes the Social Justice and Social Security Committee's 6th Report, 2025 (Session 6), Inquiry Into Financial Considerations When Leaving an Abusive Relationship (SP Paper 849).

The Presiding Officer: Thank you. I call Karen Adam to speak on behalf of the Equalities, Human Rights and Civil Justice Committee.

Karen Adam (Banffshire and Buchan Coast) (SNP): I welcome the opportunity to contribute in my capacity as the convener of the Equalities, Human Rights and Civil Justice Committee. I also welcome the report of the Social Justice and Social Security Committee and thank the committee for drawing to my committee's attention its conclusions in so far as they relate to civil legal aid.

Recently, my committee published its report on civil legal assistance. In that report, we drew conclusions about the provision of civil legal aid that mirror the conclusions that the Social Justice and Social Security Committee reached. I begin by stressing that the Equalities, Human Rights and Civil Justice Committee agreed that it is unsatisfactory that primary legislation has not been introduced in this parliamentary session to reform the civil legal assistance system. We are disappointed to note that the Scottish Government's current consultation, which builds on its legal aid discussion paper, has not taken into account any of the committee's recommendations for short-term changes.

I turn to the two committees' areas of common concern. First, on eligibility for civil legal assistance, my committee heard serious concerns about the low financial thresholds for eligibility for advice and assistance. Those thresholds have not increased since 2011, and they include a maximum capital limit of £1,716. It seems inconceivable that someone should be eligible for universal credit but not advice and assistance. We recommend that the financial eligibility limit for advice and assistance be increased to match civil legal aid levels. Moreover, we consider that all levels of financial eligibility for advice and assistance and civil legal aid should be increased in line with inflation since 2011.

I welcome the fact that the Social Justice and Social Security Committee is calling on the Scottish Government to work with the Scottish Legal Aid Board to reassess the means-testing arrangements for those schemes and to consider uprating the capital thresholds for both to £16,000, which is the same as for universal credit.

We heard calls for financial eligibility requirements to be waived for certain types of case, including those that involve civil protection orders and gender-based violence more generally. We are strongly of the view that the Scottish Government must pursue reforms with a view to removing financial eligibility tests, to ensure that victims of domestic abuse can access civil protection orders. It must also investigate options for ensuring that legal aid is available to a wider selection of domestic abuse cases without means testing.

The committee heard about so-called legal assistance deserts. For example, it was highlighted to the committee that Grampian Women's Aid has had to make 50 to 60 calls in order to find a legal aid solicitor. That is not a new problem, and we ask the Scottish Government to take urgent action to address the situation.

A key obstacle to improving the provision of legal aid is the current fee levels for solicitors. The committee heard that increasing those rates would have a significant impact on the availability of legal practitioners who are willing to undertake the work. The committee welcomes the Scottish Government's commitment to review fee levels. We also echo the Social Justice and Social Security Committee's recommendation that fees should be of such a level as to support a trauma-informed approach.

Finally, we urge the Scottish Government and the Scottish Legal Aid Board to reflect carefully on clawback and unrealistic contributions to costs, because those appear to the committee to currently act as barriers to justice.

I reiterate that the evidence showed that people have been waiting far too long for reform, and we ask the Scottish Government to show greater urgency in delivery.

The Minister for Equalities (Kaukab Stewart):

I am pleased to represent the Scottish Government in this important debate. I thank members of the Social Justice and Social Security Committee for undertaking their inquiry into financial considerations when leaving an abuser.

This Government is resolute in the belief that coercive control, including financial abuse, has no place in Scottish society. We are striving to eradicate the financial and structural barriers that victims/survivors face when they leave an abuser. Through equally safe, Scotland's strategy to address violence against women and girls, we have taken measures to prevent violence, to build the capability and capacity of support services and to strengthen the justice response to victims and perpetrators. For example, we introduced the Domestic Abuse (Scotland) Act 2018, which criminalises coercive control, including aspects of financial abuse.

As a direct result of funding from our annual £21.6 million delivering equally safe fund, the Financially Included project started its work to tackle the economic impact of violence against women. Its impressive work supports women to regain their financial freedom and thrive. This year, we have allocated increased funding to Financially Included to further expand and support the work that it provides and to develop a new Scottish economic abuse helpline.

As a Government, we are committed to doing more. I have asked my policy officials to consider the committee's report as part of the work to develop the next equally safe delivery plan, which will succeed the current plan at the end of 2026.

The issue of social security was raised by Bob Doris, and I recognise the importance of social security issues to this agenda. In Scotland, we have deliberately built a radically different social security system that provides vital support to those who need it, including women and children who are experiencing domestic abuse. Social security staff, including a dedicated safeguarding team, are trained to identify and support those experiencing abuse. However, as the Parliament is aware, much of the social security in Scotland, particularly universal credit, remains reserved to the UK Government. We remain keen to work with the DWP on areas where we have limited power—for example, on the splitting of single-household universal credit payments, which stakeholders have told us is essential to remove a potential enabler of domestic abuse.

Nobody should have to face additional financial hardship as a result of domestic abuse. We recognise that enforcement practices, such as the way in which liability is shared for council tax or having longer debt expiration periods, can create very difficult circumstances for those who are experiencing or have experienced abuse. That is why, during consideration of the Housing (Scotland) Bill, we supported an amendment to require a review of how council tax arrears affect those in that situation—and that was included in the bill. We also committed to consult on the council tax debt expiration period. The outcome of the review and consultation will be reported to the Parliament, and that will give us a much clearer understanding of the issues and of how best to respond. This year, we have allocated £2.2 million to roll out a national council tax debt project, delivered by Citizens Advice Scotland, to increase the support available to those who need advice and support on any aspect of council tax, including arrears.

As part of the housing emergency action plan, and as Bob Doris mentioned, we have established a new national fund to leave, which supports women and their children to leave an abusive partner and aims to improve their housing outcomes. As Bob Doris also mentioned, the evaluation of last year's pilot showed that more than 500 women were provided with financial support. The national fund could improve housing outcomes and could assist with the transition to a more stable and independent future for up to 1,800 women and their children.

The Scottish Government recognises the demands on the legal aid system. I listened carefully to Karen Adam's speech, and I recognise that the needs of those who depend on the legal aid system have changed significantly since the model was developed nearly 75 years ago. Change is needed to ensure that we have an adaptable, flexible, affordable and sustainable legal aid system that supports people who are facing challenging issues and problems. The Scottish Government welcomes the Equalities, Human Rights and Civil Justice Committee's inquiry into what changes could be made to the civil legal aid system. We are considering that committee's report, and we will respond to the Parliament in due course. We will continue to work closely with our stakeholders to support women to get the access that they need. Listening to them is vitally important.

Regarding the application of no recourse to public funds, the conditions create significant barriers to leaving abusive relationships. Through the ending destitution together strategy, we seek to mitigate and prevent destitution for people with no recourse to public funds.

I see that I am running out of time, Presiding Officer—thank you for your patience. I finish by assuring the Parliament that we are listening and that we will continue to address this blight on Scottish society.

Alexander Stewart (Mid Scotland and Fife)
(Con): As a member of the Social Justice and Social Security Committee, I am pleased to speak about the findings of our inquiry into financial considerations when leaving an abusive relationship. The committee's report highlights the serious challenges that are faced by domestic abuse victims and how basic financial protections are still missing for many of those individuals. The most recent statistics show that more than 63,000 domestic abuse incidents took place in Scotland in 2023-24: that is one incident every eight minutes.

The committee report confirms that, unfortunately, financial instability is one of the most common reasons why victims stay with their abuser. Many stakeholders were clear that victims who attempt to leave an abusive relationship often face unaffordable housing and rising living costs. Evidence has shown that that is particularly the case for older victims and those with a disability. Age Scotland highlighted that long waiting lists for properties can act as a significant barrier to those individuals. If new care arrangements are also required, the situation becomes even more difficult.

Among the issues in the committee's report is access to advice and information. Too often, victims are not aware of where to turn when fleeing an abusive relationship. The Glasgow violence against women partnership revealed that a victim would contact, on average, up to 11 services before they get the information that they require.

Local authorities have an important role to play in helping domestic abuse victims. The committee report recommends that the Scottish Government work with COSLA to create a single point of contact within each council area where victims can seek support and advice. It also recommended that the Government work with COSLA to improve the consistency of financial support across different council areas. I hope that the Government will look at those recommendations closely.

We also heard evidence that, in single-sex relationships, it is often the main earner who is the victim of abuse. That challenges the common narrative that financial control always aligns with financial power. It is important that the equally safe framework is able to reflect the needs and circumstances of different victims, including those with protected characteristics.

The Scottish Government must play a role in providing victims with the funding that they need to leave an abusive relationship. In respect of that, the fund to leave pilot scheme is very much welcome. That funding plays a vital part in easing the financial burdens that many victims have to deal with when they leave. The recently announced additional £500,000 for the fund is also welcome. However, the Government must now confirm whether it intends to make the scheme permanent, as the committee's report calls for.

The committee's recommendations should be looked at in the light of the urgent need to stamp out domestic abuse altogether. Those of us who are committed to that want to see progress.

Where appropriate, offenders should also have the chance to undertake rehabilitation, in order to lower the number of repeat offenders. In Scotland, reoffending rates remain stubbornly high.

We must also help young people to understand the dangers of domestic abuse and to recognise when a relationship is becoming abusive.

With regard to those issues, I note that the Prevention of Domestic Abuse (Scotland) Bill, which was introduced by my colleague Pam Gosal, is currently being scrutinised by the Criminal Justice Committee. I urge the Scottish Government to support the bill's important proposals on those issues when the time comes.

Domestic abuse victims deserve and need proper support from the Scottish Government. Those individuals should not have to suffer for a single day longer than is necessary. We hope that the Scottish Government will take the findings of the report seriously and implement some or all of those common-sense proposals to support victims of domestic abuse wherever possible. That is the least that we can do as a Parliament to support them as they progress through a difficult time.

Carol Mochan (South Scotland) (Lab): I thank the other members of the Social Justice and Social Security Committee for preparing this important contribution to our national discussion. I am now a member of that committee, but I was not when the report was prepared. I thank the clerks and all those who contributed the important evidence.

I know that, in this place, we all share the goal of ending violence against women and girls in Scotland by tackling the underlying attitudes and systems that perpetuate it. We all understand that that has to be a priority for any Government and for the Parliament as a whole. Equally, however, we need to understand that that will not result from good sentiments and kind words alone. I therefore welcome the minister's comments so far in the debate, and I look forward to hearing her closing contribution at the end of today's discussion.

I have heard—I am sure that other members have, too—harrowing stories from constituents about financial exclusion causing a great number of problems when they are leaving domestic abuse situations. My party and I want to play a constructive and positive role in achieving change. We need to ensure that any legislative efforts are making the impact that women and girls need, and we need efforts that reflect the reality of life for domestic abuse victims in Scotland. The committee's work goes some way to improving the landscape on that, and Scottish Labour welcomes its recommendations. I will touch on a few that I hope jump out as a priority.

Overall, the equally safe strategy is good, but it can be effective in helping victims only if more is done to raise awareness of its existence. We know that far too many people have no idea about the programmes and funds that are available to them. That information should be present in as many settings as possible, especially during people's lives in education. We heard about the need to inform young women and girls of the help that is provided and the platforms where they can get support throughout their lives. That is important in ensuring that young girls and women grow up knowing what is available to them.

Women who are trapped in an abusive relationship are, in effect, unable to live any form of healthy life. A key component of that is the restriction in their access to finance. That is often deliberate, and it is cruel. Abusers begin the process very early in relationships, so the signs are often there, but, naturally, not everyone can see them, particularly in those early moments. We must use what we have learned from police, social services and health settings to inform policy and improve the offer that we have. That cross-portfolio working is key to ensuring that information and support are provided at the correct time and in the correct way.

If we are serious about supporting women to leave abusive relationships, we must give them the financial freedom to leave. Others have spoken about that. The fund to leave can go a long way to assisting not only women in that situation but their children or dependants. However, we need to consider further whether the current level is enough, how the fund can be accessed and whether it will be brought in across the board.

The evidence that was received during the inquiry highlighted numerous barriers that victims face in accessing the support that they need. A large part of that is about debt, as we have heard from other members. Survivors often face debt that has come through desperation or deliberate manipulation by partners. I know that the minister mentioned that in her speech, but the Government must consider that aspect and work with partners to help victims when they are in temporary accommodation, so that they are not drowning in financial obligations and can maintain their housing. We know that maintaining housing is a key way of ensuring that victims have a more positive outcome.

We, in Scottish Labour, are updating our policies in line with some of the recommendations, and we continue to review their effectiveness so that we can help as many people as possible. We have to improve Scotland with meaningful policy that will not simply disappear into news cycles. The committee's report is an opportunity to take a step in that direction, and we welcome it.

Maggie Chapman (North East Scotland) (Green): Poverty, inequality and unresponsive, sometimes heartless, benefits and justice systems trap people—overwhelmingly women—in abusive homes. The report from the Social Justice and Social Security Committee that is before us today lays bare the structural cruelty that allows economic abuse to flourish and the practical barriers that make it so desperately difficult for women to leave. The report tells us clearly that financial dependence is not accidental; it is a predictable consequence of unequal power, austerity and underfunded support.

Equality before the law is a founding principle of our justice system, but that principle means little when survivors cannot access proper legal representation. The Law Society of Scotland has described domestic abuse as a legal aid desert, and the committee confirmed that reality. Indeed, as Karen Adam mentioned, the Equalities, Human Rights and Civil Justice Committee has also found that. We have heard that women who seek representation might have to approach between 30 and 50 solicitors in order to find one who is able and willing to take their case. That is not justice; that is abandonment.

Legal aid is means tested, but survivors of abuse should never be subjected to a financial test to prove their right to safety or protection. Dr Marsha Scott of Scottish Women's Aid put it perfectly when she asked:

"How are you following Scottish policy in every other area connected to domestic abuse if you are means testing people who are subject to financial and economic abuse?"—[Official Report, Equalities, Human Rights and Civil Justice Committee, 20 May 2025; c 13.]

She was absolutely right. Legal services must be free for all women, children and young people who experience domestic abuse, with no means testing, clawback or arbitrary limits in place. I look forward to the Scottish Government's response to Dr Marsha Scott's principled proposal.

The committee also recognised the Scottish Government's fund to leave pilot, which was a scheme that helped more than 500 women to rebuild safety with grants of up to £1,000. It offered what Citizens Advice Scotland described as a "deep psychological reassurance"—a cushion that made leaving possible. However, as the report highlights, although around 5,000 people are registered as homeless due to domestic abuse, the support reaches only a fraction of those in need. It must be expanded and made permanent.

The Scottish welfare fund can help, but it is stretched and inconsistent. The committee heard from women whose applications were rejected because the fund had run low. Women were forced to go into debt just to heat their homes, which is not what a safety net should look like. Economic abuse is not simply a symptom of domestic abuse; it is a deliberate strategy of control.

The committee heard how single household payments of universal credit allow perpetrators to dominate their partners financially. As Engender and Scottish Women's Aid told the committee,

"The single household payment is a gift to perpetrators of domestic abuse".

Next year will mark 10 years since the Parliament was empowered to introduce split payments and eight years since the Scottish Government was required to act. If it were a priority, it would have been done by now.

We must look more broadly, too. The surviving economic abuse project reminds us that women who are unable to find even £100 at short notice are three and a half times more likely to experience domestic abuse. That is why a secure, unconditional income through universal basic income or genuinely fair social security is not a utopian dream but a life-saving necessity.

The victims and survivors whose voices shaped this excellent committee report have survived unimaginable hardship. Our task now is not to admire their resilience but to ensure that no one else is forced to rely on it.

Beatrice Wishart (Shetland Islands) (LD): I, too, put on record my thanks to the members of the Social Justice and Social Security Committee, the clerks and all those who provided evidence for this important report. Anyone can find themselves a victim of domestic or financial abuse. Creeping behaviour and facades of charm mean that it can be difficult to recognise the early signs, but it can ultimately lead to women and children being trapped with no financial means to leave.

In 2023-24, Police Scotland recorded more than 63,000 incidents of domestic abuse. Figures from 2022-23 also recorded that more than 80 per cent of survivors of that abuse were female. We should never ignore that there are male victims of financial and domestic abuse, nor can we ignore that it can happen to those in same-sex relationships. However, the figures are clear that most abusers are male.

We cannot ignore that our society needs to address misogyny and violence against women and girls. Coincidentally, Girlguiding Scotland is in Parliament this week. I met it at lunch time, and addressing the issue is one of the asks in its manifesto for 2026.

My party recently debated the topic at our autumn conference, where we passed a policy package to better protect women and girls. I want to highlight one element of that policy, which is to update the Matrimonial Homes (Family Protection) (Scotland) Act 1981 to include "a presumption that the perpetrator of domestic abuse will be required to leave the shared home", which would allow survivors

"greater choice and agency".

Today's motion and committee report focus on the financial considerations for those leaving an abusive relationship. Domestic abuse in any form is abhorrent. Economic abuse can take different forms, including an abuser controlling a person through restricting them from getting, using or keeping money. As the committee report web page highlights, in 2020, Refuge, a domestic abuse organisation, found that more than 8 million adults in the UK have faced economic abuse. Survivors of economic abuse who find themselves in debt owe, on average, just over £3,000.

In a previous role, I worked with a survivor of economic abuse. After the abusive relationship had ended, the financial revelations were peeled away layer by layer. The survivor knew nothing about some of the debt in her name. She had been coerced into taking out multiple loans and credit cards in her name—often, with the perpetrator standing beside her, intimidating her and making her make phone calls to banks and loan companies. Other debt was taken out in her name without her knowledge, and the amount of debt that was racked up, which the perpetrator used but the survivor did not see, was huge. Some financial institutions—although not all—were willing to recognise their failings and wrote off some of the debt, which enabled the survivor to move forward and rebuild her life.

That situation was many years ago, and there have been improvements in awareness and support. For example, the TSB flee fund provides domestic abuse victims with funds of up to £500, which is not required to be paid back, to pay for the essentials to allow the victim to leave.

As the report highlights, there are many barriers to seeking help and making the first steps. Although help and advice are available online, it can be dangerous to access such support at home, and there can be barriers for older, less digitally confident people. As Age Scotland notes, a quarter of women who have experienced economic abuse are aged over 60. Therefore, I welcome the report's recommendation that information should be available in physical spaces, which will also help to overcome the issue of online advice not being specific to Scotland.

More information is needed on the impact on women with disabilities, women who are deaf or hard of hearing, and women with literacy difficulties.

It is also important to recognise that the level of domestic and financial abuse across Scotland is not purely an urban issue; the same issues are experienced in rural and island areas. The demand that Shetland Women's Aid experiences is evidence of the continued need for services and support in my constituency.

The Deputy Presiding Officer (Annabelle Ewing): We move to the open debate. Back-bench speeches should be up to four minutes, and I advise members that there is no time in hand.

Marie McNair (Clydebank and Milngavie) (SNP): As a member of the Social Justice and Social Security Committee, I welcome the opportunity to speak in the debate. According to Police Scotland, more than 61,000 incidents of domestic abuse were recorded in 2022-23, and the figures showed that more than 80 per cent of survivors of that abuse were female.

Leaving an abusive relationship is not easy by any means. When fear is coupled with financial pressures, that can make it even more difficult to leave. Refuge found that more than 8 million adults in the UK have faced economic abuse. When that is coupled with an increase in the cost of living, those in abusive relationships can struggle to leave. A more recent report from Women's Aid found that it can cost a survivor almost £50,000 to leave an abusive relationship.

Taking that into account, the committee agreed to undertake an inquiry into the financial considerations when leaving an abusive relationship. For the sake of time, I will touch on two points in the report.

The equally safe strategy is a joint approach between the Scottish Government and COSLA to prevent and eradicate violence against women and girls, and it is welcome that there is general support for that strategy among stakeholders. However, we recognise that a commitment relating to economic abuse should be included, with practical actions to provide financial support for victims and survivors. Financially Included stated that specific measures on public sector debt, housing costs, legal expenses and childcare should be included in the strategy. Therefore, we call on the Scottish Government to update the strategy and ensure that equally safe policies are backed by practical and financial support.

Furthermore, it was concerning to note that awareness of the equally safe strategy was much lower among victims/survivors than it was among stakeholder organisations. Therefore, I am keen to see what more the Scottish Government can do to increase awareness of the strategy more generally.

For us to tackle financial abuse, we need agencies and services to work together and take a consistent approach, so the committee has asked that consideration be given to developing "a forum where key actors such as the Scottish Government, COSLA, Social Security Scotland, the DWP, and any other relevant agencies and services can work together to prevent financial abuse."

It is of the utmost importance that any change to the equally safe framework takes into account same-sex relationships and the challenges that are faced by those victims and survivors of financial abuse. I support the Scottish Government reviewing the framework and considering how to improve messaging to encourage those who have been abused within same-sex relationships to seek support, as well as training for staff delivering services to recognise abuse across all relationship types.

