

The rest of this Official Report will be published progressively as soon as the text is available.

Scottish Parliament

Thursday 5 February 2026

[The Presiding Officer opened the meeting at 11:40]

General Question Time

Asylum Seekers (Perth)

1. Mark Ruskell (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Green): To ask the Scottish Government what action is being taken to ensure the safety of people seeking asylum who are housed in hotels across Perth. (S6O-05467)

The Cabinet Secretary for Social Justice (Shirley-Anne Somerville): Everyone should be able to feel safe and secure in the place where they live.

The United Kingdom Government is responsible for providing all asylum accommodation, including hotels. That includes security and support for people who are seeking asylum. I am deeply concerned that the protests outside asylum accommodation are creating significant fear and alarm. The right to peaceful public assembly and freedom of expression should never be used to justify any form of hateful, violent or otherwise criminal behaviour. We fully support Police Scotland taking appropriate action in response to criminal offences being committed at, or around, such protests.

Mark Ruskell: I warmly thank the cabinet secretary for that answer. It is important that we recognise that there has been an increase in racist hate crimes in the past year and that far-right groups are using the protests to intimidate marginalised people. Although buffer zones around accommodation could provide increased protection from fear and intimidation, that approach alone would not tackle the harmful rhetoric, scapegoating or false narratives being placed on people who are trapped in the asylum system.

Communities have gathered and organised to put on counter-protests and rallies in Perth that show clear solidarity and a refusal to allow people to be demonised and attacked. Beyond buffer zones, what action will the Scottish Government take to tackle the divisive messaging, build on that community solidarity and fight the far right?

Shirley-Anne Somerville: I thank Mark Ruskell for asking that important question, which once again gives the Parliament—with, I hope, full support around the chamber—the opportunity to say that, yes, people have a right to peaceful protest and to freedom of expression, but nothing should happen to anyone living in any of our communities that spreads fear and alarm. Unfortunately, we are seeing more of that.

The Government can take, and is taking, action on the matter, despite the fact that asylum is a reserved matter. The Minister for Equalities, Kaukab Stewart, has done a great deal of work with communities and has increased the funding for community cohesion work. That funds grass-roots organisations to do exactly the type of work that Mark Ruskell mentioned, which is exceptionally important. The Government also recently ran the “We are Scotland” campaign to say how important it is that we stick together on the matter and not be divided.

Elena Whitham (Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley) (SNP): The abuse and intimidation that we continue to witness in Perth and across the UK is deeply concerning and should have no place in our society. We know that ending the no recourse to public funds policy is essential for the long-term integration and wellbeing of asylum seekers. In the light of the increasing hostility within our communities, will the cabinet secretary provide an update on the steps that the Scottish Government is taking to challenge the UK Government on that policy?

Shirley-Anne Somerville: No one should be forced into destitution. That includes people who are subject to no recourse to public funds, which is a matter that the UK Government must resolve.

The Scottish Government and the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities are working on an ending destitution together strategy that deals with our work with people who are subject to no recourse to public funds. I was deeply disappointed by the statement in November on asylum reform, which will push more people into destitution and mean that more people have no recourse to public funds. The Scottish Government remains resolute that the UK Government should change its mind on that issue.

Budget 2026-27 (Lochgelly)

The rest of this Official Report will be published progressively as soon as the text is available.

2. Annabelle Ewing (Cowdenbeath) (SNP): To ask the Scottish Government what the implications of its draft budget 2026-27 are for the provision of a new medical centre for Lochgelly. (S6O-05468)

The Cabinet Secretary for Health and Social Care (Neil Gray): As is set out in the infrastructure delivery pipeline, we are developing a revenue funding model to enable additional infrastructure investment across primary and community care with a network of local care and wellbeing centres, starting with projects in Port Glasgow, East Livingston and East Calder, Cowdenbeath, Lochgelly and the range of sites further listed in the document. We are also working with all boards to develop an NHS whole-system infrastructure plan to inform future investment priorities across the estate and ensure that the available funding is directed to best effect.

Annabelle Ewing: Of course, I welcome any proposed regeneration in my constituency. With regard specifically to Lochgelly, it is good news for my constituents that a new Lochgelly medical centre is back on the Scottish Government's capital projects waiting list, but they will be dismayed that construction is now not forecast to start until at least 2031, which will be some 20 years after the first promise, notwithstanding the fact that there is a business case and that planning permission is in place. Does the cabinet secretary understand the disappointment that is felt about that? What will he do to accelerate the project, so that Lochgelly gets its long-awaited new medical centre?

Neil Gray: I very much recognise the points that Annabelle Ewing raises. Having visited the existing centre and met her constituents, I feel their disappointment and I understand it. That is why, in the absence of sufficient conventional capital being available in my portfolio and across Government to bring forward those infrastructure investment projects, we have sought to create the revenue-based model to allow for the delivery of the Lochgelly and Cowdenbeath project and the other projects in the system.

The current timeline is an estimate of when the model will be ready, alongside the associated business case and design work, and we are looking to accelerate that timeline, as I stressed to Ms Ewing in the meeting that I had with her recently. The design of a facility tends to be the aspect that takes the longest time to complete, but the business case process will happen concurrently with the development of the funding model, so that the project can be progressed imminently.

Alex Rowley (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Lab): After two decades of broken promises, I am sure that the health secretary will understand why the people of Lochgelly will be hesitant to welcome this project. However, I hope that we are going in the right direction and that it will happen. The other health centre in Fife that is crumbling is the one in Kincardine, but there is no mention of that in any of the documents. Can he tell me what is happening there?

The Presiding Officer (Alison Johnstone): Please answer on the substantive question, cabinet secretary.

Neil Gray: In addition to the progress that is being made in Lochgelly, there is progress for Kincardine. Further down the document from where we list Port Glasgow, East Calder and East Livingston, and Cowdenbeath and Lochgelly, Kincardine is also there in the list of projects in the first tranche of the work to be delivered through the revenue-based model. I am happy to assure Alex Rowley—and, as I am sitting next to the constituency representative for Kincardine, Ms Somerville, I assure her, too—that Kincardine is on the list and that that project will also be delivered as part of the work.

Thrombectomy Services (Scottish Borders)

3. Rachael Hamilton (Ettrick, Roxburgh and Berwickshire) (Con): To ask the Scottish Government whether it will provide an update on what work it is doing to improve access to thrombectomy services across the Scottish Borders. (S6O-05469)

The Minister for Public Health and Women's Health (Jenni Minto): Our aim is to deliver a service that provides thrombectomies whenever they are required. NHS Scotland's national services directorate has established a task and finish group to produce options to expand access to thrombectomy across Scotland, including in NHS Borders, and that work is making positive progress. Since 2023-24, we have provided more than £185,000-worth of funding for thrombectomy in NHS Borders, including for the provision of hyperacute stroke nurses. Subject to parliamentary scrutiny, a further £17 million has been allocated to the development of the thrombectomy service in the 2026-27 budget, and that will include continued investment in NHS Borders.

Rachael Hamilton: Essentially, the minister is telling my Borders constituents that, if they have a stroke and need a thrombectomy, they must hope that it happens during the working week. Currently, due to a lack of funding and services, patients in the south-east of Scotland can access that treatment only at the Edinburgh royal infirmary and only from Monday to Friday between 9 o'clock and 3 o'clock. The uplift in the stroke funding is only £1 million, so there is still a deficit, and stroke happens not only on weekdays but on weekends.

The rest of this Official Report will be published progressively as soon as the text is available.

Previously, Jenni Minto acknowledged that thrombectomy not only transforms patient outcomes but can save the national health service money, due to reduced hospital stays and lower social care costs. I say to the minister that it is time that she committed to meeting me and the Stroke Association to set out a clear and urgent timetable for expanding thrombectomy services for people in the Borders, because they feel that it is currently an inequitable service.

Jenni Minto: I would be very happy to meet Ms Hamilton and the Stroke Association. I have regular meetings with the Stroke Association and with Chest, Heart & Stroke Scotland. I also regularly meet the leaders for stroke in all the national health service boards, to ensure that they are as focused as I am and the Scottish Government is on ensuring that, as I said in my initial response, thrombectomy services can be as equitable as possible through the hub-and-spoke mechanism that NHS National Services Scotland is currently working on.

Salmon Farming (Mortality Data)

4. Ariane Burgess (Highlands and Islands) (Green): To ask the Scottish Government what its position is on whether voluntary reporting of mortality data in the salmon farming industry provides sufficient transparency and animal welfare protection. (S6O-05470)

The Cabinet Secretary for Rural Affairs, Land Reform and Islands (Mairi Gougeon): More data is collected and published on salmon farming in Scotland than on any other farming sector. There are statutory requirements to report increased mortality, and a voluntary reporting mechanism supports fish health surveillance that is undertaken by the fish health inspectorate. Data is proactively published and is sufficient for regulatory purposes. Although numbers do not protect welfare, statutory protection, industry standards and regulatory powers do, and those are in place.

Official guidance will be introduced to further progress welfare standards. The Animal and Plant Health Agency is responsible for considering potential breaches in welfare legislation, and suspected cases of poor welfare are also referred to the agency.

Ariane Burgess: Given that in 2025 the fish health inspectorate found that more than 400,000 fish deaths had gone unreported across 27 incidents, that gill disease mortality had increased sharply and that companies reported fish culls to shareholders but not to the Government, will the Government commit to mandatory mortality reporting for all deaths before permitting further expansion of salmon farming?

Mairi Gougeon: In relation to Ariane Burgess's point about culling, I would just say that, as with other types of farming, producers sometimes need to humanely cull stock for operational or commercial purposes or to try to achieve better welfare outcomes for the individual fish, instead of considering only progression to the next phase of production.