The committee received evidence that victims/survivors of domestic abuse are more likely to be affected by benefit sanctions. In the light of that, the committee noted that the UK Government should consider amending the rules for universal credit

“for victim/survivors of domestic abuse to remove the five weeks’ waiting time for new claimants.”

We would also welcome the UK Government providing a single contact so that women can discuss confidentially what their entitlement would be if they leave their relationship. The Scottish Government is urging the Department for Work and Pensions to implement split payments for universal credit by default.

I am certain that we can all agree that coercive control, including financial abuse, has no place in Scottish society. The decision to leave an abusive partner puts individuals in a very vulnerable situation. Therefore, there must be appropriate supports in place that assist individuals in their time of greatest need.

Pam Gosal (West Scotland) (Con): Before I begin, I thank the Social Justice and Social Security Committee for securing the debate, all the clerks who put together the report, and all the organisations and individuals who provided evidence to the committee.

Evidence taken by the Social Justice and Social Security Committee, as well as by the Equalities, Human Rights and Civil Justice Committee, of which I am a member, has made one thing clear: the current legal aid model for those who leave abusive relationships is simply not working and is in dire need of reform.

The state of legal aid in Scotland has been poor for a while. I clearly remember Marsha Scott from Scottish Women’s Aid telling the Equalities, Human Rights and Civil Justice Committee that she was raising the same issue that she had raised in 2017—nothing had changed. We often hear the term “legal aid deserts”, meaning geographical areas and areas of law in which there is a significant shortage of available practitioners. That is especially true in rural areas, where solicitors who are willing to take up legal aid cases are scarce.

The Equalities, Human Rights and Civil Justice Committee heard examples of survivors of domestic abuse having to contact 30 to 60 solicitors. In one shocking case, 116 solicitors were asked to take up the case. We heard examples of individuals having to travel 150 miles to access a solicitor. Those are horrific real-life experiences, and let us not forget that behind every call is a real person desperately needing help to escape domestic abuse. The depletion of legal aid lawyers is so severe that it was even highlighted in the United Nations “Concluding observations on the eighth periodic report of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland”.

The Scottish Government clearly needs to do better. The current legal aid system in Scotland does not account for situations in which survivors of domestic abuse do not have access to their own household funds. Financial and domestic abuse often go hand in hand with abusive partners having complete control of financial resources. Therefore, even though a survivor’s household income might be way higher than the legal aid threshold, she will have no access to those funds. In the committee, we heard of situations in which survivors had no idea what their household income was, as their abusive partner hid that information.

It is shocking that legal aid is not given to those who really need it most. It is little wonder that many survivors do not want to come forward when they do not trust the current system. Survivors of domestic abuse deserve better and should not pay the price for the Government’s delays and failure to support them.

In closing, I think that it is becoming increasingly clear that those fleeing abusive relationships do not have the support that they deserve. Helping the survivors of domestic abuse to get back on their feet is one thing, but we must also ensure that domestic abuse is eradicated. That is why my Prevention of Domestic Abuse (Scotland) Bill, which is currently at the committee stage, is so important. It has received the support of survivors and third sector organisations and I hope that the Scottish Government and members from all parties will also back it. It is incumbent on the Scottish Government not only to provide survivors with support but to ensure that domestic abuse does not happen in the first place.

Jackie Dunbar (Aberdeen Donside) (SNP): I, too, thank the committee, the clerks and the expert witnesses who helped in the creation of the report. I say an especially grateful thank you to everyone who shared their experiences of domestic abuse with the committee, whether through the call for views or as members of the Scottish Women’s Aid survivor reference group who spoke to the committee. It can take a lot to open up about that sort of experience, but doing so can, and does, help other victims of domestic abuse, both now and in the future.

I have never personally experienced any of the things that the report talks about, but that is down to luck, because no one sets out to find themselves in an abusive relationship. I know about such relationships from folk who are close to me, and I have heard from constituents who have been through that experience. They had nothing in common before their abusive relationships began, but they have a fair amount in common now.

When I was selected to speak in today's debate, I reached out to some of the people I know to hear their thoughts, and I asked if they wanted me to read their words in the chamber. One told me that she did not have the words, but she then went on to list a range of barriers that she had hit when escaping from her ex-partner. What worries me is that a lot of what she told me about is not listed in the report, even though it is more than 100 pages long and contains many important recommendations.

Her experience was that her ex had gradually cut her off from her support network, doing that so slowly that it was not even noticeable. He tracked her phone and had sole access to their bank account. Any income, including child benefit, was in his name, and he kept hold of all the family's important documents, including her driving licence and their children's birth certificates. When she and her children got away, they left without identification, a bank account or money—they did not even have a phone that they could safely use. ID is required to access almost all the support that we make available, and a lot of it requires a bank account that money can be paid into—something that again needs ID to set up.

That family could not call the available helplines, and the place that she eventually managed to get away to was not in the city. She did not have a car, a bus pass, bus fares or a support network that she could reach out to and which could get her and her children to where the support was. Even when she got to where she was told to go, the support that she needed was not all in one place. Instead, she was expected to get from Marischal college to a police station in Bucksburn, which, for those who are not familiar with Aberdeen, is a four-mile journey—on foot.

She asked me to raise those points today and to talk about the baseline that is used when support is made available. Unfortunately, a lot has gone wrong for her, which is why such debates and reports are important in enabling us to fix what is not right for others in the future.

In my final few seconds, I will highlight the fantastic Grampian Women's Aid, which does an amazing amount of work. It goes above and beyond for many women and literally offers those fleeing domestic abuse a lifeline. If you are a woman in the north-east who needs help, Grampian Women's Aid will help you, so please do not be afraid to reach out.

Michael Marra (North East Scotland) (Lab): I add my thanks to the committee and all the stakeholders who participated in the inquiry—particularly those who are victims of domestic violence.

I am pleased that there is cross-party consensus today that Scotland must do better by those who find themselves in these most difficult of circumstances. Today I am talking about women—for they are overwhelmingly women. In 2023-24, 81 per cent of domestic abuse incidents were between a female victim and a male suspected perpetrator. Women have been abused by those whom they trusted most in what should have been the safety of their own home.

It can be extremely difficult to leave an abusive relationship for a myriad of reasons, including the financial impact, the financial risk and the financial complexity of leaving. That is often exacerbated by abusive partners having total control over household finances.

I also give the committee credit for the timeliness of its inquiry—not least for my constituents in Dundee, where rates of domestic violence are the worst in Scotland. In 2023-24, Dundee had the highest incident rate of domestic abuse in Scotland, with 183 recorded incidents per 10,000 people. The Scottish average was 116. The rising levels of domestic abuse are of huge concern. They are fuelled by a culture of misogyny and conspiracy that proliferates online, particularly among young men.

In recent years, rape has had the lowest conviction rate of any type of crime in Scotland. In 2021-22, less than half of rape trials that made it to court resulted in a conviction, compared with an overall conviction rate of 88 per cent in the same year.

I strongly support freedom of expression, but groups have been platformed in my city in recent weeks that seek to deny that reality, and they cannot be allowed to go unchallenged. The risks are far too great. One reason is that, beyond the horrific harms to individuals, the connection between domestic violence and radicalisation means that violence against women is a key flag for possible future terrorist behaviours. This is militant misogyny as the root of intolerable evils.

I turn to the committee's findings. It is fair to say that the success of the Scottish Government's equally safe strategy has been mixed. During the inquiry, it emerged that many survivors are not even aware of that strategy's existence. Many agencies and professionals are working hard to support survivors of domestic abuse but, as the committee found, it is essential that key stakeholders, including the Scottish Government, the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities and Social Security Scotland, work in a joined-up way and that services are effective and easy to access.

Issues were highlighted with the Scottish welfare fund, including difficulties in submitting applications, delays in funding coming through and budget constraints limiting the help that is available. Although some survivors had had good experiences with the fund, it is clear that more needs to be done to make the service more accessible and, crucially, more responsive in times of crisis and when an opportunity to leave presents itself.

The difficulties around the Scottish welfare fund show the hidden impact of more than a decade of cuts to local government funding. The general capacity of local government to deal with such issues has been reduced as staff leave and are not replaced and as councils are increasingly forced to concentrate on the delivery of statutory duties alone.

For there to be meaningful change, strategies and ministerial pronouncements must be matched by practical delivery on the ground. Too often, I fear, survivors of domestic abuse in Scotland have been let down by a gulf between policy intent and their lived experience. That has to change.

Paul McLennan (East Lothian) (SNP): I am grateful for the opportunity to participate in this important debate, and I welcome the committee's report. I am a previous member of the Social Justice and Social Security Committee and a current member of the Equalities, Human Rights and Civil Justice Committee.

This debate is about confronting a stark reality. For many women in Scotland, leaving an abusive relationship is not just a matter of courage but a matter of survival and, too often, a matter of money. Financial insecurity is one of the most significant barriers that prevent survivors from escaping abuse. It is a cruel paradox that the very act of seeking safety can plunge women and their children into homelessness, poverty and long-term debt.

Let us be clear that coerced debt is a form of domestic abuse. It is deliberate and it is calculated to control. We have all seen that from constituents. Abusers build debt in victims' names, restrict access to money and weaponise economic dependence. That traps women in dangerous situations and leaves them financially devastated when they escape. In my East Lothian constituency and in communities across Scotland, we see the consequences of that every day. Women who are supported by services in my constituency report being pursued for council tax and rent arrears that were accrued during abusive relationships—debts that they did not consent to and often did not even know existed. Those debts are not just numbers—they are barriers to housing, employment and recovery.

Homelessness is a common consequence. Often, when women flee, they do so with nothing. They leave behind homes, belongings and financial stability. They enter temporary accommodation, uprooted from communities, schools and support networks. When they try to move on, they face systemic obstacles such as rent arrears, council tax debt and up-front costs that make securing a new tenancy nearly impossible. Additional support for citizens advice bureaux, as mentioned by the minister, is welcome. One survivor told Aberlour that "debt feels like a shadow you can't escape".

That is not just unjust; it is unacceptable.

The Scottish Government has taken some necessary steps. The Domestic Abuse (Scotland) Act 2018 made coercive control a crime. The equally safe strategy addresses financial abuse, recognising that systems can worsen economic inequality and hinder women's ability to leave. When I was a minister, I participated in the equally safe ministerial group meetings and saw how seriously the Minister for Equalities took her responsibilities in that regard.

The new £1 million fund to leave, which I helped to develop in my time as Minister for Housing, provides vital support for women and children who flee abuse. Scottish Women's Aid chief executive officer, Dr Marsha Scott, said:

"Scottish Women's Aid warmly welcomes announcement of a roll-out of the original Fund to Leave pilots to the rest of Scotland.

Every day we and our local Women's Aid services see women and children struggling to get free of an abuser. The Fund to Leave offers a critical helping hand when women and children need it most. 'Leaving' is difficult and dangerous, and the Fund to Leave is such an important step to making leaving and staying free from an abuser a reality across Scotland."

However, we must go further. We need systemic reform of public debt recovery. Debt collection practices must be trauma informed and compassionate, and survivors should not be aggressively pursued for debts that are accrued through abuse. We must embed equally safe principles across all public bodies, not just domestic abuse services. Legal aid must be accessible, which is an on-going issue that we all need to take forward.

Social security systems must be flexible. The UK Government must end policies that deepen poverty, such as the five-week wait for universal credit and the two-child limit, which disproportionately harm women and children who are fleeing abuse.

The debate is about not just policy but dignity. Let us commit to building a Scotland in which no woman is forced to choose between safety and homelessness, children are not punished for the debts of abusers and financial independence is not a privilege but a right.

Jeremy Balfour (Lothian) (Ind): As a member of the Social Justice and Social Security Committee, I add my thanks to those who gave evidence—in particular, those who gave their personal experience from their own lives.

The report paints a bleak picture of where we are as a country. Nowhere is that more evident than in how we treat women—as others have said, it is mostly women—who are trying to rebuild their lives after abuse. Every week, women across Scotland make the incredibly brave decision to leave their abusive partners; however, too often, that courage is met not with safety or support but with financial barriers, bureaucracy and a lack of somewhere safe to go.

We talk about fairness and dignity in social security, but what dignity is there when a woman who is fleeing violence has to wait weeks for financial help? As Maggie Chapman pointed out, the Scottish Parliament has for 10 years had the power to establish split payments in Scottish benefits, but the Scottish Government has done nothing about that. Words are easy, but action is lacking in that area.

Bob Doris: Will Jeremy Balfour give way?

Jeremy Balfour: I am afraid that I do not have time.

Let us be clear. The SNP Government has had its powers over social security and housing for years, yet women's refuges are closing, councils remain overwhelmed and the promise of safety remains just a promise.

Even when women seek justice, they find another wall in front of them. As many speakers have pointed out, the legal system works only if there are enough lawyers to do the work—and there are simply not enough lawyers in Scotland doing that type of work right now. That is because legal aid is underfunded and lawyers are simply walking away from it. That is not justice but a failure to protect the most vulnerable. Only the Scottish Government can be held liable for that.

We owe it to every woman who has to pack a bag in the night and run to make sure that she finds a system that is ready to protect her, not one that makes her live through her trauma over and over again.

It is time for the Scottish Government to act, not just talk, and to provide real housing, real support and a justice system that truly stands with survivors, ensuring that equally safe becomes a living reality, not just some fantasy that the Scottish Government has dreamt up.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: We now move to closing speeches. I advise that there is no time in hand and that any interventions should be absorbed within the member's agreed speaking time. With that, I call Maggie Chapman to close on behalf of the Scottish Greens for up to four minutes.

Maggie Chapman (North East Scotland) (Green): I refer colleagues to my entry in the register of members' interests. Prior to my election, I worked for a rape crisis centre. I apologise—I should have said that earlier.

I begin my closing speech by thanking the Social Justice and Social Security Committee members, clerks and, most importantly, the women of the survivor reference group, whose experiences and insights make the report so powerful. Their testimony leaves us in no doubt. Financial barriers are among the most effective tools that abusers use to trap and punish. Too often, those barriers are reinforced, not dismantled, by our public systems.

The committee found that women might have to contact 11 different services before finding the support that they need, or 17 if they are from a minority ethnic background. Imagine the exhaustion and retraumatisation of retelling your story to strangers again and again, simply to survive. The report calls for trauma-informed training across all agencies. It should be mandatory. Every interaction, whether it be with a housing officer, benefits adviser or solicitor, can either empower a survivor to take the next step or drive them back into danger.

The Scottish Greens have long argued that homelessness and abuse are inseparable issues. The report highlights that 5,000 people become homeless each year because of domestic abuse and many of them lose their homes while the perpetrators remain in place. That is why I am proud that Ross Greer's amendment to the Housing (Scotland) Bill means that the Scottish Government is now required to review council tax arrears when domestic abuse is a factor. No woman should be chased for debts that were created through her abuse. No one should lose a home for trying to survive.

The committee's findings on public debt also make clear how the state can perpetuate economic abuse, from council tax collection to housing arrears. We must end the shaming of survivors through punitive debt recovery.

On legal aid, as we have heard clearly this afternoon, the committee's evidence was damning. Scarcity, bureaucracy and inadequate funding mean that survivors face impossible choices. Legal aid cannot be a postcode lottery or a privilege for the well-resourced—it is a human right. The Scottish Government's commitment to reform is welcome, but reform must mean universal trauma-informed access, not further review and delay.

The evidence on social security is just as stark. There are delays in the Scottish welfare fund, a five-week wait for universal credit that drives women into debt before they even leave and split payments that are still undelivered after eight years.

This is a moral test for our Parliament. We cannot claim to stand against gender-based violence while tolerating systems that tie survivors to their abusers through poverty and bureaucracy. Financial independence is safety. Economic justice is freedom. Real justice means building a society in which no woman has to weigh her safety against her solvency.

I look forward to the day when no one in Scotland is trapped in an abusive home for financial reasons and when our legal, social security and housing systems are not barriers but bridges to freedom and dignity. That day cannot come soon enough.

Carol Mochan: In closing, I say again how significant the report is in contributing to the change that we all know needs to be made for women and girls who are fleeing domestic abuse.

Jackie Dunbar's example is still ringing in my ears. It is difficult for women to leave such situations, and we all need to try to fix that and find solutions.

Scottish Labour fully supports the report and we want to work with the Government to ensure that we can deliver on its recommendations. Delivery is crucial.

I commend the committee for holding the inquiry during the first half of 2025. Timeframes are tight for some of the committees, so it is important that it managed to hold the inquiry. Today's debate has demonstrated how important that work has been and must continue to be.

I again thank those who gave evidence. Sometimes, we forget how difficult it can be for people to give such evidence—for the victims, of course, but also for the staff who work in our policing, housing and social services. It is difficult for them to offer support again and again, because we are not always getting those solutions for people.

The discussions with women with lived experience, the visit to Financially Included, which Bob Doris mentioned, as well as the evidence sessions on the wide range of relevant policy areas, such as housing, social security, legal aid, public debt, immigration status and policing, have paid dividends. The Government should methodically look through and respond to the recommendations.

We have also heard from members across the chamber that the themes in the recommendations that we have all mentioned need to be co-ordinated. There needs to be a co-ordinated approach across the wide range of policy areas and at different levels of government. That is something that we say in the chamber a lot, but we need to improve the delivery of that approach, so I would be interested to hear from the minister what plans she has to try to take it across policy areas.

Many members have mentioned key recommendations that they hope that the minister will do further work on. We know that there are difficulties in accessing advice. Where is that advice? How easy is it for people to access it? What do we have in place to ensure that we get that trauma-informed training for members of staff? What would the introduction of a national roll-out of the fund to leave look like? It is important that we get some answers. Members have also raised important issues around legal aid and investment. This must be a priority for Government. Delivery is crucial. It is a priority for the Parliament and it is most certainly a priority for Scottish Labour. We really value the opportunity to debate the issue this afternoon.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: I call Roz McCall to close on behalf of the Scottish Conservatives.

Roz McCall (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Con): We have heard some powerful contributions from across the chamber and I thank colleagues from all parties for recognising the importance of this debate.

The speeches from Jackie Dunbar and Beatrice Wishart were both very strong, because they came from a personal angle. We can never underestimate coercion and we can never underestimate what an abuser will do.

Let us be clear about what the committee report tells us. Four years after these issues were first raised, basic financial protections for victims of domestic abuse are still missing. I thank the Social Justice and Social Security Committee for taking action on the issue and for producing the report, and I thank the clerks and everyone who gave evidence to the committee.

It is not acceptable that the changes to the process are not further up the priority list; that failure lies squarely with the Scottish Government. I have to agree with Karen Adam: it is disappointing that there has been no civil legal aid legislation in this session. Victims of domestic abuse deserve better. They deserve a Government that acts with urgency, not one that issues warm words while survivors are forced to choose between safety and destitution.

Women's Aid told the committee that survivors with even modest savings may be left paying for the home they fled while trying to rebuild their lives elsewhere. Engender and Shelter Scotland described women and children being placed in hotels for weeks because councils have nowhere else for them to go. Citizens Advice Scotland warned that debt rules can leave only £1,000 in a bank account. Such rules could literally stop a woman from leaving her abuser. Those are not abstract policy failures; they are barriers that trap victims who are in danger.

My friend and colleague Alexander Stewart highlighted that there is one incident of domestic abuse every eight minutes. That is a horrific statistic and it highlights how important it is that we do something more about this issue.

Mr Stewart, Bob Doris and Maggie Chapman all mentioned that victims might have to approach 11 different services before they get any assistance, which shows that there is a fundamental gap in our system. In her initial speech, Carol Mochan highlighted the need for better knowledge and advertising of the help that is out there so that victims can get the support that they need. That is something that could happen now.

I turn to the minister's contribution, because she mentioned that there are three or four separate consultations and reviews on the back of the reports from both committees. That only represents further delay, however, because the reports already highlight what needs to be changed. Tangible changes to the system are required, not further consultation and reviews of work that has already begun. I am sorry, but I say to the minister that asking officials to simply consider the report for the next equally safe strategy is not enough. We could have seen much more action if only it had been a priority for the Government. Leadership is what is required now; what has been announced is cold comfort for victims of abuse, given that we are not doing more.

Finally, I highlight the contribution from Pam Gosal, who is actively trying to do something in this space with her Prevention of Domestic Abuse (Scotland) Bill. We should congratulate Ms Gosal on all the hard work that she has put in to introduce the bill.

The committee has called for commonsense deliverable actions. It asks the Government to make permanent the fund to leave, in order to cover deposits, travel and essentials when a survivor escapes abuse; to guarantee year-round funding for discretionary housing payments so that no council runs out mid-year; to review the Scottish welfare fund to make it consistent, trauma informed and accessible; and to ensure that the equally safe strategy delivers not just aspirations but real, practical financial support. However, progress in that regard remains painfully slow.