Right now, the Scottish Government does not collect complete data on the number of fish that are culled at salmon farms, but in exceptional circumstances, culling is required to mitigate the risk of listed diseases that could have significant local or national impact. Culling is primarily a result of operational decisions, and reporting on it is not required for the fish health inspectorate's surveillance programme for aquatic animal disease, unless the cull relates to increased or unexplained mortality.

We require data to be collected for a number of different purposes. We believe that the data that is published, whether it be voluntarily or due to what we require through regulation, is suitable for those purposes.

Edward Mountain (Highlands and Islands) (Con): I congratulate the industry on complying with the recommendation of the Rural Economy and Connectivity Committee's report from 2018 on providing data. The problem is that, for nine years, the industry provided figures for total weight of fish loss, and now they go on numbers of fish lost. Will the cabinet secretary speak to the industry to see whether it can continue to report in the way that it did for nine years and not break what is a sequence of very useful data?

Mairi Gougeon: I am happy to look at that issue further and follow it up with Edward Mountain. The numbers are important, but I will have to consider the issue further.

Non-fatal Strangulation

5. Sue Webber (Lothian) (Con): To ask the Scottish Government what progress it has made in the current parliamentary session on preventing gender-based violence in relation to non-fatal strangulation. (S6O-05471)

The Minister for Victims and Community Safety (Siobhian Brown): Non-fatal strangulation is heinous behaviour that is criminal under Scots law and can be dealt with using a range of offences. We resource Police Scotland and the Crown Office and Procurator Fiscal Service, which independently enforce the criminal offences such as assault and domestic abuse that can be used to hold perpetrators to account. We have also ensured that new laws criminalising strangulation in pornography, introduced through the United Kingdom Crime and Policing Bill, will extend to Scotland.

The rest of this Official Report will be published progressively as soon as the text is available.

We keep laws under review and a public consultation will be published shortly, seeking views on a range of gender-based violence issues, including non-fatal strangulation. That is in line with our programme for government commitment. It will also include specific consideration on how better to record data in the criminal justice system on cases involving non-fatal strangulation.

Sue Webber: I struggled to hear most of that response, but I will do my best.

A Centre for Women's Justice article, posted on its website, said:

"Many survivors describe how they truly believed they were going to die whilst they were being strangled. Some report such offending as taking place in full view of their children. Not being able to breathe is terrifying".

The bringing in of a stand-alone offence in England and Wales has been welcomed by front-line organisations such as Women's Aid and the Domestic Abuse Commissioner. Why are the Scottish victims still being left behind? What message does the minister think that it sends that victims here get less protection?

Siobhian Brown: I hope that the member is able to look back at my initial response, in which I set out the work that we are currently doing.

We understand that we need to improve our understanding of the prevalence of non-fatal strangulation, and we know that more needs to be done. Alongside our robust Scottish laws, we are clear that more needs to be done to understand the prevalence of non-fatal strangulation. Through the Scottish crime and justice survey, we have taken steps to find out about its prevalence in Scotland, and the initial results will be available for 2026-27. The forthcoming Scottish Government consultation will also seek views on how the matter can best be addressed and how we can legislate in future.

RAAC in Housing Leadership Group

6. Maggie Chapman (North East Scotland) (Green): To ask the Scottish Government how it is ensuring that the local authorities involved with the reinforced autoclaved aerated concrete housing leadership group are engaging appropriately and are including residents and RAAC campaigners in their activities. (S6O-05472)

The Cabinet Secretary for Housing (Màiri McAllan): It is my expectation that local authorities will engage with tenants and residents in their area as we work on solutions. As part of last week's RAAC in housing leadership group, I sought an update from local authorities and registered social landlords on the support that they are providing to residents. Their feedback included written communications, including letters, engagement with the Association of British Insurers on behalf of residents, updated communication strategies, regular monitoring and inspections of RAAC, pilot projects, dedicated RAAC staff and regular reporting to their committee and elected members.

Maggie Chapman: Last August, the cabinet secretary attended a public meeting in Dundee, at which an undertaking was given that people who were affected by RAAC and campaigning for a fair resolution would be properly involved in processes and decisions.

However, that has not happened. Dundee City Council has indicated that it will roll out its roof-reinforcing pilot to the rest of the city, but that pilot has started without any consultation. There are serious concerns that just covering up the RAAC will not deal with the issue and could jeopardise mortgages and insurance. Can the cabinet secretary give an update on how communications and engagement are progressing in Dundee to ensure that there is genuine community involvement?

Màiri McAllan: I urge Dundee City Council to continue to ensure that it provides transparent and clear advice and appropriate support for residents who are affected by RAAC.

Maggie Chapman was quite right to mention the public meeting that I attended in Dundee on the topic. One of the commitments that I gave on the Government's part was that I would try to use the new Institution of Structural Engineers guidance specifically on housing in RAAC in Scotland to negotiate a better outcome for those who are looking to buy or sell properties that have been remediated. That was the subject of our leadership meeting last week, and I believe that progress is being made.

Housing to 2040 (Adaptations)

The rest of this Official Report will be published progressively as soon as the text is available.

7. Colin Beattie (Midlothian North and Musselburgh) (SNP): To ask the Scottish Government whether it will provide an update on action 20 of the housing to 2040 strategy to “streamline and accelerate the adaptations system”. (S6O-05473)

The Cabinet Secretary for Housing (Màiri McAllan): During stage 3 of the Housing (Scotland) Bill, I restated our commitment to reviewing the housing adaptations system. That review will consider how the process can be streamlined to enable people who need adaptations to access them quickly and easily. My officials have been working to develop the workstreams to take that forward.

I can inform the chamber that an advisory group of key stakeholders has been established, the first meeting of which will take place on 11 February. Engagements will continue over the coming months, and a report and recommendations are expected to be produced in the autumn.

Colin Beattie: In Midlothian North and Musselburgh, many of my constituents in park homes are living in difficult circumstances as they await progress on this issue. With that in mind, what additional funding has been allocated to support the adaptations system?

Màiri McAllan: I appreciate the point that Colin Beattie makes, and I again point him to the work that we are doing to ensure that a review is undertaken. It is worth putting on the record, in respect of his question on costs, that, in this year’s budget, we more than doubled the registered social landlords’ adaptation budget to £20.9 million, and our draft budget for the coming financial year maintains that.

The Presiding Officer: We have time for question 8, if we are brief.

National Health Service (Whistleblowing)

8. Stephen Kerr (Central Scotland) (Con): To ask the Scottish Government what assessment it has made of the culture of whistleblowing in the NHS. (S6O-05474)

The Cabinet Secretary for Health and Social Care (Neil Gray): A positive whistleblowing culture is essential to patient safety, staff confidence and the effective running of NHS Scotland. All health service staff should feel confident to raise concerns, and I have been direct with NHS boards about the need to protect and support whistleblowers.

Concerns raised by whistleblowers must be taken seriously and investigated thoroughly. Whistleblowing culture is kept under review through staff surveys, engagement with boards, the NHS Scotland whistleblowing policy and the work of the independent national whistleblowing officer, whom I met this week. Those arrangements promote safe reporting, accountability, transparency and learning.

Stephen Kerr: With the exclusive in this morning’s Scotsman on trying to silence whistleblowers by offering them trips to Disneyland, with the Patient Safety Commissioner for Scotland saying in Parliament this week that people are frightened to speak up because of the culture of cover-up that we have in the NHS, with careers being destroyed and with the bullying and endless cover-ups, Neil Gray must accept that what we have is not working. Will he accept that we need a complete reset of whistleblowing in the NHS and in Scotland’s public services, and will he take a lead in making the case for a truly independent office of the whistleblower outside the structure of the NHS?

Neil Gray: I met the independent national whistleblowing officer—the ombudsman—this week to discuss priorities for strengthening the speak-up culture across NHS boards. He was clear with me that the structures that we have in place are robust; the issue that he is concerned about is ensuring that there is follow-up when concerns are raised and that action is taken when complaints are upheld, and I have agreed to work with him on how we ensure that greater scaffolding and ballast are provided in that respect. That is what I will take forward with the national whistleblowing officer.

The Presiding Officer: That concludes general question time.

First Minister’s Question Time

12:01

Business Rates Relief

1. Russell Findlay (West Scotland) (Con): Businesses across the United Kingdom receive important financial support from Government in the form of rates relief, but when that cash reaches the Scottish National Party Government, it spends it on other things such as its £0.5 billion ferries, its £7 billion benefits bill and its propaganda papers on independence.

The rest of this Official Report will be published progressively as soon as the text is available.

Scottish businesses need that cash. They are suffering badly, with hospitality, including pubs, suffering more than most. The SNP has failed to pass on at least £700 million of business rates relief since 2022. Will John Swinney therefore tell us exactly where that money has gone?

The First Minister (John Swinney): The Government, in its forthcoming budget, which will be discussed by Parliament over the next few weeks, is putting forward a package of reliefs worth an estimated £864 million, which enables us to sustain the small business bonus scheme, which has been a hallmark of this Government's approach. It also enables us to offer a 15 per cent relief to retail, hospitality and leisure premises that are liable for the basic or intermediate property rate in mainland Scotland.

Those are just some of the measures that the Government proposes to make sure that we support the business community as it wrestles with the challenges that it faces.

Russell Findlay: He talks about the budget, but the Scottish Beer and Pub Association says that the SNP budget falls well short of what is needed for many pubs across Scotland.

Pubs are closing in Scotland at the rate of one every single week. Almost 300 pubs have been forced to close their doors in the past five years. This week, a new survey revealed that one in seven pub owners are thinking of calling time for the last time.