The committee has done its job. It has listened to survivors, charities and those on the front line, and the evidence is clear. What is missing now is leadership. The Scottish Conservatives are calling on the SNP Government to stop deflecting and actively move forward to support victims of domestic abuse, because every day of delay risks another victim being turned away, another survivor being forced to return to an unsafe home and another life being put at risk because the system could not help in time.

Let us not make victims pay the price of Government inaction—let us work together to ensure that financial barriers are never again a reason for someone to stay with their abuser. The time for reviews and rhetoric has passed; we need common sense, compassion and action now.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: I call the minister, Kaukab Stewart, to wind up on behalf of the Scottish Government.

Kaukab Stewart: The debate has certainly given us the opportunity to reflect on the financial barriers to leaving an abuser. As we have heard, those barriers are complex and multifaceted. They relate to the control that a perpetrator has over the victim/survivor, for whom the systems do not always work. I want to categorically make clear, and reiterate, the Government's commitment to addressing those issues.

We have heard many contributions regarding the equally safe strategy, which is co-owned with COSLA and provides a framework for action. Of course, I recognise that further improvements can always be made; however, I will respond to some of the points that members have raised.

With regard to same-sex relationships and those working with LGBT survivors, that is funded work and it is in the strategy. It is important that we see and acknowledge the results of the funded services for survivors, and that includes work in schools and work that concerns awareness-raising campaigns such as the forthcoming campaign on misogyny, which is also referenced in the equally safe strategy. There is also a strand of work under the strategy that concerns training, such as the national trauma transformational programme. In order to ensure delivery across portfolios, I chair the equally safe ministerial group, which meets regularly to ensure ministers and cabinet secretaries are following up on their parts of the strategy.

With regard to the fund to leave, the Scottish Government is clear that financial uncertainty should not be a barrier to women leaving an abusive partner. I note Roz McCall's recognition of the fund's positive impact. The Government would like to make the fund permanent, and we will set out further details at the forthcoming spending review.

I am grateful to the new Cabinet Secretary for Housing for prioritising and protecting housing rights for women. The Housing (Scotland) Bill, which was passed on 30 September, introduced a number of provisions to protect tenants who are experiencing domestic abuse. Those provisions fully recognise the vital role that social landlords have in keeping their tenants safe. The provisions include measures to ensure that social landlords fully consider domestic abuse through financial control, particularly rent arrears, when supporting their tenants who are experiencing domestic abuse, and that they support women to remain in their homes or to be rehoused, if that is what they wish.

It is vital that women are able to access the support that they need when they need it. Our delivery partners, including local Women's Aid groups, will work closely with others to ensure that women are fully supported in their decision to leave, and that is why, through the delivering equally safe fund of £21.6 million, we fund a range of organisations to do that. We have also made a considerable investment in vital advice services, such as the economic abuse helpline, Scotland's domestic abuse and forced marriage helpline and Citizens Advice Scotland. These services make a tangible difference to women's lives by giving them advice to help them to navigate complex financial systems and rebuild their lives.

On legal aid, the Scottish Government recognises that the legal aid system needs to be reformed. Looking ahead, we will develop a fee review mechanism and explore the fundamental changes that are required to create a legal assistance system that is fit for the 21st century. I am concerned about the lack of availability of solicitors. There are fewer civil solicitors than was the case previously, but they are also more active: in 2014-15, there were 1,067 active solicitors, with an annual average of 12 grants each; by 2023-24, there were 791 active solicitors, with an annual average of 17 grants each. The legal aid system is generally effective in delivering help to those in need, but we recognise that there are challenges in relation to certain types of cases and locations.

I welcome the Equalities, Human Rights and Civil Justice Committee's inquiry into legal aid. Its report was published on 17 September, and it is only right that we fully consider its recommendations and conclusions.

Solicitors in all parts of Scotland are able to access the fund for work that they have carried out and legal assistance schemes that are flexible enough to allow solicitors to travel to rural and remote parts of the country to carry out work, should it not be possible to have local solicitors for people to instruct. The Scottish Government will continue to press the UK Government on reserved issues, such as the condition of no recourse to public funds and universal credit.

I want to assure the Parliament that my ministerial colleagues and I remain committed to working towards a strong and flourishing Scotland, where all individuals are equally safe and respected and where women and girls live free from all forms of violence and abuse, including financial and economic abuse.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Thank you, minister. I call Bob Doris to wind up the debate on behalf of the Social Justice and Social Security Committee.

Bob Doris: As is traditional, I thank all members for their excellent contributions, but it was remiss of me at the start not to also thank our committee's clerking team, particularly Halla Edwards-Muthu, and the Scottish Parliament information centre, particularly Camilla Kidner, for their excellent work. We are lucky to have such professionals in the Parliament supporting us with our committee reports—I want to put that on the record.

I also want to put on the record something that did not come up in the debate and which I did not mention in my opening speech, which is the issue of inconsistent responses by police officers to allegations of financial abuse and coercive control. That key issue was raised by some members of the survivor reference group. The committee welcomes Police Scotland's commitment to develop training for officers on identifying and understanding economic abuse and consider opportunities to collaborate with the financially included project, which has raised concerns. I put that on record on the basis that, if victims/survivors have told us that that is an issue, they should hear that said in the Parliament this afternoon.

Marie McNair reinforced the calls that I made in my opening speech for the Scottish Government to take a lead in working together with the UK Government, the DWP, Social Security Scotland, COSLA and other partners to share best practice. I hope that the Scottish Government will drive that forward, irrespective of political differences. There is no political difference when it comes to supporting women who are fleeing violence or economic abuse, and so I hope that such working together will happen.

We also heard a lot about financial barriers; the five-week wait for universal credit is clearly one such barrier.

A theme that has shone right through the debate, and which we heard about in the minister's closing comments, is the further actions that are required on legal support. I welcome the minister's comments, but Karen Adam was right to talk about legal assistance deserts. More has to be done, and the committee is right to be frustrated. Pam Gosal and Maggie Chapman spoke about the search for lawyers. Some women, particularly in more remote or rural areas, have had to call up to 50 lawyers to get someone to take on their case. There is sometimes not an equality of arms for women when they seek legal representation, so the Government has to go further on that.

There is always a need for clear information, awareness and support. That is another theme that shone through the debate. I thank Alexander Stewart for saying that having a single point of contact in local authorities would aid in this endeavour, as was recommended by the committee. Carol Mochan spoke about low levels of awareness of equally safe among victims/survivors and the need to have support available in a physical form, perhaps in education settings and elsewhere. That point was reinforced by Beatrice Wishart, and it is important to put it on the record.

I thank members who stressed that economic abuse is not simply a consequence of domestic abuse but a thing in and of itself. Maggie Chapman said that it was a specific instrument of control, and Jackie Dunbar, in a very impassioned and personal speech, for which I thank her, said that it was part of a systematic pattern of abuse. She shared a story from one of her constituents, and Paul McLennan chimed in on that point.

Awareness has to grow more generally of what economic abuse and control actually is.

During the debate, we had an inadvertent and accidental demonstration that there is good cross-Government working taking place on economic abuse. Paul McLennan mentioned his involvement in developing the new fund to leave during his time as Minister for Housing. Kaukab Stewart has been pushing forward on that as the equalities minister, so there is clearly joined-up working taking place. More of that would be nice, but it is happening, so that is good to put on the record. Kaukab Stewart also said that 1,800 more women are expected to benefit from the new fund to leave, which is a hugely positive thing.

There was a discussion about whether the Scottish Government is delivering enough. It is always the Parliament's job to push the Scottish Government to go further. Frankly, whether we are SNP back benchers, committee conveners or members of the Opposition, we should all absolutely do that.

Equally safe is supposed to be the delivery strategy. Therefore, I expect the Scottish Government to think carefully about the recommendations from both committees and about how to ensure that the strategy will not just be warm words—I am sure that it will not be—but will have tangible, deliverable actions, with budgets beside them, to deliver many of the outcomes in the reports, which we have mentioned in the debate. There is much more to be done on that.

We heard that there is much more to be done in relation to the benefits system—not just by the UK Government on universal credit but by the Scottish Government and COSLA and local authorities more generally.

There is much more to be done in relation to public sector debt—that point shone right through the entire debate. There is good work happening in relation to the Housing (Scotland) Bill, but much more needs to be done on that, as well as on access to legal support.

I get the feeling from the debate that this is a clear and sincere collective endeavour by the Government and the Parliament and by political parties of every persuasion. All I hope is that, in the new parliamentary session—some of us will be here; some of us will not—we can garner that collective endeavour by the Government, the Parliament and members across parties.

It is only through such collective endeavour, when we agree budgets and strategies in this place, that we can meet the needs and aspirations of the victims/survivors who our committee spoke to, who were eloquent and impassioned in talking about their experiences—I thank them once more for that. I also thank the people providing front-line services on the ground, such as those at the financially included project, who work day in, day out supporting victims/survivors.

Let us come together in this place—the Parliament, the Government and members across parties— not just this afternoon but in the new parliamentary session to meet the needs of all those who find themselves to be victims of economic abuse. That is right for victims/survivors. More importantly, we need to do preventative work so that women can leave an abusive relationship at the earliest signs and are not trapped because of financial barriers.

The Deputy Presiding Officer (Liam McArthur): There will be a brief pause before we move to the next item of business.

Land Reform (Scotland) Bill: Stage 3

The Deputy Presiding Officer (Liam McArthur): The next item of business is stage 3 proceedings for the Land Reform (Scotland) Bill. In dealing with the amendments, members should have before them the bill as amended at stage 2— SP bill 44A—the second marshalled list and the second groupings of amendments. The division bell will sound and proceedings will be suspended for around five minutes for the first division of stage 3. The period of voting for the first division will be 30 seconds; thereafter I will allow a voting period of one minute for the first division after a debate. Members who wish to speak in the debate on any group of amendments should press their request-to-speak buttons, or enter “RTS” in the chat function if they are joining us remotely, as soon as possible after I call the group. Members should now refer to the marshalled list.

Section 4—Lotting of large land holding

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The question is, that amendment 175 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: There will be a division.

I suspend the meeting for around five minutes to allow members to access the digital voting system.

Meeting suspended.

On resuming—

The Deputy Presiding Officer: We will now proceed with the division on amendment 175. Members should cast their votes now.

The vote is closed.

Michael Marra (North East Scotland) (Lab): On a point of order, Presiding Officer. My proxy vote for Paul O’Kane did not record. I would have voted yes.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: I will ensure that that is recorded, Mr Marra.

Amendment 176 agreed to.

Amendment 54 not moved.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Amendment 10, in the name of Mercedes Villalba, was debated with amendment 6. I remind members that amendments 10 and 177 are direct alternatives. They can both be moved and decided on, but the text of whichever amendment is the last to be agreed to is what will appear in the bill.

Amendment 10 moved—[Mercedes Villalba].

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The question is, that amendment 10 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: There will be a division.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The result of the division is: For 26, Against 92, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 297 disagreed to.

17:00

Amendment 14 moved—[Tim Eagle].

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The question is, that amendment 14 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: There will be a division. Members should cast their votes now.

The vote is closed. There is a point of order from Craig Hoy.

Craig Hoy (South Scotland) (Con): Apologies, Presiding Officer—that point of order related to the prior vote. My phone had frozen but I managed to record the vote fine.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Thank you for that clarification, Mr Hoy.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The result of the division is: For 27, Against 92, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 76 disagreed to.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Group 11 is on energy and land use. Amendment 305, in the name of Douglas Lumsden, is grouped with amendments 207, 318, 319 and 322.

Douglas Lumsden (North East Scotland) (Con): I will speak to amendment 305 and the other amendments in my name. Those four amendments would extend the rights of communities to have a say on the energy infrastructure that is being built near them, which is why I am sure that the Government will have no issues in supporting the amendments.

Amendment 305 is designed to target bad-faith sales of land that could be used for community purposes but is instead being sold with a view to, for example, building a battery storage facility. The sheer number of battery applications that have been submitted over the past two years showcases starkly the need for community input on that. While the Scottish Environment Protection Agency delays publishing guidance, there is a real need for a community block on those dangerous battery storage facilities and to give communities a real say on what is built near them. I am sure that, in the interests of extending community decision making, the Government will back amendment 305.

Amendment 318 would simply require the Government to produce an energy and land use strategy. Although I would much prefer to see a consolidated energy strategy, the Cabinet Secretary for Climate Action and Energy clearly has no desire to be straight with the Scottish people about how much of our countryside needs to be ripped up and infected with monster pylons. Therefore, amendment 318 would compel the Government to introduce a long overdue and badly needed strategy for how Scotland's rural countryside will be used. It is time that the Government started being honest with my rural constituents about the burden that they will bear in order that the Scottish National Party's arbitrary eco-targets will be met.

Amendment 319 would compel the Government to do what it should already be doing, which is exploring alternative options for energy infrastructure, whether underground or offshore. That should be the default approach to trunk electricity infrastructure. If the SNP Government is happy to ban new nuclear power through the planning system, the very least that we should expect for a major piece of energy infrastructure is that the Government will explore alternative options.

Amendment 322 would require the consent of land tenants before the building of overhead lines, which is a further extension of land rights to the community.

As I noted earlier, I am sure that the SNP Government will have no issues in supporting all my amendments, as they would all extend the input that communities have into the energy planning process—unless, of course, it does not care about the impact that pylons, battery storage, substations and wind farms will have on constituents. If it votes against the amendments today, the Government will once again be saying that it does not care about the impact of its toxic decisions.

I move amendment 305.

Ariane Burgess: Currently, gaining access to land and leases for renewables is a significant barrier for community energy groups and their ability to earn a steady income for their community and reinvest as much as 70 per cent of their expenditure in their local, often rural economies. Limited access to land also hinders progress towards the Scottish Government's own target for 2GW of renewable energy to be local and community owned by 2030. More public land should be made available to meet that target, especially where it is already being used for renewables and the public landowner is issuing a new licence.

Amendment 207 is similar to an amendment that I lodged at stage 2, but I have tightened it in response to the Scottish Government's feedback. I particularly thank Community Energy Scotland and Community Land Scotland for their input to the amendment, which is about supporting community bodies to get access to land for community-owned energy.

Forestry and Land Scotland alone hosts 25 wind farms and 85 hydro schemes on its land. None of them is community owned, but, over the next 10 years, many of those schemes will reach the end of their leases, and new leases to operate renewables on the land will be issued. That offers a key opportunity to transfer a portion of private renewable capacity into community hands.

My amendment would modify the Community Empowerment (Scotland) Act 2015 in two ways. I have changed the wording in subsection (2) to make it more specific and to avoid any unintended consequences. The new wording specifies that the first right of refusal for community organisations would apply only to renewable leases for land that the public body wanted to lease for renewables. For example, the right would not apply to land that a local authority wanted to lease for housing or a new hospital, which was a concern that was raised at stage 2.

The changes to subsection (3) clarify the new duty on public bodies and the eligibility requirements for community organisations that can benefit from priority access to public land. I have discussed with the cabinet secretary and with the Cabinet Secretary for Climate Action and Energy further stipulations that could be set out in guidance to support the legislation. I also acknowledge that the Cabinet Secretary for Climate Action and Energy recently announced changes to the community asset transfer scheme, so that communities will receive early notification of sites that are in scope for renewables projects on public land or that are due for repowering. However, I am concerned that the projects will be capped at 50MW. Stakeholders in the sector want to see a more ambitious approach to community energy, but I will listen closely to the cabinet secretary's comments.

Edward Mountain: I listened intently to what Ariane Burgess said. Her amendment 207 is interesting, but for reasons that I find odd. She seems to be prioritising energy over food production, which is strange. To be entirely clear, given that I have mentioned food production, I remind members, as I did when we previously discussed the issue, of my entry in the register of members' interests, which shows that I have an interest in a family farming partnership in Moray that extends to about 202 hectares.

As a Highlands and Islands MSP, Ms Burgess knows that, across the Highlands, there is dislike of the current swamping of the Highland landscape with energy products that industrialise the landscape in which we live. Therefore, amendment 207 makes no sense to me, and it brings Ms Burgess into direct conflict with the communities that she and I represent. Most of those communities now believe that, when it comes to onshore wind energy and the battery stations and pylon lines that go with it, enough is enough. The amendment would go against what Highland communities want.

I find Ariane Burgess's excuse for amendment 207—that Forestry and Land Scotland has swapped trees for turbines—somewhat disturbing. If Forestry and Land Scotland concentrated on growing forestry rather than cutting it down in order to put up turbines, it would be more interesting.

Ariane Burgess: [Made a request to intervene.]

Edward Mountain: I will listen to what the cabinet secretary says about amendment 207 before I make a decision on it.

Rhoda Grant (Highlands and Islands) (Lab): I speak in support of amendment 207. Earlier this year, Cowal Community Energy attempted to take over the operation of Cruach Mhor wind farm, but the Scottish Government rejected its bid in favour of one from a private developer. Since that disappointing outcome, Cowal Community Energy has fought to highlight its case and the wider case for community energy. That was seen as a test case for the Scottish Government to turn its ambitions on community empowerment into action, but, sadly, it failed to do that.

Community-owned wind farms generate, on average, 34 times more income per megawatt for the local community than is generated by privately owned wind farms. Encouraging news was relayed last week in a response to a Government-initiated question, which set out that the Scottish Government is moving in the right direction on the matter, but it is concerning that it is looking only at developments under 50MW. There is no reason for that cap. The Government's new proposals are also only being piloted and will do nothing to compensate Cowal Community Energy for the lost opportunity. We should never again find ourselves in a position in which a community stands willing to develop renewables but a Government agency says no.

The Cabinet Secretary for Rural Affairs, Land Reform and Islands (Mairi Gougeon): Ariane Burgess's amendment 207 seeks to give priority access to land for community energy. Far be it from me to speak on her behalf, but I think that Edward Mountain has misrepresented her position, because her amendment is about ensuring that communities benefit from the opportunities arising from the repowering of such sites.

The Scottish Government recognises the importance of community energy, which is why, last week, the Cabinet Secretary for Climate Action and Energy announced that we are taking action to give communities priority access to renewable energy assets on public land that is due for repowering. That includes enhancements to the community asset transfer scheme that will ensure that communities receive early notification of in-scope public land that is due for repowering, with a dedicated 12-month window in which communities can apply before any commercial tendering process begins.

Ten onshore wind sites under 50MW have been identified to pilot that approach, and we are working with public bodies to ensure that communities have access to clear guidance from Local Energy Scotland and Forestry and Land Scotland. That guidance is now available online via both organisations. Therefore, I ask Ariane Burgess not to move amendment 207.

On Douglas Lumsden's amendments, as I said in response to similar amendments in groups 4 and 6, the matter is of interest in my constituency, so I make it clear that I am speaking in the chamber today in my capacity as a Scottish Government minister. The position that I am representing reflects the Scottish Government's collective view and concerns a matter of law and policy for which I have ministerial responsibility. Separately, and in line with the Scottish ministerial code, I have made my views and those of my constituents known to the responsible minister in the appropriate way. The issue that is under discussion today is distinct from that constituency interest, and my contributions today should therefore be understood as reflecting the Government's position and not my personal or constituency-specific stance.

I will repeat what I said about Douglas Lumsden's related amendments in those groups, because they all have the same fundamental issues. Land management plans are about transparency and supporting engagement with communities. They are not the right place to try to address issues that are covered by other legislative and policy frameworks, such as the national planning framework and consents processes.

A number of energy infrastructure issues that are raised by the amendments are reserved to the UK Government, so not only are the amendments disconnected from the intent of the bill but they raise matters that are outwith the legislative competence of the Scottish Parliament. That is why I urge Douglas Lumsden not to press amendment 305 or to move amendments 318, 319 or 322.

The Deputy Presiding Officer (Annabelle Ewing): I call Douglas Lumsden to wind up and to press or withdraw amendment 305.

Douglas Lumsden: I note that I lodged the amendments in good faith, because I have been speaking to local communities, and communities right across the north-east are really angry about what they are seeing. They are trying to make their voices heard in relation to the Tealing to Kintore overhead line—more than 10,000 people have made their views clear on that. The consultation on the Beaully to Peterhead overhead line is open, and I am sure that thousands of people with huge concerns will write in and take part in that. Recently, Highland Council put in a very detailed objection to the Beaully to Spittal line. There is opposition to and concern about those projects.

Massive mega-monster pylons are going up across much of our countryside, and we need to listen to the communities. It is shameful that Scottish ministers will not meet those communities. It was just last week that we heard that the Cabinet Secretary for Climate Action and Energy had been secretly recorded taking part in a meeting with energy companies, telling them to make projects “more palatable to communities”. If Scottish ministers went out to meet communities and listen to their concerns, they might understand—without speaking about specific planning subjects—the scale of concerns and how people’s homes are being devalued by thousands of pounds, and they might get some idea of the anger that is felt, and the opposition to much of that infrastructure.

Therefore, I press amendment 305, and I will move the other amendments in the group.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The question is, that amendment 305 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The result of the division is: For 26, Against 90, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 306 disagreed to.

Amendment 3 not moved.