John Swinney must take action now to stem the flood of pub closures. My party is campaigning for 100 per cent rates exemption for all small and medium-sized hospitality business, but John Swinney has rejected our calls, so more jobs will be lost, and more communities will lose their pubs.

Will John Swinney therefore explain why he is happy to kill off Scotland's pubs?

The First Minister: That is not what the Government is doing. The Government is decreasing the basic, intermediate and higher property rates to deliver a broadly revenue-neutral revaluation over the revaluation cycle. That will mean the lowest basic property rate for properties with a rateable value up to and including £51,000. What I said earlier about the small business bonus scheme applies in many cases, and that is part of an overall package worth an estimated £864 million.

To reassure Mr Findlay about those issues, I can say that the Scottish Government has made a commitment: once we are clear on the consequential funding—if any comes to us from the changes to pub and hospitality relief that the United Kingdom Labour Government has announced in the past couple of weeks—we will allocate those funds in full to safeguard the future of the hospitality sector. We will do that once we are clear about the amount of money that is involved and the financial implications.

Russell Findlay: That answer was all froth and no beer. [Interruption.]

The Presiding Officer (Alison Johnstone): Let us hear Mr Findlay.

Russell Findlay: Scotland's pubs are in the eye of a perfect storm from two anti-business Governments. Labour is hammering businesses with a crippling jobs tax in the form of national insurance increases, while the SNP fails to provide lifeline financial support through rates relief. Businesses are now reeling even more after being hit with eye-watering new rates bills. One Glasgow pub has been hit with a rise of 576 per cent. Those increases are inexplicable and unfair and will cost jobs.

Stephen Montgomery of the Scottish Hospitality Group says that the SNP Government is punishing Scottish hospitality. He backs my party's campaign to halt the devastating new tax rises. John Swinney has the power to act, so will he do so, or is he going to call last orders on Scotland's pubs?

The First Minister: I acknowledge the implications for business of the increase in employer national insurance contributions. I have made the point on multiple occasions in the Parliament that I think that the Labour Government's increases in employer national insurance contributions have been a damaging measure for growth in our economy.

My Government has put in place measures to support the business community as a consequence of revaluation and as part of the support that we already have in place. We will introduce a revaluation transitional relief scheme to protect those that are experiencing the most significant increases in rateable values, ensuring that the gross bills for an estimated 60,000 properties will be lower in 2026-27 than they would otherwise have been. That is part of the Scottish Government's overall support for the business community when it faces challenges.

Russell Findlay: Labour politicians were barred from pubs across the United Kingdom after Rachel Reeves's damaging budget. Now, one of Scotland's leading businessmen is calling for SNP ministers to be locked out from their locals, too. Sir Tom Hunter has described the SNP Government's rates system as being "not fit for purpose." He said:

The rest of this Official Report will be published progressively as soon as the text is available.

“Let’s ban every government minister ... from their local pub until the business rates are fixed.”

I am sure that many punters would raise a glass to that, but we do not want to give ministers an excuse not to buy a round, which is why I have spoken to Sir Tom Hunter. He has agreed to meet me and the First Minister at a pub to hear about Scotland’s pub crisis. Will John Swinney join us to settle this over a pint?

The First Minister: I can think of nothing less appealing than having a pint with Russell Findlay. [Laughter.] I have a trip to the dentist that would be more preferable than going for a pint with Russell Findlay. [Interruption.]

The Presiding Officer: Thank you!

The First Minister: I am terribly sorry if that has been a wounding set of exchanges—I am typically generous in style in the Parliament, but I think that most of the Conservative Party would agree with me: a pint with Russell Findlay is totally unacceptable on any occasion.

To be serious, I accept the significance of the issues. I also take deadly seriously what Sir Tom Hunter says. I engage with him regularly about a whole host of different issues and I welcome his contribution to Scottish public policy and policy debate.

I assure Mr Findlay that, in every circumstance, my Government will do all that we can with the resources that are available to us to support business, to support the growth and development of the Scottish economy—through its success, investment in it and the bringing in of jobs—and to ensure low levels of unemployment. That is because the Government is on the side of business and the economy in Scotland.

Queen Elizabeth University Hospital

2. Anas Sarwar (Glasgow) (Lab): John Swinney has repeatedly said in the chamber that the first time that the Scottish Government became aware of infection issues at the Queen Elizabeth university hospital was in March 2018. Does he stand by that position?

The First Minister (John Swinney): I do.

Anas Sarwar: Just like last week, I am going to prove to the First Minister that what he is saying is a blatant untruth, because the Scottish Government document before me makes it clear that he knew before March 2018. It is here, in black and white.

In March 2017, there was

“A higher than expected incidence of Aspergillus”.

That is what Health Protection Scotland reported to the Scottish Government. In July 2017, there were positive cases of Stenotrophomonas. That is what Health Protection Scotland reported to the Scottish Government. Evidence of serious warnings to this Government were ignored.

Aspergillus took the life of Andrew Slorance. Stenotrophomonas took the life of Milly Main. Those deaths and many others were preventable, and we now know that the Scottish Government’s evidence to the inquiry is incomplete. There were, in fact, 14 alerts to the Scottish Government between 2015 and 2018. Does that not prove that John Swinney is not telling the truth about what he and the Scottish Government knew, when, and what they did about it?

The First Minister: The evidence before the inquiry clearly shows that the Scottish Government was made aware of a water contamination issue at the Queen Elizabeth university hospital only in March 2018. Incidents reported through the hospital infection incident assessment tool prior to March 2018 did not suggest that there were wider problems with the water system at the Queen Elizabeth university hospital. All that evidence is already before the inquiry, and it is right that Lord Brodie be given the time and space to get to the truth for families, without political influence, interference or speculation on the outcome of his conclusions.

Anas Sarwar: It is not speculation; it is Scottish Government documents that prove that what John Swinney is saying is not true.

This was Scotland’s newest and largest hospital, and Shona Robison and the Scottish Government got 14 alerts about infections between 2015 and 2018. Warning after warning was sent to the Scottish National Party Government and met with inaction, and people died as a result. Worse than that, the Scottish Government’s instinct was to close ranks and cover up.

Nowhere is that clearer than in a senior official—the chief nursing officer—who was appointed by Shona Robison and the SNP saying that she could not understand why Greater Glasgow and Clyde had not just offered the families 50 grand, which is a trip to Disneyland. That is utterly shameful, and it should shame every member in the SNP Government and on the SNP benches—bribes rather than truth and justice.

The rest of this Official Report will be published progressively as soon as the text is available.

Enough is enough. The pain that this Government has inflicted on those families is through the roof, so it should finally stop the denials and the cover-up, stop the gaslighting of the families, the whistleblowers and the staff, and, for once, just be honest.

The First Minister: I am horrified by the suffering of the families who have been affected by the losses in relation to the water contamination issues at the Queen Elizabeth university hospital. That is why this Government set up a public inquiry, so that Lord Brodie could undertake an examination of the evidence, look at all the issues and give the truth to the families involved.

Mr Sarwar, for a week, has basically attacked my personal integrity. What Mr Sarwar is doing is unrelenting, and how he is conducting himself is a sign of total desperation.

Mr Sarwar has written a letter to Lord Brodie. I am appalled by its contents. It is direct political interference in the conduct of an independent inquiry, and Mr Sarwar should be ashamed of himself. I will allow—
[Interruption.]

Anas Sarwar: You should be ashamed—

The Presiding Officer: Let us hear one another.

The First Minister: This Government—

Anas Sarwar: This document—

The Presiding Officer: I am sorry, First Minister. Colleagues, I would be very grateful if we could all hear one another. The people who have gathered to hear proceedings would like to be able to follow them.

The First Minister: This Government has established an independent public inquiry, led by Lord Brodie. We will respect the law and allow Lord Brodie to undertake his inquiry, and we will distance ourselves entirely from the direct political interference that Anas Sarwar is perpetrating in his letter to Lord Brodie. The Labour Party and Anas Sarwar should be ashamed of themselves for their conduct.

Rosebank Oil Field

3. Gillian Mackay (Central Scotland) (Green): Drilling for oil and gas in the Rosebank oil field is set to tip Scotland over the edge of climate disaster. This week, we also learned that that work will directly fund a company that is complicit in the illegal occupation of Palestine. Campaign group Uplift has obtained legal advice that says that granting permissions for Rosebank could be a breach of the Geneva conventions. The Scottish Government used to have a clear position on that. Under Nicola Sturgeon and Humza Yousaf, it was opposed to Rosebank. Under the current First Minister, no one is sure.

Can the First Minister confirm whether he still stands by Parliament's commitment to boycotting Israel? If so, does he agree that the Rosebank oil field should not go ahead?

The First Minister (John Swinney): The Scottish Government's position has been consistent about the necessity for any new developments to be compatible with our agenda and direction on climate action. That is the consistent position, which has not changed in any of the leaderships of the three First Ministers who Gillian Mackay mentioned. That is the test that has to be applied on Rosebank, and that is the test that the courts require to be undertaken in that respect. Of course, that is a decision for the United Kingdom Government.

On the situation in Israel, in my statement in September, I set out to Parliament the steps that the Scottish Government is taking to act on the issue of connection with organisations with a business interest in Israel, and the Government has taken forward those actions.

Gillian Mackay: Previous First Ministers have provided a clear yes or no as to whether they are against Rosebank, and it would be good for this First Minister to do so.

However, warm words are not good enough when climate destruction is funding illegal occupation, and we must put a stop to that. The First Minister must understand why so many of us are frustrated by the news this week. The National has reported that, following this Parliament's historic vote last year to boycott, divest from and sanction Israeli companies, the Scottish Government has not commissioned a single briefing from officials on how to implement that action. My colleague Patrick Harvie's questions on the subject from October remain unanswered 17 weeks later.

Is the First Minister's Government truly committed to boycotting Israel and supporting the people of Palestine? If so, when will we see action?

The First Minister: The steps that the Government has taken, following my statement to Parliament on 3 September, involve instructing relevant delivery bodies, such as Scottish Enterprise, where possible, not to provide support for trade between Scotland and Israel, and pausing new awards of public money to defence companies whose products or services are provided to countries where there is plausible evidence of genocide being committed, including Israel. That is the requirement that I placed in our policy in relation to the application of international law. Those steps explain how we are taking forward the position that I set out to Parliament on 3 September, and I hope that that provides the reassurance that Gillian Mackay seeks.

The rest of this Official Report will be published progressively as soon as the text is available.

Long-term Unemployment

4. Rona Mackay (Strathkelvin and Bearsden) (SNP): To ask the First Minister how the new measures that the Scottish Government has announced to tackle long-term unemployment will support its work to grow Scotland's economy. (S6F-04650)

The First Minister (John Swinney): Scotland's unemployment rate is already lower than that of the United Kingdom, and most people go back into work within six months. However, we are keen to further reduce economic inactivity, because that is a key to growing our economy. Our draft 2026-27 budget puts £90 million into devolved employability services, so that more people can get the support that they need to move into work.

We also know that childcare is a key to helping parents work. That is why, in August 2027, every primary school child in Scotland will have access to a breakfast club, which will support families, boost wellbeing and remove barriers to employment. To ensure that families know what help is available, we are launching a new marketing campaign, aimed at parents, that will make it easier for those who are at risk of poverty to find and access support.

Rona Mackay: While the Scottish Government is helping people into work, Labour's policies at Westminster are costing jobs. The rise in employer national insurance contributions is damaging employment opportunities across the country, while Westminster's fiscal regime continues to cause hundreds of job losses in Scotland's industries. In the face of that, can the First Minister say any more about the Scottish Government's work to boost growth, create jobs and help people into work?

The First Minister: By targeting investment and providing tailored support and a focus on skills, we are determined to create pathways into work for thousands of people. The £90 million that was announced by the Deputy First Minister earlier this week will provide £40 million to support parents who are most at risk of poverty into training and employment; £5 million for specialist services to help disabled people to access sustainable work; and £39 million for the all-age approach, which supports people who are furthest from the labour market towards employment.

The Government is also giving consideration, in the formulation of the child poverty delivery plan, which will be set out to the Parliament before we rise for the election, to further measures that will support individuals to access employment, as part of our work to tackle child poverty.

Medical Workforce (Stress, Anxiety and Burnout)

5. Brian Whittle (South Scotland) (Con): To ask the First Minister what the Scottish Government's response is to reported warnings that a significant proportion of the medical workforce is experiencing stress, anxiety and burnout. (S6F-04651)

The First Minister (John Swinney): I am deeply grateful for the continued efforts of all our national health service workers in the face of sustained demand. It is thanks to their hard work and the focus and investment from this Government that we are seeing downward trends across nearly all waiting list indicators. That is having a real impact on people's lives, with more operations, long waits down for seven months in a row and the number of general practitioners going up.

None of that would be possible without the commitment of our hard-working NHS staff, and we take their health and wellbeing very seriously. That is why a dedicated work-related stress policy, developed in partnership with unions and employers, is due to be published shortly, and it is why we continue to invest each year in national wellbeing programmes to ensure that staff can access rapid and compassionate psychological and emotional help if needed.

Brian Whittle: This week, research from the Medical and Dental Defence Union of Scotland suggested that as many as 66 per cent of doctors in Scotland had experienced burnout or were living with its effects. That comes after the General Medical Council found last year that a third of doctors had considered leaving the profession and more than half of doctors in training were at risk of burnout.

Both the Royal College of Emergency Medicine and the Royal College of Midwives point to safe staffing levels as being essential for patient safety. Despite writing that into law, the Scottish Government is continually failing to meet those levels, leaving NHS staff caught in a vicious cycle of stress-related illness.

The rest of this Official Report will be published progressively as soon as the text is available.

When will the Scottish Government deliver safe staffing levels as promised, to take the pressure off staff, give them the time to deliver the care that they want to give, and genuinely look after those who look after us?

The First Minister: I recognise the importance of the issues that Mr Whittle raises, because upon those issues depends the effective delivery of services in the national health service. The steps that the Government takes to support staff are important.

I set out in my earlier answer details of our investment in the wellbeing of staff. We have also had an expansion of the number of staff who work in the NHS. There are more staff working in the NHS now than there were when this Government took office. There has been an increase of more than 27 per cent, with more nurses and midwives and more medical and dental consultants.

Those commitments to expand the number of staff are important and help us to deliver results, including the sustained reduction in NHS waiting times and the increase in the number of procedures that are being undertaken. I express my gratitude to the staff of the NHS for all that they contribute to make that possible.

Carol Mochan (South Scotland) (Lab): Our hard-working NHS staff always do the best that they can, but they are being driven to burnout. Protecting the wellbeing of staff is a vital part of ensuring that patients get the care and support that they need, but we are facing a workforce wellbeing crisis. What tangible action will the First Minister take in response to the issue of staff who are thinking about retiring early and leaving Scotland's NHS—because of burnout, and not because they wish to? We really need their skills, and we should value their experience.

The First Minister: I agree with the point that Carol Mochan makes. I want staff to feel fulfilled in their work and to be able to make their contribution. The evidence is that that is happening, because we are seeing an increased level of activity in the national health service and a sustained reduction in long waits, which I promised the public that I would deliver and I am delivering for people. That has been possible only because of the commitment that has been made by staff and the resources that have been put in by the Scottish Government.

I stress the fact that wellbeing support is in place across all health boards to make sure that staff feel well supported. That is an important priority for the Government.

Domestic Abuse Services (Highlands)

6. Rhoda Grant (Highlands and Islands) (Lab): To ask the First Minister what action the Scottish Government is taking to ensure the long-term financial and operational stability of specialist domestic abuse services in the Highlands. (S6F-04638)

The First Minister (John Swinney): We remain steadfast in our commitment to preventing and eradicating violence against women and girls and have allocated more than £30 million through the Scottish budget to that vital work in 2026-27. That includes around £1.25 million allocated to services in the Highlands through the delivering equally safe fund for the next financial year to enable recipients to continue their work to prevent violence and support survivors. As noted in our equally safe delivery plan, we are committed to developing a flexible and stable funding model that reflects the ambitions of the equally safe strategy.

Rhoda Grant: The First Minister will be aware that women's aid groups in the Highlands have moved from a service-level agreement to a procurement process with Highland Council, which has left them facing significant cuts. Not only do they face cuts in council funding, but their multi-agency risk assessment conference funding and refuge funding are also at risk, and nor do they have in place Scottish Government funding for next year.

A cross-party group of MSPs has requested an urgent meeting with Highland Council but has had no response. With domestic abuse on the rise, will the First Minister confirm Scottish Government funding for those groups, and will he intervene with Highland Council to protect those specialist services?

The First Minister: I recognise the significance of the issue that Rhoda Grant raises. The Government is providing funding directly to Inverness Women's Aid, to the tune of £219,000.

The issues that Rhoda Grant raises with me are around programmes and services that are funded by Highland Council. I am aware that, as Rhoda Grant said in her question and as I have learned from colleagues, cross-party representation has been made to Highland Council on the issue. In the light of the representations that have been made to me, I will ask the relevant minister to write to the leader of Highland Council to request engagement with cross-party MSPs on that important issue.

Pam Gosal (West Scotland) (Con): Like the Highlands, my area of West Dunbartonshire faces an ever-increasing number of incidents of domestic abuse. It has been reported that the total number of women and children who experience domestic abuse in West Dunbartonshire and ask for help rose by 7.59 per cent to 1,729 in just one year. Those are shocking figures. They make West Dunbartonshire the local authority with the second-largest number of recorded incidents per 10,000 people.

The rest of this Official Report will be published progressively as soon as the text is available.

At the same time, services that offer vital support are starving for funding. When I brought that up during the Equalities, Human Rights and Civil Justice Committee meeting on Tuesday, the Cabinet Secretary for Finance and Local Government blamed misogyny and not her own Government's shortcomings.

Can the First Minister guarantee that services in the Highlands, in West Dunbartonshire and across the country will receive the funding that they deserve?

The First Minister: There is provision in the Government's budget for funding to tackle domestic violence and the abuse that women and girls suffer, and that is to the tune of more than £30 million.

In my answers to all questions about violence against women and girls, I have made no secret of my view that the behaviour of men has to be confronted. It is completely legitimate for that argument to be made in Parliament or in parliamentary committees.

I say to Pam Gosal that an important opportunity is coming up in the next few weeks to vote to provide resource to women's aid organisations and to tackle domestic violence. That will happen only if Parliament supports the Government's budget. I will certainly be voting for the Government's budget and I encourage others to do likewise.

The Presiding Officer: We move to constituency and general supplementary questions.

Peter Mandelson

George Adam (Paisley) (SNP): It has been revealed that Peter Mandelson was selling our economy down the river during the financial crisis. Our First Minister, then the finance secretary, was working all hours to protect Scotland's economy and the people of Scotland while the Labour Party's "old friend" was undermining him at every step of the way and leaking sensitive information to Jeffrey Epstein. Is the First Minister aware of any impact that that Westminster scandal has had on any Scottish financial institutions?

The First Minister (John Swinney): I am absolutely appalled by the revelations that have come out in recent days about Peter Mandelson's involvement in sharing information at the height of the financial crisis with Jeffrey Epstein, a convicted paedophile. He did that as a serving Government minister, which was, somehow, overlooked when he became Keir Starmer's nominee to be the United Kingdom's ambassador to the United States.