After section 5

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Group 12 is entitled “Sunset and review of Act”. Amendment 196, in the name of Edward Mountain, is grouped with amendments 197, 89, 89C, 89A, 89D, 89B, 89E, 89F and 89G.

Edward Mountain: The amendments in this group offer the Government a smorgasbord of choices regarding sunset clauses. Amendment 196 offers a sunset provision of five years on sections 2 to 5, on community right to buy and associated modifications and the lotting of large land holding and associated modifications. My amendment 197 does the same, but purely for the lotting sections of the bill. That gives the cabinet secretary a true choice as to which one she would prefer, although she could choose both.

Martin Whitfield’s amendment 89 is eminently sensible, as I would expect from him. It not only contains a sunset clause but would require the land commissioners to prepare reports and lay them before Parliament. That would allow the Parliament to consider whether the land reform legislation is making sense and doing what the cabinet secretary has promised that it will do, or whether—as a key land reformer says will be the case—it is not. If it is not, the Parliament can, at that time, make a decision to cease and desist.

That is right and proper, and amendment 89 is perhaps better—if I might be so bold as to say so—than my amendments 196 and 197; that is quite hard for me to admit. If Mr Whitfield indicates, therefore, that he is going to move his amendments, I could be pushed into considering withdrawing or not moving my amendments. That may delight him and every other member in the chamber, including the cabinet secretary, who made a point in that regard.

Amendments 89A to 89G would, to my mind, do little to add to the amendments from Mr Whitfield—they are, in my view, unnecessary and I therefore cannot support them. It may be, of course, that the cabinet secretary can change my mind; I will wait and see.

I move amendment 196.

Martin Whitfield (South Scotland) (Lab): I have lodged amendment 89 in order to place a statutory review provision in the text of the bill. At stage 2, I brought forward proposals to ensure that the bill would be subject to meaningful post-legislative scrutiny and review. I then worked constructively—for which I thank the cabinet secretary and other members across the chamber—to refine that approach for stage 3. I am pleased to present the resulting amendment today, which—I reassure Mr Mountain—I will be moving.

Amendment 89 would do two key things. First, it would place a duty on the land commissioners to “review the impact and effectiveness of”

part 1 of the bill. Secondly, it would place a duty on the Scottish ministers to respond to that review. The land commissioners would need to lay their report before Parliament and make it publicly available, and within one year, ministers would have to publish a response outlining what actions will be taken or, if no action is proposed, explaining why.

That is not just good governance: it is essential accountability, and an accountability that was sorely missed in the case of Andrew Stoddart, who was a tenant farmer at Colstoun Mains in East Lothian for more than two decades. He had invested hundreds of thousands of pounds in the land and built a life and a livelihood but was evicted under a legal framework that failed to protect him. His case exposed the fragility of tenants' rights, the imbalance of power between landowners and tenants, and the lack of transparency about how land decisions are made. We must learn from that failure.

Amendment 89 would ensure that we do that. It would embed post-legislative scrutiny in the bill so that we do not simply pass laws and move on but instead return to them, examine their impact and ask whether they are delivering the outcomes that have been promised. Andrew's story is sadly not an isolated one. It is a reminder that land reform must be living legislation that is responsive, reflective and, most of all, rooted in justice. Amendment 89 would ensure that the voices of tenants, crofters and communities are not just heard during consultations but are respected in a review.

I urge members to support amendment 89, not just as a technical improvement but as a moral commitment to those who have been let down in the past and to those who deserve better in the future.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: I call Rhoda Grant to speak to amendment 89C and other amendments in the group.

Rhoda Grant: I support amendment 89 because it is important that we have post-legislative scrutiny and I pay tribute to Martin Whitfield's commitment to his constituents, as is shown in his lodging of that amendment.

I seek to strengthen amendment 89 with my amendments 89C, 89F and 89J.

Amendment 89C would build on the provisions set out in Martin Whitfield's amendment to ensure that the review process is not static but must be reapplied afresh during each scheduled review. I believe that there is also a need to set out in greater detail what that review must include, so amendment 89F would go beyond the specific provisions in the bill to identify the core land reform policy outcomes that the bill was intended to address, along with key land reform outcomes identified by the Scottish Land Commission. The amendment seeks to ensure that the review of the act would report directly in line with the stated policy outcomes for land reform in Scotland.

Amendment 89G would mandate that the review of the act would not be a one-off occurrence. The first review would take place five years after royal assent and subsequent reviews would occur every three years thereafter, assessing the impact of the act and looking at what might need to be changed. Secondly, the review would collect data on land ownership and land reform outcomes, in order to better understand how the act, and any future land reform legislation, is performing and what change might be needed.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: I call Ariane Burgess to speak to amendment 89A and other amendments in the group.

Ariane Burgess: Amendment 89A would add an express provision to Martin Whitfield's amendment 89 and would require that a review be carried out by the land commissioners to evaluate the impact and effect of part 1 of the bill on islands and island communities. The conclusions of that review could be taken into account by ministers when deciding whether to use the powers in the bill to modify the land affected by part 1, including any special provisions for islands.

I also briefly state that I have some concerns about the timescale for implementation of the act. Given my experience of the Good Food Nation (Scotland) Act 2022, I believe that we will not actually see the effects of this legislation until well into session 7—although we are here talking about the bill, I place on the record that we might not even see its effects until we are in session 8.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: I call Mercedes Villalba speak to amendment 89D and other amendments in the group.

Mercedes Villalba (North East Scotland) (Lab): I have two amendments in this group. Amendment 89B is an amendment to the review amendment lodged by Martin Whitfield and would make an express provision that the review must consider the appropriateness of the land described in each of the part 1 provisions, with particular regard to the size of the areas of land. In effect, it would look at whether the 1,000 hectare threshold was still appropriate. Amendment 89D is a variation on amendment 89B and would require the review to have particular regard to whether the size of the areas of land should be reduced.

Members are already familiar with my arguments in favour of lowering the threshold and my attempts to do so in the bill, so I will not repeat myself tonight. However, I note that we have heard frequently from the cabinet secretary that the Scottish Government requires further evidence to lower the threshold. My hope is therefore that we can agree to amendment 89D to ensure that the review of the provisions includes that crucial point.

I will listen carefully to the cabinet secretary's response to both amendments. If she is minded to support amendment 89D, I will not move amendment 89B.

Mark Ruskell (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Green): Amendment 89E will require the land commissioners' review to consider the land subject to part 1 of the bill and to have particular regard to what land is to be treated as contiguous—after stage 2, it is land within 250m—and what land forms a composite holding.

Earlier in the proceedings, I was disappointed that my amendments on contiguous holdings did not pass, but I believe that amendment 89E will keep the issues that were raised under consideration for the future as part of a comprehensive review.

Mairi Gougeon: I am happy to support Martin Whitfield's amendment 89, which will put statutory review provisions for all of part 1 in the bill. It will ensure that the provisions are carefully and thoroughly reviewed by the land commissioners and that the review will be considered in full by the Scottish Government, which will make a statement about any action that ministers intend to take as a result of the review's findings.

I also support other amendments in the group, including Ariane Burgess's related amendment 89A, Mercedes Villalba's amendment 89D and Mark Ruskell's amendment 89E, as well as Rhoda Grant's amendment 89F.

On amendments 89C and 89G, although I would expect further reviews of the provisions to take place over time, every three years would find us in that cycle of reviews and place a significant resource burden on the Scottish Land Commission. There is lots of important work for the Scottish Land Commission to do, but we do not want it to be reviewing the legislation so frequently that it is prevented from undertaking work on the next steps of our land reform journey.

It is also not appropriate to link the review directly to royal assent, because there is always a delay between royal assent and the regulations being implemented. We want the review to be able to pull from as much experience of the operation of the provisions as possible.

Finally, I turn to Edward Mountain's amendments. He wants the pre-notification and transfer test provisions to end within five years of coming into force, with no means for a review. That is an extreme approach that I simply cannot support. I therefore ask members to oppose amendments 196 and 197.

Edward Mountain: I have listened to the arguments today, and I listened with care to what Martin Whitfield said about his constituent, Andrew Stoddart. To be clear, my understanding of that situation was that it came about because of flawed legislation in the Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003.

Martin Whitfield: Edward Mountain is right to lay the fault in that space, but there was also the challenge of the inability of the Scottish Parliament and the Scottish Government to understand their responsibilities to the tenant farmer and of putting them in that position.

Edward Mountain: I totally agree with that. How is it that every time we have a land reform bill, we have another case? I remind the member of the Salvesen v Riddell case, which caused the same problem because ill-conceived legislation was passed as land reform purporting to do the right things. I believe that neither of those cases can be laid at the door of the landowners, but that the responsibility is on the Scottish Government, because it totally failed to understand what it was passing.

I am not surprised that the cabinet secretary supports Martin Whitfield's amendment. I am sure that they worked together on it, and I will be delighted to withdraw my amendment 196. However, I cannot agree with the cabinet secretary's suggestion that all the other amendments, except amendments 89C and 89G, will build on Mr Whitfield's amendment, so I urge the Parliament to vote against them. I will not press amendment 196.

Amendment 196, by agreement, withdrawn.

Amendment 197 not moved.

Amendment 198 moved—[Mairi Gougeon].

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The question is, that amendment 198 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: There will be a division.

Amendment 198 agreed to.

Section 6—Establishment of the Land and Communities Commissioner

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Group 13 is on the land and communities commissioner. Amendment 307, in the name of Edward Mountain, is grouped with amendments 4, 78 to 87, 199, 200, 5, 88, 201, 309, 202 and 310. I point out that, if amendment 4 is agreed to, I will be unable to call amendments 78 to 87 and 199 due to pre-emption.

Edward Mountain: I lodged amendment 307 to ensure that the land and communities commissioner will have experience in land valuation. Why do we need to make sure that they have that? The answer is that the commissioner will give ministers advice regarding lotting. I absolutely believe that lotting will involve difficult decisions and that it will be open to legal challenge at all levels. My view is that, if the land and communities commissioner has experience in land valuation, there will be less chance of getting the lotting wrong. The landowner will seek to get full value from the land when they transfer it but, if the value has not been considered in the lotting decision, that will not be given. Amendment 307 was proposed by the Law Society of Scotland for the simple reason that it sees legal challenges coming.

I am extremely proud to be in this Parliament and I am proud that this Parliament does not view anyone or give anyone power based on how much they have, how little they have, where they come from, what their ethnicity is or what their religion is. Those things are all totally excluded from our decision-making process. They were totally excluded from my decision-making process before I was elected to this Parliament, and that has remained the case. I judge people on the evidence that they bring and on the contribution that they make to my business, and I have taken exactly the same approach here. I have dealt with every constituent who has come to me without favour and regardless of their political views.

I therefore find the cabinet secretary's exclusion of those who, in her own terms, comprise a minority group from being the land and communities commissioner totally wrong. What do I mean by that? The cabinet secretary has deemed that a large landholder may not be the land and communities commissioner. I do not understand the reasons behind that. I believe that there is some perception that all large landowners are bad, but I do not believe that they are. In my experience, for every bad large landowner, I could probably produce you a bad tenant, too. In my mind, to decide to exclude somebody because of what they have is totally wrong.

My amendments in this group are simple. I want to test whether it is just large landowners that this Government particularly dislikes and distrusts with regard to being the land and community commissioner. My amendments would exclude anyone who is, or was within the two years preceding their appointment, in the following categories: tenant farmers and crofters whose land exceeds 1,000 hectares—believe you me, Presiding Officer, there are some crofters whose land exceeds 1,000 hectares—board members of Scottish Land & Estates Ltd; members of Community Land Scotland; board members of NatureScot; members of the Crofting Commission; members of the Scottish Crofting Federation; and members of non-departmental public bodies.

The purpose of the amendments is straightforward: to see whether the Government believes that all those categories are appropriate. If the Government believes that it is right to exclude large landowners only, my view would be that political appointments should not be made either. We had that argument earlier in the year over the appointment of Mike Russell to the Scottish Land Commission. That was more of a political appointment than a case of the best person for the job.

Amendment 88 removes from the list of functions of the land and communities commissioner the requirement

“to keep under review emerging problems in the operation of natural capital markets”.

I was involved in land management for more than 12 years, and I can tell members that the operation of natural capital markets is extremely complex. Even with 12 years' experience, and having spoken to people about it for the subsequent 10 years while I have been in this Parliament, I am not sure that I fully understand it. I am not sure that the majority of people who might be considered for the appointment will have much knowledge, so to include that requirement in the portfolio of the land and communities commissioner is, to my mind, fundamentally wrong.

On the other amendments in the group, I see some merit in Rhoda Grant's amendment 200, which adds reporting on the compliance of ministers to the list of functions—which I have no doubt that ministers will dislike. Amendment 309 was recommended by the Law Society of Scotland. I am pleased to see that Rhoda Grant lodged it, and it makes sense. Amendment 201, in the name of Tim Eagle, brings the issue of wildfires into the equation. For too long, we have ignored the subject, and we seem to have learned nothing from the Dava moor fire. It is right to include consideration of wildfires when we discuss land reform.

Amendment 202 promotes engagement rather than conflict. It is another sensible amendment from Mr Eagle, given that, if it is not correctly handled, the bill will build on the preconceived idea that landowners and tenants are always at loggerheads. My experience from my time managing land for landlords with tenants is that, if both sides talk, solutions can always be found. I will listen to the arguments.

I move amendment 307.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: I call Tim Eagle to speak to amendment 4 and other amendments in the group.

Tim Eagle: I share some of the concerns that my colleague Edward Mountain set out. Amendment 4 in my name would delete references in the bill that prevent someone who has been a large landowner in the preceding year from becoming the land and communities commissioner. My amendment 5 is consequential to amendment 2, so I will not press that.

On my amendment 201, in June, extensive resources, manpower and expertise helped to tackle some of the largest ever fires near Carrbridge and Dava. At least 33 businesses, including 27 estates, helped to tackle the wildfires, and it is estimated that the collective value of the specialist firefighting equipment that was deployed by private landowners was around £3.1 million, with more than 100 employees helping in the efforts. The wildfires highlighted the enormous skills and expertise that are held by private landowners in Scotland and exposed gaps in the public response from the Scottish Fire and Rescue Service. It was later determined that the Scottish Fire and Rescue Service could benefit from more specialist equipment, requires more wildfire training, and should implement a wildfire management strategy.

The rocketing number of wildfires in the past year alone is extremely illuminating. In just the first few months of 2025, the number of recorded wildfires in Scotland was triple the total number in the whole of 2024. Therefore, I propose in my amendment 201 to give the newly established land and communities commissioner functions to improve Scotland's response. It would require the commissioner "to work with the Scottish Ministers to ensure that landowners and communities are properly supported to manage wildfires", and it would also allow the new commissioner to make recommendations where he or she considers there to be gaps in support.

Although I have some concerns about the creation of the new land and communities commissioner role more generally, my amendment 202 would help to reduce some of those concerns. The Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2016 required the newly established tenant farming commissioner to exercise their "functions with a view to encouraging good relations between landlords and tenants of agricultural holdings."

My amendment 202 seeks to mirror that requirement in the functions of the land and communities commissioner, giving them the function of

"promoting engagement between landowners and communities."

A theme that appears in part 1 of the bill is to require landowners to engage more with communities and vice versa. Therefore, it seems only sensible that the commissioner that this bill creates will have a similar function to the one that is already carried out by the tenant farming commissioner. That would put the role in the positive context of promoting engagement rather than focusing on investigation, enforcement and fines, which would reassure farmers and landowners that a priority of the commissioner will be to establish positive relationships.

I ask that the other parties in the chamber recognise that point, because it is already the case with the tenant farming commissioner, and that they back amendment 202.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: I call Rhoda Grant to speak to amendment 200 and other amendments in the group.

Rhoda Grant: Amendment 200 is based on my stage 2 amendment 335. That amendment was agreed but then repealed by the Scottish Government last week, which argued that the provision would interfere with its working relationship with those who live and work on Government-owned land.

I have some sympathy with that view, but the question remains: where the Scottish Government own estates, who holds it to account if it does not fulfil its obligations? Amendment 200 would address that issue but in a different way from my previous amendment. It would place a duty on the land and communities commissioner to report on the Scottish Government's compliance with its obligations under the bill when it is the landowner.

Amendment 309 is an empowering amendment that details the land and communities commissioner's functions by explicitly authorising them to commission research on three areas:

"Land management... community empowerment, and... land valuation."

That would provide us with information on which to base future decisions and legislation.

Labour supports Michael Matheson's amendment 310, which dovetails with the functions of the new commissioner that we would all expect to see. It would give comfort to everyone regarding the parameters that the commissioner would work within.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: I call Michael Matheson to speak to amendment 310 and other amendments in the group.

Michael Matheson (Falkirk West) (SNP): I rise to speak to amendment 310. The introduction of the new land and communities commissioner will be an important intervention to introduce some regulatory functions into the Scottish Land Commission. Although some stakeholders stated a preference for those powers to be vested in the commission and existing land commissioners, there could be merit in the new commissioner having some operational separation from the role of the wider commissioners.

The cabinet secretary will be aware that, in committee at stage 1, stakeholders expressed some tension about how the powers would be vested in the commissioner rather than in the commission. It would appear that the way in which the new commissioner's role will be created is largely based on the existing tenant farming commissioner, which again sits within the Scottish Land Commission. However, the commissioner that is being created for land and communities will have more enforcement and regulatory functions as part of its role.

It is important that we seek to address any potential issues of governance, which is why I propose with amendment 310 to clarify how we can ensure that the new commissioner will be aligned with the wider policies and workings of the Scottish Land Commission. I recognise that, in seeking to codify some aspects of the new commissioner's role, the amendment runs the risk of the bill being overly prescriptive and potentially restricting some aspects of their function. I would welcome the cabinet secretary's views on how we can ensure that the governance arrangements between the new land and communities commissioner and the wider role of the Scottish Land Commission can be properly managed in a way that avoids any potential conflict of purpose.

Mairi Gougeon: I turn first to Edward Mountain's amendments in the group. I am happy to support amendment 88. The effect of natural capital markets is more appropriately considered by the land commissioners. I will also support Ariane Burgess's amendment 312, in group 15, which makes that clear.

However, the rest of Edward Mountain's amendments in the group should all be opposed. I think that they represent his personal quest to make it very difficult to ever hire the land and communities commissioner. Amendments 78 to 87 and 199 all seek to block people from that role, from crofters to workers in non-departmental bodies to the Scottish ministers. Interestingly, some of the few groups that Edward Mountain is not seeking to disqualify are MSPs and parliamentary conveners, so I do not know whether he has his eye on that role in the future.

Most of his amendments would serve no purpose other than to complicate the hiring of the land and communities commissioner. Amendment 307 would require the land and communities commissioner to have land valuation experience. Such experience is not necessary for the majority of the commissioner's functions, which relate to the community engagement obligations in the bill. When preparing reports to inform ministerial lotting decisions, the commissioner can commission advice from land agents to inform that report. The Scottish Land Commission already takes that approach where similar advice is needed.

I urge members to support amendment 88 and to reject all of Edward Mountain's other amendments in the group.

Amendment 4, from Tim Eagle, would allow a landowner who is subject to the measures in part

1 of the bill to be the land and communities commissioner. However, there is a clear justification for that exclusion. It would not be right for the land and communities commissioner to be in a position in which they were deciding whether to impose fines on themselves or to be advising ministers on how their own land should be lotted. It would be deeply unfair to put communities in a position in which they feel that they are unable to raise a breach because they would have to report it to the landowner responsible for it.

There is precedent in primary legislation for addressing that level of conflict of interest, which strikes at the heart of the independence of the role. The Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2016 sets out that they own or are a tenant on land that is "subject to a relevant tenancy."

"A person may not be appointed as the Tenant Farming Commissioner if"

The current disqualification is clearly justified, so I urge members not to support amendment 4.

I understand the intention of Tim Eagle's amendment 202. When I spoke to group 7, I emphasised that the land and communities commissioner will seek to resolve issues through engagement with landowners before making use of enforcement powers. Had the amendment been limited to the land and communities commissioner's role in relation to community engagement obligations, I might have been minded to accept it. However, the commissioner will also play a fundamental role in lotting decisions, ensuring that ministers' decisions are informed by independent advice on the landholding. It is not clear how the commissioner could carry out those functions in a way that would encourage positive

"engagement between landowners and communities",

For those reasons, I oppose amendment 202, as well as amendment 5, which seeks to remove the land and communities commissioner's role in lotting decisions entirely.

Amendment 201 by Tim Eagle and amendment 309 by Rhoda Grant seek to add new functions to the land and communities commissioner role. In both cases, the added functions are more appropriate for the land commissioners than the land and communities commissioner. Land commissioner functions are broad and would already allow the Scottish Land Commission to carry out work in relation to the issues that are noted in those amendments, so the amendments are unnecessary. If Rhoda Grant or Tim Eagle believe that further research on those themes should be taken forward by the Scottish Land Commission, I am happy to discuss that further. However, I am not able to support those amendments today.