At the time of the financial crash, I was taking decisions as finance secretary to ensure that investment in housing could be sustained when private investment had stopped. Those were direct financial decisions that affected the livelihoods of people in Scotland and I am appalled that we were being undermined at the same time.

I have asked my permanent secretary to explore whether there was any risk to the strength of decision making in the Scottish Government and I have also asked to know that in relation to the engagement that I had with the United Kingdom ambassador to the United States last year, when I was acting to protect the Scotch whisky industry.

That is an absolutely atrocious set of circumstances and an appalling judgment by the Prime Minister, and it is dreadful that Scotland and the United Kingdom have been exposed to such weakness as a consequence of that poor decision making by the Prime Minister.

Peter Mandelson

Murdo Fraser (Mid Scotland and Fife) (Con): Given everything that the First Minister has just said, none of which I would disagree with, does he have any regrets about staying in Washington DC in September last year at the residence of the disgraced former UK ambassador, Peter Mandelson, in the light of everything that was known about his relationship with the convicted paedophile Jeffrey Epstein? [Interruption].

The Presiding Officer: Let us hear Mr Fraser.

The First Minister (John Swinney): I was not responsible for the appointment of Peter Mandelson as the ambassador to the United States. It was the foolish and inept decision of the Prime Minister to appoint Anas Sarwar's "old friend" as the ambassador to the United States.

When I go on overseas trips, I have a choice about where I stay. [Interruption].

The Presiding Officer: I am really keen that we have the opportunity for optimal scrutiny, but that cannot occur if members are shouting.

The rest of this Official Report will be published progressively as soon as the text is available.

The First Minister: The first people to complain if I had chosen to spend public money on staying in a hotel, rather than in the British embassy, would have been the Conservative Party members in this Parliament.

To give them all total and complete information, when I went to Lusaka in Zambia, and when I went to Lilongwe in Malawi, I stayed in the British high commissioner's residence to ensure that I was being careful and prudent with the public purse, as people expect me to be.

While Conservative members are shouting and bawling at me about the whole issue, I remind them that one of their colleagues is using artificial intelligence and wasting hundreds of thousands of pounds of public money asking pointless parliamentary questions. That is Douglas Lumsden and they should all be ashamed of themselves. [Interruption].

The Presiding Officer: I am sure that members do not intend to behave in a way that delays proceedings and prevents other members from scrutinising the Government.

Glasgow Airport (Drop-off Charges)

Neil Bibby (West Scotland) (Lab): Earlier this week, operators at Glasgow airport announced that they are increasing their passenger drop-off charges from £6 to £7 for just 15 minutes. Those exorbitant charges will not just hit working people, their friends and their family who are trying to go on holiday; they will affect residents in the nearby streets north of Paisley, who say that their streets are being congested by airport traffic. When the First Minister stands up to respond, he will be standing in the same spot that he stood in in 2009, when he cancelled the Glasgow airport rail link. Does he finally regret his decision to cancel that project, given the detrimental impact that it has had on our economy, residents and passengers?

The First Minister (John Swinney): The Government faces hard political and financial choices at times, and we take them—that is what responsible Government is all about. The hard reality in the aftermath of the financial crash, during which Anas Sarwar's "old friend" Peter Mandelson was leaking information to Jeffrey Epstein, was that we faced hard choices about our capital budget and I, as the minister responsible for finance, had to make them.

The decisions about charges at Glasgow airport have been taken by a private company. However, people can rely on this Scottish Government taking the wise and considered decisions to invest in our economy, as we have done through countless rail links around the country—the Levenmouth railway, the Airdrie to Bathgate railway and the Borders railway were all delivered by this Government, and we are determined to carry on with that record.

National Health Service Staff (Immigration Rules)

Clare Haughey (Rutherglen) (SNP): I remind members that I am a practising NHS nurse. This week, the United Kingdom Labour Government admitted that it does not know how many NHS staff will be affected by its proposed changes to immigration rules. Once again, the Labour Party is harming our health service in its blind pursuit of Reform policies. Does the First Minister agree that people deserve answers from Anas Sarwar on whether he supports Keir Starmer's plans to slam the door in the face of the workers who are keeping our hospitals and care homes running, and can he confirm that his Scottish National Party Government will oppose those Labour plans and stand up for our valued NHS staff?

The Presiding Officer: Questions should be on devolved matters.

The First Minister (John Swinney): There has been a 77 per cent drop in the number of health and care visas that have been granted by the Home Office. That will have a direct effect on our health and care system. In the last survey that I saw, 26 per cent of social care workers had come from other countries.

We face challenges in finding the volume of available labour that we require in our system. That is despite the fact that we have increased health and social care employment. The measures taken by the UK Labour Government are therefore directly damaging to the operation of our health and care system. I assure Clare Haughey of the Scottish Government's determination to make sure that we reverse those policies.

Rape Crisis Centres (Funding)

Sharon Dowe (South Scotland) (Con): Recently, I met staff at the STAR Centre, a rape crisis centre in Kilmarnock that supports survivors aged 13 and above across Ayrshire. Despite covering a large area, the centre has fewer than three full-time members of staff. The centre cannot meet demand and finds it a challenge to advertise its service widely because of its concern that survivors will be stuck for months on the growing waiting lists. By contrast, other centres across Scotland that support significantly lower populations employ several times more staff. That raises serious questions about how funding is allocated.

The rest of this Official Report will be published progressively as soon as the text is available.

Will the First Minister explain how the Scottish Government calculates and allocates funding to rape crisis centres, why there is such a stark disparity in staffing levels between centres that provide the same service and what immediate action will be taken to ensure that the STAR Centre receives the funding that is needed to meet demand?

The First Minister (John Swinney): The funding that goes to that organisation comes through the equally safe programme. Sharon Dowey raises a fair point, but I cannot give her a definitive answer as to the disparity in allocations. I will look into the comparative position for the organisation that she has put to me, and I will ask Ms Somerville to write to her to explain the rationale. I will be happy to discuss the issue further in the light of her reply.

Centre for Contemporary Arts, Glasgow

Paul Sweeney (Glasgow) (Lab): The First Minister will be aware that the Centre for Contemporary Arts in Glasgow announced that it was going into liquidation this week, leading to the loss of 39 jobs directly. Tenants and freelancers will also be affected.

Creative Scotland, the public body that owns the building—it has done so for the past half century; the CCA has been a fixture in the Glasgow arts scene—has failed to intervene in the situation, which does not square with the Government's fair work commitments on consultation, dignity at work and worker protection.

I ask the First Minister to intervene directly with Creative Scotland and order it to set up a successor organisation to re-employ those workers and reopen that critical cultural organisation in the heart of Glasgow—a city that has already suffered greatly, and continues to suffer, from the fire at the Glasgow School of Art and its aftermath, and from wider issues of regeneration on Sauchiehall Street. I hope that he will commit to doing so.

The First Minister (John Swinney): Creative Scotland has engaged with the Centre for Contemporary Arts over a long period of time to try to find a solution to the centre's financial challenges. When the CCA became insolvent, Creative Scotland was not able to issue any further payments under the CCA's multiyear funding award, which would not have been an appropriate use of public money. However, the Scottish Government, through Creative Scotland, will continue to engage on the issue and to work, as Creative Scotland is currently doing, to find a new operator for the building as soon as possible, recognising the cultural significance of the CCA to Glasgow.

It is one of those cases in which the rules on public finance and the ability to deploy them when an organisation becomes insolvent put a real obstacle before an organisation's ability to operate continuously. There is work under way through Creative Scotland to find alternative routes, and I hope that that bears fruit. Ministers will keep Mr Sweeney informed of developments.

Women Against State Pension Inequality (Compensation)

Clare Adamson (Motherwell and Wishaw) (SNP): Since 2015, I have been supporting WASPI women in my constituency of Motherwell and Wishaw. WASPI campaigners from across Scotland have come to the Parliament today—some of them are in the public gallery—and they are rightly challenging the Labour Government's latest U-turn, which denies WASPI women compensation for a second time. Labour Party politicians—some of whom are in the chamber today, too—tweeted photos of themselves showing support, standing shoulder to shoulder with WASPI women, only to betray them once in power.

At this time, when more than two Scottish WASPI women a day are dying without compensation, what assurance can the First Minister provide to WASPI women that the Scottish National Party Government will stick to its principles and continue to stand by their side, unlike the so-called Scottish Labour Party?

The First Minister (John Swinney): I reiterate my strong support for the WASPI women, and I congratulate Clare Adamson on, and thank her for, the absolutely tenacious way in which she has constantly pursued the issue. The repeated betrayal of WASPI women by the United Kingdom Labour Government is appalling. The fact that so many Labour politicians promised WASPI women before the election that they would have full application of the compensation schemes but have now deserted those WASPI women after the election tells us all that we need to know about the opportunism of voting Labour at any election.

Aberdeen Royal Infirmary

Liam Kerr (North East Scotland) (Con): For more than two years, Aberdeen royal infirmary has reported worsening ambulance stacking caused by spiralling waiting times. Last week, further delays were caused when a patient sprayed CS gas into the eyes of a nurse and a security guard, resulting in the ARI being locked down altogether. Figures show that police are called to the ARI every other day to deal with assaults and disturbances. At the heart of all that are exhausted, dedicated staff and patients waiting in agony, bearing the brunt of a lack of Government action. When will the First Minister finally get a grip of the situation at the ARI and personally intervene to help those hard-working staff and long-suffering patients?

The rest of this Official Report will be published progressively as soon as the text is available.

The First Minister (John Swinney): The Cabinet Secretary for Health and Social Care is actively engaged with NHS Grampian on the issues at Aberdeen royal infirmary. We work in partnership with the Scottish Ambulance Service, which is resourced to ensure that the needs of patients are met. On a majority of occasions, Scottish Ambulance Service emergency incidents are managed without any need to transfer patients to hospital, but, when a transfer is required, there is a need for that to be efficient and sustainable. These issues are at the heart of the engagement between the Government and NHS Grampian to improve the situation at the ARI.

Integration Joint Boards (Voting Rights)

Joe FitzPatrick (Dundee City West) (SNP): This week, I joined disabled people, third-party organisations and colleagues in welcoming the first disabled people's cabinet, which was hosted by the First Minister. I was appalled to learn that the Labour Party has quietly lodged a motion to annul the changes that this Scottish National Party Government is trying to make to voting rights on local integration joint boards. Those changes would give disabled people, unpaid carers and people who use social care packages a vote on the services that affect them. Not content with stripping disabled people of their benefits, the Labour Party is trying to silence their voices when it comes to local services. Will the First Minister join me in calling on the Labour Party to back those voting rights for disabled people, carers and other people with lived experience, and to reverse this shameful betrayal?

The Presiding Officer: Please answer on matters of devolved responsibility.

The First Minister (John Swinney): I was deeply grateful to the disabled people who met the Cabinet on Tuesday. We had a substantial and thought-provoking conversation about the challenges and issues that disabled people face. One of the clear requests of disabled people was for them to have a voice on integration joint boards and to be able to exercise that through voting rights. That is what the Government is providing for.

I am lost for words that the Labour Party is opposing us on all that. It is another lesson that people have to be very careful about voting for the Labour Party: whether it is about women against state pension inequality or disabled people, they can rely on the fact that the Labour Party will let them down.

Scottish Prison Service Policy (Judicial Review)

Douglas Ross (Highlands and Islands) (Con): This week, the Scottish Government is in court arguing that evil men should continue to be housed in the female prison estate. The First Minister wanted as much information as possible about that in the public domain, which is why he released the written case. In that written case, the Government's defence of its position is to make the comparison that a mum taking a baby boy into a changing room is, somehow, the same as male murderers being in the female prison estate. Is the First Minister genuinely happy that that is the defence that his Government is making, and is he content to spend public money on that court case?

The First Minister (John Swinney): That court case is live and is being heard at the moment. What the Government is doing, as any responsible Government must, is ensuring that the policy position that is applied complies with all our legal obligations—all of them—including those under the Scotland Act 1998 and the European convention on human rights.

The Presiding Officer: That concludes First Minister's question time.

Point of Order

12:47

Edward Mountain (Highlands and Islands) (Con): On a point of order, Presiding Officer. During general question time, I raised a question on aquaculture. It would have been fair of me to note that I have an interest in a wild salmon fishery—I do so now.

The Presiding Officer (Alison Johnstone): Thank you, Mr Mountain.

The next item of business is a members' business debate in the name of Clare Haughey. There will be a short suspension to allow those leaving the chamber and the gallery to do so.

The rest of this Official Report will be published progressively as soon as the text is available.

12:48

Meeting suspended.

12:49

On resuming—

Royal Burgh of Rutherglen (900th Anniversary)

The Deputy Presiding Officer (Liam McArthur): I ask those leaving the public gallery to do so as quickly and quietly as possible.

The next item of business is a members' business debate on motion S6M-20393, in the name of Clare Haughey, on the 900th anniversary of Rutherglen as a royal burgh. The debate will be concluded without any question being put.

Motion debated,

That the Parliament recognises that 2026 marks the 900th anniversary of Rutherglen receiving the status of Royal Burgh via Royal Charter from King David I of Scotland; understands that although Rutherglen's story began long before 1126, its recognition via the first Burgh Charter gave it special trading rights and a place of importance in medieval Scotland, and that through centuries of change, Rutherglen has continued to play a key role in the region's development; notes that the milestone is being celebrated throughout the year via a series of heritage, art, wellbeing, environmental and sporting events organised by the community-led Rutherglen 900 project; further notes that the project has been built on collaboration between local people, local organisations, schools, community groups and volunteers, who are working together to honour the town's rich cultural legacy and bright future; appreciates the great sense of community within the town that the Rutherglen 900 project reflects, supported by the wide range of organisations and bodies that do great work to support residents; thanks all of those who are involved in planning and promoting the 900th anniversary celebrations, and wishes all those who live and work in Rutherglen all the best for the occasion and the future.

12:50

Clare Haughey (Rutherglen) (SNP): I am delighted to have secured this debate to mark the 900th anniversary of Rutherglen's being granted royal burgh status by King David I, which gave it special trading rights and underlined its importance in medieval Scotland.

I have the tremendous honour of representing Rutherglen, my home town, where I was brought up, where I brought up my own family and where I still live. I could say a great deal about our town but fear that I will only be able to scratch the surface in the time that is available to me.

Rutherglen is one of those places where, everywhere that you turn, you see something of its fascinating history. My constituency office is situated on Rutherglen's Main Street. It is a particularly wide street because it was the place to be to trade horses from the 1600s onwards. As time passed, fairs were held there 12 times a year.

A few steps from my office is Rutherglen old parish church, which has been a site of Christian worship for at least 1,400 years and is believed to have been a site of druid worship before that. John Menteith betrayed William Wallace there in 1305, and the Parliament of Scotland also sat there. In its boundary walls is a statue of Dr James Gorman, who treated Ruglonians long before the national health service was established, often for little or no charge, and during some of Lanarkshire's worst mining disasters.

A few more steps take you to the town hall, which was completed in 1862. Civic leaders decided that a new one was needed after significant population expansion. Near the town hall is the mercat cross, a 100-year-old replica of the original to which the covenanters nailed their 1679 declaration of Rutherglen.

Behind my office runs King Street, where Rutherglen castle sat at the junction with Castle Street. Built in the 13th century, the castle's 5-feet-thick walls made it a crucial stronghold during the wars of independence, during which it was besieged several times by Robert the Bruce.

I remember our colleague Jamie Hepburn speaking about his home town of Cumbernauld during a members' business debate and joking about how many towns claim to have links to Mary, Queen of Scots. Not wishing to disappoint in that regard, I can say that Mary led a march to Rutherglen castle in 1568 to round up her supporters before her journey west. A year later, the castle was burned to the ground by the Earl of Moray, to punish the Hamilton family for supporting Mary at the battle of Langside.

I could spend all afternoon talking about Rutherglen's history—from Gallowflat tumulus, a second century Roman burial site, to the coracles that travelled up and down the Clyde to and from Rutherglen in the 12th century, or the steamships that were built there in the 19th century, or how James Watt designed a bridge for the town before his tinkering with steam engines allowed its steel, chemical and textile industries to flourish.

The rest of this Official Report will be published progressively as soon as the text is available.

The historic areas near the centre, such as Bankhead, Burnhill and Gallowflat, have changed hugely over the years and the village of Burnside has expanded greatly. Post-war developments on farms and estates in Blairbeth, Cathkin, Eastfield, Fernhill, Spittal and Springhall are now well-established communities. Each place has its own distinct identity but is firmly and proudly part of Rutherglen's story.

I also remember Mr Hepburn mentioning the legendary broadcaster Magnus Magnusson. He married the journalist Mamie Baird in Wardlawhill parish church before living in Calderwood Road for many years. After growing up in the town, their daughter Sally became a renowned broadcaster and she set her novel "Music in the Dark" in a Rutherglen tenement.

In a list of notable Ruglonians, I could also include actors Robbie Coltrane, Janet Brown, Scott Kyle and Stan Laurel, the poet Edwin Morgan, fashion designer Jonathan Saunders and musicians such as Midge Ure and Audrey Tait. John Logie Baird lived a few hundred yards from where Cee Cee TV Security Solutions now displays a beautiful vintage television in its shop window. Infamously, he once fused all the lights in the town, which hastened his departure from his job at the local power station.

There is a wheen of sports people from Rutherglen, from Steve Archibald, who went from Fernhill Athletic Football Club to Barcelona, to Sadie Smith, Rutherglen Ladies FC's captain, who battled against the odds even to play at a time when women's football was banned in England and was deemed quite unsuitable in Scotland. Again, that could be a very long list. Ruglonians have truly made their mark on the world.

When the 900th anniversary of our town's burgh status was approaching, a real desire grew to mark the occasion—to take the chance to reflect on who we are, where we have come from and where we are going. Rutherglen 900 was born as a community-led initiative that was built on collaboration between local people, organisations, schools, community groups and volunteers. I thank that large community network, which includes Healthy n Happy Community Development Trust, CamGlen Radio, heritage organisations, schools, artists, sports groups and local residents who are keen to give back to their community.

I am delighted to have the opportunity to thank each and every person who has given up their time to organise the wonderful programme of events that will mark our town's milestone year. I thank them for all their efforts—not just this year, but every year and, indeed, every day—to support local residents. I urge anyone listening to the debate to visit the Rutherglen 900 website to see the depth and breadth of the programme that they have put together. There truly is something for everyone. Our town will host walking and vintage bus tours that will highlight local landmarks and explore Rutherglen's radical history of social activism, and there will be a community picnic; a sing-along event; multiple talks and exhibitions; sporting events; a live comedy, dance and music event, including the town's very first mela; and an inaugural book festival.

There is also a packed schools programme, with events for children and young people in every month this year. It was an absolute treat to hear the debut performance of "Song of Rutherglen" at the Rutherglen 900 launch event in the town hall last Friday, which was beautifully sung by pupils from each local school. If members are in the right place at the right time, they might even bump into Rutherglen 900's official mascot, Dougie the pigeon, which was designed by Emma from St Anthony's primary school.