I understand the intention behind Rhoda Grant's amendment 200. I have been clear that public bodies should seek to lead the way in complying with the obligations in the bill. When a public body is in breach, I would expect the land and communities commissioner to take the same approach to enforcement as it would with any other landowner. However, amendment 200, as drafted, would require the land and communities commissioner to take a different approach to public land. As compliance can be assessed only through investigation, amendment 200 would appear to encourage the land and communities commissioner to proactively investigate compliance by ministers in relation to public landholdings, of which there are more than 200. Based on anticipated investigation costs, that could significantly increase the costs of the Scottish Land Commission.

I would be more than happy to discuss further with Rhoda Grant how it can be made clear in the regulations that public landowners are to be subject to the same requirements as other landowners. However, given the unintended consequences and financial impacts that amendment 200 would cause, I urge her not to move it.

I absolutely understand the intention behind amendment 310 by Michael Matheson, but I do not think that it is needed. The land and communities commissioner will not be a stand-alone commissioner; they will be a member of the Scottish Land Commission and its wider board. The board is collectively responsible for ensuring that appropriate governance procedures and oversight are in place and that commissioners are fulfilling their responsibilities appropriately. Without amendment 310, the land and communities commissioner would still be required to collaborate with the land commissioners where the land and communities commissioner's functions relate to the functions of the land commissioners, and vice versa.

I have engaged with the Scottish Land Commission on amendment 310, and the commission has noted concerns that it would place different requirements on the land and communities commissioner from those that apply to any other commissioner.

For those reasons, I ask Michael Matheson not to move amendment 310.

Edward Mountain: I have listened carefully to the debate. Let us first go through the amendments that I can easily agree with. I agree with Tim Eagle's amendments in the group, and I agree with Rhoda Grant's amendment 200.

I listened to Michael Matheson's argument, and I thought about what he was driving at, but, in this debate, I agree with the cabinet secretary, as I think that most of the functions concerned are already within the responsibility of the Scottish Land Commission. I therefore think that Michael Matheson's amendment 310 is overly prescriptive and is not needed.

I turn to the other amendment that it is easy to agree with. Hooray, cabinet secretary—in my 121 amendments, I appear to have one such amendment. There may be more to come forward. I am referring to amendment 88, on emerging problems in markets.

Let us be entirely clear when it comes to the other amendments in the group, on who can and cannot be the land and communities commissioner. I have no fear, and I have no reason not to accept that parliamentarians or committee conveners could be the land and communities commissioner. In fact, I sincerely hope that they are not—I sincerely hope that everyone gets a chance at it—but by continuing to push the matter and allowing that large landowners cannot be in the commission, the cabinet secretary is forcing me to press my amendments relating to everyone else, just so that I can test the depth of her dislike of large landowners and why other people who are invested in land are better than large landowners.

Mairi Gougeon: I am sorry, but I have to draw attention to the point that Edward Mountain has made, which is to completely misrepresent the reasoning behind our amendments and the bill provisions as introduced. As I have already set out, we already have a precedent for such provisions in the 2016 act, as I hope the member would recognise, rather than misconstruing the matter as a debate about who is bad and who is good. That completely misrepresents the points that have been made.

Edward Mountain: I was listening for a question in that intervention, but I think that it was just a statement.

I do not detract from what I am saying. I have always treated everyone—[Interruption.] I know that people might not care for the comments that I am making—

The Deputy Presiding Officer: I ask members to listen to the person who has the floor, please.

Edward Mountain: I am very happy to take interventions. I failed to take one this evening from Ariane Burgess because I did not notice her request to intervene, for which I apologise now. However, I am happy to take interventions from anyone on this matter if they wish to intervene. I am looking at members now, but they are not prepared to make interventions. I will stick with my amendments, and I will press them.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The question is, that amendment 307 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: There will be a division.

The vote is closed.

The Minister for Parliamentary Business and Veterans (Graeme Dey): On a point of order, Presiding Officer. Apologies, but my app would not connect. I would have voted no.

The Presiding Officer: The result of the division is: For 52, Against 67, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 202 disagreed to.

Amendment 310 not moved.

After section 6

The Presiding Officer: Group 14 is on taxation and rates to be paid on land. Amendment 311, in the name of Ross Greer, is grouped with amendments 314 to 316.

Ross Greer (West Scotland) (Green): I will rattle through the amendments as quickly as I can. I want to start with the bill's policy memorandum, which says:

"In relation to taxation, the Scottish Government is giving careful consideration to these complex matters and intends to explore them more fully as part of its commitment to producing a longer-term tax strategy."

However, on page 34 of "Scotland's Tax Strategy: Building on our Tax Principles", under the heading "Tax as a lever to encourage positive behavioural change", it says:

"We are also taking forward work with the Scottish Land Commission to consider the role of taxation and fiscal interventions in supporting land reform and reducing greenhouse gas emissions from land."

In January 2022, the Scottish Land Commission advised ministers on land reform and taxation and made five recommendations. It has been almost 1,400 days since that advice was given, and it has been more than eight years since the Barclay review into non-domestic rates made specific and important recommendations on how tax can advance the land reform agenda. The Government simultaneously says that tax change is necessary for land reform and that the Land Reform (Scotland) Bill cannot have any tax changes in it. It has created mutually exclusive conditions for progress. We are waiting for advice that already exists and has sat gathering dust on the shelf for the best part of a decade.

At stage 2, I lodged amendments to deliver some of the Land Commission and Barclay recommendations, such as putting in place a proper valuation roll so that we can all see who owns Scotland's land and what it is worth and by ending some of the more ridiculous tax break schemes for large landowners. The Government rejected those amendments and kicked them into the long grass. It is no wonder that no one is really happy with the bill, because opportunity after opportunity has been wasted.

To turn to the specifics of what I propose, amendment 311 would impose a land and buildings transaction tax surcharge on the purchase of large landholdings. The Government will say that it is doing a review, and I look forward to the LBTT bill in the next parliamentary session delivering on that review, not repeating Barclay, when recommendations were not acted on. We need to see LBTT as a tool to deliver land reform. We can make it more progressive, not only through transaction value but in relation to socially harmful transactions, through which billionaires buy up vast estates.

Amendments 314 and 315 are intended to stop the ridiculous situation in which billionaires, barons and tax avoiders get tax breaks from the Scottish Government for their shooting estates. We basically subsidise aristocrats and the super-rich to shoot animals for fun through a tax scheme that is supposed to be for small businesses. The SNP says that it agrees that that needs to be stopped, but we have not seen any progress on it for years. Recognising that our valuation roll is imperfect and that many parcels of land that are enrolled for shootings include socially useful land, such as crofts, amendment 314 seeks to end that anomaly by mandating that crofts are enrolled separately.

Amendment 315 would then prohibit shootings from receiving non-domestic rates relief. The amendment is a blunt tool because my ideal outcome is for the Government to specifically exclude shooting estates from the small business bonus scheme, as it has already done for other land types, such as car parks and payday lenders. If the Government can confirm that it will finally commit to ending the ridiculous billionaire loophole, I will not need to move those amendments.

Amendment 316 seeks to finish the work that started in recent years on how vacant land and empty property are treated in the rates system. It would deliver a Barclay review recommendation that would allow councils to not only end relief but impose a surcharge for vacant and derelict land. We should not subsidise absentee landlords that sit on dilapidated buildings and blight our communities by land banking brownfield sites, which supermarkets are particularly guilty of doing in town centres. We should push for them to put that land and property to use or to sell it to someone else who will. It would be for councils to decide how to do that, but it would be an important behaviour change tool to incentivise putting unproductive, vacant and blighted land back on to the market and into productive use.

I move amendment 311.

Rhoda Grant: I lodged similar amendments at stage 2, although I recognise that taxation provisions should not sit within this bill; such provisions rightly sit within budget bills. That said, it is important that we explore and build consensus on all aspects of taxation and that we recognise that people hold their wealth in many different ways. We know that people use land to offset taxation as well as to invest. If land is to work in the public interest, we should expect the Government to consider how such wealth is captured through taxation, especially to avoid any perverse incentives that inflate the value of land.

Edward Mountain: The one thing on which I agree with Mr Greer is that I have no issue with openness about land ownership. I am very happy for people to hold their hands up and explain what land they hold.

My problem is that, in my mind, the matters that are raised in Mr Greer's amendments 311 and 314 to 316 were not properly debated at stage 1. As someone who sat on the committee that considered the bill, I think that it would have been much more helpful if those matters had been fully debated at the outset, but we did not have the benefit of doing that. I have always held the view that the lodging of amendments at stages 2 and 3 on matters that have not been considered by the committee brings into question how the committee system works. For those reasons alone, I will reject Mr Greer's amendments, because they have not been given the scrutiny that they should have been given at the committee stage, which is disrespectful to the Parliament.

Mairi Gougeon: As we have heard from Ross Greer, the amendments in this group cover a range of issues relating to tax. Such complex changes need to be properly considered and appraised prior to consideration in a bill. Changes to devolved tax legislation should be made in tax-specific legislation, supported by—in the case of land and buildings transaction tax—engagement with Revenue Scotland and the Scottish Fiscal Commission.

Tax policy changes are typically announced in the budget, in line with our framework for tax principles and tax strategy. Without proper consideration of such changes, there is the risk of significant unintended consequences. For example, amendment 314 could have a significant unintended consequence on crofts that are currently not rateable under the agricultural exemption from rating.

I am sympathetic to some of Ross Greer's arguments on non-domestic rates relief in relation to shootings. However, I cannot support amendment 315 due to the unintended consequences that it could have on individuals, family farms, crofts, community interest groups, charities and other groups, as well as on nature restoration and deer management. Those issues could not be addressed without further primary legislation.

However, I confirm that the Scottish Government is content to work with Ross Greer to explore how our reliefs, particularly small business bonus scheme relief, can be better targeted at ratepayers of shootings who should rightly be eligible for them, because I agree with him that shooting estates that are owned by offshore tax havens or by billionaires are not the intended target of such relief. The Cabinet Secretary for Finance and Local Government would be happy to consider the issue more closely in the upcoming budget discussions, with a view to making necessary changes to relief eligibility, provided that we can avoid unintended consequences.

Therefore, I ask members not to support the amendments in the group.

The Presiding Officer: I call Ross Greer to wind up the debate and to press or withdraw amendment 311.

Ross Greer: I thank Rhoda Grant for the points that she made. However, in part, they get to the issue that we have had with quite a few bills in the Parliament. We say that tax provisions sit not in X, Y or Z bill but in the budget bill. Although we can set rates and bands in the budget—as I mentioned, the proposed reform that I would like to see to the small business bonus scheme could be made through the budget—we cannot change tax legislation or the fundamentals of our tax system through the budget. We can make those changes through bills such as the one that we are debating today, which is why such amendments have been debated at stages 2 and 3.

I want to address Edward Mountain's point about such amendments being disrespectful to the Parliament. It was not up to me whether the committee took evidence on these issues at stage 1; it was up to the committee that Edward Mountain convenes. However, the Government consulted on them—an evidence base was sought and evidence was gathered—and they were debated at stage 2. What a committee does at stage 1 is a matter for that committee.

Edward Mountain: Will Mr Greer take an intervention?

Ross Greer: I am happy to take Mr Mountain's intervention, but I point out that he has lodged dozens and dozens of amendments to the bill at stage 3, so he is on thin ice when it comes to his point about being disrespectful to the Parliament.

Edward Mountain: I take exception to Mr Greer's final comment. I sat through the whole of stage 1 and in fact ensured that I was present and able to discuss the bill with the Government at stage 2 having just been released from hospital. I made sure that I was there for all those events. Not once during stage 1 did Mr Greer come to the committee to raise these points. It would have been respectful of him to turn up to the committee at stage 1 to raise them and I would be happy if all members did that at committee.

Ross Greer: Mr Mountain knows fine well that that is not how Parliament works. I turned up at stage 2, which is the appropriate stage for members who are not on a committee but who want to bring forward proposals regarding a bill.

I also point out to Mr Mountain that, when my party was in government and the initial Government consultation on what became this bill took place, we ensured that matters of taxation were included in that consultation. An evidence base was gathered and Parliament had the opportunity to debate it. All of that happened before this stage of the bill and I have brought back a select number of amendments because I believe that they merit further debate. Mr Mountain and I have had this debate a number of times before and I point out to him that it favours the Government far more than the Opposition when members' opportunity to lodge amendments is shut down at stage 3. I invite him to reflect on that.

I welcome the cabinet secretary's commitment to work with me on removing the outrageous and unjustifiable relief for, for example, shooting estates that are owned by billionaires living in tax havens. However, I say with respect that I have heard the Government make that commitment in principle a number of times before but have seen no action at all being taken as a result. I would like to take up the cabinet secretary's offer to me to work with her on that ahead of the budget in the coming weeks. On that basis, I will not press amendments 314 and 315 when we come to them, but I will press amendment 311 to a vote because I believe that it has merit.

The Presiding Officer: The question is, that amendment 311 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Presiding Officer: There will be a division.

The vote is closed.

Fulton MacGregor (Coatbridge and Chryston) (SNP): On a point of order, Presiding Officer. I could not get connected, but I would have voted no.

The Presiding Officer: Thank you, Mr MacGregor; we will ensure that that is recorded.

Ariane Burgess: Amendment 312 tidies up an amendment that I was grateful to have committee members support at stage 2, which gave land commissioners a duty to keep an overview of Scotland's growing natural capital market. Amendment 312 would update the functions of the Scottish land commissioners as set out in the Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2016 to clarify that they may carry out work on "the effects of natural capital markets in relation to other matters relating to land in Scotland."

That reflects the intention of my stage 2 amendment, which would have placed those functions specifically on the land and communities commissioner. Following discussions with the cabinet secretary, I am content that that work is more suitable for the broader body of the land commissioners.

I will support Michael Matheson's amendment 313, which will ensure that Scottish land commissioners consider recommendations about rural repopulation and the economic impact of the concentration of land ownership.

I move amendment 312.

Michael Matheson: Amendment 313 seeks to update the functions of the Scottish land commissioners. That is important not only because of the pressing land issues that we are facing but because the regulatory function of the SLC will expand under the bill. This is an opportunity to recognise the important role of the commissioners and ensure that their functions are up to date for the land issues that Scotland faces.

The updated functions include

“the relationship between scale and concentrations of land holdings and local economic development”

as well as

“the desirability of achieving a more diverse pattern of landownership comprising more landowners and different types of landowners”

and

“measures to prevent depopulation and support the repopulation of land and the sustainability of communities”.

I am grateful to Community Land Scotland for its assistance in drafting the amendment. I urge members to support amendment 313.

The Presiding Officer: I call Edward Mountain.

Edward Mountain: Sorry, Presiding Officer. I pushed my request-to-speak button but unpushed it when I heard the arguments that were put forward, which were persuasive. I did not think that I could add to them.

Mairi Gougeon: The amendments in this group reflect the important role that the Scottish Land Commission will continue to play in informing and supporting future land reform policy in Scotland. I agree with Ariane Burgess and Michael Matheson on the importance of highlighting the issues that are raised in their amendments as on-going parts of the work. That is why I am happy to support both amendments in the group, which will make more explicit the Scottish Land Commission's on-going role in considering the important issues that are central to land reform and on-going land use.

Ariane Burgess: I have nothing to add. I strongly urge members to support the amendments in the group. I press amendment 312.

The Presiding Officer: The question is, that amendment 312 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Presiding Officer: There will be a division.

On resuming—

The Deputy Presiding Officer (Liam McArthur): Group 16 is on muirburn. Amendment 204, in the name of Tim Eagle, is grouped with amendments 205 and 206.

Tim Eagle: The risk of wildfire in Scotland is rising. Over the past decade, at least 1,500 wildfires have been recorded. Last month, the Scottish Fire and Rescue Service issued an extreme risk of wildfire warning—the first alert of its kind since 2020—reflecting the exceptional conditions across Scotland this year.

Muirburn—the controlled burning of vegetation—is important in the process of limiting wildfire by removing combustible materials, primarily heather. It is carried out by people with significant experience—estates, gamekeepers and land managers. However, in 2024, the Scottish Parliament passed the Wildlife Management and Muirburn (Scotland) Act 2024, which will prevent anyone from making muirburn on land without first obtaining a licence. After two delays due to stakeholder concern, the licensing scheme is due to come into force at some point next year. The effect might be that fewer people are able to make muirburn, or that people will stop making it altogether, curtailing the obviously necessary work to prevent the devastating events that took place at Carrbridge and Dava in the Cairngorms this year from taking place again.

In my opinion, licensing will only make it harder for skilled and deeply experienced land managers to carry out preventative muirburn. Combustible fuel loads will increase and we could lose people in the industry who played such a vital role in containing the recent fires. Please believe me when I say that we have decades, if not hundreds of years, of experience in the intricacies of moorlands in Scotland among the people living in our rural communities. We risk losing generations of knowledge that has been passed down.

For those reasons, my amendment 204 would repeal the muirburn licensing scheme, removing it from the 2024 act. That would ensure that effective wildfire prevention is not curtailed by overbearing licensing conditions.

Although it would be preferable for the scheme to be repealed in its entirety, my amendment 205 seeks to find common ground between those seeking to keep some sort of licence in place and those concerned that the licence could result in wildfires increasing. The amendment seeks to remove one of the conditions on muirburn licensing. Currently, the 2024 act sets out the specific conditions in which a muirburn licence may be granted. If the land to which the application relates is peatland, the act requires it to be proven that

“the making of muirburn is necessary for the specified purpose”

“no other method of vegetation control is practicable.”

Amendment 205 deletes the specific requirements for peatland, as it has proved unworkable in practice.

I will briefly touch on Ariane Burgess's amendment 206. I am concerned that it will alter the definition of peatland in the 2024 act to cover that which is 30cm thick and above. The current definition is 40cm thick and above. That would potentially bring more land under the specific scrutiny and restrictions on muirburn licensing relating to peatland. At this time, when Scotland faces such a risk from wildfire, I believe that it would be irresponsible to widen the definition and potentially restrict necessary preventative muirburn on a wider scale than is already envisioned, so I will not support that amendment.

I move amendment 204.

Ariane Burgess: Amendment 206 seeks to make a technical change to muirburn provisions in the Wildlife Management and Muirburn (Scotland) Act 2024, which was passed by Parliament last year. It set a definition of peatland for the purposes of requiring a licence to practise muirburn.

The definition was one of the most contested parts of the bill, but the Parliament agreed to amend the definition of "peatland" from land with a peat soil layer of at least 50cm down to one with a layer of at least 40cm. Many environmental stakeholders felt that the definition should be even lower, at 30cm. We heard compelling evidence from scientists with the International Union for Conservation of Nature's peatland programme about the fragility of shallow peat soils. Indeed, Scottish Greens would prefer to see the practice of muirburn banned entirely, with all peat soils protected from the effects of burning.

Just a few weeks ago, Natural England, in setting its own muirburn licensing scheme, set a lower definition of 30cm. That means that a greater range of peatlands will be protected in England than in Scotland. With the minister having delayed the introduction of Scotland's licensing scheme for another year just weeks ago, there is now sufficient time to amend the legislation and guidance ahead of the autumn 2026 muirburn season. My amendment 206 would bring the Scottish muirburn licensing scheme in line with that of England and increase the extent of peatland in Scotland that is protected from muirburn without a licence.

Mercedes Villalba: Scottish Labour supports amendment 206, which would update the definition of "peatland" in the Wildlife Management and Muirburn (Scotland) Act 2024. We have repeatedly raised the issue throughout the parliamentary session, and we see no reason why that cannot be done today. If the Scottish Government is not able to support this reasonable amendment, we will expect to hear why, as well as how the issue will be addressed—perhaps through the Natural Environment (Scotland) Bill, for example.

Mairi Gougeon: Before I address the individual amendments in the group, I want to address the muirburn licensing scheme that the Parliament agreed to as part of the Wildlife Management and Muirburn (Scotland) Act 2024. I fully understand the concern among practitioners about muirburn, especially in the context of this year's wildfires, which is why the Scottish Government announced a delay to the licensing scheme until the start of the next season in autumn 2026. Doing so gives us more time to carefully consider how the necessary changes to licensing can be introduced in a way that will not adversely affect our ability to prevent and respond to wildfires.

We remain committed to ensuring that muirburn is carried out appropriately, safely and in a manner that ensures that our environment does not suffer as a result. That is why I cannot support Tim Eagle's amendment 204 to repeal the muirburn licensing scheme in its entirety. Stakeholders see the benefit from the increased training, professionalism and regulatory oversight that the legislation provides for those who undertake muirburn. I therefore recommend that members oppose amendment 204 as well as amendment 205.

On Ariane Burgess's amendment 206, the depth of 40cm was agreed to by the Parliament during the passage of the 2024 act. It can be changed, if appropriate, by using regulations, so primary legislation is neither required nor appropriate. Many stakeholders have already completed peatland surveying work to 40cm, so the amendment also has the potential to undo all that hard work. Further, the increasing risk of wildfire requires that any change to the definition of "peatland" would need proper consideration and assessment to ensure that it did not have the opposite effect of its intention to protect peatlands. I therefore ask members to oppose amendment 206.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: I call Tim Eagle to wind up and to press or withdraw amendment 204.