Whether you call it Rutherglen, Ruglen or Ruggie, there is a lot happening in our town this year, as always, and there is much to celebrate about her people and organisations, who make it such a great place to live and work in. I am thoroughly looking forward to all the opportunities that we will have over the next year to celebrate, to reminisce and to look to our town's future. Rutherglen is ready to welcome all who would like to join us.

12:57

Annie Wells (Glasgow) (Con): I congratulate Clare Haughey on bringing this debate to the chamber. I really enjoyed her speech about the history of Rutherglen.

It is a privilege to speak in this debate about the 900 years of Rutherglen—my dad would call it Ruglen—which is one of Scotland's oldest royal burghs and a town with a proud and distinct identity. Rutherglen is not a place to talk about in the abstract; it is a place that people know well and remember, and it is a place that I knew well when I was growing up. Over the years, I have spent a great deal of time in the town, visiting schools, meeting community groups and speaking with local traders, and in my youth I spent time in some of the pubs on and off Main Street. I have seen at first hand how Rutherglen has changed, adapted and endured.

I have many fond personal memories that are rooted in the area. Many of my friends lived in Rutherglen and I often find myself recalling with affection times spent in and around the town in places and on streets that I knew well. During the late 1980s and early 1990s, I would head to the video shop on Main Street with friends and then walk through Overtoun park. There was a great sense of community and character in the town.

The rest of this Official Report will be published progressively as soon as the text is available.

When I was married almost 34 years ago, I had my wedding reception at the nearby Kings Park hotel, because we knew that place well and it represented both Glasgow and Rutherglen, where we were from. More recently, I have enjoyed simply taking walks around the area and reflecting on how the town has evolved. Familiar streets have changed, but the character and warmth of the community have remained.

Today, as Ms Haughey said, Rutherglen continues to be shaped by independent businesses and local employers who have chosen to invest there.

Long-standing firms remain a familiar presence, while small cafes, family-run shops and service businesses along Main Street and the surrounding area continue to provide not only jobs but connection and community. Those businesses are run by people who care deeply about the town and its future.

I recently had the opportunity to visit Rutherglen high school to see its eco project, which is led by pupils who are passionate about sustainability and improving their local environment. What impressed me most were not only the ambition of the project but the pride of the young people who took part in contributing positively to their community. I believe that we need to take pride in our communities, and we see that abundantly in Rutherglen, Burnside and Cambuslang. It was a powerful reminder that Rutherglen's future is being shaped by young people who care deeply about where they live.

As we have heard, Rutherglen has also produced an extraordinary amount of talent over the years, across sport, culture, business and public life. That is no accident. The town has strong links to figures such as Stan Laurel, who is one half of the most iconic comic double act in history: Laurel and Hardy. I used to play one and my dad the other. Members can decide which one each of us played.

Paul Sweeney (Glasgow) (Lab): That connection with Stan Laurel shows the closeness between Ruglonians and Glaswegians. Stan Laurel cut his teeth on the boards of the Britannia Panopticon music hall in Glasgow's Trongate. From the original construction of Glasgow cathedral to the shared relationship between our transport systems, or even the 21-year experiment that Rutherglen had as part of Glasgow District Council, there is an indelible link between the city of Glasgow and Rutherglen. Long may that flourish, particularly through projects such as the Clyde gateway.

Annie Wells: Rutherglen and Glasgow have joint connectivity. We are not that far away from each other, and it is good that we can work together on certain projects. We have heard that Glasgow is 850 years old this year, so Rutherglen has beaten us by 50 years. However, as a regional MSP, I can take a bit of credit on behalf of both places.

Rutherglen has also been associated with brilliant comic talent closer to home, including Janet Brown. She is well known for her unforgettable impression of Margaret Thatcher. I promise to take that in the good-humoured spirit in which it was intended, even as a proud Tory.

All of that reflects a town that nurtures ambition, resilience and a strong sense of belonging. As we mark this remarkable anniversary, it is clear that Rutherglen's story is not only one of history but one of on-going contribution, pride and potential. I wish the town a happy 900-year anniversary.

13:02

Bob Doris (Glasgow Maryhill and Springburn) (SNP): I congratulate Clare Haughey on securing the debate celebrating the 900th anniversary of Rutherglen as a royal burgh.

My goodness, I am glad that I am not living 900 years ago. Clare Haughey has put on record the intrigue, treachery and treason that have taken place in Rutherglen. I am sure that the place has moved on considerably from those medieval times.

Clare Haughey is a real champion for Rutherglen. That came out quite clearly in her speech. She spoke passionately about the community-led Rutherglen 900 project. I was pleased to hear Clare talk about the Healthy n Happy Community Development Trust and Camglen Radio being part of the community-led project, as those are a couple of organisations that I know quite well from my days as a regional MSP.

Clare Haughey also went through a list of famous people from Rutherglen. I was scoring out my list of people I was going to name-check as she went on. Bobby Murdoch was on the list as well, and he is one that she did not mention.

Also, who was Nellie Hunter? I did not know until a couple of hours ago that Nellie Hunter was a suffragist from Rutherglen. There will be an exhibition all about Nellie Hunter at the library and heritage centre in just a few days' time. That is the point of celebrating our history—to find out about those histories that are lost through time, as those stories of remarkable people are the social fabric of all communities. I am delighted that such events are taking place in Rutherglen.

The rest of this Official Report will be published progressively as soon as the text is available.

My connection with Rutherglen goes back to 2007, when I became a regional MSP for Glasgow. I fulfilled that role until I became a constituency MSP for Glasgow Maryhill and Springburn in 2016. Let me be clear: I am not saying that Rutherglen is part of Glasgow. Heaven forbid that I should say that. Some people say that it is part of Lanarkshire, but the people of Rutherglen are, first and foremost, Ruglonians. They are welcome, inclusive and passionate Ruglonians. Unless things have changed, they would still view themselves as Ruglonians.

I want to give some personal reflections on my time in Rutherglen. I well remember my monthly surgery in the King Street council buildings in the town over the years. I also recall the regular Scottish National Party meetings at St Columbkille's church hall, where we would have to compete with the Irish dancing and the occasional hooley. I hope that that is all still going strong.

After those branch meetings, if I was very lucky, I would have a pint at Dr Gorman's pub. I understand that it is no longer Dr Gorman's—good luck to the new owners, but that is a backward step as far as I am concerned. I used to go there with the late Councillor Gordon Clark—it was his local. I was saddened by Gordon's recent passing, and I want to put on record in this place the contribution that he made to public life and to the Rutherglen community over many years, including 10 years as a councillor.

My highlight as a regional MSP who covered Rutherglen was always my annual attendance—I would have been in trouble if I didn't go—at Landemer day, with the late Gordon Clark and many others, some of whom are also, sadly, no longer with us. I would like to mention Councillor Clare McColl and Councillor Anne Higgins, who are no longer with us. Friends across all parties will have their own memories of people who are no longer with us.

I always had a wonderful time at Landemer day, which was supported by the people of Rutherglen in their thousands each and every year. It was always a passionate, vibrant and lovely demonstration of Rutherglen's civic pride and creative endeavour.

I had not known that Landemer day recommenced only in 1974, having fallen into abeyance in 1926. I learned that in preparation for today's debate. I am pleased that it has bounced back so strongly since the Covid-19 pandemic.

It is important that all communities celebrate such landmarks. Not that long ago, I led a members' business debate on the 50th anniversary of Summerston, where I stay, and the church that I go to in Maryhill will be celebrating its 50th anniversary. However, what is important is not the number of years for which a community has been in existence but how the people in the community knit together in such a beautiful, wonderful, vibrant and diverse way.

That is how I think about Rutherglen. It was a privilege to represent it for a short period of time. Those who represent it today, including Clare Haughey, are lucky and privileged to do so. Happy birthday to Rutherglen.

13:07

Monica Lennon (Central Scotland) (Lab): I congratulate Clare Haughey on securing the debate. It has been lovely to hear the contributions so far. Everyone has been so enthusiastic about Rutherglen and the many things that it is famous for. The longer you sit here, the more likely you are to think of something else that is worth mentioning.

I will add to the list the Scottish Catholic International Aid Fund, which was founded in Rutherglen. In recent months, there was a wonderful mass in St Columbkille's church in Rutherglen to celebrate SCIAF's anniversary. That is another reason to celebrate the wonderful town that is Rutherglen.

Of course, 2026 is the year of Rutherglen. The calendar of events and projects that Rutherglen 900 has pulled together is a testament to its communities. Rutherglen 900 is a grass-roots endeavour, although funding and support are being provided by Clyde Gateway, South Lanarkshire Council, local businesses and—I hope—the Scottish Government. I am sure that the cabinet secretary will be most welcome at all the events. In particular, the book festival jumps out at me.

As Annie Wells and Clare Haughey have said, the events celebrate Rutherglen's past and retell it for a new generation. The involvement of children and young people, especially through the schools, means that the project will have a lasting legacy. It is not simply a case of coming along to some events and then moving on. The educational work that is being done is striking.

The rest of this Official Report will be published progressively as soon as the text is available.

Efforts have also been made to capture the oral history of Rutherglen through the time capsules and the oral history podcast, an episode of which Michael Shanks, the local MP, recorded at Burgh primary school in the past few weeks. All those things will help to ensure that the stories that we tell one another will be safely passed on to the next generation.

It is a pity that we will not see Bob Doris partake in some Irish dancing, but you never know. If the organisers are listening—[Interruption.] The cabinet secretary agrees. It is not too late to add that to the programme.