Tim Eagle: I press amendment 204. I have nothing further to add.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The question is, that amendment 204 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: There will be a division. Members should cast their votes now.

The vote is closed.

Bob Doris (Glasgow Maryhill and Springburn) (SNP): On a point of order, Presiding Officer. I was logged out of the system; I would have voted no.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Thank you, Mr Doris. I will ensure that that is recorded.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The result of the division is: For 27, Against 91, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 206 disagreed to.

Amendment 207 not moved.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Group 17 is on private purpose trusts. Amendment 208, in the name of Rhoda Grant, is the only amendment in the group.

Rhoda Grant: Amendment 208 will improve the transparency of land ownership in Scotland. It seeks to modify the Trusts and Succession (Scotland) Act 2024 to target private purpose trusts.

One in five properties owned through offshore companies do not disclose publicly who owns them. That represents £3.2 billion for 670 properties in Scotland. Of those, £1.2 billion-worth of properties are controlled by complex trust arrangements to keep their owners' identities secret. Those trusts can be used to obscure those who ultimately benefit from land or property in Scotland. It can be a bit like a Russian doll, with a set of layers hiding the ultimate owner.

The Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2016 introduced the register of controlled interests in land, which launched in 2022. However, that register does not require registration of beneficiaries as a matter of course. As the law stands, private purpose trusts could effectively hide land ownership for the purpose of the register of controlled interests in land unless the provisions in the Trusts and Succession (Scotland) Act 2024 are amended so that private purpose trusts cannot be used to conceal beneficial owners.

That is the policy intent behind amendment 208, and I urge the cabinet secretary to support it—or failing that, to give a commitment to bring forward legislation to tackle the matter, not only in the context of land reform but throughout wider society.

Mairi Gougeon: I was grateful to meet Rhoda Grant to discuss amendment 208, which would remove trust property that is land from the definition of a private purpose trust.

However, as drafted, the amendment would not have the intended effect, because such trusts could continue to exist and still be set up anew under Scots law. Amendment 208 would therefore have no effect on existing trusts of that nature, and it would not prevent new trusts of that nature from being established.

This Government views it as essential that we have in place the highest anti-corruption standards, and that includes information about beneficial ownership. That is why we have committed to looking closely at private purpose trusts as part of an anti-corruption strategy in our next open government action plan. That plan will take a wide-ranging approach and will look at private purpose trusts in all contexts and not just in relation to land ownership. I hope that the commitment to comprehensively address the issue offers the necessary reassurance. Ministers have been clear that decisions about that part of the 2024 act will, rightly, be made only after that work has been completed. For those reasons, I ask Rhoda Grant not to press her amendment 208.

Rhoda Grant: Given the cabinet secretary's assurances, I will not press amendment 208.

Amendment 208, by agreement, withdrawn.

Amendments 314 and 315 not moved.

Amendment 316 moved—[Ross Greer].

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The result of the division is: For 9, Against 88, Abstentions 20.

Amendment 316 disagreed to.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Group 18 is on the licensing of land on which certain birds may be killed or taken. Amendment 317, in the name of Mark Ruskell, is in a group on its own.

Mark Ruskell: Eighteen months ago, Parliament passed the Wildlife Management and Muirburn (Scotland) Act 2024, which introduced a licensing scheme for shooting red grouse in Scotland. The policy intent of that legislation was for the whole area of an estate to be included in the licence, given that gamekeepers are normally employed to undertake predator control over the entire estate.

A loophole in the legislation is allowing grouse moor managers to specify a specific part of an estate to which the licence is to apply—essentially, the grouse moor itself rather than the surrounding land of the estate. That is concerning, given that incidents of raptor persecution often occur outside of the grouse moor.

I simply reflect on the fact that, since the bill was passed, we have seen continued raptor persecution happening across Scotland. That is deeply concerning, and we need to get to grips with it. For example, the nest sites of some birds, such as buzzards and goshawks, are usually found off the grouse moor area, and those nests can be a target for those who want to persecute the birds. Amendment 317 seeks to close that unintended loophole, clarifying that a grouse moor licence would cover an entire landholding, thus keeping the licensing scheme in line with the intention of Parliament.

Because of those concerns, NatureScot has attempted to plug the loophole with a new licence condition, but it is considered by many to be unworkable. That condition requires that, where a raptor persecution offence occurs away from the specified licensed grouse moor area, there needs to be evidence to link it to the management of the grouse moor for any consideration of a sanction to take place. The bodies that are experienced in the investigation of such offences agree that obtaining evidence of a link, even with a civil burden of proof, will be virtually impossible in most cases. The new condition also does not allow consideration of other “relevant offences”, such as those relating to badgers or animal welfare.

Nevertheless, the fact that NatureScot sought to plug the loophole with a condition confirms the original intention of the Scottish Government to include the whole estate in the grouse shooting licence and to apply the full agreed list of offences.

I lodged a similar amendment at stage 2. I have reflected on the comments that were made then, as well as on the points that were raised by a range of stakeholders. I have made technical changes to the drafting to take account of those cases where a grouse moor is managed by a sporting agent and of the definition of “contiguous land”.

I note that the minister has recently written to the Rural Affairs and Islands Committee to confirm that the Government’s intention is to fix that issue, not in the Land Reform (Scotland) Bill, but in the Natural Environment (Scotland) Bill, which we will be considering in just a few weeks’ time—lucky us. On the basis of that, and of what I hope will be an explicit commitment by the Government tonight to address the issues that amendment 317 raises and take that forward in stage 2 consideration of the Natural Environment (Scotland) Bill, I will not press amendment 317. However, I consider this to be a campaign and a mission in parts, and I look forward to these issues being brought back to the Rural Affairs and Islands Committee in a few weeks’ time.

I move amendment 317.

Tim Eagle: It is good to hear that Mark Ruskell will not press amendment 317, and I look forward to the debate on the Natural Environment (Scotland) Bill. However, it is not a “loophole”, and that is a really unfair comment.

With the greatest respect to Mark Ruskell, amendment 317 falls into the ideological trap of assuming the worst of landowners, who in so many cases are active parts of their community and want to follow the rules as laid out in the Wildlife Management and Muirburn (Scotland) Act 2024.

Amendment 317 would widen the land area that is covered by section 16AA licences, which regulate red grouse shooting. It is worth noting that many recognise that grouse shooting provides important economic, cultural and environmental benefits in rural Scotland. There is absolutely no evidence to support claims that landowners are exploiting a loophole by licensing only small areas, as the member is asserting. NatureScot has reported no raptor persecution linked to grouse moors that has required intervention, yet Mark Ruskell has just stood up and said that there is such persecution, so I do not know what to believe.

Ministers have confirmed that no licences have been issued that cover only narrow strips of land, such as around grouse butts.

Mark Ruskell: I simply point out to Tim Eagle that we have seen continued raptor persecution. Landowners who are law abiding have absolutely nothing to fear from a licensing scheme—nothing at all.

However, I point out to Tim Eagle that we have already seen a peregrine and an osprey found shot in the Angus glens last autumn and a red kite in Strathdon earlier this year. Open your eyes, Mr Eagle, to what is actually happening.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Speak through the chair, Mr Ruskell.

Tim Eagle: My point is not that there are not problems—there are wider problems in Scotland—but that NatureScot has confirmed that there is no raptor persecution linked to grouse moors, yet the Greens are trying to expand the licensing scheme in a way that is completely unnecessary.

Official documents in respect of the Wildlife Management and Muirburn (Scotland) Act 2024 make clear that licences apply to land where grouse are actually taken or killed, not whole estates. That was not challenged during the bill’s passage. NatureScot already has powers to include licence conditions to address offences that happen outside licence areas, which provides flexibility without changing primary legislation.

In my view, amendment 317 makes an assumption that is unfair and not based on evidence. I look forward to debating it during consideration of the Natural Environment (Scotland) Bill.

Mairi Gougeon: As I set out at stage 2, I understand the concerns that Mark Ruskell has highlighted, and we engaged in discussion around that at the time. As Mark Ruskell also highlighted, NatureScot has implemented an additional condition on all grouse licences to try to resolve the concerns that amendment 317 seeks to address. However, the condition does not include the full list of relevant offences and relies on licensing conditions, as opposed to express provision in the primary legislation.

As has been raised already tonight, the Minister for Agriculture and Connectivity confirmed in a letter to the convener of the Rural Affairs and Islands Committee last week that he will lodge an amendment at stage 2 of the Natural Environment (Scotland) Bill to address the uncertainty surrounding the interpretation of the licensing provision. That will ensure that the licensing scheme operates in the manner that I think that members intended when they voted to pass the Wildlife Management and Muirburn (Scotland) Act 2024. Lodging that amendment at stage 2 of the Natural Environment (Scotland) Bill will allow the amendment to be scrutinised and debated alongside other wildlife management legislation, so I recommend that members oppose amendment 317, although I appreciate that Mark Ruskell has said that he does not intend to press it.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: I call Mark Ruskell to wind up and to press or withdraw amendment 317.

Mark Ruskell: I do not have anything to add. I look forward to the debate to come. I will not press the amendment.

Amendment 317 withdrawn.

Amendment 318 moved—[Douglas Lumsden].

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The question is, that amendment 318 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: There will be a division.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The result of the division is: For 46, Against 71, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 319 disagreed to.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Group 19 is on moorlands. Amendment 320, in the name of Rachael Hamilton, is the only amendment in the group. Edward Mountain will speak to and move the amendment.

Edward Mountain: Ms Hamilton has asked me to move amendment 320 on her behalf.

Amendment 320 would require the Scottish ministers to produce a report on moorlands, including what proportion of land in Scotland is moorland; the rate of moorland habitat loss, broken down by region; and the land uses that are replacing moorland. It is a consequence of the proposed changes in the bill.

The amendment is drawn from a study that was produced by the Heather Trust, which found that, overall, heather moorland the size of Birmingham is lost every year in the United Kingdom. Research showed that 60,000km² of moorland in Scotland were lost between 1990 and 2023, in comparison with just over 600km² during the same period in England. It also highlighted that moorland is being replaced by grassland and woodland—particularly by woodland in Scotland—and that there is likely to be added pressure on moorland and habitat loss from the further expansion of more woodland in the future, and land reform.

Critically, the report found that there is a lack of data and a limitation in the data on what is replacing moorland, which is what amendment 320 hopes to address.

I move amendment 320.

Mairi Gougeon: I will start by setting out that I appreciate the importance of moorlands. The restoration and regeneration of Scotland's ecosystems, including but not limited to moorland, is at the heart of the Scottish biodiversity strategy.

However, as drafted, amendment 320 is not practicable: its terms are not well defined, and that sort of work should be considered in the round with other biodiversity and land use workstreams. It is also not helpful for moorlands to be considered in isolation from other ecosystems, and the requirements in the amendment are too prescriptive.

I therefore encourage members not to support amendment 320.

Edward Mountain: I thank the cabinet secretary for that. Amendment 320 is specific enough. It clearly refers to “what proportion of land in Scotland is moorland”.

That is a straightforward question. A quick survey would find that out. It is also possible to find out

“the rate of moorland habitat loss, broken down by region”.

The cabinet secretary has talked about people doing a survey of peatlands. Surely, we can also survey

“the land uses that are replacing moorland”—

we do that in the agricultural census in most years—and

“the consequences of moorlands being replaced with other land uses.”

I believe that it is possible to do it. It may add another burden on the Government, which it may not want to agree to, but I do not see why the amendment is not specific enough or detailed enough to enable such a vital record to be kept.

I press amendment 320.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The question is, that amendment 320 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: There will be a division.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The result of the division is: For 24, Against 91, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 322 disagreed to.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: We move to group 20. Amendment 323, in the name of Ariane Burgess, is the only amendment in the group.

Ariane Burgess: Amendment 323 brings back a proposal that I brought at stage 2 to make it easier to lease public land for the purpose of creating hutting communities. I thank the Scottish Rewilding Alliance for its support in developing my amendment.

The hutting movement in Scotland involves the creation of small, off-grid huts in the countryside. These low-impact, informal dwellings are important in giving more people the opportunity to live closer to nature and to spend time on our land. They provide a base for outdoor activity, enable a closer connection to the environment, encourage the development of new skills and provide a platform for the creation of cohesive communities. Many members will be aware of the Carbeth hutters community, whose land has been in community ownership since 2013.

The vast majority of hutters have a keen interest in their hut's surroundings and can enter into management agreements, such as woodland management agreements, with public bodies and can take part in the low-impact management of woodland that might not otherwise be commercially viable. There can also be opportunities to contribute to citizen science data collection on local ecology.

Amendment 323 would require the Government to publish a model lease for hutting. No Government-endorsed model lease currently exists for public bodies that are seeking to create plots of land for hutting, although a lease has been trialled in Carnock, in south-west Fife, to enable a group of hutters to build 12 huts on the national forest estate, which could form the basis of a model lease agreement to be used by other public bodies. I encourage members to support my amendment 323, so that more people across Scotland will be able to benefit from the opportunity of leasing public land to establish new hutting communities.

I move amendment 323.

Edward Mountain: There is much that I agree with in what Ariane Burgess says about living closer to nature, getting to know our surroundings and becoming one with the environment. Those are things that I would always try to promote.

However, my problem with the proposed lease is that there is no definition of how it can be achieved in planning law. I am not sure how hutting fits in with local planning legislation on zoning and proliferation without control. To me, it is slightly dangerous, and I would be happy if the member could set my mind at rest on how it would fit in with local planning controls—otherwise, huts could be established in many locations with little or no knowledge of them. I would be happy for the member to make an intervention on that, but perhaps the cabinet secretary will have more details. I would be very happy to listen to them.

Mairi Gougeon: I hope that I can address some of the member's concerns. I absolutely share Ariane Burgess's aspirations for that kind of land use. Like a but and ben, hutting aims to get people closer to nature, with all the social and health benefits that follow from that. The lease would allow huts to be used for recreation or for occasional occupation.

I recognise some of the points that Edward Mountain made in his comments, but planning guidance on hutting has been produced by Stirling Council, and I hope that other councils will follow suit. Good practice guidance on the planning, development and management of huts was produced previously with input from the Scottish Government's planning and architecture division. We can build on that work to deliver a model lease for hutting on public land.

I am happy to support Ariane Burgess's amendment, because it will help to make hutting more accessible for communities right across Scotland. I ask members across the chamber to support it.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: I call Ariane Burgess to wind up and to press or withdraw amendment 323.

Ariane Burgess: I have nothing much to add. I would point out that the amendment is focused specifically on public land, just as my other amendments on community energy were about public land. It is about giving communities an opportunity based on our public land—it will not happen all over the place. It will happen in a specific way, and it will build on the work that has been done, as the cabinet secretary pointed out. I press amendment 323.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The question is, that amendment 323 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: There will be a division.

Amendment 323 agreed to.

Section 9—Extension of Tenant Farming Commissioner’s functions

The Deputy Presiding Officer (Annabelle Ewing): Group 21 is on small landholdings. Amendment 209, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is grouped with amendments 210 to 212 and 367 to 391.

Mairi Gougeon: The amendments in this group build on the modernisation and consolidation of the landholders acts and ensure that small landholders will benefit from a modern legal framework that is fit for the 21st century. Frankly, I was astonished last week at Edward Mountain’s comments that the Government has “failed to grasp the nettle effectively”

and that it has parked small landholdings

“on the back burner”.—[Official Report, 28 October 2025; c 54.]

It is important to get on record that this is the only Government to introduce significant modernisations for small landholders in nearly a century.

Amendments 377, 388 and 391 modernise the process for a small landholder and their landlord to resolve disputes in ways other than being required to go to the land court. The process generally mirrors the one that exists for tenant farmers and their landlords, which enables them to access alternative forms of dispute resolution such as arbitration. The alternatives can, in some scenarios, resolve disputes more flexibly and at less cost than going to the land court.

Amendments 210 and 212 ensure that the tenant farming commissioner's codes of practice and reports into alleged breaches of the codes are appropriately taken into account when parties use arbitration to resolve disputes.

Amendment 369 relates to smallholders' security of tenure and clarifies that a lease of a small landholding cannot be for a fixed duration and can come to an end only in certain circumstances, which are set out in the schedule.

Amendments 370 and 372 remove the reference to holiday lets, which ensures consistency with the regulation of short-term lets in Scotland.

Amendment 390 expands the land court's jurisdiction, which currently includes matters under the small landholders acts of 1886 to 1931, to include matters under the schedule.

Amendments 209 and 371 make minor technical drafting changes.

My other amendments—amendments 367, 368, 378 to 387 and 389—relate to the small landholders acts, which are being replaced by modernised provisions in the schedule, except where the provisions need to be kept in force. They also make other consequential changes.

The amendments also modify the retained provisions on statutory small tenancies, including by applying the modernised provisions in the schedule where relevant and amending the two existing routes for a statutory small tenant to become a small landholder to ensure that they operate alongside the schedule.

I have been pleased to work with Tim Eagle following stage 2 on amendments 373 to 376. The amendments modify the consultation requirements that are placed on ministers before they exercise certain delegated powers under the schedule, which reflects my commitment to working positively with stakeholders.

I move amendment 209.

Tim Eagle: At stage 2, I lodged amendments to change the consultation requirements for Scottish ministers when they exercise various powers in the schedule. I have worked with the cabinet secretary, for which I am very grateful, on the topic ahead of stage 3.

I have lodged amendments 373 to 376, which would modify existing requirements or introduce new ones for Scottish ministers. Amendments 373 to 375 would expressly require Scottish ministers to consult persons whom they consider appropriate before laying draft regulations under certain powers that are set out in paragraphs 40, 49 and 50 of the schedule.

Amendment 376 would amend the current list of people that ministers are required to consult before laying draft regulations under subparagraph 59(1) of the schedule. That power allows ministers to make regulations in relation to a small landholder registering their interest in buying their holding.

Edward Mountain: I, too, welcome some of the amendments in the group. I only observe that the amendments at stage 2 and stage 3 mean that we are probably at the level of four amendments for every smallholding in Scotland, which seems an awful lot of amendments given that the original suggestion was to include them in the rest of the agricultural holdings legislation.

Amendment 209 agreed to.

Amendments 210 to 212 moved—[Mairi Gougeon].

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Does any member object to a single question being put on amendments 210 to 212?

Members: Yes.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Therefore, I will put the question on each amendment separately.

The question is, that amendment 210 be agreed to.

Amendment 210 agreed to.

20:15

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The question is, that amendment 211 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: There will be a division.

Amendment 212 agreed to.

After section 9

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Group 22 is on tenant farmer advisory forum. Amendment 213 is the only amendment in the group.

Rhoda Grant: Amendment 213 would give the tenant farming commissioner the power to establish a tenant farming advisory forum. The tenant farming advisory forum that sits currently is not underpinned by legislation, nor does it provide tenant farmers with fair representation. The bulk of the membership is representative of the interests of landowners rather than those of tenants.

The forum is chaired by the tenant farming commissioner and attended by the following stakeholders: the Scottish Agricultural Arbiters & Valuers Association; the Royal Institute of Chartered Surveyors; the Agricultural Law Association; Scottish Land & Estates; NFU Scotland; and the Scottish Tenant Farmers Association. The professional bodies have been represented by land agents and solicitors with strong commercial ties to their landlord clients, and on some occasions they have been represented by former board members of Scottish Land & Estates.

Such a strong landlord bias is not constructive to the forum's aims, given the ability of the majority to stifle debate and delay progress. In recent years, many important issues that have been discussed at the tenant farming advisory forum, including improving the process for tenants to register their pre-emptive right to buy and dealing with deer damage compensation for hill farmers, have been left unresolved.

Amendment 213 seeks to put the forum on a legislative footing and ensure that organisations that support the bill's aims, and more progressive land ownership in Scotland, are more fairly represented. Vested interests are a dead hand on the forum, and I therefore urge members to support the amendment.

I move amendment 213.

Mairi Gougeon: I agree with the sentiment behind Rhoda Grant's amendment 213 and the need for a more balanced TFAF membership to ensure that the interests of tenant farmers are properly balanced with those of landlords. TFAF has a really important role to play in supporting the tenant farming sector. As we go forward, its role needs to adapt to ensure that more voices are heard from across the tenanted sector.

Before legislating on the matter, it is important for the Scottish Parliament to enable time for a proper review. That will give the new tenant farming commissioner time to bring forward changes to the way in which TFAF operates. However, make no mistake—if significant progress cannot be achieved through changing the current ways of working, the Scottish ministers will explore whether more fundamental changes to the status and operation of the forum are needed. I highlight that we would not need primary legislation to do that, because ministers already have a power to modify, through regulations, the functions of the tenant farming commissioner.

For all those reasons, I ask members not to support amendment 213.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: I call Rhoda Grant to wind up the debate and to press or withdraw amendment 213.

Rhoda Grant: Given the reassurances that the cabinet secretary has given, I will not press amendment 213.

Amendment 213, by agreement, withdrawn.

Before section 10

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Group 23 is on changes to agricultural tenancies. Amendment 90, in the name of Edward Mountain, is grouped with amendments 91 to 95, 97, 98, 100 to 104 and 106 to 112.

Edward Mountain: I remind members—I want to make this point clear—that I am a tenant under the Agricultural Holdings (Scotland) Act 1991 and that I am an agricultural tenant under a non-agricultural lease that is now covered by the 1991 act, the Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2003 and the Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2016.

I support tenancies. It has always been my intention in the Parliament and in my practice as a private surveyor to increase the number of tenancies in Scotland. I believe that agricultural tenancies in Scotland are the way forward. That is certainly the case in relation to people who, when they retire from being farmers, might look for tenants to take on the role of farming until their children return to carry on the farming. [Interruption.] I am sorry—is someone wanting to intervene? Oh, I apologise for drawing attention to that noise—I misheard.

I want to encourage tenancies across Scotland, and I would like there to be more tenants.

My amendments in this group all relate to retrospective changes to agricultural tenancies, with which I fundamentally disagree. Amendment 90 would mandate that the respective changes to the legislation would not apply to agricultural tenancies in which the agricultural lease was entered into before the day the bill gains royal assent, stating that would not be applicable to the tenancy.

Amendments 91 to 95, 97, 98, 100 to 104 and 106 to 112 would remove sections of the bill that make retrospective changes to tenancies. As I have explained, I fundamentally disagree with such changes.

Let us be clear: land letting to tenants is declining in Scotland. Very few landlords are prepared to offer agricultural tenancies at the moment, because they are terrified of the retrospective changes that the bill will introduce. In 2000, there were more than 19,000 holdings with rented land in Scotland, but that figure had declined to 13,738 in 2024. That represents a reduction of 29 per cent. In 2000, there were nearly 1.8 million hectares of rented land in Scotland, but, again, that figure had declined to 1.3 million in 2024. That represents a 27 per cent loss of land in agricultural tenancies, or half a million hectares. That is significant. A 29 per cent decrease in rented holdings and a 27 per cent reduction in hectareage must not be ignored.

The cabinet secretary and the Government must take ownership of the fact that retrospective changes to agricultural legislation such as this bill are undermining confidence in the tenant farming sector, which is wrong. Furthermore, during the meeting of the Net Zero, Energy and Transport Committee on 17 December 2024, I asked four witnesses—Hamish Lean, Martin Hall, Tom Oates and Andrew Wood—whether the bill would encourage more tenants into agriculture and increase the tenanted farm sector. All four of them said no.

The last land reform bill was passed in 2016. It was defective, and the cabinet secretary at the time, Richard Lochhead, forced the ending of various tenancies because of the way in which the legislation was enacted. That resulted in the famous Salvesen v Riddell case, which was the tip of the iceberg, with tenants with agricultural leases being forced off the land. That has cost the Government a huge and yet undisclosed amount of money, all because of unwise and retrospective changes to legislation. In my opinion, if the Government learns anything from that, it should be that it should not make retrospective changes, which is why I move the amendment in my name.

I move amendment 90.

Mairi Gougeon: Before I comment on the detail of Edward Mountain's amendments, I have to say that I am astounded at the position in which he appears to want to place the tenant farming sector. These changes, the majority of which have been driven by tenant farming stakeholders, are needed to enable tenant farmers to engage in the agricultural reform programme.

Mr Mountain's amendments 91 to 95, 97, 98, 100 to 104 and 106 to 112 would remove much of the package of important changes in chapter 3 of part 2 of the bill and significantly limit the benefits to the tenant farming sector. If those amendments were agreed to, only sections 10, 19 to 22, 26 and 27 would remain in chapter 3. I therefore strongly urge members to reject the amendments.

Finally, the intention behind amendment 90 is for the changes to apply only to agricultural tenancies that are entered into after the bill receives royal assent. I cannot support that approach. I consider that it would undermine the effectiveness of the reforms, be unworkable as drafted and mean that any current tenant farmers would not benefit from these essential changes. In particular, given that few secure Agricultural Holdings (Scotland) Act 1991 tenancies are now entered into, the majority of our tenant farmers who are secure 1991 act tenants would be left behind.

The reforms are essential if tenants are to make a decent living on their holding, improve the land that they work and work in a way that promotes sustainable and regenerative agricultural production. It is important that all tenant farmers and their landlords benefit from the range of important measures in the bill. For those reasons, I urge members across all parties to oppose the amendments in the group.

Edward Mountain: I am disappointed to hear the words of the cabinet secretary. I am a tenant under a 1991 act tenancy, and I agreed to the terms thereof. That is what I signed up to; that is what I was prepared to commit to; and I am happy with those agreements. I have a very good working relationship with my landlord.

As far as the other tenancies provisions are concerned, I do not want to stop the market, but my feeling is that the cabinet secretary, by making these changes, is certainly going to stymie it. I have given the cabinet secretary the evidence of what has happened in the past few years, which is all due to retrospective changes to the law. It is rather like going off and agreeing with somebody a contract to do something and then for the person providing the goods for the contract to be told that somebody can come along and change it. That happens in no other business; it is actually bad for business, and in this case it stops tenants getting on to the land.

I do not accept the arguments that the cabinet secretary has made. I want to create a vibrant sector, which I think will be achieved only when we stop fiddling with the legislation that has already been passed.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Mr Mountain, can you clarify whether you are pressing or withdrawing amendment 90?

Edward Mountain: I am pressing it.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Thank you. The question is, that amendment 90 be agreed to. Are we all agreed?

Members: No.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: There will be a division.

The vote is closed.

Ben Macpherson: On a point of order, Presiding Officer. My vote did not register. I would have voted no.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Thank you, Mr Macpherson. Your vote will be recorded.

Amendment 90 disagreed to.

Section 10—Registration of interest and right to buy

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Group 24 is on agricultural holdings: right to buy. Amendment 324, in the name of Tim Eagle, is grouped with amendments 325 to 327 and 214.

Tim Eagle: Amendments 324 to 327 seek to place consultation requirements on the Scottish ministers when exercising certain powers to make secondary legislation in connection with the pre-emptive right-to-buy process for 1991 act tenancies. They seek to make equivalent changes to the amendments in my name in group 21 in relation to the pre-emptive right-to-buy process for small landholdings.

Amendments 324 to 326 will expressly require the Scottish ministers to consult persons who they consider to be appropriate before laying an order under two powers in the Agricultural Holdings (Scotland) Act 2003: the power in section 27(5), which enables ministers to modify the list of transfers that do not require notice to be given to a tenant with a registered right to buy; and the power in section 28(5), which enables ministers to modify what amounts to an owner or creditor taking actions with a view to the transfer of land for the purposes of triggering a tenant's right to buy.

Amendment 327 seeks to amend the list of people who ministers are required to consult before laying draft regulations under the power that enables ministers to make regulations in relation to the process for a tenant to register their interest in buying their holding. The amendment will expand the list of consultees to include those who represent the interests of 1991 act tenants and their landlords.

Amendments 324 to 327 will ensure that ministers will engage with stakeholders prior to exercising those powers, and I ask members to support them. I look forward to hearing the reasoning behind the cabinet secretary's amendment 214.

I move amendment 324.

Mairi Gougeon: On the amendments in the name of Tim Eagle, as a matter of course, we consult interested stakeholders before making regulations. However, I said at stage 2 that I would work with Tim Eagle on amendments to address his specific concerns about engagement before any right-to-buy regulations are made. Therefore, I am happy to support his amendments in this group. As part of the consultation process, my officials will offer individuals and businesses the option to opt in to being notified when such consultations are starting.

My amendment 214 clarifies that instruments that are made under sections 25(3) and 25(7) of the 2003 act will be subject to the negative procedure. That is appropriate, given that those sections provide for fees that are chargeable by the keeper and prescription of forms of notice.

I ask members to support all the amendments in the group.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: I invite Tim Eagle to wind up and to press or withdraw amendment 324.

Tim Eagle: I have no more to add. I press the amendment.

Amendment 324 agreed to.

Amendments 325 to 327 moved—[Tim Eagle]—and agreed to.

Amendment 214 moved—[Mairi Gougeon].

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The question is, that amendment 214 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The result of the division is: For 26, Against 90, Abstentions 0.

Amendments 91 to 94 disagreed to.

Section 11—Resumption in relation to 1991 Act tenancies

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Group 25 is on resumption and termination. Amendment 328, in the name of Tim Eagle, is grouped with amendments 329 to 336, 215, 216, 337, 338, 217 to 219, 339 to 344, 96, 345 to 347 and 363 to 365. If amendment 338 is agreed to, I cannot call amendments 217 to 219, because of pre-emption.

Tim Eagle: My amendments in group 25 look to make improvements to the process of resumption and tackle some of the deficiencies that I see in section 11. Amendment 328 would insert timeframes that note when a notice of resumption needs to be given, which would give clarity and sufficient time for the tenant to be able to organise themselves. That would make the process fairer for both parties and less ambiguous.

Amendment 329 would remove the ability for a tenant to terminate their tenancy if they receive a notice of resumption within six weeks. That would add fairness to the legislation and would avoid landowners suffering due to a quick termination of a tenancy. Amendment 330 is consequential to amendment 329.

The bill allows for tenants to be paid compensation following resumption in addition to existing additional payments. My amendment 331 would delete the ability to receive compensation in addition to an already achieved additional payment.

My amendments 332, 333, 335 to 337, 339 and 342 to 344 would make minor drafting or wording changes.

The bill notes that an independent adviser with knowledge of land valuation will be appointed to value the land. That person should be able to value agricultural land. Amendment would 334 delete that and instead requires them to be able to value the “tenant’s interest in a lease of agricultural land”.

Amendment 338 would delete the existing functions of the valuer and instead require them and that a tenant is left no better and no worse off than if the resumption not taken place.

“to ensure that compensation is fair”

Amendment 340 would amend the part dealing with the amount payable by landlord to tenant. It deletes a part and highlights how the tenant’s interest in the resumed part of the lease is to be assessed. The bill valuer is to serve a notice on relevant parties specifying certain matters during resumption. Amendment 341 would delete some matters that need to be included in that.

In the interest of brevity, I will simply say that I am content to support the cabinet secretary’s amendments and my colleague Edward Mountain’s amendments in group 25. However, I do not support Emma Harper’s amendment 347, as I think that it is excessive to add those provisions to the existing list of requirements in the tenant farming commissioner’s code of practice provided for in the Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2016.

I move amendment 328.

Edward Mountain: Amendments 215 to 219 would ensure that the compensation for resumption is on the basis of the value of the land if sold with vacant possession for its existing agricultural use rather than the hoped value if the land was sold for development. The reason for that is that people enter into agricultural leases to use the land for agriculture, not in the hope that there may be some development at a later stage that they can benefit from. To use that valuation would further undermine the confidence in the tenanted farming sector. I refer the Parliament and the cabinet secretary to my remarks in group 23 on the decline of the sector and the 29 per cent decline in holdings with rented land.

Amendment 96 would insert further amendments to ensure that the valuer of land that is being resumed under the 2003 act tenancies is specifically qualified to determine the open market value as determined by and laid down by the Royal Institute of Chartered Surveyors rather than simply appearing to the landlord to meet the requirements to be a valuer. That is about ensuring quality.

Independent bodies all agree that the provisions on resumption of land in the bill are a mess and not fit for purpose. The cabinet secretary will be aware of a letter sent to her on 3 October by the heads of independent bodies including NFU Scotland, the Agricultural Law Association, Scottish Land & Estates, the Central Association for Agricultural Valuers, Scottish Agricultural Arbiters and Valuers Association and the Royal Institute of Chartered Surveyors. That letter details the drafting problems in this section, and stipulates that compensation should be in relation to the capital value of the land itself, not what it was rented for. The Scottish Tenant Farmers Association is the only stakeholder that has not offered support to the letter. It is not right that one organisation should have the power to veto all the other organisations’ sensible views.

I turn to other amendments in the group. Amendment 328, in the name of Tim Eagle, allows flexibility for the landlord and tenant to reach an agreement, which is exactly what, in my mind, the bill should be encouraging. Amendment 338 is also a sensible amendment, and if the Parliament agrees to it, it will pre-empt my amendments 217, 218 and 219, and I am quite happy with that. However, if the Parliament does not pass 338, I am afraid that I will have to move my amendments individually. I will not comment on Emma Harper’s amendment 347, except to say that it adds little to the process.

Mairi Gougeon: Before I respond to Tim Eagle’s amendments and the others in the group, it is important to set out where we have reached for clarity for everyone in Parliament and for tenant farming stakeholders.

I have listened carefully to stakeholders’ views and made changes where that is the right thing to do. There is a need to ensure fairness for tenant farmers who lose possession through a resumption or an incontestable notice to quit. In 1991 act resumptions, the measures in the bill are both right and fair. It is important to keep in mind that the capital value method has been used before with no challenges for similar claims.

I have also listened to concerns from tenants about disturbance payments being too low, but the argument that the reorganisation payment should be changed has not been made.

My amendments 345, 346 and 363 to 365 seek to ensure that the bill continues to provide a balanced solution for both sides while providing a transparent legal framework.

It is, of course, rarely possible to get total agreement on controversial issues. A bit of give and take is to be expected. However, it is also right that we keep these matters under review as we continue Scotland's land reform journey, and it is for that reason that I am seeking new powers to provide for compensation for resumption under 2003 act tenancies or after an incontestable notice to quit.

Amendment 346 makes good on the promise that I made during stage 2 that I would work with stakeholders to consider again whether the capital value method for fixing compensation is the right method when land is resumed from a limited duration tenancy. The amendment means that ministers will be able to make regulations that change or clarify that method if it is clear that that is the right thing to do. It also addresses the concerns of landlord stakeholders about the resumption value process for 2003 act tenancies and it will insert a new section into the bill to enable Scottish ministers to make provision through regulations for the compensation elements that are payable to a tenant farmer with a limited duration tenancy by their landlord when part of their land is resumed by the landlord.

Amendment 345 also makes good on the promise that I made during stage 2 that I would work with stakeholders to ensure that additional compensation is paid to tenants who lose possession of their whole holding as a result of an incontestable notice to quit. It means that ministers will be able to make regulations that create change or clarify the method for determining the amount of that additional compensation if it is clear that that is the right thing to do.

The consequential amendment 364 will ensure that any resumption regulations are subject to the affirmative procedure. We need to take into account that these are significant powers and it is therefore right that they are subject to additional procedure. Amendment 365 provides for that, with the effect that the first use of either power will need to involve a super-affirmative regulation.

Although some of Tim Eagle's amendments 328 to 344 are, I think, genuine attempts to appease landlord elements of the sector, they have flaws, not least because some of them seek to circumvent the protection of tenants' rights. Amendment 328 would enable parties to contract out of the statutory one-year resumption notice period. Tim Eagle might suggest that that would enable both parties to make informed decisions, but it would also enable a landlord to apply more pressure to force a tenant to agree to a compensation value quickly on a timescale that suited the landlord. Although some tenant farmers and landlords have strong and successful relationships, that is not the case for everyone. We have to protect the rights of those tenant farmers who are pressurised into situations by aggressive parties.

Amendments 329 and 330 are attempts to prevent a tenant from exercising their right to terminate their whole tenancy if their landlord serves them with a resumption notice. I do not know what Tim Eagle is attempting to achieve by that. All that it would do is erode the hard-fought-for rights of Scotland's tenant farmers.

Tim Eagle's amendments 331 to 334 seek to reverse the reforms in the bill and to make money for the landlord. Amendment 331 would reduce the compensation that is payable to the tenant as it would require other claims that are now paid separately to be deducted from the resumption payment.

Amendment 332 would change the method of compensation so that it related only to the tenant's interest in the part of the lease that was being resumed. That would move away from the capital valuation approach that is taken in the bill. That might seem reasonable, but the effect would be that the tenant would get less—perhaps much less—than under the bill's provisions.

Amendment 334 is a consequential amendment that would change the skills that a valuer would need to have to reflect the new requirement to value the lease rather than the land.

Edward Mountain's amendments in the group do not propose a new method and they aim to cut back the amount of compensation that is to be paid to the tenant. His amendments 215 and 216 propose that land that forms part of the resumption should be valued, but only as used at the time of the valuation. That approach is followed up in amendments 217 to 219, which would mean that the land could be valued only with its existing use. The member specifically excludes hope value and development potential from the valuation assessment.

All of that is very technical, but we can let common sense be our guide in relation to this.

Edward Mountain: When someone enters a lease, they enter it for the land for agricultural use. They do not enter it in the hope that a better value will come along if it is not an agricultural lease. That would be a bit like renting a Mini and hoping that it will turn into a Rolls-Royce. That is what I am trying to stop. I am trying to make sure that the tenant farmer gets compensation for exactly what they entered into, and not for the hope that it might change into something else. I am not sure why the cabinet secretary does not accept that. I would be grateful to hear her views.

Mairi Gougeon: I will set out my views in relation to that as I continue with my comments.

First, I have seen no evidence that any kind of hope value or development value is, in fact, an issue when assessing the value of land for the purposes of compensation.

Secondly, there is already provision for that in the bill. Paragraph 4(2)(c) of new schedules 2A and 2 confirm that a valuer

the use of the land

“for a purpose that is not one permitted by the lease”.

Thirdly, should evidence show that there is an issue with that, the bill includes a power that would enable ministers to fix the problem.

Tim Eagle’s amendments 338, 340, 341 and 342 focus on valuing a tenant’s interest in the lease rather than the land. That might seem reasonable, and some stakeholders in TFAF are attracted to it for that reason. However, the reality is different, because the amendments leave the judgment entirely to the valuer, and the amount of compensation that is paid to the tenant can be expected to be significantly lower.

Finally, Tim Eagle’s amendment 339 makes a final effort to dilute valuation fairness further for tenants, aiming to ensure that Scottish ministers are unable to modify the meanings of “improvements” or “high farming” for valuation purposes.

Tim Eagle: We have been talking about hope value. As I understand it, some of the concern in TFAF was about the risk that anything that would allow hope value could stifle rural development. Does the cabinet secretary accept that point? I think that people are looking for comments today from the cabinet secretary to assure them that that will not go forward.

Mairi Gougeon: I do not necessarily share the concerns in relation to that, for the reasons that I set out in my response to Edward Mountain and in the comments that I have just made.

I turn back to Tim Eagle’s amendment 339. It makes sense only if the aim is to protect landlords at the expense of tenants, because that is ultimately the effect of the change.

Tim Eagle’s remaining amendments 333, 335 to 337, 343 and 344 are all consequential to his other amendments that I have just discussed.

Edward Mountain takes a more direct route with amendment 96, which is an alternative to his amendment 97, which we have already debated in group 23. Amendment 96 would require the landlord to nominate as valuer a person who “is qualified to determine the open market value as defined by the Royal Institute of Chartered Surveyors”.

He has not, however, attempted to change the requirements that are set out in paragraph 1(4) of proposed new schedule 2 to the 2003 act, which include that the person who is named possesses the “qualifications, knowledge and experience suitable for assessing the ... value of agricultural land”.

Unlike the amendments that have been lodged by the Conservatives, Emma Harper’s amendment 347 is directly helpful to all sides. It clarifies the tenant farming commissioner’s ability to make codes of practice that include the process for a landlord to resume leased land or to bring a 1991 act tenancy to an end through an incontestable notice to quit.

For all the reasons that I have just set out, I support Emma Harper’s amendment, I ask members also to support all my amendments in the group, and I strongly urge MSPs from across the chamber to resist all the Conservative amendments.

Emma Harper (South Scotland) (SNP): Amendment 347, in my name, relates to the role of the tenant farming commissioner in preparing codes of practice to encourage and promote good practice in the sector. I thank the Scottish Tenant Farmers Association for all the support and advice that I have been given in relation to the bill ahead of stage 2 and stage 3.

The Land Reform (Scotland) Act 2016 currently includes an illustrative list of topics that the tenant farming commissioner may make provision for in the code of practice. My amendment seeks to add two topics to that list. The first relates to the resumption process, which is relevant to both agricultural holdings and small holdings. In the context of the resumption process, a landlord may seek to resume land for specific purposes, such as building houses, roads or infrastructure, or for environmental or conservation projects. I highlight that so that folks are clear about what “resumption” means and how it relates to my amendment.

The second part of my amendment relates to the process whereby a landlord of a 1991 act tenancy terminates a tenancy through what is known as an incontestable notice to quit, which is the formal notice that is served by a landlord to terminate an agricultural tenancy. Unlike a general, or unqualified, notice to quit, an incontestable notice is based on specific legal grounds and does not allow the tenant to automatically challenge it by serving a counter-notice. As the discussions on the amendments in this group demonstrate, such notices can be contentious.