We often discuss challenges and difficult issues in the chamber, but this is an opportunity to think about all the things that make our communities vibrant, all the great work that goes on and all the unsung heroes. It is a chance to bring people together for a happy occasion. Whether you are from Rutherglen, South Lanarkshire, Glasgow or beyond, this is a cause for national celebration. Rutherglen is a community with a deep, enduring place in our national story. I hope that everyone will feel welcome to come to Rutherglen to take part in these events or just to discover Rutherglen for the first time.

Members have mentioned some of the fantastic organisations that are at the heart of Rutherglen 900, including the Healthy n Happy Community Development Trust. I wish a fond farewell to Brendan Rooney, the chief executive, who is retiring. Bob Doris also mentioned Camglen Radio and Rutherglen Heritage Society.

When I went along to the annual general meeting of Rutherglen 900 last year, I was pleased to see some former town planning colleagues of mine who live locally. They are very active on the heritage side and in bringing together the volunteers.

Clare Haughey: I thank Monica Lennon for giving me the opportunity to put on record our joint thanks and the community's thanks to Robert Brown, formerly of the Scottish Parliament, who chaired the Rutherglen 900 committee, and all the other committee members, who have worked hard over the past year. I hope that Monica Lennon will share my congratulations to them.

Monica Lennon: Absolutely, and if I had stuck to my speaking notes, Councillor Robert Brown would have been one of the first people I would have mentioned. When I became a South Lanarkshire councillor in 2012, Robert Brown was the first person to say hello and greet me as a fellow councillor, and we used to sit together on the licensing committee. I was pleased to see Councillor Brown expertly chair the AGM a few months ago. I know that he is completely dedicated, as are all the committee members.

A big thank you to all the volunteers, everyone who is sponsoring events and local businesses. I hope that everyone has a good time, and I look forward to hearing whether the cabinet secretary will partake in any of the events.

13:12

The Cabinet Secretary for Constitution, External Affairs and Culture (Angus Robertson): I am grateful to Clare Haughey for lodging the motion and securing the debate. I commend her as an outstanding member of the Scottish Parliament for Rutherglen and Cambuslang and for taking the opportunity to highlight what is a tremendous year of celebration for Rutherglen on its 900th year. As we have heard, it is a celebration for Rutherglen recognising its past, its present and its future ambitions. It is fantastic to hear that the Rutherglen community is pulling together to create a year-long festival of events, exhibitions and performances to mark this special milestone.

I thank the various speakers, including Annie Wells, Bob Doris and Monica Lennon, for their valuable and interesting contributions. In the spirit of cross-party agreement, I would be absolutely delighted to second Monica Lennon's motion that Bob Doris perform dance. I am not quite sure whether it will be modern dance or Irish dance—other forms of dance are available.

Monica Lennon: Contemporary dance.

Angus Robertson: We hear the Parliament updated from a sedentary position, Presiding Officer, that it will be contemporary dance. When the dates are confirmed, I am happy that my office will be in touch with Monica Lennon's to make the necessary arrangements for both of us to attend that event.

Monica Lennon: As dance partners.

Angus Robertson: She has raised it to being dance partners. This is going in directions that are not included in my speaking notes or in my diary commitments, but I say yes to that.

As others have, Monica Lennon pointed to different individuals in Rutherglen and to organisations founded and present in Rutherglen over the past 900 years. She highlighted the Scottish Catholic International Aid Fund. As the cabinet secretary responsible for external affairs and, through that, international development, I know that that organisation is a key partner for Scotland, and I know about all the good work that it does internationally, although I was unaware of its connections to Rutherglen.

The rest of this Official Report will be published progressively as soon as the text is available.

I thank Monica Lennon for her contribution, and I thank Paul Sweeney for his intervention. He always has something to add when it comes to the history of different places in Scotland.

Monica Lennon: Another fantastic organisation has come to mind: Classrooms for Malawi, which is also based in Rutherglen. Over the years, we have joined forces on the issue of period dignity, and I know that it appreciates the cross-party work in the Parliament that led to the Period Products (Free Provision) (Scotland) Act 2021. Does the cabinet secretary recognise the good work that it does in his portfolio?

Angus Robertson: I do. It also underlines something that is true for Rutherglen as well as the rest of Scotland, which is that, in the fabric of our communities, what happens in them is also outward facing: our communities look to other places in the world.

All members in the debate drew attention to the importance of volunteers, Scotland's third sector and those who have contributed to Rutherglen's public life over the years through community-led activities, festivals and events. As we have heard, Rutherglen shines as a great example of the community working together to honour its rich history and bright future by creating a programme for a wonderful year of celebrations, led by the community, with events ranging from heritage to the arts, wellbeing, environmental and sporting activities, and much else besides. Thousands of Scotland's cultural and arts groups rely on dedicated volunteers, whose time and effort make those events so successful. It is great to see celebrations bringing together people, organisations, schools and volunteers across Rutherglen, and it is nice that so many people were recognised across the chamber for having made a contribution.

Speaking on behalf of the Scottish Government, we value the significant contribution that volunteers make to cultural activity in our communities. The vast majority of community-level cultural initiatives are driven by committees of dedicated volunteers, and many community-based cultural events rely on the practical support of volunteers to succeed. I add my voice to those around the chamber who have put that on the record during the debate.

I have been struck by the range of events that are on the programme for Rutherglen 900 and that are already under way. Edinburgh celebrated its 900th anniversary two years ago. Although I am the member of the Scottish Parliament for Edinburgh Central, no competition is implied with my colleague Clare Haughey, who led the debate. Rutherglen and Edinburgh became royal boroughs at about the same time, and I have some experience of what can be done with a 900th anniversary. I have taken the time to have a look at the programme of events in Rutherglen this year, and there is something for absolutely everyone. Mention has already been made—and I will add my pointer to it—that there is an amazing amount of information on the Rutherglen 900 website. If anyone who is listening to or watching this debate wants to know what is on and when, I urge them to visit that website, as all the information is there. I think that I am right in saying that the web address is rutherglen900.com.

The variety of what is on offer and the enthusiasm behind it reflect a key strength of the community. As we have heard, the Rutherglen 900 project held a successful launch event at Rutherglen town hall on 29 January, which was only a few days ago. The launch featured live bagpipe playing, historic photographs, school artwork and the debut of the "Song of Rutherglen", which was performed by local children from all 10 primary schools. It also included an appearance by Dougie the pigeon, the newly designed town mascot. [Interruption.] Let the record show that there was whooping in the chamber at the mention of Dougie the pigeon.

Another success was the sold-out performance of "Bloom", a mixture of dance, music and video projections, which was part ceilidh and part Japanese dance, reflecting the diversity of the Rutherglen community. The performance was described as "beautiful" and "mesmerising". I also note the 900 origami peace cranes, which is a novel art project that was developed by the rotary club of Rutherglen and women from the Nurture Educational and Multicultural Society in Cambuslang. The cranes represent peace, hope, harmony, community and future happiness.

Paul Sweeney: There are so many projects to discuss, but one that particularly springs to mind in the discussion about skills—and heritage skills in particular—is the restoration of the Overtoun park bandstand, which was destroyed in 2024. It is welcome that funding is being committed to restore it, but it shows the critical nature of Scotland's skills in that area of conservation. In particular, the recent loss of Ballantine Castings shows the importance of architectural ironwork skills. I hope that that can be brought to bear in the restoration of Rutherglen's Overtoun park bandstand in the coming months.

Angus Robertson: As ever, I agree with the general points that have been made. On the issue of castings, I am satisfied that efforts have been made to ensure that there will be no loss of intellectual property, history or heritage.

The rest of this Official Report will be published progressively as soon as the text is available.

Clare Haughey: In relation to skills and heritage, I note that the Rutherglen boundary stones are being recreated in a college in Glasgow, which is helping to develop stonemason skills for the future.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: I can give you the time back, cabinet secretary.

Angus Robertson: That is fantastic. Those of us who are part of the on-going debate about skills in the heritage sector know how important stonemasonry is, so that is excellent to hear.

I am looking at the clock and realise that I am over my time, so—[Interruption.] Was that a request for an intervention from Bob Doris? It will have to be very short.

Bob Doris: It was a comment from a sedentary position, so I apologise that I am now saying this in an intervention. During my research, I found that stonemasons from Rutherglen put in the foundation stones when Glasgow cathedral was built, assuming that Wikipedia is right.

Angus Robertson: Well, that is now on the record, so it must be true.

I appreciate that I am over my allotted time, but I will make some brief final comments. In recognition of the importance of the volunteer-led efforts that I have described, the Scottish Government is continuing to invest in inclusive volunteering through the volunteering support fund, in which £2.2 million is being invested between 2025 and 2027. The fund helps organisations to recruit additional volunteers for volunteering projects, and it focuses particularly on supporting individuals who face barriers to volunteering, such as those from black and minority ethnic communities, disabled people and those with long-term health conditions. By prioritising diversity, the fund aims to broaden the volunteer base in the sector.

Projects that have been funded in the area include Camglen Radio, a 24/7 community radio station that serves Cambuslang and Rutherglen, with the core aim of addressing inequality, promoting inclusion and improving wellbeing by giving local people a voice. The project includes targeted outreach sessions to engage underrepresented groups in the area.

Another VSF grant will help Project 31 to support people living in Cambuslang and Rutherglen, particularly children, families, parents, carers and older people. The project delivers a significant amount of outdoor activity that is free at the point of contact, which ensures that people are not prevented from participating by the impact of poverty.

I congratulate Clare Haughey on securing the debate and Rutherglen on its 900th anniversary celebrations, and I pay particular tribute to the community of volunteers who have made it all happen.

The Deputy Presiding Officer: That concludes the debate. In order to allow Bob Doris time to get to his next contemporary dance class, I suspend the meeting until 2 o'clock.

13:22

Meeting suspended.

The rest of this Official Report will be published progressively as soon as the text is available.