There is widespread anecdotal evidence that codes of practice are not being followed. Currently, however, the tenant farming commissioner can investigate only if a formal complaint is made by a landlord or a tenant. The STFA has asked me to raise the issue and to ask whether the cabinet secretary would respond to the STFA's request to keep under review the ability of the tenant farming commissioner to investigate breaches of the code of practice in a self-appointed way if the commissioner has reason to believe that codes of practice are not being followed. It would be appreciated if the cabinet secretary would comment on that in her closing remarks.

Again, the purpose of the amendment is to modify the illustrative list of matters in section 27 of the 2016 act that the tenant farming commissioner may make a provision about in a code of practice. Codes of practice play an important role in this area, and would be of great assistance to tenants and landlords alike. I ask members to support amendment 347.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: I call 4Tim Eagle to wind up and indicate whether he wishes to press or withdraw amendment 328.

Tim Eagle: I will press amendment 328. I have nothing further to add.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: The question is, that amendment 328 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: There will be a division.

The vote is closed.

Bob Doris: On a point of order, Presiding Officer. My phone would not work. I would have voted no.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: Thank you, Mr Doris. Your vote will be recorded.

George Adam (Paisley) (SNP): On a point of order, Presiding Officer. The voting platform was goosed. I would have voted no.

The Presiding Officer: Thank you, Mr Adam, for your technological explanation. We will ensure that your vote is recorded.

Alasdair Allan (Na h-Eileanan an Iar) (SNP): On a point of order, Presiding Officer. I will be less specific and just say that, although I attempted to vote no, I do not think that that was recorded.

The Presiding Officer: We will check, Dr Allan.

I can confirm that your vote was not, but now is, recorded.

The Presiding Officer: The result of the division is: For 91, Against 27, Abstentions 0.

The amendment is therefore not agreed to. We move to group 26—

21:15

John Mason (Glasgow Shettleston) (Ind): On a point of order, Presiding Officer. Will you confirm the result of the previous vote?

The Presiding Officer: Thank you, Mr Mason. You have brought something to my attention—you are quite right.

For clarity, the result of the division on amendment 346 is: For 91, Against 27, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 346 agreed to.

The Presiding Officer: I think that Maggie Chapman wants to make a point of order.

Maggie Chapman (North East Scotland) (Green): I was going to make the same point as John Mason made.

The Presiding Officer: Thank you, Ms Chapman. I am pleased to see that my colleagues are on the ball.

Section 14—Compensation for improvements

The Presiding Officer: Group 26 is on compensation for improvements. Amendment 220, in the name of Edward Mountain, is grouped with amendments 221 to 227 and 99. I point out that, if amendment 225 is agreed to, I cannot call amendments 226 and 227 due to a pre-emption.

Edward Mountain: Amendment 220 would reverse the current assumption in the bill that a landlord has consented to a tenant's request for an improvement to the land if they do not respond to a notice requesting consent. I have lodged the amendment for the same reason that I lodged a similar amendment to the Housing (Scotland) Bill: there is no stipulated way for serving notices. I, along with probably many other people, have been caught out by not getting mail that was supposed to have been delivered. I get mail three days a week, but they are not always the same days every week, so people cannot rely on the mail. Through amendment 220, I am trying to introduce the assumption that—[Interruption.] I am sorry—does somebody want to intervene?

The Presiding Officer: No. Please continue, Mr Mountain. Let us ensure that we can hear one another, colleagues.

Edward Mountain: I am trying to ensure that, if a notice is served, both sides know that it has been served and it is responded to. I do not think that it should be assumed that a notice has been received and that consent has therefore been given.

Amendment 223 is consequential on amendment 220.

Amendment 221 would remove the requirement for a landlord to provide reasons in writing for the refusal of consent for a tenant's improvement. Amendment 222 is related and would remove the 70-day period within which a landlord must give a tenant the reasons for refusal. Instead, a landlord would need to give the reasons for refusal within a "reasonable" timescale if a tenant asked for reasons to be given.

Amendment 225 would require the bill to include a definition of

"sustainable and regenerative agricultural production",

instead of ministers being obliged to define it in regulations. I am probably not the only farmer who is looking to understand what that means.

Amendment 99 would provide that consent must be required for certain improvements listed in new schedule 5 to the 1991 act, on pages 61 and 62 of the bill. Such improvements include irrigating land, making or planting osier beds, making or planting short rotation coppice and so on. The amendment would clarify that consent must be required for those improvements, because they would result in a considerable change to the land usage.

I move amendment 220.

Mairi Gougeon: At stage 1, following evidence from tenant farming stakeholders, I promised to clarify the terms of new schedule 5 to the 1991 act, and I made good on that promise at stage 2.

My amendments today provide further clarity where that is needed. Amendment 224 fixes a minor drafting error in schedule 5. Amendments 226 and 227 update the list of improvements that are presumed to facilitate and enhance sustainable or regenerative agricultural production for the purposes of the Scottish Land Court's determination of whether to approve a relevant improvement. They remove from the list the creation of species-rich pasture and the conversion of a holding to organic farming, because their inclusion is now redundant, as the Land Court is no longer required to approve them since they were listed in part 3 of schedule 5.

Edward Mountain's amendments 220 to 223 and 225 remove and reverse various provisions in section 14 that are key for transparency.

Amendment 99 would impose a blanket requirement for landlord consent, even when it might not be necessary or appropriate. The amendment would turn guidance into a mandatory rule, which is not the purpose of paragraph 2. It creates a real risk that some modest changes would require consent that they would otherwise not need.

With that, I urge members to support the amendments in my name and to oppose Edward Mountain's amendments in the group.

Edward Mountain: I have listened to the cabinet secretary ask members not to vote for my amendment 220 and those that relate to it. I do not yet understand why it is automatically assumed that, if you post a letter, you receive it. That does not always happen, and it does not stipulate whether the notice should be sent by letter, email, recorded delivery, special delivery or any other means.

At some stage, if notice has been served and the other side wishes to challenge it, it will be on the assumption that whoever posted the notice has to sign a bit of paper to swear that they have delivered the letter. That is not a way to go forward; the way to go forward is to have a form of recorded delivery, so that people can see that notices have been delivered, which each side would understand. For that simple reason, I do not accept the cabinet secretary's comments.

I agree with amendments 226 and 227, in the name of the cabinet secretary. They go a long way towards addressing some of the issues that I raised in relation to amendment 99. I might be in a position to reconsider moving that amendment, having heard what the cabinet secretary has said.

I press amendment 220.

The Presiding Officer: The question is, that amendment 220 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Presiding Officer: There will be a division.

The vote is closed.

Richard Leonard: On a point of order, Presiding Officer. I lost connection. I would have voted no.

The Presiding Officer: Thank you, Mr Leonard. We will ensure that that is recorded.

The Presiding Officer: Amendment 100, in the name of Edward Mountain, has already been debated with amendment 90. I call Edward Mountain to move or not move the amendment.

Edward Mountain: I want to move the amendment, Presiding Officer, but I was wondering whether you cared for me to move amendments 100 to 104 en bloc, to make voting simpler. However, if that is a complication, I will just move amendment 100.

The Presiding Officer: We are not there yet, Mr Mountain. That does not quite come at this point, so you can only move amendment 100.

Amendment 100 moved—[Edward Mountain].

The Presiding Officer: The question is, that amendment 100 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

Amendment 100 disagreed to.

Section 15—Notice of and objection to diversification

The Presiding Officer: Group 27 is on diversification. Amendment 228, in the name of the cabinet secretary, is the only amendment in the group.

Mairi Gougeon: Amendment 228 makes a minor drafting change to clarify the procedure when a landlord notifies a tenant that they object to or are imposing conditions in relation to a proposed diversification by the tenant. The bill currently requires the landlord to explain to the tenant why the grounds for objecting to the diversification or the conditions imposed are reasonable. The amendment clarifies that such reasons are to be given in the same notification as the one that notifies the tenant of the objection or conditions imposed, and not separately. The changes will help to inform tenants' next steps by improving communication between landlords and tenants and ensuring that tenants receive that information from their landlord in a timely manner.

The Presiding Officer: I move amendment 228.

Amendment 228 agreed to.

The Presiding Officer: I invite Edward Mountain to move amendments 101 to 104 en bloc.

Amendment 101 moved—[Edward Mountain].

Section 16—Tenant extension notice

Amendment 102 moved—[Edward Mountain].

Section 17—Determinations by Land Court

Amendment 103 moved—[Edward Mountain].

Section 18—Compensation arising as a result of diversification

Amendment 104 moved—[Edward Mountain].

The Presiding Officer: Does any member object to a single question being put on amendments 101 to 104?

As no member objects, the question is, that amendments 101 to 104 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Presiding Officer: There will be a division.

Amendment 347 agreed to.

Section 20—Compensation for damage by game etc

The Presiding Officer: We move to group 28, which is on game damage. Amendment 105, in the name of Edward Mountain, is grouped with amendment 348.

Edward Mountain: In 40 years of managing farmland and farming, and 15 years of managing upland estates, I have never yet been able to quantify in my mind what damage game can do to livestock. Sheep and deer seldom mix; and deer and cattle stay apart. I have yet to see a pheasant or a partridge chase a cow. If someone can tell me about their experience of that in the countryside I am happy to be corrected, but I have not seen it. I genuinely wonder what section 20 is trying to achieve. Perhaps at this stage I can say, tongue in cheek, that I do not believe that cows are frightened of pheasants. The only livestock that I have seen challenging pheasants have been pigs, who seemed to be intent on eating them.

Amendment 105, in my name, removes damage to livestock from the list of situations in which a tenant is entitled to be compensated by the landlord for damage resulting from game or game management.

Amendment 348 is a simple amendment that would change the definition of “game” in the bill to remove grouse. When I met the cabinet secretary, she kindly recommended to me a book called “Fair Game: The Law of Country Sports and the Protection of Wildlife” by Charlie Parkes and John Thornley. With a little bit of help, I managed to find it on Amazon and to buy it and read it. The cabinet secretary said to me that my amendment on the subject would be wrong, because grouse should be included in the definition of “game”. However, I do not believe that that is what the book says.

Let us be clear that capercaillie are grouse, and capercaillie are protected by law. Let us also be clear that there is a self-imposed moratorium on killing black game, which is correct. Therefore, to make the landlord liable for damage that has allegedly been done by species, one of which is protected by the law and the other of which is protected by a voluntary agreement, is fundamentally wrong, but that is what the bill is doing.

If the cabinet secretary meant red grouse, the bill should have said “red grouse”, but to simply say “grouse”, which includes ptarmigan, capercaillie and black game, is to use a broad-brush term. I do not believe that landlords can be held responsible for something that they cannot control by law and are advised not to. I have been managing livestock and wildlife for more than 40 years, and section 20 does not make any sense to me. I would be grateful to hear the cabinet secretary’s argument on why I am wrong.

I move amendment 105.

Mairi Gougeon: Edward Mountain’s amendment 105 would prevent our tenant farmers from being able to claim for damage caused to livestock by game or game management. That would mean that they would not be able to claim compensation if livestock were to suffer harm as a result of actions taken for game management purposes, such as removing fences and gates that limit access to farmland. It would also prevent a tenant farmer from being able to claim for damage caused by game where a tenant can show that, for example, game animals have transmitted disease or infection to livestock. In all cases, it would be for the tenant farmer to evidence direct and indirect damage by game, which would be unfair and which is why we oppose the amendment.

Amendment 348 would prevent a tenant farmer from being able to claim for damage that was caused by game management techniques or equipment on grouse moors. Again, that would be unfair, given the range of behaviours displayed by some sporting tenants, and it is only fair that a tenant farmer should be able to claim for damage caused to their holding during game management—for example, damage caused to fencing, gates or fields.

On that basis, both those amendments are unfair, which is why I urge members to reject them.

The Presiding Officer: I call Edward Mountain to wind up and to press or withdraw amendment 105.

Edward Mountain: I listened to the cabinet secretary's explanation. I would be interested to know whether she could give me an example of an infection that game birds can give to livestock. I have never come across one. I am not sure that there is such an infection—in fact, I am 99 per cent sure that there is not—but I would be grateful if the cabinet secretary could define that or give me an example, given that she is using it as her reason for opposing my amendments.

I see that the cabinet secretary is not about to provide any examples.

Leaving gates open and causing damage to livestock through vehicles moving around on game shooting days have already been covered. Those are simple acts of damage that tenants can claim for and are ones for which the landlord would be responsible. Goodness knows, considering the value of some livestock—I am thinking of the very high value of pedigree cattle in particular—most farmers would be acutely aware if they felt that things were unfair, but no one has mentioned that to me.

As far as grouse moors are concerned, we are talking about defining grouse as a game bird species. I have already said that those species are protected and that no one can do anything about that, so it seems unfair and blatantly wrong in law to hold someone responsible for something that they are not legally allowed to do anything to.

I press amendment 105 and urge members to support it together with amendment 348.

The Presiding Officer: The question is, that amendment 105 be agreed to. Are we agreed?

Members: No.

The Presiding Officer: There will be a division.

The Presiding Officer: The result of the division is: For 28, Against 89, Abstentions 0.

Amendment 348 disagreed to.

Section 23—Rent review: 1991 Act tenancies

The Presiding Officer: We move to group 29, on rent reviews. Amendment 349, in the name of Douglas Lumsden, is grouped with amendments 350 to 355, 229, 356 to 362 and 230.

Douglas Lumsden: I have good news: this is the final group—and I am not going to speak about pylons, either.

At stage 2, I lodged amendments relating to the rent review provisions in the bill, and I have worked with the cabinet secretary ahead of stage 3 so that I can lodge these amendments on the same topic. I thank the cabinet secretary and her team for their co-operation.

The amendments in my name relate to matters that the Land Court is either to have regard to or not to take into account when determining the fair rent for a holding. They make equivalent changes to section 23 of the bill, relating to 1991 act tenancies, and to section 24, relating to various limited duration tenancies.

Amendments 349 and 356 clarify that the Land Court, when determining the fair rent for a holding, is to have regard to the open market rental value of any fixed equipment, if it is provided by the landlord and used by the tenant for a non-agricultural purpose. The approach clarifies that the fixed equipment does not need to have been provided by the landlord specifically for a non-agricultural purpose for its rental value to be taken into account.

Amendments 351, 354, 355, 358, 361 and 362 address how improvements to the holding are taken into account when determining the rental value, depending on whether they have been paid for by the landlord, by the tenant or on a shared basis. The amendments provide that the Land Court will not take into account the proportionate amount of the increase in the rental value corresponding to the proportion of the cost of the improvements made at the tenant's expense, and at the landlord's expense if they receive grant funding.

The amendments also set out further detail on what is classed as being at the tenant's expense for those purposes. For example, an improvement is still regarded as being at the tenant's expense, wholly or partially depending on how it was funded, when the tenant receives a grant, and the adoption of higher farming standards by the tenant is classed as an improvement wholly at the tenant's expense.

Amendments 350, 352, 353, 357, 359 and 360 make consequential and related modifications to streamline the drafting of and consolidate the matters that the Land Court is not to take into account when determining the fair rent for the holding. That also means that the related powers in the bill for the Scottish ministers to make further provision for those purposes will extend to all those matters.

I ask that members support the amendments in my name, and I move amendment 349.

Mairi Gougeon: The amendments in this group build on the important changes to the rent review process for tenant farmers and their landlords in the bill. Douglas Lumsden's amendments mainly relate to points raised at stage 2 on which I have been pleased to work with him to address at stage 3. As he has explained, the amendments provide clarity in relation to the matters that the Land Court is to have regard to, or is not to take into account, when determining the fair rent for a holding. They cover important points, including the principle that a tenant's rent should not be increased as a result of improvements that have been carried out at their expense.

Amendments 229 and 230 in my name relate to the powers in the bill for ministers to make further provision on the matters that the Land Court is to have regard to or take no account of in determining the fair rent of the holding. They modify the description of the consultation duty on the Scottish ministers prior to laying draft regulations under the powers to ensure drafting consistency. It is important that the rent review process is fair and that there is clarity for tenants and landlords with regard to how rent is to be calculated, including what is to be taken into account. The amendments ensure that the bill achieves that, and I therefore ask that members support all the amendments in the group.

Edward Mountain: As this is the last group of amendments to be considered, I propose to make some general comments on this group and another matter.

I support the amendments lodged by my colleague Douglas Lumsden, which are in response to concerns raised at stages 1 and 2 regarding gaps in the rent review provisions. Mr Lumsden's amendments 349 to 362 add reasonable provisions that improvements to the land made by the tenant should not be taken into account by the Land Court when rental value of the holding is being determined.

I do not support amendments 229 and 230, as both change ministers' regulating powers so that they can make further provision, by way of regulations, on 1991 and 2003 act tenancies with regard to rent reviews. As I have detailed in my copious previous comments on the matter, I am fundamentally opposed to ministers retrospectively adjusting agricultural tenancies, because I believe that those kinds of changes are killing off the rental sector.

My experience of doing a rent review is that it usually involves a process that I have seen many times. The tenant and the landlord sit around a kitchen table, with some home baking and/or a bottle of whisky. At the end of the process, neither party has achieved exactly the figure that they wanted, but a fair compromise has been reached. That is what I would like to see here.

As this is the last group of amendments, I would also like to take a moment to remind the cabinet secretary of a seldom-used rule under the standing orders of this Parliament. Paragraphs 6, 7 and 8 of rule 9.8 set out that, before the stage 3 debate, the member in charge of the bill may, by motion, propose that such parts of the bill

"be referred back to the committee for further Stage 2 consideration."

I propose that the cabinet secretary take responsibility for the substantive changes that have been made to the bill, and send part 1, as well as sections 10, 10A to 10D, 11, 12, 13, 23 and 24, back to the committee for further consideration.

Martin Whitfield: We have had a number of pieces of legislation where the stage 3s have spread over a number of weeks and a number of sittings, and where the completion of the bill has been unknown as we have entered into the stage 3 debate. There have been circumstances where perhaps we would have wished, as a Parliament, for things to be the other way. The reason that sits behind that provision in the standing orders is to allow the member who is in charge of a bill to take account of the position that the bill is in before going to the stage 3 debate, after which it cannot be amended. That may well, indeed, prevent some of the consequences of rushed legislation that the member has spoken of in the past.

Edward Mountain: I thank Mr Whitfield for those comments. He is entirely right, because the bill has changed fundamentally since it was introduced to the Net Zero, Energy and Transport Committee. That is why I suggest that there should be further consideration. So that there is no doubt, I point out that I say that as an individual, although I am a member of that committee.

The bill has fundamentally changed. I believe that it could now fundamentally harm the sector and that it will not fulfil the key objectives that the cabinet secretary laid out at the beginning of the year, which were to strengthen the rights of communities, to diversify land ownership, to support the use of land for environmental purposes and to modernise the legal framework for tenant farmers. As the bill has been amended, I believe that referring it back to the committee is the only appropriate step that would ensure that the provisions are sufficiently considered. Those provisions cannot be seen as a whole at the same time as they are being passed.

That approach would have benefits. It would allow ministers to defend themselves against the expensive legal challenges that I believe will inevitably follow, especially in relation to part 1, and which I hear are already being mooted.

Kevin Stewart (Aberdeen Central) (SNP): I thank Mr Mountain for giving way, but what we are seeing is a mockery being made of the system. It was clear to some of us previously that folk were unhappy with the bill and wanted to put the kibosh on it. This is an example of the kind of nonsense that takes place in the Parliament. To use Mr Lumsden's phrase of the day, this is a mega monster mockery that Mr Mountain is putting forward.

Edward Mountain: I am very proud that I stand in the Parliament as a parliamentarian to point out to the cabinet secretary what rules are available to consider before we get to the stage 3 debate. The point of the Parliament is to produce good legislation. All I am saying is that I do not think that we have achieved that—[Interruption.]

The Presiding Officer: Let us hear Mr Mountain.

Edward Mountain: I want the cabinet secretary at least to consider the options that are available to her under the standing orders of the Parliament, which I constantly adhere to.

The Presiding Officer: I call Douglas Lumsden to wind up and press or withdraw amendment 349.

Douglas Lumsden: I have nothing to add. I will press amendment 349.

Amendment 349 agreed to.

The Presiding Officer: We will conclude our stage 3 proceedings at this point, and then move on to the final item of business at our decision time of 10pm. I appreciate that it has been a long session debating the Land Reform (Scotland) Bill, and I thank members for their courteous contributions, but there is one question to be put as a result of today's business, which we will get to momentarily.

Decision Time

The Presiding Officer (Alison Johnstone): We move to decision time. The question is, that motion S6M-19487, in the name of Bob Doris, on the Social Justice and Social Security Committee's report on financial considerations when leaving an abusive relationship, be agreed to.

Motion agreed to,

That the Parliament notes the Social Justice and Social Security Committee's 6th Report, 2025 (Session 6), Inquiry Into Financial Considerations When Leaving an Abusive Relationship (SP Paper 849).

Meeting closed at 22:00.
